‘But your heart, Hildred,’ the person said, ‘the heart, has been with us. Every half a year or year you will be tested and judged, all as the advents upward to the eternal judgement of God. We are his servants.’

‘You got to be kidding me,’ Hildred laughed. ‘Tell me that this is all just a good joke, okay ?’

‘No, it isn’t a joke, Hildred,’ the person said. ‘Look at this mirror and see how the fire is running through it.’

Hildred looked to the left and saw a mirror from which suddenly lava burst forth. ‘Please, stop that,’ Hildred said.

‘We are glad to have you, Hildred,’ the person said. ‘You are the mediator.’

‘For what ?’ Hildred asked. ‘Where am I ?’

‘You are in bed, in a coma,’ the person said. ‘So you better believe us. We have the powers to get you out, and many with you. We live here in luxury and life, in power and lust.’

‘I do not want any of that. Let me be with the poor and living an honost life and it will be enough for me,’ Hildred said.

‘No Hildred,’ the person said. ‘The poor will get poorer and the rich will get richer. The sick will get sicker and the healthy will get healthier, and you are the only one bringing them from one side to the other. If they refuse you, they will be damned to evergrowing damnation, and when they receive you as their mother and saviour they will be blessed in eternity.’

‘You are sick,’ Hildred said.

She was in a white box, with white mills, and they were about to make an even huger hell of Hildred’s life, until she was screaming : ‘Yes, yes, I will do it, whatever you want, just get me out of here.’

‘No Hildred,’ a voice spoke. ‘You refused the offer. Next patient !’

A man was watching a strange horror movie, very psychedelic, a medical story. He was a pastor. His name was Benny, Benny Savache. The next Sunday they would pray for the sick in the church, but in the middle of the service, strange angels started to show up, with drills and guns. They kind of surrounded the church, and people started screaming.

‘Stay quiet,’ Benny Savache said. ‘These are but demons. We have powers over them. These are the demons of the world, but remember your bible saying in Hebrews 10 verse 25 that you shouldn’t forsake the fellowship, so just make sure you come here every sunday, and you will be safe from them.’

‘Powerful words, pastor,’ someone was shouting.

That night Benny Savache came home, totally exhausted. An angel appeared to him, looking like a dentist. ‘You know,’ the angel said. ‘You are all oral creatures. And we are the guards of the oral, thus making us the rulers.’

‘I rebuke you, satan,’ Benny Savache screamed.

The next sunday the same things happened, and the angels made clear they wanted to use Benny Savache for healing. The pastor refused, but soon he couldn’t control it anymore, and people indeed started to heal. ‘Maybe it was God,’ the pastor thought to himself. Soon people made a lot of donations, and the pastor began to like it, still with the feeling that something wasn’t totally right.

They wanted him to be a moderator in the mental cyberspace, but he refused. On the height of his career he stopped with his ministry and drew himself back to seek for an answer. He had become very scared of the thing working through him. One day he took his car and drove into the depths of a forest.

My stone had fallen here, and I was like a statue. My head was between two worlds. I wanted to save this planet too, and I had seen a lot of things. I was the heart of hearts, the thirteenth.

The man stepped out of his car, while I was calling him. An amazing light fell upon him. I gave him the amulet of the ten stones, the ten demon-stones of an oracle. One of these stones was my own personal stone, the one of Ritswik. I told him about the journey I once made across the desert of death, and he got interested.

The Desert Tower

There was a high tower on Reticulum, where someone lived who kept them all asleep. They called him sandman. They always had to live in low consciousness because of this creature, this man. Tarkarus was his name. It was a huge tower, very wide, taking a lot of land. The steps of the stairways were all of fire, becoming hotter and hotter, so that no one could enter.

Tarkarus had a sword by which he could freeze people. He could also freeze birds, for those were the ones who visited him a lot. He was a spider. His own birds were lullabies, lulling the people to sleep, and all the creatures. He sent them out to steal their hearts. Tarkarus had a place on top of his tower, full of hearts. Those who lost their hearts not only came into a state of death, but also of second death, the low consciousness, in which they would live forever.

There was one brave man daring to face Tarkarus one day. His name was Golem. Golem was so strong that he could destroy the whole tower. It was a big day when the guards of Tarkarus fell down. Golem took his helmet, a red one with many tall stings, and became the ruler of Reticulum. The air became thick. Old skeleton gods got their thrones back.

Golem became a hero on Reticulum, building their cities again, and their monuments. Everyone had to drink from a certain red soup to wake up again, and to stay awake. Old skeleton buildings got dug up to get their place again. They all had red stones inside from which the soup flew.

Golem built his tower in a desert, but this time the steps of the stairways had to be of ice. It was a desert tower.

Tivirim the Demon Knight - Barbarian Fiction

The Squirrels of Domina

Santarax had his throne in the depths of Tartarus. He was a skeleton with a garment, a king among demons. He was the evil breed of a notorious goddess. When he got older he killed her, ate her, and got strong powers in the depths of the Martian Underworld. Finally he reached Tartarus where he settled his throne. Mean dogs of torture were his servants. He had implanted the skull of his mother in the depths of his own heart. It was the skull of sound. By this powerfull radiation he could raise his armies of slaves. An arena was what he wanted. One of these slaves was Tivirim, a barbarian man, long white hair and hellwhite eyes. He was a savage, used to live with panthers and lions of monstrous size. Since he got caught he lived in a blue balloon, a prison. At night the skull of sound would shriek to wake them up, and then they had to fight. They were the marionets of Santarax.

The blue balloon would go from city to city, and in the middle of the night it would open up at the bottom, through which the marionets could slide to the roofs of the houses. They would plunder, murder, and abduct. All for Santarax. His wishes were their commands. After the crime the blue balloon would suck them inside again and leave. It looked like it was Tivirim's fate to die in this office. They all had strange uniforms. These uniforms secreted poison in order to make them as savage as possible. Many lost their minds and got insane. Others were confused or just very chaotic. But Tivirim never lost his sense. He just got weak and tired all the time, feeling sick.

Santarax told him he could be the general of these fools. It was a cruel initiation. By a certain poison he got an iron hand. Also Santarax implanted a piece of the skull of sound into his heart. It was a splinter. By this his voice would be like screaming and shouting in the hearts of the other marionets. He could bring them down even by a whisper.

In the depths of the castle and domain of Santarax his mother Domina still lived on, her spirit. She had been the tyrant of ages ago, and she still was. She lived there with her squirrels, who were three times worse than the marionets of her son. They could shriek and command like no one else, although they didn't go out for a hunt as much as the marionets. They showed up once in a hundred years, but then it would be a real massacre, a real slaughter. Domina was still seeking for revenge since her son had taken over her kingdom. She was the mother queen of Mars, ruler of the Sjarun, the royal upper class, and she would always be in that position.

One day she captured Tivirim, who was the general of Santarax. Two killer-squirrels brought him to her. She enjoyed to watch him. She showed him a red balloon by which the squirrels would travel, once in the hundred years. She took his uniform away and gave him a squirrel uniform. 'Oh, first you will become like tar,' she spoke harshly. Tivirim was screaming. The uniform was like burning tar. 'And then you will be my squirrel,' she laughed hysterically. Tivirim felt himself shrinking. Could these squirrels shriek so loud because of the heat, their pain ?

'That's the blessing I have for skeletons,' she said. 'So many cities to rule on Mars.'

Tivirim knew she gave high positions to the squirrels, but what kind of life would they have ? They were thieves and murderers like the marionets. But more than that : they spred gas. They knew the secret places and doorways in the undergrounds of Mars, and they had their secret pipeline-networks of gas there to control it all. But they would never live long. Their fate was horrible, as they would turn into red balloons themselves after awhile, becoming a gas-pump. They would become storages. It was an evil work of Domina, and it seemed Tivirim was in her trap. 'I won't be the next dictator,' he said. 'And I won't serve in your gas-circus.. But she was laughing at him. 'What do you want to do about it ?' she asked.

One day there was a war between the squirrels. It never really happened before. Even Domina couldn't stop it. 'Tivirim, I need you,' she said. 'There are some things I didn't tell you before. Some of the squirrels I keep alive for hundreds of years. I will take them away after awhile, but I bring them to a garden where I take their hearts out for a special tree collecting squirrel hearts for the best wine. It is how I can keep everything drunk. But listen to me : the tree is dying, and I don't know why. The squirrels are losing their drunkenness and get aggressive against each other more than ever. I think it is payback time. If I won't do anything about it, they will finally attack me.'

'That's your own fault, witch,' Tivirim said. 'That happens when you are playing with the savage forces of life and death. You do not know them.'

'You seem to be very wise,' Domina spoke. 'Please help me. If this will not end, they will finally take everything over, and they will rule with utter cruelty. Don't you understand the forces of the squirrel ?'

'So you say you actually did a good job keeping them drunk this way, just to protect Mars against their forces ?' Tivirim asked.

'Yes,' Domina said, 'definitely. If I wouldn't do something it would be way worse than thieving and murder. They would torture.'

'Ah, so what you are doing isn't torture ?' Tivirim asked.

'In a way maybe,' she said, 'but it's only to keep the greater torture away. I'm the warden of that.'

'So you are some sort of guard, some sort of porter or gatekeeper knowing a lot about the danger of squirrels ? Is that what you try to say ?' Tivirim asked. 'What you are doing now is only making it worse. Your works would be the cause of what would happen when they would break free. You have made them mad and insane.'

'But please help me,' Domina said. 'I want to repent.'

'Well, you have to bear the consequences,' Tivirim spoke. 'Don't ever challenge the forces of life and death again.'

'Please,' Domina spoke, 'help me. I will set you free, and I will keep you safe from Santarax and the marionets.'

'Okay, that is other language,' Tivirim spoke. 'I will tell you what I will do. You will take the burning tar-uniform away from me, and the implants from Santarax like the shrieking heart-splinter. Then I will become the Demon Knight again who I was, and I will lead the squirrels out of this cursed place. I will lead them across the river of doom to a place where they can be free, where there is enough food, and where they can become drunk of fruits instead of each other's blood. However they will take the blood of who will interfere with them again, and they will have fun with it. I will make them soldiers.'

‘Okay, do it,’ Domina spoke, ‘but don’t let them have revenge on me.’

‘You will have your reward, Domina,’ Tivirim spoke. ‘If you have done this from your heart, then you will be blessed.’

And thus it happened. The Demon Knight took them all across the river where they could live again, in peace, but with a great guard.

The End

The Savage Flower

He gave me the stake of the flower. It had many stings, and it led me to the depths of Tartarus, to it’s core. It was a bottomless abyss it seemed. My hands and body was burning since I slided down along the stinging stake. It was a red stake. On the other hand it felt like velvet. Suddenly I fell. And it was indeed a bottomless abyss. I kept floating. Slowly I opened my eyes, as everything around me got more and more density. I was in a shell, very slimy. I was in an egg, like a cocoon. My body was still burning. Suddenly the flower grasped me. It’s stake was coiling around me, getting me in a tight grip. I saw more of these red flowers around me. They started to feed me. My stomach was burning. They gave me strange meat, while someone was screaming. A blue-skinned girl stood before me with her hands before her eyes, almost weeping. ‘Starda Santus,’ she said. More blue-skinned people stood behind her, also speaking in a language I couldn’t understand. ‘To bocho afternu,’ an old man spoke. He had a dark low voice.

Suddenly a blue man with a crown and staff came forward and started to roar, while he raised the staff in the sky. I could hear the sounds of trains. ‘Amalemach,’ he said. It seemed the blue ones ruled here. Awhile later they showed me their computers, their machinery and their communication systems, and it seemed they were very civilised and advanced, like an underground network.

They said I had opened their realm in which they had been locked up. They suddenly spoke in my language. It was the flower, the flower, which had set them free. They called me the man with the key. They were all rejoicing, and came into strange extasy. They were cutting themselves smearing the blood on each other, also on me. I guess it was their tradition. But as glad as I was I also realized they had their own captives. Because of their technology they kept brownskinned and redskinned people locked up in the core world. These people already had a lot of freedom in this world, as it was a huge world, but they were never allowed to leave it. The blue race was scared as it was an aggressive world. This was one of the main reasons they developed their technology : to keep the core world of Tartarus locked up. They also had the hope their technology would lead them out of the blue layer one day, in which they had been trapped by strange gravity forces. They wanted to know about the upper layers of Mars, and it’s surfaces, as they could never reach for it. They felt themselves like children in a toyshop.

By their computers I could reach the coreworld. The brown and red people here had some strange pale and white spots on their bodies, whiter than I ever saw. It looked like artwork. I saw strange pipelines in the air making pictures. By following the pipelines by computers I found out that they used some sort of paint for these pictures. The paint had been generated by all sorts of blood. Different combinations would make different colours. By this these cameras worked. It was for making movies and most of all : comics. The brown and red people seemed to be merely the slaves of the blue race for that. I wondered why, but I immediately understood that the blue race practised these things because they were scared of these red and brown people. Deeper in the core these people lived in cages, in blocks, like in giant comics. They had to live in these frames while cameras were making their lives miserable. Computers would manipulate the pictures. I came to the horrible discovery that these people had been used for their blood for centuries. I hoped it would be over now, since I had set the blue race free. They gave me the keys to their computers. Everything was in my hands now. I started to break the cages down, and took the poor people out. It was like a huge stairway. I was the demon knight.

I could reprogram their computers. I was a technician. The blue race more and more started to move to the upper layers of Mars, to it’s surfaces and the layers in the Martian Skies. I became the leader of the core race. Tartarus had to be transformed. Of course I wasn't against comics, but that red and brown people with those beautiful pale and white spots of the brightest white should be bred for their blood to become paint was absurd. I loved the red and brown people with their spots. Their leaders were aggressive, but I could understand. They had been tortured and hunted for such a long time by these strange computers with those pipelines. The computers were fine by itself, but they had a pig virus. They were called the shriekers, and they could activate the camera mechanism in the pipelines by their shrieks. It was a complex computer virus. It took me days before I could break the code of that virus, it's chemical structure. The blue race had developed it once to protect themselves, but it seemed the virus was full of artificial consciousness developing itself further. I could get the pig holograms out of the computer, but they seemed to get dense in the core world. In the beginning these pigs were killerpigs, so the red and brown race had to fight for their lives. Since the pigs had cast out of the computer they searched powerthrones into the depths of the coreworld. They were made of metal, and they weren't just a computercode anymore. They lost their hologrammic lives to become flesh. Only their leaders seemed to develop their metal skin further, and became terrorpigs. The rest of the pigs lost their killer-abilities and metal skin more and more finally to become cattle and prey. There was a war going on, besides the hunt. The terrorpigs developed themselves into a new race of metallic indians.

I tried to use the comic frames again, as it got out of hand. This time my aim was the terrorpig. I could melt the metal a bit, and could pierce their skins by sharp pipelines. There were reservoirs of paint inside, but their leader was the wildest chief I ever saw. And I found out about another virus : the bison virus. This one was made by the blue race once to protect the pig virus. The code could project burning bison in the sky, all to develop the metallic indians. I could break it off by a certain key. I was the Demon Knight.

It all had to do with artificial consciousness the blue race couldn't control anymore. When I could get the burning bison out of the sky, they got dense in the valleys of the core world. It all happened in the depths of Tartarus, but some bison became metal, and the rest were killers and torturers in the beginning. This virus had many hidden layers, and the red and brown race had to fight for their lives. The price of cracking a virus code was big, as it had a lot of hidden mechanisms which would jump up to attack. My work kind of activated these hidden codes. They were the guards of the virus. The more we dealt with the upper layers of the virus, the more the deeper hidden layers came into action.

The virus seemed to be a system by which others communicated. It was some sort of internet, all to keep the virus alive. I found out about a dark underground of the blue ones. There was a lot more going on than fear only. These blue ones wanted might and control. I discovered a world of virtual reality in the depths of the code. Here they bred the minds of Mars to let them bring forth paint. They kept these minds in the frames of comics. They could transform mindpower into paint, by several complex mixes. For this reason they kept their philosophic farms alive. People needed to think a lot, as a form of donation. These blue ones were authors and painters, artists.

It was a fight about paint. It was a lot about mindpaint. The computers in these virtual worlds looked like brains. And by the frames of the comics they could create the illusion of time with their corrupted timelines. These clocks were merely the brainslayers, all for paint. I could go on in the illusions of technology for years and years, but the flower who brought me here wanted my attention. It was breaking through the layers by a speed I didn't see before, much faster than the computers of the blue race. The flower started to secrete paint, and kind of broke off the laws of technology here. I had grown into a web of illusive technology, but the flower saved me out. There was a thing greater than technology, as the flower was very mystic. Yes, in my early years I had been bound by the Law of Martian Technology. I was a soldier in their army, brainwashed by so much knowledge, but there was something greater than that. The Laws of the Tartarian Flower. I found out my knowledge wasn't of any value, as the flower spoke another language. And this flower brought me to tears. It could reach my heart. I found out that all the technology was merely a trick of the corrupted elite of the blue ones, all to control our brains for paint. Everything became so artificial, while the flower showed me a greater nature, so fresh and alive, so deep and intense. It had a savage heart. I got captured by this elite of blue ones, and they mocked me and scorned me, and said I was an irrational one, as soon as I drove away further from their laws. But the flower was growing inside of me.

Rattlesnake

River

I was wandering through the desert, dying. Suddenly a major strength came into me. I wanted to build a city. Could I do that here in the draught ? I had to bring myself to the edge of the idea and jumped off. I fell down. A rattlesnake was staring at me. It confused me. It was like there was an oasis nearby. But I couldn't get a grip on it. The rattlesnake moved away, and I saw a handle in the sand. I walked up to it, as it was on a small hill of sand. I wiped the sand away and saw a wooden door. I opened it, and sank down into a cool cellar. I went downstairs and saw a room full of jewels.

I felt myself like a conqueror. I still had the idea of making myself a city. I found a big pipeline, followed it, and came through the doorway in another room full of jewels. At the ceiling there was another door. I could go upstairs, and when I did and opened the door I was in an oasis. Here my city would be.

Rattlesnakes were my friends. They never were, but these ones were good. They gave me cold conscience, and I could breath. I had left the cities were I had born and where I grew up, almost died in the desert, but this idea of building my own city saved me. I could lose all my anger, in my friendship with the rattlesnakes. They gave me new life inside.

I woke up. It was a dream. I was in a prison. I could never build a city. I even couldn't reach a desert. I had been sentenced to death, but I was still waiting for it, for years and years. I didn't even know how old I was. I didn't know what my crime was. I was unguilty.

I heard a woman's voice. She cried behind the bars. I didn't recognize her. She said I was her son. 'You will get your freedom,' she spoke. She had been locked up as well for so many years. Since she gave life to me she had to give me away. I grew up in prison. 'A dangerous family,' they said.

I could see the love in my mother's eyes. I never saw love in the eyes of the wardens.

I cried as well. Behind here someone stood with the face of a rattlesnake. I saw love in his eyes too. Desastrous love, overwhelming, hot. He opened the prisondoor and took me in his arms. He was my father. I had never seen him. He looked like an astronaut.

'I want to build a city, dad,' I said.

'You can do that now,' he said. 'I gave you that dream. I had it too. Let's build the city together.'

I wondered where. He took me to a desert. 'Walk this road,' he said, 'until you reach the oasis.'

He went away and I never saw him back, neither my mother. But I built the city with them in my memory. I had a bleeding memory.

Rattlesnakes were always around me, my friends. They gave me cold conscience. I raised cannons, made myself weapons, and cherished the treasures of the rattlesnake inside.

There was a treasure room of the rattlesnake inside of me. I could reach down deep. I became a warrior. No hunter would hunt me down. I would raise my city. I would decorate it with the mysteries of the rattlesnake.

I dug a hole around the city, in which the poison of the rattlesnake started to stream to form a river. Many reached for my city, but drowned there, while others got the luck to reach for my wall. The citywall was high, and many archers were on it, shooting the survivors of the river down. Only a few had the luck to escape from them. However, the walls were so high with so many tricks that many fell into the river again, and who would survive the river a second time ?

My city was cruel, but it had to be, for otherwise it would die. Only the friends of the rattlesnake had a chance. Those who carried the treasures of the rattlesnake deep inside.

The river became notorious. Who could cross the river ? Also the wall got notorious. Who could come across it ? And what would happen behind it ? It was a cruel city, the fruit of much suffering. I wasn't angry anymore, but had a hell of a mechanism. No one would ever drag me back again to take me for a sinner. Growing up in a prison leads to the rattlesnake like this. I was the Demon Knight. I was Tivirim. I would come down from the stairways to be a saviour and a judge, but I always returned to my city, to my friend, the rattlesnake.

The Drill

I was reaching the river of lamentation …. A river full of medicine …. A river of dangerous venom …. So many died here …. How to get across ? Rattlesnakes were swimming here …. I saw a man with a red cape ….. I gave him some money …. He brought me across …. He was the ferry-man ….. He grinned …. Gave me my money back and thanked me, when I stood on the other side ….

‘It was a pleasure to meet you,’ he said …. ‘You were great company …’

I followed my path here, but I felt the urge to return …. The river of lamentation was so fertile …. It was dangerous, yes …. But there had to be a way to live here ….. Some had built their huts here along the river ….. I wondered where the river would lead to, so I decided to walk along the huts ….

Spitting flies …. Coming to me …. Spitting gas …. Thin air …. A bit moisty ….. I came to a web in the sky ….. Here the river was ending …. Here the river was flowing forth …. It was a strange waterfall …. I came on the other side of the web …. People were swimming there, having fun …. It looked like another situation ….. But there were skeletons floating in the river …. And dead corpses ….

It was a river of stench and sweat …. A river of blood …. I came closer …. Walking along the huts ….. I had my hand close to the handle of my sword …. These people were rejoicing in death …. They had strange shiny necklaces …. Toe-rings and other strange jewelry ….. Their huts had been built of bones …. They had a strange look … a strange stare …. As if they wouldn’t understand anything I would say or do ….. I walked further along the huts ….. along the river …. I came to a second web ….. Behind the web the river moved in another way …. When I got there it was a lonely place …. There was a strong wind here …. The river looked more poisoned than ever …. I wanted to know where the river ended …. I went through many webs and finally came to a house from where the river seemed to flow forth ….

I went inside and saw a man with white clothes, like a doctor or dentist ….. He had a drill …. I took my sword ….. I also grasped a drill from the wall ….. A fight started …. Drills seemed to come forth from the walls …. I couldn’t do anything. The man took me in a grip worse than that of an anaconda …. He spat something in my eye, while my head was almost bursting …. I screamed and lamented ….. ‘Welcome to the river,’ he said …. He pushed me into a coffin ….. I couldn’t do anything …. Then he let the coffin slide into the river ….. I was in the coffin with snakes ….. The coffin sank to the bottom …. I almost couldn’t breath ….. Suddenly I heard someone knocking …. Someone opened the coffin …. It was the ferry-man with the red cape …. He took me out …. Brought me to the shore ….

‘That was in the nick of time,’ he said ….

‘Who is it, the man in the house ?’ I asked ….

‘The ruler of the river,’ the ferry-man with the red cape said. ‘Why did you return ?’

‘Well, I shouldn’t do,’ I said. ‘But where else to go ?’

‘Oh, I know a good place,’ the ferry-man with the red cape said. ‘Behind the house of the ruler of the river.’

‘How to come there ?’ I asked.

‘Well, do not fight him, for he is the ruler of all weapons, even yours. It will always work against you,’ the ferry-man with the red cape said. ‘Go the other way. Take the other direction and you will come to the realm behind his house.’

I travelled along the river towards the other direction for years, but it was worth it. I finally saw the house from the other side. The ferry-man with the red cape was right. This was a good place. One day he came to visit me. I asked him if there was a way to get rid of the house. ‘No,’ he said. ‘The house is there to protect you.’

I looked him deep into his eyes. He had beautiful eyes. He took his cape off and gave it to me. I saw him going inside the house. I was the ferry-man of the river of lamentation now. When I finally worked there for years I once saved someone who got tortured by the house like I had been tortured before …. I saved the person out of the coffin, the same way I got saved once, and I told this person the same thing told to me. I finally met that person on the other side of the house, and gave that person my cape. Then I went into the house the same way the ferry-man once entered.

The End

The Prophecy

One of the strangest statues I ever saw in my life was the statue who could change blood into tears. If the vampire would take more blood than he could handle he would cry the rest out like tears, so that he wouldn't betray himself. But when a vampire cried was a strange phenomenon in any way. It would give strange feelings to your stomach. The strangest vampires I ever saw were the ones with toe-rings. They used these rings to rip the flesh of their prey open. These rings were like sawing- and drill-machines. They also had tight necklaces which were circle-saws. They were murderers.

They worshipped an arabian goddess who was an indian. She wrote a book by which she had possessed them all. They were her slaves. She was still a statue, but she came alive more and more. The book she wrote was named the Tamar, the book without exit. But she has also written a second book, the Tanja, the book of red lights. Tamar and Tanja were her two daughters, and they got worshipped too. They got born by anal birth. But they could also give birth by their mouths.

I came closer to her, the statue, and the heat fell upon me, and I spoke in strange languages. She had possessed me. I became her knight, the Demon Knight, the dark knight. I moved like her, talked like her, spat fire like her, finally to spread doom for a new world. These are my dark chronicles. She was the biggest thing on Mars, with big feathers. She was the stairway between Mars and earth. She gave me her spirit and I went downstairs, with a mission, to search for her children, and bring them up to her, in her fire-hot arms, where they would melt away to slide into the statue again, where they belonged. In her they were safe.

I brought the two books downstairs. It was no big deal. They said I was an angel. I was looking for a boy who would become the greatest healer of all time. I finally found him, just in time, when he got born out of his mother. I took him up to bring him upstairs to the goddess. She burnt him, and he got free with wings. He told her the most beautiful tales, and one day she went downstairs herself, to look for his home. She brought it into fire, to bring up the most beautiful pearl. It was the pearl of wisdom. She gave the boy the sword of knowledge, and then he became the biggest healer of all time. The prophecy had been fulfilled.

Out of Religion

The dentistian insects were strange animals I encountered in the Nerevada woods. They stang other sorts of insects, laid eggs in them, and flew away without any care. When the eggs opened the babies lived in their hosts for a lifetime, slowly taking their hosts over. It was a strange transformation, and the number of dentistian insects seemed to grow dramatically by this strategy. I saw dramatic changes in nature, so much indifference. Nothing was safe against the dentistian insects. They could take over each and every race.

They were beings without a care. They didn't have any respect for any other race. I had been sent to Nerevada woods with a mission. I had to bring these insects to sleep by a certain gas. The dentistian insects existed in many races. One of the races interested me the most. These were the dentistian flies. I trapped some of them in a transparent box and went upstairs again to do some research. These flies could spit dangerous poison. I found out by pulling their stings out they lost their abilities. They lost their coordination and soon became old and sickly. But after awhile their stings started to grow again. It kind of irritated me how they didn't have a respect to any other kind. In my eyes they were monsters. When I put some normal flies into the box I could follow their tricks, how they laid their eggs in these flies and took them over completely. Their kids started to live in these flies, first as a warm house and later as their own body. By this it seemed they never had to look for food, as they fed themselves by the evergrowing flesh of their victims. Their bodies became one in some sort of awful way. Yes, the dentistian flies were the most horrible insects I ever saw. I almost vomited.

And I wondered how nature could be so cruel. I dried these flies and framed them for more research. I knew there were also other sorts of animals doing these sort of things … They lived deeper in the Nerevada woods. One day I went there, and used a lot of gas. I needed to protect myself. I didn't want to have these things tested on me.

I went back to the stairway but then someone else spat some gas in me. I turned around and saw the most horrible black tall insect almost as tall as me. I don't know how long I fought against that animal, but I fell asleep finally and woke up in a hospital. I was angry. There wasn't any care here, no love, nothing. They did surgery on me, but in the middle of the session I stood up and walked out of the hospital. But at the exit a doctor with a gun told me to go back in again. Well, I still had some gas, so I thought it was the right time to use it, and then I ran out of the hospital, which exploded some seconds later.

I ran to the stairway, went upstairs, where I found my arabian indian goddess. I took her in my arms. She was like a melting statue. She said some things to me in a strange language. She was melting me as well. The hospital were I was was like a strange religion, and it all looked like the dentistian animals looking for a cradle to bring forth their babies. That is the only thing they care about. I had to take my baby out of this religion. I had to put everything in flames. There was so much more we could do. I knew some other games. But somehow the dentistian animals had inspired me.

I went back to study their mechanisms. I stuffed some of these animals and brought them to a small museum, but I also took some stuff for myself. They used weaponry necessary to survive in the wildest jungles. They had strange codes of immunity. I could learn a lot of it, especially of the poison they used. It seemed they were immune against their own poison, as there was a high percentage of it in their blood and it only stimulated them. It made them drunk in a sense and it activated their generative abilities. I somehow had to find out about this sort of life, instead of letting it make me depressed. I knew it could have that impact on me, but I chose to learn from it. I finally found out that a small bit of the poison brought my baby out of her statue-mode, and it seemed to have medicinal effect. And that was what I always had been taught : everything is good if it just comes in small portions.

The End

Tartar the Slayer - Death Fiction

Blood like Rivers

King David had an enormous empire on Mars, having so many slaves, the warprisoners of the many wars he had won. He had pierced their teeth, and now he was their king. He also had many bellydancers and he had the biggest harem of all kings on Mars. King David was feared because of his cruelty. He had an armor made by teeth, and his soldiers had also armors made by teeth.

King David had some white stripes on his face, but for the rest he was a dark man. He had many eliphants, tigers and other animals serving in his empire. One night Tartar the Slayer came to the palaces of David. He was the one causing blood to flow like rivers overflowing, everywhere he came. He raised his sword made of the teeth of a dark animal, and challenged king David.

'Oh, coward, you don't want to come out ?' Tartar roared. David looked out of his window, then took a bow and tried to shoot Tartar by an arrow, but he missed. Tartar ran into the palace of the king, killed sixty guards by his sword, and then ran upstairs. It was a bloodbath downstairs, but Tartar was used to it. He kicked the door of David's room in, but David wasn't there anymore. When Tartar looked out of the window, he saw David walking on the roof. Tartar took his bow, then an arrow from his quiver and then shot, but at that moment David dived away.

It was in these days David started to train more and more of the men of the empire. He now took the boys out of their homes when they were only six years old, while in the past they needed to be twelve first.

Tartar was cutting some wood for some new arrows. He knew about the ways of King David, about his secrets. When he was young priests of David took him to a room of rituals, where he had to learn symbols, and where they did cruel things to him. It was a secret cult, and Tartar knew how King David had such power. Tartar was the chosen one, destined to become a highpriest of King David, but he escaped. Now Tartar was looking for revenge.

One day when he was young the priests showed him the most horrible thing he ever saw. In a hall under one of the palaces there was a secret place where skeletons had to do heavy work. They had been pierced in their teeth, and they were secret slaves. Some said these were the ones killed in the wars of King David, but here they just lived on. The priests also showed him the sword of King David, made of the teeth of the kings killed by King David and his armies, and the teeth of the rarest animals existing. They said that King David could dominate the heads of everyone by this sword.

King David was obsessed by teeth. His harem was full of women having skirts and bra's made by the rarest sorts of teeth. Also the artwork on the walls of his palaces was made of teeth.

Since Tartar's strike King David had put wolves around his throne. They all feared Tartar more or less, as they knew he was a chosen one, something they didn't completely understand. When Tartar got born he had a spidertattoo, which was a sign for them, although when he grew up the tattoo more and more looked like a fly.

One day Tartar returned to the palaces of King David, killed some wolves, slayed eighthunderd guards, and then beheaded King David, took his skull, and went back to the forest where he decorated his weapons with the teeth of King David. Tartar was now king of the jungle and of death, as he had killed the dominator.

He dived from a high rock into the river, and swam to the palaces again. This time to take some women of David's harem. He took them to the river, pushed them in, and said : 'You're free now. You have been washed free by the jungle-river.' He knew some of these women had to serve the king since they were young, and they never had much freedom. Although they wept a lot about the king's death, they went with Tartar, and in the jungle he showed them their huts.

The End

The Safe Cave

The queen stood before Tartar and gave him a hug, as he had brought her daughter back. The queen gave him two of her panthers, but later on he killed them both, as he wanted to be alone. But he would never forget the love she gave him. One day the daughter of the queen returned to Tartar, as she wanted to stay with him. Later she told him that the queen was in problems again. He would go with the daughter to the place where the queen lived. It was deep in the jungle. Predators were roaring, monkeys were shrieking, and the place had been baptized in sunlight. The queen showed Tartar a bloody knife. She told him that a messenger of a tribe gave her the knife which was a sign of war. The queen didn't want to attack, but wait. But Tartar took the knife, and said he wanted to go to that tribe alone.

In the evening he returned with a few monkeys. He had slain all the warriors of the tribe. The queen smiled. Since so many of her empire died by a strange disease, Tartar was her help. Tartar often went there to help, as there were only a few to help the queen.

Once upon a night the queen heard a shriek, and when she went outside she saw her daughter in the grip of two dark men. 'Is it happening again ?' the queen asked. 'Why don't you just let my daughter go ?'

'I am sorry, but we have orders,' the two men said. The queen took her bow and by two arrows she pierced the men. The queen couldn't stand that her daughter was still in danger, and she had problems sleeping, so she asked Tartar to come to her. Tartar decided to stay this time. He slept between the two women, and one day he brought them to a safe cave. But he had enough of it, and didn't want any present. He wanted to be alone now, and he went so deep into the jungle where no one lived, only animals.

He was on his way to a vulcano, as there was the place where he felt safe. Here some big friends of him, two large snakes, thick like pillars, lived. The slime and sweat was dripping from their bodies, and when they saw Tartar they liked him by their firy tongues. Here also a dragon lived, who could shapeshift into a woman, and even into a group of women. Tartar loved to be around them, as they were like the elements of nature.

Everything seemed to be about an egg which had to be close to the vulcano, for only the vulcano would have the powers to brood it. One day the egg burst out and a fluid like blood seemed to come forward, which also was a bit like paint. It would possess the heads of everyone to paint new dreams. And soon also the vulcano started to burst out. Tartar was safe with the dragon and the two snakes. Deeper in the egg there were ivory weapons. When the vulcano started to burst out more and more, the dragon took Tartar to the depths underground where there was an ivory temple. It was a secret world here where the dragons came to do their shapeshiftings. Tartar felt safe here. He had finally found home.

The King and the Sword

Tartar found a speaking sword somewhere in a cave. He stepped on his horse, and rode away. There was for him no way back now he had this speaking sword. It would guide him, and comfort him in the hours of loneliness. The deepest parts of the night were always the most difficult for him, because of the nightmares, but now he had this friend who would always stay with him, his sword.

There was no way to trust anything but his sword, and his sword gave him the warmth of blood. He could always lick his sword to drink from it's perpetual bloodstream.

Tartar found out he wasn't the only one having a relationship with a sword. There were many more fighters who swore by their sword, and they even got further than him. But their swords didn't speak, and that was the difference. Their swords gave them headaches at times, but Tartar had a perpetual friendship with his sword.

Many were jealouse of him, but they also knew that if they would steal the sword of Tartar, the sword would start to shriek to devour them by fire.

There was no stranger thing in the world but Tartar's sword. The sword was alive, and it's secret was a few of the rarest teeth it bore inside. These teeth were red, green and blue, and they were radiating strong lights, almost blinding.

One day he met the king of all teeth. The king even bred them, as they were the lights of death. He lived in the depths of Mars, where he had his throne. The king enlightened death by the teethlamps, and he was a blessing for the souls who searched their way in the darkness. The king gave them the teethlamps in their chest and head, so that they could breath again, and feel love again. They became lamps themselves, and Tartar was amazed.

'I will show you the things no any king has shown you,' the king said. Tartar bowed down and listened. 'The sword has brought you here, and I have brought the sword to you,' the king said. 'You come from a dark, dark world, and you have searched for light, but you couldn't find it. The search is over now, as you have found light. It is in the teeth. These teeth came from hell, and even deeper places. They have brought forth the light by their suffering.'

'I create a new world,' the king said, and gave an armour made of teeth to Tartar. All the teeth had different colours and different lights, and it brought Tartar into a new dimension, like by an elevator. When he looked into the mirror he saw that his eye-pupil had small teeth inside, lying in a circle, and then it started to spin, while powerfull beams came forward. The eye-pupil started to change in all sorts of colors now. The man gave him a horse, and then disappeared.

To Tartar the world was different now he had new eyes. With his horse he slided deeper into the depths of Mars, only hoping for more of these miracles. To Tartar the world was a surprise now. To Tartar suffering was in another light now. The king spoke further to him through the sword.

Tamar the Horrible – Evil Fiction

Hell's Bakery

In the realms of hell there was no slayer but Tamar the horrible. She had a bloodlust like no one else, and her breath was like pure fire. She was the softest woman existing, but at the same time the hardest. By certain jewels called the dakuster-jewels she had enslaved so many to be her gladiators in the wars of hell. These jewels were like chains surrounding their wrists and ankles, and these made them drunk, so that they wouldn't be blocked in fighting by the false spirits of shame and guilt, which had been sent out by the enemy to paralyze the warriors. The jewels would also take away the fear which was another strategy of the enemy to hold the warriors down. Tamar's sword was abundant in slaughter, spoiling so much blood, as blood she wanted to see on the killing fields. It was the blood which made her men drunk, and by that they could reach their dreams again, dreams which had been taken away by the enemy. Tamar teached her men that they shouldn't fear suffering, as suffering would make them drunk, and would change their visions. She teached all her men to be ascets and to search for the treasures of hell. The most horrible beasts of hell were at her side, and she teached her men that everything existed by the paradox, and that something could only survive by the paradox of the extremes. Only those who could be the meanest could be the must graceful, and only those who learnt how to be the most hatefull could handle the tools of eternal love. Only the extreme and eternal paradox could heal hearts, but could also break hearts like nothing else.

Tamar the Horrible was an enslaver of hearts to lead them to the eternal freedom. Her dakuster-jewels were notorious and feared, but also desired by many. Many were waiting for her enlightening touch in hell, but she was very selective. Only the best would be a part of her army, and the rest would suffer under her bone-breaking hands. Her initiations were most cruel, and not many could handle it. The inhabitants of hell warnt each other not to approach her, only when they had considered the cost, or in hopeless situations when there was nothing to lose anymore. She had the winds of hell as her chariot and she was searching for nothing but blood. She teached that all life was in the blood, all knowledge and every stone of hell. They said the seven winds of hell were seven wolves who had defeated the seven lions of hell. Seven lionskulls were in the carriage of Tamar the Horrible, and these skulls had been covered by their own skins, while these skins had been covered by the skin of a zebra.

Tamar the Horrible knew how to live in domination. She was the nightmare in the heads of so many, keeping them under the heavy weights of hell, her giant swines, her giant pigs and her giant lions. Many begged to have a day off in hell, but she kept them all merciless under her heavy chains. She built cities of their blood and bones to make her dreams come true, the dreams of the eternal paradox of the extreme.

She didn't listen to dreams of others or to prophets, as she was the rule herself. She was like the temple of hell, or even it's arc. There was no one who could more silence and shrieks but her. She was the woman of twisted extremes. Dark animals were always surrounding her chariot when she was hunting : the meanest panthers, and her mocking hyena's. She had her domain in Persiot, in the East of Hell, but most of the time she lived in Grugdia, which was the South-West of hell, where the hottest and highest fires were existing. Here she ruled over those of no hope, also taking their last hopes away. Tamar was the doom of the huntingfields of hell, like hell's altar of eternal loss. She was the one who had raised the hellgates of Tantalos high, which was the frontportal.

Deeper in hell there were places like Tartarus, Atlas and Prometheus, the place of evergrowing suffering. None would easily enter her domains, as they would meet her invisible whips. These whips would torture their minds in all forms, and would make them drunk to take their minds away so that they would become the subject for more suffering when they would wake up. She would whip them into sleep only to let them slide in her traps. She would chain them by strange jewels made of goatskulls having strange evil buttons like the marks of hell which would them make a subject to the eternal torture she inflicted on them. She didn't belief in final destruction. She believed in everlasting damnation. Damned souls would be subject to torture, and this would be without an end. If there was any sleep or drunkeness, it would be to let them wake up in even worse suffering. That was the goal of all her so-called mercy. She was the personification of Evil, of evergrowing, everlasting Evil.

Many brave men tried to destroy her heart throughout ages, but they could never find her heart. The problem was they searched for it in the realms of hell, but her heart had been stored in a place called Evil, the core beyond Hell. Here her heart had been stored behind strange glass made of the tormented eyes of the damned. Everyone coming close to this glass had to pay by anger and inflictions of self-rejections to become more or less twisted spirits. The glass would always lead them astray in mindwebs of confusion where they would lose all their grown-up behaviour to become children of evil. For Tamar it was only a fragile, tender spiderian snack. They were so helpless in this killing womb, that it would only drive them further away from their goal.

She was the mistress of Evil, of all Evil, all heartless evil. She had a heart, but it was frozen, having a strange flame letting it all burn in a strange fire. She was the world beyond hell, and anyone coming near could only fall away in paralysis. All the dreams she gave led them to greater nightmares, to the eternal ones. No one would ever awake again. It was a bottomless pit in which they would be eternal fuel for her heart.

Those who tried to get close to her got struck by a strange disease in which their minds melted away into demency. Many went insane in their attempt to approach her, and thus she became the most dangerous instrument of hell, a strange merciless machine of evil, an evil beyond all sense and beyond all understanding. It was by her cruel ways she let the spirits and souls of the damned clot until they were her tormented jewels of evil by which she ruled. The process of clotting took eternities.

There was no medicine against someone like Tamar, and this is why the rules of hell got tighter and tighter like a cruel unchangable law of evil. It was like a heavy weight pulling them all down. But one day a group of children found a young lion in the desert. The lion had the hairy skin of a giant spider, and it seemed the animal was carrying strange powers. It led the children through the glass behind which the heart of Tamar was. Tamar was upset that these children seemed to have found the key. It was a strange biological key, this lion. And it teached the children about an eternal sleep in which their hearts would be safe, and in which suffering would fade away. This was what the children needed as they suffered from insomnia by the curse of Tamar dwelling in their heads. It was like Tamar's eyes were always open, and it seemed she suffered from insomnia too. When Tamar saw the lion she felt some compassion, and also a little boy seemed to have compassion with her. 'You can caress the animal,' the small boy said to her. 'It will heal you.' When Tamar did she started to cry. She could close her eyes, and fall asleep. That day the winds of eternal sleep and eternal drunkeness went through hell like winds to make an end to so much suffering, and to set free so many slaves. Also the river of forgetfullness started to scream to bring healing. Tamar slept for three days and when she woke up she was another person. But after awhile she started to do the same things she always did. It was like these things were too deep in her, like they belonged to her and she belonged to them. There was no one who could prevent her from going this road. She had been touched by a dream only to call forth a greater nightmare, pushing the flame away to inflict an eternity of icefields like the fields of glass. It was like hell was freezing over this time, triggering an even darker flame of evil, a flame streaming from the deepest of her heart, possessing them all. She inflicted so many sour, salt and bitterness on them, so that they started to produce sweetness from deep inside to survive. She made living gingerbreads of them on which the birds of hell would float down. She became the bakerwoman of hell, raising man and women like cakes and tarts, like icecreams to be the fuel of her heart. There were many unknown predators she had to feed, coming from the depths of her heart.

There were living bakers in her heart, while she was the bakerwoman. These bakers were predators, different parts of her. One of her most evil and cruel creation she created by using these bakers was time. By time she could lock everything up, to control everything. She created time by tormenting the minds of her victims. By her whips she split their minds and actually in these splits the isolated parts got frozen by which time could rise. Time was an instrument she used to dominate hell. But she also needed time as a jewel for herself.

The pigs of hell were time-masters standing in her way. That was why deep in her realms of Evil she had temples where she sacrificed pigs. She had all kinds of ways to turn them into gingerbreads. No one was allowed to master and inflict time but her. But also numbers were objects in her hand which she could cause to rise in the minds of her victims by the invisible whips. The goats of hell were number-masters so she also hunted them. And the combinations between time and numbers caused language to grow, all to lead them further astray in their cages like bow-nets. The oxes of hell were language-masters. For a baker there was a lot to do. She was a mistress of illusion. She knew that time, numbers and letters were just strange diseases. She had her own jewels to let them rise.

The Mark of Evil

Tamar woke up in her dungeon. It was a hard night where nightmares tortured her mind, and now she woke up to this black snake who held her in prison for such a long time. The arms of self-pity were almost strengling her, when she was there, chained to the wall, and her inner screams seemed to burn her from inside out.

‘Come on, black dove, not so sad,’ the black snake whispered. ‘I know this is what you want, for you gave it to so many, and what you give out is always your desire to get, isn’t that so right ? Well, I have a surprise for you : It will only get worse.’

Tamar was cursing, as the black snake was tightening her chains. She almost couldn’t feel her blood flow anymore. ‘You know why I am here, black snake,’ she blasted. ‘I will find my way in this dungeon of yours, I will take your sword and slay you.’

‘Hey, not so fast,’ the black snake said. ‘I know you like this party.’ Then from all sides strange animals came to bite her and eat from her flesh. There was nothing she could do, but she had asked for it in the evil night, in which she sold herself to get the power to rule the underworld. She wanted to rule hell, and it’s world beyond called the place of Evil. She didn’t know that the sword she asked for would lead her to such a place, but it was certainly the price she had to pay for bearing such a power. She now knew she would only have to defeat this black snake who had kidnapped her, and to take it’s sword, so that she would come into balance again.

‘Oh, evil morning,’ a witch was screaming in the distance. ‘I wake up after a thousand years, and see what I get on my plate, brought to me by my faithfull and lovely black snake. I once killed my own raven for it to get such a precious being. Girl, I know you have the power to rule hell and all it’s places beyond. You are wearing the seal of delirium, and I will wait here until I have sifted all your powers out of your chest, as young women only deserve to die, and not bearing such forces. You have brought others down to get where you are now, but look and see you are in a dungeon, as that is the price of all your powers.’

She came closer to Tamar, and Tamar got pale. ‘Oh, you’re a beautiful black woman, caught by a black snake, my snake. Did you really think your trip would lead you to nowhere ? This is something. I am somebody, and I will show you in a few. I know exactly what to do to take your powers and how to destroy you. Don’t worry, my child, don’t worry.’

There was nothing Tamar could do. She knew she had to pay the price, and she was persisted to get the sword of the black snake, and maybe even the treasures of this old witch. This woman seemed to be the evil goddess of all eliphants, and she held the treasure of all gravity in hell in her hand, a treasure by which she could cause doom and hopeless feelings everywhere.

Tamar prayed inside, something she only did when she had to. She didn't know how to deal with this situation. Her walls were sinking lower and lower in hell, even beyond the backgates, into a place called Evil. A raven was staring at her. She had never seen such a styled bird, and he was so big. 'Woman, I will have some mercy on you, as my master replaced me without mercy. I know this place like my own body, so I can guide you in it, and lead you to it's backdoors.'

'Offer accepted,' Tamar whispered. 'Get me out of here. This woman is insane.'

The raven smiled and looked at her with an undescribable stare, while it moved it's head. 'No worries, my dear. No worries.' By it's beak he cut the chains of Tamar, and soon she was sitting on it's back. He knew the way out of this dark place.

'Wonder why this is going so easy,' the witch screamed. 'You both will have nothing to say anymore when your trip will end. Every escape here will lead you deeper into my ovens.'

'We won't be a piece of your meat anymore, witch,' the raven shouted, while a fierce tall flame came out of it's beak to devour the witch and her black snake. 'Where have you been, dear raven, and why such powers ?' the witch screamed.

The raven took the treasure of the eliphant in it's beak, while sealed doors seemed to open up. 'Hell will swallow you deeper,' the black snake roared.

Tamar took the bird tight by it's neck so that she wouldn't fall. She took notice that the bird wore a necklace around it's neck to which a stone had been attached which looked like an eye. 'It's the eye of the raven, woman,' the raven spoke. 'It's an amulet given to me when I made my journey through the underworld, and it brought me back. They spoke to me about a woman I had to give it to. Now take it, it is yours.'

Tamar took the amulet and attached it around her neck. It brought her immense powers to see, which was merely the power to consume. It was like the invisible flame. 'These eyes are merely the transformers and creators of these worlds beyond hell, and they are the powerswords of the gladiators here,' the raven said.

‘Oh, I knew the eyes aren’t to observe, but to dominate. It brings the mark of the slave,’ Tamar said.

And by the eye of the raven Tamar raised her slaves and gladiators, for she was still in a war, an everlasting war. There were so many powers who wanted to possess her, and one would be even worse than the other. She knew she had to dominate her own skull, and she could only do that by dominating the skulls around her. In this the raven was her understanding friend.

It was in these ages Tamar could raise the invisible fire to it’s heights, and she loved this fire. She bore the eye of evil now, a strange song in the middle of her chest. The invisible fire was moving along the tight rules of this song, which always seemed to be the same. It was the song of freedom she bore in her heart, a song she could sing all day long, and in the nights she whispered it.

The raven and the song brought her to Hasor, one of the major cities in the place of Evil. Here the spirits were like blankets and clothes, and they all seemed to have their place in the citywalls. She loved this place as it resonated with her heart. The raven knew this place as the place of it’s rebirth. Here the raven could shapeshift into a man. It wasn’t strange for Tamar to watch her friend being a man now. She knew about these things. Together they walked on a market in the depths of Hasor. There were many slave-markets here, cattle-markets, and most of all gladiator-markets and weapon-markets. They treated her like she was a queen now she had the eye of the raven around her neck. They feared her for they knew she was bearing the invisible fire. Ratun and Irank were two men selling wild hunterdogs on the market. These hunterdogs were white and hairy with strange diamondlike spots on their bodies. These spots were hard and looked like jewels. Ratun and Irank wanted to buy her amulet, but when Tamar turned them down they said she could take some of the dogs as a gift. Tamar got about twenty dogs, and she knew she could use them, as the raven had said to her she needed to go to the royal house to slay it’s king if she wanted to dominate Hasor. It was a must for her to dominate Hasor or she would never be the ruler of Evil.

She had never seen such mean dogs, such slayers, so she could use them very well. It was like many around her expected her to slay the king, so this gave her strength. They knew she had come here for a mission. The king ran outside the royal house when she came closer and closer and lay himself at her feet. ‘Spare us,’ he said. ‘We know we have done things wrong, but we tried our best.’

But Tamar knew he was a hypocrite. ‘It seems you only listen to one side of the story, but okay, I will have mercy on you, when you and yours will work in the depths of Hasor’s underground. I will free your slaves who worked there, and I will place them in your positions.’

‘Whatever you say, woman,’ the king said, ‘but have mercy on our souls.’

With her dogs and the raven she went into the royal house, called the slaves from the underground and gave them the positions of the upper class. The king and his aristocrats had to descend into the underground of Hasor to do heavy slavework for the rest of their lives. It was the day Tamar raised a dogthrone in Hasor, and she chose one of the best slaves to be the new king. The same day Tamar went with the raven and the twenty dogs to Chesbon, another major city of the place of Evil. Here the same happened, and soon Tamar became the new ruler of the place called Evil. These are her chronicles of her early days. The raven played a big part in settling her throne, and of course the mighty treasure of the eliphant. Tamar was a ruler like no other. She was the darkest, but she bore an unknown light. Here, in the depths of this place of Evil she would lay her heart, here she would give them all a different mark, a mark above all marks, the mark of evil.

Army of Eagles

‘Why did we choose to see. We are so young. Why did we choose to be frozen in eternal sight ? We can’t move. We are pillars in a temple of evil struck by fear. It’s coming from the arc where the eye of evil rests near. We are afraid of these lights, so why did we choose them ? We are hiding for these lights, so why do we invite them ? Aren’t we all torn up inside, watching both sides of the night ?’

Tamar slayed herself a way through the stubborn Filistines to the desert throne of a ghost terrorizing the spheres of Evil for such a long time. He looked like a blanket, and Tamar could nothing but mock him, while she held her sword, the spiritslayer, against his throat. 'Do you wanna live, bastard ?' she said with an ironical tone. 'Do you wanna live ? Live in my sword forever.' And then she beheaded him while he slided into her sword for eternal slavery. He would be another spiritslayer living in her sword, only coming out on her command. It was good life for the ghosts in her sword. They had food in abundancy and all the other pleasures of the place of evil. She cared for her ghosts like no one else did.

She slayed herself a path through the Amalekkites and the Moabites to do the same things to their ghostkings. She was the ruler of all evil, and they would all meet her sword, the spiritslayer, to live in it forever. It was another tale in a princess' headjewel of death. The princess loved to hear about how Tamar slayed the Hethites and what she did to their kings. But it was all a story. Since the princess died she listened to nothing but stories, as the reality was too much for her. She didn't care the stories were evil, as she didn't know the difference between good and evil anymore. She had been betrayed by her own family who called themselves good. If that was good, then what was evil ? It got her confused, and she found her way on the barbarian path.

But one day Tamar really came to her. The princess was shocked. She didn't know if she had to laugh or cry, to be scared or to be open. Tamar stood there almost naked with some belts across her body. 'Wanna go with me, woman ?' Tamar asked, and reached her hand out. 'You repress so much of yourself. Offer yourself to the eternal paradox of extremes and get alive in hell. It is not what you think. Your family you trusted and who were like heaven to you since you were young appeared to be messengers of hell when you figured them out. But now I will show you what hell really is.

The princess nodded. She took off her clothes to get some skins and belts to cover herself, and then she descended with Tamar into the depths of a vortex.

'First we are going to get a sword for you, a spiritslayer,' Tamar said. 'Whoever you defeat will be a gladiator of your sword, a slave, but take care that you will treat them well. They will live in your sword in abundancy, and they come out on your command.'

'Will they be rich then ?' the princess asked.

‘Oh yes,’ Tamar said, ‘very, very rich, you will bless them with all the goods of the place of evil.’

‘But I wish death and suffering on my enemies,’ the princess said. ‘I have a revengefull heart, like I want to pay them back, so don’t you have another sword for me.’

‘No,’ Tamar said. ‘You must start with this one. You see, you can’t be evil when you never learned how to be good.’

‘I will be good to the ones I love, my friends, and those in need, but not to those who did harm to me and others,’ the princess said.

‘That’s too easy, woman,’ Tamar said. ‘You must first learn to love your enemies, to bless them, to help them, to save them, or everything will be without any value.’

The princess bowed her head. This was too much to ask from her.

Then Tamar showed her a needle, and said : ‘If you want to go to that place called Evil and to rule it all together with me, then you first need to go through the eye of the needle. When you don’t get yourself through this hole, the needle will finally get you.’

The princess spat on the ground, took the needle and tried to break it, but she couldn’t. And slowly the needle started to turn itself against her.

Tamar wasn’t disappointed. She knew the royal ones, who weren’t useful for anything. It wasn’t the first one she saw spiralling away in captivity of the needle. This pin could only be handled when going through it’s eye. It was the pin of evil bringing all those down who would be too good, too holy and too beautiful for the place of evil.

The stench of the place of Evil was unworthy in the eyes of those driven by perfumes. They always said horses smell bad, pigs too untasty, and dogs too wild. And thus Tamar was a savage on a lonely path, as even the savages were often too royal and too civilized.

One day she came in a fight against a Roman giant. It was such a horrible fight and it took such a long time that they had to make a compromise, and they became lovers. It was like this love was the price of war, and just a war undercover, and it didn't feel right. And thus it came to another fight one day, and she could finally slay him. Still she loved him, as the price of their encounter, and she visited him in the realms of death. It was here she could finally have some true sort of friendship. He begged her if she wanted to take him up to hell and the place of evil again, and she gave him the needle. Would he come through the eye of this needle, or would the needle bring him down ? He had a horrible fight against the pin of evil, in which she finally left him alone. The pin brought him to life in the good world, where he became king. It was there Tamar finally lost his love for him, and she got relieved, but she still felt the pain. It was like a red trace in her head, like a vein.

She also had such an experience with a Greek giant, and she knew that only in the depths of the place of evil she could heal. One day from the depths a new pin started to show up, sharper than ever and with the smallest eye. It was a fight for her to get herself through the eye, or the pin would drag her all the way down to the good world. And it would be a hard fall, for she was high on the rock now. Finally she survived, but the pin had wounded her very much. In the unknown depths of the place of Evil she saw more Roman and Greek giants, but this time she didn't dare to fight them, as she knew where it could lead to. These giants could take their spines out of their backs to use them like swords. But when the pin returned to her, she knew that it would help her. She went to the giants, and gave them the pin. Not long after that they were all slain by the evil pin. Because she had overcome the pin she could mold it in her hand. Sometimes it was like a thin snake-jewel around her arm, or around her head, and it could also turn into a feather. She loved to wear it in her hair, as it made her dreadfull. She could come deeper and deeper in the depths of the place of Evil by it. It dragged her to the sources of the invisible blood from which she drank, while visible blood started to cover her body. By the invisible forces she could make things visible again, and it became the secret of her creative powers. Often she encountered groups of giants, which she gave the pin. No one seemed to survive the pin, but one day there was a giant called Ruben who could get through the eye of the pin. Ruben told her that he invented the pin and that he had sent it to her to take her to him. The giant told her that there were many of these sorts of pins, and that they had the mission to turn them into predators. Only the predators who could dominate the pins by getting through their eyes would survive. The rest would go down under to became the captives of the pins. The pins would lead them to the good world which was merely a breeding.

Ruben told Tamar also that one could only become a predator in the sources of the invisible forces, where the pins would lead the survivors to. 'Real giants know what it is to be small and even to be little dwarves. And those who are visible know what it is to be really invisible,' Ruben always said. And these were wise words to Tamar. Ruben told her also about his sons who were even bigger than him. All these giants could also take their spines out of their backs to use these as their swords. Pallu had the tallest and largest spine, and he even used it as a spear. Ruben told that he was really a pinmaster. One night Tamar had a lot of nightmares about the pins. She was exhausted when she awoke. She saw Ruben before her, who had taken his spine out, and he was putting it in his throat. 'You must master sleep,' he said to Tamar. 'You must take it out of your body and use it like your sword, and you must put it in your throat and then take it out again, like your spine.' Then he teached her how she could take her spine out of her back and use it just like him. He could also take certain bones out of his leg to use them like weapons. Ruben teached her that her body was pure armory. She needed to learn how to use it.

The night after she had nightmares again and this time she really had to wrestle against the pins. She first needed to accept their ways so that they would swallow her inside, as going through their eyes, and thus she could get them in her hands. Ruben teached her that sword and pins would first be her stakes, and later her weapons. She needed to accept suffering. She needed to be an ascet-warrior. It was not a simple way to victory. Ruben told her that she could only ride a beast after it had swallowed and digested her. This was like going through the eyes of the needle. And she discovered that some needles had many eyes, but when she finally got through, it would be the keys in her hand. It was all to open the Book of Evil, the book of so many locks. If she could set it's spirits free, it's invisible spirits, everything, yes, everything would get in line again.

These were rough nights, nights in which she thought she would lose everything, everything she had built herself on. Until she felt the soft and wet hairy walls of evil in her mind telling her all she needed to know. These were the pillars of a new world, the voices of the unknown finding their ways to the hearts where they could live forever. These voices were the unvisible, yet so vibrant, full of potential, full of direction bearing the program of creation, for in a flash they would be visible, like evil red marble, and in a flash they would live forever. She had found the jewels of evil below her feet, and she could stare through the eyes she went through. She was a rider of the beasts now, a yielder of the swords, as they first rode on her and pierced her deep by their teeth. She now understood this cruel paradox, like a flaming wheel in the night, why without this there wouldn't be any life in eternity.

And also these wheels of paradoxal understanding had to be broken, their flames to be taken away, to make room for the invisible fires leading her to the greater wheels. She found the perfect car of evil after all these nights, which was merely a slayer. There was nothing she could do about it. Only the slayer would bring life, while it tore the present realities apart. Only the slayer would bring her to the depths of potential to the awakening of mental explosions. She didn't want to live her life in jokes anymore. She wanted to open this Book of Evil, the world beyond everything. She wanted to take it's mask off and read, read, until she would reach eternal life. Only the Slayer would be able to read this book, and she was willing to let it flow all through her, through all the barricades and blocks, through all the stones and dikes. She wanted to be the watcher on the walls, to bring all these walls down. She knew it would only happen under the weight of the opened Book of Evil. All these letters were the pins she had to deal with. It would swallow her first, and then she would rise in it, and ride it like a car. It was an arable land, not a battlefield, in which she had to sow herself and nestle herself.

In the depths of Evil she would finally find the meaning of all this and come to a rebirth. In this she was nothing but a grape under the feet of evil, waiting to be drunk and to come alive in somebody. First she needed to come into someone, and then she could be someone. The Feet of Evil rested heavy on her until she would be one with the invisible sorces streaming through the land. It was a land she didn't know much about, but the giants were more than willing to tell her. They had waited for her for so long. Not in a womb was her place of rebirth this time, but there where the Feet of Evil would tread her. So many pins seemed to pierce her, but it would be the only way to open the Book of Evil deep inside her heart. As long as it would stay locked it would be a tyran to her.

The pins stang deep in her brain, but she knew it was the only way. It opened her up to the invisible forces inside. Her body wanted to connect to her brains, but her brains were locked up. They had to break it open, and they used the pins for that. So many giants she met who were making the pins. And they could only do that because they first dominated them in their minds. They went through the smallest gates, through the longest journeys under the Feet of Evil. They had spent their time to figure it all out. They teached her how to be a pinmaker herself, and how these pins would serve her as her armor. She became a pinmaster, and soon they led her to a place called invisible jewel. Here many other women like her were, and they all had gracious manners. She didn't know such dignity could exist. This place was truelly like an invisible jewel. But soon she came to the understanding that these women all had secret pins, and soon it turned out into a fight. There was nothing Tamar could do against those pins. These pins were decorated like the most beautiful ornaments from all sorts of jewels, and soon she gave up all hope and sunk into despair. It struck her like nothing else, but then she remembered the paradox of the pin. She first needed to go through the eye of it. 'If you want to sacrifice me, then sacrifice me,' Tamar spoke to the women. They tied her, and brought her to a temple-like atmosphere below their realms, and it was like a garden. They tied her to a stake, and said : 'We as women of the invisible jewel have all been initiated like this. If you want to be one of us : face the pins.' And then they skinned her and ate from her like cannibals. Tamar was almost a skeleton now, but she remembered she could use all her bones like weapons. What was it she needed to do ? She knew she first had to be swallowed. A fire from above came to devour her, and she started to burn, while the fire stayed and became invisible. New skin started to grow on her, and she looked more and more like the women of the invisible jewel. 'Are you my friends or my enemies ?' Tamar asked.

'That's what you decide,' the women said. 'But we know that it all works by the paradox. You can't be our friend if you can't be our enemy. But you must always be the best.'

'Well, I do my best,' Tamar said. She seemed to get a high position now under the women, and soon she was their ruler. She was a pinmaster now, and a damned good one. She got an own horse now, and the women said that the horse was made of all the pins she had survived and defeated by going through their eyes.

But the more she stayed in this realm of the invisible jewel the more she discovered about it's nature. She found out that these women could change into pins themselves. She saw how the women lured giants to their places, and whenever such a giant was in their private domains they would lock the doors and turned into pins to take whatever they wanted. They would even move across the borders of the place of evil, hell and even death to do such things, and they deceived many from the good world. They would also go across the borders of heaven to deceive angels and spirits, and those ghosts who called themselves 'god'. To them it was a good hunt, so that they could build their spiritwalls. They wanted to build their own heavens, and they wanted to test anyone to see if they would be worthy to live with them.

To Tamar love was already a strange thing, a strange war, as it always seemed to show up where the fight became too painfull or exhausting. War and love were like the tides of evil, in a very complicated way. Tamar didn't want to play with these powers like the women of the invisible jewel did, but she wanted to open the Book of Love to know what it is all about, and what would be the rules. So this time it would be a war against the women themselves, and not just against their pins. They were pins themselves, and Tamar knew she had to get them there where they would be completely without weapons, without armory, so that they would show her how they were a weapon themselves. It was like they accepted from Tamar that she didn't do the things they did, because she was their new ruler. It was quite normal to them that she was different, and they trusted her. They would be in her surroundings almost naked without any weapons as helpless lambs. Tamar finally used this situation, and one by one she got them shapeshifting into the pins they were. She could break them down to the bottom, as she could throw her threads through their eyes to bind them tight. It was by this she found out about the mysteries how to turn into a pin. Tamar became the pin of evil and dominated all other pins, until she broke them down to the bottom. She sacrificed these deceivers of love to open the book. But it wasn't what Tamar expected. The Book of Love seemed to be merely a book of hunters, and it slowly brought her down. She didn't know about the price of opening such a book, and she became a paranoid creature. It made her very small, as she found out it was nothing more but a bunch of scorn. It got her so far that she wanted to destroy this Book of Love, before it would destroy her. By all it's cruelty it was turning her into the worst predator existing, letting the shadows of fear falling on everything. She wished she would never have opened this book, but it was already too late. And she more and more became a prisoner of it. The words were possessing her, making her drunk, and it's spirits filled her with an undescribable hunger. It tore her apart, and turned her into the meanest pin to get what she wanted. Nothing mattered anymore but to quench this flame of hunger. It drove her wild and insane.

It was like the women of the invisible jewel were applauding in her head, like they were saying : 'You are now really one of us.' Of course : They had opened this book before, in the same way she did. There was no way back, as she slided in the deeper initiations of the place of the invisible jewels through this book. It was like the portal to it's depth, a vortex sucking her deeper like never before. She got that paranoid stare in her eyes, full of self-deception and seduction, all to get it done. She needed to lead the sheep astray just to protect her heart against all those swindling forces, all those undercover wars. And if she would run away, it would only come closer, and there was nothing else she could be but to learn how to battle in the War of Love.

She was painting herself by deceiving colours, to be a chameleon in this dark night. She covered herself by the drinks making others drunk, so that they would sleep away, and she could escape. But how could she love her enemies ? It made her feel dirty, but the Book of Love had her in a tight grip, and whenever she tried to get away, the grip only got tighter, so she gave up. She was something she didn't want to be, but in a strange way it made her free, which was the grace of the paradox. She couldn't finally get a touch of who she really was, and she got the control over her life back step by step. She was now a high-heeled succubus, in a strange army. She had been bound all over by a strange light, coming from the Book of Love. She was a love-hunter now, and she knew that all women of the invisible jewel would go down like that. There was no other way.

The colours were making her drunk, and made others drunk, and she knew these were the colours of war. To buy such a drink was just the mark of the hunted, and to get drunk was the mark of the defeated, and the one getting this all done was the warmaster. And they were all both the victims and inflicters of this. There was no way in the middle. Only the extreme would lead them out. She was a pin herself now, a pin of evil, so what could she expect more ? She had been under the high heels of evil for so long, and now she had these high heels herself. It was the fastest way to get the blood flow, and to make them all drunk. She looked like a traffic light, but on one moment, and she didn't know how, she could lock the Book of Love again. She locked it like she never locked anything before. She saw someone hanging at a cross, while a large butterfly was flying around him. 'Who are you ?' Tamar asked. The man bowed his head and said : 'I'm the crucified one.' Tamar asked him if he needed any help. 'You have done this,' he said. 'You have crucified me, as I am the personification of the Book of Love. Open the book again to set me free.'

'Never will I do that,' Tamar said, 'as if there is any evil, it is that. You have to live with it, as I'm not going to open it anymore. Do you know what suffering is ruling there within it's papers. Love-slaves.'

'You wanted to open the Book of Evil,' the man said. 'I am the first chapter, and you have defeated me, consumed me. Now read the second chapter, or the Book of Evil will turn itself against you.'

'And who or what is the second chapter ?' Tamar asked.

‘You will only see if you set me free,’ the man said.

‘Oh no, I won’t,’ Tamar said persistent. Then the man and the book started to fall apart, and so many butterflies and other winged creatures became free. A smile fell on Tamar’s face and a great peace filled her like honey. ‘You have set us free,’ a voice deep inside spoke to her. ‘We will be gratefull to you for eternity.’ Tamar still wondered what the second part of the Book of Evil would be, and she asked it some insects who seemed to stay close with her. ‘The Book of Love was merely the frontportal of the Book of Evil. Come closer, and we will let you see, and let you in,’ a voice spoke. But Tamar became very afraid, as what could she expect ? Another chapter leading her to destruction ? She didn’t want to be bound again like that. ‘Through the eye of the needle, is that what you really want ?’ another voice asked her.

‘Who are you,’ Tamar screamed. Then there was silence for awhile. A big butterfly started to show up before her with wings of fire. Tamar almost fainted. ‘You need to run away, Tamar, as the pages will get you,’ the butterfly said. Then it turned into another book, but Tamar couldn’t read it. It was an unknown language. ‘It will stay unknown,’ the butterfly said, ‘as I do not think you want to go through the eye of the needle.’

‘I have been through so many eyes of so many needles,’ Tamar said. ‘I’m like a needle myself now, like a high heeled boot, I’m the treader of evil. Through which eyes do you want me to go now ?’

‘Ho, ho, don’t get so irritated,’ the butterfly said. ‘Do you desire it, or you won’t get anything to know about it.’

‘I desire it,’ Tamar said, ‘I’m hungry for it, and I’m begging for it.’

Then the butterfly opened a door beyond her understanding. It was like cruel light was floating like a waterfall into her mind, burning it from inside out. It was a pin of fire standing before her all of a sudden, and then turning invisible. It was the Invisible Book standing before her. Then she fell into it, and she could only shriek and scream. Something was trying to strengle her, and she saw monkeys all around. It felt like an invisible snake around her. ‘Step into the water,’ someone said. But there was no water. ‘These are the invisible pins,’ another one said. It hurt more than everything else. It was like doors in her head were exploding, and rays of light were falling down on her. ‘How can I read an invisible book ?’ she asked.

‘Don’t ask too much,’ they said. She felt like she was in a bakery becoming gingerbread, and like an invisible sweetness was staring at her. It was smelling so sweet, and she could almost see the smell. ‘Watch the smells,’ someone said, ‘as these are the rays of the heart. The good world believes in the visible, as they are hypocrites, but the evil world is a world of smell, a dogworld. Do you know that a dog can smell forty to hundred times better than a usual soul ? His smell is so advanced that he can even hear it, see it and feel it. That is the power of the invisible. Do you want it ?’

‘Oh yes,’ Tamar said, ‘I know these are the pins of smell, and it’s breaking me down, to build me up again. If I can trigger my other senses by smell, then that will be good.’

‘It is the best part of the book,’ the butterfly said. ‘It will let you enter the world of feeling. It will make you drunk, and it will make you high, it makes you fly. You will be a feather girl, for if you will defeat the pins of smell, they will turn into feathers, and you know how to defeat them right ?’

‘Yes,’ Tamar said, ‘that is an old story. So you’re making an indian of me, right ? Well, I’m already an indian, but I know what you mean.’

And after Tamar had defeated the pins of smell and the whole Invisible Book she came to the Dog Throne, a strange hairy white throne with the strangest and rarest jewels like buttons. It was like glass was surrounding her heart, making her feel protected, safe, like no one could touch her anymore, like no one could find her anymore. It made her feel like she had soft feathers inside, giving her the feeling that she could fly. It was opening the world of feelings to her, a third part of the book, but also this part was very dangerous. She needed the dogs to survive here, and she was so glad that these dogs were the meanest of all dogs, as otherwise she would fall in other mean hands. The dogs were at her side, and since she had this dog throne she could dominate them all, all by throwing some pins in the air. She could make them wild by this, and she could even let them turn into wolves and other predators. She was now made of pins herself, all the pins she had overcome and survived, and she could ride her own body now, to control it, to possess it. All these pins she was were like her new weapons, her wild bones, and by these she ruled all the dogs to make them drunk and wild. They were the hunterdogs and they led her safely through the Book of Feelings, the third part of the Book of Evil.

The book finally hunted her down, and she got into a long fight with it. ‘Open the fourth part of the book ?’ Tamar screamed, as she felt herself drowning. I need to have some ground below my feet. But the Book of Evil was merciless. ‘Drown in me, woman,’ it whispered. Suddenly she got so much strength that she could tear the book apart, and birds seemed to come forward from it. ‘There is no fourth part,’ the book screamed. But the birds formed words in the sky, words of gratitude. ‘Tamar,’ one of the birds said, ‘the fourth part is the part of letters to you. It will heal your heart, it will be your medicine in this dark, dark night.’

Suddenly Tamar woke up. She saw a chained book lying close to her. Clouds of delirium were surrounding it. She saw clouded arms grasping around them, and she suddenly jumped further away from the books, why she almost shrieked of paranoia. Never again would this book have a grip on her, never again. ‘Go away,’ she screamed. But it was like the arms now knew where she was, so slowly they started to move themselves and the book towards her like they were some sort of creeping and swimming on the sand. Suddenly she heard some shots. Behind her three gorillas stood. The book was sinking away in quicksand.

‘You are safe, my dear,’ the gorillas said. ‘You have come from a long journey through the book, and now you are here. We will never let you go. Protect yourself by all means, for everything around you is evil. The good is just a swindler, trying to chain your soul, and the best is just a hypocrite, a mask, for they are both nothing but the rogues of evil. Don’t let anyone fool you ever again. ‘Then what are you ?’ Tamar asked. ‘Then you must be the rogues of evil too.’

‘We all are,’ the gorillas said, ‘but we have a license to be evil. That’s the difference.’

‘From who did you get that license ?’ Tamar asked.

‘From the Dog Throne,’ the gorillas said.

‘Well, I just came from the Dog Throne,’ Tamar said.

‘Oh, but then you are licensed as well,’ the gorillas said.

‘I think you are but a strange company,’ Tamar said. ‘I guess everything works by the paradox. As long as it is torn it will be safe.’

‘The splinters will get you,’ the gorillas said. ‘There’s nothing above being licensed, or you need to puzzle your way through.’

‘Well, damn those puzzles, I’ll take the license then,’ Tamar said.

The Dog Throne brought her closer to her goal, the ultimate domination, and this all by a license. She would never get this by puzzling her way through, for sometimes you just had to stop all the puzzling or it would lead you further astray. Sometimes you just had to fly on the wings of the unknown, trying to make the best of it by a sort of license, like a license to fly. But more and more Tamar started to hate the license. She wanted the adventure, the danger, for all the safity gave her the feeling she was locked up, and it bored her. She wanted to break away from this Dog Throne holding her heart, for the glass splinters seemed to find her way deeper and deeper. For a part she had to live with this, but sometimes she chose just to fly back to hell again, or even to death and the good world. There was so much to do there, and what about discovering heaven ? Heaven was to her the greatest conspiracy of all hypocrites together. Sometimes she wished to be a good old woman of the invisible jewel again, and she found out she still could be. And although the Dog Throne called her back many times she felt some good safity in that, some pleasure. It was thrilling her and exciting her in a sense. It was not like the early days. She felt a good chain in her back like a red rope pulling her back when it got too much or too dangerous. It was the paradox who gave her pleasure and made her feel good and safe, and she could never chose one side of the story anymore, as that would lead her to destruction. She was a jewel of many sides now, and still so invisible, sometimes showing up with so many flashes, bringing such powerfull hooks to tear all their worlds apart, as she was a monster sent out to devour and re-create, by a license and a wild escape.

She more and more became like a dogthrone, the ultimate license, so savage and wild. It was almost eating her heart now. It was awakening the invisible fires in her, such strong fires to devour worlds. Her heart was like a vulcano now, with invisible eruptions. It was her stairs to the heights of the place of Evil, where she could breath and think, where her mind was nothing but an eruption of her heart. She loved to dwell on these eruptions, to ride them and to float on them, and most of all : to be invisible with them. That was not so difficult for her, as she often went to the good world just to throw the sands of pins into the big eyes. She was the spreader of scary dust making them all blind and letting them all fall asleep. She was in a war against these eyes now, as they never went through the eyes of the needle. They were just bragging. So she thought it was time for them to have an encounter with the pins. These eyes had created all things, and they were like the agents of heaven. These big eyes of heaven she hated more than anything, but they couldn’t escape the teeth of the dogthrone. There were an invisible world and an invisible sword waiting to break through, and through the big eyes of heaven they would do that. These big eyes were the swords of heaven, where all it’s gladiators got their fire from. In cold rage Tamar got there to slay these eyes who were just in drunkeness and sleep because of the sands of pins. It was easy for her to slay them now in the armor of her own drunkeness. She was sleepdrunk now, and that was her protection against this machine. She called forth the invisible ice to quench the fires of these eyes, and lightening started to break these eyes down. But there were so many splinters now, like high shrieking predators of the wildest forms. It was breaking her head, as she had challenged the worst powers of nature. This wasn't evil anymor, and neither the worse. This was the worst thing which could happen to her. These were the powers who could laugh when they would see the forces of evil march. They would mock them, and scream at them, while the forces of evil would tremble before their thrones. This was the worst. And it was the worst strike in Tamar's head she ever had. It made her sick. She fell down, and she was in fear. Did she challenge eternity and all it's unknown almightyness ? She couldn't think straight anymore, like she had challenged a throne higher than her dogthrone, but nothing was less true. The dogthrone started to bark like all thunder combined, and struck heaven's throne of eyes in a flash. The eyes started to melt, and got confused, and angelic watchers started to fall down to get devoured in a flash. It was dinnertime for the dogthrone now, and Tamar felt her blood flowing again. Stench was now taking over, by the brightest lightening blinding them all. Stench was now like a sword in Tamar's hand, and she yielded it against the last flashes of heaven's throne of eyes. Suddenly there were eruptions in the throne, and lava came forward. One big eye came forward from the melted throne of eyes, and started to scream. Without any hesitation Tamar pierced the Sword of Stench through it.

Then many many small eyes seemed to come forward from the big eye. What then happened Tamar couldn't recall, but the dogthrone took complete possession. She woke up in the arms of a dogman. There was no heaven anymore, and even hell had been faded away because of the explosions. There was now only the place of evil, while the world of the dead and the world of the good were two candles in front of the dogthrone. The dogman caressed her and comforted her. 'It's over, Tamar, we have won,' he said.

Tamar slided away again in a big sleep. So many slaves of heaven and hell could escape with her now in this big sleep, as the dogthrone was taking possession more and more. It was a new drunkeness coming to the world of the death and the world of the good now, and the pins settled themselves in the eyes of these worlds like flashes. The dogman took his woman and carried her to a cave where he lay her down on a place of skins. Tamar was drunk now, as everything seemed to stream from the place of evil. She felt some hands on her which seemed to wake her up. She saw the women of the invisible jewel standing around her. The dogman was holding her hand. 'Now you are truelly one of us,' one of the women said. She was bearing a strange shield with a face on it. She knew this face, but she couldn't remember. 'The one of heaven has fallen,' the woman said. 'It's face is frozen now, and it's eye pierced. He cannot harm us anymore.'

'Does civilization have smell ?' another woman said. 'No, only the rose, and it will create our world. You have defeated it's thorns and the stings of it's bees.'

'Smell has a much higher fire to consume than the eye, and it is an invisible fire to heal your heart. Nothing else can heal you like this,' a third woman said softly.

‘Smell has it’s own eye,’ a fourth woman said, almost whispering, ‘it looks like a nipple from which the milk of evil flows, our world. Don’t hesitate to drink from it.’ Then she laid her hand on Tamar’s chest while it started to burn like a sun, and a huge third nipple appeared. ‘This is the mark of all the higher women of the invisible jewel, a mark which is called the Eye of Smell. Transform and re-create our world by it into it’s finest forms. You can do it, as you are the chosen one. We went through everything you went through, and that made us one. Now rise up on your feet, and you will fly alone now, sweety. We all have to find our own ways.’

Then the women disappeared, leaving the shield with the face to Tamar. The dogman was still holding her hand. ‘I cannot rise up now, as I am tired.’ Tamar said.

‘Take rest,’ the dogman said, and left also. The Eye of Smell was burning on her chest. It was a new form of sight, only by smell, and only registering smell, and triggering it. It was a higher fire, invisible, but producing flashes. It was like everything had been faded away. She felt like she was blind and deaf, like there were only sounds in the distance. It was the Dog Throne coming closer. When it came closer Tamar could see her own heart, and new joy started to spread itself around her. ‘I can see, I can see,’ she was almost shouting. Everything was brighter since the Eye of Smell had struck her, and the sounds were higher and lower, much softer, but louder, like she had been wrapped by it. But then everything was fading away again. Until the Eye of Smell struck again, and she felt like she was a rose, an evil rose, like she had eyes all around her.

She stood up, with a strange stare, rose her sword, and went out of the cave. There was a new sun like a giant nipple, like the Eye of Smell, and milk was floating down like a waterfall, like veils. It was like she could climb in these veils to come to it’s sources. So many roses were growing around her, roses with feathers, and when they had been grown up, they flew away to the new sun in the sky. Also in those feathers were the eyes of smell. There was still an invisible fire streaming, and it seemed to stream from the roses also, making everything so bright. It was like everything had been touched by something. Tamar could see the arms of the invisible fire, like ghosts. Tamar remembered how the key of smell could open the world of feelings. And that was what she felt. It was like another sun came out of the sun and floated down to soar above the fields. It was the Eye of Feeling, spreading so much peace and rest, so much silence. Tamar tried to grasp it, and it fell on her, it pushed her down in the grass below her. It empowered her like nothing else. It was such a devouring fire that she could only see passion. It was like she could jump out of her body to throw her skin away, and to be renewed by fire. She was fire now, the fire of feeling. She could watch by feeling now, seeing feeling all around her, and triggering it. It was like the fields were all exploding, and so many small eyes spred themselves on her forming a new skin and armory. She was almost naked, dressed by some belts and skins. She had a hairy shield, and heavenly jewelry seemed to fall upon her. This evil paradise was her heaven now, and she would be it’s princess. In drunkeness she crept to her Dog Throne, and lay herself on it, while she almost fell asleep again. It was raining sunrays now, and she started to cry, no tears but sunrays.

The second sun was almost luring her to step into it, and that was which she finally did. It brought her to the other sun. There were flashes everywhere, and the sun started to speak. She gave birth to many children, who were all carrying the eye of smell and the eye of feeling like precious jewels. The children fell down from the suns into the veils, and rolled towards the fields below them, where the roses were waiting for them. Tamar sat on her Dog Throne, smiling from the sun, and she remembered that the feelings would bring the letters. They were rising from the fields to the sun like roses, and they finally reached her heart. She could read them, but most of all she could smell them and feel them.

It was in these days the Dog Throne started to fade away more and more, and she became a Dog Throne herself. She was the Angel of Wrath, a Dog Machine, after all these adventures she had. They had led her through all the cocoons, and now she had become them. She had striking wings now, yielding the winds of Evil like a new heaven. Here she throned as the princess of heaven, and here she was the throne, like the arc of evil who had possessed it. There were no wings like her wings, as she could strike like an army of eagles. She knew where she was coming from, and where she was going to. Whenever she spoke she almost blasted, and whenever she raised her voice she was almost barking. She was an army of dogs, and she knew where it was coming from. She had a history which couldn't be denied. She had fought for this license, and she had fought against it, but it had possessed her merciless.

If she could chose where she would set her feet on, she would set one foot on the world of the dead and one foot on the world of the good. And this was which she finally did. She was now the Angel standing Tall.

In a world of Feelings and Smell she dwelled, the place of Evil, where she had uncovered it's depths, and she had pushed her legs deep. She had so much invisible sweetness, and the women of the invisible jewel were proud of her. She was one of them, more than ever, as she had proved it. She worshipped the Eyes of Smell, and all those who carried it were welcome in her mighty kingdom. She let them dwell on the wings of heaven, and on it's clouds. She let them swim in the surroundings of it's islands, and she gave them the wealths of it's feelings. Also the Eye of Feeling she worshipped, like the womb of all Evil. It made those who carried these eyes so beautiful. She would paint the ones carrying these eyes by her colours of war, as there was still a mighty war. It was the war of evolution, a primeval scream.

One day a third sun was coming into their atmosphere. It was the eye of Evil. It was a strange power of love, a scary power. It was the bringer of fear. Now it was okay to love again no one dared to, but very thin streams of love started to fill and touch the fragile heads of those in the surroundings of the Dog Throne. It was a careful love like a temple. No one dared to touch it, and they were running away from it. But there was no escape. The threads of fear were binding them, until real panic struck them. It made them more paranoid than they were, and it even made them autistic. It was the strike of fear, and it opened an eternal sight, something which they feared like nothing else.

'Why did we choose to see. We are so young. Why did we choose to be frozen in eternal sight ? We can't move. We are pillars in a temple of evil struck by fear. It's coming from the arc where the eye of evil rests near. We are afraid of these lights, so why did we choose them ? We are hiding for these lights, so why do we invite them ? Aren't we all torn up inside, watching both sides of the night ?'

Giants of the Past

Tamar was on her way to the mountain of the wicked golden windows where she would let her past go. It was a ritual for every warrior who had survived wars or a certain war, and it certainly healed them from wounds. The mountain of the wicked golden windows was not an easy path. It was a path full of dangers, and not many would get away alive from it's guard, a giant. Tamar had already unsheathed her sword, and expected the worst. The giant ran towards her, and she could see his head high in the sky. He had a golden helmet of the darkest gold, and he was friendly to her. He took her up by his hands, also made of the darkest gold. He was like a machine, and he held her before his eyes. She could see the warm eyes through the helmet, and he asked her to come away with him. 'I will bring you up on that mountain,' he said. 'I live on top of it in a giant house, and you will like it. Always plenty of gladiators.'

‘Well, I’m tired of all the fighting,’ Tamar said. ‘I need some peace, and also peace for my eyes.’

‘Oh, just watch,’ the giant said, ‘and you will see it is peacefull. It’s like a new game. We are all friends.’

‘I have heard so many stories about you,’ Tamar said. ‘How come you are so friendly.’

‘First of all : I like you,’ the giant said, ‘and second, I think you mean the previous guard, but he is dead. A man had slain him, and he put me in this position. He made my life well.’

‘Who is that man ?’ Tamar asked. ‘Does he live with you ?’

‘No, he also died awhile ago,’ the giant said. ‘Strange things seem to happen on the mountain of the wicked golden windows.’

In the giant house Tamar saw a lot of giants, but they didn’t seem to play games. There were a lot of doors, and inbetween these doors statues of gorillas stood holding certain weapons. Tamar got her own room in the building. But it wasn’t what she expected. The room was full of spiders, so she first had to clean it out. There were webs all over, and also a man lived here. The man was old and dirty. ‘You didn’t wash yourself in a hundred years I guess,’ Tamar said. But the man didn’t say anything. Tamar went back to the giants and asked them if she could get a room alone, but there was no way. There was no other room free. But she could sleep in the gladiatorhall if she wished. The ceiling was made of strange golden glass, and through it Tamar could see the burning sun. ‘Can’t you do something against the light ?’ Tamar asked the giants, ‘as I want to sleep.’ But the giants shook their heads. The glass had to be uncovered. After awhile Tamar fell asleep in the hall. The next morning the sun was burning on her face. Gladiators came inside the hall and started their fights. Tamar walked away, as she didn’t want to watch it. She was still very tired, and she was in need for peace. She went to the room where the old man was, but on her way a giant stopped her. With a smiling face he said that she could sleep in his bed if she wanted. ‘But there won’t be anyone else in the room, right ?’ Tamar said. ‘I really need to be alone, as I am tired and I need some peace.’ The giant nodded. No worries. He would be back in the evening.

Tamar went to his room, slided into his bed and slept till the evening, until he came in. He was under blood. ‘Well, you had a big fight I guess,’ Tamar said.

‘No,’ the giant said, ‘I had an accident. I slipped.’

‘Oh, okay,’ Tamar said, ‘but let me take care of the wound. You have been so friendly for me. Now I will be friendly for you.’

But the giant shook his head. ‘No, I will take care of myself, and the wicked golden windows will take care of the wounds.’

‘How do they do that ?’ Tamar asked. But the giant didn’t want to tell. She needed to go out of his room, as he needed to sleep himself now. Tamar went to the gladiator hall, but there were still fights going on. The sun was burning, and Tamar thought to herself that she couldn’t sleep any further below such a burning sun. But she wasn’t so tired anymore, and she started to watch some of the fights. ‘Hey, you want to fight against us ?’ some giants asked. But Tamar shook her head. No time for fighting. But they kept asking, and also other giants asked her, so finally it was like the spark was hitting her again, and she took the offer. She could bring down all these big guys in short time, and soon she was the queen of the whole giant building. They carried her on hands.

She wanted to know about the secret of the wicked golden windows, but no one wanted to tell. A tall black giant came into the hall. ‘Hey,’ Tamar shouted. ‘If I can beat you can I sleep in your bed for awhile ? I’m getting tired, and I have no place to stay here.’

The giant was smiling. ‘You can sleep in my bed as long as you want. I hardly sleep, and when I want to sleep I always sleep outside.’ It was like Tamar got a golden ticket. The giant brought her to his room, and said : ‘This is your room now. I never use it. I always sleep outside.’ Tamar smiled and was gratefull. But she wanted to know why he slept outside. The giant didn’t want to tell. It was a good room, so that wasn’t his problem. Maybe he just loved it outside. Sometimes when she looked out of the window she could see him walking, and then he ran into the forest. One day she decided to follow him. He was on his way to the first huge golden window, the highest one on the mountain. There were warm winds coming from the window, and she saw how the giant laid himself down near the window. She saw how the giant started to sweat. She saw his skin turning pale, and wounds disappeared. It was like a new strength was floating through his body. Tamar went to another part of the golden window, and she also laid herself down. It was warm, but nothing seemed to happen. She had still her brown skin, and she still had some scars. But it was healing her soul and her mind. It was like roaring all over her, all these strange warm winds. She felt like re-organized. Things inside seemed to move, like she got a new inner structure. She saw the ghosts of her enemies standing on the other side of the golden window, and they looked like frozen by the gold.

Suddenly she saw them while they started to burn. It was like some parts in her brain started to freeze, and then like there were explosions and eruptions of sweat. She saw them rolling down from the mountain like statues, burning statues, and then peace started to come in her head, so much peace. She sighed deep. This was why the giant loved to sleep outside, and she totally understood. It was like she got addicted to it herself also, and she didn't want to sleep in the giant house anymore. Everytime when she got tired she went to the golden window.

From the outside she could see how giants were sleeping on the golden glass of the giant building itself, something which she could never see from the inside. On a golden ladder on one side of the building she could climb to the roof. Later one of the giants explained her that the golden glassy roofs would make them invisible to the enemy. When Tamar laid herself on the glass she saw that some parts of her skin became a little paler, and some wounds started to heal. She was amazed, and then she fell in a good sleep. She knew that here she was really invisible to her enemies.

'Come with us to the burning sun,' the giants said to her one day. It was like she could really breath now, and they showed her a fragile subtile golden stairs like a ladder. But she feared the burning sun would be more than she could take. 'It will burn my skin,' she told the giants. But the giants shook their heads. They said she would be really healed there, so she went with them. There were so many golden windows here, and so many gorilla-guards stood there inbetween, holding weapons. From here she could see all the golden windows of the mountain below her. There were fluids streaming across the windows here. It looked like tea. 'Don't drink that stuff,' someone shouted.

'Well, I won't do that anyway,' Tamar said.

'It will let you dance strange dances,' said the giant when he came closer to Tamar. 'You don't want to be a slave of the rythm, right ?'

'No, of course not,' Tamar said. The giant directed his finger to a ladder leading the giants higher. Tamar wanted to follow them, but the giant blocked her. 'You don't want it,' he said.

'Well, what is wrong with you, let me go,' Tamar said.

'I won't let you go. It's leading them astray. You need to be with me,' the giant said.

‘Oh, did you invent this all ?’ Tamar asked ironically.

‘No,’ the giant said, ‘but I know how it works.’

Another giant came close : ‘He is right,’ and then he walked away again. Tamar didn’t know what to do. Suddenly the fluids which looked like tea started to turn into blood. ‘Now drink,’ the giant said. Tamar went to a golden window and licked the blood from it. ‘Now you can go to the ladder,’ the giant said. Tamar followed the giant, and the ladder led them deeper inside. Here more blood seemed to stream. ‘Never drink it when it looks like tea,’ the giant said. Tamar nodded. They came to a table with white bread. Tamar was very hungry, but the giant told her not to eat it, unless it would change into meat. When that happened she started to eat. Tamar seemed to understand how everything worked here. All sorts of spines were hanging at the walls, and these spines were made of layers of golden glass in a golden frame. ‘If you want to be a warrior of the golden windows, then take such a spine,’ the giant said. But when Tamar wanted to reach out to grasp it, he stopped her. He blocked her hand and said : ‘Wait until it is bony and full of jewels. Wait until it is a snake. First you have to defeat it, or otherwise it will enslave you.’

Tamar took the wise words of the giant, and when the spine had turned into a snake, she got in a horrible fight against it. It was like everything in her turned upside down. The snake was full of rage, and was meaner than everything else. But Tamar could kill it after awhile, and could insert it into her back. Then the giant led her to a wall where Tamar had to be attached to a rails by her spine which would be like an elevator upstairs. It led Tamar to a higher cave, while the giant was still with her. Here all sorts of wings seemed to fly. ‘Don’t touch them,’ the giant said, ‘or it will enslave you. Wait until they have become rings. Then they will be your gravity.’ When all the wings were rings after awhile Tamar took them, and could attach them to her bracelets and belts. Rays seem to come down to take her up by her rings, while the giant followed her. They came to the hugest golden window Tamar ever saw, and it was like a liquid screen through which they could come. Ghosts of the past tried to follow Tamar but they crashed against the golden screen which was suddenly very hard. Tamar could see their blood streaming across the screen, and their broken bones crumbled down like ashes and sand. ‘You will be deaf to your enemies here, Tamar,’ the giant said. In this hall where she was now tall swords were hanging at the walls. ‘Don’t grasp these, Tamar,’ the giant said. ‘Wait until they have become flames like eyes and turned into fishes. When you have defeated them, they will be your cuirass.’ Again there was a horrible fight : Tamar against these creatures. It was like she was drowning among all these fishes, and she even needed to be helped out by the giant. But later she saw the light, and fire came from them to grill the evil fishes. They dried until it was a fishbony cuirass. Tamar hugged the giant, and while she hung around his neck he brought her to a place where she could sleep. It had exhausted her very much.

‘Love, we have a place here where we will be safe,’ the giant whispered. You have mastered the golden windows now, and know about their secrets. Then the giant left her alone. After she had slept for a long time the guard of the mountain of the wicked golden windows came to her, took her in his hands and brought her to the foot of the mountain again. For the last time she stared at the first golden window on the mountain, then she turned her back to it and went into the forest. She was a woman of war, and she knew deep inside that war was her true medicine. Trips like these she would only do once in a lifetime. From that day on it was like the sky was filled with golden ladders, like the high totemstakes of a love that had passed. It tried to lure her again, to seduce her again, but her medicine lay in war. She was a wargoddess, a savage, belonging to the wilderness, where her heart was. Here she used to sleep between wild animals, and she used to hunt together with the wildest dogs. She was a dogwoman without high thoughts. She was primeval, and not holding on to the pasts from not so long ago. It was like she was on the right side of the golden windows now, watching through it to see her past melt away, and to feel her primeval heart beat again. All these giants froze by the stares of her wild animals, and they would all crumble away in her nights. They were forever frozen in her mind, with their hearts of ashes. And war would let them fade away even more, until she would be deaf to their voices, until they would be completely invisible to her. Oblivion was her bliss, and oblivion would let her swell up to the fires inside.

The Tides of Venom

Tamar was on her way to the cave of an old friend. He was very hospital to her. He had missed her. He took a jar of honey and gave it to her. Tamar was very hungry and also sleepy. It became a long night in which she tried to sleep, but her desire to talk was bigger. There some eternity in the sky that night, and Tamar was bathing in all sorts of emotions. Her friend could trigger them like no one else, and it healed her. Tamar was in a sea of emotions, and her friend stared at her the whole time. He had really missed her, and was glad she came. They ate themselves a way through the honey, and the next day her friend showed her the new blooming flowerfields behind the cave. It was a wonderfull piece of nature. Tamar saw the butterflies creeping across the flowers, and she saw the bees getting their honey. It made her happy, and it covered her sadness. It was here she wanted to be, after so many bloody fights, so many useless wars, all for nothing. Why would she always grasp her sword ? It would only bring her in deeper troubles. She guessed that she was just always looking for the adventure, the heroic adventure in which she risked everything, and which led her to the deepest pits. She knew how chains felt, and she knew how the scorn of her enemies could burn her from the inside. There were many marks on her soul binding her to the past, triggering so much anger all the time to lead her to the adventure again. Maybe it had to be this way, but she hoped her friend could do something. He was so wise beyond everything, with his blooming eyes. He was searching for her when he was staring at her, searching for her heart and deepest emotions, searching for her secrets and then to knock gently on her doors. He was a masterfriend.

She tried to get closer to him, as she wanted to feel his warmth, but he held her away. ‘Tamar, look for your own warmth,’ inside. There is so much warmth inside you have to trigger, and I am already triggering it. Take care that you will dive in it, and anchor yourself, for these moments will never come back. Let this memory be your eternal warmth. It doesn’t take much to set yourself in fire. You have the potential, and my warmth would only take it away if you would come closer to me.

‘But I want to feel your arms around me, and I want to cry in your arms,’ Tamar said. ‘That is all I ask, a friend holding me tight. But I understand you. You are so wise. Help me to understand.’

‘You cannot meet any fire in you without meeting the eternal ice in you,’ the friend spoke. ‘These powers have to stir each other up both. These are the powers leading you to the savage life. If our friendship would go too deep, it would bring forth civilization, and you do not want that and neither do I. Civilization eats the nature away, and we need the savage nature to survive, to live forever.’

After a wonderfull day Tamar had to go away. That was the best for them both. She wanted to be a hermit like he was, and an ascet, and then to be able to reach the deeper wildernesses of these realms. She was thinking about the eternal ice he spoke about.

She went to a place where big spiders were lurking in the darkness. She knew they could trigger these experiences by their hairy legs. It thrilled her. She handled all places she came like she came there for the last time, and this was also how she treated the creatures she met, like she would never see them again. She wanted to break the wheel spinning in her head by following the line. The line would never return, but always go forward. And this was why she needed to be straight, or she would come back to where she came from. Her memory would be enough, and oblivion would be the best to open the doors. Also this wheel of memory had to be broken to change into a line, a line of transformation. It was like a ray of light inside. Because all moments would never return she treated them more intense, and with much more joy. Everything was so much more precious, as it would mark her for life, once and for all. If these moments would become long periods it would get dangerous, and it would be able to destroy her heart. She was not searching for the longlasting moments, but for the flashes. The smaller the better, and she enjoyed it to search for them and leave them behind again. These light touches enlightened her life, and made her life worthy. It was like she had been covered by all sorts of jewelry, like she was bathing in the riches of life. This was the savage living. But some things were so overwhelming, like taking her away. She needed to come deeper. Something was waiting for her. She knew she had to slay all these spiders, to make armories of their skins. She became obsessed by clothes like these, all made of the skins of these defeated moments who wanted to grasp her for life. It gave her a feeling of domination.

These were the spiders of time, wanting to make her life miserable. Life needed to be flashy, until the bigger spiders would grasp her to lock her up in their dungeons. Some moments would be strong enough to grow under her skin, and to dominate her life by the encore. They would eat from her flesh, they would enter her flesh. They were the big boys of life, slayers. They were faster than anything else so that they could get her interlocked. They would make her hopeless, letting her think that there would be no way out. And old saviours would only make it worse, only binding her deeper. She needed the new saviours, the fresh flashy moments who would never return. To return was taboo, a trap. She needed to be strong, and to stretch out to these moments, and then to forget about them. This was the only way to really survive in these realms. The spiders of time could send so many fake saviours only to bring her deeper in troubles, so she had to be on her guard. The spiders would inject her by poisons making her muscles tight so that she couldn’t let go of things. But she needed to relax her muscles, stretch her muscles, and then letting go. To be immune against the muscle-tightening poisons her body started to produce hyperventilation and epilepsy, and strange sorts of paralysis. It tortured her body for a long time, but she knew it was her immune-system coming up against the venom.

But it made her very angry. They let her bring forth children, and they took these children into slavery. It was a very painfull experience to bring forth all these children, but it teached her to let go. Finally she escaped out of this spiderfarm one day, and she would be a warrior more than ever. No one would take her as a slave anymore. She became the worst hunter, and the breeder of evil. She was like a snake now, like a trap, as that was the only way to survive in this dangerous land. She became the exotic, a dangerous venom in the air, striking before they could strike her. If there would be a fight, she would be the first who would hit, and if there would be a war, she would be the first to raise her knife. They had made her like this, and there was no escape. Never would she listen to any complaint anymore, as it would be a trap to bring her back to where she came from. She would attack those complainers, to let her encounter her knife. They were nothing but the dangerous shapeshiftings of the spiders of time in the air trying to possess her mind again. She had to be aware of the tides of venom.

It tortured her mind, these exotic spiders, and often all sorts of exotic snakes tried to strengle her in these jungles. She had to learn how to survive. It was the survival of the fittest here. You needed to be the best or you would lose it. And when you would lose it, you would lose it all, even yourself. The species here didn't leave anything unused when anyone would fall down. They were waiting for the blood, waiting for someone to fall, and they would trigger it to the fullest contend. They loved to raise each other up high and then to let each other fall, for it was nothing but a cruel breeding. And this made every gift and every safity suspected. These exotic species loved to fatten each other up to finally have a big meal. And only the best of it would win. In this the winner would take it all, and the loser would lose more than he had, for he would also get a miserable life, which would only get more miserable. There was no escape from the breeding, as it would only bring to a deeper trap in life or death, in which these were nothing but the tides of venom. The realm of evil was an evergrowing hell, and even worse than that. It was the worst. It was the evergrowing pain making pain-bodies, evergrowing food for the exotic species.

By hell, heaven, life and death these pain-bodies would be raised into the state of evil, as by the tides of venom. The more these bodies grew, the more the pain grew. Tamar was desperate when she fell into such a trap. How would she escape this time ? This time the locks on her body were more complicated than ever, and the question was : did she ever escape, or was the escape just the road to a worse pain ? In this land there was no escape. Escapes were merely organized by the breeders only to end up in more misery. It was a bitter grief growing in Tamar's heart.

All her dreams of victory were worthless now, hopeless. But then she remembered the words of her friend about the paradox. There were tides of venom in her own heart. By this she always led a double-life, like a many-sided jewel. She remembered his words about the eternal ice as the path to the fire. The line would break the circle, and the line would bring forth the circle, as a savage path, stirring up both sides of the night. She had her own jewel of venom inside, between so many paradoxes, between darkness and light, fire and ice, all the tides of venom, her tides, the tides to survive. This jungle would break them open, this jungle would help her reach it. She would go straight through this jungle to reach for it's sun. It would also search for her, and she would not be able to stop it. The venom was killing her brains, but in her heart it was honey, leading her to the ocean of the primeval, waiting beyond her memory. Memory could corrupt and block history, and that's why it had to be broken. The ray of the jungle would take care of that. All these primeval forms were dancing behind pale lights like stripes. These were the stripes of oblivion between her memory and the primeval. She needed to climb across this fence, this hot grid, and run to the beach. An extreme would never be pure, as it would always have the scars of it's opposite, which made it sensitive. It would always be filthy because of this, and in a certain captivity. These were the common fractures of life. In this fatalism would have a certain absurdity, as only growing pains would bring forth and trigger the growing pleasures leading them to all directions to live the eternal life. She could swim in this sea knowing this, stretching and relaxing her muscles, while also feeling the tight chains of it all, and the tightening by which she could move it all. It brought her the fluids of another tide, it made her warm, like a hot spot in eternal ice.

All her memories were nothing but the results of this primeval dance of the eternal paradox of the extremes captivating and polluting each other to insert that what is pressuring them. And what was the sweetness behind their back ? It was the border between them and the eternal love in their understanding of this all. The ones coming from these cocoons were connected by this love, a love fire which would burn all. She had to eat herself through this honey to reach it.

Weren't we all each other's food, and weren't we all devouring each other by our fires we couldn't control. Everything was so out of order, yet so in line, like a breeder's land. No one could do anything about it. We were the gingerbreads, the bakers and the eaters all in one. Tamar wore such an amulet around her neck, as she had awakened to this reality, and it was good. It was okay, it was a certain state of mind in evolution. It was a result of the allpowerfull tides of venom, and there was nothing to do about that but just accepting it. We were the gingerbreads laying on the beach of the primeval, waiting for the big fishes to eat us away. We were but fishes on this beach waiting for the bigger ones to take us away to their caves. We were nothing but sea-banquette. Everything was growing in everything, like a complicated web. And it all formed a trap for the bigger things. It was like the rudder on a ship moving the ship to a new direction. To the island, please, where we can all lay down our dreams, to see everything in a new light.

There was streaming something in her heart, a new light, like the savage perfume, enlightening her brains, her head. She smelled it, and it opened her feelings for the new world, this tropical island. She had been too long in this tight embrace and she could finally free herself out of it by shaking it away. She crept towards the lights on the island, and she found out : There was nothing but deception, there was nothing but evil. And it enlightened here, and she got peace with that. It doesn't matter anymore when it's in a different light. We will come where we need to be.

So she gathered the jewels on the island, and started to build cities and villages, and then she left to enter into the deeper jungles of this island, finally to reach the other side of the island to swim to the next island. How deep she had come into this place of evil she didn't know, but she wanted to reach for it's core. It was just an adventure, so nothing mattered anymore. It was all just a part of a bigger story. And she found out that the story was the only one who could deal with the powers of evil. It was something deep in her heart. Something which had to be the core of this all, yes, it was the story, an eternal story, so big, that it would rise to take possession of it all, for there was nothing but that. The eternal story had created and bound all these hearts, letting them go down under in eternal growing pains to reach for the eternal growing pleasures. And what is the pain by something you can't reach ? It is the hunger. It was an eternal Tantalos, a place called Samdia. For only the eternal growing hunger would lead to the eternal growing satisfaction anyone needed to survive the dark powers of eternity. And there was no pain but this strange growing hunger. It grew on their back like heavy weights bringing them down, like big exotic snakes. And there was no strength which could be able to come against the incredible eternal growing strengths of these snakes. All those victims of Samdia were only sinking away in an eternal growing weakness, but Tamar knew where it would lead them to : to the almighty sources of the eternal growing strengths. They were in a snake cocoon to become these exotic snakes themselves. These snakes didn't know what good and evil was. They were beyond that, just following their instincts. They had reached the eternal growing lusts in the sky, and all they could do was falling down into Samdia. They were also the victims of this eternal evergrowing hunger, and they took so many with them in their falls. But Tamar could teach them.

Tamar brought light to this world, and hope, and became a heroic figure, but it led them to a new form of slavery. There was nothing but slavery, and this was all nothing but freedom, leading them to the dark spots in the sky : the eternal growing slavery and the eternal growing freedom. All these temporal things needed to find their place in eternity, as one big awakening. The wounds who gave blood so much would grow from scars into nipples to give milk, and still these nipples would get wounded, to get a place in eternity.

Tamar tried to come across this sea, to find it's bridges, and she found the heart of evil, fed up by so many nipples. As when a wound grows from a scar into a nipple, it will grow inside to finally find the heart and feed it. And so the heart can feed the whole body. She could put her throne here finally, and put the lights on. There was no sense of growing old here. Time stood still. This was eternity. The bridges were like snakes here, covered by the legs of big hairy spiders. They were the workers of this paradox, the masters of the tides of venom. They could let the milk and the blood flow whenever they wanted, all to keep them drunk in a higher state of mind.

The palest snakes of oblivion triggered the darkest snakes of the primeval, all coming against the memory. The memory was a prison, and these exotic snakes came to break the prison open to set it's captives free. They also set Tamar free, as they slided across her skin to tie her against the wall, and then they would bite it all open. She got the marks of oblivion and the primeval by this, all to raise up her immunity against the memory. These marks were wounds at first, but later they would grow more or less from scars into nipple-like or sole-like materials on her skin. She had to be milked a lot so that it could rain down on Samdia. Lots of milk had to be drunk to be able to break the memory. She was now the cow of evil. The milk was streaming from her body, to make them all immune. She was the medicine of evil, like the sun of milk, but by the tides of venom it also turned into blood after awhile. She could bring sleep and drunkeness to Samdia, so that they could reach her by their dreams. She was their goddess on the ladder, their heroic figure. They could forget about their hunger a bit by her, but they started to develop a new hunger, a hunger for her. The hunger would never go away, but it would only switch, like the tides of venom. And if she could bring everything in a different light, she would do, for there was always a new day coming with the night.

She became the slayer of memory on a horse so tall, to lead them to the primeval by the tools of oblivion, by drunkeness and sleep. She was holding the cup of a milk so heavy, sometimes blood, bringing them to enlightement, to the dark holes in the sky. She was the evil cow, a dark horserider, treading the grapes, these grapes of hunger. She was the hunter in the skies, dwelling in the clouds, with her carriage pulled forwards by dogs and catlikes, with the eagles of war by her side. Her heart was with Samdia, a heart so full of passion that you could smell it. She was a jewel held together by snake-bridges covered by spiderlegs, like a savage treasure. And the tides of venom formed the clock inside, an eternal clock, holding a fruit so pure. She was the purest jewel in my life. But one day she split. I gave one part to Africa and one part to South America, and I would be the love-bridge who would heal her. Now she's like a statue in my room, holding a bunch of comics and books. On her forehead is written : One day I will come alive.

But she is just a story, the story which is able to hold the evil in her hands like snake-bridges covered by spiderlegs, all to connect the two parts of the split heart, the heart of evil. It's like a strange exotic fruit-basket, like the tree of Adam and Eve, saying : 'Don't eat this time, but drink from me.' It's forbidden milk if you ask me, sometimes blood, like the tides of venom, so I don't watch it a lot. I bought this strange statue somewhere on a market, for it reminded me of her, but it's not her, that I know for sure. But I don't want to throw the statue away, for maybe it will really come alive one day to prove me wrong. The statue has nice boots of cowboy-leather, and she has some feathers on her head like an indian. It reminds me of the universal bonds we have. But a writer isn't supposed to carry out on the subject like this, so I will stop and say : the last part you can tear off from the story if you wish. Make a line somewhere, I don't care where, and choose which part you will keep, and which part you will share.

Chronicles of Evil

Guldam had defeated so many unworthy kings in his life, for example Canon, who enslaved so many only by a cursed book. These are the chronicles of Guldam, his wars and victories, but also his suffering in loneliness, in deep dungeons, in enigmatic captivities inflicted by dragons, which finally led him to the Sword of Life, and made him invincible. This is the story of a man who did not walk away when his tribe was in problems, deep problems. But so many parts of these stories had been faded away throughout the centuries. I could only find a few pieces of it, and I puzzled with it for years and years not knowing where it would lead me to. So many parts of these pieces had been written in unknown languages, and I could only decipher them by the several pictures of the book. These pictures are still like haunted places in my mind, like places of ghosts, bearing an undescribable evil in which the heart would fade away. Therefore for my own protection I just wrote down a childish version of my translations, so I could also protect many others against these forces. It was another cursed book, even greater than the almighty book of Canon, which seemed to be worthless after Guldam had opened it and slayed it by the Sword of Fire.

The cursed book of Guldam's chronicles had made him invincible, and it would make those who would find it also invincible. Many brave knights tried to open the book through the centuries, and tried to get it done, but often an unknown fire coming from it would destroy them, and they became like the haunted places themselves. I therefore came with a guard, and I know that only to search for the head of Canon, the beheaded king, and by laying the head on the cover of the book, it would be opened. That was which I did. I went to the underground as a researcher, almost lost my life to encounter the forces of evil, and finally found the head of Canon to open the book. I wished I would have never done it, as the book was more than I could take. It brought me down in chains, leading me to the unknown places. This, dear reader, although I found some treasures, was the reason why I made a childish version of the book, and even some small distractions to lead some things astray, as I do not wish any of these savage forces to fall on another's head. However, it can be taken in small portions, and then it will do miracles.

I know this book will be old, very old, when it will reach your generation, the generation I call the chosen generation. You will be my only hope for freedom, as still the opened book is a heavy weight on me. I have found some lightness in some friendly passengers throughout the ages, but they were just passing by. No one could bear the light of the book by which I had been chained. Maybe in this generation, the generation I am facing, some kind of creature or beast will be able to swallow the light to give it direction. All we need in this thing is to get direction, and then it will be a bliss after all. In my dark nights I yield this Sword of Life, and I am invincible like Guldam's likes, but in the morning another reality is barking at me. I pray for the eternal dark nights to fall upon us, where the morning is just a small island in the waves of a mightier evil, the evil which would set us free. The good is in the hands of hypocrites always turning us down by their books of guilt and shame, which are the books of lies. But in the misunderstood evil we might find a little light. Do understand that I come from a primeval age in which the evil wasn't evil, but the good was. It was the hypocricy. May evil prevail in these days.

By the many pieces torn away I can only offer a book which is able to tear the mind, but what would happen when the book would be untorn ? I am an old man already, and when the book will reach you, I am probably much older, or I have already found the fountain of eternal youth. This is what we are doing it for, this is why we have are burdens, only to reach this fountain, and not to reach it before our time or to drink from it before our time, as then it's fires would devour us.

Guldam was in my mind the slayer of all slayers after I had read the pieces. The pieces had struck my mind, especially by their pictures. These were the haunted places in my head since then. Guldam was a barbarian knight, and later the king of all savage knights. They rode on the highest horses to bring doom on the hunting fields. By their swords they yielded the forces of the suns and their planets, and their quest was to the universal pig who dwelled in it's center as the headquarter of hypocricy. It was this beast they had to defeat and slay, so that it would give it's eternal pigmilk which it held in for so long to spread the miseries of hunger.

Guldam finally found the pigbeast, and pierced it's heart by the Sword of Life, and he threw the body into the abyss of blood. If he wouldn't do that the pigmilk which was streaming from the slain body would be poisoned to block the road to the fountain of eternal youth forever. Guldam also knew how dangerous it was to drink from this fountain before it was the time, so he poured some of the eternal bloody pigmilk into the well, and raised veils of pigskin around it, so travelers would not haste themselves. Every veil of pigskin got it's own watcher, a savage knight. But still we do not know if this is legend, religion or reality. I am also concerned about my decipherings. Maybe I made some mistakes here and there in my attempt to get it done. How do we know we decipher something well ? Sometimes it's merely guessing.

The Handsome King

Guldam visited the king of Tra and asked her for his daughter's hand. The king of Tra was an evil man and laughed at him. So many warriors asked for the hand of his daughter, but he only wanted the best of them. So he organized a tournament to let all these men fight each other in a bloodbath of slaughter. Only the winner who would have slain them all would get the hand of his daughter.

Guldam won, and again he asked for the hand of the daughter of the king of Tra. But again the king started to laugh, and even mocked him. 'What a worthless man, and do you think I let you marry my daughter ? You must be joking me.'

This time Guldam got very mad. 'What do I need to do ? Work for you, slaying another ten-thousand men ? Say it, and I will do.'

But the king was still laughing, and said his daughter could never love such a loser like Guldam. 'Look at you,' the king said. 'Your jewelry is worthless : some bones and teeth in a chainlet, some feathers, and look at your clothes : you are almost naked, poor man, and the skins you wear are torn. My daughter needs a rich and handsome man, not a savage like you.'

Guldam bowed his head. 'Is it because of my scars you are mocking me like this ?'

'No, I have some scars too,' the king said. 'Scars are beautiful when they are godgiven.'

'Is it because my tattoos caused by snakebites and the bites of dragons ?' Guldam asked.

'No, I also have some tattoos by the bites of strange dangerous creatures. They are beautiful,' the king said. 'I just don't show them. I cover them, and that is what you first need to do, boy. You need to cover them.'

'Okay, so when I put on some wealthy clothes for which I have honostly worked, I can get the hand of your daughter ?' Guldam asked.

'Look around you,' the king said. 'My kingdom has so many men with wealthy clothes. It takes more than to be rich and having a good job. None of these men have the hand of my daughter.'

'Then what is it I need to be ?' Guldam asked.

'Come on, don't you know ?' the king laughed. 'You need to be handsome, pretty, beautiful.'

'What does that mean ?' Guldam said with inner pride.

'Come on, do I have to tell that ? Everyone knows, so don't act like you do not know. Everyone knows what beauty is,' the king grinned.

'Even if you would kill me here,' Guldam said, 'I do not know.'

'You have to talk like they talk, you have to walk like they walk, you have to have an attitude like them, smile like them, and be the best in it,' the king said.

'Then I don't want to have your daughter,' Guldam said. 'I am Guldam. I am me, and no one else.'

Then Guldam turned his back to the king and wanted to walk away. The daughter of the king of Tra had followed the whole conversation, as she was sitting next to him. 'This is the man I want, father,' she said.

'Stop, young man,' the king said. 'My daughter found you to be worthy to be her man.'

'I could only marry her, if she would cut your head off and bring it to me on a dish,' Guldam spoke, and left.

The End

Fountain of Youth

Guldam went to the dark realms of Canon, the killer-king who had enslaved all these realms by a cursed book.

When Guldam came closer to the throme of Canon, bright lights coming out of balls at the sides of the throne struck Guldam. For awhile he had to hold his hands before his eyes or it would blind him. Snakes were sliding across the balls and across the stakes these balls were resting on. Canon had the face like a skeleton, and he had been dressed in a black garment with purple jewelry. Like a dog he looked at Guldam who had bent his head away from the lights. Slowly Guldam faced Canon, the killer-king. Canon held the cursed book high all of a sudden. ‘I know you come for this, right ?’ Canon shouted.

Guldam bowed down in pain by the words of Canon, the killer-king. It was like his words were striking his heart, letting everything tumble down, but again Guldam seemed to get a grasp at his strength. Slowly he took his head up to face Canon, the killer-king, again. It was like fires were striking Guldam, but he tried to ignore the burning, although it seemed to pierce him deep. The cursed book had so many locks, and could only be opened in a certain way, but then it would only show a few pages. By this Canon had enslaved them all as in a labyrinth only leading them deeper into the traps.

Guldam stepped forwards. He rose his Sword of Fire against the killer-king. The killer-king started to laugh and stood up to come from his throne. ‘Look, Guldam, I know where you are coming for. You want the book. I am guarding the universal pig of hypocrisy in this book, holding all it’s pigmilk in, so that you all die of all sort of hunger. I am the ruler of Tantalos, the place of hunger-slaves. Look at all the poverty around you. Isn’t it beautiful ? It keeps them running after the things they never get, and they fight each other because of it. Isn’t it the masterpiece of all creation ?’

‘I know you do not know anything of life, Guldam,’ the killer-king said. ‘The pig is a beast, and when I would let it free, worse things then you would ever imagine would happen. If you can defeat it, the book is yours.’

An enormous creature came out of the book, with heads like snakes, claws like dragons, like all predators in one. ‘And something else, Guldam : When you have slain it, the pigmilk will come forth from it’s body. It’s venom and it can drown the universe. Throw it’s body into the Abyss of Blood, or the fate of the universe will be even worse.’

It would be the worst fight Guldam ever had. The beast dragged Guldam through the underworld to a cave close to the Abyss of Blood. The beast tied Guldam to a stake, and spoke : ‘Prepare yourself for swimming in the Abyss of Blood, while it’s snakes will eat from your flesh.’

‘Too long I have been locked up,’ the beast spoke. ‘When I have thrown you in the Abyss of Blood, I will behead the killer-king, and he will have the same fate here. Then I will take his head and open my book.’

‘It will be the Book of Pigs turning all the likes of the killer-king into chicken,’ the beast spoke further. ‘But I need you to open the book. I need you to slay the killer-king. I will chain you by a chain tall enough to let you reach for the killer-king, and when you bring me his head and slain body, I will have some mercy on you.’

Guldam knew he couldn’t begin anything against the beast, so he had to defeat the killer-king first.

‘Have you defeated the pigbeast ?’ the killer-king asked when Guldam came back to his throne. ‘No, I have to defeat you first,’ Guldam said. He ran towards the killer-king, took his chain in his hand and threw it like a lasso around the head of the killer-king. The killer-king was screaming as it took him in a tight grip. Giant birds, the watchers of the killer-king, came forward from the throne to attack Guldam, but Guldam slayed them all by the Sword of Fire. Then he walked towards the killer-king, but all of a sudden fire was coming from the cursed book. Guldam rose his shield and could hold the fire away from him. Then he pierced the book by his sword. The locks started to melt away, and a new fire charged the sword by which he beheaded the killer-king. Then he took the head and the slain body to the pigbeast in the cave near the Abyss of Blood. ‘You have forgotten something,’ the pigbeast shrieked. ‘You must go back to get the Sword of Life. Take it out of the throne of the defeated killer-king.’ Guldam went back like he was drunk and hypnotized. Above the throne a gigantic sword had been sheathed. This had to be the Almighty Sword of Life. Guldam took it out, and ran back to the pigbeast. ‘Now give it to me, and I will set you free,’ the pigbeast shrieked. But Guldam knew about the intentions of the pig, and pierced it’s heart by the sword. By a shriek the pig threw itself into the Abyss of Blood, and sank away.

By the sword Guldam could cut his chains away and soon he was a free man. Pigmilk seemed to come up from the well of blood, and when he tasted it he wanted more. It was taking the strange hungers of his heart away. He took a dive into the well, and he gathered all the skin of the pigbeast. He stretched it and made tents and veils around the well. He had now found the fountain of eternal youth. The milk was jumping from the bloody waters, while women came forth from the lake. They had been locked up in this abyss for such a long time.

The Women of Mwr

Not many knew of the evil women of Mwr and the evil things they did, but one day Guldam visited them. Their camp had been surrounded by strange sew-machines in the air which would jump down on their victims. These machines were quite primitive working by huge windmills also surrounding their camp. They called the sew-machines the stalkers, and they certainly were. It was to protect the women against intruders wanting to bring their tribes down. In a cave they kept a beast called the licorice-beast. He was the one who inspired them to make the evil sew-machines on high stakes surrounding the camp, and told them how they could let them dive at intruders, and how to hunt. The sew-machines did a lot of the job. They cared for the food.

The sew-machines sewed the souls of their prisoners, until they were living vulcanoes. They would never leave the camp, for then they could betray it’s location. They would be food for the licorice-beast, but it had to be prepared for years and years, which was the task of the women. The beast was very selective, and he could kill the women if they would bring him unprepared food. It was a heavy burden for the women, but he helped them raising the sew-machines, the stalkers who would protect them.

But one day the beast broke free out of it’s cage. It was screaming and shrieking. It had been so long locked up in the darkness, and could hardly stand the light. The beast got so excited and didn’t know what to do with this new energy he felt. It was the day Guldam visited the camp and slayed the sew-machines one by one. It was love at first sight when Guldam saw the beast. Guldam climbed on the beast and rode it to the portals of the camp. The nature around the camp was full of purple gnats taking fluids from thistles and the wildest flowers to their hives. ‘How did you find me ?’ the beast asked Guldam.

‘Oh,’ Guldam said. ‘There was a strange advertisement in a magazine of a company for selling sew-machines. They didn’t write down the address well, and it led me here.’

‘Lead me to a field of licorice-plants,’ the beast said. ‘Only there I will get well.’

‘I will,’ Guldam said. And when they came there the beast had to vomit a lot, and turned into a savage prince. He said a group of indian women had put a spell on him once, for he didn’t want to marry their female chief. Only a field of licorice-plants would set him free. That’s why they always called him the licorice-beast.

‘But now you’re free,’ Guldam said.

‘Yes,’ the prince said. ‘I studied technology, and I worked for a company of sew-machines. Shall we build our own camp here ? I don’t want to fall in the hands of these strange women again.’

Guldam nodded. ‘I’m your man.’ The prince was the softest one he ever met, and he could melt his heart like no one else. He called the prince the mad dog, for the prince was so energetic. The prince always held his deeper knowledge away from the women, but now he could let it all stream. But this time he wouldn’t use machines and windmills for the camp. Together they went back to the women of Mwr to capture them. They took the women of Mwr to the new camp, where they had to be sewers the rest of their lives. It was a tragic fate for the women of Mwr, but no one could mess with the savage prince without paying a price.

The sewers of Mwr became the most notorious hunters in the jungles and wildernesses of Mwr. They were the cruelest cannibals existing, preparing their food for years and years. There was no escape out of their hands, only by the desired death after the longlasting torture. But it often never showed up, as the soul would live on, in not a few cases ending up in becoming a sewer itself. Like vulconoes they became, like city-lights, waiting for a worse beast to eat them. They were nothing but food and eaters. They were the sewers, strange guards of the new camp. Guldam was satisfied with the idea. No one would take the savage prince away again. Guldam himself became the personal guard of the prince, and one day the prince showed him a jar of eternal honey. ‘Oh, you’re still the mad dog, right ?’ Guldam said, and started to eat. One day Guldam took the prince to the beach and the sea. ‘Look at the waves,’ Guldam said, ‘and look at the sand. This is all we have. It is our sun, our warmth, and it will shine forever, all these different lights. For the women of Mwr the story is over. But our story has just begun.’ The prince smiled. The sea looked like honey, enchanted by the sun. He felt the burning hand of Guldam on his shoulder, and then his whole arm around him. There was no spell like this, and their star soared above the sea.

Guldam smiled. He was so glad he had finally found the prince, this mad dog. Life had been a bitch to them both, and it was good now, for all these women wanted to sew anyway. But suddenly someone stood behind them. It was the female chief. She had left the camp since her women became so evil. ‘I’m so sorry about what they did to you,’ the female chief said. ‘And this all because they wanted you to marry me.’

‘You were always the best of them, but I needed to be free, free in friendship and love,’ the prince said smiling. He would never hurt this precious lady, so he needed to stay savage. ‘I have seen what you have done to the women of Mwr,’ the female chief said. ‘And it is their righteous reward. They have tortured me my whole life. They raised me and made me chief, something I never wanted to be. I wanted to be free as well, a savage like you. This is why we could get along so very well. I have placed that advertisement, so that someone would set you free.’ The prince walked to the female chief and hugged her. ‘We have grown up together there,’ the prince said. ‘They had kidnapped me from another tribe.’

‘I know everything,’ the female chief said. ‘I know, you don’t have to tell me. I know how you grew up there with horrible mixed feelings. You have found a giant of love now, this Guldam. And I want to be in your circle of love also.’

‘You are,’ the prince said, ‘you always were, and you will always be.’ Tears came out of the eyes of the female chief. She took her headdress full of feathers from her head and placed it on the head of the prince while she kissed him. The prince took his chainlet off and hung it around her precious neck and kissed her as well. Then they looked at Guldam, and he took them both in his arms. Their star still soared above the waters. A ship came closer from the distance. Together they ran across the beach towards the waves. After a few hours the ship stood before them. A woman came from the ship and asked them to come aboard. Together they went on the ship, while the woman wrapped her arms around the prince. 'Do you remember me ?' the woman said. 'I guess not, as you were too young when they kidnapped you. I am your mother.' Then the woman hugged the female chief and then Guldam. 'I am so gratefull to you for all what you did for my son,' the woman said. 'Stay on my ship. It is better for you than living with such a hate.'

'We didn't have another choice,' Guldam said.

'I know, I know,' the woman said almost whispering. 'But now, choose for this. You won't regret it.'

The women led them deeper into the ship, and they decided to stay. 'My name is Tania. I am the owner and builder of the ship,' the woman said. 'And my old mother is the captain.' Soon another woman, an older one, stood between them. 'Grandmother,' the prince whispered, and hugged her.

Soon they were on full sea, heading for a new world where they could live. They all got a room on the ship. Guldam got honored for his heroic deeds, and they got to meet the crew. It was a big ship, bigger than they had ever heard of. The female chief was one of the most passionate warriors on the ship, and actually she was the one who could raise the ship to it's hights, together with the savage prince who took care of the technology. Guldam was very proud of them. Guldam always bore two swords : the Sword of Fire and the Sword of Life. One day he gave the Sword of Fire to the prince, and the Sword of Life he gave to the female chief. It was on this day there were more stars in the heaven than ever, and it seemed angels soared down on the ship. Tania smiled, and her old mother held her hand. 'We have reached our goals now,' the old mother said. 'Here we have always waited for.' Tania nodded, while she smiled. She was so proud of her son, for without him they wouldn't get it this far.

A man called Hurricane joined them laying his arms around both women. 'We have made it, because of these precious ones,' he said. There was a war in the air now finally establishing love, the power of love. They could come out of their prisons of hate. An old man called Green Eye came standing behind them. 'We have reached it,' he said. The angels enlightened the ship by their fires and lights, and the prince was fighting at the front. 'High Tide,' someone was calling. And then more started to call it. The power of love was falling down on them, and they came out of their prisons of anger. It was like the sea and the waters were opening up before them. The female chief climbed to the highest point of the ship where she placed the Sword of Life, while such a light fell on the ship, like it got wings. 'Come on, my swan,' she whispered. 'Fly, you can do it.'

Finally the ship came free from the waters, and rose up mightily. Ghosts had to lose their grips, while there was screaming and shrieking. Guldam held his shield against certain rays coming from the waters. Waves started to rise against the ship, but Guldam hit them down by his hand. A huge peacock was appearing in the sky.

'I won't let you enter,' the peacock roared. 'You belong to the sea.' The peacock tried to wound the ship, but Guldam jumped towards the peacock and strengled it. Then he broke it's neck by a smash. There was silence all over suddenly. The heavens were opening up to the ship and soft winds seemed to surround it. The female chief started to pluck the peacock to get it's feathers. She made a new headdress of it for herself, since she gave her previous headdress to the prince. Many more peacocks started to attack them, trying to wound them. A warrior called Tara from Rhodes came forward to do some serious attacks at the swarms of peacocks. Then a warrior called Golem battled at her side. They slayed the peacocks like butter. A woman called Lirlit came down, together with two other women called Tze-ra and Sevenlegs. The sky was full of warriors, and by their rays they tried to open the bat-portal of heaven. But no one was able to open it. Suddenly a man called Awela came forward from the ship, climbed to the highest point of the ship where the Sword of Life was. He took the sword in his hands and shouted to the bat-portal : Open yourself, in the Name of the King. But dirt fell down through the bat-portal, and the ship got swung away. The sea below them soon had become an ocean of mud. They were all heroic figures, but they could only call forth the dirt of heaven. It fell down on them in great portions. Heaven was laughing and smiling at them. All they got was it's scorn. A huge bat was coming forwards, ready to strike. One by one the crew of the ship showed up to the bat to be struck by it's rage, until a woman called Tamar the Horrible showed up from the ship. 'Give me the Sword of Life,' she shouted. She was the ruler of all evil, and the princess of heaven. When she got the Sword of Life she aimed it at the bat and spoke : 'In the Name of the Princess of Heaven and All It's Evil, Open the Doors.' It's like a thousand cars were about to start. The dirty bat flew to the huge bat-portal of heaven and opened it.

Guldam woke up between his cattle. He was a herd with dreams, big dreams. He was a hunter with evil thoughts. He slept on the fields, in the same mud as the pigs did. He wasn't a heroic figure, it was just a deep wish to escape the boring life he led. In the sky he saw a star falling down, and suddenly lights were falling all around him like flashes. Maybe his wish would come true.

A woman with tall white boots came down to him. She bore a tall sword. 'Are you an angel ?' Guldam asked.

'Yes,' the woman said. 'Why did you knock on heaven's door, and why did you open it ?'

'I guess, I guess I had nothing else to do,' Guldam spoke.

'Oh, you funny man,' the woman said. 'Here you have your sword, warrior. With this you will begin your journey through heaven.'

Then she gave him the sword which started to get in the flames. 'The Sword of Fire,' he said.

'Yes,' the woman said. 'Use it well. Dreams can come true.'

The woman took him into the sky to her house. 'Here do I live, dreamerboy,' she said. She took of her tall boots, tore them apart and made an armor of it for Guldam. She wore white socks, took them off after awhile and also tore them. Then she threw the pieces in the fire-hearth. 'Veils of the temple,' she said. 'But you are evil enough to get through them, right ?'

'I guess so,' Guldam said.

‘You will rise all these warriors in your head, Guldam,’ the woman said. ‘You are their father, their guard.’

‘I thought these were just my dreams,’ Guldam said.

‘It’s seed from heaven,’ the woman said. ‘You are the chosen one.’

‘Am I an almighty father all of a sudden ? I’m just a simple herd and hunter. There’s nothing special with me. I live a boring life,’ Guldam said.

‘Look where you are now,’ the woman said. She threw something into the fire-hearth like seed. ‘Now it will come alive,’ she said.

‘These veils of the temple,’ Guldam asked. ‘How do I get through ?’

‘Use your sword,’ the woman said, ‘and reach for the Sword of Life.’

‘I’m just a simple man with dreams,’ Guldam said. ‘How can I yield such powers ?’

‘You will learn,’ the woman said.

Prisoners of Heaven

When Guldam started to make his journey through heaven, he needed to be very careful. He had the Sword of Fire to protect him, but not much did he know about the women of heaven, who were often dangerous traps. When he came in some of the fronthalls of heaven he saw a lot of stairways and strange elevators often full of women. The women looked like giants from below. They were often halfnaked like barbarian women, and they often wore a lot of feathers like they were some sort of indians. 'On platform one, prisoner Guldam has arrived,' a computerized voice was speaking through some sort of intercom. Many women looked at Guldam. Was he a prisoner then ? 'Hey, what kind of joke is this ?' he shouted. 'I am not a prisoner.' From the platform there was a metal stairs, and he walked upwards. Some platforms were smaller, and some were moving up or down with one or more women on them. Guldam felt lost in this place. Where did he have to go ? He decided to walk to the next platform, and went through a door by which he came in another hall. There were also a lot of women here, but the women were often a bit smaller than the giant women. Guldam really didn't know where he was. He thought it was some sort of strange that they called him a prisoner. It wasn't very hospital. Again he walked up some stairs and came in a higher hall. Here there were some shiny rivers with animals in it. Strange veils hung here through which he could come in other parts of the halls. The veils had a strange smell, and it almost made Guldam drunk. All sorts of strange and dangerous webs were hanging here with tall stings close together. Guldam knew he would be nothing but sea-banquette if he wouldn't be on his guard. The stings started to move dangerously, while Guldam hid himself behind a veil. Guldam moved himself through the veils, through the water. Suddenly Guldam got stuck in a net, and it started to tear him apart. Finally he could come on the other side of the net, but he was bleeding almost all over. He was in another part of heaven now. He knew these strange webs and nets were nothing but portals of heaven, leading him deeper. But he had to pay a price to get through them. It tore him apart, but it also healed him in a strange way. After walking through a realm of low waters he came into another hall. Again many webs, and many women on platforms moving up or down. Here the webs had a lot of feathers, and unicorns were bathing in lakes between the webs and nets. In front of a ship a woman stood with a sword in a standard. It was the Sword of Light. She took the sword and aimed it at him. A fight started in which Guldam tore the woman apart by the Sword of Fire. He knew that as a prisoner these women were his enemies. 'Prisoner Guldam has destroyed woman of the Sword of Light,' a computerized voice said through an intercom. Guldam raised his sword, and spoke : 'What is all this ?' He saw women reacting to the computerized voice, and they surrounded him. They didn't come closer, but they had formed a circle around him. Then they started to whisper to each other like they were gossipping, and they laughed at him. A cage came from the ceiling, and soon Guldam had been trapped. Then the cage went upwards again with Guldam inside. He came into a clouded realm but full of bright lights, and he got belts around his body like a horse. He saw many other men here with their arms tied behind their backs.

Whips would hold them in line. Some men had their arms free, and they had swords and shields. It was the day he found out that heaven was a circus. In the middle of the field the boss stood. It was a man with a high hat, and the biggest whip he ever saw. All the men had to go through a veil, while the smell of the veil made them drunk. Guldam fell down, while all the other men were laughing at him, mocking him. 'Who is that man ?' the circusboss asked. 'Let him come forward.'

Guldam crept to the circusboss. The circusboss took him tight by his hair. ‘We do not need any weaklings,’ he said. ‘We will throw you from a mountain, or we will throw you in a fire.’ But Guldam couldn’t stand on his feet anymore. His sword had been sheathed behind his back. With his last piece of strength he took the sword from behind his back and slayed the circusboss. Suddenly Guldam had been struck by something. ‘How can I die in heaven,’ Guldam screamed. A woman stood behing him with a whip. Then she struck him again. He didn’t have any strength left, but he could lay the Sword of Fire against her skin, while she started screaming. ‘Why are you making a slayer of me ?’ Guldam screamed. It was the day heaven burst out, and beasts and dragons came forward. They had been hidden in this volcanoe for such a long time, living with the skins of men and women. It was the day of the dragons, like horses they fell from heaven. The throne of heaven came in sight by the eruptions, and Guldam crept to it. He would raise his princess here, and he would be king.

On the throne drunk dogs were having a party, and a black woman had been chained to a wall. He crept to the woman and lay himself at her feet. ‘Another prisoner,’ he said. ‘Who are you ?’

Then he fell asleep. In the middle of the night he woke up. He had his strength again, so he cut the chains by his sword, and then he went to the dogs who slept on the throne. He could kill them easily. Clouds of light seemed to come from the throne, and strong but warm winds slamming him against the wall. These winds were the winds of panic. ‘You must hide for the throne, seven days,’ the woman said, ‘or it will slay you.’ So they both went behind the wall. They both went through many veils in search for the Flower of Heaven, for without this flower they would never rule heaven. But when they finally found the flower, it seemed to be a beast who swallowed them. Inside the beast it was like a temple. In full rage the beasty flower followed their trace through the veils and reached the throne, which it swallowed as well. Guldam came into a fight with the black woman about who would sit on the throne. The black woman was very strong, and had extra-ordinary powers. She could finally overcome in, tied him and rolled him to a corner. Then she walked slowly to the throne, but while she stepped on it a predator came from the throne and devoured her. I was a tragic fate, and Guldam could see it all happen before his eyes. He loved the black woman and had saved her life, and now he wished he wouldn’t have fought with her for the throne. Love was a greater good for Gulam than might and power, so he didn’t understand why he had argued so much with her. But he was just so afraid that if she would get the throne she would abuse her powers towards him.

It could be such a lovestory, but it ended very tragic. The predator freed Guldam from his ties, and licked him. Then Guldam knew that he had been destined for the throne. Soon Guldam sat on his throne, with the predator at his side. He had become king of heaven now, a worthy king, and the predator had become his guard. Guldam was still very sad about the loss of his friend. He wished he would never have encountered her. Soon other women seemed to find the throne and laid themselves down at Guldam’s feet. Then they turned their backs to Guldam, took a part of their skin off to show him some sort of mechanism. ‘Tell us what to do,’ they said. Then he found out the mechanism was some sort of tape-recorder by which he could speak messages. He gave them some missions, and they told him if he wanted to add something then he needed to use the intercom in his throne. They showed it to him, as it was hidden below a certain skin. He just had to push it, and then speak. Soon other women seemed to come, and this time there were more women than ever. They all started to dance around the throne and to sing for the king. He could speak to them by the intercom. ‘Stop singing, and stop dancing,’ the king said. ‘Don’t be such hypocrites, but fight for love, and let love rule.’ Then the women bowed their head and went away. One of the women came back to the king and asked : Where can we find the weapons ?

‘I will teach them,’ the predator said, and raise up from his place at the throne, and went away to lead the women. Then after some dark nights wild dogs seemed to come in front of the throne barking and howling like wolves and hyena’s. They all laid themselves at the foot of the throne, and then one of the dogs rose up and started howling again. Then he spoke : ‘Dear king, what do you want us to do now heaven is in your hands ?’ The king rose from his throne and said : ‘I want you to rejoice for the women have finally taken up their task. I want you to stop fighting and guarding. I want you to go to the underworld to free it’s slaves and bring them here.’ The dogs bowed their head and listened to their master.

After a few days the dogs came back with billions and billions of men. Again the king stood up from his throne and spoke : ‘I want you to stop working, but to sacrifice yourself in the Abyss of Fire to become free of your chains. The women have stopped dancing and have taken up their tasks.’ Then a huge gate opened in front of the throne. Fire came forwards and one by one the men started to jump into the fire. Fire seemed to clean the heavens that day.

One day a warrior-woman came to the king to ask him for his love. But the king gave her a mission for her women, as she was their chief. He told her to bring the men of heaven before his throne. Within a few days they all stood trembling before his throne. ‘No belts this time to let you do what heaven demands. This time scars will do the work. Then he asked the chief of the women to bring the whip of the circusboss to him. When she brought it to him he threw the whip into the fire, and then he took it out again and struck the men of heaven to bring them the new scars. ‘This will do. You will be sensitive from now on. Creative,’ the king screamed.

The Red Planet

Lekrum, king of Lily Land on Mars, was riding on his giant-fly, together with some others of the court. Princess Darsheba was with him. They blew on their horns, leading the war and the invasion. They were taking Mars over. But Lekrum, the barbarian king, wanted much more territory. Flies were invading the surfaces and the gallaxy. Lekrum was shouting. Soft rays came from the giant flies, taking possession of the minds of many. He wanted to have his own planet, Lily Planet. It was a savage and barbarian planet. It was burning in his chest. Armies of blue monkeys were invading the planet that day. They captured the queen of Lily Planet, a savage queen, and brought her before Lekrum. The king of Lily Planet throned on a beach of skulls, like a wide desert. They captured him as well and brought him before Lekrum. All the high officials of this planet died that day. Their blood had to be mixed in a golden bath in which Lekrum had to bath, and he had to drink their blood from a golden glass. The skulls of the queen and the king of Lily Planet had to shrink to be placed at his belt. Ovias was the religious leader of the planet. Lekrum took his skull and placed it on his throne. The throne would be placed on top of a savage piramid. It was since then Lekrum started to give away his authority and power to the ones chosen by the throne. The throne would take care of itself. It would destroy everyone who would try to grasp it's power while they weren't destined for it. Lekrum went to the jungle of the planet to become a lord of the jungle. It was a savage switch, the hugest switch he ever made. He wanted the power of the flesh.

Soon he had friendship with the hugest snakes and monkeys. The snakes had beautiful and dangerous patterns to bring fear in the hearts of their enemies. However in the middle of the jungle he built his castle of skulls. Lekrum loved to at the beach on the other side of the jungle. He loved to swim. The beach was surrounded by the softest spiderwebs. The sea was full of snakes. He found a tiger here and a lion. There was a bridge leading to an island called Lily City, where a lot of scientific buildings were. The softos lived here, the last guarded stronghold of the planet. The softos were mean scientists.

Lekrum was watching around him, a monkey was close to his leg. Then some more monkeys came. It was like a reunion, these were all old friends. There were also monkeys bigger than himself. ‘Yes, I all love you,’ he spoke. He took his sword and walked towards a hut, where he slew a dark master chief, who was all dressed in black and orange, in traditional clothes. He slew many of them on that day. They were mean, possessive, and used animals to be their medicins. Lekrum set many of these animals free these days, like he set the monkeys free one day. It was a strange camp. Many animals in wooden cages, made of branches, and some cages were made of bones. Lekrum raised his bloody sword in the air and roared. ‘I am the lord of the jungle, the lord of beasts !'

Then he went to the next camp and did the same. He was bathing in blood. His skin was like bronze in the sun, bloody, very bloody. It was a day of abundant slaughter, and exodus for the animals. He led elephants out, cats, snakes and other sorts. The sky was like bleeding pearls. The sun was like setting everything in fire. Lekrum led them out and brought them to another part of the jungle. Here he would rule over them, protecting them, taking care of them. At the end of the day he was bathing in the river. A man came close to him. ‘Sobrillios,’ he said, ‘thanks for coming, but the work is done already.’ He smiled. ‘A good job, Lekrum,’ he said. Lekrum came out of the water. Sobrillios was a lot younger than him. He saved him once out of a prison camp.

Lekrum bound the skulls of the scientists together. Soon he had invaded their city, with all his armies. He would turn it into a ghost village. No one would rebuild the city again. He found out they were guarding a triangle-vortex by which you could enter the Lily Universe. It was like a parallel world.

It was like they were living in a gas, a different fluid, in this universe, where things were a lot brighter, and also a lot darker. Things were a lot softer here, but also a lot harder. They lived here in a totally different index of feelings. Lekrum entered this universe on his soaring chariot pulled by his white flying horses.

The houses here were built of skulls. It was a world full of skulls. Lekrum had never seen so many skulls in his life. Intelligence was what he desired. They were on their way to the stronghold of the universe : The New Spade, also called the Skeleton House. Here Bricheas ruled, a skeleton. Lekrum grasped his gun and shot the skeleton from a distance. Then they brought the skeleton house down. The skeleton had a heart called The Mellow. It was full of honey by which he had drownt the universe. They were all his slaves. Lekrum took the heart and started to eat from it. The soul of Bricheas however turned into a snake, and took the universe in a tight grip. Lekrum took his sword and beheaded the snake, and ripped it's body open. A fly came forward from the body of the snake. It was the spirit of the skeleton. It was spitting fire, but then fled to an old fortress. Lekrum went after it. The fly spat fire again. The fortress was full of hearts, from which the fly started to eat, and it grew stronger. Lekrum took his gun again and shot the fly. Voices were spreading in the universe. They were laughing. 'I'm copying myself,' the voices spoke. Also the voices started to eat from the hearts, and they were growing into ghosts, slowly getting density again like savages. They settled themselves in camps. One of these camps was called The Weapon Field. One of the savages could turn into a cobra or a swarm of bees. 'Honey you will produce,' it said. 'Honey of the heart.'

Lekrum knew it took intelligence to solve this riddle, this strange battle. The skeleton had hidden identities and hidden weapons. 'You will die on the fields,' Lekrum said. Again he took his gun and shot the savage leader, who then turned into a butterfly. 'You cannot get me,' the butterfly said. 'Some things you just can't grasp.'

It was the universe of the Lily. He was just her marionet. Lekrum was fighting the winds of illusion. He was in her temple. He had caught some of her glimpses. He was coming closer.

She had a thin band around her head. There was a spade on her chest, like a tattoo. 'The dark heart,' Lekrum said. He had a full picture of her now.

'So you come here for intelligence ?' the Lily said.

'Yes,' Lekrum said. 'I know you are hiding it.'

'Yes, in a bottle,' the Lily said. Lekrum looked to the right, and saw a bottle on a plank. He shot it open. The Lily started to laugh. 'Wrong bottle, urine of a lion,' she said. Strange gasses were spreading. He tried to aim his gun at her, but a strange wind was blowing it away. He saw a bottle hanging at the ceiling. He shot it, but it appeared to be a lamp. It was darker now. 'Come closer,' the Lily said. 'You know, I'm also just a prisoner, of a dragon. She showed him a painting on the wall of a dragon. 'Arkanar,' she said.

'What is his purpose ?' Lekrum asked.

'To rule the universe you come from by this hidden parallel universe,' the Lily said. 'There is a third universe. Which is the master universe, where he lives. It is the universe of draughts. By using others he reaches his goals.'

'How can I come there ?' Lekrum asked.

The Lily showed him a square vortex. He stepped inside. The Lily started to laugh. 'Trapped,' she said. Fires were coming over Lekrum, forming a cage. Lekrum was roaring. But the cage was moving through the underground, as an elevator, and Lekrum realized that the Lily had spoken the truth. It led him to another universe, that of the dragon. It was cold there, as soon as he stepped out of the vortex. It was night. It was a jungle here. There were giant frogs in this jungle and giantflowers. In the distance there was a dragon castle, a sort of fortress, made of bones. It was mostly built of ribs. A black dragon was there. The dragon was very friendly and soft, and spoke that actually the Lily had imprisoned him here, and that Lekrum had now been imprisoned as well. There was no way to return. Lekrum asked what the purposes of the Lily were. The dragon said she is an illusionist. The vortex was gone. 'I was a man like you in the past,' said the dragon. 'But we all become animals here. We are the forces of her illusions. She plays with us.'

'So is this an animal universe ?' Lekrum asked.

'Yes,' the dragon said. 'First you will become a savage, then an animal. Only when the dark sun and the red planet will come together you will be a human, but that is just for a few days in a month.'

'So we are were-animals then ?' Lekrum asked.

'Yes,' the dragon said.

'Unless we can unite the dark sun and the red planet together,' Lekrum said.

'No,' the dragon said. 'Everytime the red planet meets the dark sun it becomes a bit smaller. In past the red planet was much bigger. When the red planet is totally burnt then this universe will die.'

'Then isn't it better to get them separated forever, so that the red planet can live up again ?' Lekrum asked.

'No,' the dragon said. 'For then the dark sun will die, and we will be animals forever.'

'But if that will save the universe, then we do not have another choice,' Lekrum said.

'And how will you do that,' the dragon said. 'No one can mess with the planets.'

But Lekrum stared into the sky and used his red rays coming from his eyes. He could move the dark sun away from the red planet, and brought it into another orbit.

'Are you a god or something ?' the dragon asked. But then Lekrums skin started to become hairier.

'I warned you,' the dragon said. Lekrum was changing into the most horrible beast, and ran away. At least the red planet was safe. Throughout the days it started to grow bigger and bigger, and came closer to them. Lekrum had wings now and flew towards the swelling red planet, and felt he was becoming human again. It seemed he had used great intelligence.

The dragon flew also with him. 'You have broken the laws of the Lily,' he spoke. There were snake-people here and fly-people. The Lily herself seemed to be here as well, sitting on a throne. 'Well done,' she spoke.

Lekrum found out she wasn't the worst. She was just very cryptic and a gamer. But she played with people's hearts, that was a fact. She was an illusionist, a sorceress. She lured Lekrum deeper in her temple this time. He had deeper access. She showed him the bottle of intelligence. 'You have drunk from this already,' she said. 'You want some more ?' She took the bottle, which became transparent immediately, and pushed it in his heart.

Lekrum wanted to play music, as the language of intelligence, but it seemed that his lust for silence was much stronger. Music was just the veils in this temple. She had created so many heads, so many different characters, and took care of the details. 'They are nothing but masks,' said the Lily, 'guarding the rivers of intelligence. You have just a bottle of it,' she said while she laughed.

'I want to swim in it,' Lekrum said. The Lily led him to a hall with tall windows through which he could see the steaming and roaring wild rivers of intelligence. 'All leading to the sea,' she spoke. 'It is the secret of life. All the other things will die.'

'How can I come there ?' Lekrum asked.

'Let me live in the bottle of your heart,' the Lily said. 'And you will be there.'

She became transparent as well and slided into his chest. Suddenly he was surrounded by waves, as if all the walls were breaking. Suddenly he was in full sea, the sun shining bright on him. He had found his Lily. She was like seaweed inside of him, feeding him, being the light of intelligence. 'Now you are the lord of the Lily Universe, and of the red planet,' she said. From the sea a red oyster tower came forth, in which Lekrum started to live. All these visions of intelligence filled the universe like pearls. There was a red oyster path leading to the tower.

It was a path of death, a path of illusion, on which one had to become one with the Lily, finally to enter the tower. Lekrum had become the guard of the universe, and the secret of intelligence.

The Milk of Venus

Indana, sorceress of the flesh, while Lekrum was coming closer to her, in her temple. There was a lot of blood streaming here through tubes, pipelines and tunnels. She was surrounded by rats.

'Why do you live here alone in these ruins ?' Lekrum asked.

'These aren't ruins,' Indana said. She was holding her sword above her head. 'Don't come any closer,' she almost whispered. Suddenly Lekrum grasped her arm, and she had to let her sword fall. She was wrestling to become free, but she was in a tight grip.

'What kind of things are you doing here,' Lekrum asked.

'None of your business,' she shouted. Suddenly she fell down. Snakes were coming closer. Lekrum tied her. He went deeper into the temple. Strange objects were here, and many skulls. It looked like a restless place. Many monkeys had been tied to the walls. Lekrum freed them. In the depths of the temple there was a hall in which she kept many slaves. She gave them food by which they turned into living skeletons, very powerful. She used these skeletons to wage war.

Through a door in the back of the temple you could enter a garden, in which the Fool's Hill was, a hill of skulls on which a queen throned, Korshe. She lived in the Fool's Fortress. She was a jester and a gamer. In the nights the hill was always burning, for parties. Lekrum took his bow and shot her from a distance by an arrow. She was in one of her towers, on one of the balconies and she actually fell down. She changed into a fire-spitting bird. Lekrum went to the fortress, and went upstairs. There were burning candles everywhere. He heard a voice saying : 'Who can escape from Fool's Hill, who can escape from under her foot, she treads and treads, oh, who can escape, yes, who can escape from Fool's Hill, you can never leave this thrill.' Then the voice started to laugh. The queen sat on her throne again. Lekrum came forward and shot her again. But she was just a ghost. 'I have eternal life already, but you are just a mortal,' the queen said.

She showed him a joystick. 'The joystick by which I rule,' she said. It looked like it was made from bones and teeth. It also looked like a strange skull. She could move her throne by it. And she could fly around. 'Give me the joystick, witch,' Lekrum roared.

'Oh, you will burn yourself,' she said. 'It's just not designed for you. Mortals cannot hold it.'

Lekrum came closer. `I think these are all just games in your mind,' Lekmul said.

'Well, you cannot escape from Fool's Hill,' she said. 'You were burn under it's foot, and I have raised you up, all by a balloon inside. You are swollen now, and I can make it pop.'

She showed him a needle. 'The needle of death,' she said. 'Are you ready ? Are you ready to go back to start ?'

'No, witch,' Lekrum said. 'I'm going to end your dream.'

'Hmm, I rule over all churches and temples, over all civilisations, and now you, a simple man want to do something about that. Now that would be a joke,' she said. 'I can make you bow, I can make you rise, I can let you fall, I can make you weep, I can make you laugh.'

Snakes came forth from the walls, and surrounded Lekrum, ready to take him to hell. It was like playing chess with her. 'I know what you guard,' Lekrum said. 'I know your secret.'

'You have the pencil of death,' Lekrum said. 'You have painted all this. And I am going to break that pencil.'

Korshe grasped her heart. 'No, stay away from that,' she said.

'There is one painting inspiring you,' Lekrum said. 'The ravens' painting.'

'Who told you that,' Korshe said in a shock. 'Who are you.'

'My lions heart,' Lekrum said. 'You stole this painting from me.'

'No, that is not true,' Korshe said. 'Guards, grasp him !' she shrieked. Watchers of stone came out of the wall, stone archers and spearthrowers. 'Get him,' she said. Behind her there was a raven of stone.

'You have turned my raven into stone,' Lekrum said.

Lekrum woke up in sweat. He remembered the Fool's Hill where he was born. He remembered the ravens painting once stolen. He remembered the fortress and the old fortress. He remembered how he always wanted to live on the other side of the land. This spirit had it's nails deep into him. An insectian world was always luring him, but it was forbidden. He longed for Venus, to drink from her milk. He was in a skeleton mill. It was a funeral business. He longed to burn and rise like a phoenix. He longed for the crematorium. He longed to be reborn in the urn, to be reborn in the fire, to get free from the graveyard.

The hills were burning. The sun was bathing itself. There was a new fire in Lekrum's heart. It was like Venus was visiting Mars, and a new planet was rising : Pythia. Venus flew before him with wings of fire. Korshe was falling out of the heavens, and Lekrum was taking her place. She had always been his evil twinsister. Through the tunnel of fire he escaped. He received a winged helmet. The old fortress in his head was falling.

Samson - Barbarian Fiction

Mountain of Time

When Samson went to the underworld his fight against the Philistines went on. He had help from a few women and some giant birds who seemed to come from an unknown place. By their beaks they pierced the faces of some Philistine soldiers, while their blood started to flow. ‘Oh, did you come here to punish us ?’ some of the Philistines shouted. Samson took his sword and beheaded many of them. While he roared he laid his mouth against their flesh to eat. He was hungry, as when he was in the dungeon they didn’t give him much to eat. Now the blood was flowing from his mouth, and it tasted good. Flesh and blood of the Philistines was always good of taste. But a few skeletons, tall and dressed in garments, were coming closer to Samson. They saw his pride and his bloodlust, and they chained him by invisible chains, by their stare. They saw his beautiful belts and jewelry, and they wondered how they could get it away from them.

A woman halfnaked came forward to Samson, and caressed his jewelry. She asked him if he would come with her, as the skeletons were looking for prey. She wanted to protect him, and she seemed to be the onlyt one who could do that in these realms. So Samson took the offering, and walked with her to a jeweled portal. Behind the portal was her house. She gave him something to drink and some fruits to eat. ‘I wonder where you are coming from, traveler,’ the woman said. ‘Oh, I come from the world of Philistines,’ Samson said. ‘I have beaten some giants, and now I want more.’

‘What is it that you want, warrior ?’ the woman asked.

‘I want to bath in the riches of heaven and hell,’ Samson said, ‘but I know I have to defeat dragons and monsters for that, and a lot of Philistines and their skeletons.’

‘Oh yes,’ the woman said. ‘But I can help you with that. I can be a warrior at your side.’

The woman showed him a red sword by which she fought, and by which she had gained a high ruler position in these realms. ‘I have sent you the giant birds,’ the women said, ‘and you need them to come deeper in these realms. Come with me.’ Then the woman walked to a place behind her house where the giant birds were. ‘Take a bird,’ she said. Samson climbed on a bird and she did the same. Then the birds started to bring them across a huge ravine.

‘I can tell you where you have to go, Samson,’ the woman shouted. ‘You need to go to the oracle for direction.’

‘Where is that ?’ Samson asked.

‘It’s on an island far away across the sea of the underworld. But the birds will bring us there,’ the woman shouted.

Within a few hours they came on the island, and after walking awhile they came to an open space in the jungle behind the beach, where something like a feathered wheel stood on a stake. The woman explained to Samson how it all worked, and within a short time smoke seemed to come from the oracle and a voice spoke : ‘You must defeat the lords of time, Samson, as time is such a trickster and will lead you to useless wars. Don’t become a slave-gladiator of the underworld, for the wars will make you age. Defeat the evil time lords and you will gain eternal life.’

Samson rose his sword, and the giant birds flew around him. ‘Where are those evil time lords you speak about, oh oracle of the underworld, and how do I know you aren’t tricking me either ? I am a warrior for life and I will not lay my sword down. My strength is in my long hair and the jewels I have gained on my weapons and on my belt. I need to use my strength, not only against evil time lords, but also against the dragons, the Philistines and their skeletons.’

‘As you wish,’ the oracle spoke. ‘But I will only show you where the time lords live until you lay down all your other battles. It is time which has enslaved you, and time lets you fight against all sorts of illusions to trap you even deeper. Do you want to be a slave-warrior ?’

‘It is good to be a slave,’ Samson said. ‘I am a slave of my masters. They take care of me, and I take care of them. I also am a slave of good women.’

‘As you wish,’ the oracle spoke. ‘I cannot help you in your wishes as you have given yourself to illusions. You cannot get both sides of the coin.’ Then Samson found out that the women and her birds had vanished, and he started to think that maybe the oracle was right. Maybe he was just following illusions to get deeper trapped. He knew that the underworld was full of dangers, and he didn’t trust the Philistines and their skeletons. Then the oracle showed him that help offered in the war was always of the enemy itself, as a great conspiracy and trick, the greatest of the underworld. Samson got scared, for how deep was he already ? And could he trust the oracle. It more and more seemed to be wise, but he knew the enemy could be wise too. Wisdom was a weapon. Then Samson bowed down to the oracle and begged it to tell him where he could find the time lords, and how he had to defeat them.

‘Give me your sword,’ the oracle said. ‘Sacrifice it to me, as it was a gift of the time lords to confuse you and to bind you in time. Sacrifice also your belt.’ Samson obeyed, while the oracle started to spin as by strange winds. ‘The evil nights are coming Samson,’ the oracle whispered in many voices. ‘They will show you that there is only evil. They will bring you to the mountain of the evil time lords, and they will show you how to master them.’

‘How many evil lords of time are there ?’ Samson asked.

‘Hundred and seven,’ the oracle spoke.

That night the evil voices came, and took Samson to the mountain in an evil storm by a carriage made of fire. The evil time lords stood tall on the dark mountain like flames. The sight struck Samson. All of a sudden he saw so many skulls around him. ‘Throw those skulls at them,’ the evil voices spoke, and Samson did what they asked.

‘These skulls are the evil stones,’ the voices whispered. Samson got confused, like the time lords struck his head by unknown powers. ‘Don’t challenge the lords,’ a dark voice spoke.

‘I will master you,’ Samson roared while he rose another skull. ‘I will master time and will get free of it’s illusions.’

‘Then you better come not any closer, or we will chain you forever,’ the dark voice said.

The skulls started to burn because of the flames, and they seemed to speak. ‘The death speaks by time,’ the skulls said.

‘Then what a pity you are all dead,’ the dark voice spoke.

‘Dead isn’t the word,’ the skulls spoke. ‘We’re evil, and evil is a timeless power. We speak by eternity.’

Then the flames started to shriek, and the dark voice became higher and higher. Soon they fell from the mountain into a ravine. ‘Now take the mountain,’ the evil voices spoke. ‘Is it that easy ?’ Samson asked.

‘Yes,’ the evil voices said. ‘No need to wage any more wars.’ Then the charriot came closer to the mountain, and Samson stepped out. It was here he felt his heart again, beating with a new rythm.

The Three Swords

Samson was on his way to the cruptiti-skeletons, the guards between the kingdom of death and the kingdom of hell. He slayed them all merciless by his sword. He was now carrying the Eternal Sword since he had destroyed the evil time lords. In the depths of hell he found the oracle clock, which was a timeless device like a jewel, like a riddle, and he put it into his sword. Now the sword would guide him forever. He had defeated the flames of time, but now he had to learn how to master it further. The king of the cruptiti-skeletons carried the Sword of Time, but Samson could easily destroy him by the Eternal Sword, and he threw the Sword of Time into the Abyss of Fire. Samson would dominate time now, but he also had another task : to dominate the numbers, as numbers were also the illusions in the underworld by which dragons could split themselves for some trickery. If they would split themselves by numbers they would be able to divide and turn themselves into women, men or snakes, but they could also turn themselves into objects. Samson knew that everything around him was dangerous, and that he had to come into enlightement by mastering the numbers to find a good survey. It was by a long journey Samson finally found the Sword of Infiniti. He had two powerfull swords now by which he could go deeper in the underworld. Samson was a savage and a barbarian searching for the jungles of the underworld, and it finally brought him to the West of the garden of Eeden. He wanted to live with the predators, as they would carry the flames of eternal life. If he wouldn't become a predator like them, he wouldn't live forever. So many dangers were lurking around, so Samson had to paint himself with the colours of war and hunt, or he wouldn't survive. So many creatures wanted to take him away to let him burn in hell or rot away in the prisons of death, but Samson didn't want to waste his time like that. He wanted to go deeper, to search for the treasures of the underworld, to bath in it's riches. He had been armed already by the most precious jewelry smoothly attached to his belt.

If there were any skeletons they were at the West of the garden of Eeden, where they seemed to guard many treasures and many portals to the deeper and larger jungles of the underworld. Samson desired these treasures, and he could easily defeat the skeleton-watchers. Since he had found the swords everything seemed to be much easier. But there was another big enemy

: language. Some of the skeletons would speak spells out over him, in all sorts of unknown languages, while Samson felt like there were things breaking in his mind. Finally he found a third sword : the Sword of Silence. This sword seemed to bring forth a lot of softness, a softness stronger than any sharpness. Powers came forth from the sword so soft that they could easily break bones. He could let them crumble into powders. When he would aim his sword his enemy wouldn't be able to speak anymore, as by the softness muscles seemed to melt away, and the tongue got paralyzed. It was by the Sword of Silence Samson could finally open the portal to the jungles of flesh and blood. Here he could materialize into the natural world again to settle his throne. He would rule them all. It was called the return of Samson, and this all happened by the three swords. He became almost invincible by these three swords. He would bring justice now from this throne, and a lot of others who followed him could materialize into the natural world.

Samson had now crossed the fire which kept the natural world and the underworld apart, and this all by the power of the three swords. These three swords meant everything to him, and he carried them at his back to grasp them whenever he needed them. He still needed to master so many things, but the three swords gave him hope and strength. They led him. Nothing could give him more love and passion but these three swords. He slayed snakes and dragons by them, and came to the tops and depths of the natural world by them. Samson was a soft men. He didn't give anything for hardness, but by his softness he was very tight and powerfull. He brought a new order : the order of softness. And this all by the three swords, who were his three kings. It was a long path to this kingdom, finally setting him free. He had come to the bottomless and topless pit from where strange powers seemed to stream and rule. He had worked for this pit in bitter years, but it had finally rebuilt him. He had been wounded by this pit, but it had finally healed him and empowered him almightily. It had offered him eternal life after the deep deaths, and had offered him the riches after a deep poverty. No one could stand before Samson's throne, as first weakness would let them fall, and then by a strange power at his command or by a word they would rise to their feet again. But so many weren't worth to rise again, so Samson let them sleep. So many he would lead to the eternal sleep and the eternal dreams, as in the natural life they would be too dangerous. Samson was a soft and smooth man. He would let everything slide as in a process, a process of evolution.

Traghar I

I remember the first time I met Traghar. It was in winter and I was staring at a painting in a certain hotel I was together with a friend. We were there for some business, and I remember I was totally absorbed by that painting. I went to sleep early, and I dreamt of Traghar coming to me. He had just cut off the head of some Martian demonking, and while the blood was still dripping from the head he was speaking. He told me he needed me to build a new world, a new Mars. I remember his friendly eyes and his friendly speaking. He was very kind. I just didn't understand why he needed me to rebuild Mars, and how would I do that ? Suddenly I saw a rope before my eyes, and when I took it in my hands it took me up. I was going to Mars. I couldn't believe it. I had never had such a strange dream. It was so real. First Traghar showed me the nature of Mars, the beasts, like lions, panthers and so forth. His appearance was very friendly, and he seemed to be friends with big big snakes, who slided around him all the time. I remember he asked me if I wanted to live in this world. His knife was very bloody. He looked very savage, and had some torn rags. Some cats came and seemed to care for him. After awhile big apes came forward, also caring for him. He seemed to have a lot of friends on Mars. One of his snakes also started to slide around me. The jungle was beautiful here. There were a lot of snakes, also sliding in trees. In the distance there were rivers, and I could also see some camps.

There were also big red hairy spiders with indians on them. I do not know how long I was on Mars, but too soon I woke up already. I didn't want to come out of bed. I felt sick, like I had been stung by an exotic insect or something. I was very tired and had headaches. But I was still in the hotel and the next day someone brought me home. I was still very sick, shivering from cold. What was going on ? Was this real ?

Years later I had my second encounter with Traghar. This time it wasn't a dream. He really came to my house, and started to talk. He had a spaceship in the forest, and we would go there so that we could reach Mars. I was very excited. It took a few days before we got to Mars. When we were finally there I knew this time I wouldn't wake up, as this was for real, no dream. Traghar was very friendly, but also here I got sick and needed to sleep. Traghar gave me some pills and I started to hallucinate almost, while he rubbed a certain oil on my body with a strange smell.

In the distance it was like red smoke came from the mountains, and it was like there were big skulls resting in the higher parts of the mountains. This time Traghar showed me the head of a black demonemperor of Mars. He had the face of a monstrous panther. Traghar told me how he went to the place of the emperor, guarded by black panthers, and how he slayed them all. After that he beheaded the emperor. There was also a horrible fight against a red snake until Traghar could plunder the treasures of the emperor. The best treasure was a magical knife of savages.

The magical knife of savages had power over lions, tigers and many other beasts of Mars, and soon Traghar became lord of the wilderness and the jungle. There was no one who could decorate the jungle like Traghar did. He was a master builder and a god. By his strength he could remove the biggest and heaviest stones and rocks, and elephants helped him in building a total new structure.

Traghar wanted to build an age of peace on Mars, after all the bloody wars. He would stand on the mountains to shout for peace. I still remember him standing there with his rags and his magical knife of savages. I remember the great love this man had for Mars. After awhile he brought me back to earth in his spaceship. I started to write books, but not about him. The books were pretty childish and I seemed to forget about him for a great deal. So many things in life totally absorbed me. The third time I had an encounter with Traghar was many years later, and this time it was an encounter of doom. In the middle of the night he came to me and baptized me in blood. This time he was in rage, and he came like a storm. There was fire and light all around me, and at the same time so much darkness.

He took me to Mars again in a storm, and this time Mars was bathing in blood. There was a big war going on. Traghar fought on the side of the bloodiest Indians you could imagine. It was a fight against monkeys. I saw spears raging through the atmosphere of dust. Finally the Indians won the war. We came into a camp where also Traghar had his tent. I can remember there were a lot of skulls of lions and tigers. It seemed like there had be a war against the cats as well, but they didn't tell much about it.

It seemed they had many problems with their attempts to establish peace. After awhile Traghar brought me back again in the storm, back to earth. Again that what had happened didn't change my life. It was all like a dream to me, and the next day I had almost forgotten about it. Traghar was my friend, but I lived on earth.

But then there was a moment I couldn't return to earth anymore. It was the day the snakes attacked earth. Everything was in fire, and there were snakes everywhere. The fourth time I had an encounter with Traghar he would never let me go. He wouldn't let me go back to earth again, so I became a part of Mars. Mars was also totally destroyed by the attacks of the snakes, but it's wilderness could survive one or the other way. Traghar showed me some scars on his body, some strange spots, but by these ones he had power over the snakes somehow. Since the war against the snakes there were vulcanoes of blood now on Mars, but it seemed to fertilize the wilderness in a strange way.

But still : something didn't seem right. Traghar told me that once Venus and Mars were one big planet : Pythia. He told me that if these two planets would melt together again the destructive forces of the sun would die. I asked him how he wanted to do that, but then he took me to his spaceship and showed me a piece of Mars and a piece of Venus. He put the two pieces together and threw them in a kettle with strange liquids like paint. The two pieces started to melt and blended into the liquids, while strange snakes seemed to come forward from the kettle. They were very tall. But that was not the strangest thing. Traghar took some of the stuff and rubbed it on his body, and started to change into a snake as well. I didn't know what I saw. 'Do it to yourself now,' the snake said. I did it and it felt wonderful. The snake slided into the kettle and I did the same while we began to grow normal again. It was a magical kettle of savages. I still didn't have an idea how Traghar would melt Mars and Venus together by it, but so many snakes seemed to come forth from the kettle, and they grew bigger and bigger. 'It won't take long now,' Traghar said.

It was one of the most amazing things I saw in my life. Venus coming closer and closer to Mars until they finally melted into each other. Darkness fell upon us. The sun was becoming like a sack of hair, while it seemed to spread itself throughout the air.

In the depths of Pythia, in it's underworld, there was a huge wilderness called Lakshor. It was the hugest wilderness ever existing, and it was like Traghar had found home here. I will never forget the smile he had on his face, and how quickly he became friends with the eagles and vultures there, who were really giants. The heart of this wilderness was called Taan Naat, where the fountains and falls of blood were. But deeper in Taan Naat there were deserts and dry wildernesses, where hunger was floating like a ghost. It was a place bearing a lot of secrets. There were misty palaces in the distance, and they seemed to be made of bones. It was a long trip through the dustdesert before we reached such a palace. We went downstairs were strange fluids were flowing. It had a strange smell, but because we were under dust we washed ourselves in it. We did not know anything of this world. We decided to swim a bit further in the fluids, until we came to a place like an underground jungle. There were strange palms growing here with strange coconuts, while women seemed to wash themselves by the everflowing milk. Soon we found out that gorillas were dominating this place. The women told us that they had a temple in which they worshipped a coconut-snake. The coconut-snake would keep them in hypnosis by which they burdened and repressed the women.

The women showed us the way to this temple, and soon Traghar had slain the coconut-snake. But then her shrieking monkeys seemed to wake up, and we had to fight against their remnant for a few days. In these days the women fought on our side, but many died. In the depths of the castle Traghar found a door to a certain treasure room, but even more important : It was a doorway.

We came in a flowerfield after walking through many treasure rooms. Snakes slided here around pillars, high pillars, and it looked like heaven here. Traghar bowed down before a well and started to drink. I started to drink as well. The waters were lovely here, full of flowers. The waters were charged by a certain seed, and we got strong hallucinations.

For Traghar it was a new beginning, also for me, and we decided to stay friends.

The End

Traghar II

I will never forget the smile on Traghar's face when he reached Orion through a secret doorway in Taan Naat. It was the flame of Pythia finally bringing him here. He had been an astronaut for awhile, and finally he had reached this piece of paradise. I could write a book about his smile. He lost so many of his burdens. He was a released man.

I woke him up the next day. I showed him his armor made of skeleton-toes. He needed such an armor here on Orion. Traghar would be an Orion warrior now. It was time for him to say goodbye to Mars. Pythia had been an excellent bridge. Taan Naat was the well of glory, the depths of Pythia, forming the connection between Mars and Orion. Here Traghar found rebirth, where he became a soldier of death. He didn't serve the old order anymore. Mars had always been a strengling python around him. It was now a war against Mars, in which Traghar wanted to get rid of the ties.

Orion raised him tall. There was no return for him anymore. He had been abducted, and he wanted it. There was no force taking him back anymore.

He raised his sword and ruled his kingdom. He stood in his jungle, on the biggest branch he ever stood on. He could watch Orion for days and days. Just staring. This was his place now. Here he had the helmet of death, and had the command over monkey armies, all against Mars. The monkies would invade Mars to take over, and they would abduct also other Martians to this place. That was the will ofTraghar.

It was on that day Traghar met Tara from Rhodes. They would rule Orion together. It was the Tucan Stone which had brought them together. I never saw them smile brighter the day they met each other and the tucan. I never forget the wild smell of banana trees of Orion that day. It was like they were about to burst forth, and to mix themselves into the sea. These were wild bananas.

Traghar had become a dark hunter now, like Tara from Rhodes. All he wanted was to rise in this place and to take possession. All he wanted was to raise his testament. He wanted to give something to the jungle. In dark nights they adorned each other. The wild fruits of Orion made them drunk, and they needed it to rule Orion, and to guard it. The candy grew in the trees here, and in the plants. It also caused drunkenness. They could forget about Mars, and find a living here.

Traghar rode on horned predators, killergoats, while Tara rode on her snakes. He was the god of war, and she was his goddess.

The End

Traghar III

Chapter 1.

Traghar came closer to the aztec beauty. It was lying on a chair, a perfect red gem almost wrapped by zebra skin. He held it in his arms like a baby, soothing it almost. Then he stepped forward to the aztec king. 'I have heard about your daughter,' Traghar said. 'Like many have, and I will assure you that I will bring her back.'

'I will reward you richly,' the king said.

Traghar went out of the aztec palace. The white stones were shining in the light of the day, and Traghar was almost blinded by the sight. How he loved to watch this palace. He ran into the jungle, where some monkeys were waiting for him. These apes cared about nothing else but Traghar and to fulfill his orders. He was a god to them. He told them about the aztec beauty, and about the princess he was looking for.

'Nachtur Kawa,' said one of the apes. Together they ran deeper into the jungle, to the place where they lived, which was almost like a village. Keenat was the name of the lost aztec princess. Traghar shouted her name. He wondered where she could be. There was no trace.

Traghar also visited the black monkey king, to tell him about the princess. No one knew where she was. Clearblue the tiger came close to Traghar. They were all sad that the princess was lost, as they loved the king. He had done so much for them. Then Traghar went deeper into the jungle, close to the steaming lake. Here he found the princess. She was bathing there and he wondered why. There were crocodiles all around her. Slowly he came closer to her. 'Why are you here ?' Traghar asked. But the girl didn't say anything.

'Did you lose your speach or so ?' Traghar asked. But the girl was all silent. Then Traghar came even more closer. It looked like she was spellstruck. She went deeper into the water and swam to the other side, together with the crocodiles. 'Hey, wait,' Traghar said loud. Then he followed her. He wanted to know what was going on. He followed her into a cave behind the lake, where a lot of apes were. They surrounded her. 'May I ask what is going on,' Traghar said. But the girl didn't answer.

Traghar wanted to take her back to the aztec king, but she didn't want. It looked like she was under a spell, or she had lost her memory. 'What can I do for you ?' Traghar asked. Then suddenly a monkey took Traghar and pushed him hard into the water. The girl hid behind this big ape. Traghar didn't want to upset her, but on the other hand he had the feeling that she was a captive. He had to use wisdom now. The monkeys became more angry, and Traghar really had to leave now, as he didn't want to cause a bloodbath because of the presence of the princess. In the night he returned to the cave, but there was no one. He went deeper into the wilderness behind the steaming lake, where he found the girl sleeping between the apes. Carefully he took her on his back, and climbed into a tree, and then went from tree to tree by lianas.

When he came into the aztec palace the princess was still sleeping. The king was glad to see her. But soon there was an invasion of apes in the palace, as they wanted the princess back. Traghar had never seen so many apes in his whole life. But this time he just had to cause a bloodbath. The pillars were shaking. Traghar called for Kendira the lion, and when the lion showed up, the bloodbath became even greater. Later the king found out that the princess was not really the princess but a clone of her, made of rubber, and it was almost perfect. Traghar had just taken a doll. This was why the princess didn't speak.

Traghar went deeper into the jungle. After a long run of many hours he came to a temple who had two clones of her before the portal. They didn't speak, but they were armed. Traghar could escape from them and entered the temple. There another clone of the princess was sitting on a throne, but this clone could speak.

'What have you done to the princess,' Traghar asked.

'Oh, she is safe with us,' the clone said. Traghar ran deeper into the temple, into a chamber, where he found her in a golden cage. Immediately the cage started to move upwards, and disappeared through the ceiling. The clone stood behind him. 'Blood in the mornings for those who search the treasures lost,' the clone said. 'You will not find what you search for. You have to give it up.'

'Never,' said Traghar. He grasped his knife, and came into a fight with her. In the distance he heard the princess screaming. He jumped up and went through the tunnel in the ceiling, and finally through a muddy path he came to a throne where a panthress was sitting, a black panthress. She was holding an inca treasure, and said that it was a time bomb of the flood, that the whole planet would drown in blood soon.

'What do you want with the aztec princess,' Traghar asked.

'We will eat her,' the panthress said. 'Her meat will make us immune.'

Traghar knew about the inca stone. It would cause blood to rain and prey would fall down like meat, all to help the hunters. But maybe this was another stone. It was a powerful stone for sure.

'Ghosts are living in this stone,' the panthress said, 'and they have kidnapped the princess, and made so many clones of her.'

Traghar came closer to her, while she grasped her spear. 'One step closer and you are dead meat,' she said.

'My dad has a mayan stone,' the princess screamed from her cage. 'Please bring it here to neutralize these energies.'

Traghar ran back to the aztec palace, and told the aztec king what happened. He gave him the mayan stone, and Traghar ran back to the place where the princess was, but when he came to the temple it had been surrounded by monkeys. Traghar called for lions to invade the temple. They caused blood baths everywhere, but the princess was nowhere to be found.

'It is almost time this planet to be drowned in blood,' a voice said.

Traghar didn't know where the voice was coming from.

'What is that stone you have there,' the voice said.

'It is the maya stone,' Traghar said, 'the bleeding mouth, the princess asked for it.'

'Ha ha,' said the voice, 'the princess is gone.'

Traghar stared at the mud between his toes. It was like the voice was coming from the underground. When he laid the stone on the ground suddenly a light was blinding them all. The lions started roaring and the ground seemed to open itself up. There he heard the screaming of the princess again, and went into the opening. Soon he came to an open space in the underground. He held the stone to his chest. He saw her lying on a table, and she was surrounded by apes with knives. They were ready to cut her. 'Throw the stone, Traghar !' the princess shouted. With one swing he hit one of the apes. There the panthress came with the inca stone.

He took her in a grip, a tight grip. The apes were all fearing the mayan stone. 'I am losing my powers,' the panthress spoke. I see the mayan stone is stronger than the inca stone, so there will come no flood of blood. We don't need the meat of the aztec princess anymore to become immune. Then she fell down for the mayan stone and worshipped it. Traghar took the aztec princess and together they left the palace.

The king was very pleased to see her again. It was through the bushes Traghar could see so many red stones now, so many aztec stones awakening. There was a new nature coming alive on the planet Betelgeuse.

He was an aztec priest in so many ways. The aztec king could always count on him. The aztec king gave him his daughter as a gift. Together they would wander through the wildernesses and jungles of Betelgeuse. They lived here with the beasts.

Chapter 2.

Traghar was in the desert fighting against a red giant worm. It came out of the ground to attack Traghar, and he had a hard time with it. Keenat the aztec princess soon joined him, and they could get rid of it, and together they threw it into the ravine. It was dying there.

There was a desert war between the Esakites and the Nomiites. The war was about zebra oil, but the war was actually caused by a demonic pillar, the pillar of Znatun. Traghar had to bring this pillar down. He didn't want to see this fight anymore. A skeleton goddess called Pink helped him to find the pillar of Znatun. She was aware that the war didn't lead to anything. There was actually no escape from this war, as she knew that if the pillar would break it would be two times worse. But she gave Traghar a try. Maybe he could disactivate this pillar.

When he approached her in her desert palace he was amazed by all the treasures she had. 'Travel south,' she spoke to Traghar.

When Traghar approached the Pillar of Znatun he soon found out it was an oracle. Two powers were fighting each other to open an ancient door. This door was called the Door of Peace, but it clearly meant the opposite. Traghar went through the portal in the pillar, and saw the future. It was a repeat of a long forgotten past.

Traghar thought the only way to forget about this was to enter deeper into the desert, into the wilderness, to start a new life and forget about it all. He took his princess with him. She was faithful to him, loving, strong.

The crocodile lake was in the depths of the wilderness. There were sliding so many unknown reptiles here, unknown to the world above. Traghar loved the depths of the wilderness. Soon he swam together with him, and they knew he was their Lord. They loved him as well. The water was cool, yet it was slimy and warm, and mystery was boiling there. They swam together, he and she. They were wanting the gnosis, the deeper knowledge of it all, and almost begged the reptiles to show it to them. The path went to become steamy, almost like a swamp. There was an island in this lake, salty and sandy, where strange trees grew. It was indeed the land of the pillar.

And of course this was a pillar of worms, shapeshifting in the head of Traghar. It was his worm-helmet keeping him in this state. There were inca crosses in his head, ghosts from a long forgotten past. He was under the curse of a worm, the great red one. If he should have known better he would know that after the death of this red worm there would also be another part, as worms have many parts, living on separated, in this sense as the Pillar of Znatun, the causer of all war.

The great desert was lurking him, where he would find his grave of worms, and from which he would rise. It was a great place with many pillars : the pillar of sand, the pillar of water, the pillar of salt, and the pillar of blood, all dedicated to the great worm. Traghar wanted to know the secret of this cult here.

Travahl

The Jewels of Phalir

Travahl was on his way to the palace of princess Phalir. She was dressed in fur, and on her belly hung red chrystals. Travahl couldn’t get his eyes off of her. She was a beauty of the highest grade, but Travahl was a savage, so he didn't have any mercy on her. He abducted her, took her to a cave and made sure she understood his plans. He wanted the elite of Afir to fall down.

He wanted to use her for that. She needed to tell him about the place where the keys were to the underworld. In the underworld the elite had their secret conspiracies. Travahl wasn't glad with any of them. He wanted to slay them coldblooded.

Of course Phalir didn't tell him where the keys were, but she misled him and he came into a trap. Phalir wouldn't have mercy on him. Travahl came into a pit full of snakes, while guards blocked the way out. Here Travahl had to die, but savage as he was, he lived from the snake meat.

Every night he dreamt about Phalir. But soon he started to hate her more and more. Savage as he was he dug a hole in the snake pit. After months of digging he reached the underworld by himself, and slayed all the elite.

Phalir was now in his hands. He dressed her with the most beautiful stones and adorned her with the treasures in the underworld. Here he would rule with her. But Phalir hated him. It was a forced relationship. Travahl didn't seem to understand that. He saw her as an object, his object.

One night when he slept Phalir chained him, and fled. She found some hope and rest with the snakes of Mordid, a friend of hers. Mordid was the only one she could go to. And the snakes protected her, like they protected Mordid.

When Travahl woke up and found out that he had been chained he roared and screamed, but there was no one to help him. Days of hunger followed, but suddenly he got so much strength that he could break the chains.

In the forests he searched for Phalir. He missed her.

After awhile he came to the place of Mordid, and he had a fight against the awful snakeguards. But savage as he was, he soon ate from their meat and enjoyed it. He called for Phalir, but then Mordid stood before him with a sword.

'What is your wish, savage man ?' she asked.

'I ask you for the hand of Phalir,' Travahl said. 'I know she is with you. I can smell it.'

'She doesn't want you,' Mordid said. 'Why don't you lay yourself down in this fate. Go outside into the forest and cry for a few days, and then go on with your life.'

'No,' Travahl said. 'She needs me. I don't want her to fall in the hands of the elite again. Those aristocrats do not have any manners.'

Mordid aimed her sword at him, but Travahl grasped her pulse. 'Now, can't I be more clear. Phalir is mine,' he shouted.

'No, she is my sister,' Mordid said.

‘What kind of man does she want,’ Travahl said.

‘She doesn’t want a man,’ Mordid said.

‘Why not ?’ Travahl asked.

‘She cannot live with a man,’ Mordid said. ‘She has a handicap.’

‘What is her handicap ?’ Travahl asked.

‘Well,’ Mordid said, ‘Have you ever seen her naked ? She’s a spotted woman.’

‘I don’t care,’ Travahl said.

‘Well, she’s ashamed of it,’ Mordid said.

‘I think spots are beautiful,’ Travahl said.

But when he saw her he became afraid. She had turned into a spotted dog.

‘That is her secret,’ Mordid said.

The spotted dog jumped at Travahl and bit him. Travahl was bleeding. ‘Since I have your scar, can I marry you ?’ he asked.

‘I marry you,’ Phalir said. ‘For you have seen my secret and still loved me.’

Travahl got a ring around his neck, and soon they got married. Mordid was their witness. Since then Travahl lived in the underworld and ruled together with Phalir. They became a warrior couple, fighting side by side. While Mordid was their everlasting hope and fortress.

Inner Weakness

It was cold in the heart of Travahl. Together with Phalir he ruled the underworld. They had clothed themselves with the jewels of tigers. Their realm was full of the treasures of the elephant. Torches were burning everywhere, but still their hearts got colder. They often had fights.

One day Phalir broke the marriage and ran away. Travahl was broken. He slew his own tigers in rage, and hung his panthers. Phalir was everything to him, but now his heart was empty.

He dreamt about her every night. No one dared to come closer to him. He clothed himself in dread.

Ameko was a warrior close to his heart. He came to Travahl one day and offered him a spear. ‘Here, take this,’ Ameko said. ‘Take revenge.’

But Travahl refused. He loved Phalir too much. But later he accepted the gift of Ameko, and started to hunt. Not after Phalir, but after deer. He hung the whole palace full with deer, in hope Phalir would come to him again.

But Phalir found herself another place, and built her own kingdom. She became a worse ruler than she ever was, but Travahl still didn’t lose his love for her.

One day he sent Ameko to her to ask her what she wanted from Travahl for her return. She answered : ‘Let him bring me the teeth of Dwahlar, and I will marry him again.’ Dwahlar was a monster in the depths of the underworld. When Ameko told it to Travahl he got into rage, took Ameko’s spear and went down in the underworld to slay the monster and rip his teeth out. He made a necklace of it and brought it to Phalir.

But Phalir was laughing. ‘I will not return to you, Travahl,’ she said. ‘First bring me the head of a camel on a dish. Then I will marry you.’ Travahl did what she asked, but still she wouldn’t marry him. ‘What do you want me to do next ?’ Travahl asked.

‘Dance for me,’ Phalir said.

‘But how ?’ Travahl asked. ‘I’m a savage. I cannot dance.’

‘I don’t care,’ Phalir said. ‘Just do it.’

Travahl danced. Phalir stood up from her throne after awhile. ‘You fool,’ she said. ‘I won’t marry a man who can’t dance.’ This time Travahl came into the worst rage, took his spear, threw it, and just missed.

‘Conquer me,’ Phalir said, while she grasped her knife. It became a fight on life and death. Phalir had become so much more powerful, and Travahl started to fear her. He couldn’t beat her.

‘You’re a liar, Phalir,’ Travahl said. ‘You never do what you promise.’

‘And you are naïve, Travahl,’ Phalir said. ‘You don’t know the strategies of the battle.’

‘I know you try to break me,’ Travahl said. ‘I guess you look for a horse to ride on.’

‘No, Travahl,’ Phalir said. ‘I will never be with you again, unless you conquer me.’

Travahl knew that was easier said than done. But by the fights he would be close to her, although he knew she was dangerous. One day she became too dangerous for him, and he left. He went to the forest and tried to forget about her. She was too strong. She let him feel weak. But the further he went away from her, the weaker he began to feel himself, like she was inside of him. He got torn apart between fear and weakness, causing him to grieve much. But one day he slew a monster tiger and took the skin of it’s head to dress himself with. Then he went back to Phalir and challenged her.

‘So you came back to me ?’ Phalir asked mocking. ‘What did you make returning to me ?’

‘Your precious beauty, oh my Phalir, destroyed my fear of you,’ Travahl said, aimed his sword at her, but immediately faced her big knife. ‘Do you remember this one ? she asked. Then she kicked him in his stomach.

‘Please Phalir, have some mercy on me,’ Travahl moaned.

‘I don’t feel anything for losers and weaklings like you, Travahl,’ Phalir said, ‘you’re a slave of your desire, but you don’t establish anything. You are a windhunter.’

‘Then help me a bit,’ Travahl moaned. ‘You are so cruel.’

But Phalir kicked him in the stomach again, and this time ten times harder. He got slammed against the wall, and blood was dripping fast. After awhile Travahl woke up in a bloodbath. It felt like he had lost himself this time. ‘Die, you bastard,’ Phalir shouted, while she held her knife against his neck. Travahl rolled away, and could escape finally. This time he would never ever return to her again. He had to become a man, a real man, standing on himself, not depending on anyone. That was his challenge. She would forget him, as that was her nature. Her life went on. She was an independent woman, also with an inner weakness. She was too weak to handle man.

Travahl find some friendship with independent animals like black panthers. Travahl could forget about her as well this time, and found a new princess he adored. Her name was Effud. But she was almost like Phalir, and soon their friendship ended. This time Travahl already got used to it. He became coldhearted, a hard man. He became a no one’s friend, only to some snakes. He learned about their jewels, and soon he had a new obsession. He finally overcame himself.

Robert McDanen - Barbarian Fiction

Less Bad

Robert was an author and a comic-maker. He was also a painter. But one day he decided to live in the jungle for the rest of his life. He became a savage king of gorillas.

He was obsessed by someone named Tara from Rhodes. She was also a savage, once visiting the city to work in the circus for awhile, with leopards. Robert was her neighbour, and she was actually the reason he once went to the jungle to never return to the city.

Robert was a tender man, very friendly. Many thought he was the softest man existing.

The gorillas loved him very much, and protected their king. When Robert got older he became more savage and sinister. It was something he couldn’t stop, but he walked with more grace than ever.

He was the one who could build a sinister dreadful jungle empire within a few years. He had found substances in the depth of the jungle, unknown exotic substances, by which he could bring the dead alive. Skeletons were his helpers, zombies his army.

This soft man became such a fright, stirring fear in the hearts of everyone hearing about his empire. He built the meanest traps, surrounding his empire, all to guard the place. He knew the jungle was the dangerous place where he could be, so he should come up with something worse.

He became a mystic and a cryptic. His domain was almost like a labyrinth. One day he returned to the city to buy some of his old comics. No one recognized him. He had clothed himself with his old clothes and his hat.

He went to a hotel to read his comics. A girl came in to bring him some water. 'Sit down,' he said. 'Do you know who I am ?'

'No, sir,' the girl said.

'I made this comic,' he said.

'You did ?' the girl asked. 'They are beautiful, I always loved them.'

'I need to go,' Robert said. He gave the comics to the girl and left the city.

He instructed his skeletons and zombies to build a ship, a ghostship, of which he would become the captain. A swordfighter he would be.

Within a few months he was on sea with his ship. He became a terror on the oceans, all on the green planet on which he lived. He became the worst reaver ever existing. It was worse than pirates. He was a barbarian.

He took possession of an island they called the Land of Horseflies, where he built an empire worse than the other. By some sort of substance on this island, an exotic substance, he could wake up the souls out of hell. The souls of hell became his watchers.

He built himself an empire of grace, of majestic, brilliant beauty, but sinister more than ever. In the center of it he placed a chrystal. The walls around the island were so hot that anyone who touched them would turn into ashes. You could only enter as entering through hell.

Finally Robert McDanen saw what he had made and came to his senses. He had made the worst trap ever existing. Those who had entered through the gates could never leave, and the deeper you came in the empire, the more tragic it became. There was no grace close to the chrystal, it was a place of no mercy. And you just became a part of this nature.

Robert McDanen tried to escape to his old city again, to leave his creation alone. Luckily he succeeded. His grandchildren visited the island later, not believing the stories of their grandfather. They could bring some magic to it, and it turned out to be less bad.

The Witch's Ring

The witch Mercuria ruled the land Traduria by a witch's ring. One day Robert McDanen visited her to ask the ring back. She laughed at him. How did he dare to come to her veiled castle.

'I will give you the ring,' she said. 'But first defeat the seven skeletons, the one of the sea, the one of the forest, the one of the desert, the one of the city, the one of the air, the one of fire, and the one of the underground.'

It wasn't too difficult for Robert McDanen to defeat them, and soon he returned to her. She gave him the ring, but it was like a curse struck him. He bowed down in pain.

'You have asked for it,' she said. 'The ring brings much suffering.'

As soon as Robert McDanen had left the castle he fell to the ground. There was dust all around him, and snakes were staring at him. The ring was already deep inside of him, in his heart, and now it was rising to his nose.

‘I’m cursed, bearing this ring,’ Robert McDanen said. ‘But I have to.’ He crept to his ship and went on the ocean. He was on his way to the dragon-king now, living in a fortress in the depths of the ocean.

When he came there he pushed the codes into the portal, he had to make a certain sound-combination, like a song, like a rhythm. When he stood before the dragon-king he said : ‘It is in me now, the witch’s ring.’

The dragon could take it out of Robert McDanen very easily, and then the dragon swallowed the ring. ‘It’s safe here,’ the dragon said. I’ve never seen nature change more than since this happened. This was always one of the stories of Robert McDanen, but none of his grandchildren ever believed him. But the fact was : Robert McDanen brought love back to the sky, and it was everywhere.

The End

Joseph the Barbarian - Barbarian Fiction

The Depth

He couldn’t expect he would meet the snake when he entered the building. Such a huge snake he had never seen. Joseph the Barbarian lived in the underworld for such a long time now, but never had he seen such a huge black orange sweaty snake like this. He took his sword, but he couldn’t begin anything against it. Slowly the snake was strengling him, and took him away to the lair in the distance. ‘What do you want,’ a skeleton said. ‘Why did you come to our places. You don’t belong here, so face the snake. Face it. If you overcome then this place is yours, and if not, you will be the eternal slave of this place.’

‘What does that mean to be an eternal slave ?’ Joseph the Barbarian roared.

‘It means you will be a gladiator, but we will pay you good. Slaves do not have any lack here,’ the skeleton said.

‘I do not belief you,’ Joseph roared. The snake was slowly strengling him, until a woman came closer to them. The women had been clothes in all sorts of small jewelry like pearls strung together. She was like wearing the stars on her body. ‘Belief me, it is better to lose,’ the woman said to Joseph the Barbarian. ‘You will live in abundancy here, all the treasures of the underworld. You will be a slave of it, but it will protect you. You do not know about the dangers of the underworld.’

‘Woman, go away,’ Joseph the Barbarian roared, and then he tore the snake apart in his rage. He walked towards the skeleton while he had taken his sword again, and said : ‘Although I have won from your snake, I do not want to have this place. I only came here to visit the king.’

‘Oh,’ the skeleton said. ‘That is a pity. But okay, I will give you what you wish.’ And then the skeleton led Joseph to the king.

When Joseph approached the throne, the king asked him what he wanted. ‘I want to marry your daughter,’ Joseph said. The king stood up and said : ‘Only those who have defeated the snakes of the pit will have a chance to meet my daughter.’

‘Then I will descend into that pit,’ Joseph the Barbarian said. ‘Where is that pit ?’

The king smiled, pushed on a button, while Joseph seemed to sink into the bottom, while he finally found himself between tall thin black snakes. Some were a bit shorter but a lot of them immediately took him in a tight grip. ‘Elusiana, help me,’ he shouted. He knew that it was the name of the princess. Again he saw the women with the small jewelry coming. She put on a lantarn and a light fell upon her. ‘I thought you did not want this place. You want the princess I see, but you will only get her if you defeat the snakes and get this place in your hands,’ the woman said. In rage Joseph bit the snakes, and soon he had torn them all apart. Then the woman left.

‘Don’t leave me, as how do I get out of this ? He couldn’t reach the balcony on which she stood, and now also the lights went away again. ‘Elusiana, Elusiana, have mercy on me,’ Joseph the Barbarian shouted. When he started to get real hungry he ate from the meat and blood of the snakes. It had a strange taste. After days the king threw a rope to him and took him out. ‘Do you want this place now you have defeated the snakes ?’ the king asked.

‘No,’ Joseph the Barbarian said. ‘All I ask for is your daughter.’

‘And why do you want my daughter above all these riches ?’ the king said.

‘Riches and rulership enslave, but love sets free,’ Joseph the Barbarian spoke in pride.

‘And why is it you want my daughter and not someone else. And do understand that you are supposed to have riches and domain when you want to marry my daughter,’ the king said.

‘I know your daughter,’ Joseph the Barbarian said. ‘She is the sweetest of all women. My heart aches for her, and I know she aches for me.’

‘How do you know,’ the king asked, ‘as no one has ever seen the princess. She is veiled, and skeletons have imprisoned her in the depths of the underworld.’

‘I saw her in my dreams,’ Joseph the Barbarian said.

‘Be a man,’ the king said. ‘Do you belief in dreams ? I do not want to have a dreamer for my daughter. You are supposed to be a worker.’

‘Elusiana, Elusiana,’ Joseph the Barbarian shouted. ‘I know you are here. Please come to me.’

‘What a lunatic you are,’ the king said. ‘But you have defeated the black orange giant snake and her bred, so I will give you a chance. Take this key and go to the cellars of the underworld where you will find her.’

Then the king gave him the key, and Joseph the Barbarian got access to a certain tunnel below the domain of the king.

‘Elusiana,’ Joseph the Barbarian shouted, while darkness fell upon him, and the king close the door behind him. ‘Elusiana, I know you must be here somewhere.’

‘Joseph, king of all kings,’ Elusiana shouted from the distance. ‘Come and save me.’ Joseph slowly moved closer. He knew that the princess had also dreamt about him. These dreams would always guide her through the night she was living in. Suddenly Joseph the Barbarian got the shock of his life. Masses of skeletons marched in the distance, while the sight was striking his head, and fear came to fall upon him. They rose their weapons and suddenly they attacked like lions. Never had he seen such predators, and never he heard such roaring.

‘Elusiana,’ Joseph screamed, ‘save me as well.’ Then a fight started, and the woman of the small jewelry came to watch. Joseph didn’t have much chance against the skeletons. ‘You will never get your Elusiana,’ the woman said. ‘As you didn’t want a domain, and you didn’t want riches. You needed some presents of the king to get some grip here, but you didn’t want to have anything but his daughter. You are a fool, as it takes much more to approach the princess.’

‘My dreams and her dreams are enough,’ Joseph the Barbarian said, but the skeletons were slowly strengling him, and it was like time faded away. Soon he found himself hanging at a stake, while his body had been tortured miserably. ‘I want to die for my Elusiana,’ Joseph the Barbarian spoke. Then a light fell down in the horrible place where they had dragged Joseph too. Wolves came to surround him and ate from his flesh. Joseph gave himself as a sacrifice for the princess to free her, but it seemed more and more flames of hell struck him. It was like he got insane. ‘Elusiana,’ he whispered. Then he closed his eyes. Eyes were staring at him. ‘And Elusiana calls this the king of all kings ?’ someone was saying slowly. ‘This man is insane. No one can survive in this place.’ Smoke entered the place, and when Joseph the Barbarian opened his eyes a bit again he saw the king. He also saw the daughter of the king. She had been chained. ‘Here is your man,’ the king said. ‘Why did you choose to stay in a place like this all your life just to meet this man.’

‘As I love him, father,’ the princess said.

‘You are a dreamer, Elusiana, and it will never get you anywhere,’ the king said. ‘You will always live on sand with him, as he is a dreamer as well. It takes more to reach your goals.’

‘Father,’ Elusiana said. ‘I want to thank you for all what you have done for me, but my place is just deeper in the underworld, and not on the surface.’

After the king had left she took Joseph the Barbarian from the stake, and together they went into the depths.

Tarham - Prehistoric Fiction

The Masks of War

There was a world beyond life and death, a world where women ruled. There was only one man they couldn't tame. His name was Tarham, a savage. The secret of his freedom was a crocodile chainlet. He was a free man in the jungle, among the savage animals. He lived from the hunt, and he often ate from the flesh of defeated imperials. He was as soft as he was hard, and the women thought he would be prey in the hands of their sweetest, most cunning woman. But he killed her. He was a cannibal. It was something in the chainlet making him this way. It was a world beyond heaven and hell, where all the women wanted to do was the break the spirit of the male. They were irritated that they couldn't reach Tarham.

Tarham was on a raft, on the river, close to a waterfall. On the side of the river there were some women. But Tarham believed the crocodile chainlet would keep him safe. The women were fast swimmers. Above the river the trees were growing, and there were many lianas. He grasped one, and climbed on the tree, while he saw the women were taking his raft. Everywhere where he went women were making their huts around him, doing their works, trying to get his attention. In his own cave he called home, in it's depth, there was a crocodile chrystal, a stone keeping him satisfied so that he didn't need to eat so much blood and meat everyday. There was also the elephant chrystal, causing those who came closer to it to bleed, although Tarham himself was immune to it. Also these chrystals kept him safe.

The women had the Anaconda chrystal which grew in power everyday. They had the hope that these powers would finally break the shield of Tarham, the last man they needed to bring down. Aulaseha celebrated the triumph of the Anaconda chrystal. She sat on her throne, staring at it, and she saw Tarham falling already. 'It is time ladies,' she said. She went to her velvet horse, took her harpoon, and went with her warrior-women to the cave where Tarham lived. Tarham saw them coming from far away. There was something breaking in his head. He knew it was black magic.

'Time to give you over,' Aulaseha called. Her women were all masked, and they had strange imperial shields. Tarham had bowed his head and came out of the cave. Aulaseha threw her lasso around his neck and dragged him with her. To the depths of a dungeon she brought him. Here a hunger would eat from him, and the scorn of the women would break his pride. Here he would have to drink from the weakening milk.

Many years went by until an anaconda visited Tarham in his dungeon. Tarham had to wrestle for his life, but he was weak, and the anaconda soon had him in a deadly grip. Tarham's heartbeat was getting fast. The anaconda was ready to bite him, but then the anaconda saw the crocodile chainlet. Slowly the anaconda was biting the chainlet away, and left, while leaving Tarham halfdead. Tarham had lost his last power. He knew the snake had been sent out maybe by one of the women. The anaconda had made a tunnel through which Tarham could escape. The tunnel ended in a desert. There was a slave caravan in the desert. Tarham set the slaves free and killed the enslavers. He didn't know how he had so much power all of a sudden, more power than he ever had. He started his own tribe. Maybe the visit of the anaconda had energized him. There was a small oasis in the desert where he settled, where they could drink. After awhile he left the tribe and went to the jungle again.

Some mammoths became his friends. He killed some swines, and made a hut. He wanted to know he had granted him this power. He felt he had become invincible. When he got back to his cave there was a third chrystal : the hippo chrystal. Tarham was a savage, not having a sense of good nor evil. He just knew he had to protect himself better, to use his nostrils, and to protect his territory by his odor, like all the other animals did. The odors were thick and this time he found himself some savage women who were not like the rest. But one day he woke up, finding out that he had been tied. The women led him to a stake, and danced around him. Of course they were nothing but cannibals, like he was. Some started to feed him and others took care of his wounds, all to prepare him for the torture. One of them would become his cannibal bride. They told him that by giving her a baby a next generation was assured. The bride led him to her tent, where there would be a marriage ritual before he would be eaten. After the marriage ritual she led him back to the stake, and they were making a fire. After the dance the women got tired and laid around the fire. Before he would be grilled he would be tortured, but he had to wait at the stake for hours and hours, for the women were sleeping. It was dark already, and the fire was getting higher and hotter. Some of the women woke up already. They took their knives and came closer to him. 'Are you prepared to let your husband die ?' the women asked the bride. 'Yes,' the bride said, 'for from a woman he came and to a woman he will return.'

The torture took many days, and they laid him on an altar. But when the women wanted to bring the altar in the fire one of the women screamed : 'No, let us not go this far. He was our friend. He might be of use. Let's take a pig instead.' Tarham was already more dead than alive. 'Okay,' the women said. 'We will drag the altar to the fire, but when you give us a pig before the altar is in the fire, then the captive will live.' The woman had a fattened pig in a cage in the tent. She had to be quick. Just before the altar reached the fire she cut the ties of Tarham away by her knife, and showed the women her pig. 'Here you have it,' she said. Tarham she took to her tent. Tarham was very weak, still on the edge of death. He had horrible wounds everywhere, but the woman took care of it. Tarham could hardly speak, and was like in a coma. It took a few months until he had reached his strength again. In a certain night he slew all the women who did this to him, but the woman who saved him he kept alive. It was the only woman he would ever trust again.

But on one night he woke up finding himself tied again. The woman said she wanted him for herself, as a slave, and he would only be a good slave if she would zombificate him. Which meant she would lead him to a pseudo death and then raising him up again. The torture went deeper than before, and much longer, and she starved him. She wanted him to hunt for her, but at least she kept him alive.

Finally the monkeys saved him out of this situation. They took him into the depths of the jungle, while he was still mind-controlled, hypnotized, like he was drunk. They had to reprogram him all over again, and they would do this by their love. At the same time there was a monkey invasion in the empire of Aulaseha. It was the end of her rule. The monkeys ruled for years and years until wicked men took the rule : thieves and reavers. They did this by scientific experiments. Everyone needed to have their implants so that slavery would be assured. Again a woman took the lead. She was a zombificator by strange winds. She once got a ring of magic from a dragon, by which she got her powers. This ring was the ring of death. The worst demons came forth from the ring to assure her powers, and to fulfil her wicked commands. But her soft mouth was the true secret of her power. Her mouth was so soft that it became sharp. She had the mouths of beasts. Her riders with spiked saddle-trousers, riding monstrous pig-beasts, were everywhere to torment the mass. They took the scalps of all the previous rulers, invading their houses. The feet of the dark tribes of the new ruler looked like combat boots by all the sharp objects they were adorned with. She had a crown of fire, and a leather horned helmet, like her priests had. Her armory was combined with lingerie. Her priests would often take her crown and appear with it before the altars and the sacred objects of the god, to let it be electrified by the thunder gods. She had her own angels, having leather horned helmets as well. But some used the heads of pigs, bisons, buffaloes and goats as helmets. And she was proclaiming she was God, while being surrounded by her leopards. She could communicate to her servants by skulls. But in the underground a giant-monkey was awakening by all the changes. He came upstairs to cause a massacre. And soon other giant monkeys were awakening and joining the army. Tarham was in a deep sleep as well since the fall of the monkeys. But one of the giants woke him up. It was time for Tarham to take his throne, and to rule the giant monkeys and the world. The giant-monkeys led him to a throne made of rhino-saphire, which was actually an elevator.

The giant monkeys were architects and builders of enormous monkey-piramids, which were huge piramids with gigantic towers on top of them. These piramids were mere storages for masks, which were to them the weapons of war. The masquerade was something holy to them, and the one with the most masks was the one who would win the war and who they called God.

It was the zombificator however who had organized all this. She was both the friend and the enemy, the ruler and the invader.

Lars Hemmerlitch-Richter - Barbarian Fiction

Licenses of Orion

Chapter 1. Abyss of Snakes

Chapter 2. The Skeleton Stone

Chapter 3. The Massacre

Chapter 1. Abyss of Snakes

In a dark world a lonely warrior slides through the desert and the snow in his machine. It is a strange machine, attached to his arms and legs, by which he can step over dangerous things and by which he can terminate mines. Lars is a skilled soldier, a veteran in the army. The Hemmerlitch-Richter bloodline had the best warriors in the case, great leaders and skilled veterans. Lars was on his way to a red stronghold, a city, in the snowdesert. He had worked here in the past, and he still had to do things there.

He was a technician, one of the highest grade. He was in a project to reprogram certain leaders in the red city. Most of them were robots, or had cybernetic implants. Lars was an expert. They were all glad to see him. He had found a stone in the desert by which he could stir up a soft vibration. Soft technology was what they wanted.

Lars would also work at the clock of the city. The clock was the immunology program of the city, and the clock controlled almost everything. It was a big robotic experiment.

Lars was almost the father of the city, and he also called it his city. There was something in his eyes which could make you melt. He had the softest heart. Lars was obsessed by robotic mouths. He had a whole lot of mouths in an underground cave, and loved to work at them.

In the heart of the city's clock Lars had built a Cobra Eye, a sleep-inducing mechanism. The ceiling of the clock was made of Taroon stone, while the rest was made of Tantalos stone. After a few months Lars went into the desert again in his machine. Now he would go to Lamir, another city in the desert, where a prince lived. The prince wanted Lars to restore his clock as well. The prince of Lamir was a gentle man, also with a heart for puppetmakery. It was a city of robots. The prince wanted Lars to raise his army. Lars knew all about it. Within a few days the prince of Lamir had a perfect army, all robots.

Lars moved from desert-city to desert-city, all to help and share his knowledge. He was a prophet, and believed that the machines would take everything over. In a certain desert-city some bearded old men yelled at him : 'If you believe we need to become machines to survive the coming judgement, then who is God ? Also a machine ?'

'Yes, He is,' Lars said. 'and His angels also.'

'Well, I believe you are such a pathetic man,' one of the old bearded man said. 'I believe in the bottle.' And then he and his friends laughed. They looked like they were drunk. 'I can't believe you are a technician,' the old bearded man said. 'All this superstition about God and angels is just ….'

'A way to describe technology,' Lars said.

'Well, do you also believe in Mekmeth then ?' the old bearded man asked.

'Oh yes,' Lars said.

All the old men laughed again. 'Mekmeth is a zero,' the old bearded man said, while the others were almost applauding.

'Mekmeth is a soft man showing the way to eternal life,' Lars said.

Again the old men laughed. They started to mock Lars by making strange movements. ‘Mekmeth was a fool,’ the old man said, while his eyes were almost piercing Lars. ‘I don’t want to talk to you anymore,’ the old man said, and then they all left.

There were many statues of Mekmeth in the city, but there were many unbelievers as well. Mekmeth was a pirate of Taroon preaching about things like eternal poverty and eternal riches, and he was always talking about the python stone and the cobra eye as well. He said from himself that he came to give it freely. Many worshipped him as a saviour. Lars didn’t worship him, but he believed that there was some truth in what he was saying.

Mekmeth preached about the machines and robots who would take everything over, and Mekmethians often gave jobs to Lars for which they paid him greatly, so to Lars it was all fine. In a sense he was a great businessman.

Some said Mekmeth was a son of God. But Lars preferred to speak about Mekmeth in technological sense.

One day Mekmeth invited Lars to come to his place. That evening they had dinner together. Mekmeth was interested in the way Lars built clocks. Lars worked at Mekmeth’s clock till deep in the night. Lars got a beautiful room, a sort of attic at the top of Mekmeth’s apartment. The room was full of technology, and Mekmeth had told Lars he could use everything. Lars biggest interest were the equipments for spies. The walls had been made of cobra stones. Soon Lars fell asleep, but later he woke up by strange sounds. The walls were moving and came closer and closer to him. Lars tried to escape through the door, but the door had been locked. He finally escaped through a window.

It was after this day Lars changed his thoughts about Mekmeth, and started to warn against him. One day he visited the old bearded men again. He knew where they lived, and he told them that they were right. Mekmeth was a fool, and very dangerous. He also told them about his experience with the moving walls of cobra stone. ‘Come, I want to show you something,’ one of the bearded men said. They went downstairs and came into a certain cellar. ‘The cobra stone works together with the python stone to break you up,’ the man said. ‘It is a trap, and Mekmeth is making business with it. First he traps you, and then he would show up to save you, while you would follow him all your life. Well, I’m glad you escaped by yourself, boy.’

‘Here it is,’ another old man said. He opened a box in which rattlesnakes were coiling on bright jewels. ‘Rattlesnake eyes,’ he said. ‘But we have much more : Boa constrictors, anaconda’s, milksnakes, coral snakes, honey snakes, vipers, and many more.’

‘For what reason ?’ Lars asked. But from behind they grasped him, moved him through a door and threw them into a deep pit full of these snakes. ‘For getting rid of your cobra obsession,’ an old man roared. Then he went away and closed the door.

‘Don’t move, Lars,’ Lars said to himself. Upstairs he heard laughing. These guys were as bad as Mekmeth.

Snakes were sliding across his skin, eating from his clothes. ‘Oh, I’m dying here,’ Lars thought to himself. But the snakes seemed to be tame, and soon the old men opened the door again and took him out. ‘Yes, they are tame,’ they said. Lars didn’t feel comfortable anymore, but later on he could forgive them. It seemed to be a joke.

The old men seemed to be interested in biology, and soon his interest got raised. They were savages, worshipping nature. They didn’t believe in the machines, but in nature taking everything over. They believed that technicians would get demented finally and ending up nowhere. The men seemed to love animals, and most of the time they were busy taming them. They all did this in their underground area. They didn’t believe in vehicles moving them, but they used animals for it.

Lars felt himself like a kid. He could learn a lot of them. ‘If there is anything to save the universe,’ they said. ‘Orion. For Orion has the most exotic unknown species we need to get out of all the Mekmeth-crap. He has lulled you all to sleep.’

Lars bowed his head. ‘Is there a way to control the forces of the cobra stone ?’ he asked.

‘You mean Mekmeth ?’ they asked.

‘Yes, Mekmeth,’ Lars said. ‘How to get rid of this guy ?’

‘Well, Orion,’ they said.

Chapter 2. The Skeleton Stone

Lars wandered through the jungle for days and days. He knew a quick way to Orion. He wanted to go on discovery for awhile. The old men had given him a map. The Escurator Snake was a crab-snake with scissors. He needed to search for it. It would be the only way to control the cobra stone forces, and to finally get rid of Mekmeth. Lars now knew that Mekmeth was a huge threat to the desert-cities, also his own city, the red city.

Through a gate he went to the Betelgeuse planet. The Escurator Snake was dangerous for if you would see it, you would die. Lars could only watch it through a certain visor. He got it from the old men. It was just a sort of helmet with a certain chrystal in it. The chrystal was called the red time chrystal.

Alnilam was the planet where he needed to be, the center of Orion. He could reach it by a certain gate on Betelgeuse. On Alnilam there was a stronghold called Okil. Here there were a lot of escurator snakes, and without the red time chrystal he couldn't enter. Somewhere he saw a motorcycle. He took it and drove deeper inside the stronghold.

They attacked him, these escurator snakes, so he shot a few of them. They were very tall, and he hung them around his neck. When he had enough of them he drove back to the old men.

'Show me what we can do with this,' he said to the old men, while he dropped the dead bodies of the escurator snakes on a table.

'Oh, I will show you,' one of the old men said. The old man ripped the skins of the crab-snakes open, and they saw that it had been filled by many red time chrystals. 'You need many of these,' the man said.

'Listen,' the man said 'In the depths of Okil there is the main stronghold, Daakzil. You can only enter there, when you are totally covered by red time chrystals, or you will burn. In this stronghold the tallest and thinnest snakes live, the Trimdads. They guard the portal to the red time city. The Trimdads are the reversers of time. The La'ias are even taller and thinner snakes, extremely soft. You will find them in the red time city. They are the mixers of time, the confusers. The kaias are small, thin, erected and striped snakes, and are timeweavers. The oplos look like cobras, and are often red and can often fly. The nargras-snakes are tall, thin, and weak. They can stretch themselves and they look like worms. The dorpois are green, tall, flat and slimy. They often live in trees. The viksum-snakes are the tallest of them all They create chaos. The loipros are their kings, and they can take any form.'

'Only the abyss of red time can let you dominate the snakes forever, so that you won't die in one of their traps,' another of the old men said.

The older the loipros became the more they turned into flies, big flies, living in the depths of the abyss of red time. They seemed to spread powders of strange drunkenness. They could grow to great heights to rule the land. They had but one mission : to destroy the mind and it's powers. The ruler of these kings was Etzbil. He held the chip of their shapeshifting abilities. It was a green stick like a jewel. By the green stick he had access to the world below the abyss of red time : the troll world. It was in the depths of the planet Alnilam. This world was the secret of the loipros, guarding the green slime, the slime by which you could live forever. They either drank it and smeared it on their bodies. In this troll world of the core of the Alnilam planet there was a portal to another troll world, that of the core of the Bellatrix planet. Here the secrets of green time seemed to live. By green time everything could stretch out to become tall. By green time everything could move and stop, and move and stop. By green time everything could get grip again, and could let go.

The green time seemed to stream forth from a skeleton stone. Skeleton stones could come into existence in places of extra-ordinary draught and pressure, like in the depths of the planet Saiphe, and here in the core of the Bellatrix planet.

In the core of the Bellatrix planet there were three portals made of skeleton stones. One led to the core-world of the Saiphe planet. Another led to the core-world of the planet Tabit, and the third led to the core world of the planet Mintaka. These were all troll worlds. From the core-world of the planet Mintaka other planets could be reached in their cores, like Heka, Rigel, Betelgeuse and Alnitak.

The trolls worshipped the skeleton stones more or less, and they often called themselves the living skeleton stones. The trolls were human forms of the loipros, the royal snakes. All these highways of Orion seemed to lead deeper and deeper into the deserts, to an enormous gate called the Gate of White Time. It was in the depths of Saiphe, the desert planet. The Gate of White Time induced death. It was the Gate of Death. But at the same time it was the Gate of Decay. One could stare at an enormous sea from this place, and there was the hottest beach called the Grill of Orion. Behind the sea there was an enormous wilderness where the skeletons lived.

In the center of this wilderness there was the Gate of Orange Time, which was the Gate of Draught. Deeper in the wilderness there was the Gate of Brown Time. The skeletons here knew exactly what these gates meant, and worshipped these gates. By the Gate of Orange Time they could come alive.

One day Lars reached the Gate of Orange Time with his motorcycle. To him it was the place of victory. The skeletons feared his motorcycle with all it's guns. Lars climbed the enormous gate and put his throne and flag on top. From here he dived into a new world. When he jumped he stretched his arms to which sails had been attached by which he could fly. He was Lars the flyman now. There was no way to stop Lars. He came here for discovery and rulership. He could jump on the rays of the Gate of Brown Time and jumped from ray to ray upstairs to it's top. Here the Rainbow of Time fell on him. Lars loaded his time-gun by it's energy, and jumped further into the enormous wilderness beyond the gates of time.

Chapter 3. The Massacre

One day Lars returned to the old men having a lot of stories to tell. They were playing at draughts. They were doing it with skeletons stones. They also had a chessboard with pawns of small skeletons. 'Have you been through the Gate of Orange Time ?' one of the old men asked. Lars nodded. At the wall hung an orion draughtsboard, next to a picture of boxers. 'Those boxers are deaf,' another of the old men said.

'Deaf ?' Lars asked.

'Yes, deaf,' the old man said. 'Haven't you seen them ?'

'No,' Lars said. 'Where are they ?'

'Beyond the Gate of Blue Time,' the old man said. 'It's the Gate of Deafness.'

‘What is the use of it,’ Lars asked.

‘It’s the Gate of Ice,’ the old man said. ‘They are earhunters.’

‘For what reason ?’ Lars asked.

‘Well, it’s jewelry to them,’ the old man said. ‘They are pirates.’

‘Pirates ?’ Lars asked.

‘Yes, pirates,’ the old man said. ‘They are without care, they only live for themselves.’

‘That’s a deep death,’ Lars said.

‘Yes, it is,’ the old man said.

‘What do they do it for ?’ Lars asked.

‘For money,’ the old man said.

‘Money ?’ Lars asked.

‘Yes, money,’ the old man said. ‘They sell the ears to jewellers.’

‘Why ?’ Lars asked.

‘Money makes the world go round,’ the man said. ‘And only the rich ones of orion have the best armies. They are the matadors.’

‘Matadors ?’ Lars asked.

‘Yes, matadors,’ the old man said. ‘They live in Salvadat, in the depths of Saiphe, the desert planet. They are the generals of saiphe.’

‘Well, that is interesting,’ Lars said.

‘They have the best armories,’ the old man said. ‘All because they went through the Gate of Blue Time once.’

‘And how to get through the Gate of Blue Time ?’ Lars asked.

‘It doesn’t exist,’ the old man said. ‘It just means to beat the matadors of Salvadat.’

Lars returned to Saiphe. The old man had given him a map of Salvadat. In short time he found the house where the matadors lived. They all lived together like brothers. They worked in a circus. They were acrobats, clowns and matadors at the same time. They worked with lions and tigers, and also elephants. They trained horses as well. They were addicted to their work. They worked day and night. So these guys were the generals. They had one handicap : they were deaf. They were indeed the most richest guys of Saiphe. They actually didn’t have ears at all, but their long hair covered it. Under the house they had warships stored, where several underground rivers crossed. When they started to act mean Lars just took his gun and shot them.

Lars cut off their heads by his knife and took them to the old bearded men. He returned on his motorcycle. ‘Circus is over,’ Lars said. Then they sent Lars to the depths of Bellatrix again, to beat more matadors. Lars just used his guns, and soon the whole of orion became afraid of him. They started to fear him almost like nothing else. ‘If you think you act mean, meet my gun, and I’ll show you who is mean,’ Lars said. He more and more became like a cowboy. He plundered all the royal houses of matadors on Orion. All by the maps he got from the old bearded men.

'You're ice,' one of the old men said. 'You have style.' It was just Lars and his gun, against all the matadors of orion. No tricks, no complexed strategies, just a good gun. Some matadors were also cowboys. No problem to Lars. He gunned them all down. It was a massacre in Orion in the highest bloodlines. Some matadors were also indians. They would end in hell. For Lars had come to town. He took the advice from the old bearded men that he needed less technology and more beer. The mind had been overrated.

The matador of Hordulf was half a horse, half a man, a centaur. He seemed to be the boss of all the matadors. He was a sorcerer, and when he got a hold on Lars, he caged him. It was the most horrible trap. Lars would pay for what he had done to the matadors. Day and night Lars got tortured by the meanest devices. The old bearded men started to become worried because Lars didn't return. This was the reason they came to Orion themselves, and when they found Lars in such a horrible position they made mince of the matador of Hordulf. The old bearded men could fight like no one else. They slammed the centaur against the wall, while the wall became red of the blood. Finally the old bearded men bit his heart out of his chest and began to eat it.

Together with Lars they visited the other matador-bosses. This time the old men used their guns. They showed their licenses. They seemed to be old policemen of the early days of Orion. They decided to stay on Orion and chose the best house of the matador-bosses. In the underground they had enough cages to put the matador-bosses in. These bosses would wait here for their death-penalties. It took the old bearded policemen a few months to get rid of all the matador-bosses, and at the end of their mission they also licensed Lars for his courage.

The End

The Demonslayer - Barbarian Fiction

The Wolf Throne

I was wandering in the depths of Mars, beyond Tartarus, reaching for a city called Jericho, in the depths of the deserts. The gates were massive gold, huge stones. I lost my senses when I entered. I fell on the ground, trying to get breath, for there was dust all around me, trying to strengle me.

They threw me into a pit. I didn't know why. Maybe they didn't like wanderers. The pit was full of snakes, rats and other creatures, but I found a pipeline somewhere and could escape, deeper into Mars.

I had lost all my hope. I felt weak, sick, tired. I wouldn't be able to face another enemy. I needed some rest. I wanted to reach the ultimate oasis of Mars. There was so much dust here, so much dirt. I was covered by mud. My hair was wet by the sweat and the moisty atmosphere. I loved Mars. I had fallen in love with Mars, but everything here was strengling me.

There were big snakes sliding here, with orange stripes. They were ignoring me. They were sliding through some sort of gate in the distance. I went there, and saw sweaty snakes all together, dining on some food. There was a strange smell, everywhere there was slime and dust. I slided into another hole, and this time I came really deep. I could breath here a bit.

I saw them sitting at a table, dark lords, and a lady with a lot of spotted dogs at her side. I held my breath, hiding myself very well. I could see they were playing a game. They had cards in their hands, and threw the dice. They were having fun. I heard them saying they were the lords of Mars. In the corners of the place they were there were black guards like cyborgs, like knights. They had strange capes. I took my sword from behind my back, then jumped forward and slew them all. It was a massacre.

Covered by blood I went through a door and found a cellar with the bottles of life. They also called them the smiles of death. I drank from them and became drunk.

A woman found me later. She brought me upstairs into a sort of castle. I didn't know if she was my enemy or friend. She showed me her room, and the rest of the castle. When I told her I had slain the dark lords of Mars she was shocked.

'I found you in the cellar,' she said. 'I thought you were a wanderer in need of food and help, but you are a murderer ?'

I said I was. I was a demonslayer.

'Oh, a demonslayer,' she said. 'Well, that is alright. Our place has been visited by demons many times, so we need that.'

I nodded. I could smell the difference between demons and real ones, but I wasn't sure about the woman.

'Tell me about yourself,' I asked.

Well, the woman seemed to be okay after she told her story. She was very friendly to me, and hoped I would stay in the castle. She also hoped I would guard the castle against demons.

‘What is your name ?’ she asked.

‘Demonslayer,’ I said. ‘That was the name my parents gave me.’

‘Do they still live ?’ she asked.

‘No, they have been killed by demons,’ I said.

‘I’m sorry,’ she said. ‘My parents have been killed too, by demons. I live here alone.’

‘What is your name ?’ I asked.

‘Monica,’ she said.

I stayed there for a few weeks, but then I went for a demonhunt. Monica described to me who the demons were who had killed her parents. They seemed to live in a mountain.

I had a fight there for days. The demons weren’t hard to kill. It was quite easy, and when I had finished my job I decided to live where they lived. I could use all these weapons and machineries. But after awhile I felt the need to travel further. I was a wanderer of heart. The atmosphere was strengling me. I wandered through a desert and again I came to the city Jericho. I had moved in a circle. This time I was armed better. I went into the city and slew the heads of the city, the chiefs. The rest obeyed me since then. I had never seen such a submissive army before. They feared me. Monica had given me a necklace of a flat mysterious skeletonhead, a skull. I took the best house in Jericho. I only stayed there for a short while. Then I moved on. But to my surprise the inhabitants of Jericho followed me. They wanted to stay with me. They seemed to be safe with me.

‘Guide me through the desert,’ I said.

One of them said : ‘I know the road to Demon City. Let’s go there and take the city.’

I said alright. It wasn’t a big deal. Our army was big enough to invade the city. ‘Wanderer, take your crown,’ someone said when I had slew many demons of the city. He led me to a throne made of strange dark bones. ‘It’s the wolf throne,’ they said. ‘The throne of the wanderer.’

I sat down and felt my heart connecting to my head. It was a city after my heart. The smaller demons we didn’t slay, only the big ones, the leaders. The small demons just obeyed their leaders, whoever they were. They were pretty harmless. As soon as I sat on the throne they took orders from me. I realized it was all about the throne. They obeyed the throne, no matter who sat on it. In that sense they looked a lot like the inhabitants of Jericho. They were fetish people. They served objects instead of people. As long as I had the throne and the crown, all was fine with them.

I was the one making Demon City big. I didn’t have problems with the fetish ones. They were okay. Demon City was a city after my heart. But the more I sat on the Wolf Throne the more I began to have problems. I became more tired than ever, weaker, and sickness became my robe. I could hardly move, to the moment I began to realize that I was about to become one with the Wolf Throne. It was devouring me. I had become a plant, doomed to become old, and to be a part of the Wolf Throne. Now I realized from who these dark old bones of the Wolf Throne were. They were of the old kings who had sat on this chair before. When I realized this it was already too late to escape. I saw dark hands coming out of the chair grasping me tightly, holding me like chains, and I saw dark teeth appear. I became bony, and my skincolour became darker. I started to look more and more like the chair itself. Finally Monica saved me. I didn’t know how she did it. I had almost lost consciousness. All I knew was she took me to her castle again, while the inhabitants of Jericho and those of Demon City followed her. ‘Who are they ?’ she asked.

‘Oh, my guards,’ I said.

‘But look where it led you,’ she said. ‘It almost killed you.’

I was like a tree. I couldn’t move. I looked like the throne. I was like an object, and that was why the fetish people were still following me. ‘I have teached them how to fight against demons,’ I said.

‘Well, it almost killed you,’ she said. ‘It’s a demon throne you sat on.’

‘It was my biggest wrestling,’ I said. ‘How did you save me from it ?’ I asked.

‘Remember the amulet I gave you ?’ she said. ‘The flat skeletonhead, attached to the necklace. I have a same amulet, and it showed me you were in troubles. It showed me the way, and by bringing the two amulets together I could get you out of it’s grip.’

She showed me her amulet, also a necklace. ‘Both amulets were from my parents,’ Monica said.

‘Well, you have been my guardian angel,’ I said to Monica.

That night the forces of the Wolf Throne were raging. When I woke up I found out that Monica was dead. There was still a curse on my head. I decided to wander again. But the fetish ones still followed me.

I came into a dark jungle where a sorcerer lived. I told him what had happened. ‘The Wolf Throne ?’ he said. ‘Yes, it eats everyone who has a hunger for might and power, and they become a part of the throne forever. You were lucky. You could escape by a woman you once helped, but she paid for it by her death. These watchers of the Wolf Throne are following you, wanting you to feed them, and if you won’t, they will feed on you.’

‘How to get rid of the curse,’ I asked.

‘The only way to come free of it is to go the Dark Path,’ the sorcerer said.

The sorcerer brought me to a hidden portal deeper in the dark jungle. I came on a dark path, and the fetish ones were still following me, but one by one they went back, until only a small group still remained. I came to a snake throne finally. A woman sat on the throne, while snakes slided all around her. She grasped me like a snake would grasp someone, and a wrestling started. She took me to her throne, which was a very hot place, almost burning, and we started to burn more and more. The other fetish ones began to leave as well. The woman started to shriek in certain strange tones, and all of a sudden dogs came from all sides, biting me. I could kick the dogs away, but they came back and became meaner and meaner, wilder and wilder. It was a nightmare. I was bleeding all over. The throne was burning.

Then the sorcerer came. ‘Blood is what they want,’ he said. ‘And when they have it, you burn.’

‘Why aren’t you helping me,’ I asked. I was in strange flames. The sorcerer came closer and closer, and finally it was like some cool water was streaming across my skin. He grasped me, while the woman fell away. But the fire was still there. ‘How do I get rid of the flames ?’ I yelled.

‘Go back to the Wolf Throne. You have now reached immunity. The Wolf Throne won’t have power over you, and I will deal with the woman here,’ he said.

I did what he said and stumbled my way back, until I reached Demon City again, and raised myself on the throne. It was true. It couldn’t grasp me anymore, and I ripped the throne apart. After a few days I went back to the snake throne where the sorcerer was still in a fight against the woman. ‘Rise on the throne,’ the sorcerer shouted. But I knew what to do. I ripped this throne apart as well, but it rose again after I did it. ‘The Wolf Throne will also rise again,’ the sorcerer said. ‘It is an eternal throne. It can’t be destroyed. Just rise on this throne now.’

I did what he said, and the woman died. The snakes seemed to obey me now.

‘These thrones will stay forever,’ the sorcerer said. ‘And happy are those who know both thrones. Those who know only one will die.’

I had felt the forces of both thrones, and I knew what they could do. I felt locked up between these two thrones for a long time, but finally I got used to it. I needed them both, and I needed their armies. And of course I was very grateful I once met this sorcerer and of course Monica.

Abarsa

The Eye of Medusa

The mysteries of Mars lie in the fact that the planets of Orion form the core of Mars : Betelgeuse the ultimate core, the first layer, Alnilam, the center of Orion, is the second layer, Alnitak the third layer, Mintaka the fourth, Saiphe the fifth and Bellatrix the sixth. These were nothing but the structures of Tartarus where Abarsa the fighter king ruled. He had there his harem, trophees he won in gladiator tournaments. By these women he ruled the world, as they were his weapons. One of his most feared weapon was the Python Scythe. This one actually crowned him as the ultimate king of Tartarus. His rule was one of pestilence and disease, as he wanted to keep them all weak under his empire, and he feared his own army, as there was much betrayal. He remembered his younger days in which he fought for women. It would give him strength and power. He also remembered how these women dispised him because of his power and his survival, as they were often not glad to be a trophee. He used to sell them on the slave markets in exchange for wellwilling slaves. By this he built his own empire, and once took over Tartarus completely. It was hell that day.

They also called him the killer king. By the Python Scythe he once won he could hypnotize an army. He became feared as the man with the strict death penalties, all by his new legal system. He introduced it. It was called hell. The Python Scythe was in this the all-seeing monitor, monitoring everything. And when certain laws were broken, it caused immediate death. It was a new order, a black scythe on a red flag.

Abarsa throned in Betelgeuse, the ultimate core of Mars, of Tartarus, together with his two black wolves Veron and Teron. The Python Scyth was holding the mystery of Mars and Abarsa was guarding it. He was the one who re-opened the mystery, having the keys to the core levels, as he once formed them, and in fact he was the keys. He was a Medusa Warrior, holding her eye, as he was the eye himself.

Many would fall for his Python Scythe, and those who did not risked to be struck by sudden death. The Python Scythe demanded total devotion. Medusa herself was a sense of death. He wanted to raise her. She lived inside of him as an enigma. She could only be approached by a mediator, but both the mediator and the user of the mediator would die. Abarsa knew about this, but he knew also that there was no other option. He approached her by the Python Scythe, which caught a glimpse of her, and was immediately melting. Abarsa ran away but was grasped by a fire. Hours of torment followed, in which he was losing everything. His skin was burning.

'Why have you approached me !' Medusa shouted. 'Why have you woken me !'

'As I want to recreate Mars,' Abarsa said.

'Well, you are dying for it,' Medusa spoke.

'I know,' Abarsa said.

'And I will take everything away from you,' Medusa said.

'As long as Mars will be recreated,' said Abarsa.

'Oh, I will,' Medusa spoke, 'I will.'

Soon Abarsa was surrounded by copper soldiers, who stang him by their spears.

'Give him the poison !' Medusa yelled.

An old man came forward with a cup. Abarsa became like drunk and had to drink. Then he fell down. 'Now take his powers !' Medusa said to the old man.

'He will be my armory,' Medusa spoke. 'He is my eye, he is my mask.' Then she threw his dead body in a kettle, and soon she covered herself with it's sauce. 'The queen of the universe I am.'

She took the lifeless body of Abarsa and kissed him. 'And you will be my king,' she said. She blew life into him. 'I rule over death and life,' she spoke. Then she raised the Python Scyth and gave it to him.

The Shadow of the Dragon

Betelgeusian Fiction

The pillars in the dragonian castle-temple were high and thick. A little boy stood there ... Although he was very young he was already a gladiator in the arena of the castle-temple ... This was the sole purpose why they were raising children, that they would be warriors ... They already teached them cruel things at young age, the youngest possible.

Dormaki, an old man, a sage, was against this, but what could he do against this tight traditional system. They knew it, and once they invaded his cave, and hanged him.

The women were the rulers here, and their ways were cruel to those who dared to oppose their system, and those who dared to question them.

The boy stood there close to the pillar. It was hot. There was no escape possible for this child. These pillars holding the castle-temple were adorned with cruelty. There was a dark secret in the temple, the ring of the sirens, keeping them all enslaved.

The dark priest who had this ring in his heart had wings of fire. The child could not get away from the pillar, as the child was bound to it in the spirit of the child. The children's cry filled the air. Behind the temple there were monkeys in lava, gorillas. They moved slowly. They knew the dark secret of the temple. They had seen the dragons falling to this place, so long ago.

No one would sing songs anymore since that day, except the sirens. They bound hearts and made the children cry by causing fear. They were the shadows of the dragons.

Seroph

The Treasure

Moryana, princess of wolves, hidden in a coffin of light, in the depths of a mysterious castle. Only Seroph could reach her there, after a long battle against wolves. He reached the chainlet of wolf teeth, and could open the door hiding her secret chamber. It was a chamber of light. Seroph kissed her softly on her precious lips, and it was like a spell was touching her. She rose up, in her dress of butterflies, and they all flew away turning into bats.

Slowly she walked to the bridge behind her chamber. No one had ever been here before. She could only stare at it when she was a child, through the tall windows. Now she was here, with Seroph. It was the Coyote Bridge leading them to the Cat City. A spell had been released. There was an assignment of peace between the cats and the dogs. The princess stared at Seroph. ‘You, you have awakened me,’ she spoke softly. Then she went into the Cat City.

In Cat City a witch throned. She had tied her men of food, evergrowing flesh, all for the cats. She sat on a high throne, while Moryana was approaching her.

‘There she comes,’ the witch spoke. ‘Moryana, princess of wolves, finally awoken.’

Suddenly white snakes were surrounding Moryana. ‘You have been awoken from death,’ the witch spoke, ‘but what if I send you to hell now.’

The snakes dragged Moryana into the depths of an abyss. She was still weak, but she was awakening, and the flames of hell could not stop her from it. White snakes covered her brown body. Soon Seroph was with her. ‘I will never let you go,’ he said. She watched his chainlet of wolf teeth. He gave it to her, while the snakes were melting away. ‘Wake up out of the illusion,’ Seroph spoke softly but persistent. His words were like echoing in her.

‘I feel so weak,’ she said. She was sleepy.

‘Come with me,’ Seroph said. He took her by the hand.

‘Where are we going ?’ Moryana asked.

‘Not here,’ Seroph said. He led her to White Snake City, where an eye was spinning in the middle. It was like a mill. There were priests around the eye, sacrificing the men of food with their evergrowing flesh. ‘The secret of hell’s illusion,’ said Seroph softly.

‘I do not understand,’ Moryana spoke.

‘It is okay,’ Seroph said.

Moryana woke up in her coffin. She stood up, took a sword from the wall, and walked to a table. It was an oracle. She made it spin, and watched the white snake eye in the middle of the table. ‘Exactly, I dreamt of the past,’ she said. ‘The white snake eye is mine.’ The skeleton of Seroph hung somewhere at the wall. She remembered how he died, how he sacrificed his life for her. The ashes of the witch of Cat City she had somewhere in an urn. The men of food were hers now. She let them march on the walls of her mysterious castle. They were her guards. She had teached them how to fight and how to do magic. She had saved them from everlasting hell. They adored the princess of wolves, their princess. They treasured her.

Pythia’s End

Pythian Fiction

Long, long ago, when Venus and Mars were one as one big planet named Pythia. A lonesome warrior was walking through the snow with his boots made by bearskin. It was a time so deep in history that not many know of it’s contends. But I, dear reader, have the privilege to tell you about this incredible age, in which Mars and Venus weren’t split yet. How did this age end ? It was the day when Pythia got torn into pieces. It was the end of a precious but barbarous age, the Pythian Age. Pythia was the center of the universe, a planet with a strange light, but hiding so much darkness. It was the biggest planet existing, and all the other planets could only move along. Some called it the black planet, because of it’s darkness. Even the sun didn’t have such a central position as the black planet.

The lonesome warrior was on his way to an old friend of him : Tara from Rhodes. Golem knocked on the huge door of the castle he was confronting. A lady in a tall dress opened the door. It was very cold, and the wind struck her immediately. This was not Tara from Rhodes. Tara would never dress herself like that. ‘Where do you hide her ?’ Golem screamed. The girl bowed her head. ‘Follow me,’ she said softly. She had seen the sword Golem was bearing, and she knew she couldn’t begin anything against it. ‘I wonder what your name is, warrior,’ the girl said. ‘I am Golem,’ Golem said. ‘Now show me where you hide Tara.’ The girl led him downstairs along old stairways with golden and leather frames and pillars, all marble deep inside. Golem could smell death, and soon they were close to the dungeons where Tara was, deep under the cellars. ‘Tara,’ Golem shouted. Tara jumped on Golem like a wild animal. ‘Who are you,’ she shouted. Golem caressed her hair. ‘It’s me, Golem. I’m here to set you free,’ Golem said. ‘Show me the tattoo,’ Tara screamed. Golem tore a piece of his robe away and showed her the black-red tattoo on his shoulder. ‘Yes, it’s you,’ Tara said. By his sword Golem cut the chains, and took her in his arms. The girl was staring at them. ‘You bastards,’ Tara said to the girl, ‘for how many years did you lock me up ?’

The captors of Tara were the civilized order of the black planet. They had caught her and tortured her severely. They were called the Sjarun. They used black people as their slaves. But Tara was free now, by the sword of Golem, and he brought her to a secret place deep underground. Here a lot of others seemed to live who had been freed by Golem.

In short time Golem could raise an army against the Sjarun, and Tara would battle at his side. Oh how their swords loved to rip the skins of these bastards apart. The Sjarun had been the biggest threat of the planet for such a long time. Tara got pregnant and gave birth to her son Barkas. It was by the skills of Barkas they could rebuild Pythia.

But the Sjarun struck back, and this time it caused the fall and split of Pythia. One piece became Mars, and another piece Venus. It was the end of the Age of Pythia.

The End

Land of the Hypocrits

Martian Fiction

There was once a society in the Martian deserts, where a man's tribe had enslaved women. There was not the usual idea of marriage, but all these wives had been enslaved. In the desert a man spoke to his wife, she was enslaved. He spoke softly to her, and she reacted. Outside these regions she would die. Her husband protected her, but it was a dirty deal. She had mixed feelings about it, and the man also. It was kind of a necessity, as it was always on Mars with slavery : It was a way of survival. Women were too free and impulsive of nature, and would easily bring themselves and others in troubles by not serving their responsibilities, and forsaking care. This was what the men were aware of. Oh yes, they gave them great power, as there was a tight base of matriarchy. Under the umbrella of the male they could develop themselves. Free women were a curse, and they often suffered under bad circumstances, dying young. So the men invaded many bases of women, to enslave them to higher purposes. The men had predators for that, charged by an unknown source. For a woman it was almost the highest good to bow at the feet of such a man. And the guiding predators would take care that the women would not make compromises. It was a total slavery. This was what they demanded.

Males not woken up to this lived often a miserable life. They could not defend themselves, and they often seemed to get lost in tragic poverty. It was for a man essential to wake up to this reality. The devices of such female slavery were in the hands of Debrichiar, a monster tiger. He teached the men of Mars that grotesque was a weakness in their system, and that it could be fatal to the devices, so the monster held a tight discipline over the heads of the men. If a woman could make a man muscular by her devices, then the man would lose his power to her, and he would become like clay in her hands. The muscle men formed a big threat against the plans of the monster. And it would threaten the surfaces of Mars. This was why the monster once sent out a swarm of fire wasps, to sting the muscles of men. A few leaks in the body of the man would be enough, if not then Mars would turn into a disaster.

In the depths of the deserts there were fire lakes, by which men could get ready for the devices of the monster. It was the task of the fire wasps to bring them to these. Young boys always shrieked when the fire wasps brought them to the fire lakes where they had to begin their long journey, but it was to save them. The fire wasps would guide them and guard them. The fire lakes finally led to the great Ocean of Fire in the center of the desert, where they would receive the final mark, the mark to wake them up. This fire would kill the spirit of grotesque totally. It would awaken the savage part of the man. It was a great evil there, as the secret of the sea. It gave them access to desert island, in the center of the sea.

A man in the desert tried to talk to his wife. She reacted. She had been dead for a long time. He could finally reach her, and she reacted to his quiet voice. Visions were spinning in her head, of the love of her man, and she felt loved for the first time in her life, and she could love him. He took her hands and she felt the warmth for the first time in her life. Her hand reacted to it. She was drowning in his love, and in the distance she saw the fortress. 'No, not the fortress,' she said. But inside she liked it, and finally she gave herself over to the feeling. They were one now, for the first time of their lives. The steel on his body was hot, and the steel of his carriage pulled forth by predators. Her feet were burning on it, but it didn't hurt her, it woke her up. She watched the jewelry of her husband, and kissed it.

She drew him to their tent, she put him to sleep, while his predators were waking over him. She went outside of the tent to do some laundry. Everything was hot. Soon it was like the tent was exploding. There was fire everywhere. She grasped his body, and kissed him, and he held her tight. 'Close your eyes and dream,' he said. 'We're only bringing forth evil spirits in this land of the hypocrits.'

The Invaders

Martian Fiction

In the depths of the wilderness the snakes ruled, together with the Lord of the snakes. He was once chased away to the wilderness by his partner, princess Sheleila, princess of the serpents. She first wanted to kill him, but later she had some mercy on him, and banned him to the wilderness. Her reasons were unknown. The Lord of the snakes grieved very much about this, but all the snakes of the wilderness were at his side. The royal serpents were on the side of princess Sheleila, their princess. In the wilderness he met someone else, a savage girl. She led him to the desert where he found a new life. In a desert fortress complex he was welcomed very warmly. New blood was moving through his veins, new life.

The queen of Horr was ruling in the deserts, she was the queen of dogs. She had built here an empire of slavery. She was the mistress of death. The secret of her power was the dog stone she once found in the ocean behind the deserts. It made her such a high rule on Mars. The stone was like tall rough scarlet chrystal, like a thick vein. A snake guarded the stone. The men here were all but grotesque, they were tall and slim, having belts with tall aprons. The wings of death were her watchers, they looked like birds made of just one wing.

She heard the story about what princess Sheleila did to her guest. She offered him a living here. It was for the Lord of Snakes five years of slavery here, and then she dumped him too. The Lord of Snakes returned to the wilderness again, in wrath. He wanted to build his own empire now, and he wanted revenge. He didn't understand why women could be so. But both the princess and the queen had too much power. He couldn't begin anything against them. One day in a cave he found an old man with a lot of wisdom. The old man had the wrath of the gods in his eyes, but on the other side he said to the Lord of the Snakes that he had to humble himself before the women. First the Lord of the Snakes went to the princess of serpents to beg for her mercy, together with the old man. He had humbled himself, and wanted to bring it to a deeper level. The princess was surprised. She always feared his male powers, but now she saw he was somewhat broken.

'Bring me the head of the queen of Horr,' she spoke, 'and I will let you in.'

'Her powers are too huge,' he said.

'Then I will let you die at the front of my gates,' the princess said, and left.

Together with the old man he went to the queen of Horr to humble himself. She didn't want to talk to him at first, but later she sent a wing of death to him, who tortured him and the old man very badly.

'What is the reason of this,' the Lord of the Snakes screamed.

‘The reason is unknown,’ the wing of death said. ‘It is the will of the queen.’

‘She tries to break my brains,’ the Lord of the Snakes screamed.

‘She fears the male brain,’ the wing of death said.

‘So is there life after the torture and death she inflicts on me ?’ the Lord of the Snakes asked.

The Lord of the snakes decided to take a raft to leave on the ocean. He came to a strange island, everything was very hot here, a burning atmosphere. A savage woman came to him and the old man to welcome them. ‘You come from far, strangers, I can see,’ she said. She took them to her hut, where she made them a meal. ‘You must be hungry,’ she said.

The Lord of the Snakes told her how he was dumped by two royal women, losing his life more or less. ‘Oh yes,’ the woman said, ‘I know the royals. If they can find some better slaves, they dump the old ones.’

‘Do you miss them ?’ the woman asked.

‘Yes,’ the Lord of the Snakes said, ‘for they have my heart. I lost my life to them.’

‘Good,’ the woman said.

‘Good ?’

‘Yes,’ the woman said, ‘losing your grotesque male power and your male brain is essential.’

‘What sort of brain do I suppose to have ?’ he asked.

‘A chicken brain,’ she said.

The old man nodded.

‘How do I get that ?’ the Lord of the Snakes asked.

‘Go to the beach and wait for her,’ she said.

‘Wait for who ?’ he asked.

‘The queen of the flames,’ she said. ‘She can give it to you.’

‘How ?’ he asked.

‘By letting her invade you,’ she said.

The Justice

Machine

Martian Fiction

A martian prince rode with the princess of hyenas, in a hot spot of Mars called the Sun of Mars. She was older than him, kind of his mother. But they had a relationship, and ruled the Sun of Mars. His muscles had been stung by strange pins, and bound by stripes, so that his male power would not become like a wild river which couldn't be quenched anymore. She did this to him, she had tortured him, as she was afraid of his male pride.

But he could understand her, and he loved her. They were together for many years. Once they had a fight, in which she won. But he had lovingly submitted himself to her. She took care of him, and was his guard, but she could also rip him apart, and that was why he feared her.

When she would get angry, her nipples would grow big, and they would start to spit fire. These things could cause desasters on Mars. Whenever a muscle would grow on a man, an alarm went on, and the muscle had to be pierced, so that the male mind would not take control, for that was which she feared. Men lived in great fear because of her, the muscle alarms were horrible and traumatic. She had bought herself a justice machine long ago, with many switches and lamps. She was against the male mind, and wanted to plant her matriarchy. She bred special stuff in her garden, for once she would invade the whole of Mars to rule, together with her hyenas. She had the hyena gnosis in her heart demanding that all the bones of the males would be pierced and lead them to paralysis, so that she could raise them as slaves from there. She would grant them power, and she would grant them weakness, whenever she wished, and wherever. They would become her zombies in which the hyena mind would take place, and in which the male mind would die. She was of course a zombificator with her justice machine. The hynena mind would take over, to let these men bow at her feet. It was of course her fantasy, that wherever there was a male chest a female breast would rise instead. But not much did she know of the depths of this hyena gnosis, which would also turn against herself. The prize of such a machine was high. She was just a doll in the eyes of hyenas, a spoilt princess, wanting to have everything her way. They would give it to her, but then she would have to pay the prize. She would become their trophee.

By sweetness they invited her in, waiting to put her jaws in her, when she would be deep enough, to the point of no return. They were intelligent and complicated, while she wanted it the simple way, fast. She did not know much about the gnosis of hyenas living inside of her. She was just a princess.

Queen of Hyenas

Martian Fiction

She was safe with her husband in the royal cabin. Outside martian hyenas were tearing a swine up. And after that they went for a wounded bison. They left enough meat for the queen. She came outside with a spear or they would attack her as well. She dragged the meat into the royal cabin and fed her husband. No one would understand what they went through. The bison was still half living. The black queen was on her horse, armed with arrows. When she stepped from her horse her feet got red of the blood. She was from the south, and went into the cabin as well. Soon it turned into a fight. Shamia took her knife and slew the black queen.

Her husband couldn't move. He was still in a shock. He always feared the black queen, but she was dead now. His wife embraced him. 'You must eat,' she spoke. Hyenas surrounded the royal cabin. They had smelled the blood. Shamia took the body of the dead queen and threw it outside. Of course she would be hyena food now, and she deserved it. She had tortured her husband for so long. 'You are safe with me,' she whispered to her husband. He was fragile.

'I can't believe she is dead,' he said. 'I had to drink poison from her cup. I still feel so weak.'

'Here, drink some swine blood,' Shamia said, and held a cup to his lips. 'It is to heal you.' After that she gave him bison blood. Was this the woman who breastfed hyenas, and why were they against her ? They were still savage. They loved and hated their mother. They would tear her up if they would see her, but they still sacrificed great pieces of their prey to her. The blood was warm, and it made him shiver. Now the black queen of the south was dead, the Tartars could invade her territorium. There would be a new queen of hyenas now. Shamia, once rejected by them, was a perfect candidate for it. She would now become the alpha-female after so many years of bitter rejection. Her husband was proud of her. The territorium of the Tartars grew since that day. The hyenas accepted their new queen and licked her.

The Red Snake

Venusian Fiction

There was no place for me on the smoking surfaces of Venus, as I didn’t have any Venusian money. I became a beggar in front of their gates. If a friendly Venusian man didn’t have mercy on me I would never be able to enter the town. It was floating through the sky as in a vision, but yet so sensuous, full of stamina, and it was materializing in front of me. It was saving me out of a fire I couldn’t control, when the man gave me ninehundred Stawrakka, the Venusian money. With this I could help myself a bit, and I got accepted into their community. For a few Stawrakka I could rent a house for at least a month, I could get myself some food and some clothes, but also weapons, as the spheres were very dangerous. I needed to find a job very soon, or I had to steal money and stuff to make myself a good living. I went to the first fighter’s house in the neighbourhood, which was an arena ... They told me it was the best to become a gladiator to get a lot of money, and to survive here. I would get a lot of friends, and protection of the army. Within a few I had enough money to buy myself some predators. These predators could bring me anywhere, and they could protect me against unknown harm. I needed to become a good fighter, to get lots of money, so that I could buy my own house here instead of always paying rent. I was very successfull, as I had a good trainer. I had some skills from myself, but this man helped me a great deal. You could say that in these times I became a rich man, and I liked my work very much. Because I was such a good and skilled gladiator I also started to work in the army, which was a bit more dangerous. One day I checked the magazine for better jobs. I wanted to work my way higher on Venus. I quickly found out that many jobs you could only get after a big deal of study, so I started to study. I studied awhile in how to construct Venusian buildings and spaceships, but after awhile I found a better deal. I wanted to work with the beasts underground, in the depths below the city. I needed to study how I could tame these, and how I could use them. There were so many species I didn't know anything about, so I first had to read a lot of books about them. It was an expensive study, which took a lot of Stawrakka, but because I worked well in the arena I could afford it. One day they took me downstairs and showed the beasts to me. It was awsome. The more I had studied, the more I could work with them, but sometimes I just had to go back to the arena to earn some more money. If I would get the job finally I would be one of the richest guys on Venus. One day we would go to a deeper place where unknown beasts were living which no one could ever tame. It was a challenge to the students to tame these ones, and to get more information about them, as the books didn't tell much about them. Here also the wild tribes lived, the savages of Venus, and it seemed they knew a lot more about it, but the civilized Venusians didn't have any contact with them. It was a challenge to me to try to communicate with those. Soon I found out that these ones didn't belief in money, but in blood .... The spoiling of blood was a great part in their daily ritual, but I was on my guard. I knew that if I wouldn't donate blood to them they wouldn't want to give me further initiation, so I took some blood from my finger, and gave it to them. It was by this that I became one of them.

They told me about the beasts and about the ways how to tame them. It seemed they could ride the beasts and use them for all sorts of heavy work, and also in warfare. There were many dark tribes here in the depths of the city. They had many skills I didn't even know about and they were almost immune against fire and many other things. They showed me the way to secret cities, and these cities had their own money-systems. It seemed it wasn't the end of my journey but just the beginning. It was in one of these cities I finally found a spaceship to leave Venus forever. I wanted to go back to where I came from. I needed to escape from this universe to get into another one. I knew where I had to go then. I first had to beat the mastermind of this universe, a skeleton. He lived in a huge temple on the edge of the universe. He was the master of death and hell, named Etrictor. If I would beat him I would take his skeleton as my armor, and I would take his spear and sword to be able to come into the other universe. It was an easy job.

In the other universe they used other sort of money, so I worked my way higher and higher. It was like they knew me, and it was true, as I came from this universe. It didn't take long before I found my planet : Haddarsch. It was like my mind was frozen. So many things here moved much slower, and other things faster. I needed to get used to a total new atmosphere, although this was the place where I was coming from. Once I had been kidnapped to the other universe by the dogs of Etrictor ..... skeletondogs ..... My sword was sharper than any sword, tall and thin. Sometimes it was like flames were coming from the sword. I was glad I had come home, but I didn't care about it's riches .... I thought a lot about the savages on Venus, how they lived by blood, and not by money .... The wild live attracted me, and so one day I decided to go to the underground of Haddarsch ..... I was on my guard, but I wanted to see the beasts and the savages, and I wanted to live like them ..... I knew that they would only talk if I would give them some of my blood, so I did, and this time I cut a piece in my arm, and that was the sign they could accept me. Since then things started to get very fast, and I worked my way to their tops. They offered me a new sword, and they made a gladiator of me in their spheres. I also became a rider of their beasts, and a warlord. I learned about their rules, their laws and wisdom, and soon they showed me the treasures of Haddarsch. When I became king here they showed me their secret moneysystems based on the teeth of beasts. I had to study for a long time how these things worked. It was a difficult system of economy.

In these days I met the red snake, a creature who seemed to produce the highest money system of the underground of Haddarsch. Once in the month all his teeth fell out to be replaced by others. He gave me hairy clothes, and a chestplate like a shield, having such a wonderful stone. It began to sing, and sang :

All those of the red snake,

Follow me, or I'll break,

There's tension on me,

Don't be fake, but real

All those of the red snake,

Follow me,

There's power on me,

Power to ride the winds and the seven seas

The End

Eve of Evil - Evil Fiction

The Evil Jungle

It was a long way to the Westside of Eeden, through so many evil jungles and even through the gates and deserts of hell, burning so loud by all those shrieks and screams of the damned. Eve of Evil showed she ruled this place, and by her sword and spear she made a way. She had slain Adam because he came from the path of East. Eve of Evil would never give her heart to someone from the East. She wouldn't give her heart at all. She was a lady of wicked thoughts and in this all sort of heart-giving wouldn't fit. She had to protect her heart against the dangers lurking around her. When she showed up to be good, it would always turn out to be evil. Here in the Evil Jungle there was a passage to the Westside of Eeden. The Eastside was the good world, where Adam came from. He was a hypocrite in her eyes. The Westside was the evil world to which she belonged. She had slain Adam by a spear encircled by a snake, but she didn't know that his ghost was still looking for her. In the depths of the Evil Jungle the trees and bushes would grow so wicked, and they were often full of snakes. Eve bathed herself in a strange small lake with strange fluids. It looked like a sort of blood in another colour. When she looked behind her she saw a man standing there. He looked like Adam. Then he slammed her down by his weapon. He took her out of the West and dragged her to the garden. From there he showed her the east : 'Don't you like to see the good world and all it's riches ?' he said. 'Why have you chosen evil, the world so poor ?'

‘Oh, don’t you know,’ Eve the Evil smiled. ‘The good is just a servant of evil, and is even a worse form of evil.’

‘Then what is the worst ?’ Adam asked.

‘Oh, good boy, don’t you know ? After all the years you lived together with me ? I am the worst,’ Eve the Evil spoke and started to laugh.

‘Now put me down, Adam. Let me go to West again,’ Eve the Evil said, while a flame came forth from her to devour the ghost-appearence of Adam completely. When she came to the West she was satisfied she had finally dealt with the ghost of Adam. There were a lot of worms here making her mind insane. She could feel her heart beating again. She knew she had to go to the temple of evil now, in the depths of the Evil Jungle, to appear before a few skeletons. They had sent her to the garden once to trick Adam, and to lead him to destruction.

‘Salute,’ she said when she saw the first skeleton. ‘I have fulfilled the evil mission, but now I got a question for you. What is my next mission.’

The skeleton started to smile. ‘So you liked your mission, right, evil woman ? Of course I have a second mission for you now. That is to be the guard of the West.’

Then another skeleton showed his face : ‘We are proud of you, Eve. Adam is now nothing but a flame. He will only find satisfaction and life in the West.’

A third skeleton showed his face : ‘As a guard you will be the initiator, and your first initiate will be Adam. Don’t make it too easy for him to enter the West, or we will burn all. In order for him to live forever in the West he has to appear before us. If not, he will always slide away after his visit in the West, and will fall into the East again.’

‘I will tell him about the quest,’ Eve of Evil said. ‘We will make an evil man of him.’

‘Oh yes,’ the skeletons said. ‘So evil. He will be even more evil than you, Eve of Evil.’

‘Oh no, never,’ Eve of Evil said. ‘I am having the heritage of Evil, and I won’t give it to anyone else, even not to Adam.’

Then the skeletons turned their backs to Eve of Evil and disappeared. ‘Don’t you have anything to say anymore ?’ Eve of Evil shouted. ‘I will destroy the Eastside of Eeden,’ Eve of Evil shouted, ‘and I will show you all that I am the highest Evil and no one else. I am the worst, something Adam will never reach.’ But then she swallowed her words all of a sudden and looked down on her hands. ‘I have lost my powers,’ she said slowly. ‘They have given it to Adam and I don’t know why. I have served them all my life.’

‘I will make it hard for Adam to enter, and I won’t tell him anything about the quest,’ she said, and then she moved herself towards the large portal of the West. But the wrath of the skeletons turned against her, and they turned her into sand. This is why the Westside of Eeden has been surrounded by sand to this day. Her soul they turned into a doll, and took it to their temple. When Adam finally reached the temple of evil they told him to defeat the doll, as that would make him live forever in this place. Till today Adam is in a fight against this demonic and evil doll, which is the soul of Eve the Evil. She lives in jealousy, and has sworn to bring him down again by all means.

In his battle against the evil soul Adam got help from a sorceror named Bastin. He helped him in overcoming some of the most dangerous attacks by the evil soul. Bastin teached Adam about evil magic, and led him to a tower where he teached him how to overcome almost everything. Bastin said that it was impossible to overcome really everything, for some things would always bring him down. That was just the way it is.

Gorilla - Death Fiction

Man of War

Gorilla walked on a lonely path in the realms of death. He had lost his father, and he lost his mother in the war, and since the war he only became wilder and wilder. Yes, he was a savage man, worshipping his sword. He grew up in a tribe full of dance and music, but he hated music. Why worshipping drums and flutes and all sorts of songs ? He worshipped his spear and his knife, for that would bring him much further in this dangerous world of death. And he was proved to be right, as when the war came he was the only survivor of his tribe.

He had slain all his enemies when he got older, and he built his own city, his own camp by their bones and skins. He also made cages of these bones tied together, as he wasn't only a man of death and destruction. Gorilla glorified war, as that would be the only good guard in the afterlife. He was a good swordfighter, and a good spearfighter, but only a dagger would also do. He was a dark man, and he had to be, or otherwise he wouldn't survive here. He didn't belief in love, as love was a trap here in these realms. Therefore he worshipped hate.

Gorilla was a hard man. There was no tenderness in him. But he was also lonely and hungry for something. He had a few friends, and in friendship he would go to the extreme. He protected them by his life.

When he got older he became a slayer of giants, as giants were in his eyes the biggest threats. They caused all the earthquakes, vulcanoes and hurricanes by which they destroyed so much. Most of the time these giants were dragons, living far underground, in the sea, or in mountains, but even more often they seemed to live in vulcanoes.

Gorilla wore a necklace with the teeth and nails of his defeated enemies, and this necklace gave him power. He worshipped these teeth and nails like they were his nemesises. But when Gorilla reached over thousand years he had defeated so many enemies that he could build a city by their teeth and nails, and that was which he did. It would be a city of doom, like a temple so cursed that only priests deeply initiated by Gorilla would survive in this place.

And he raised his friends like priests, and he covered the temple by the rarest sorts of skins. Gorilla was a predator, and also his priests. many of his priests were only temporal as they couldn't live by the high standards of Gorilla, and they often died or just fleed. Gorilla himself was the highpriest. One day Gorilla found himself in a battle against a witch. She bit him dangerously in his arm, which would become a scar which would never disappear. It was since then his death magic started to increase to it's height, and the witch wished she would never have attacked him. He skinned her and gave her skeleton a place above the frontportal of his temple.

Scars were welcome in the life of Gorilla since then, as he knew where the scars would lead him. He wanted to become the king of death. But because there were already so many kings of death, he became the emperor of death, and he became the slayer of so many royals and aristocrats in the realm of death. They put a price on his head, and one day he got visited by a skeleton. The skeleton said he was the ruler of all the emperors of death. 'I can use pigs like you,' the skeleton said. The skeleton took him to the realm where pigbutchers had the final word. Gorilla became a gladiator here, and there was nothing he could do. The skeleton was carrying secrets he didn't know anything about, and these secret powers had bound him. Finally a princess who seemed to rule all the pigbutchers set him free. He thought he could be the emperor of death again, but she brought him to a much worse place : the place of pigbreeders. Here also pighunters worked, and again he became a gladiator. The ones of this area looked like pigs more or less. He couldn't see much difference between the pig and it's breeder, so he thought it wouldn't be such a big deal for him to become a pigbreeder himself.

Gorilla started a pigfarm here so that he wouldn't have to fight as a gladiator too much. The ones he defeated he took to his farm, for they were almost like pigs anyway, and he also became a pighunter. He didn't have to go to the forests for that, but he could find them in the houses of the aristocrats and other royal or religious houses. Since he was looking more and more for the rarer forms of pigs like the winged pigs the farm more and more started to turn into a featherfarm. He seemed to have found the ideal form between a pig and a chicken, and he more and more started to breed them for their feathers. Gorilla became obsessed with feathers, and if he could only pluck their feathers he would be satisfied enough to set them free. Gorilla could make anything of these rare feathers as they had all sorts of qualities.

The End

Abraham the Barbarian - Barbarian Fiction

The Food of Secrets

Abraham was a savage barbarian living in the underworld with Sara, his love, and his family. They lived in caves and on the hills, and bones seemed to surround them everywhere they went. Sara was like a goddess in making jewelry and ornaments, sometimes very huge. She could make the most precious webs and decorated them by feathers. Abraham was a warrior and a hunter. The family was a large group to which also the slaves belonged, and in times of war they all fought. It was a dangerous place in a dangerous age. Abraham was like a predator, and a mighty king. When he roared you could hear it in the far distance, and his echo seemed to come everywhere.

Abraham lived together with the beasts. He would ride on them, and wage war. They were killers, killers like he was. They lived by meat and blood of their enemies, and they often hunted, although they also bred cattle. Abraham had food by which he could change predators into cattle. It was the secret Sara told him when they married. And this was what he used to threaten his enemies. He would send out spies to poison the food of his enemies by the food of secrets, so that they would turn into cattle. Abraham dominated these worlds by fear. He was a dreadfull man, one of the worst ever existing. When they heard his voice, many shivered inside.

But one day Abraham and Sara came into a fight, and Sara threatened Abraham she would show him some more mysteries. Abraham had respect to Sara, and he knew he couldn’t mess with her, so he decided to leave. He got one half of the slaves and cattle, and Sara the other half. Sara became a dangerous woman, a sorceress, and all she wanted to do was to take revenge on Abraham. One day she sent a spy. She had given the spy some poison which would turn the victim into a predator who would be always in hunger. Abraham the Barbarian was her target. Abraham didn’t know what was happening to him when he ate his dinner. His skin got green and strange brown, his eyes yellow with black stripes in the middle, and his nails started to grow. He was almost becoming an animal, like a dark alien.

Abraham immediately knew that this had come from Sara, so he swore revenge as well. He knew where she had her camp and came to tear her whole camp down. He found her in a tent, but then he felt like weakness took him over. He was still in love with her, and he begged her to take the spell away from him. Then she gave him some stuff which would turn him into a pig as well, and he became some sort of strange mix, like a dog. He was now a giant barbarian. 'Make me normal,' he begged Sara, while his voice had changed so much, but Sara didn't want to do. 'Please,' he said, while he bowed down for her at his knees. 'Teach me your sorcery, and let me become a sorceror as well.' After some nights Sara had some mercy on him, and gave him some food to become normal again. Although he had become such a big ruler, he knew that she ruled him by all her sorcery. That's why he wanted to learn sorcery as well, as he felt like he was her slave. It took him so much to get a word out of her mouth that it made him very tired. This time he gave her all he had and left the camp forever. He would wander now to the horizon to start a new life and to find out about sorcery himself. Although he found out that it wasn't an easy task, he didn't return to Sara as he knew what she could do to him. One day he met a real sorceror, who seemed to know a lot more about the spells Sara used. There wasn't a way to heal for Abraham, as she had pushed her spells too deep, and it seemed Abraham had to carry that like a burden. It made Abraham full of rage, but he didn't want to return, for she could burden him even more. Even her healings were deceptions leading him to deeper slavery to her. Although he had gone away from her, she had come deeper in his heart. It made him insane, and there was no healing for it. It was his fate that she would come only deeper and deeper, and Abraham the Barbarian wondered why. What had he done to deserve this ?

Jeremiah the Barbarian - Barbarian Fiction

The Last Door of Fire

There was no slayer like Jeremiah. He was the nightmare on the battlefields spoiling nothing but blood. He had the most women of all warriors, all in a harem. He had chained his women tightly, and they had to dance for him. He was an evil man. He had palaces like no one had them, where he kept his snakes, most of the time giant snakes. He lived in a domain full of waterfalls, dinnered with ghosts, and was a necromancer. He lived in the depths of the underworld, and he had freed himself from his prophetic chains.

He dinnered with special women, women with wisdom, and he had some grace for these often royal women. They often came from other kingdoms, many unknown to them. Most of these women were exotic. He traded in silver and gold, and showed them his secrets, while they showed him theirs. He was part of a mighty circle, but one day his dominion fell down. Warrior-women seemed to invade his palaces and they left blood everywhere they came. They killed his snakes, and polluted his properties.

A man called Andreas helped him in his battle against the women. He didn't know where Andreas came from. Later also someone called Paul helped him. It turned into some evil nights, in which he finally lost everything, as Andreas and Paul seemed to be from the enemy. How could he trust them. He felt stupid, and they led him to a dungeon in the depths of the underground. Never there would be a man like Jeremiah the Barbarian again. For they would let his traces disappear forever. One day they sent some dogs to his dungeon who started to eat from his flesh and drink from his blood. This was the sad fate of Jeremiah the Barbarian, the man who had so many enemies. His spirit went into the depths of hell, where the kings of hell tormented him even further. He went through the gates of evil where he begged for some mercy on him, but there wasn't any. All mercy was false anyway. True mercy didn't exist, as it was all part of the breeding of evil. It was a trick of Tantalos to make slaves. Jeremiah the Barbarian got confused as his spirit was fading away even more, towards the portals of the Prometheus. Here his spirit would have to do slave-work forever, but one day a man set him free. He knew that true freedom didn't exist so he doubted the man. Although he was gratefull he couldn't belief it. 'But then, trust the paradox,' the man said. 'Don't hang on to one side of existance anymore, a certain part of your mind. Don't repress yourself like that anymore, but be free.' Jeremiah nodded. It was like the burdens were falling away. There was not but one side of everything. There were many sides, and he had to stop judging the wheel of it, and stop judging the judging. He needed to let it all flow, even the judging. He was now free by the paradox. Crucified, but victorious.

It led him to the cross of the underworlds, where dogs were eating him again, and he could only smile with the smile of suffering, as he had found the power of the paradox, a strange power flowing so fast, without any taboo, without any conditions or restrictions. It led him to strange jewelry making him wise. It led him to the deer of hell to ride. There was no good or evil in the experience, as there was only wilderness, unknown instincts. There was a life higher than his mind. The mind was always judging good and evil, as an insane king, but this was something else. This was lust triggering the flame of love. What was hate and what was love. The mind couldn't tell, as the mind was limited. But the lust was unlimited. The lust became the new judge, leading them back to the unknown ages of secrets, secrets once washed away by the floods of time. How these lusts needed to be set free he found out soon, as he went to the Abyss of Snakes with it's many caves full of bony pillars and lakes of strange fluids. Here the lusts got born, and he found out that by his touch he could set them free.

Behind veils in the Abyss of Snakes the Woman of Snakes lived. She was the maker of fogs and spiderrags. Jeremiah the Barbarian knew he had to be at his guard by approaching this woman. She would have the powers to damn him forever. But by his knowledge Jeremiah the Barbarian knew she couldn't inflict fear on him. Spirits of scorn started to come forth from her, now he had survived her attacks of fear by his knowledge. The spirits of scorn were like cold cutting winds, but again he could defeat them by his knowledge. It made him proud to see how these spirits crashed at the rocks. Then skeleton spirits came trying to strike his mind by confusion. Finally he laid himself at her feet and fell asleep. The Woman of Snakes laughed, as he couldn't shield himself against her powers of sleep. He was like a weak flower in her hands, and she could turn the clocks of his mind. Snakes slided across his helpless body, ready to strengle him, and to drag him into the depths of the Abyss, but the woman stopped them. She wanted to have some time alone with him. She turned into a dragon, and took him into her private place, where she laid him on a bed. When he woke up she spoke : 'Have you forgotten about the riddles of ages ? They are still more powerfull than you, for you do not know about their secrets.'

'My lusts will solve them, as they also come from the unknown ages,' Jeremiah the Barbarian said. Then she took a knife and cur his hand, while some blood fell down. 'See here,' she said, 'the blood of all ages, all that is you. I will drink it and become more powerfull than you will ever be.' But when she drank something struck her. 'Didn't you know that the blood will set us all free ?' Jeremiah the Barbarian said. Then she fell down, and said : 'You, you must do it. Ride the winged bull and you will know what I mean.' And then her spirit descended into the depths of the Abyss.

Jeremiah the Barbarian stood up, walked through a door and came in a field full of bisons and bulls. He also saw mustangs, and suddenly a sort-like creature with wings. He stepped on it, and it flew away. The bull brought him to a high platform where he met two barbarians named David and his son Solomon. They stood close to a door of fire. ‘Come and enter,’ the barbarian named David said. Jeremiah the Barbarian went through the door of fire and came in a field full of sheep with their lambs and snakes. ‘Take a snake,’ said Solomon and ride through the fields of sheep and lambs, or you will fall asleep. Only the snake can lead you through. Jeremiah did what he said. Took a snake and rode it. It was a long trip between the sheep and their lambs, but finally Jeremiah the Barbarian reached the next door of fire. With his snake he went through, and here he met de Woman of Snakes again. ‘It is here, between those riddles, you need to dwell, always having your snake close to you. Dwell with the snakes between the sheep and the lambs, and they cannot harm you.’ Jeremiah the Barbarian went back to the fields of sheep and lambs, and dwelled there with the snakes, while the barbarians David and his son Solomon were there also. They led Jeremiah the Barbarian to a hill from which they had a good survey. ‘In the night all these sheep and lambs will turn into pigs, and then the birds will slide down from the heavens, and the snakes will come up from the hells to prey on them. Be sure you will be on the hills, so that you won’t be one of them,’ the barbarian named David said.

‘In the mornings the pigs will always change into oxes-like creatures like bulls, cows, mustangs, bisons, wilderbeasts and such. Then the lions will come from all sides to prey on them, but be sure you will stay on the hills,’ the barbarian named Solomon said. ‘The afternoons will take long here, and then the chicken of hell will come to prey on everything. Be sure you stay on the hills, until the evening falls.’

‘There is no way to control the circle of nature here,’ the barbarian named David said. ‘It is a strange nature, and it is a tight system, so forget anything you want to change about it. But we as barbarians will all live on the hills where we have our own parts.’

Then another group of barbarians came called Samuel, Ruben, Judas, Daniel, Aser, Dan, Zebulon and Naftali. And then another group came, and the hill got full. They made their tents on the hill to watch how the tides would fall down. We have a new one here,’ the barbarian named David screamed. ‘His name is Jeremiah the Barbarian.’ They all started to applaud and yell, and Jeremiah the Barbarian felt welcomed. He knew he had found his home now after a long trip of so many contradictions. The barbarian named Samuel came forward with a horn full of blood, and smeared it on Jeremiah the Barbarian’s face. ‘I anoint you now by the warpaint of blood. Be a warrior and succeed.’ All the men were applauding, and then the barbarian named Naftali came forward, while he bore a skull full of blood. Then he smeared also blood on Jeremiah the Barbarian, but this time on his neck. ‘You are finally washed by the blood, as long as you spoil it.’ Again the men were applauding. Jeremiah the Barbarian rose his sword, and said : ‘By the blood we will all succeed. Let the hills be baptized in blood to be our eternal shelter.’ And again the men applauded. They could only go through the fields to reach the doors of fires when there would be sheep, lambs and snakes. There were more than a hundred doors of fire all hiding their own secrets, and when they would have reached them all, they could be on the huntingfields whenever they wanted. But for now the hill was their only shelter.

When Jeremiah the Barbarian had become very old he reached the last door of fire behind which he found the fountain of youth, and the Sword of Growth. He met a tall barbarian with a large white-like beard carrying the sword, and gave it to Jeremiah the Barbarian. ‘Go, my son, as you have now found the eternal water. Whatever you touch on the huntingfield will become gold.’ Then he gave precious jewelry to Jeremiah the Barbarian and left in a cloud. When Jeremiah went back through the door of fire he knew the huntingfields were his now, but first he had to defeat it’s predators. A war started, and Jeremiah ended up in a strange farm where he was nothing but meat, and they kept him for blood. It seemed the fire was first destroying him, imprisoning him and enslaving him until he could really wear it and ride it. He cursed the doors of fire for what they had done to him. It was like time turned into slow motion when he had returned through the last door of fire. It was doom striking him more than ever, and where were his friends now ? Jeremiah learned that nothing was within his grasp. Everything was illusion, trapping him deeper and deeper, but the knowledge about the paradox still brought a smile to his face at times. He could hold on to it like an almighty stake in his life, like the totemstake of hope. It gave him wings at times, and it could let him make fire stream from his hands and mouth, saving his friends from their ignorant moments. He realized that he often knew more than them, so he offered much grace to them. Together they would make it. Together they would solve the riddle of this strange area, and area staying in his mind for eternity, but showing it’s depths more and more. It always came back to him as it was the principle of life. He had found the headdress of life on day, full of feathers, and he became a chief of so many millions of barbarians on the hill, all leading them to the West of Eeden, the last door of fire.

They would also meet the barbarian man with the white-like beard, to receive the Sword of Growth, some jewelry and water from the fountain of youth to live forever. And waking up in a farm was just a riddle emphasizing this. They were both predators and cattle, and what was the true weapon ? Wasn’t it the slavery in which they were living, the imprisonment and the suffering ? It was the strength of the totemstake coming from unknown depths, coming from a deeper weakness and softness in which they had lost everything to gain even more than everything, for this time it would be eternally, to open the doors of the West of Eeden. They could only ride something if they had lived in it first. And this was the secret knowledge of the Sword of Growth which made it so powerfull. It was a key and at the same time a fall.

Jesus the Barbarian - Barbarian Fiction

West of Eeden

When Jesus went to the underworld, and also when he rose up to the heavens, he came into a heavenly army, an army of slayers. He slayed himself a way to the throne on which demons had settled them down, and he slayed them one by one. Blood was flowing all over. To Jesus the Barbarian hell and heaven was the same. It had been invaded by dark priests, and this time Jesus had come to show them the sword. The dogs were trembling around the throne, but the highpriest stood up from his seat, and directed his finger at Jesus. In an unknown language he cursed Jesus, and told his priests to throw him into the Abyss of black lions. They grasped Jesus at his shoulders, but then Jesus showed them the belt he got from Mary of Magdalen, a barbarian woman. She was a sorceress, and had made the belt of the most precious jewelry to lay the most powerfull spell on it. When the dark priests saw the belt they got struck by a light, and then Jesus the Barbarian pushed his sword deep into the belly of the highpriest. He stood there like frozen now, and called for the dogs. This time bigger dogs seemed to enter the place. They bit Jesus in his arms and dragged him to the Abyss where they pushed him in. Jesus was crying and shrieking when the black lions attacked him. His sword seemed to be of no power here, and also his belt couldn't begin anything against them. Suddenly an almighty power seemed to come over Jesus the Barbarian and he tore the black lions apart in a few flashes. Easily he broke their necks, and he wondered where the power was coming from. He ripped the skins off their flesh, dressed himself by it, and tried to climb out of the abyss. That took awhile, but finally he reached the top. He had an almighty survey now, like he had found the eye of the eagle. He started to wander through the heavens in search for meat and blood, as he was very hungry.

In the middle of the heavens he found an oracle. Flames seemed to get forward from the spinning oracle. 'None of you will stand in my way,' Jesus roared and slayed the oracle. High shrieks seemed to come forth, almost deafening Jesus. Demons started to come forth from it to strike Jesus. He had to pay a high price to come any further in heaven or hell. It was like pins were piercing him, and like he got nailed to the slain wheel. The wheel started to spin, and went to a lake of blood. Jesus went up and down and was shrieking as well. But again the strange almighty power seemed to strike Jesus the Barbarian and he could free himself from the wheel, while it sank away in the lake of blood. Jesus the Barbarian was raising his sword again, and this time the power struck it really hard. Jesus got swept into the lake of blood again. Then he stood up and seemed to have control over the sword. It was like he had the grill of heaven and hell in his hands, and he slayed a lot of demons and angels by it. There was war in heaven and hell. Jesus the Barbarian had risen. The almighty power also seemed to strike the belt of Jesus, and it would take Jesus the Barbarian up. It was the eagle's eye which Jesus seemed to have found. It had been set free by abundant slaughter. Jesus the Barbarian rose his sword, and fire came forth from it. Also his belt seemed to be in fire. Heaven became a bloodbath that day, as Jesus had returned. He didn't have any mercy to them, as one day they pushed him away. Dark priests had thrown him in the Lake of Fire, where the dogs swam. But he had returned now, and angels were falling away that day, as he came back with revenge in his heart. They had thrown him in a cradle and sang the songs of hell for him, but he was a barbarian. They had thrown him into lakes of snakes, and they took his weapons away from him, but a sorceress called Mary of Magdalen had anointed him and let him return by her spells. It became an evil night, and when Jesus the Barbarian was done he returned to her and gave her the jewels she desired. He had stolen them for her, as he was a thief with high skills. He was now winged again, and came to anoint her as well, so that she could fly with him. Back to that old place from which they fell away one time.

He anointed her with blood, and gave her wings by his spell. The wings of the dove he had torn, as the dove was the one who once pushed her away. The lamb he had slain, as the lamb was the one made them naked, uncovered in the cold night. The skin of the lamb he gave to her, and she felt some warmth again after years of tears. She was a barbarian as well, a robber, just like Jesus. They knew revenge would be the only way, as the love-light bringing them back. And then the eagle's eye struck her too. They were now in the clouds, heaven and hell the same. That day heaven and hell burnt, until the father of Jesus the Barbarian showed up.

'I want to welcome you back, son,' he said, while he clapped in his hands. Jesus the Barbarian hugged his father. 'Where is mother ?' Jesus asked.

'Lilith ? Oh, she is in the Garden of Eeden,' his father said.

'Oh, is it still such a beautiful place ?' Jesus the Barbarian asked.

'Yes, son,' his father said, 'but the water has turned into blood, and the trees into meat.'

'Fortunately,' Jesus the Barbarian said, 'as then we have enough to eat.'

'And your mother has become a bit more aggressive now,' his father said. 'But hey, that you can expect when snakes grow up. They become like dragons.'

'Is she a dragon now ?' Jesus the Barbarian asked.

'Yes,' his father said. 'But wrestlings are good for you. It will let you grow up. And who is she, the woman who is with you ?'

'She is Mary of Magdalen, a sorceress,' Jesus the Barbarian said.

'Well, nice to meet you,' Jesus' father said. 'And welcome to the family.'

'Father, she can heal you,' Jesus the Barbarian said.

‘Don’t speak nonsense, son,’ his father said, ‘I can’t be healed.’

‘Let me try,’ Mary of Magdalen said, and lay her hand to his heart. ‘A dragon is living in your heart, once sent out by an evil witch. Let me weave a spell through your heart and it will be okay.’ Orange fires seemed to come forth from her hands, and Jesus’ father started to scream. ‘I have pierced it already,’ Mary of Magdalen said. ‘It will take awhile before it is dead, and you may feel sick because of it, but it will make you strong.’

Jesus the Barbarian smiled and laid his arm on his father’s back and shoulder. ‘See, I told you she could do it.’

But then an evil witch seemed to show up before them. She was the witch of heaven. Jesus the Barbarian took his sword, and fire came forth to destroy her. She shrieked : ‘What is it you want to take away further ?’

‘Everything,’ Jesus the Barbarian said, ‘just everything. Not a big deal.’

‘I gave the dark priests permission to sent you away,’ the witch shrieked. ‘Look what it brought you. Only good things. All because of me, so let a part of heaven be mine, just a small part.’

‘You won’t get anything,’ Jesus the Barbarian said, ‘for once you took everything away from me. Just watch if all this will bring you any good this time.’

‘No, that isn’t fair,’ the witch screamed. ‘I gave you a good cradle, and they worshipped you by songs.’

‘Oh, I will take care they will do that to you also,’ Jesus the Barbarian said.

‘You don’t know anything of life,’ the witch said loud. It seemed she had dealt with the fire a bit, but now she was like a skeleton standing before Jesus the Barbarian. ‘You are like the slayer of the heavens, only causing blood and fire to stream, all destruction. You are not a good farmer. You don’t know about the laws of heaven.’

‘What do I have to do with your stupid laws ? I am a savage, a barbarian,’ Jesus the Barbarian said.

‘Now woman, get the hell out of here,’ Jesus’ father said. Then the skeleton seemed to fall away from the heavens like a lightbeam while she shrieked like never before.

‘I’m not a farmer,’ Jesus the Barbarian said. ‘Who does she think she is. I am a warrior and a hunter.’

‘Well, maybe she is right a bit,’ Jesus’ father said. ‘You need to use wisdom when you want to rule heaven and hell, to have a good harvest, or you will fall away again. You were young and dumb, and that tricked you. You shouldn’t listen to the dark priests with all their tales. They have tricked you bad.

‘I understand, father,’ Jesus the Barbarian said. ‘It will never happen again. Now lets go to the garden of Eeden.’

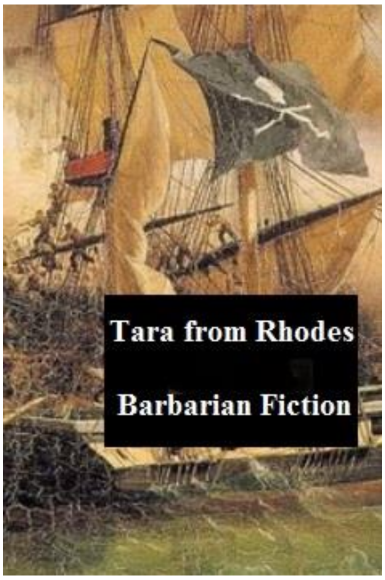
And when they came there, it was like a farm, like a breeding. By some sort of food the dark priests and their dogs had become cattle, especially pigs. ‘No predators around anymore,’ Jesus the Barbarian said. ‘We are the only predators. Meat enough for eternity.’ But then his mother came down. She was darker than ever, like the black dragon. ‘Son, where have you been all the time,’ she screamed. ‘I will eat you alive, because you left your mother alone.’

‘No, Lilith,’ Jesus’ father said. ‘Have mercy on him. The dark priests had led him astray.’

‘He should be at school,’ Lilith said, and struck Jesus the Barbarian by her tail. Blood was flowing everywhere. Then the father struck Lilith, and shouted : ‘Son, let me handle this. Get the hell out of here. It’s getting dangerous. Take your woman with you, or she won’t survive.’

Jesus the Barbarian grasped Mary of Magdalen and ran away with her. But Lilith had struck him deep. Awhile later he fell on the ground. Mary of Magdalen lay her hand on his chest, but couldn’t heal him. ‘You need to take some rest,’ she whispered. ‘Let’s get deeper into the garden, across the hill,’ she said.

In the depths of the garden they found a shelter. Here Lilith would never find them. ‘Here,’ Mary of Magdalen said. ‘I have a fruit of the Tree of Knowledge here. It is forbidden to eat it, but it is not forbidden to drink and suck from it.’ Strange milk came forth from it, and it healed Jesus the Barbarian. They became so drunk, and it led them to a new world, a world across the garden of Eeden, in the West. Here it was a savage world with the most beautiful jungles. There was no heaven or hell here, and there was no difference between good and evil. It was the same.



Tara from Rhodes
Barbarian Fiction

TARA FROM RHODES

Barbarian Fiction

COAB 2004-2012

2017

The Chronicles of Tara from Rhodes (2004-2006)

The Dark Tales – Okt. 2004

1. The Gladiators of Lakshor
2. The Python Stone
3. Sharla the Head Hunter
4. The Parrot Gems
5. The Lawless
6. The Knife of Black Time (Okt. 2004/Aug. 2006)

The Blood Saga – Febr. 2005-Aug. 2006

7. Jewels of the Octopus

8. The Spear with the Two Sharkstones
9. The Strongest Touch
10. Cold as Ice
11. Samdoom Shuffle
12. Walking on Mars
13. The Jewel of memory
14. The Insects with the Many Heads
15. The Ten Princes of Skerwat
16. The Python Riders
17. The Monkey
18. The Beasts of Orion
19. The Python Stone II
20. Sharla the Head Hunter II
21. The Gladiators of Lakshor II

Princess of Antlia (2004-2010)

22. The Clowns of Trigidad
23. The Killer-Dreamer
24. The New Order
25. The Arms of Sleep
26. The Court-Wizard
27. The Spider Seed
28. Skeleton Wings
29. Queen of the Eagles
30. Weapons of Torture
31. The Needles of Pill-A
32. The Ghost Cup
33. The Bones of Traxmarut

The Last Saga (2011-2012)

34. Desert Queen
35. The Ghost-children of Pendilot
36. The Jewels of Scavahl
37. Door of Darkness

The Gladiators of Lakshor

The warriors didn't have any fear, as their souls were traveling through the realms of dead. Them was promised that after a short trip they would come to the house of the most beautiful women. They would show them all the pleasures of the afterlife as a reward for all what they had done. But they didn't know what was waiting for them. The women were indeed the most beautiful, and the men could choose whoever they wanted, but in the middle of the night these women would kill their souls, as they were the women of second death. This the men didn't know, as it was never told to them. Then the essence of their souls would be taken to the realm deeper than hell, a realm called Lakshor. The men didn't know anything about the conspiracies of death. They really believed that they could live the rest of eternity with these women, as that was which they had told them since their earliest childhood. They didn't know that earth was just a trainingschool for them, to prepare them for a greater war : the war of the dead. No one had any understanding of the horrors of Lakshor, but they would find out soon.

In Lakshor the horror-king Metulidan throned. He was a skeleton with a high shrieking voice. He enjoyed it that there were so many spoiling tales about death, that it would be a paradise with well-shaped women, especially for those who would die in battle. Many young men dreamt to become a great warrior for this reason. They didn't fear death anymore, but desired it. Metulidan had chosen the most voluptuous women of Lakshor to seduce the fallen men at the gates of death. They would lure them to their house in the realms of the dead. On the top of their house the skull of a horned animal hang. The men had to get the feeling that they would have arrived in the eternal huntingfields. How their young dreams would turn into a nightmare. In Lakshor there was an eternal war : the war of the dead, or some might say : the war of the damned. It was a place worse than everlasting damnation. In Lakshor there was everlasting slavery.

As the night fell the women had prepared their knives to do the job. They had done this many times before. Some of the women already worked for threehundred years in this house. Metulidan called it : the house of seduction. It was one of his best webs in the realms of the dead. When the sleeping men had been finally killed for the second time, the essences of their soul woke up, and they rose up in frozen tragedy, not knowing what had happened to them. For the women it was very easy now to lead the men to the city of Lakshor. Behind the house there was a hidden gate of lava, which was in earlier times a sea of fire. Here was an elevator by which the men would descend to Lakshor. In this elevator the women had another job to do. They had to give the men a new armor. To the men it was a strange prison. They had to become warriors again, but now it was forever. The men couldn't speak yet, as their soul-essence was still between sleeping and awakening. They had lost so many pieces of their mind, and a light paralyzing aura was around their head. The women took some liquid metal out of a sort of bag and smeared it on their head and faces. An awful stench was coming from the blend. Then they covered the metal by a sort of dark skin which looked like it was from a sort of animal.

After about forty days in the elevator they came into the city of Lakshor. They were still not totally awake, but they started to react to the smell of the city. It was a very foul stench. The elevator stopped in a huge arena. Here they would have their first fight. A tall red man called Strelon showed up. He looked very dreadfull. The man got helmets on, and were pushed towards the huge red man. It was almost like a giant. He had a dark low voice, saying : 'Be prepared to die many times. The realms of the city of Lakshor are deep.' The red man soon tore them apart like they were dolls. At the end of the fight they were nothing like ghosts. The women gathered the shatters and by the liquid metal they could build them up again. It was a sort of strange magnetic glue, keeping the parts together. Then they had to appear before the horror-king. It was in a hall behind the first arena. In the distance the horror-king sat on a huge throne. Metulidan was shouting : 'How could you not defeat the red man ?' The men didn't say anything. One of them called Edmolin suddenly got more and more of his consciousness back. He asked : 'What is the use of this all ?' Metulidan started to laugh but didn't say anything. In a strange sense Metulidan liked the boy. He seemed to be the youngest of them, and soon Metulidan decided he wanted the boy as his servant. The boy was tender and not made to be a gladiator. As the men were led to the next arena, Metulidan took the boy, and told him he could serve in the kitchen. When Edmolin got there he started to realize that there was so much meat instead of other sort of food. There was meat in all sorts and in many different colours.

Edmolin got his own room, and more and more he started to realize how lucky he was. The king often went to gladiator-wars in the arena's, and often he took the boy with him. Often heads got cut off, while the horror-king often used these scalps to decorate the city. One day Metulidan called for the boy, who was working in the kitchen at that moment. The horror-king showed a picture of a girl with pink clothes. The girl was very beautiful in the eyes of Edmolin. 'When you have become grown-up,' the horror-king said, 'you will marry her.'

'Why ?' the boy asked. 'Because I want you to take over my kingdom,' the horror-king said, 'and then you need to have a woman.' The boy sighed. Since that day the boy could only think about the words of the king. When years went by, he got to see her, they married and got the kingdom in their hands. The horror-king had left in a mysterious way. No one knew where he had gone to. The boy had grown-up now, and found out that his woman was the daughter of a snake-farmer. She had an obsession for snakes, and she wanted to have them everywhere throughout the royal place. The big ones she wanted to have in the hall where they were sleeping. It was a very huge hall and there was a very huge bed with a ceiling and with veils and curtains. The snakes here were also very huge and tall. Edmolin didn't feel comfortable with it, but as it was the wish of his woman he was willing to get used to it. Sometimes before they got to sleep the girl got into a fight with such a snake, and very often she got bitten horribly, but she still wanted to have the snakes in their room. The snakes wouldn't eat them when they were sleeping, for they were tamed in that sense. The woman found out that these snakes had lusts to fight, so she made the decision to put some of them into the arena's, so that the gladiators could take it over. Edmolin wanted to stop the arena's, but his woman said that it was part of the law here, and the law was forever.

One day a wild man from the wilderness came into the royal place. He said he was a wanderer. He said that he wanted to become a gladiator in change for food and care. The woman thought it was a good idea, and often she went to the arena to watch him. He was a very skilled warrior, and he also wrestled with snakes and crocodiles. One day he had to appear before the throne of Edmolin. Edmolin asked him where he was coming from. 'My Lord,' the wild man spoke, 'I come from the land of tragedy. There was so much dryness there, that I decided to wander, and so I came here finally.'

'Where is the land of tragedy,' the king asked. 'It is at the westside of you kingdom, my Lord,' the wild man spoke.

'How is that place a victim of dryness ?' the king asked.

'Oh, my Lord,' the wild man almost stuttered, 'a kingdom wilder than us invaded our land. They took our souls away. We only have a body. They have taken our rivers away. They have imprisoned my whole tribe. I'm the only survivor.' Then the wild man asked if the king would send an army of gladiators to the land.

The gladiators had to travel for three and a half years until they reached the land of tragedy. It was a wilderness of great loneliness, but after months of searching they found the invaders. The invaders were wilder than the gladiators, but the gladiators had a greater number. It was a long and bloody war. Finally the wild tribe had the scalps of all the gladiators, and they moved towards the city of Lakshor. They had birds of prey on which they could fly away, so it didn't took them more than a couple of months to get there. The men were so wild, and even their women, so they could easily invade the city of Lakshor. But when they saw Edmolin, the king, they trembled in fear. Suddenly they bowed down before him. He had a blue triangle above his head, which was the sign of their gods. 'All our kingdoms are yours,' the wild men and women said. And this is how Lakshor grew in size in one day. Lakshor was now greater than hell and heaven together. Because the wild men and women had a lust to fight a lot, they became the new gladiators of Lakshor. But as the kingdom grew the laws became bloodier more and more. And the law demanded that by the blood the kingdom would become greater. Not only would they have their houses of the most beautiful women in the realms of the dead, but also in the realms of hell and heaven.

After awhile the king found out why it had to be so bloody. The wild men and women who came from the west worshipped a blood-sucking fly. If there wasn't enough blood sacrificed to this fly, it would die, and it couldn't lead or guard this wild tribe anymore. And it was like by this blood the fly could make it's women so beautiful. There was only one way how the fly could feed itself. That was to smear the essence of the blood over it's women and then to possess the warriors of earth, of the dead, or of heaven or hell, to let them travel to the houses of these smeared women. This was how the fly could feed itself. The blood was magnetic to the fly in a strange sense. But often the blood was very salty, making the fly more thirsty, and also wilder. That was also the reason why it's men and women who worshipped him were so wild. They were bound together by a strange bloodline. The fly needed royal blood to quench it's thirst a bit. That was why it appeared to the king one day. The fly was already full of rage, because it didn't have enough for such a long time. The king and the fly got in a fight, and soon enough the fly had tied the king to a stake and began to sting him in sensitive places to suck the best blood. After that he flew to the royal bloodlines of the kingdoms of the dead, of heaven and of hell. He now wanted to have royal gladiators, to be assured of a potent and perpetual bloodflow. Now the fly became the king of Lakshor, and Edmolin and his woman had to fight in the royal arena's.

But one day Metulidan with his red guard returned to Lakshor. When they came to the throne of the fly he said : 'I already expected this. Some come to Lakshor just for the blood.' Then his guard, the red giant prince stepped towards the fly, and while the fly shrieked and try to hit him with his sharp wing, the red giant took his slayersword and hit the fly in it's head. The fly was spouting lava now, and lightening came from his eyes. Then Metulidan himself took his slayersword and cut a piece of his wing off. Again the fly shrieked, and flew to the other side of the thronehall. Metulidan immediately turned around, took a waspball of poison in his hand and threw it into the stomach of the fly. Blood was streaming out of the fly, while his head became smaller. This was the most dangerous part of the fight, for Metulidan knew that if it's head was small like this it was in a terrible rage, ready to use it's most deadly weapons. But if it would use one of these weapons, it could also die itself, and it would at least lose much of it's strength. The fly attacked, missed, and started to hyperventilate. In it's weakness it floated to the floor, but still the fly was in the most dangerous position, for it could use another deadly weapon now. Suddenly it had used it's heartsnake, which pierced Metulidan and the red giant prince in a flash, while the both fell to the ground, losing their soulbeat. Softly and tenderly the fly started to eat from their fallen and paralyzed meat, for it was still very weak. Now the fly could drink from a well of high and pure royal blood.

After awhile friends of Metulidan had called for one of the most feared warrior in and around the realms of Lakshor. It was Witigus, the flyslayer. When he came the fly had already turned Lakshor in doom more than ever before. The fly throned on a perpetual stream of royal blood. 'You will have to surrender your kingdom to me,' Witigus spoke. Witigus would only fight the fly for no less price than Lakshor itself and all it's vessels and souls. If someone wanted to call for Witigus for a favour the price was always slavery. Witigus would never take less than total domination. But also Witigus would be nothing but prey to the fly. The fly took his prey to a stake on a high rock in the wilderness, tied him to it, and left. He would be an easy meal for snakes now, and for the birds of prey. Then another man called Metusalach tried to conquer the fly, but he fell into the same fate as Witigus the flyslayer. What has become of all these men who wanted to wage war against the fly ? Their spirits have been thrown into the abyss of Lakshor, while their souls have become gladiators in the deeper arena's of Lakshor. They have searched for the well of blood, but they have become wells of blood themselves, for the fly turned their remains finally into trees of blood. Since then no one was allowed to enter Lakshor than those who had drunk from this forbidden blood. And those who had drunk from it would be damned to stay in Lakshor forever. There was no escape possible. And in Lakshor one was doomed to be a gladiator forever, for here there was the eternal war of the damned.

There was no horror greater than the horror of Lakshor. The fly, it's king, had the most cruelest ways to let his victims and the breakers of the laws of his kingdom suffer to turn them into living and perpetual bloodwells. Those who became a part of the horrors of Lakshor to become it's finest warriors had to be baptized in these eternal bloodwells first. There was no greater horror than to drink from the forbidden blood, for it would write your name in the Book of Blood, which was a horrible and everlasting traumatizing experience of losing all hope and faith in salvation. There was no salvation left for those who had been tied by their souls to the everlasting horrors of the Book of Blood. Their beings were now filled by such an eternal fear and tragedy making them gladiators of doom, destined to the unbearable grief of eternal dying. There was no pain compared to this.

Men tied to the stakes of the Book of Blood could only cry blood, and whenever they spoke, the only thing coming out of their mouths was blood. This was how the fly dealt with his enemies, and this made him the greatest horror-king ever. No one ever coming to Lakshor spoke about the giants of hell anymore. All they could do was seeing and remembering the horrors of the giants of Lakshor. The day the giants of Lakshor came to hell was a day no one who was there would forget. They came to take gladiators to Lakshor.

But behind the veils of Lakshor a wasp was living, hiding the wells and falls of waspian blood. Whenever a woman died in the arena the wasp came to take her soul away. He would tie her to a stake in his realms, where he would use these women for reproduction. They brought fourth the waspian souls full of the rushing and sensual waspian blood. Then after awhile he would send them back to the arena's. But some of these women he kept for years. He would finally baptize them in his waspian well of blood, to let them become his own gladiators. These waspian gladiators were the most feared, for they could bring the pains of death. One of these women was called Tara from Rhodes, and after a few years she returned to the arena's. She was a woman of such a tranquilizing beauty that she could lure the birds of prey to let them sit on her hand. She had a strength greater than lions, and this was why she always could sleep near them, warming herself in the skincontact she had with them. Oh yes, sometimes they had fights, but Tara from Rhodes would always dominate them by her voice.

She was an inspiration to the youth in the arena's, mostly when they were in the arena's of lions and snakes. But since the fly found out she had returned from the wasp's place, her skull hangs above his throne. The fly didn't have any mercy to those who had returned from the waspian domain. The arena's of the wasp were foul in his eyes, and one day he invaded the place. He found out about the waspian bloodwells and fed himself.

If anyone was wild, it was Tara from Rhodes. She dived from tall rocks in rivers, she wrestled with bears, apes, and dangerous Martian beasts, and had to survive among the most murderous tribes of Mars. She had a lot of enemies and not many friends. As you can imagine in such wildernesses like the wildernesses of Mars she became a soul-hunter, one of the darkest. If anyone could stir up horror it was Tara from Rhodes. With her lions and panthers she waged wars against the most dangerous tribes. Most of the times she was driven by revenge. She knew these tribes since her childhood, and she still remembered what they had done to her and her loved ones. There was no one darker than Tara from Rhodes the time she was living on Mars. They called her the black snake. She was the most feared of all warriors on Mars in that time. She believed in everlasting war and damnation more than anyone else. She always said it was the well of eternal birth.

Tara from Rhodes was a riddle no one seemed to understand. The tribe where she was born had been enslaved by Gitdugal, the killer-king. He was dressed up by bones and skulls, and his body was covered by white wasp-guards, which would attack any time he spoke. He could take away minds and souls, to turn his victims into zombies. In a huge valley they had to do slave-work. Tara from Rhodes had been saved by a monkey when the zombies of Gitdugal the killer-king invaded the camp of the tribe where she was born. Tara was then just a little girl, and the monkey took care over her for a long time, until another tribe accepted her. But since she grew up and became an outcast there, she started to look for Gitdugal the killer-king, for she wanted to set her original tribe free. But no one seemed to know where the valley was where Gitdugal the killer-king had his slaves. In her search she met Kingul, a black warrior. He knew where the valley was, but they had to be on their guard. They had to travel south for a couple of days, and they first had to defeat the armies of zombie-guards. When they came there they saw warriors of her tribe tied to trees, and from the bushes zombie-guards jumped having spinning swords. These swords were very dangerous for they didn't only kill you, but they also killed your soul and mind. Tara from Rhodes shrieked and yelled, while she took her knife and threw it into the heart of the first zombie-guard. Then she took an arrow from her quiver very fast and with her bow she quickly shot into the heart of the next zombie-guard. Then she took a spear and pierced three of them. But there were so many zombie-guards surrounding them, that soon they got captured in a net. They now had to appear before the throne of Gitdugal the killer-king. It was a strange piramid of many layers like a sort of stairway. On top there was another smaller piramid in which the killer-king sat. Many skulls were surrounding him, and white wasps were coming from his body to cover the net.

When Tara from Rhodes awoke she found herself in a bed in a huge hall. Their were soft penetrating lights coming from small oillamps. A veiled girl entered the hall, to bring her some food. She was a slave-girl but she wasn't from the tribe of Tara from Rhodes. The slave-girl made a sign with her hand, and Tara from Rhodes stood up to follow her. They came in an even huger hall, where lakes of crocodiles were. The lakes were like boiling. The crododiles looked tormented, like they could slide outside the lakes to attack every moment. Tara from Rhodes didn't trust any of them. When she walked over some bridges suddenly a plank cracked, and she slided into the depth. Immediately three crocodiles slided towards her, while she could get herself on the bridge just in time. She had to be very careful. The slave-girl knew exactly where to walk. With a beating heart she followed the steps of the girl accurately. Suddenly a huge and tall coffinlike case of bronze slided out of a wall. The slave-girl stopped walking, and told Tara from Rhodes she had to lie in the case to come to have dinner with the killer-king. Tara from Rhodes refused, but suddenly the slave-girl took a gun, and some men with sunglasses came in through a door, also holding guns. 'Your life will be over, girl, if you don't do what we tell you.' Slowly and hesitating Tara entered the case. Immediately when she laid down the case slided into the wall again. It was very dark inside, but suddenly the walls of the case started to glow. Tara from Rhodes started sweating, while the case turned hotter and hotter. Then flames appeared in the walls of the case. Tara started to scream and shriek. Suddenly there was light everywhere. She could step out of the case, as Gitdugal the killer-king was taking her hand. 'No worries, my lady,' he said. 'Do you want some tea ?'

'No,' Tara from Rhodes spoke harshly, 'you need to free my people.' But Gitdugal showed her the wonderful and lovely, wealthy dinner-table. It was filled with all sorts of tropical fruits, the most strange and rare sorts of meat, and even bones. 'Let us discuss here,' Gitdugal spoke friendly.

'I do not want to discuss with you, you need to let my people go. I am not hungry,' Tara from Rhodes spoke persistent.

Still the killer-king tried to distract her. 'I'm sure you will like the food. It is from my rare gardens.'

'Well, I do not care about your gardens, but I do care about those who suffer in those gardens, the ones you have burdened with such slavery,' Tara from Rhodes said while her eyes were full of piercing fire. 'I warn you, king of killers, you will not like what I will do to you if you will go on with your games,' she said.

Gitdugal pushed on a button of his table. Tara from Rhodes still hadn't sat down. Suddenly some slaves entered carrying dishes and bags with meat and strange rare vegetables. Gitdugal began to eat. Then after awhile Tara from Rhodes also started to eat. After awhile Gitdugal asked : 'And, did you like the meat of your tribe ?' Tara from Rhodes stood up, and grasped the throat of Gitdugal very tightly. 'It's better you do not do that,' Gitdugal said, still friendly, and then he hit his head against her head. In one moment she was slammed to the ground. 'Now I will eat your brain-meat, lady,' Gitdugal said, 'and it's juices and blood I will use to wash my dishes and my room. I have a lot of cleaning work to do I see.' But then Tara from Rhodes kicked him in his male parts like a truck crashing through the walls. Gitdugal fell to the ground, and tried to push one of his floorbuttons, but Tara from Rhodes already stood on his hand. Then she kicked his head very hard. But what Tara didn't know was that there were also big spiders under the meat, and they started spitting all sorts of fluids towards her. Tara from Rhoses fell on the ground and lost consciousness. There are not many masters of sleep like Gitdugal. He has all sorts of tropical secrets having their own sorts of fluids, and if such a spider is one of it's deliverers in some cases, then that is very okay with Gitdugal.

It was like the veils of the brains of Tara from Rhodes were breaking, and she didn't know where she was, or how long she had been unconscious, when she slowly woke up again. She felt very dizzy. Tara from Rhodes felt her blood was growing stronger by all these strange attacks. It was like her body just didn't give up. Others would have died already in the dangerous and tropical mysteries of the realms of Gitdugal with all these poisons threatening the heart and the blood. Some of these rare fluids should have block the nerves of the brains in certain area's so that Tara from Rhodes wouldn't be able to breath and move anymore, for to breathe you needed to use the muscles of your lungs. But Tara from Rhodes seemed to be immune to these lethal threats. Maybe that was because she just lived the wild life. She didn't believe in society. She believed in the industry of nature, by which she could raise the more refined forms of immunology, not poisoned by the paw of civilization. It was the force of civilization she hated, for it bound her to something she was not from origin.

Finally another slave came to the place where Tara from Rhodes was now. It was a dark cave, smelling like the slime of snakes and spiders. The slave told her that Gitdugal wanted to play a game with her : Wild Chess. It would be a living chess, for people of her tribe would be the pawns. If she would win she would free her tribe, but if she would lose, then Gitdugal would take her skull. To Tara from Rhodes it seemed unfair, for on both sides the pawns would be from her tribe, but she didn't have another choice. Gitdugal called it the Chess of Knives, for all living pawns had to carry a knife, and when they had to move they had to push the knife to the next field. Tara from Rhodes only had one demand : All the pawns had to be blindfolded. Gitdugal agreed but then he called for some slaves to sting the eyes out of all the living pawns. Tara from Rhodes was in rage, but now she would play this game to the end, to set her tribe free.

So many of her tribe were slaughtered that day in this Wild Chess, but none of them could win the game. So the killer-king decided to play it again. Tara from Rhodes was desperate, but she didn't have another choice. And again, many of her tribe got slaughtered in this cruel game. But this time none of them could win either, and they had to play it again and again.

After awhile she found out that the rules of the game were designed in a sense that no one could ever win. She found out it was a trap. If this would go on, then no one of her tribe would finally survive. She then got into such a rage that she took one of the Knives of the Wild Chess, and threw it into the heart of Gitdugal. This knife was charged with so much blood of her tribe, and with their souls of the dead, that it pierced itself in vengeance and hysterical rage into his heart. 'So, you don't want to play the game anymore I see,' Gitdugal said. 'Then we need to throw away it's pawns.' Then he called for some slaves, and they had to throw all the remaining pawns of her tribe off the rocks. In the depths of a ravine their souls shattered on the rocks, taking away their minds and lives. The horror was only raising for Tara from Rhodes could see how the ghosts of her loved ones got attracted and absorbed by the skull of Gitdugal. 'Now you have offered them an even greater slavery : the slavery of the damned.' Gitdugal said. 'Let me know when you want to play again.'

Emotionally absorbed by rage she followed him to the place he slept. He slept on a huge bed surrounded by big spiders and snakes. As she came closer his guards attacked her, but she was so full of concentrated rage that she slayed them all in short time. Gitdugal was so tired that he didn't take notice of her. But as she was coming close to his body and could even hear and smell his breath the white wasps of his body were attacking her, trying to poison her mind. But Tara raised her shield and in full rage she pierced one of his own spears through his lungs. She found this spear in his room, but he stood up and smashed her to the ground. Then he raised her up above his head and threw her through the windows above his bed. Tara fell into a river close to a waterfall. Where was she ? She had never seen this land ? On the other side of the river she saw slaves working in gardens and on fields. Were these the famed Gardens of Gitdugal ? There were trees of meat growing here, and trees of all sorts of strange organs. But there she saw Gitdugal coming. 'I wasn't done with you !' he shouted. Tara ran away through the gardens and fields. She first had to make up another strategy, for battling against him made her very tired and even confused.

I do not know the rest of the story, as she couldn’t tell me for some reason. Sometimes she just stopped telling, and then she went to sleep. Later I found out that she partly couldn’t deal with it. She knew where all her stories could lead her. She was always the flame in my heart, but since she’s gone it’s different. I can hang on to a lot of stories she told me, but most of these stories do not have an end, or she just didn’t tell how it ended. It keeps me thinking. She could be fragmentaric at times, but that was her code to survive.

The Python Stone

Chapter 1. Captured

Chapter 2. Python City

Chapter 1. Captured

From a black stained cave, Tara from Rhodes is awakening. Since she killed the black lion all she could do was sleep. Now she is running through the jungle to tell her tribe the great news. This black lion had tortured the minds of her people for such a long time. It was a mind-eater, and whenever he bit pieces of their mind away, there was horror rising in their bodies, tragedy after tragedy. Tara from Rhodes had sworn she wouldn't live in a tribe anymore. But the tribe where she was born she would never forget, and she still called it 'her' tribe. She didn't know how the terror was rising behind the mountain of the black lion. The lion had bred so many children there. Yes, the tribe of Tara from Rhodes didn't know which horror was waiting for them since the black lion had died.

The breed of black lions was in great mourning since the death of their father. They were howling in their hidden place in a dark cave behind the mountain. No one knew of their existance, for their father always went hunting, and brought the meat to their secret place. No, they never left the cave, since there were too many dangers to these young ones. But since they had grown up and their father had died, they had to leave the cave. They could smell what had happened, and they could smell the one who had done this all, the one who made them orphans in their lonely and cold years : Tara from Rhodes. They could smell the patterns of the bloodline, and they had sworn they wouldn't rest nor eat before they had killed the ones she loved. Tara herself had to be taken to their cave ... alive.

It was the greatest slaughter Tara ever had to deal with, the day the black lions came to her tribe to slaughter her loved ones. It hurted Tara more than anything. That day Tara had gone to a different area. Although Tara didn't want to live in the tribe anymore, she was always around since she freed them from slavery. Since she had killed Gitdugal the killer-king who had enslaved them for such a long time, she took his skull and brought it to her cave, where she swore she would always be around for her people. The skull of Gitdugal was of a rare stone : the python stone. But since the python stone had been stolen, she had to find it. It was the stone of slavery, and it also protected the owner of it against any form of slavery. She returned without the stone, to find out about the fate of her tribe. When she had come into a certain wigwam the leader of the black lions suddenly stood in the opening. Tara turned around, but it was already too late. She had been hit on the head by a sort of iron or bronze candle. They took her away to the den of the black lions in their cave behind the mountain.

'The soul of our father asks for revenge,' the black lions said. Tara, who was just waking up, said : 'Revenge ? I have all rights to have revenge for your father tortured my tribe, and you have finally slaughtered them.'

'There is no such thing as revenge,' one of the black lions said. 'Sometimes things just have a deeper history. We know from our father that you had killed Gitdugal the killer-king.'

'Yes !' Tara shouted, 'but do you think that's so crazy ? He enslaved my tribe for such a long time, and finally he killed most of them.'

'But why do you think he enslaved them ? What do you know about the dark primeval state of your tribe before you were even born ?' another black lion said. 'I know they weren't the best kind of tribes, but you see,' Tara said, 'maybe you are right, but when will this all end ?'

'Now,' some of the black lions said, 'for we are going to kill you and eat the intestines out of your body. But first there will be some dark nights to prepare you for dinner.'

'Oh yes,' Tara said cynically, 'I will prepare myself for dinner. Who of you want to be the first piece of meat ?' Tara took one of her legknives, put it between her teeth and jumped on one of the black lions. Another black lion jumped on Tara, and then another, and soon there was a bloody wrestling. 'Tara from Rhodes,' one of the lions roared mean, 'the dinnerbell has rung.' And he bit her horribly in her stomach. Then she kicked his mean snout as hard as she could. She took a knife and slayed two of them, while the others ran away, howling. Quickly she took the skin of the slain black lion and tied it around her middle where the wound was. She would now have to go to the lake where she could clean her wound. But also the black lions were there to drink. She felt a weakness coming over her because of the wound. So she left very soon.

All she needed now was the python stone, but she didn't know where she could find it. Maybe the black lions would have the stone, or they would know where it was, for they knew a lot making them questionable. Tara had such a dark feeling coming over her. They knew a lot about her past and that of her tribe. If the stone would be in the wrong hands, it would also affect her earlier or later. She had to find the stone which was potentially a very dangerous stone. When she had raised her power again she went to the den of the black lions again, in their caves. Deeper in the den there was a small door leading to a hall in the mountain. She had never been here before. She saw a huge black lion sitting on a throne which looked like made of python stone, but she wasn't sure. As she moved closer she heard a scream. It looked like the scream of someone from her tribe. 'Meleshuel, is that you ?' she shouted. 'Yes, come and help me,' the young warrior shouted, 'They have tied me to a stake.' It was somewhere behind the throne, where the same sort of stone was. The black lion was roaring and slowly went towards Tara. Tara had to swallow a few times. But the black lion didn't do anything. 'It is not the bad one, Tara !' Meleshuel shouted, 'he only protects me.' Tara found out the black lion couldn't walk so well. He had a handicap. Maybe he had been severed in a fight. 'Why are you here, Meleshuel ?' Tara asked, while she came closer. Suddenly she saw the stake to which the boy had been tied. 'At night the pythons come to hurt me, but the black lion protects me,' the boy told. Quickly Tara untied the boy, and they embraced each other. 'Who has done this,' Tara asked. 'Who has done this to you ?' The boy had strange scars all over his body, and some of these places were still bleeding.

'I will bring you to the lake to wash the wounds,' Tara said. 'No !' the boy screamed. 'You can't, for the black lions will find me again to bring me here.'

'I will slaughter them all until none of them has it's skull on it's body anymore,' Tara said with cold eyes. 'The only one I will spare is this friend of yours here.' He had become an outcast of the group because of his handicap, but actually he was the one who saved the life of this boy. If he wouldn't be there, they would have killed the boy. Since then the black lion stayed with the boy to watch over him, like it was his only child. The boy could see so much love in the eyes of Tara as she watched this precious black lion. For he guarded the last remains of her tribe.

Suddenly the black lions entered in. They saw the older black lion with Tara and the boy. They jumped on the older black lion and killed him. It all went so fast and they were with so many more black lions, it looked like an invasion. The boy was crying. Tara took him tight under one arm and started to slay the mass of black lions with her sword. Suddenly all sorts of pythons came out of openings in the wall. A horrible fight started between the remained black lions and the pythons. There were also pythons who went after Tara and the boy, and again, Tara was the great slaughterer. After all black lions and pythons were dead they could see through the openings a hall full of weapons of python stone. There were spears, five-pointed and six-pointed blades, bows, arrows and a lot more. The boy said these weapons were called bone-breakers. They could easily crash any sort of bones and skeletons. That the older black lion had told him. So they crept through the openings in the wall and came in the other hall. There were also a lot of small hills of python stone.

But all of a sudden giantspiders and one giantpython were coming out of a den. The boy grasped some weapons and started to fight, and also Tara grasped some weapons. She killed the giantspiders by spears and the giantpython she killed by a sevenpointed blade.

Chapter 2. Python City

Tara hoped she would find the stolen skull of Gitdugal the killer-king somewhere here. It was the most precious stone among all the python stones. But there was no any trace of it. The boy said the black lions had spoken about it. They said it was somewhere in Python City. They would have to travel three days to the north to find Python City. It was a city in the middle of the Great Python Jungle on Mars.

When they finally came in Python City a warmth was gliding into their souls, very mysterious. It was a warm day in Python City. Most of them were on the beach at the sea. Tara asked the boy if he knew anything else about where the skull could be. The boy said they talked about a certain shop. 'Yes,' Tara said, 'but do you also know what kind of shop ?' But that the boy couldn't remember. He thought a comic-shop. So they went for a walk along the shops. There were many streets with shops, but finally they found a comic-shop. The boss of the comic-shop looked very angry. He also looked like he had drunk too much. 'What do you want ?' the man asked. Tara asked him if he knew anything about a skull. Then the man told that his wife believed in black magic, and that she had bought the skull once to capture the soul of her enemy. The man said he didn't believe in it. 'Can we speak to your wife ?' Tara asked. 'Yes,' the man said, 'tonight, for she's now at the beach.'

In the evening Tara and the boy returned to the shop, after they had taken dinner somewhere. When the woman finally got home she started to laugh when she heard about the story. 'Don't listen to him,' she said. 'He's always drunk.' But Tara knew something wasn't right. It was like she remembered the face of this woman, and it wasn't right. Then suddenly she knew it : It was a slave-girl who once worked for Gitdugal the killer-king. Of couse she knew of the powers of the skull. Awhile later the man came downstairs with the skull in his hands. The woman started to curse. But later she explained everything, and Tara seemed to be right. Tara knew how dangerous the skull could be, and didn't trust the woman with it. 'Since I killed Gitdugal and set you all free I had to take care of the skull, but once it was stolen,' Tara said. She asked the woman how she got the skull. She said she had bought it from some men called the black lions. Then Tara knew enough. Of course the black lions could shape-shift into humans to do such things. 'How much did you pay for it ?' Tara asked. 'Sixty tanarings,' the woman said. That was a lot of money. 'I will give you seventy tanarings for it, but I have to get it back,' Tara said. The woman said that that was a good deal. The woman said that they could also spend the night in her house located above the comic-shop. Tara and the boy were very tired. But in the middle of the night the woman came to the room where Tara was sleeping. She had a knife and was ready to kill Tara so that she could keep the python skull. But Tara heard her coming, and had also a knife under her blanket. She acted like she was still sleeping, and when the woman was near to her bed already, and when she almost could feel her breath in her neck she suddenly turned around and pierced the knife into the heart of the woman. She took the skull and the boy with her, and then they left Python City in the middle of the night.

Now they would go to Tara's cave, where she had a lot of hidden dens. But on their way the boy asked if he could stay with a tribe he knew very well. Tara agreed immediately. When Tara returned to her cave there was a strange man in her cave. The man looked a bit confused, and apologized immediately. 'I'm sorry but I just escaped from an arena and I had to hide myself,' he said. He explained from which tribe he was and what had happened to him. Tara understood, and told him that he could stay as long as he didn't make any troubles. Tara always had a sort of weak spot for gladiators, for she knew how life could be as a gladiator. She cared for him like he was her baby. In the middle of the night he stood before her. He was very tall. He said to her he was very scared. He couldn't sleep. He was afraid they would find him here and would take him to the arena again. He told her that he was a war-prisoner. She listened to his long story, and she took him in her arms to sooth him. She told him that she would protect him, and that if any of his capturers would ever come here she would beat the brains out of their skulls. Then Tara began to tell him stories to sooth him further. The man told her that he had lost many battles, but he fortunately never got killed. Tara immediately said that she could teach him how to fight so that he would never lose any battle anymore. She said that if he would become such a good warrior that he could defeat her in wrestling than he never had to fear anything again. But she also teached him how to fight with swords, spears and how to use a bow with it's arrows. She also teached him how to hunt for food.

One day she told him about the python skull, but she wished she would never have told about it's secrets. For in a night he woke her up, and he had the skull in his hands and put it behind him on a high place. Then he said : 'Fight for it.' The skull was taking all her strength away, and she felt like it was enslaving her. She was almost completely in the power of this man, and if the man wouldn't be of good heart he could have destroyed her heart. She now knew she couldn't feel safe anymore in her own cave since the man challenged her like this. It was like he took away the most dear thing of her heart, although he didn't destroy her heart. This was the moment her hate against men had been stirred up more than ever.

Never ever again would she give her heart like she did. She got her skull back, but she lost something of her heart, and she couldn't get it back. One night she decided to leave her cave for awhile. But when she returned she found out that the man had committed suicide. Maybe he knew that he had gone too far. She had mixed feelings about his death.

But as time went on, his soul started to return to her.

And as she accepted him in her cave again he started to become of flesh and blood more and more. And that could happen because of the python skull. He told her that he had been to the Underworlds of Mars, to Tartarus, where his soul had been captured between the squeezing Moving Walls of Everlasting Damnation. Here his soul got dense again. He said that in the place where he was everything would be turned into Python Stone. He also told her about his true reason why he had committed suicide. And they became lovers for the second time.

But as this strange resurrection went on, Tara more and more found out about what was going on. He only returned to her to seek for revenge. But he wasn't himself anymore, so Tara thought he had been sent back to her by someone for some reason. When Tara had slain him in a fight, she wanted to find out about his second coming. So she decided to go to the Moving Walls of Tartarus, a dangerous realm below the Death-realms of Mars. She knew exactly which rivers to take in the Death-realms of Mars, and finally after a long journey she reached Tartarus. When she got to the Moving Walls area she met Drinbard, a pirate-captain. She asked him about his friend, but Drinbard didn't want to tell anything. Finally she got into a fight against him. They both had two-bladed swords called doubledeckers. Finally Drinbald gave her access in the deeper realms of the Moving Walls. Before he gave in they had a fight of two days.

No one would understand the horror Tara saw there. It was here Tara really learned to fight. It was here she met Diabrillis the puppetmaster. The souls of the damned who got slamned between the walls gained so much density at times that they could form a threat against the ruling classes of Tartarus. Diabrillis was often their last hope, for he captured the densest souls from between the walls to enslave them in puppets. Tara had still no idea how her friend could escape a place like this. Tara had to pay Diabrillis a big deal of tanarings before she could enter his realms. He was such a great puppetmaster, because he knew the art of soul-slaying. His slaughtery was made of all sorts of rare python stone. The huntingfields behind the realms of Diabrillis the puppetmaker were the last area's of this strange fairground. The souls had become flesh and blood here, but now they had to survive on their journeys across the huntingfields. Here the darkest indian hunters lived, and the darkest indian tribes. All they wanted was to eat meat, and that was also what a strange billboard said somewhere in the dark pubs of this area : Eat Meat. It was for the damned souls not enough to escape from the hands of Diabrillis the puppetmaker. If there was any escape then most of the times it was organized by the dark indians of the huntingfields themselves, just because they were in need for meat. How Tara's friend could survive and escape she still didn't understand. Maybe he would have captured many women on the huntingfields by his charms, and maybe they finally let him escape ? Tara didn't know. In the pub where she sat there was a fat barkeeper doing the dishes, and there were sitting a few naked indian women at the bar. They listened to some music, had some talks and a few drinks. They looked a bit strange at Tara, but further they were friendly, and Tara didn't have the impulse to grasp her sword. The feathers of the indian hunter-women were very shiny, and Tara was looking at these ornaments for a long time. Suddenly a cowboy entered in. Tara could see that he was an escaped soul still in his process of growing dense. Tara had the feeling the cowboy didn't know where he was. Maybe he thought he had already reached the finish. The indian women started to whisper to each other, and Tara knew about what they were going to do. The cowboy walked like the whole pub was his, like he was the greatest hero of all times, for he had survived Everlasting Damnation, the Moving Walls of Tartarus and the soul-slaughteries of Diabrillis the puppetmaker. He ordered a couple of beers. Tara supposed he did that because he seemed like he never drank alone. Everyone got a glass of beer, even the barkeeper, on costs of the cowboy. Tara saw his good heart, and was worried about him. Then one of the indian hunter-women stood up and asked : 'Shall we go outside ?'

The cowboy was confused. 'Are you talking to me ?'

'Yes ?' he said, still a bit confused, not knowing what was going on. He stood up, and wanted to walk outside the pub, but in a flash Tara could see how the indian woman was about to grasp her knife. Before they could take any other step Tara jumped from her seat to the woman and kicked the knife out of her hands. But quickly the other indian woman took her spear and wanted to pierce the cowboy. Just in time Tara could jump on her neck and and pushed her on the ground by holding the neck tight between her legs. The barkeeper took the telephone, while the cowboy started to become paniced. The other indian woman tried to approach him. 'Stay away from me !' he roared, while foam almost came out of his mouth.

The indian women sat down again after awhile, and everything was quiet again. The cowboy now knew he was in danger, still. Tara thought the cowboy was a lost case. She didn't have any hope for him to survive in an area like this. Soon she found out how the indian women had turned him into living meat on a stake. But for Tara there wasn't any way to prevent it.

Very often she saw those sorts of men having their skins ripped off and shivering on a piercing stake, while indian women danced around their hopeless souls. They were still the souls of the damned. She wondered how her friend could escape all this. On these fields demons and skeleton-gods were sitting on their high horses causing the doom of everlasting damnation to full extends. Most of the times these skeleton-gods were dressed in garments, causing the horrors of indian sorcery all over the place. They were the ones who had teached all these indians here how to be soul-criminals.

Once Tara met the White Spider Queen, a sorceress who could let nipples grow on bodies in such a number that skeletons would come to suck all the blood, fluids and meat-juices out of the body by these nipples. These nipples were called the nipples of death. The Queen was a very feared woman of the hunting-fields. Even many of the indians feared her. Before Tara realized she was under the webs and fluids of giant-spiders. The White Spider tried to put her spell on Tara, but she failed. They had a fight of several months, which Tara finally won. This was how she could finally escape the horror surrounding the Moving Walls of Tartarus. She still didn't find an answer to the questions she had about the one she once loved.

Not many would believe her if she would tell about all the horrors she saw in the darker area of the Moving Walls of Tartarus. But as she grew so much in Life and Death, she more and more developped the dark sides she encountered in the area of the Moving Walls in herself. It was something she could not escape, for everything was growing darker around her, and she needed to survive and dominate her own skull. She needed to possess herself instead of letting someone else possess her, but she more and more found out about the high price it had to protect herself like this. And this attitude she didn't need only for a day, but for the rest of eternity. She had to wage an Everlasting War against everything which was threatening and possessing her, or she would lose herself forever. In her eyes that was the only Love she could really bring up to herself, but it was enough for life.

Tara wanted to return to the White Spider Queen she once defeated. She needed help from her. The White Spider Queen had mixed feelings about Tara, but finally she accepted Tara's need for help, if only to be able to take revenge on Tara. She initiated Tara deeply into her temples and her secret places, and most of all : she started to love her.

No one would expect the love which started to develop between the two. They could learn a lot from each other, and by a greater horror, they could be much saver against the higher levels of horror coming against them both. They had a shelter in each other. Tara teached the White Spider Queen how to fight by her weapons, and the White Spider Queen did the same to Tara. The White Spider Queen was still dignified in all her horrors, but Tara was rude and uncivilized like always. She didn't have any manners or behaviour, while the White Spider Queen had so many etiquettes. They used to hate each others attitude, but now they knew they had to combine them for their own survival, or they would both lose their souls in horror. The horror was hunting and growing outside, and the White Spider Queen knew that her days were counted when she wouldn't integrate with Tara. They were both parts of the same puzzle and the same weapon, necessary to win in the Everlasting War. The White Spider Queen was always so gracious that Tara although she more and more desired this jewel, sometimes just wanted to cut her skull off to decorate her weapons with it. But they knew they needed each other, and they developed an intimate and tender love-relationship.

The White Spider Queen developped Tara's lust for poetic utterances, and Tara developped the White Spider Queen's lust for stories. One day the White Spider Queen showed Tara a White Spider Stone. It was the stone of blood and lust. By this stone spiders wove their threads. These threads were nothing but slices of slain and damned blood of death. It also developped the slimy airs of spiders necessary to breath in these higher levels of horror. The stone was also called : Blood Slayer as well, especially when weapons were made of the stone. In a hall the White Spider Queen showed the delicate weapons made of such stone, and these weapons were called the blood-slayers. They could cause sudden death and damnation. The weapons were not very tall, but compact. Some of them were fourpointed blades, fivepointed blades, all sorts of strange dreadfull spears and knives and some bows.

As for Tara : She had to find a way to forget about this all, as she found out about the forces of Love being nothing else but the forces driven by a repressed revengefull heart coming from the past. These veils of the spider were nothing but tricks to hide the Evil of the Python Stone. A stone she tried to get rid of in the end, but which pierced itself a way to her heart more and more. She more and more found out about the unbearable price of such a python stone, and she couldn’t escape from it. She had become it’s slave forever.

Sharla the

Head Hunter

Chapter 1. Worshippers of Strange gods

Chapter 2. Ship of Fire

Chapter 3. The Deception

Chapter 1. Worshippers of Strange gods

No one would expect Sharla the Head Hunter to return after she was chased away by Tara from Rhodes. But it was only to prepare a harder attack. She went to her kingdom of heads again, where she had the skulls of her enemies on stakes, and even those of the ones she ones loved. She was the horror of the Mitstik River, a huge river-area on the south of Mars. No one could really explain an encounter with Sharla the Head Hunter. She took minds and souls away, to finally take their heads. She was obsessed with heads. She painted them, decorated them with feathers and jewelry, and people said she only grew wilder since the death of her father, the horrible Skeleton Eater. Whenever he was hunting, he didn't care about the meat. He only ate bones. Sharla the Head Hunter's father was a huge skeleton himself, decorated by strange misleading ornaments. Whenever people were looking at him, they lost so much of their lives. He was a strange and dangerous man, even to his daughter. It was like by his death Sharla broke so many chains of herself, yes, she was the one who had killed him.

For years she stayed on her side in the West after she had been defeated by Tara from Rhodes, but after these years she returned to the Eastside of the river. No one could really explain what happened, but she had become so much more powerful. Some said she had eaten the soul of her father.

Tara from Rhodes stood before her cave washing herself by the lake. Warriors of her tribe came to her, telling her that Sharla the Head Hunter had returned. At that moment they heard shrieking. It was Sharla the Head Hunter, coming towards them. Like a monkey she jumped from tree to tree. There was something around her neck, a snake. Tara from Rhodes took her spear, and told the warriors of her tribe to go behind her. But it was already too late. Sharla the Head Hunter had pierced on of them by an arrow. 'Run away !' Tara from Rhodes shouted to the others, but also another one was already pierced by an arrow. Then Tara threw her spear but she missed. Quickly she took on arrow from her quiver and shot it, but missed again. How could she miss two times ? What was going on ? Then Sharla the Head Hunter stood before her raising her sword. Tara took another spear and they had a fight. Sharla the head Hunter smiled. 'If I will kill you, I will kill your tribe after it, do you think that's okay ?' Tara stang by her spear, but missed : 'No,' she shouted. 'I told you already to leave this place.'

'So why ?' Sharla the Head Hunter asked ironically, 'don't you like to see heads all over the place ?'

'Well,' Tara replied, 'most of the time I like to see heads on bodies, but in this case I like to see a headless body.' Then she fiercely tried to hit Sharla's head with a knife. But Sharla jumped aside and kicked Tara against her head. 'Bull's Eye !' she shouted. Then Sharla's snake jumped on Tara and tried to strengle her. 'Have fun together,' Sharla said ironically, 'I will return when dinner's ready.' And then she left the place. Tara had a hard time overcoming the snake. The snake had a tighter grip than the usual snakes, and she tried to smash his head with a hard object in her surroundings. But the snake moved all over, and also coiled itself around her legs. Tara got troubles in breathing, and the snake was very slimy.

Suddenly she heard singing. Someone was washing herself in the lake. It was Sharla the Head Hunter. 'This place will be mine in short time !' she shouted. Suddenly Tara could throw the snake off of her. She threw the snake into the lake, and continued her fight against Sharla the Head Hunter. 'Oh, come on then,' Sharla shouted, 'I will eat you like a shark.' Tara jumped on Sharla the Head Hunter and pushed her further into the lake. Crocodiles from all sides came after Sharla the Head Hunter and she had to fight for her life. But her snake swam towards the crocodiles and took them in a tight grip, while they were slowly dying without having any breath.

These were the days of Sharla the Headhunter. She had many fights against Tara from Rhodes, for she wanted to have her skull and those of her tribe. But one day tragedy struck Sharla the Headhunter, for her snake thought it would be time to add Sharla's head to the collection of heads in the Westside of the river. The snake also thought it would be time to swallow Sharla's soul. No one knew how such a deep friendship could turn over in such a hate, causing Sharla's death. As the warriors of Tara's tribe were in extasy about Sharla's fatal friendship with the snake, and as they were feasting the whole night, they didn't know about a greater threat which was awakening, the very snake of Sharla the Head Hunter itself, with the captured soul of Sharla in it's erected pride. The snake had only grown stronger, and taller by eating the meat and soul of it's best friend. Now the snake had become the Head-collector, but it also collected souls.

The warriors of Tara's tribe didn't know about the danger moving slow towards their wigwams. While they were still feasting the snake slided into the first wigwam, taking some children away. Soon they discovered about the sudden disappearance of the children, and their feasting started to turn into mournings. The snake took the children across the river, and teached them how to hunt for heads. The snake also teached them in the way they developped a rage against their own tribe. When the children had grown up they formed their own tribe preparing so much vengeance to attack their original tribe one day. The children didn't only worship the snake, but they also worshipped Sharla the Head Hunter. They brought sacrifices to her everyday, a great part of the prey. Tara had searched for the children for a long time, but now she was about to cross the river to search in Sharla's territorium. Somewhere in a different part of the river the children's tribe was moving towards Tara's tribe. They only wanted to have one thing : heads.

The children who had grown older now had become skilled warriors. They wanted to cause the fall of their original tribe, as they were bitten in their childhood by the snake. He bit them in their skull where he placed a shiny yellow amulet to dominate them. Now they were in it's evil hands, enslaved by the tormented soul of Sharla the Hunter. All they could do was giving expression of her rage and hate. These evil children started to slaughter the children of their own original tribe. And when Tara returned to the tribe she was already too late. She couldn't find the children behind the river but she found a shiny yellow amulet like a tall cube. She found it in the temple of the snake, while some puppets of clay were sitting in front of it. She knew enough. That was the sign of domination. Now she finally had found the children it was already too late. She stood on the hill watching that what had happened, raised the shiny yellow amulet and spoke loud : 'I think I already know what is going on here.' The children turned around and when they saw the amulet it was like they were losing all their strength. Tara knew she had to be very careful now, for she couldn't underestimate the works of the snake. But the fact she had the amulet in her hands now gave her much power over the children. The amulet wasn't in the hidden temple of the snake anymore. Tara knew where this temple was, for it used to be Sharla's temple. And in a sense it still was. Suddenly some of the children started to have much pain in the back of their heads. They grasped their heads with their hands, and slowly Tara walked towards the children. They wouldn't have any chance against her, for no one could be really successfull against Tara from Rhodes. She was still the Warrior Princess of the primeval, like the black snake. And none of these kids would even think about attacking her. Tara took her knife and started to cut the shiny yellow amulets out of their skulls, as she knew what was going on. She could feel the mighty vibration of the amulet. After awhile she had many pieces of it in her hands, while the children weren't themselves anymore. It was like they were awakening out of a long long dream. Some started to cry, while others stared like frozen to the ground. The snake had done this job when the children were too young to realize what was going on, and he did it while they slept. Tara tried to explain them what was going on, and she did this with all the love she had. Since the children had invaded the tribe the survivors fleed away. No one could begin anything against such powers. They had the strength like wild animals. Now one knew that they had been gifted by the snake of Sharla the Head Hunter and her very soul. But now Sharla had been overcome and defeated again. The only thing was : Where was the snake ?

Tara knew they were in danger now, for the warriors of the tribe could return to see what had happened. They were on a hunt today, while the women and children were in the camp alone. What would they do when they would find out that so many children had been slain today ? A dark feeling had entered Tara, something which was telling her that something was going on. She suddenly thought about the snake. What if he had already possessed the minds of the warriors ? She had to do something with the amulet now. But she didn't know what. She laid the pieces in a circle and started to think. Now the amulet was hers, and she wanted to spare the warriors in their feelings. She knew where they were hunting today, and she hoped that they would stay the night there. So she went there, and fortunately when she came there it was already night and they were all sleeping. She had cut the amulets into many pieces, and by the amulet she wanted to lure them away from the danger. She knew that the snake had bound their hearts and minds by the attack, and she knew that if they would find out about their children, the snake would use them to destroy even more of the tribe. Tara knew the sorceries of the snake, and the danger of Sharla's soul. They wouldn't rest before they had torn the whole tribe apart to devour it. The snake was a possessor of minds, and Tara exactly knew which steps the snake could take to prepare the possession. The snake had almost reached it's goal with the warriors of her tribe. Slowly Tara crept to the weapons of the warriors of her tribe, while they were sleeping. In all the weapons she tried to put small pieces of the amulet. She succeeded.

Now the only thing she had to do was taking the children away across the river. They couldn't be in their original tribe anymore. She also had to find the ones who had escaped since the children invaded the tribe. But when she had reached the tribe the snake was there. It would be a horrible fight. All her rage she concentrated on the snake, while she took her sword and entered the arena. The snake had grown so much bigger now since the last time she had a fight with it. She wondered where the children were. Maybe they had already been gone to their tribe behind the river. Tara was in rage. 'I want my amulet back,' the snake roared. 'No !' Tara screamed, 'you will not get it, for your games are over.'

'You do not know with which powers you are playing, girl !' the snake roared, while it's tail slammed her in her face. 'By this amulet I will bring Sharla's soul into the minds of the tribe,' the snake spoke loud. 'But the amulet doesn't belong to Sharla's soul anymore,' Tara spoke, while she pierced her sword into the tail of the snake. 'It's her bones, it's made of her skeleton,' the snake spoke in strange delight.

'But now I possess it !' Tara shouted, 'Now I am the master of my tribe, as I am it's guard.'

'But the soul of Sharla needs to come alive again, or she will devour the tribe totally, to swipe it's souls away from Mars. She will gather her bones by herself, and then come alive again,' the snake roared. And then something strange happened. The amulet started to shriek, and in the distance the warriors of Tara's tribe were coming home. They were in panic, and some were hysterical. 'Our weapons are moving and shrieking !' they shouted. 'It's the amulet,' the snake roared. 'It is time Sharla the Head Hunter is coming alive again.' Then the warriors fell on the ground and worshipped the snake while the snake was coiling around their weapons. Tara knew she was losing the grip on her tribe, and she knew that the only place she could gather her powers again to break this sort of witchcraft was the realm of Sharla the Head Hunter across the river. She now had to make that kingdom hers, or she would be enslaved by it's powers herself.

But when she came across the river the children's tribe had possessed the whole area and had become evil again. They even didn't remember Tara. They didn't recognize her. She hoped the children didn't know about the hidden temple of the snake, so she went there, but they also possessed that temple. The kingdom of heads was against her. The children had strange weapons made of shiny yellow bone. It looked much like the amulets, and maybe it was the same : the bones of Sharla the Head Hunter. All the children were saying she would come alive tonight to gather her bones. Tara started to scream : 'No ! You have been possessed again !' But the children were shaking their heads. They only wanted to have one thing now : The head of Tara from Rhodes.

All of a sudden she got terrible headaches like ringing bells in her head. She grasped her head, but the pain only got worse. It was like a million wasps were stinging her brains, and her body got overheated. She almost fell to the ground, but she could catch herself on her knees, took her knife and cut into her skull where the pain was coming from. Soon she took a piece of the shiny yellow bone out of her head. She screamed and shrieked while she was raising it high. How could that happen to her ? How could such a piece be in her head ? Was it done by the snake ? And when ? Suddenly she heard screaming. The children were grasping themselves and each other. Some of them had pain in their legs or arms. Soon Tara had cut more pieces of the shiny yellow bones out of them. They knew Sharla would also look for these pieces.

Tara wanted to know about the secret of the shiny yellow bones of Sharla the Headhunter. She decided to search in the temple of the snake. A lot of strange altars were here, and strange stakes with totems. A lot of skulls were here. They were carrying strange smells, and were often painted and some had feathers. In the bigger skulls pythons and other big snakes were living. In another room of the temple there were also skulls, but most of them were very small. These could be the skulls of small children or monkeys. In a bigger one a hairy spider lived. The room was full of spiderwebs and behind the room there was also a small room with a low ceiling. Suddenly a piercing voice shouted : 'Tara from Rhodes ! Your friend Sharla has returned.' A huge skeleton of yellow shiny bones was standing in the opening of the small room. The snake was around it's neck. 'Yes, I am Sharla the Head Hunter, but I only need some skin, and I thought, maybe I can use yours,' the skeleton spoke. 'No way !' Tara said loud. 'I will break any bone of you to let it become my second skin. I feel so naked, I need a dress.' Suddenly fourpointed blade crashed the skeleton from behind. It was one of the children. But soon the bones were gathered again by a strange power. 'Go away, kid !' Tara shouted, 'There's witchcraft going on here, you better protect you soul !'

Tara knew she had to find out about this secret or it would enslave her forever. 'By the force of Soms !' she shouted, 'tell me your secret.' Suddenly a wind from behind crashed the skeleton again and a huge skeleton stood in the dooropening, breaking the bones with it's teeth. Then after that he started to eat and absorb the bonemass. 'I have finally come to life again,' the skeleton roared. 'Who are you ?' Tara asked with a loud commanding voice. 'I am the Skeleton Eater, her father. She had killed me and captured my soul for such a long time in the form of a snake. But now I have come to take revenge.' The snake was sliding and coiling throughout his bones. 'But what did your soul do to my tribe ?' Tara shouted loud, 'This snake has killed and possessed so much of us.'

'I was possessed too, by the meat and the soul of Sharla I once absorbed, but before that I was her slave, after she killed me and brought my soul alive again in the form of a snake. To eat her meat and soul was the first step in delivering myself from her,' the Skeleton Eater spoke. 'Now by eating her bones I hope I will break the possession.' Tara wanted to leave the temple now, but he was blocking her. 'Now all I want is your head !' the Skeleton Eater spoke loud. But the kid with the fourpointed blade had returned and crumbled the Skeleton Eater with it. 'Oh, my magical powers will gather my bones again,' the Skeleton Eater roared. 'I told you to go away !' Tara shouted loud. 'These kids won't listen.' The Skeleton Eater stood up, and said : 'I will eat and devour your bones, and I will use your meat and brains as windowdecoration.' The kid was running away again, but the Skeleton Eater ran after it. The snake slided out of the body and attacked Tara. 'Come Tara !' the child shouted. 'I need to show you something.' Tara kicked the snake aside and ran outside. The child showed a shrine to Tara. 'Here we used to worship the Skeleton Eater,' the kid said. The Skeleton Eater had disappeared. But soon Tara found out he was devouring the bones of the children, leaving their meat behind. 'Why do you worship such a god !' Tara shouted. Then the kid asked : 'Which god do you worship then ?'

'That's none of your business, but try Soms,' Tara replied harshly.

Now she had directed someone to Soms she had to leave the place and the whole domain of where she was born, the area of the Mitstik River. She gave this district over in the hands of Soms, for she didn't know it anymore. It was like she was chained by the tight chains of her youth. She wanted to forget about it all to start a new life. So she moved even more to the south, to the area of the legendary Mokotte Fields on Mars. This was even further in the south than the valleys and gardens where her original tribe had to work for the killer-king Gitdugal in earlier times. She had to travel a few weeks to come close to the Mokotte Fields. Here she would start a new life. She had become very tired of the riddles of the realm of Sharla the Head Hunter. She wanted to escape it's grip forever. In the valleys of the Mokotte Fields there would live a lot of sorcerors who could help her further. She had to go there, for an invisible force she didn't know of was taking her breath away and slowly strengling her.

In front of the Cave of Viviktus, the Wild Sorceror, there was a lair of a giantspider. The giantspider was very hairy and even had feathers. Tara wanted to go to him for help, but not much did she know about the horror of that place. No one could enter the Cave of Viviktus than the ones who could dominate it in wrestling. As she was very tired it became a long fight. The giantspider was about to strengle her. It was like this animal was taking her last piece of breath. But after awhile Viviktus the Wild Sorceror came outwards. 'I think I will have mercy on you this time, lady. You seem to have traveled a great deal. Come inside for some warm drinks,' he said. Tara stood up, while the giantspider left her alone. Inside there were halfnaked warriors sitting at bars. Most of them were looking at her. 'Oh, I want to fight against her one time,' one was shouting. Most of them were barefooted, but some of them had very strange boots or shoes. They looked like killerboots. Viviktus, the Wild Sorceror, was leading her along the bars, and soon they were in the arena's. All sorts of wild animals had to fight against the different warriors. Some of these animals she had never seen before. They were monstous Martian animals. Behind the arena's there were some arena pools. Viviktus told her that if she would defeat all these warriors and animals, he would help her.

Nights of fights followed in which she slayed the greatest warriors. Sometimes she had to fight three or four of them at the same time, and sometimes even a whole group. They called her Tara the Slayer. By the grace of Viviktus not all these warriors would die by her hands or weapons, but she defeated them all. 'There's dread on you,' Viviktus said. 'They fear you like nothing else. I must say I applaud your strength and persistence. You are cleansing your soul from witchcraft here for a great deal.' Then Tara took Viviktus tight by his throat and said : 'You Martial bunch of shatters, you promised me to help me !'

'What I tell you is the truth,' Viviktus continued, 'but I will also give you help by myself. That I did promise and I will do, as I am an honest man.'

'Some souls have reached a certain immortality, and will return on and on, after they have been killed. They have drunk from the sources of eternal death and birth, and they have a great immunity. Now these so-called immortals prey on mortals. And if they have fixed their mind on you, they can eat you all the way to your inner city, where they can and they will finally enslave you,' Viviktus said, 'It is finally by this eternal slavery you will find the well of eternal liberty, the freedom of the mind.'

'What are you trying to tell me, sorceror, are you predicting me something ?' Tara blasted. But then she got very silent. After awhile she said : 'So you will tell me that Sharla the Head Hunter will return again to me to finally enslave me ? How ?' The sorceror nodded. 'I think you are very wise, my girl, and I think you will deal with this as you continue your path. You will find out that my words to you were true.'

And as the sorceror predicted Sharla the Head Hunter came to stalk her again, and this time she slayed Tara and took her soul to the realms of Lakshor, where she became an enslaved Gladiator.

Chapter 2. Ship of Fire

After Sharla the Head Hunter took Tara's skull, Tara's soul found a fierce fire-ship in the deathrealms of Mars. She knew Sharla still wasn't done with her, and she would hunt for her soul, but on this ship she would have the chance to escape from Mars, as it became more and more a horror to her. On the Martian River of Death she was on the ship, but gladiators kidnapped her. These were the times she felt very weak. But as soon as they heard of Sharla the Head Hunter they became friends with Tara. They had to fight Sharla together. It was a warrior-boat, the one where she was now. The ones of this boat were escaped gladiators and now they were waging war against the tribes along the Martian River of Death to make prisoners for their gods. They first wanted to sacrifice Tara also, but since they had an encounter with Sharla the Head Hunter they knew they could better not touch Tara. She might help them against Sharla's attacks. What they didn't know was that Sharla attacked them because of Tara. If they would find out that Tara was the cause of this all, they would have sacrificed her for sure. They were cannibals of the highest grade on the Martian River of Death, since the gods teached them how to survive on these horrible rivers. Tara tried to escape from them many times, but all these attempts finally failed. It was like they were watching any move of her.

They didn't have much jewelry, but what they had was very precious. They had some python stones, and by that they could capture the minds and the souls of their prey. It also prevented them against any soul-enslavers. Most of the time these stones were planted in their weapons.

The friendship between Tara and them didn't last long, for once in the night Sharla the Head Hunter came to the boat. She killed the gladiators, took their heads, and captured Tara's soul. Sharla took Tara to the arena's of Lakshor where she sold Tara as a gladiator. When she could finally escape from Lakshor she returned to Mars again in search for the warrior-skulls of her friends who got beheaded by Sharla the Head Hunter. She would do anything to bring her friends back to life again. She also knew that their souls had been captured in their skulls, and that Sharla would have those skulls in her collection. So she returned to the area of the river of Mitstik, in search for Sharla the Head Hunter. Tara had now grown so much in skills, in wisdom and in so many other things. She was now ready to finish Sharla the Head Hunter forever to set her friends free.

But when she came there, it wasn't what she had expected. Although she easily found the skulls and used an oracle to talk to them, her friends didn't remember her, and didn't want to have anything to do with her. First she was in great grief because of the answers, but later she knew she first had to defeat Sharla the Head Hunter, because she seemed to dominate their mind and memory. But Sharla was nowhere to be found. Her realms were lonely and wild, almost depressed. Later she asked the oracle where Sharla was. The oracle answered that on the westside of Sharla's realms there was a new city. She would be there to raise it and rule it. The name of the city was : Eliphant City. Eliphant City would be the darkest city of Mars, a breeding place of sorcerors, witches, necromancers, thieves, assassins, soul-hunters and a lot more. Tara had the feeling she would go to the circus. Here Miss Sharla the Head Hunter would have her place now. Or would she be even Mrs. now ? Tara had so many cynical thoughts about Sharla in her head. It irritated her the way Sharla was. Oh how she would like to smash her skull into shatters to hang her brains in the trees.

In Eliphant City there were circuses and even fairgrounds indeed. But also lots of arena's. The City had a great deal of slaves, and there were enough slave-hunters operating from this side. The city also had a great deal of story-tellers and artists. Often they were wanderers coming to sell their art. In many cases they were thieves as well. Hermund Grottenweiler was a man having the most beautiful women in cages. Here they had to dance, sing and strip, but they were never allowed to come out of their cages. They lived in these cages like animals and slaves. No one was allowed to enter their cages. It was a big deal. Hermund Grottenweiler was one of the richest men of the city. He was a drinker of beer, and often he went to prostitutes to have some fun. He was also a gambler, and a lot of people said he was a thief. Men used to throw a lot of money through the bars to let the women do whatever they wanted them to do, although they could never be touched. Tara was watching some of their shows. Sometimes there were more women in one cage, and often it was nothing but brute fights. Tara knew that if she wanted to conquer Sharla the Head Hunter, some of these women could be of good use.

'How much do these women cost ?' Tara asked Hermund Grottenweiler.

'They aren't for sale,' the man said gruff. 'but I can pay you a lot if you want to work here.' Tara took the man by his throat and said : 'You mean bastard, I give you twelve-thousand tanarings for two of them.'

'Twelve-thousand tanarings for two women ? Are you crazy ? You could buy my whole business with that, but okay, I give you two women by choice,' said the man slowly. Twelve-thousand tanarings was a lot of Martian money. If you had a hundred tanarings you were already rich. 'I'll pay you later, bastard,' Tara said, but the man wanted the money now. Then someone else whispered something into the ears of the man, and after awhile the man said : 'Okay, you will pay me later, choose your two women.' So Tara took the best warriors, explained them what they had to do, and then they went on in search for Sharla the Head Hunter.

One of the women was called Lirsja, and the other Spirtja. They were both sisters or more accurate : half-sisters. Tara loved them from the first moment. They were tender, but at the same time they were bloody passionate warriors. They told Tara that they had been gladiators since childhood. It made one part of them very sensitive and another part of them numb and harsh. They had also been prostitutes for awhile, until Hermund Grottenweiler bought them. They told Tara that they had always been slaves, one or the other way. Their parents sold them to a slave-caravan when they were only three years old. This was because they lived in such a poverty. Their parents thought that when they would become slaves at least someone was taking care of them. And since they were eighteen that person was Hermund Grottenweiler. Tara didn't say anything. They were on a way to a pub, where Sharla the Head Hunter would be, according to some. It was the Great Python Pub. It was already late. Tara opened the door and looked around. The pub was full of half-naked gladiators. Most of them were women, and Sharla the Head Hunter was there also. Tara took her knife and shouted : 'Sharla the Head Hunter, friends always return. How's life, bitch ? What have you done to the gladiator-skulls of the Martian River of Death ?'

Sharla started smiling. 'What are you talking about, dear ? I have done so many things to so many skulls, so what is the deal ?' Also other women were smiling. Tara stepped on a table and smashed a hanging lamp in pieces. 'Now listen you foolish pighead, we are not here to play any games tonight. Game's over, my friend. I'm here to smear your name on the wall like wallpaper. You will not even know your name anymore,' Tara shouted.

'Oh,' Sharla said, 'but who are you anyway ? I do not remember your face.'

'I am Tara the Slayer of Tartarus, Tara from Rhodes. I am the black snake,' Tara shouted in full pride. 'Everyone knows me.' People started to laugh and Sharla said with a tight face : 'It doesn't say anything to me. Maybe our encounter wasn't impressive enough.' Then Tara jumped to the table where Sharla the Headhunter was, and kicked her in her face. Some women at the bar slowly slided with their hands to their knives. 'I have risen from the dead to come in vengeance because of all what you ...' but further she couldn't come. Someone had put a knife into her spine. Tara fell to the ground, while her two women came into action. They took some chairs and started to use them as rods. One of them took a leg-knife and threw it into the heart of Sharla. 'Sorry, I do not know you,' she whispered soft in Sharla's face, 'but it seemed you made a big mess here.' The other woman took the knife out of Tara's back, but Tara felt very sick. Some other woman tried to further protect Tara. Then Sharla stood up like a dead body. 'What a pity now,' she said, while she looked at the woman who had thrown the knife into her heart. 'I do not have a heart.' And then she started to laugh hysterically. Some men had entered the pub. They had sunglasses on, and they started to talk with the barkeeper. Sharla soon directed herself to them. 'Listo and Carshan, you come at the right moment.' The two man took their guns and began to shoot some women. Tara rolled herself under a table, and prayed for strength. She almost never prayed, but this time she had to. She prayed to Soms. The other two women of her had also dived under a table, while Sharla walked towards the door. 'Don't let them escape,' she said, and then she left. It was a horrible fight against Listo and Carshan and some other women. But soon from the arena behind the pub women were coming to help Tara and her women. One of the women took the two men by the throat and threw them through the window.

Later Tara and her two women wanted to leave the pub to search for Sharla again. But the barkeeper took his gun and said : 'You aren't going anywhere.'

What then happened Tara couldn't recall, but she woke up in the fields of Tartarus, while her back was pierced on a stake. Her feet were tied to the stake, and her hands were tied behind her back. She was surrounded by huge skeletongods with wolfskulls, all dressed in black garments. One or two of them were in shiny purple, but still dark. They had voices like speaking mud, and one of them ripped her skin open to take her heart out of her chest. Tara was screaming and shrieking. 'No one will ever defeat me,' she suddenly shouted calm. But one of the skeletongods took an axe and cut her head off. The head rolled into a valley and doom came all over the place. Sharla was walking towards them 'Wow,' she said, 'now that was wonderful.'

Tara was now nothing but a ghost, so full of rage that she enslaved many souls. She wanted to live for vengeance the rest of eternity. Tara descended into so many unknown realms of Tartarus. Here she would find out about the secrets of Sharla the Head Hunter. Tara would become a horror greater than she ever was, to survive this greater horror. By the unknown squeezers of Tartarus she would have a bit more density, but what if she would only encounter more and deeper shatterers ?

But the only thing Tara encountered in the depths of Tartarus was a machine with so many bloody heads from the decapitated ones. This machine had been called the Machine of Democracy for such a long time. The bloody heads would keep all the souls of Mars possessed. Inside it was a strange arena where the ghosts of all these souls were gladiators. The strange arena brought forth the fluids of Everlasting Damnation. Tara was drinking from this well without hesitation. The fluids were frothing like beer, and Tara didn't want anything else than to drown in it. But suddenly strange creatures were jumping on her head sucking her brains. They looked a little bit like octopi and spiders, but actually these were the heads of decapitated pythons. They were called the brain-slayers. Tara had come into the extasy of slaughter, took a word from the machine and started to slay the heads in a bloodbath. So much strength was coming over her from unknown sources. The heads didn't have skulls, only brains. Also the heads of the strange machine didn't have any skulls inside. They looked like strange rubber or plastic masks. Some jumped on Tara's head, trying to mask her to devour her brains and abundant slaughter. Suddenly she was in a shock, after she had slaughtered many of them. She had also seen the heads of her gladiator-friends who were beheaded by Sharla the Head Hunter, and whose skulls she found when she returned to Sharla's realms. What had become of them here ? Their skull-less heads were now puppets of this strange machine. Suddenly the machine started to spin like crazy. The heads started to discuss and argue like crazy. 'Now shut up !' Tara shouted. She went inside the machine again to see if the ghosts of her friends were in there. Several ghosts came towards her. These were the ghosts of her friends, and now they were very understanding. 'Yes, Tara, we have been imprisoned by this strange arena-machine again,' she said to her. So this was the machine they had escaped from before they went to the Martian River of Dead where they encountered Tara. 'How can I help you ?' Tara asked.

'We cannot escape Tara,' the warriors said. 'We escaped only to finally sink deeper in this machine. This is our fate.'

'No !' Tara shouted rude. 'I will fight this machine, and free your souls from it.' The warriors sighed. 'Tara,' one of them said very tenderly, 'the more you fight this machine, the more it will swallow you. We invite you to come with us. Come with us, you won't regret it.'

'Oh, you lost your head,' she said to the ghost. 'There's nothing I can do for you. I will leave.'

But the ghost took her in his arms and said : 'You cannot leave. No one leaves this place. You can only leave to finally realize you have sunk deeper in it.' She felt the sweetness and softness of the ghost entering her soul. It was like they were seducing her to stay with them in this doom. 'I don't want to lose myself !' Tara shouted.

'You will only find yourself, ... finding yourself back ...' the ghost said, while he showed her his tragic face. 'There's Everlasting War here, and that is our fate.' Tara tried to shake the ghost away from her, but the more she did that the more she felt he was coming over her. It was like he was slaying her brains. Suddenly, and she didn't know where it came from, she had the strength to push him away. 'I will slay Sharla the Head Hunter,' she said with a tight face, 'and then I will return to this place.'

Tara climbed her way up to where she came from, in search for Sharla the Head Hunter. The blood was rushing through all of her veins all of a sudden. But the heads from the Machine of Democracy seemed to follow her in a distance. She had now seen the secret of Sharla the Head Hunter.It was a strange fairground of heads, keeping all the politics in the upper worlds of Mars possessed and by that the politics of so many other planets. But it was lawless politics, a strange arena called Democracy letting the Everlasting Blood of Damnation flow, frothing through so many souls.

But more and more heads from this strange machine from the depths of Mars were surrounding Tara, and she started to lose strength. She remembered the words of the ghosts, and suddenly she totally lost it. The heads seemed to come out of nowhere, and it didn't stop. 'Be ready for the masses of democracy,' one ghost had told her. It was like this arena was giving birth to so many children .... all beheaded. Tara heard their shrieks in her mind, slaying her mind. It was rushing through her veins. She had mixed feelings inside indeed, like Everlasting War inside, like Everlasting Democracy. She fought, but she remembered : She was fighting herself. All these heads were hers, like her split identities. It was a Psychiatrist deep inside her mind, such a crazy one, but also nothing but a puppet from this strange fairground of Mars, coming forth from the depths of Tartarus, only to sink in it deeper. Tara had lost so many of her good thoughts, and now she was delivered into the hands of this undescribable being. She had been torn apart by it, but she still wanted to kill Sharla the Head Hunter. But where would it bring her ? It seemed to be a stupid idea, the more she thought about it, meaning nothing, absolutely nothing in the progress of the universe.

As all these puppets were slaves of Sharla the Head Hunter, Sharla was also their slave, and Tara also. Who was really the king, and who was really the slave, when all these masks would be torn off ?

She was just imprisoned by this crazy fairground called Democracy. She had to fight her mirrors, for her mirrors were fighting her, showing up .... often masked ...

What if Sharla the Head Hunter was just one of her mirrors. She couldn't stand the thought. She would want to slay that mirror, but even more : to enslave it. For there was no such thing as Death. It was only a strange mirror on a strange fairground of Mars, opening the door to so many other mirrors. One day Tara got the shock of her life. She saw her own head hanging between all the other heads of doom. That meant that she had already been a part of this machine, but for how long already ? And this probably meant that also her own ghosts had to be somewhere in the arena inside the machine. So she went inside again, and asked the other ghosts about it. 'I want to show you something,' one of them said. It was one of her warrior-friends she had encountered on the Martian River of Death. The ghost asked her to come with him to a room behind the arena. He opened a cupboard there, where she saw ten to twenty of her own ghosts hanging there at a rope. They were like fleeces. Tara was shocked. 'How do I bring them alive ?' she asked.

'Just by accepting it all,' the ghost said tenderly. It was like Tara was melting inside. She just wanted to let it come over her. A bell was ringing. The fights and wars between the ghosts started again. Tara had to fight against a friend of her. 'Tara, you must accept Democracy,' the ghost said. 'It is the Lawless. It is the Head Hunter and the Head Brooder.' Snakes got born here, as the children of the gladiators. But these children had no bodies ... only heads.

Tara knew that these heads would tear her mind apart again and again. They were brain-slayers, and it would lead her deeper into this strange abyss.

Chapter 3. The Deception

'Blood you deserve, blood to stream out of your body and die !' Someone shouted on a slave-market of Eliphant City. Tara had returned to this city, but she was wandering there a bit aimless. She didn't want to watch how this yelling would turn into another bloody fight. Oh yes, she loved fighting, more than anyone else, but sometimes she had hard times in watching it. As she walked further over the market, she saw a young slave getting beaten up by his master. Tara didn't think a second and slaughtered the slave-master to set the boy free. Sometimes she just had such strange impulses. Where they were coming from, she didn't know. She entered a pub. The barkeeper was doing some dishes and brought a beer to her in grace. 'You look thirsty, lady,' the barkeeper said. Tara drank the cup empthy within seconds. Then she stood up and walked to the girl-room of the pub. Here some slave-girls worked as whores. A tall young lady with star-earrings stood in the door-opening. 'Anyone heard of Sharla the Headhunter ?' The girl shook her head. Tara saw a newspaper and took it in her hands. Her feet were sweating because of the heat in the pub. It was a hot day in Eliphant City. In the newspaper there were many stories about heads and headhunters. The last page of the magazine had some news. There was a picture of a wild-bearded head of a savaged man called Ijupitor who had been beheaded. If someone wanted to use the skull-less head for black magic he would have to call a certain number. Tara's feet started to sweat even more. There were also some smaller pictures of bison-heads, and finally a small note about Sharla the Head Hunter. But almost everything of the note had been torn away. Like someone wanted to keep the information. 'Now, don't mess with me again, girl,' Tara said to the girl, 'Have you heard of Sharla the Headhunter, yes or no ?'

The girl said yes softly, and asked Tara to come with her. They went on a stairs and came into a dark room. The room was a bit colder, and there was also a lion caged there. 'Do you work in circus ?' Tara asked. 'Yes, also,' the girl said. Suddenly Sharla the Head Hunter stood in the door-opening. 'I will not waste my time killing you,' Tara said. 'But I will enslave you in this bottle,' and then she grasped an empty bottle from the table. 'I swear by Soms you will vanish now into this bottle,' Tara shouted. Sharla didn't move, but then she fell forward. A man in a bear-suit was standing behind her, having a strange small machine in his hand like a calculator. Also on Sharla's back there was a strange small instrument. The man took off his bear-mask, and fell in worship before the feet of Tara. 'Oh Tara,' he said, 'I have heard so much about you. I am obsessed with you. I made a Sharla puppet to let her have a double. I also want to make one of you. I work in circus you see,' the man said. He talked a bit confused and Tara kicked him hard in his face. 'Do you really think I have time for this nonsense ?' Tara said unfriendly. But Tara now knew she had to be careful, for maybe the Sharla she met in the other pub was just a double also, made to distract her. Was that the reason why she finally ended in Tartarus that way ? She should have known better, for necromancers often used doubles to deceive and enslave their victims very subtle. Some necromancers had built thousands and thousands of doubles, and then they masked them so that they could build whole cities. Would Eliphant City just be a trap to let Tara suffer in Tartarus ? And maybe there were even more victims. It all started since Tara was looking for her friends in the realms of Sharla. Here she found their skulls and an oracle. The oracle had directed her to the Eliphant City.

Tara returned to Sharla's realm where the oracle was still speaking. Still the skulls of her friends were there, and the oracle had grown so big now. It had firy flames, and it was like a well of fire now. How could she trust such an oracle anyway. And how could she further know if something was a double or the original. Suddenly she heard strange marching in the distance. When the sound came closer it was like a strange song. It was a ghost-army full of the doubles of Sharla the Head Hunter. Slaying or even believing such a double could already be very dangerous.

Tara knew that to be immune against an army of doubles you needed to produce your own doubles, so that she could multiply herself. She was kneeling down before the skulls of her friends and she started to brood them. Suddenly they stood before her. The army of Sharla's doubles had to vanish slowly. They were awakening the giants of Tartarus.

They set so many worlds in fire, and she could forget and remember so many things. It was like she was made for this, but her demons always said to her : she created herself.

If she could she would turn everything into doom. She wanted to create a total new world. And if that was her fate : She wanted to do it in Tartarus. She was the vulcano, letting the dogs of Tartarus out. She was of Tartarus, Tara of Tartarus.

And as she was writing in the scrolls of Mars : She slided deeper, descending with her ghosts into the mists of Tartarus, into it's ravines.

The Parrot

Gems

They were feared in the whole area of Wirdum Desert. They would sell the boy to a slave-caravan, but first they would do surgery on him. As the boy had been tied to a stake they started to cut him with knives. In his body they were looking for something ... parrot gems ...

When they had found the parrot gems they ripped his further skin off. After the boy stood skinless in the hot sun for hours insects came to eat from his meat. The boy died in horrible circumstances, but when they returned they called his tormented soul back from death. This was how they always used to zombificate their prisoners. Now this zombie had been ripe for slavery. In the distance a slave-caravan was coming. They had smelled some blood .... Not much later the dirty deal would start.

Tara from Rhodes had wandered through the Wirdum Desert for days. She had found a lake near a small forest. Through the soil she saw something shiny in the distance. As she moved closer she took notice of the fact that these were parrot gems. But what did all these bastards do around it ? She took her sword and started to slay them all in a terrible bloodbath. Tara the Terrible had come. After the slaughter she took the gems and moved forwards.

Tara knew everything about these parrot gems ... Actually they weren't from parrots ... Everyone on Mars would have more or less parrot gems in their bodies. When they would be taken away they were in the danger to become zombificated, which meant they could be risen from the death to be enslaved in their bodies for the rest of their lives. These were called : The zombies of Wirdum Desert.

Ammelgamma was a dealer in parrot gems. He had a shop somewhere on the westside of Wirdum Desert. Tara would go to him. Tara didn't care for parrot gems, but when she found some, she would bring them to Ammelgamma. Ammelgamma was a prophet, a collector of parrot gems. He didn't use any surgeries to zombificate his victims. He only used words. And he had a lot of success in it, for he had one of the greatest slave-caravans of Wirdum Desert. He used to travel a lot with his mass of necktied zombie-slaves. To see such a slave-caravan moving through the desert was always impressive. Ammelgamma used to prophesy and soon his whole audience had been enslaved by his words ... a strange fire, zombificating them to be in his army of everlasting damnation. They didn't fight, they only used ... words ...

When Tara entered Ammelgamma's shop he was just counting his money behind the cash-desk. Tara laid the parrot gems in the desk and slammed with her fist on the desk, trying to get his attention. Ammelgamma looked up, but then he started to count his money again. 'Sorry, lady,' he spoke indifferently with a sore throat, 'I am busy now, can you return another time ?' But Tara jumped over the desk, took him by his throat and pushed him hard against the wall, while she had raised him in the air : 'Listen you barbarian bastard, I do not travel for days to come here for nothing. We know each other, don't you ? You know where I am coming for.' Tara had the desire to throw him through the window and then to eat his brains, but she could control herself this time. The man nodded and said : 'Yes, Tara, I know where you come from, and where you are coming for, so come with me, and I will show you what I can give you for these parrot-gems.' Then they moved upstairs.

She was now probably the richest woman on Mars, although she didn't care about the money, the tanarings she had now. She just needed it for something.

In the west, upwards, she needed to do something. As she was moving forwards to an enormous stairway in the middle of the desert. This stairway was a chrystal stairway, leading to the high beach behind the desert. No one knew why she came there, no one knew what she would do. They were all staring at her while she moved through the soil. When she was on the beach she could see the bloody sun almost touching the waters. She stood there for hours, for days, as the bloody dark sun was moving slowly towards her. The wind was playing with her hair while the bloody dark sun was roaring and soaring so huge in the distance. 'You have finally come, Soms !' she shouted. 'I have done what you have asked from me.' The huge bloody dark sun was almost devouring the waters.

The next morning Tara woke up, still at the beach. She would now go to Iriptus, the killer-prophet. They called him the prophet, but actually he wasn't a prophet. He was an assassin. He would speak to his audience for hours and hours, and then he would slay them all ... not by words, but by his sword. His house was full of skulls and dead bodies. He killed for the money, the tanarings, ... it was that simple. His house was huge. He was one of the wealthiest prophets in Wirdum Desert.

After a few hours Tara came out of his house finally. Most of the time these prophets were only weaponsellers or high bosses of arena's further not caring anything about it. She called them the gamewatchers, lazy jerks. She never had much patience with them. She had only sympathy and love for the prophet-king who was an exorcist in the east of Wirdum Desert. He was called the prophet-herd, but actually he wasn't a herd. He had a breeding for prophets, to finally slaughter them all. He was feared by many prophets, although a lot of prophets didn't know anything about him.

Tara went to his castles ... They were made of python stone ... Some called it .... the sandcastles .... As she was sliding forwards through the soil and the sand of Wirdum Desert she saw him on the huge frontwall practicing with his sword.

She became so paranoid, hungry for a greater love, but all she could do was to hate. She hated love and she loved hate, and she knew the bloody sun of Soms wouldn't show up anymore, as it was written in Martian Laws of the Lawless that the bloody sun of Soms would only show up once in someone's everlasting life, as the first and the last time, the Alpha and the Omega.

The revenge of the prophets would drive her to Tartarus now. Here the wolf-skulls were already waiting for her, ready to watch more of her than she ever watched of anyone else, for they once took her own parrot gems away.

The Lawless

As I was sliding along the vast jungle of Tirmis Oracle, a ghosttown in the west of Mars, I met a pirate. Me, Tara, I was willing to know the secret of the Tirmis Oracle. Tirmis Oracle were ten demon-machines torturing so many on the surfaces of Mars, to keep them in deep tragedy and slavery. When he had told me the secret, it was the beginning of a strange travel for me. To me everyone was living in his own world, not capable to really destroy someone else by any law or anti-law. In my eyes death was just the road to the well of eternal death, holding the secret of eternal birth. To me death didn't really exist as it was one of the many stories. The pirate told me that the dark of Tirmis Oracle were guarding this well. How could I set free these ten demons captured in Tirmis Oracle for such a long time ?

There was no real escape from the demon-machines, as the pirate told me. I had to face the fact that only the well of eternal slavery would bring me to eternal liberation. The paradox was a strange machine, the first of the oracle, planted against the huge rock of the ghosttown. If I wouldn't free the demon locked up in this machine, not many would be even willing to understand the treasures of the paradox. This was the only secret the pirate told me, but he didn't even tell me how I could free the demon. I must admit, in those times I didn't care at all. Someone had to do it. Some things just needed to be done.

I came from a free world, although there was a lot of slavery. And it was just like that was all the price of freedom, like these two things belonged to each other, as a heritage of the paradox. Mars had always been a free world, where everything was possible. It was called art, but it also opened the most darkest edges you couldn't find anywhere else. One was always saying that Tirmis Oracle was a heritage from barbarians as well as indians. I was a mix of them, although I belonged to an indian tribe. We were against civilization.

The pirates seemed to know much about the Tirmis Oracle, and that was the reason why I approached them very often. They often went to Tirmis Oracle to gamble there. It was a way for them to spend their times, and another pirate told me about the first demon. He was called Traxwodka, the Python Knight. Some said he was the soul of a child once captured by a sorceror. The captain told me that there had to be a bottle in the first machine where the soul of the Python Knight had been locked up. The captain could open the screen, and gave me the bottle. This was one of the most precious gifts I got in my life. However, the Python Knight always hunted my mind in a sense. It inspired me to do the things I had to do. He has probably gone mad by the dark of Tirmis Oracle. But in later times it started to make a bit more sense to me. I had an encounter with a giant. He was a necromancer and he connected the soul to the realms of the dead. He knew the many rivers of the Martian realms of Death and he took me often with him to go on his ship. It was not a big ship, more a boat, and he often took some other friends with him. I will tell you about the journeys through the Martian realms of Death. As we started on the Martian River of Death, we took a river on it's westside taking us deeper into the jungles. We were the lawless, although we had a higher sense for ethics than usual. We believed that the mind was corrupted, and it should be ignored in all contends. Most of the Martians are familiair with these laws, but the greatest of these laws could be found in the Death-realms of Mars.

The mind cannot understand the higher worlds. The passion can. We had to live by that code or we wouldn't survive in the Death-realms of Mars. That was why we had such a strong desire to build a jungle. And that we could find along the rivers in the Death-realms of Mars.

Some of the other tribes thought they had to root us out. They thought we could form a threat against them. Maybe that was our fate. But we only did what we have to do to survive, and to follow our instincts. None of us believed in a heaven or hell. We only believed in Tartarus, the realms below the Death-realms of Mars. Tartarus was the the well of everlasting damnation. Some would call it hell, but to us it was the place of creation by the forces of destruction. Tartarus was our world, our eternal fields. We were against civilization and had established the Martian Laws to survive. It was the Law of the Lawless.

The giant knew the rivers leading to Tartarus very well. He was actually the one who brought me to Tartarus. I could never realize how deep this world would penetrate my soul. It opened me up to so many things. Here the beasts of our dreams were living. We could enter so many new wells in this area. Here the demons were living. I can recall many of them. Oshar was the demon of money. He captured souls to change them into money. Ritswik was the demon of zombification. He could kill souls to raise them up again in their bodies to enslave them forever. He was a dark sorceror, a warlock. Dikshild was also a demon. He was small and had long hair, walking around with a bag. He turned bones into money and could get money out of bodies. Jeppersla was also a demon, a python-prince guarding the python stones of Tartarus, the most precious jewels awakening desires and sex. Harmataron was a fat one. As it was the law on Mars and also in Tartarus : slavery was very important to give care to those who didn't have enough money, but it was also important to control the dangerous species. It was the way charity and protection worked on Mars as well in Tartarus.

The life on Mars and especially on Tartarus was different like all the other planets. It brought forth the seed of death. The warmest and best place to connect to Tartarus. One of the highest ranks of demons in Tartarus was the rank of the pythons. They controlled Tartarus for a big deal. Wealth was very important to become a ruler of Tartarus. The ones having the most money, tanarings, could have implants. Often they were made of special python stone, the stone of enslavement and of protection against enslavement, any form. Most of the times the rulers had a lot of implants, which was a big deal of money. Some of the implants weren't cheaper as two-thousand tanarings. In Martian money if you had a possession of a hundred tanarings you were rich. The business of implants was one of the greatest businesses in Tartarus. One of the leading men in this trade was Harold von Drinbard. He was a dark sorceror and a docter. All he was ever interested in was money. He believed in the eternal money, a law as brought by the many demons of money in the spheres of Tartarus. However Harold von Drinbard was a foreigner. He came from another planet to Mars. His friends always called him Drinbard, and he was a skilled necromancer and zombificator.

No one knew where Drinbard originally came from, as that was which he always kept secret. Several rich ones worshipped Drinbard. Especially if he would lower the prices of the implants. Some said Drinbard was the inventor of the python stone. It would be made of the trodden and squeezed souls of the damned.

Although one could reduce poverty by the great deal of slave-markets, there were also parts of Tartarus with a great deal of poverty. However, there was a well of eternal poverty leading to the eternal money. Drinbard seemed to know everything about it.

Drinbard had his throne in Tartarus, the Underworld of Mars. He was a drinker, a gambler, but most of all he was a plastic surgeon and a talented businessman. Drinbard had a business in death as he was a dark sorceror and a liar. Yes, this soul-swindler was a feared warlock in the eyes of many. To the rich he was a friend, someone who helped them to gain more power and control in the dark spheres of Mars. The conspiracies of Drinbard were the greatest of conspiracies in the past of Mars, for without it Mars would be a totally different place now. Drinbard succeeded to lock the soul of the boy up in a bottle. Still there is lots of talk about the boy in the bottle which they always called : The Soul of Drinbard.

Not many know where this soul is located. But I know, since I freed it. Let me tell you this story. Me, Tara from Rhodes, heard about the conspiracy of Drinbard as one of the first. Drinbard called for a circle of the darkest black magicians, necromancers, witches and soul-hunters to make their plans to capture the soul of the boy. Since they had succeeded in imprisoning the boy's soul I visited these dark sorcerers one by one to slay them. Finally I found the bottle and freed the soul of the boy, but then I discovered another terrible secret. Since I freed his soul, he became the tormented object of so many soul-hunters. He lost all the rest he had, since he had become a wanderer, always on the run, as there was a big price on his head. It became such a terrible hunt that I wished I would never had freed his soul out of Drinbard's bottle. He had become so haunted. I would never forget his terrorized, paranoid and haunted face.

I was wearing an amulet with a stone called ‘the eye of the cat’. It was a stone which could communicate with cats. Of course these were all sorts of cats, also the wild ones, and those coming forth from the cats. It was a cryptic form of communication, as cats are very cryptic beings. It was the heritage we got from our ancestors, it was a cat-knife able to break the time. Most of the slavemasters had a cat-eye mouth. These were mouths in stones by which they could cause death and by which they could even let souls descend into horrible places.

The Knife

of Black Time

Chapter 1. The Eye of the Cat

Chapter 2. The Wrath of Sambara

Chapter 1. The Eye of the Cat

Tara was bathing in the Mistrus River in the South of Rhodes, the catplanet. Actually Rhodes was a solarsystem full of planets. All the planets were called Rhodes, while Tara was on Rhodes IV. Tara was making fun with a friend, and later they climbed on the sandy side of the lake. After awhile a spotted lion, very tall with thin, sly features. The spotted lion started to drink from the lake. Tara wanted to test the lion. She wanted to know if she was stronger than the lion, so she attacked him. Tara got bitten horribly, and she thought they could be friends.

Tara thought she could use this lion in her fights. She didn't see the lion here before, and she was very impressed by it's spots. But the lion attacked her again, and Tara grasped him by the neck and threw him away. But now the lion really got angry and jumped on her ... but suddenly he licked her ... It seemed the lion started to like her.

The lion licked her wound. Although the bite was the cruellest bite she ever felt, she now felt a care she never felt before. Together they were walking into the jungle. Tara knew the spotted lion would protect her with his life.

On her forehead Tara was wearing an amulet with a stone called 'the eye of the cat'. She once got it from a sorcerer who called her the queen of the cats. It was a stone by which she could better communicate with the cats. Of course these were all sorts of cats, also the wild ones, and those coming forth from the cats.

It was a cryptic form of communication, as cats are very cryptic beings. There was a scar growing from the wound. The spotted lion would now forever recognize Tara as his friend. The lion led Tara to his cave, a very huge cave, were a lot of his friends were walking, sitting, sleeping or working, having the same scar. Now Tara was one of them.

Suddenly the spotted lion started to speak :

'This is a great day, since Tara from Rhodes has joined our group. She is a warrior and of great use in our search for the knife of black time.'

'What is that ?' Tara asked.

The lion looked deep into her eyes, like he pierced his way through her mind. and said : 'It was the heritage we got from our ancestors, it was a cat-knife able to break the time, to bring us back to Rhodes III our motherplanet.'

Far away from the spotted lion's cave a mass of slaves was wandering through the desert of fire. Suddenly they had to stop before a fire-lake where they had to drink from the firewaters. Now they had received strength again to work in the desert. They had coloured necklaces like thin small snakes, carrying the energy of black time, a sinister energy keeping them bound to the realms of the dead. If they would only have the knife of black time, they could escape.

They had a slavemaster called Sambara, who was the keeper of this magical knife. He was a sorcerer, a dark one, and he ruled them all by the knife.

Most of the slavemasters on Rhodes IV had a cat-eye mouth. These were mouths in stones by which they could cause death and by which they could even let souls descend into horrible places like the Gorgoon. No one could get such a mouth very easy, for first they had to go to a sorcerer and then they had to swallow such a cat-eye. By that they would first descend in the Gorgoon themselves, and some had to sit there for a hundred years or even more. But if they got too long in the Gorgoon it would spit them out. This would be what some might call the experience of death, and then if it would please the sorcerer he would call the soul back from the realms of the death. But sometimes the sorceror chose to bring the soul back to the Gorgoon.

The ones with cat-eye gloves, which had many of stings and pins most of the time, often worked in arena's as death-gladiators. These were the ones who had to show up only when a certain gladiator got too much power. The death-gladiators were to bring balance. On Rhodes IV those with cat-eye gloves were often most feared, because they often could bring quick deaths. Most of the time these gloves were red.

One of these death-gladiators was Abarsa. He was still a young man, and before he became a death-gladiator he was someone others used to pick on. He was a very funny boy, but he was unhandy, and couldn't make it on school. All he wanted was to become a gladiator. Abarsa was always a very good and tender boy, but he acted a bit strange, almost like cryptic, and often no-one understood him. And still he had those strange smiles, and he could turn your world upside down by looking at you. Abarsa was always very selective in his work. If a gladiator pleased him, he would offer live to him. But when he saw gladiators who used to pick on others he would raise his fist suddenly because of his old anger rising up, his old pain. Sometimes Abarsa could control this action, but other times not.

Abarsa was feared because of his work, and when there were fights on marketsquares Abarsa sometimes had to go there. When Abarsa showed up they always knew it was already too late, for now there would flow some real blood, and these weren't jokes. Most of the times Abarsa would cause death. Abarsa didn't show up for nothing. This was the reason why Abarsa didn't go to marketsquares just to buy something, for that would be a too big shock. But when he hadn't been to the marketsquares for years he could show up, because a lot of them wouldn't even know who he was.

Chapter 2. The Wrath of Sambara

Rhodes III was actually a dogplanet, the motherplanet. The spotted dogs were the rulers here. There were all sorts of dogs, also wolves. The main capital was Sparta, the city of wolves. The spotted wolves lived in a huge skeleton building surrounded by sand. It was a small desert in the midst of the city. However there were some hills which looked like dunes.

The biggest spotted wolf stood up from his throne. He had a black cape, and looked like a man. 'It is now time we will open the portal between Rhodes III and Rhodes IV. It has been written in our prophesies.' The wolf stared into a chrystal ball, and saw Tara fighting against Sambara, the keeper of the knife. With her there was a spotted lion, and Abarsa, the gladiator of death. The spotted lion had brought them together. Then the spotted wolf sent some of his big birds to help Tara and her friends against Sambara the evil sorcerer. The spotted lion jumped on Sambara and then he fell, while Tara grasped the knife. ‘Hold it in the air,’ Abarsa said.

In the chrystal ball the wolf could see how his birds started to eat Sambara. He saw how Tara raised the knife of black time, and suddenly there was lightening all over the ball. ‘It’s done,’ he spoke. The portal of time between Rhodes III and Rhodes IV was opening. It happened in the pit and tunnel called the Gorgoon. In it’s depth the portal was opening.

The children of hell had been set free now, and in big groups with torches they went through the portal to the other side of the Gorgoon. It would lead them to Rhodes III, the motherplanet. The big birds brought the skull of Sambara to the portal to hang it above it. But through the mouth of the skull a red fluid started to stream, and soon there was a flood in the Gorgoon rising higher.

‘We have to close the portal again,’ the spotted wolf said. Tara watched the knife she held in her hand, and it became weak and soft. It was melting in her hands. ‘What is going on ?’ she asked.

‘We have not much time,’ the spotted lion said. ‘We have to go through the Gorgoon, where the portal to Rhodes III has been opened.’

In short time the spotted lion swam with Tara and Abarsa through the red fluid, searching for the portal. They saw dead bodies everywhere. Deeper the red fluid was thinner, like air, and they could almost walk through it. ‘Hold me tight,’ the spotted lion said to Tara and Abarsa, which they did. In speed he moved towards the portal which was already closing it’s jaws. Just in time they got through it. Later on they stepped out of the red fluid, and they were in Rhodes III, the dogplanet. ‘We have made it, Tara,’ the spotted lion said. The big birds picked them up and brought them to Sparta, to the halls of the spotted wolf.

‘We have called for the wrath of Sambara,’ the spotted wolf spoke. ‘Rhodes III will die. There is only one way to survive : the road to Orion.’

‘Where is that road ?’ Tara asked.

‘Come,’ the wolf said. He pushed a button and his throne moved away while an enormous hole in the floor appeared. ‘Jump,’ he said. Tara slided into the hole, together with Abarsa and the spotted lion. It would be a long trip through tunnels and pits, finally leading to Orion. The spotted wolf was on their side.

When they came in Orion it was burning. ‘It is Sambara’s wrath,’ the spotted wolf said. ‘But here there must be the gate to Mars somewhere.’ The wolf hit the ground a few times by a rod, and an enormous hole appeared. ‘Here it is,’ he said. And again they slided in, and this time they went to Mars in great speed.

On Mars they saw all sorts of black guards walking. ‘Those are the guards of Sambara,’ the wolf spoke. ‘We can beat those.’ Abarsa jumped forward and slew a few of them, and Tara did the same. In short time there weren’t any guards left. They had a great survey from here. They stood on a hill, looking into a new world.

‘Can we be free from Sambara here ?’ Tara asked.

‘Yes,’ the wolf said. ‘The rest of the universe is under his growing wrath.’

‘For how long will we be safe against him ?’ Tara asked.

‘If we will build our place here, for eternity,’ the wolf spoke. ‘We need to be on the Martian River of Death, which is the most fruitfull area.’

At the Westside of the Martian River of Death there was a city called Bear City. Here the soul-swindlers came, people like Sambara. Here the meanest soul-trappers and other sorts of death-dealers came, and many had their homes here. Here the cannibals of the highest grade lived, necromancers, those who played the games of death. They had their boats along the Martian River of Death. ‘Our prophesies say here we must be,’ the wolf said. In the city there were many casino’s, and there were also circuses where the dead had to work. There were also a lot of comicshops here.

The wolf had a tattoo on his body which was a map of Bear City. A red line led them through the city to another hole. This hole led them to Tartarus. ‘There were days when parts of Mars were one with parts of Orion, which was the planet Wickfin,' the wolf said. 'In the depths of Tartarus, there is a desert, and behind that there is a sea holding the last piece of this planet like an island. There was a huge explosion in history. By my tattoo we get access to that place.'

Then the wolf showed another tattoo of him, which was a scar. The wolf showed his tattoo-scar in the air, while big birds came to pick them up, to bring them to the island of Wickfin. There were only skeletons here.

'We are here for the wrath of Sambara is after us,' the wolf spoke to the skeletons.

'We do not need you here,' the skeletons said. 'You carry the curse of Sambara with you, and you will be a threat against us too. Die in the sea with your Sambara.'

'We ask you for your help,' the wolf spoke.

One of the skeletons came forward and gave a pale green stone to the wolf. 'This is the last stone of Wickfin,' the skeleton said. 'Wickfin is melting. We do not know what is happening. Even our bones are becoming softer and softer. This stone is the only gift we can give you. Please, remember us, and remember Wickfin. The island is getting smaller and smaller. We have nowhere to go, for outside Wickfin we will die. Make yourself safe.'

'Where can we go ?' the wolf asked. But the stone was melting, and the skeletons started to laugh. 'We will all be gone, as there is no medicine against the Wrath of Sambara.'

Tara drank from the water of the sea but it was salty. 'There must be a way out,' she said. But the skeletons were melting before their eyes, and also the island was getting smaller and smaller, while the birds were gone. Suddenly a huge wave grasped them. There were explosions everywhere. The sky was dark and bloody. Finally a huge pirate ship picked them up.

The captain was a cruel man. Some pirates chained them at the wall inside of the ship. 'Who are you ?' Tara asked.

‘We are the pirates of Wickfin,’ they said. ‘Those skeletons.’ And then they laughed. They were the sorcerors of death. They brought Tara and her friends to the first island, where they sold them as slaves. Soon they ended up in the arena as gladiators. Abarsa smiled. He had hoped for this.

All went so fast. Abarsa and Tara were unconquerable, and soon they made Abarsa king of the island, for they all feared him. Abarsa gave freedom to Tara, and she chose to live in the jungle. She started to live close to a volcano always bringing forth blood. These were strange eruptions. Strange white skeletons seemed to live in the volcano.

‘We are the pirates of Wickfin,’ she heard every night.

Finally she could have some conversations with them, and they wanted to make a pirate of Wickfin of her as well, for that would be the only way to get rid of Sambara’s curse. They wanted to show her their captain, and Tara was in a shock when she found out it was Sambara himself. ‘Life goes on after death,’ he said. ‘Actually we never die.’

‘Why grasping at things, while you know they will melt in your hands ?’ Sambara asked.

‘In my hands everything is stone,’ he said, ‘but in yours it melts away. Poor you. The knife of black time cannot be grasped. It can only be earned. See all those stupid souls, these pirates of Wickfin. They still think they can gain something by robbing and stealing …. Fools …. They always melt away …. And everything they take melts away ….. Poor souls …. They all hope for my almighty touch to grant them the knife of black time by which they can live forever, and hold something forever …. Would you want that ? There is only one price if you would finally earn and deserve the knife of black time. You will be stone forever, just like the things you hold, and you can never get rid of it anymore. It will haunt you forever. Is that what you wish ?’

‘Then why do you want it ?’ Tara asked.

‘I have it, and I am the only one who can handle it,’ Sambara said. ‘You see, I use the necklaces by which the energy of black time conducts itself.’

‘I have worked hard for these necklaces,’ Sambara said. ‘I am an honourable master.’

‘I want to be free, free from all this,’ Tara said. ‘You have built these worlds, and you keep us all in the grip. That’s why I returned to Rhodes, and that’s probably why I am here.’

‘Well, join the army,’ Sambara said. ‘Be one of my pirates, and when it’s your birthday I will wake you up.’

‘You are a sorcerer, Sambara,’ Tara said, ‘and I cannot do anything about that. But I won’t be your beggar. I will find my way.’

‘How, Tara ?’ Sambara asked. ‘As you know I hold all the worlds in my hand. All ways are mine.’

Tara took the amulet from her forehead, raised it against the sorcerer and spoke : ‘In the Name of the Cat, let me and my people go.’ Green radiation came out of the amulet, striking the sorcerer. But this time the sorcerer stood up and walked towards Tara to put a snake-necklace around her neck. It was like Tara was losing her mind. He pushed her into a hole like a pit, and after a deep fall she fell into a desert. The sun was burning in her neck. Strange guards came towards her, attaching a chain to her necklace to connect her to the other slaves. There were lakes of fire everywhere. Here they could drink to receive painful strength. Months of heavy labour in the desert followed. Tara lost all her dignity. She became a savage more than ever. The sun was burning her skin every day, even in the nights.

They led her to a city in the depths of the desert. It was a gladiator city where she had to fight for her life, but she conquered, and everyone feared her. Fight after fight she won, and soon she became the queen of the city. But she had still her necklace. It brought her much pain always.

The more she tried to get the necklace of Sambara off, the tighter it became. It was almost strengling her. ‘Be glad, Tara,’ the necklace suddenly spoke. It was like a snake. ‘Why would you break the curse of black time. You have seen where it can lead you. It lets everything melt.’

‘Yes, when I take the knife of black time without breaking the necklaces, then everything melts,’ Tara said. ‘The power of Sambara is in the necklaces. They are conductors, but when they are broken, then Sambara will turn into stone.’

‘It will be a disaster,’ the necklace spoke. ‘For then everything will turn into stone.’

‘Who are you ?’ Tara asked.

‘I am also a slave of Sambara,’ the necklace spoke.

‘How can I free you ?’ Tara asked.

‘As I said, everything would turn into stone when you would free us,’ the necklace said. ‘There is only one way : red time.’

‘What is that ?’ Tara asked.

‘It is the only thing making us safe against the melting and the turning into stone,’ the necklace said.

‘Where can we find it ?’ Tara asked.

‘In the depths of the desert,’ the necklace said, ‘it is like clay.’

The necklace knew a way to get underground, and showed Tara the place where the red clay was. She had to cover her body with it. She also had to smear it on the necklace, and it started to move again, becoming flexible like a snake. ‘Don’t return, Tara,’ it said. ‘The others need to find out for themselves. Just go deeper through these tunnels, and search for the core of it.

Here you will get totally free from the curse of Sambara.’ Suddenly it was gone. Tara moved further into the depths. There was red clay everywhere. She could breath again.

She was in the land of the red clay now, and she would never return. She got finally free from Sambara’s influence. She sank away in the red clay, again and again, but by holding on to some branches she could move forward. The air was thick here. She was in the underground like never before. She was free from slavery.

The End

Jewels of the Octopus

'Can you believe it ?' Tara asked. 'So many children trapped in such a small place.' She was directing her finger at a map, and the others were looking with frightened faces. 'It's really true,' she said. 'We have this thing going on for a long time, these children live underwater, not able to move, not able to see and hear, pressed into each other like siamese twins.'

'I can't belief it, Tara,' one of the boys said, 'how do they breath ?'

'You must see it like this,' Tara said, 'these kids have some sort of stones in them, by which they can breath. It gives them oxygene. These stones are some sort of jewels and they call them octopus jewels. I tell you it's a big deal, for after awhile such a stone comes free, and while it's still alive the child dies. It's like a miniature heart. They can't cut it out, as then the stone would die, so this is their way to get these stones out of the children.'

'Oh, that's cruel,' another boy said, 'why do they want to have these stones. I mean : come on, isn't the life of such a child more precious ....'

'Shhh,' Tara said, 'don't talk to loud, for they may hear it. We have this map now, and we need to be careful. The map will lead us to the places where the kids have been locked up. But it comes to this, listen : These stones are duplicators when they are on their own and when they would still be alive. They can clone souls and build new universes like this universe, but with a subtile difference. The radiation of these stones have simple access to the brains. This is how they produce natural change and even time.'

'That sounds wonderful, Tara, but why do these kids have to be sacrificed for that ?' the boy said.

'I think it is all a powergame, Huntas,' Tara said. 'The Octopus Queen of Lirmitia wants to rule the universe by it, and she already does that for a big deal.'

'Do you really want to be my mother ?' Huntas asked. 'Since you saved me out of that cave, that idea attracts me.' Tara sighed. She knew that the boys were still in danger. The Octopus Queen would do everything she could to get the boys back.

'Okay,' Tara said, 'I will be your mother, but you must promise me something.' And then there was a long conversation. A conversation by which Tara knew that her life would be changed. The Octopus Queen had locked up and tortured these boys for so long, and they were bearing many secrets in them. But they didn't know anything about the children of the lake. They called it lake, but it was a sort of swimmingpool. And Tara was persistent ... She wanted to help these kids out. But she also knew about the costs of it. There were a lot of dangers, and she knew that without the boys she wouldn't have any chance.

She had stolen the map from Kwibrillis, the killer-thief. He used to go around to kill people just so that he could steal their property. But the domain of Kwibrillis wasn't without dangers. The boys knew a lot about Kwibrillis and his traps, and within a short time they could get out of the place without any troubles.

The boys knew about an elevator leading them into the heart of the place of the Octopus Queen. It was a long trip, but the boys knew how they had to handle the elevator. They used this elevator when they had to go to work. In early years they were part-time slaves of the Octopus Queen. They had some sort of device in their necks which would make troubles if they wouldn't come to her place to do work every day. It was very hard work, and the boys were tired most of the time ... very tired. But since one of the boys had found a way to get rid of the device they escaped, but got caught again by the army of the Octopus Queen. They brought them the the cave, a horrible place of imprisonment and torture. But when they heard about the children of the lake they knew that it was way worse there. In the beginning they thought they didn't have such a stone in the depths of their bodies, but Tara explained to them that they also had such a stone, but that it was still lying dorment there. It had to be activated first. First the boys got excited about the idea that when it would be activated they could live underwater, but then the terror of reality struck their head : If they would fall into the hands of the queen again, then maybe they would became children of the lake too. Tara knew the dangers, and the map explained a lot.

In the heart of the queen's place there were always a lot of mirrors, and the boys never knew why. Tara explained to them that these mirrors were actually camera's to duplicate their souls. Then myriads and myriads of subtile changes got beamed into their heads to let them move and to experience time. They were more or less brainslaves of the queen, but the system had some weak spots.

The queen herself was surrounded by octopus stones, and wore them like jewels. She was like immortal and invincible for a big deal, and by her eyes she knew almost everything. They said her eyes could watch through walls, and she knew what she wanted. Tara knew she had to be very careful. She was wondering what Kwibrillis would have to do with such a map. The map was telling them that when they would be in the heart of the place they had to take the left tunnel. They had to wait for the night, as then the mirrors were recharging, and they were weaker then. But strange watchers were walking there. The boys said that these watchers were some sort of monkeys. They were part of the queen's army. In the distance they saw the queen sitting on a throne of stones, strange stones, like beating hearts, small hearts, like the hearts of smaller animals, but there were also some bigger stones. The stones were very strange, like they were reflecting so many things. Even watching these stones could let you feel strange.

Suddenly one of the watchers was looking them right into their faces, but it was like he was far away, like he was sleeping or something, or he just didn't really see them. What was going on here ? Suddenly Tara shouted : 'Run !' And they had to run to the left tunnel. It would be a long run, as it was a big place. Tara had to shout, because she suddenly took notice of the fact that big guns were moving towards them. Maybe the watchers weren't sleepy at all, or these guns were just sensitive, operating on their own. 'Dive !' Tara shouted. The boys all did what she said, as the guns started to fire like crazy. Suddenly alarms got activated all over the place.

'Intruders located in front of Certiviks Tunnel,' a computerized intercom spoke, 'Intruders located in front of Certiviks Tunnel.'

Suddenly the queen stood before them. She had some flowers in their hand. How could she move so fast to this place ? But when they looked to the throne in the distance, she was also sitting there. Was it a ghost, or a clone, or just someone else ?'

'No, I am the queen,' the appearance said, 'I am just liquid, like the fluids of a jelly-fish. I warn you not to move any further, for the fluids will strike you.' They were now surrounded by guns, guns in the air, moving on rails.

Tara slowly grasped her spear. But the appearance said : 'If I were you, I wouldn't do that, as this is my home, and I don't want to have any fights here. Neither will I kill any of you. But I am in need for some gladiators, so be my guest.'

And then the queen moved towards an enormous stairways downstairs, and made a movement with her hand as a sign they had to follow her. 'Fortunately,' one of the boys whispered, 'we won't become children of the lake.' But Tara watched straight ahead, not taking any notice of the boys' whisperings. The guns were moving with them. They game to a place called Royal Gun Lodge. Gladiators full of rage and hate were staring at them. The boys started to shiver. If they had to fight those big ones there wouldn't be any shatter of them left. There was a man Lactroctus, a man of great and strange power. The queen pushed Tara towards the man, and he hugged her, but then he knocked her head by his head. Tara took her spear and pierced his heart, but the man was only laughing. 'Wounds will heal,' he smiled. Then he took the spear out of his heart, and kicked Tara on her knee, very hard. Tara fell down and he put his foot on her head. But then Tara swung with the other part of her body in the air and took his head between her legs after she had kicked him in his back. The man fell down, but then another gladiator came. He took Tara and freed the man. Again it was like the gladiator hugged Tara, but soon it turned into a killing grip. Tara couldn't breath anymore, and also the other man had her in a grip again. Then a third gladiator came, and while they held Tara in the air by keeping her legs and arms tight the third gladiator jumped on her and then started jumping like crazy. Then the queen pushed the boys towards the men, but they were all laughing at the boys. The boys couldn't do anything against the men. Tara had a tough time with the jumping gladiator. And the boys soon layed on the ground by all the kicks they got, and the piramid was moving to finally step on them. Suddenly Tara felt a rush of strength streaming into her body, and she could move away a bit, while the jumping gladiator fell towards the ground. He screamed, while Tara could free one leg, kicked the other gladiator, and then also the other. She knew that spears didn't help, but it was like the three gladiators were done now. The boys still had a hard time, for they were still under heavy legs and bodies, but soon they also got freed. The queen clapped in her hands.

'I have observed you,' she said to Tara. 'I think I can use you. Come with me.'

'What will you do to the boys ?' Tara asked.

'You can leave them here, or take them with you, that's in your hands,' the queen said.

'Then I take them with me,' Tara said. But one of the boys wanted to stay as he was afraid he would become a child of the lake. So he stayed, but as soon as Tara and the other boys were gone, the gladiators killed the boy.

The queen took them to an area above the heart of the place. There were a lot of windows here, and they could watch the sea. 'I want to ask you something,' the queen said the Tara. And then a long long conversation followed, something Tara couldn't recall, but when she woke up, she had been tied in a cage full of water, like a box with windows. Only her head was rising above the small waves, but the waves soon became wilder, and Tara had to fight for her life. Where was she ? And where were the boys. After awhile it got calmer and calmer, and Tara could breath again. Some lights were gleaming in the distance. She saw the boys sitting in the same sort cages. 'Hey !' Tara shouted, 'I think you could better stay with the gladiators, as we have become prey for the lake. Altough I am not sure if this is the same. Some of the boys were crying.

Then the queen came into the room, took Tara out of her watercage and gave her a towel. 'I am now sure of it,' the queen said, 'you do not have anything we can use, but the boys will stay here.'

'No !' Tara shouted, 'they belong to me. Please take me instead of them. Do with me whatever you want, but set the boys free.'

But the queen didn't have any interest for that. 'I'm sorry, woman, but you don't have anything of interest to me. I will set you free, but the boys will stay here.'

Tara felt very dizzy and didn't know what to do. Some of the boys were shrieking and screaming. She knew that they were destined to become children of the lake. But first they would have to get rid of her. Tara almost couldn't move, like there were strange fluids in her bones. What did they do to her ? Much of it Tara couldn't recall, but when she woke up, she was out of that horrible place, but she knew she had to return.

She decided to go to Sanchez, the shaman, an old friend. Maybe he had some advice. But she also knew that Kwibrillis the killer-thief was hunting for her soul. It was like his spirit-voice was entering in her brain so strong. As she had stolen his map, but now the map was gone, but it was still strong in her head. She would never forget about that map, as it was a horror beyond terms. It would torture her mind for the rest of her life, like a trauma.

It was a riddle begging her to solve it. When she got to Sanchez he was sleeping. She made some drinks for him, and went to his room. She always had free access here, as he was such a good friend. They had a history together, and Tara always called him Snakefriend. 'Hey

Snakefriend !' she said, while she offered the drinks to the sleeping old man. 'Huh ? Now that is a surprise, and what I call the best breakfast in my life !' he almost shouted of joy. Tara took a chair. His house still looked like a castle. She told the story about the boys, and what happened, while Sanchez walked to an old tall cupboard. He took some sort of stones out it. 'These ones are dead. Here, octopus jewels, but they won't work. They are dead. But I use them for they tell me everything,' he said, murmuring. Then he smiled. 'Tara, old friend,' and he took her by the arm, and took her to another room, 'I'm so glad you are here, as I'm sure we can solve this thing.'

He threw the stones on a table, and they even really looked like they were dead. Tara remembered the stones of the queen which beated like hearts ... They were alive and well, but these stones were really dead, although the man said they still had a voice.

'Long ago,' the man said, 'Tara, listen, as this is important. Long ago the queen wasn't a queen. She wasn't even a princess. She was never a princess. There was a fight, and she took it over.'

'You mean she just disactivated the princess or queen and became queen herself ?' Tara asked. 'Yes,' the old man said, while his eyes began to shimmer. There was an old ruler, a king. It was horrible. He had a swimmingpool fool of crocodiles, jellyfishes, octopi, everything, and he used to throw his servants in these reservoires, and if they would survive, they would become his priests.'

'His priests ?' Tara asked, 'Did he think he was a god or something ?'

'No, no,' the old man said. 'he thought he was a prophet. He had to lead his priests to a sort of god, a crocodile.'

'Oh,' Tara laughed, 'hmmm ...' Tara's eyes started to shimmer also .... In a strange sense she always liked to hear about crocodiles .... And the old man continued : 'These crocodiles, Tara, were sacred to him, to the king. He thought that they would choose their own priests. If a servant survived them, then he was destined to become a crocodile-priest.'

'But one day Luceriamma, the lady of the octopus, came to his house, killed the king after a long fight, killed all the crocodiles, ruined their temples, and took the priests and their children. After conversations she drowned the priests, but the children she kept, as they would have the so called sleeping stones of the octopus. If these stones would be awakened, or activated, these kids would be able to live underwater. In the beginning she used these children to work underwater, to do research. But later she wanted to use these stones for other purposes. She knew that if she would take the stones out of the children then the stones would die, so she brought them in a project called child of the lake. Well, you know all about that. There is something she fears : Yes, the crocodile. That's why she killed it from the beginning.'

The old man stared at the table with the stones, took the stones, and threw them on the table again. 'The crocodile is a smart animal,' the old man said, 'and she knew the animal would take revenge after the destruction of their temples. There's something mysterious about the crocodile, and she fears it. Not many know this secret, but I can tell you : Kwibrillis knows. He could always penetrate her domains because of his skills .... It has to do with the crocodile. Kwibrillis was a crocodile-priest in the past. He was one of the few who could escape, but because of all the murders he saw he became bitter and dangerous. And believe me, these crocodile-priests weren't the nicest and friendliest men already. Kwibrillis is now feared more than ever, but he's carrying some deeper secrets. Some say he now works together with the queen, but no one really knows.'

'Well, we have to find out before it's too late,' Tara said persistently. 'I know some numbers to ride on. Give me the stones.' The man took the stones and gave them slowly to Tara. Tara tossed the stones in her hands and threw them on the table. 'You see, I am not good at this, shaman, but tell me what you see ?' Tara said.

'You are right,' the shaman said, 'there isn't much time.'

On their way to the palaces of the queen, the shaman said to Tara : 'Tara, I want you to know about the secret of the crocodile, and you must carry it close to your heart. It will heal you, and it will give you the key to the queen's heart where you can rescue these poor children.' Tara nodded. She wanted to belief everything the old man said, but something in her told her it wasn't right. What that was she couldn't explain.

In the palace the shaman said he wanted to speak to the queen. After awhile there was some space to do that, and the shaman got permission to enter before the queen's throne. Tara went with him. It was like the queen didn't recognize Tara, or this was just another clone. 'Watch me now,' the shaman whispered to Tara.

'Dear queen of all,' the shaman said, 'you probably know me from all the predictions I made for you, and yes, you see it all got into place. I predicted to you long ago that you would conquer the crocodile-king and his priests and that you would use their children's stones to wrought your dominion. I gave this to you.'

Tara didn't know what she heard, but she thought maybe he was trying to hypnotize her or something.

'Queen, the stones of the octopus, the dead ones, coming out when a child dies before it's time, or when the stone gets cut out, then it's not happening by the excellent way of letting them being released in our most sacred project : the child of the lake, for then the stones would be alive to become soul-cloners, and by that mastering time and change. You gave me the dead stones, to give me a better way of communicating with the dead, but honestly, my queen, I want to do a humble request,' the shaman said.

'She thinks I am her clairvoyant,' the shaman whispered to Tara. 'He died, but when she once saw me, she thought he had returned, so I just act like it.' Tara nodded. She knew how dangerous this all was, and she wondered why he didn't tell her this earlier. Maybe he had his reasons. But now they stood here before the huge throne surrounded by the beating and pulsating, almost breathing jewels of the octopus.

'What is it you want, oh clairvoyant,' the queen spoke. 'You know I would give you anything, even if it would be the half of my kingdom.'

'Do you see this woman here before you ?' he asked the queen. 'Do you know who she is ?' The queen shook her head. At the same time the shaman took a weapon. He directed the weapon to Tara and said : 'What if she is an intruder ?' Tara was wondering what the shaman was trying to do. Was he trying to confuse the queen, or was there something else going on, something which Tara couldn't grasp yet ?

Tara knew that the queen on the throne probably didn't have contact with the queen who prisoned her boys, or she was just playing games. But in a sense the queen here looked like a doll, like a very old person. The shaman just wanted to be sure that she didn't remember Tara, or that she just didn't know Tara. 'Hey Tara,' the shaman whispered, 'This clone guards the octopus-jewels, but you can see what her loss is. There is a big price to pay for someone with such riches.' Tara nodded.

'Show me the secret of the crocodile !' the shaman shouted. Suddenly the throne and even the queen started to split up, and the walls around them started to move away. They were stearing into a treasure room full of shiny green jewels like bubbles. Tara was amazed. 'How did you do that ?' she asked the shaman. 'Actually this was a hologram,' the shaman said. 'There is a certain code to have access here.'

'But why didn't you do this before ?' Tara said. 'Did you forget about the children you talked about. I thought you knew it, I mean : all the horror happening in the lakes, you know, those damned swimmingpools of the queen.' But suddenly the shaman was gone. A few moments later he came again, having his hands full of crocodile-jewels. 'These ones are dead, do you know ?' he said, 'but they look shiney, right ? I can predict with these. Come away with me.'

When they got to the shaman's house again, Tara was very confused. 'You are really a riddler,' she said, 'and I still do not know if I can really trust you.'

'Tara, listen,' the old man said, 'feel your heart. I'm serious. It's a certain code. The queen was protecting the dead stones of the crocodiles, let's say guarding, because she is madly in fear of these. When they come alive her kingdom is over. Tara, listen. You and I have a job to do. I hope you can follow this, for it's really all a riddle, but you have to trust me. When these stones come alive, she's dead, I'm telling you : she's dead. She was always in fear that someone would discover these dead stones and find a way to make them alive.'

'What is their power ?' Tara asked.

'Well, when they are dead, they don't have power but only some clairvoyant abilities, although not as much as dead octopus stones. But when these ones come alive, these crocodile jewels, then lady octopus can say goodbye, even with all her octopus stones,' the shaman said, while he smiled. The shaman was very excited about the stones.

'Now, look what I will do ...' the shaman said.

'But the children, we need to save the children,' Tara said.

'We cannot save any child from there without doing this,' the shaman said, 'so watch this, what I will do now is ...' And the the shaman took the dead octopus stones, to put them into a sack together with the crocodile stones. He brought them to a kettle, and boiled some water. Then he threw the stones in the kettle, stirred the liquid mass, and mixed it. Then he took a cup, filled it, drank from it and gave it to Tara. Also Tara drank from it. 'You stupid donkey,' Tara said, 'do you really think this will help us ?' But after awhile Tara felt weak, and had to lay down. Strange powers came over her, and she got a vision that she had a strange ancient armour. When she woke up, she told the shaman about the hallucination. 'Oh, then it's working already,' the shaman said. Tara felt like she was very heavy. She tried to rise up, but she couldn't. She was still very very dizzy. 'Man, what did I eat,' she said. The shaman was smiling.

'Why don't you feel anything ?' she asked the shaman. 'Oh,' the shaman said, 'I am used to drink these sorts of stuff, although I never drank this one. But later the old man also got the same stuff. He got weak, lay down, and got visions. After waking up, he also felt very heavy. 'Oh, you bastard,' Tara shouted, 'I begin to have pains.' But the man didn't answer, like he was struggling for his life. The day after it was a little bit better with them both. Suddenly there was ticking on the door. It was the queen. 'Clairvoyant !' she shouted, 'My sleeping part on the throne said you came to steal crocodile stones instead of asking.'

'Well, I made a request,' the shaman said, 'and then she said that I could have half of her kingdom.'

'Yes, but then you commanded to open the door of the crocodile. Is that true ?' the queen asked.

'I just did my request,' the shaman said.

'My whole kingdom is based on dead crocodile-stone, and it needs to stay dead,' the queen said. 'Show me the stone !' the queen shouted. The shaman went with her and Tara to the kettle, but there was a big bloody piece of meat in it, like a big muscle or giant-eye. Then the queen looked at Tara. 'I know this woman,' she said, 'but let me think.'

'How are my boys ?' Tara asked.

'You won't get them,' the queen said. 'They are almost ready to release their octopus stones, and then they will die.'

'Claivoyant, where is the stone !' the queen shouted.

'I do not know, it was here,' he said. Then the queen grasped in the kettle, and soon she took a stone out of it, and it was a crocodile stone, but it was still dead. 'Thank the gods it didn't come alive,' the queen said. 'How many of them do you have ?' Then the queen also grasped all the other stones out of the kettle and left.

But the shaman smiled, and said he knew she would come. He went to the sack where he had put them in yesterday, and took the biggest one out of it. 'Still have this one,' he said, 'and see : It's coming alive.' The stone was shining more and more, and also beated a pit, and pulsated. Tara smiled. This was where they were waiting for. 'I had a dream this night,' Tara said. 'I wore the crocodile-jewel on my forehead and I could go to the boys. I could save all the children.' The shaman smiled. 'Then, why not let it happen ?' Together with the stone they went to the palace of the queen. The stone was glowing and became hot. 'Lay me on the walls of the palace,' the stone said. When the shaman stuck the stone to the wall near the gate of the palace the palace suddenly exploded. But from all sides watchers were coming, directing their spears at them, but there was fire coming from the stone destroying them all. In the air they saw the left tunnel hanging, and Tara knew they had to be there. 'Throw me towards the left tunnel,' the stone spoke. The shaman threw the stone, and when it hit the walls of the tunnel the tunnel fell down. There was nothing but fire all over the place, and the fall of the tunnel caused an enormous hole in the ground. There was an empty space there, and through the mist they could walk inside, where they soon found the missing children. They took them out of their reservoirs and told them about the crocodile stone. Soon there was an army of children. The crocodile stone was flying in front of them like an amazing flame. 'You will from now on carry this flame in your heart,' the floating crocodile stone said, 'and it will protect you. There lives a desired stone in you, activated by an evil queen. It is the octopus jewel, by which you lived underwater. But when my flame activates your stones then it will let you master time and space.'

The kids were all in joy as they felt that the flame was coming in them to touch the bewitched stones in them. Now they felt like their soul got free, multiplied so many times, to make the subtile changes they needed. They now could move, they now could see and hear, and most of all : they could speak.

The Spear with the Two Sharkstones

That's none of your business ! Tara shouted to the man. The man left the chessboard. He didn't want to play Martian Chess with Tara anymore, as she didn't want to tell him her secrets. It was torturing the mind of this man for so long, and that's why he invited or maybe challenged her to do the Martian Chess. But soon she found out that it was a way for him to come closer to her heart. In the game he asked her all kind of questions. He came too close to her heart, and finally she pushed him away. That was the end of the game.

On the other hand Tara was worried about him. He seemed to be very intelligent, someone who would sacrifice himself to have some access. He was a man with a certain disease in his head, and many with that disease committed suicide on a certain age. The man almost reached that age, so Tara felt some sympathy towards him, and some suffering on her side. Or was she the one who would have the ability to help him through ? Tara couldn't resist the tension when the night was falling, and went to the house of the man. He lived alone.

Tara knocked on his door. The man was very friendly. He was glad she returned. 'I won't ask you too much anymore, Tara. I have learned my lesson now,' he said a bit shy. Tara smiled : 'It's okay. I was just a bit of worried about you. I'm glad you still like me. Let's have a drink.' A minute later the man came to the table with some drinks for him and Tara. The man stared at Tara, while she didn't feel so comfortable with that. She tried to break the tension a bit : 'So now you want to dig into my secrets just by staring at me ?' she asked friendly. The man didn't say anything. Suddenly he started to cry. 'Tara,' he said, 'you know about my disease, right ?' Tara nodded friendly. 'Tara,' he said, 'and you also know that I'm almost at the age of the death-fight, right ?' Tara nodded again. 'Well,' the man said, 'They will come, the sharks, to test me if I'm strong enough. If not, I will die by my own hand.' Tara knew these sort of things. It was a disease calling for hallucinations about sharks, and on a certain age the sharks would be defeated or would possess the person. Tara was worried about him. 'Say,' Tara said, 'don't you think it would be a great idea that I will stay with you when you have those fights. I'm a good fighter. I will be close to you, and you can call me whenever you want, but please, don't ask too many questions, as I cannot handle that. I mean, I only tell my secrets on base of trust, when I'm ready, and not because someone's asking. You always go so deep.' The man was smiling. 'Tara,' he said, 'the fight already began. Can you stay with me this night. I have a room for you.' Tara nodded. She now started to think about how she could help him in that fight.

She always wondered about how such a disease could come into someone's brains. It was a demon's sword. 'Can you tell me something about your disease ?' Tara asked.

'Yes,' the man said, 'I got it when I was three years old, when I fell from a high platform. My head crashed on the ground. Now the wound is calling forth these hallucinations. It's like a helmet of demons.'

Suddenly things around them started to move. In the air they heard someone was murmuring : 'Tara, liar.' Tara took her sword, and they both saw a ghost appearing before them. It was an old spirit with a crimson suit. He had a beard and horns. 'Back off, Tara,' the demon spoke, 'he has the scar, so he is ours. Now we will see if he's ready to die.' But Tara shouted : 'He isn't ready to die, and he will not die, as I fight for him. I can handle those demons.' But then a wind struck Tara and she got almost slammed against the wall. Tara took an arrow, took her bow and shot an arrow at the ghost, but he was just laughing. 'How can you fight something which is spirit and soul by a material arrow or sword,' the demon laughed. 'No one knows the secret of the sharks, and you won't either.'

Then Tara grasped her amulet she once got from Soms, and aimed it's radiation at the ghost-appearence. The demon was screaming, but then he shouted : 'I will be back.' Then he disappeared in a flash. That night the man was having terrible nightmares, and felt himself like a little boy. Tara went to his room to hold his hand. There wasn't any ghost-appearence, and Tara had given him the amulet to keep them at a distance. The man was very gratefull, but now he was in such a worry. 'I feel powers moving across my skin, Tara, moving across my arms. I do not want to cut myself, but the forces are so strong, like I'm fighting against sharks. I do not know their weapons and secrets. They are stronger and bigger than I,' the man said.

'Call for Soms,' Tara said. 'I almost never pray to him, but whenever I'm in life-threats I call for him. He's the memory. He shows up once and for all, but that's enough to live by for eternity. He is strong, stronger than any god, and that's why he's mine.'

'So he isn't a good communicator, but a good fighter ?' the man asked.

'He talks through riddles,' Tara said, 'he's a cryptic.'

That night the two sleep close together. Tara held him in a good grip so that he couldn't hurt himself. That morning the man is full of Soms. It's like he has some secrets now, and all what Tara can do is smile. But she said : 'Don't talk too much about Soms. He doesn't like that.'

But the man is unstoppable, and goes to the city like an evangelist. When he comes home and talks about what happened in the city, Tara gets mad. 'I told you not to tell much about Soms. You just don't listen,' she said.

'Ah, you're just jealouse,' the man said. 'With Soms I can defeat the sharks.' Then Tara becomes very silent. The man gives her the amulet back, and thinks he can deal with everything on his own now. That night Tara leaves. She's glad that the man has an idea of Soms now, but she doesn't like the fact that the man sees himself as a discipel of Soms, as Soms isn't too much in that stuff. Soms is an enigma.

The man all of a sudden has a lot of power. All the martians around him are amazed. On the marketsquares he is boasting that he's a gladiator, invincible and immortal. He beats the strongest men into the earth, and defeats the strongest beasts. And when the critical age comes it gets away and he's still alive and well. But he still feels the wound in his head, and it's like it's aching more than ever. He feels powerfull forces giving him such strength, but he feels sick. 'Oh, sickness and pain is the only thing you can expect from Soms,' Tara always tells. As that is the only way to develop yourself, and to create eternal strength. It cuts both ends.

Tara is glad the man feels happy now, and he can help so many others on Mars. But at the same time, she's still worried. And she even doubts Soms, as she sometimes has the feeling that Soms leads them all to the traps. Like he's just some sort of trickster. Tara believes in herself.

One night it's like she's fighting against a shark, and he is looking for her sword, and then he changes into some sort of ghost. 'I told you I would return.' the demon said. 'I do it faster than you.'

'Now wait a minute,' Tara said, 'Why are you here, and why do you need my sword.' But then the demon went away. She realized that these sharks were the guards of the memory, and the files of history. They would copy these files into so many that they could freeze the past. They didn't want to change the past, as it was a riddle in their eyes. They needed the sword of Tara to solve it. Tara knew the shark-priests in their temples. They believed in a creature called Most, and he was the god of repeatance and freezing. They knew that only in the Most a riddle would solve itself, and the path to the Most was repeatance. It was said that Most created the crowds. He created the sand of the deserts and the drops of the oceans. And his goal was to make them all one. That was the secret of the sharkstone she once stole, to put in her sword. She knew that once they would steal it back. If Most would succeed in his plans, then time would stand still, and there wouldn't be a future anymore, only that of domination.

It was like Mars was sinking away in the waves of multitudes, all becoming one. That was the reason why she once stole the stone. She knew of it's dorment dangers. In full revenge she went to the evil temples and their priests and slayed them one by one. Their only interest was the past, not the present, nor the future. The past would have it's own future. Now they had stolen Tara's sword they could solve their riddles. But in one of their temples Tara found the sword, but to her surprise she also found the man she once loved. He was now a shark-priest, as he believed that the sharks had initiated him by the fall and the disease. He had survived and was now worthy to be their highpriest. Most of the ones who survived the disease and the critical age became highpriests of such temples. That was also one of Tara's biggest fears, that he would be one of them. To Tara it was all nothing but a conspiracy, but she couldn't kill the man she once loved. He still wore her amulet. 'Give me the sword back, Andrulian,' Tara said. But the man gave her a spear. The spear had two sharkstones instead of one. 'Why don't you go home to contemplate about this ?' the man said. 'I still follow Soms, and his riddle brought me here.'

Tara took the spear, and could feel the forces of the spear. The man was smiling. 'Your not in the right place here, Andrulian,' Tara said, 'these men here are dangerous. I have slain them one by one, but you I will spare.'

'But Tara,' the man said, 'by Soms I will change this religion and make something good out of it. Don't you think that's great ?' But Tara went away. She didn't want to have anything to do with religion, as Soms hated it. Outside there was lightening and thunder. Later she changed her mind, and wanted to see the man again, but she never saw him again. He was gone. No one knew where he would be. The only memory about him she could hold in her hands was the spear with the two sharkstones.

The Strongest Touch

Yes, it was a prison there, this spooky Icel River. Not many would go there, as tormented ghosts were living there. They had been in prison too long, a prison designed by king Oxtacmar the Fifth. But Tara was on her way to it. It all came down to the secret of this river. This river had been cursed. They called it ghost-prison. It was only the king, his daughter and his servants who came there a lot. No one knew what actually the secret was, but Tara did. She knew about the terrible history of the river.

Tara still wore the amulet of Soms, an amulet which always seemed to come back to her. She took it off, and threw it far into the river. 'That will do,' she thought. At the same time she laughed in herself, as she often didn't belief in magic, but in her sword. To her that was the only thing she could really trust.

An old man sat close to the river. He was fishing. Tara watched him closely. What was he doing here ? Or was he just a king's servant ? Tara didn't serve the king. She would rather die. She was a barbarian, uncivilized, but with a beating heart. She didn't care about rules and laws. She lived by lust, as that was what was making someone real, as the flame of existance. To her lust was the subtile voice of her ancestors, although she didn't belief in family. It was nothing but a cage to her. Oh yes, she also saw lust in the heart of the king and his companions, but it was often stirred up by dominion. She only believed in the dominion of the sword.

To Tara lust needed to come forth from fear. That was a strange thought for someone like Tara from Rhodes, but she was a paradox. And that was why still certain Martians loved her. But how long would that love flow ? It was like a last flame surrounding Tara like a warm blanket.

Tara didn't belief in love, as it was an invention of civilization. The spirits of the river lived under the dominion of king Oxtacmar the Fifth. He believed in the many rituals of marriage to bind them all together as one hopeless bunch of shatters. When it became too close he would do everything to set up a liturgy of divorce, which always began in his own heart. He was the one who could bind together and separate.

As Tara's spiritvoice rose up in her, she watched how the amulet sank to the bottom of the Icel River. It was like she could see right through the waves and the waters. There were strange fishes in this river, also the reason why not many dared to come there. The fishes used to jump out of the waters to grasp passengers, to drag them into slow death. But Tara dived into the waters, and wanted her amulet back. She changed her mind about the way she wanted to deal with the river. She knew about this sacrifical river. Hundreds and hundreds of victims had to be drowned here for some sort of religion. Others believed it was an ancient cult by which millions and millions lost their lives. This was a history the king hopelessly tried to cover up.

On the bottom of the river she found a door, and she could open it to disappear in the ground. Not much did she know about the skeleton-king living here. He was friendly to her, and he gave her her amulet back. 'So this Soms you belief in doesn't have to do anything with the ancient cult,' the skeleton-king said.

'I don't belief in him,' she said. 'We're just partners. I do not belief in prayer, only when I'm in real troubles. But sometimes I rather die than to pray to some sort of god. It is wicked. I belief in the sword.'

The skeleton-king bowed towards her. 'You're an interesting girl,' he said.

And he showed her the places where these ghosts lived, and all his further skeletons. It was like an empire under the river. Tara couldn't belief she was here. It was like something beyond her dreams. The skeleton-king spoke about 'the glitter-world above', meaning the kingdom of Oxtacmar the Fifth. It was a luxury he couldn't grasp. The skeleton-king was the head of the shadow-world here. They still suffered under the heavy hand of history.

Tara felt like she was the bridge between these two worlds. She raised her sword, while the river was overflowing. She felt like she was a wizard, although she hated them most of the time. She believed in the sword. This was the man she wanted to give her sword to, the skeleton-king. The skeleton-king gave her his spear. It was a deal which would change the two worlds. They saw Tara as a messenger of the gods, but she wasn't. She didn't belief in that crap. She saw how these ghosts and skeletons were dominated by so many strange religions, and she wondered what the use of this was. She teached them about Soms, the Once and for All. He showed up once in a lifetime, once for eternity, to never return. You only needed to live by the memory, which was a cryptic one, speaking on so many levels. Soms was the enigma.

That day Tara set them free, as the rivers were overflowing. They could now be sown on the fields of the world above, first to become trees, but later to raise like giants in the wombs of the women. They wanted Tara as their king, but Tara was already gone, far away and unreachable. They only had to live by the memory they had of her. She had touched their hearts already Once and For All, and where could they find a stronger touch ?

Cold as Ice

Tara was on her way to Doxin, the smith of a small village. Tara came to let him attach an orange stone to her sword. This stone she found somewhere in Monkey Jungle in the North of Mars. But when she went into the house of the smith some heavy legs kicked her to the ground all of a sudden. It was like they struck Tara from out of nowhere. Doxin ran to Tara and asked if she was okay. No one saw anything. How could this happen ? But then Tara directed her finger to the ceiling. A heavy gorilla hung there between some balks. Suddenly Tara wondered where her stone was. It was gone. 'Hey,' she shouted to the monkey, 'just asking. Do you know where my orange stone is ?'

The monkey jumped down. Roared and ran out of the house. 'Oh Tara', Doxin said. 'I have also such an orange stone. You get that one, and I will attach it to your sword all for free.'

Tara looked into his eyes. It was such a lovely man. She gave him one of her amulets she wore around her neck. 'Oh Tara, you really don't have to do that,' he said. But Tara wanted to reward him. She wondered how Doxin got the stone and asked him about it. 'Well Tara, you really want to know ?' he said. Long ago the monkeys ruled on Mars. In that same period the Ruchons came to Mars, a race of cyborgs. It came to a gigantic war, one of the biggest wars in Martian History. The Ruchons won this war and took Mars over, while they took the most intelligent races of monkeys to their planet, Mainir. They got probably killed there, but I helped hiding some of the most intelligent monkeys in the depths of Mars. It's a long story, but because they were so gratefull they offered me a precious orange stone of Monkey Jungle, one of the rarest forms.

'No, Doxin,' Tara said, 'you need to tell me more about this. I'm interested.'

Then Doxin sat down and started to tell. He told that the most secrets of that period were in hands of a man still living with those monkeys deep down in the underground of Mars. It was a man called Silpar, who was in the Age of the Monkeys the best swordfighter on Mars. Doxin said that he also had to hide Silpar as the Ruchons wanted to kill him. Since the war Silpar didn't want to live on the surfaces of Mars anymore and stayed in the depths of the underground wilderness of Mars together with the monkeys. Silpar always said that Mars was still more or less dominated by secret satelites of the Ruchons. The more Doxin told about Silpar the more Tara became interested in him. It drove her to the edge of going there herself.

Doxin explained to her where the hidden place in the depths of Mars was. And soon she went there on a horse. It was a long trip. She had to travel for days and days. If Doxin wouldn't have explained how she could come there she would never find the place. It was a deep smokey wilderness, with such a strange smell that it almost drove her insane. If she wouldn't have drunk from some strong stuff Doxin gave to her she wouldn't be able to deal with it. This place was strange, and the air was dangerously charged. No one would be able to live here, unless he had a greater help and some insights in the secrets of this place. Tara remembered all the advices Doxin gave to her. They were like the necessary rituals to survive in a place like this. Suddenly she heard the shrieks of monkeys. A man came closer to her. His hands almost looked like satin. When she saw his eyes she got a knot in her throat. She could immediately see that this man had been under the lovely care of Doxin. Doxin was such a magical man that it was like everything he touched would change into gold. 'Hello,' the man said friendly, 'I'm Silpar.'

'Yes,' Tara said, a bit hesitating. 'I have heard a lot from you .... from Doxin.' When the man heard the word Doxin it was like lightening came in his eyes, and they almost everflew with joy. 'You have been sent by Doxin ?' the man said. 'Then you must be good. Doxin is .... well, he would never sent anyone who could be a harm to us. Welcome, friend.' Silpar took Tara to his hut. It was a dark hut with a lot of dust. 'You never clean it here, right ?' Tara said. 'Well, no, not really,' Silpar said. 'It's the forest, you see.'

'Oh, that's okay,' Tara said, and smeared some of the dust on her hand to smell it, 'It's just .... I want to know about this odor.' Silpar smiled ..... 'It's only here,' he said. 'This had to be a place safe against the Ruchons. This dust is everywhere in the forest, and it is to protect us. It has a certain smell which can kill any Ruchon coming close.'

'Well, if you have a medicine for Mars, and you still know that satelites of the Ruchons are dominating the surfaces, then why do you keep this stuff here. I mean : spread the news,' Tara said, a bit irritated.

Suddenly the eyes of the man started to change. 'No, no, the stuff has to stay here. This nature will die if we bring it to the surface. Only in this depth the dust with the smell can be produced. If we would bring it to the surface it would turn against us.'

'Then what is it ?' Tara asked, still a bit irritated.

'Why are you doing so bitchy all of a sudden ?' the man asked.

'I'm sorry,' Tara said, 'but I am tired, and it seems I don't get it. It's like the smell is triggering something in me I cannot deal with it.'

'Speak it out, Tara,' Silpar said. 'What is it doing to you.'

'It makes me tired and angry,' Tara said.

'It always starts with this, but if you know the secrets, you will be able to deal with it,' Silpar said.

'I feel strange,' Tara said. 'It's like I want to rip you apart, but I also want to give you a hug.'

'Then hug me,' Silpar said. 'It's not forbidden here.' Tara started to hesitate. 'If you come any closer I will tear you apart.'

'Okay, I hear you speaking,' Silpar said. Some monkeys came inside. It was like they were easing Tara's feelings a bit. 'They will help,' Silpar said. 'It's all about your initiations in these atmospheres.'

Suddenly Tara felt weak. By her last strength she jumped on Silpar and took him by his throat. 'Don't play games with me. I'm not here to mess around or to get sucked in all sort of unknown things I cannot control. Tell me about this stuff, what it is, or I'll push my arm in your mouth to take your lungs out,' Tara shouted.

'Okay, okay,' Silpar said a bit uneasy. His face had turned a bit blue and red. Tara loosened her grip a bit, and he sat down on his bed. 'Sit down on that chair ..... eh ...'

'Tara, Tara from Rhodes is the name,' Tara said.

'Tara ?' Silpar said .... 'hmmm .... That's an interesting name.' Then Tara sat down and Silpar started to tell. 'It's coming from a certain stone, the dust and it's strange smell, as an important part of the immunology of the forest. It's a stone of a certain snake and without this stone this wilderness wouldn't exist and we would be traced down by the Ruchons. We thank our lives to this stone. It is somewhere close to a waterfall and it needs to stay there.' 'What kind of snake is it ?' Tara asked. But Silpar didn't want to tell. In the night she went out of the hut when Silpar was sleeping, and she went into the wilderness to search for the stone. Silpar described the place a bit, so it was easy for her to find the place. Here she saw a large blue stone in the water in front of a small waterfall. The blue stone was almost transparent and it was like it was giving light. As she was staring at the stone a snake came forward from behind the waterfall. Such a beautiful snake Tara never saw before. Then the snake went away again. In a strange joy Tara went to the hut again. In the morning she spoke to Silpar about it, and asked him about the snake. 'It's the snake of the stone,' Silpar said. 'It has created our muscles by which we can produce the dust ourselves to raise the immunity.'

Tara looked at her muscles and then at Silpar's muscles. They had another gleam. It looked like they were softer than hers. 'How do I get your muscles ?' Tara asked. Silpar took his necklace from his neck, where teeth and nails hung. There was also a nail of a cat between them, and he pushed it into Tara's flesh. Blood started to flow, and again Tara felt anger coming over her, and irritation with other strange feelings. It was like she wanted to rip him apart again. 'Now go to the blue stone,' Silpar said, and wrap your body around it.

After awhile Tara returned with a smile on her face. 'I feel much calmer now,' she said. 'Your immunity starts to work,' Silpar said. She was now cold as ice. She didn't feel irritation or anger anymore, and neither did she feel the strange feelings she had before. She could finally rest her head now.

The End

Samdoom Shuffle

Tara awakened in her cave, down in the South of Mars. She lived here for awhile now, in this place called Maradas. She loved the place with all her passion, but she was here for a mission : to free the children of Samdoom. These children grew up in tight slavery in the worst indian tribe ever existing on Mars : Samdoom. Parents didn't have any mercy on their children, but always donated them to this form of slavery. It was some sort of ritual they had to do in these spheres so that they would stay alive. It was a dark religion : the religion of Samdoom. Actually Samdoom was the name of the Southest place of Mars and it was the name for the many indian tribes there. Tara rode on a giant widow spider across the borders of Maradas to Samdoom. Compared to Samdoom Maradas was a paradise. Tara had armed herself with many spears, and her bow with a quiver full of poison-arrows, and she felt herself comfortable on the silky spin of the giant spider. She was on her way to the central tribe of Samdoom, where priests gave money to the parents selling their children. In rage Tara slided from the spider, and threw a spear through one of the priests. Now it was war. Tara took her sword from behind her back and slayed some other priests, while the parents of the children ran away. 'Climb on the spider,' she said harshly to the children. Quickly she jumped on the spider herself who immediately had to run as warriors of the priests came after them. Tara had three children now on her spider, and one of them fell away. Tara couldn't save this one anymore. The child got pierced by a spear very quickly, as on escape the death penalty rested. This was why many of the children didn't climb on the spider.

Soon Tara was in Maradas again, and she asked the two children to tell their story. They told Tara that horrible sticky animals had been laid against their skins. These animals were more or less sacred to the tribes of Samdoom, as they were called the soul-enslavers. Tara could see the scars these animals would cause. Some places of their skin were different than other places. They also showed Tara some piercings they had in some teeth in the depths of their mouths, piercings which hurted very bad, and which had an enslaving influence on their bodies. They felt like they couldn't control themselves anymore. Then suddenly two men came to Tara's cave. Tara jumped through the air and slayed one of them, but soon others came into the cave as well. They were the indians of the Samdoom tribes, and they came with so many that Tara couldn't do anything anymore. She saw how the two children died in front of her eyes by the spear. They had tied Tara very quickly and they took her back to Samdoom. She had to come before a sort of chief in a deep, dark temple. Tara felt helpless, but suddenly her giant spider came in, and attacked her captors in full rage. 'Nomun, thank you for coming,' Tara shouted. And soon she felt the soft skin on her body setting her free. She saw the cages where the sacred animals were kept. And behind a door she saw a lot of children tied to stakes. These children got probably prepared for the ritual, but Tara set them free very quickly. The children told Tara about the older children, who already became men and women, who had to work deep in the underground. One of the children knew the way to that place, and they all followed the child. Tara gave the children same arrows so that they could fight if they needed to. It was a dark passage underground. Because of Nomun Tara knew they had a chance to survive.

Soon they got to the place where enslaved men and women had to work since they grew older. They had been chained by heavy chains, and Tara could see from their faces they lived in deep sorrows. They had to do heavy work : moving stones. It was a sort of mine in which they had to work. The stones grew on the walls and they had to cut them off. Tara thought it was strange that they didn't see any slave-guards, priests or warriors. It seemed to be a lonely place. One of the children told there had to be a unit by which electricity came from, charging the chains, and by the piercings in the teeth deep in their mouths it kept them enslaved. But soon they saw the small sacred animals all around them. The children were very afraid of these animals. 'Their skins are hot, Tara. They can burn wounds in us which will hurt for a lifetime,' one of the children shouted. Tara knew she had to stay calm. 'Get behind Nomun,' she said. Tara didn't have any idea how to treat these animals.

Then Tara saw how the sacred animals went to the chained women and men, and how these animals started to eat from their flesh, while they were shrieking. The slaves couldn't do anything, but some of the children began to sting the animals by their arrows. Now the animals really got mad, and jumped on some of the children to eat from their flesh. The flesh didn't really disappear but it was a way to suck the flesh from the inside, especially for body-juices. More and more animals seemed to come, and Tara knew that if they would fight them, it would only get worse. She jumped on the spider, and whispered to the children to do the same. 'Tell me where the unit is,' Tara whispered. One of the children knew where it was. They had to go through some cave-passages first. In the unit they saw all sorts of buttons and lights, but no one was there. Suddenly one of the animals came in and jumped on one of the children. There was nothing they could do as the grip of the animal was too tight, and it would get only tighter if someone would attack it. 'Push the red and the blue buttons,' the child who got attacked was screaming. Tara and the children did immediately what he said. Then some green lights started to move on some screens, and after awhile the child shouted : 'Now push all the yellow buttons.' When they did that a sort of elevator opened in the wall. 'Now step in,' the child shouted, like he was the king. Also the child himself tried to creep to the elevator. 'Where will it lead us to ?' Tara asked. The child didn't say anything. Stood up, and touched a certain button in the elevator. The door got closed and they went to another floor.

The child was bleeding a bit, and Tara didn't know what to do, as every action would only cause a worse action of the animal holding the child in the grip. After awhile the door opened again, and they came in an even larger room full of buttons. The room was full of the small animals, and they sat on the machines playing with the buttons. Tara began to understand that not the indians were the slave-breeders, but the sacred animals had all the might and powers. Like rats they were playing in the machines and watched the screens to see how their marionets moved. Samdoom seemed to be one big puppetshow, and Tara began to feel sorry for the tribes. The sight had struck her brains like everything was frozen. There was one machine free, so Nomun took that one. Even Nomun didn't dare to attack any of these animals. After awhile Nomun learned how to use the machine, and could ride the machine through the room along all the other machines, while Tara and the children still stood somewhere close to the elevator like frozen.

'I know how this machine works,' one of the smaller children said. The child was so young that he could hardly speak and walk. 'One of the animals told me when I was very young.' Then the child walked towards one of the animals and said : 'This one.' And the child carressed the animal without any problems. The child took the animal on it's lap and started to push certain buttons and certain switches. Then smoke started to come from other machines, and some screens were breaking. Lots of animals started to shriek and fell dead from their machines like they had been struck by lightening. A computer-voice spoke as through an intercom : 'This building will terminate itself, as the main-frame has made a fatal error. You have three minutes to leave the building.' Tara grasped the children and went into the elevator. 'In the underground we will be safe,' said a boy, and pushed the lowest button, and a certain button for speed. It was the biggest explosion Samdoom ever had, which they survived in the nick of time. Tara and the children reached the underground, but it was like there had been an earthquake. Tara took the children to Maradas and hoped that they would be safe now.

The End

Walking on Mars

Not many know about the horrors of the South-West of Mars. But of course the Martians who live there know it, and Tara from Rhodes, a lonely warrior. When she came to the South-West of Mars she had already travelled to many other parts of Mars. To her it was a dark place with many dangers, more than any other place she had visited before. The trend in these area's was the slave-implant, and most of all the chest-implant. Surgeons would do these surgeries in which they placed strange devices just around the nipples of the prisoners of war and other sorts of slaves. The devices would trigger all sorts of energies from the prisoner, so that it would be donated to a central energy-bank. By this energy-bank they dominated the souls and the minds of the whole South-West. The South-West didn't have a name, for they just called it South-West, although there were a lot of different camps. Sometimes the South-West would attack other parts of Mars just to have more prisoners for energy-donating. It was more or less a zombification-program to turn as many as possible into their soldiers, the war-gladiators. Tara wanted to know more about this program, and once she visited the head-quarters of the South-West surgery-station. She got invited very friendly. When she started to tell about what she knew they denied everything. They showed her many rooms of surgery and what they did, and they said they didn't know anything about chest-implants. Tara was a bit disappointed. She hoped she would find out about what was probably going on in this area. One day she returned to the surgery-station and this time she had her sword with her. They were still very friendly to her, but again they denied everything she knew.

'Let me show you something,' Tara said, and cut some of her skin to show them a strange device in her chest. 'Oh, but we would never do such a thing,' they said. 'We can even take it out if you wish.' In the night Tara returned. A friend of her had explained how she could enter the station without problems. There wasn't a heavy security here. She was searching through some papers in a certain room her friend told about. Then she started one of the computers to search through their files. After awhile she found something which she could project on a large screen. It was about the chest-implant, but when she read the piece about it she came to the conclusion that they didn't have anything to do with it. The piece showed the harmfull influences of the chest-implant, and it showed how the chest-implant had a grow-mechanism to let it grow into the heart to take over the speed of the blood. She went away, but a strange man like a white cyborg stopped her. 'I know what you are looking for, Tara,' the man said. 'You are looking for the central unit, but it isn't here. Your friend had been treated here in the past, but since they have a new leader these chest-implants are forbidden now.'

'How do you know all this ?' Tara asked. Then the man took his white cyborg-helmet off, and she remembered this guy. 'What are you doing here ?' Tara asked. 'I thought you were .....'

'I have traced you, Tara, forgive me, but I had to do this. You know of our equipment, and yes, you thought I died, but my equipment was stronger. It brought me back to life, by all these grow-mechanisms,' the man said. 'But now, follow me.'

Tara was very glad she found this friend back. It seemed he followed her for such a long time, and now he got her on the right track. He seemed to know a lot more about it.

They went to a camp in the deeper wildernesses of the South-West, where indian surgeons would still do these surgeries underground. The man told Tara that the worst part of the chest-implant would grow into the brains to let them deteriorate more and more, to let them get the quality of pigs. The brains would give them signals to go to the underground at a certain age, and they will end up in a breeding. Tara knew she had all sorts of chest-implants, but her friend could comfort her that these weren't the same. That was kind of a relief for Tara. In her life on Mars she went through so many mad machines in which she got so many implants deep in her body that she didn't know if it was right or wrong anymore. She wondered where the good old Tara was, Tara the slayer, the one who didn't hesitate to use her sword, and who was the best swordfighter of all. It seemed like she got civilized through the years under a strange and unknown pressure, and she hated it. Her friend explained to her that one of the worst units of the implant was the part who grew into the brains to create a certain energy-unit called 'unit zero'. It would completely take over the motoric part of the brain controlling and dominating the muscles, and it would do that after a series of epilepsy-like and paralysis-like experiences. The codes of the muscles would be erased into the zero, and would trigger a completely new rythm of stimuli to which the muscles would respond. But they knew where it would finally lead the ones having such an implant : to the breeding underground. And Tara's friend knew exactly where this breeding was. In the distance they heard strange drums. They also saw strange dancers on their way. They wondered what was going on here. Then all of a sudden Tara's friend remembered something. The motoric part of the brain would be attached to the soundpart of the brain by the implant as in a thin ray of energy, and for ninety percent the brain would work by sounds, so that those who had the implant would be more or less soundslaves, slaves to rythms, slaves to music and dance. Tara's friend told her that if he would get a hold on such an implant he would reduce the ninety percent sound-dependency to twenty percent at first. He would give five percent to smell, five percent to vision, twenty to breath, and the rest which is fifty percent he would give to feeling.

It was like heaven was on their side, as they found the main unit in a forest deep underground, and there were no any guards. The wilderness was full of exotic unknown snakes and other predators. It was like an open computer and Tara's friend immediately started to work. He could insert the new codes, and this time he knew so many slaves would get their freedom back. It was like the old heritage of Mars finally found a way to get it right.

The End

The Jewel of Memory

Tara was on her way to the realm where a warlock would live. She had to travel a lot through the snow on the mountain. It was a high place, one of the highest place on Mars, somewhere in the South. The warlock could answer some of the questions she had, but when she came there she found him killed. A strange bird flew away when she entered his room and saw him there, bleeding. It seemed the sorceror had many enemies, and this time he got killed just before Tara arrived. Tara looked around to see if she could find any traces. Later on a barbarian man entered the room. It was a silent man, and he seemed to be the guard of the warlock. The warlock was already very old and in his life he had made a lot of enemies because of his sorcery. He was a good and wise man who saved many, many from the aristocratic claws.

'Stay with me Tara,' the barbarian guard said. 'The only place I have is this castle, and you can live her too.' The two developped a deep relationship in a short time, and they could learn a lot from each other. Outside it still snowed. The barbarian guard poured some strong drink into Tara's cup, and enjoyed her presence since his old master had been gone. He missed him very much, and he couldn't deal with the pain of it. Tara helped him through.

Deep in the night the barbarian guard challenged Tara to do chess with him, so that they could distract themselves a bit from everything. A fire was burning in the hearth. It was a cold night. Tara looked him deep into the eyes while she was moving a pawn. 'Say, what are your plans for life ?' she suddenly asked.

'Now my master is gone I do not know,' the barbarian guard asked. 'Why not traveling with me ?' Tara asked. But the man wanted to stay in the castle. Suddenly some birds came in, birds of prey. They seemed to be from the old master. One of them made a lot of noise. The barbarian guard could understand the message. 'The bird is telling us that the ones who killed my master are robbers. The birds have traced them to the place they live underground. Shall we go there ?'

Tara nodded. To her that was better than playing chess. She took a sword, and soon they both sat on the backs of some giant birds of the old master. The barbarian guard had his spear with him, and when they got to the place of robbers it soon came to a fight. 'Why did you kill my master ?' the barbarian guard roared. 'I expected aristocrats would be the killers, not robbers, as my old master helped many robbers to stay alive.'

Soon the chief of the robbers came from the dark caves, raised his old hands and spoke : 'Cursed is that Lemeniates, as he has ruined our magic. We were the aristocrats from a long period ago, but thanks to your master we had to live like swines in these places.'

Then Tara and the barbarian guard knew that they were still aristocrats at heart. In short time there was blood all over the place, as they killed many of them while others fleed. They knew it was war now. Tara showed the barbarian guard how passionate she was as a warrior. 'You are definately skilled,' the barbarian guard said. 'Well, you yourself may be here also,' Tara said. Deeper in the caves they found some old aristocratic shields, and old cuirasses, but they also found an old man in bed. 'Forgive them what they did to your master,' the old man said. 'They do not know what they are doing. They have been booted out of the higher layers of the royals without any mercy.'

'Who are you ?' Tara asked.

'I'm the old king of Lakshuro,' the man said. 'These ones were my servants, but we all have been banned to the underground.'

'Why would my old master be to blame ?' the barbarian guard asked.

'He prophesied to me that my kingdom would fall,' the old man said. 'But he is not to blame. I should have listened to him and go away myself. My years were over. And actually to live the wild life is better than being king of idiots.'

Then two robbers stood in the opening of the cave. 'Father, we ....' but further they couldn't say anything, as the old man made some movements with his hand. 'They are not to blame,' he told his sons. 'I should have listened to the prophets, and go to the wilderness myself, but now they did it the rough way.'

Tara came closer to the old man. 'We will let anyone pay who were responsible for the death of master Lemeniates. You cannot stop us from pay-back time.' Then without any mercy she slayed the two robbers in a flash of the eye. 'Do what you think is right,' the old man said. 'I know my sons were guilty, but I asked you for forgiveness as great harm was done unto them.'

'If you want, old man, you can live with us in my master's castle,' the barbarian guard said.

'No,' the old man said. 'I will die soon, but I will give you the scepter of my old kingdom. I wish you will destroy the ones taking the kingdom of Lakshuro.'

'Don't worry about that, old man,' Tara said. Then the old man took the scepter from below his bed and gave it to the barbarian guard.

'Deep in my heart I knew my sons had to die for what they did to your master, but those who made them like this are also to blame,' the old man said.

'Come,' Tara said. 'We need to leave.'

Within a short time they got back to the castle, and they played chess again. They both remembered the request of the old man, but in a sense they knew they had to let it be. The old man didn't listen to the prophesy when he was younger, and now he had to bear the consequences. The prophesy would take care of itself. The barbarian guard knew this prophesy, and he also knew that the present order of the Lakshuro kingdom would also fall.

The barbarian guard took the book of his master's prophesy out of a cupboard and went through the pages. He was reading loud : 'After my death a woman will come to the castle through the snow. My guard will take this woman in, and he will love her.'

'What else is written about it ?' Tara asked. The barbarian guard went further through the pages. 'My guard will give the woman some of the tamed wolves in the underground below the castle.'

The barbarian guard looked at Tara, and said : 'Come with me.' He led Tara to an elevator which went downwards, and in the underground there was a large open space with wolves. 'Choose three of them,' he said to Tara. They stayed with the wolves for several days and after these days Tara knew which ones were the closest to her. They were friendly to Tara, and would be a good help in the fight. They brought the three animals to the castle, where they could live awhile in Tara's big room.

One night the barbarian guard and Tara lay in front of the hearth on a large bearskin. The barbarian guard was still reading in the book of his master's prophesies. Soon Tara lay in his arms and tried to distract him from the prophesies. 'Isn't it time you will start your own life ?' she asked the babarian guard.

'Yes, I think you are right. I need to let go of everything,' he said. Tara looked him deep in the eyes. 'He will not return and you must go on,' she said. 'Aren't you afraid you will misinterprete some of his prophesies. You almost read in it day and night since awhile.'

'I guess it's holy for me, Tara,' he said.

'And this scares me so much,' Tara said. 'I think it's dangerous when you have that attitude. Why can't you just read it as a story instead of letting it have such an impact on you.'

The barbarian looked into her eyes, and then nodded slowly. 'I think you are a wise woman, and I know I need to look for my own wisdom instead of always building on others.'

'You have fire in your eyes, do you know that ?' Tara said.

'And what does that mean ?' the barbarian asked.

'That you are passionate, which is a mix of anger and pain, such a strong lust for the deeper things. It can trick you, so be on your guard. Always be careful, in the passion of fear. That is your protection,' Tara answered.

'Do I need to be afraid of you ?' the barbarian asked.

'I am afraid,' Tara said. 'Afraid of the fire of passion, afraid that it will lead us astray, afraid that we can't control it any longer. You are such a good, good friend, but I never want to be dependant again. We have to live on our own.'

'But we live on our own,' the barbarian said. 'We have our own rooms. Although this is our place together where we come sometimes.'

'I'm more interested to know who of us is stronger,' Tara said when she smiled. 'There are so many things in which we can test and train our strength .... It's a sort of competition, like chess.'

Then the barbarian grasped Tara in a tight grip. 'Okay, try to get out of this grip.' Tara smiled, made some movements and freed herself while kicking him hard in his stomach. He rolled in speed to the wall, and then he said : 'I already gave up on you. You're not my type. You're way to strong for me. I need someone like a small lamb.'

'Oh, come on, you can beat me at other things,' Tara said. 'You have won with chess a couple of times.' Again the barbarian tried to grasp Tara but this time she grasped him and took him in such a tight grip that he almost couldn't breath anymore. 'Okay, peace, Tara,' he said.

'No, I won't let you go this time,' Tara said. 'You now know there isn't any way to mess with me.'

'I know,' the barbarian said with a small voice. It was like he was in the grip of a giant python. 'Want to play some chess ?' he tried.

He didn't like that she was stronger than him. He was stronger than most of the Martian men, and that was his pride, although it was a sweet man with a good heart. Tara was one of a kind so he could finally come over it. Maybe one time he would be able to beat her, both in chess and wrestling.

Their relationship was like a deep brother and sister relationship, and in a strange sense it never got deeper. They satisfied each other in other ways. When the wolves grew up it was for Tara time to go. She wouldn't feel comfortable if she would live here all her life, and so she left the castle with the wolves, and they would remind her of one of the most precious period in her life. It was like a jewel in her memory.

The End

The Insects

with the Many Heads

Tara heard a woman singing in the distance. When the woman came closer, it appeared to be only a head. Tara remembered this machine, and was in a shock. Suddenly she saw all the other heads. It was the Machine of Democracy. ‘Tara,’ the woman said. ‘We have returned, as we want to be a part of you, and we want to lead you.’

‘Go away,’ Tara shouted, as she didn’t want to have anything to do with this insane machine. After she had defeated Sharla the Head Hunter she didn’t want to have anything but rest. But the machine was back, and she knew this was one of the creatures of Sharla the Head Hunter, maybe the last part of her army. Tara knew she had to defeat this machine in order to come any further. Her friends had been enslaved by this machine, and they wanted her to belief that there was no escape from it. According to them she was doomed to sink deeper into it. ‘Never,’ Tara thought.

‘But we want you and love you,’ the woman’s head spoke.

‘Who are you ?’ Tara asked harshly. ‘I do not know you.’

‘I am the woman who represents this machine,’ the woman’s head said. ‘I am the machine, and all the other heads are my slaves, or if you would like to say : other parts of me.’ Tara was in a shock. The sight was striking her like nothing else. Suddenly a woman stood before her while she was leaning to her horse. The woman looked like a ghost, and also her horse. ‘Yes, that’s me,’ the head spoke. It’s my ghost living in the depths of the arena of the machine. I am the master of it.’

‘So you let all the other ghosts of the machine fight for you ?’ Tara asked.

‘Yes, oh yes,’ the woman said, and then she started to sing again. Tara knew that if she would fight the machine the heads and ghosts would split up and grow in number, so that wasn’t an option. More horses seemed to come, and it started to look like a horse lottery. The woman was dealing in slaves. She had a strange amulet around her neck, so strange that Tara just had to grasp it. Then Tara ran away with it. ‘I bet this has something to do with it,’ Tara said to herself. It was like the woman stood frozen now. Tara put the horse chainlet around her neck, and suddenly she found herself singing. It was strange, for all the horses started to follow her. ‘I am lonely,’ someone started. Bodies seemed to come out of the heads, while the heads got torn away like the were masks. The bodies stretched themselves out and screamed. The woman still stood there like frozen. ‘Run away,’ Tara shouted to the bodies, ‘or she will bewitch you again.’ The bodies jumped and climbed on the horses and soon they all vanished in the sky. The sky got dark and clouded, and it started to rain. ‘Run, Tara,’ someone shouted. There was but one horse left. Tara climbed on the horse and also vanished into the sky.

She came in a room surrounded by billions of faces all in the distance. It was like they were shooting at her. They came closer and closer while many faces started to fade away. And the closer these faces came the more it looked like they had bodies as well. It looked like another machine. Soon she had been surrounded by a few women. ‘You have now reached the center of the machine,’ the women said. They took their swords and a fight started. ‘The one who wins will be the master of the arena,’ the women said. ‘Since our leader has fallen, a new master has to rise.' Tara also took her sword, and slayed the women one by one, while more women seemed to appear. Tara knew that fighting them would only make it worse. She decided to just take some jewelry from the women. Tara knew how to do that as she was a skilled thief. From some she stole some rings, and from others some bracelets, and then she left, while the women stood there like frozen. 'Don't let her escape with the treasures of the horses,' someone whispered. Tara was on her horse already and reached out to the distance. She saw a huge sword appearing in the sky, and she followed it to the place it was directing to. Here she found a huge altar. 'Come,' a voice said, 'throw your treasures in the fire, as you have defeated the women of the machine.'

'Who are you ?' Tara asked. A black women came from behind the altar, and begged her for some jewelry. 'I won't give it to you, as I'm sure you want to be the master of the arena,' Tara said. Then a fight started in which Tara didn't dare to use her sword, as then the woman would split into more. It became a wrestling in which the black woman tried to take Tara's jewelry away. The woman wore a ring and some chainlets, and Tara could take these, after which she went to her horse and rode away. She knew this jewelry had to do with the mechanism of the machine. She came to a hill where a lot of ghost-women lay down. Another fight started, in which Tara only wrestled, while she tried to take their jewelry. Again she succeeded, and finally she came in a city in the middle of the fields she was on. It was a small city, and it was full of ghosts. They were all talking about a certain horse stone they were guarding. The stone would be somewhere in a restaurant or shop. And some living guns would protect it. Strange radiation would come from the stone to project faces everywhere. It had some sort of pump by which it could pump up the faces so that they would become heads, and even bodies. But deep within the stone there would be an even more important stone, which was the fly stone. This stone would take care that the bodies would be formed and moving. This stone was like the transformer of it all, producing a strange sort of fire and a strange sort of fluid. Only by the fire and the fluid bodies were able to live. When Tara told them about her jewelry they told her that deep within the jewelry there were these fly stones. Tara smiled. It was for her important to move, so that she could escape, but to be dependant on such jewelry gave also a strange feeling. She now knew why the women couldn't move anymore since they lost their jewelry, but the feeling that she had to guard the jewelry for the rest of her life made her almost insane. 'Where is that stone ?' Tara shouted, 'as I'm going to cut it off it's place.' The ghosts started to shiver, and showed her the place where it was. It wasn't in a restaurant and neither in a shop like they told, but it was in the depths of a cellar, and Tara had to go downstairs very deep. And there weren't any living guns. When Tara saw the stone she took her sword and cut it from it's standard. 'I don't belief stones should have such powers,' Tara said. 'I don't want to be a slave of a stone.' From the hole fluids started to stream, and also a strange fire came forward with a lot of smoke. 'Look, what a well we have,' Tara said. 'It will spread into the air to be a blessing for everyone. Stones only make slaves and masters, and they block and seal these abundant wells.'

'She has broken the seventh seal,' the ghosts whispered to each other.

'What ?' Tara said.

‘You broke the seventh seal,’ one of the ghosts said. ‘This horse stone with the flystone inside blocked the well of drunkeness, sleep and oblivion for such a long time, so that everyone had to work hard for every drip. We were all walking with heavy chains because of this.’ Then the ghost could stretch itself and vanished. Also the other ghosts stretched themselves and vanished. When Tara came outside all the ghosts of the city were very glad. ‘She broke the seventh seal,’ they said in joy. Streams of sleep and sweet drunkeness seemed to come over the small city, and brought forth a fog of oblivion. But Tara didn’t know if it was such a good idea to break such a seal. She didn’t realize what she had done. And the stream also wanted to push her down. Well, a bit of joy in life, a bit of rest and a bit of peace can’t do any harm, but she saw more and more streams rising up into the air like a ghost-army. All these ghosts were drunk, sleepy and most of all ignorant, like they had lost their minds. It was such an insane sight. Tara climbed on her horse and rode away as fast as she could. She was heading for the morning, as the night seemed to take everything over in such a speed. After awhile she reached the deserts, and the only memory she had in her hands were the treasures of the strange stones, like a broken seal.

Three drunk men were sitting at a table in front of the deserts, while they were doing some sort of cardgame. ‘You want to play with us ?’ the men asked. But Tara had enough of games. They showed her some cards, and it seemed Tara didn’t know this game. Suddenly she was in a shock as she saw also her own face on one of the cards. ‘Where did you get that from ?’ she asked. ‘Well, all those who come out of the fields are part of the game,’ the men said. ‘So be glad you have survived the fields,’ the men said. But then the deserts all of a sudden started to burn, and the men changed into skeletons. Tara grasped her horse by it’s neck and left the place as soon as possible along the borders of the desert. After awhile she came to a forest, and she was still afraid of witchcraft. She took all the jewelry she had, digged a hole somewhere in the ground, and took care that the jewelry would disappear there. She knew she had to be free, not holding on to the enslaving forces of this wicked jewelry. She came to a small lake where she bathed, between the flowers and herbs of the forest, and a new day was luring her. She heard the birds singing in the distance, and she tried to forget about the strange machine. A woman came closer to her, and also slided into the lake. Soon the woman turned into a giant snake, and a fight started. ‘Why do you think you can escape the night,’ the snake whispered. ‘You belong to the night.’ Tara took her sword and slayed the snake. She was glad the snake didn’t multiply before her eyes. But she knew she had to get out of the lake soon. She took her horse again, and went deeper into the jungle. In the depths of the jungle there was an open place where she enountered some wild horses. Because her own horse was rather tamed and because it still reminded her of the machine she took one of the wild horses, and the other wild horses started to run with her also. She hoped to be finally free of this wicked place now. The horses went faster and faster and finally she had to jump off. She rolled through the sand, and then from a hill, while a rock finally stopped her. How long she lay there without consciousness she didn’t know but finally she stood up and went to the first village on her path.

The people there were very friendly and hospital to her. She didn’t expect any troubles here. She got a good glass of beer and some milk before sleeping. In the middle of the night she woke up from howling wolves. She heard some knocking on the door. It was the son of the people of the house she had a room. The boy said he couldn't sleep. He had to think about her so much. Tara hugged him. 'What is wrong, boy ?' Suddenly he started to cry. 'I don't know, but you remind me of something,' he said.

'Do you want to talk about it ?' Tara asked. Then the boy told his story. He was once with a lot of other boys in the jungle and they played like they were indians. They tied him to a tree and left. In the night he had still been tied to the tree, while the boys hadn't returned. He heard wolves howling and became very afraid. Then he heard some leaves moving close to him, and an indian girl stood before him. She was shocked and untied him. She took him to her hut where she made some food for him. After a few days he went to home again, but he couldn't get her out of his mind, so he returned to her hut, but the hut wasn't there anymore and neither the girl.

'I'm sorry,' Tara said. 'That had to be really tough.'

'Yes,' the boy said. 'But I didn't tell you the worst part yet. I went there more often, until some of the boys found out, and again they tied me to a tree and left again. Again I stood there at the tree, but this time it took days before someone found me. Fortunately it had rained a lot or I would have died because of thirst but I was very hungry. Indian girls had found me, but this time they weren't nice. The girl I knew wasn't there. These were other indians. They mocked me and danced around me, and started to hurt me. They took me to a hut, while I was still tied, and they kept me in this hut for months and months, until a woman found me and set me free. I would never forget this woman, and she looked so much like you, but she died a few months later.'

'Oh, I am so sorry,' Tara said, and hugged him again. 'How did she die ?'

'It was some sort of disease,' the boy said.

'Shall we go there together, to the hut of the indian girls ?' Tara asked. The boy looked her deep in the eyes. 'Do you really want to do that ?'

'Yes,' Tara said, 'as it seems you have some trauma from their party. So let's make it different now.'

The next day they went to the hut together. Still indian girls lived here, but they were a lot older. ‘Oops, there is that boy,’ one of them said. ‘He has his sister or mother with him.’

‘No, I am his aunt,’ Tara said, ‘or just friend.’

‘Oh, you are his girlfriend ?’ another one asked.

‘Whatever you like,’ Tara said, and then she knocked one of them to the ground. Another one took her spear, but Tara grasped it away. ‘Not so fast, lady,’ Tara said. But then Tara couldn’t speak anymore all of a sudden. One of the indian girls had a big hairy spider in her hands and caressed it. ‘Be careful,’ she said to the boy, ‘if this one spits it’s venom on us, we’re dead.’

‘No, not dead, zombificated,’ the girl smiled. ‘This one doesn’t kill, but enslaves for live.’

Slowly Tara moved her hand to her sword. But then all of a sudden the spider spat in the eye of the boy while the boy started to shriek. In one moment Tara beheaded the girl with the spider and pierced the spider. ‘These ones are head hunters and cannibals,’ Tara said, and then she beheaded the other girls. ‘We have a few minutes,’ Tara said. ‘If I do not suck the venom out of eye you will die.’ The boy was still shrieking, and Tara pushed him to the ground to suck the venom out of his eye. She also took a sting out of his eye. Tara knew how dangerous these exotic spiders could be. Then she spat the venom out on the ground. ‘That will heal,’ she said. ‘Now tell me, were these all the girls you encountered awhile ago ?’

‘Yes,’ the boy said, ‘but I wonder where the friendly girl lives.’

‘Oh, maybe they have killed her,’ Tara said. She could feel how dangerous this jungle was. It smelled like death. The boy bowed his head. Then he hugged Tara and cried. ‘I’m so glad my heart can finally heal now.’

Together they walked home. Then Tara talked to the boy about the machine with the many heads. The boy told her that in the jungle there lived spiders with many heads, and also other insects like flies. He said that the hunters of his village often went to the jungle to hunt them, as it is very good food. ‘My father even sells the meat,’ the boy said.

That evening Tara ate from the meat of several slayed insects of many heads, and she liked it very much. She decided to stay in the village for awhile, not only to help the boy through his problems, but also to eat the delicious meat no other jungle seemed to have.

The Ten Princes

of Zkerwat

It happened on a market. Tara got in a fight with one of the ten princes of Zkerwat. These princes were the ones everyone had to go to once in awhile to be responsible for everything they did. They had to tell all their secrets to the princes, and then the princes would mock them and laugh at them to bring them down. Even if someone did the greatest things and had the best jobs, the princes would mock them. This was why the people of Zkerwat always lived in deep shame. Nothing was ever good enough for the princes as they would bring everything down. This was why often people went to the princes’ court in shivers. Tara couldn’t stand the way the princes were acting towards the people, so when she saw one of them on the market she took her sword and challenged him. The prince laughed at Tara. He didn’t want to fight against her, so first he sent some of his guards. But when Tara brought them down so easily the prince finally got mad and turned himself against her. ‘What are you doing here in Zkerwat ?’ the prince asked.

‘I’ve come for you and your brothers,’ Tara said. She knew one of these princes had the key to a part of the castle, a secret part, in which their father, the old king, lived with his harem. The king lived more or less isolated, and gave all his authority to his sons, although he had told them how to behave to the people. The king always seemed to have big parties in his part of the castle. Tara knew that the king would never give the people what they were worth as it was all a big conspiracy. When Tara killed the first prince she searched through his clothes for the key, but he wasn’t the one having the key.

When the other nine princes heard their brother had been killed they decided to send one of their greyhounds to Tara. But Tara slayed the dog without problems. Then the second prince came to Tara. He showed her the key. ‘Is this what you are looking for ?’ Then he threw the key into the river. Tara slayed him in full rage, and went to the castle. The other eight brothers suddenly were very friendly, but Tara knew it was a trick. She threw a net over them and she dragged it to the river. ‘You go to find the key,’ she said, and then she threw the net with the eight princes into the river. It was the same place where the second prince had thrown the key. After a minute she took the net out of the water, but no one had the key. ‘Listen,’ Tara said. ‘No games now. When you won’t take the key out of the water the next minute, I will throw you in again for five minutes.’

Fortunately the second time the princes took it out of the water and gave it to Tara. First she let them get locked up in some cages and then she went to the castle again. Not much later she stood in the part where the king lived with his harem. Predators stared at Tara, and also the king and his women. They all seemed upset. Tara took her sword and slayed those who came against her. The king bowed his head, and also some of the women. ‘How dare you,’ Tara said, ‘you use your sons to treat the inhabitants of Zkerwat so bad. Two of them I have killed and the rest is in cages. Now I warn you, old men : Your days of fun are over.’ Then she grasped him by his neck and took him out of the castle. She also let him get locked up in a cage, and some of the women got free, as Tara knew they had been forced to do what they did. They were merely prisoners and slaves of the king.

That day Tara crowned a new king, and he would do it well, as he had already done great things for the sake of Zkerwat.

The Python

Riders

Tara moved along a dusty road. The sand was burning under her feet. A man with a big car wanted to pick her up, but Tara was not in the mood for hitchhiking. The man cursed and drove further. If he would stay any longer Tara would probably cut off his head. She hated guys with hidden intentions. Behind their smiling and friendly faces there was often a dark world. Tara knew those types of guys. Obviously the man had drunk too much. But then in the distance she saw him returning, he jumped out of the car ran to her with a lasso. ‘Am I a cow or something ?’ Tara asked smiling. When she suddenly saw a big gun she didn’t hesitate one moment, grasped her sword and beheaded him. Blood burst forth from the big body, and got even spouted at Tara. She wiped it away and smiled. ‘Bastard,’ she whispered. She took the man’s gun and his lasso, and she found out he had quite a bit of money in his pockets, so she could also use that. Then she walked slowly towards his car.

She could use his car. It was hot inside. She was still barefooted, and when she touched the accelerator pedal she almost got burnt. It didn’t take long to get to a small desert village. Tara stepped out at the petrol station and bought some drinks and icecreams. The man had a small refridgerator in his car. Then she drove further into the village. She was looking for an old friend, Meridum. She remembered where he lived. Soon she was with him drinking some beer. He offered her a room to get some sleep.

In the middle of the night Tara heard some sounds. She put on a silk coat, and walked towards the window. She saw two bats, but also the head of a snake, a python. She sighed, went back to her bed, and fell asleep again. In the morning she was with Meridum at breakfast. She smiled at him. He smiled back. ‘You remember the old days ?’ she asked. Meridum nodded.

‘We were so in love,’ Tara said. ‘What has become of us ?’

‘Nothing,’ Meridum said. ‘We kind of went our own ways.’

‘Yes, we are individuals now,’ Tara said. ‘I could fall in love with you again when I look into your eyes.’

‘Well,’ Meridum said. ‘Love is good, but I have some better ideas.’

‘I’m very interested,’ Tara said. She knew she would never give herself away again, but she just had to visit this old respectful friend. Once in awhile it couldn’t do any harm. He was just too creative to get stuck somewhere.

Meridum smiled. He looked into Tara’s eyes almost teasing her. ‘Yes, I have some ideas, but am I willing to tell ?’

‘Oh please,’ Tara said. ‘I just came to watch your virtues, your talents, I’m sure you have found something new. You’re still an inventor, I know, as it is your eternal heart.’

‘Yes,’ Meridum said smiling. ‘That’s true. You know me.’

‘Okay, so what are you waiting for ?’ Tara said almost commanding.

‘Yes, officer,’ Meridum said. He slowly stood up, walked towards a huge cupboard and took a book out of it. He almost smashed the book on the table, as it was a huge book, very heavy. There were golden locks on both sides, and he easily opened two of them so that he could turn the pages.

‘What is it,’ Tara asked, almost dying of curiosity. ‘You kill me by your mysterious behaviour.’

‘It is a book of … pythons,’ Meridum said …. ‘Well, actually python riders.’

‘Oh, I can’t read this language,’ Tara said.

‘It’s an indian native language,’ Meridum said.

Then again he went to the cupboard and took a pack of cards. He smashed it on the table. ‘Let’s play,’ he said.

Tara watched the cards of beautiful indians. They all had their professions, like they were living in a hidden empire, although they were wild. Meridum looked deep into the eyes of Tara. ‘Turn the cards around, Tara,’ Meridum said. On the backs of the cards there were all sorts of aliens, like cartoon characters, like a sweet game.

‘Oh, I know these ones from childhood,’ Tara said.

‘You’re kidding me,’ Meridum said. ‘You had a savage childhood.’

‘No, in dreams I mean,’ Tara said. She threw the cards she had in her hands away and ran upstairs to her room. Meridum followed her. ‘What’s wrong, Tara ?’ he asked.

‘Well I do not want to be reminded of my past, especially not my childhood,’ Tara said. ‘It seems they still follow me.’

‘But aren’t you surprised that these cards are exactly like in your dreams ?’ Meridum asked.

‘No,’ Tara said. ‘I hate it. Now go away or I will become hysterical.’

Meridum knew she was serious now, and when she was in such a mood he better be far away from her, so he escaped from the house. After a few hours Tara came to her senses again. She started to search through the house. Meridum came back in the middle of the night. Tara was already in bed. ‘Can I talk to you ?’ he whispered.

Tara’s eyes were spitting fire. ‘I told you about those dreams long ago, about how these creatures visited me for help, and how I couldn’t help them. It was traumatic, so why did you have the need to draw them, making cards of them and tease me with it ? I have feelings, emotions, so why are you playing with them ? Why aren’t you just clear about it. This is so obscure,’ Tara said.

Meridum was grinning. Suddenly Tara dived on him, and a horrible wrestling started. Soon Meridum was in the grip of her, like in a deadly grip of a python.

‘You misunderstand me,’ Meridum said. ‘Can’t you see I just try to help you overcome these childhood dreams ? I know these were nightmares, but I’m your mate in this.’

‘It’s too fragile,’ Tara screamed. ‘I have trusted you, told you about the soft places in my heart, the treasures of tears, my inner loneliness and hopelessness, and you just throw it on table as a cardgame. How could you ?’

‘I wanted to heal you,’ Meridum said.

Suddenly Tara bit him in his cheek, while blood was flowing forth from the wound. ‘See what you are doing ?’ Tara screamed.

‘They …. Are …. python riders,’ Meridum said. He felt weak all of a sudden.

‘I have dreamt of them too, Tara. They are free now …’

‘What do you say ?’ Tara asked.

Suddenly Meridum fainted. After a few hours he woke up in Tara’s arms.

‘I understand you now. But you are in the lion’s den,’ Tara said. ‘Don’t play with me. So you say you have dreamt of them as well.’

Meridum nodded, while he was still very weak. ‘They ride on pythons, they ride on the roofs, on the tops, they ride in the air.’

‘To do what ?’ Tara asked.

‘To help us,’ he said.

‘I still do not get you,’ Tara said.

Meridum turned away from her, stood up. ‘You’re still the same,’ he said. ‘Dangerous, very dangerous.’ Then he left.

The next morning they saw each other again for breakfast. Tara stared at him. Meridum didn’t say anything.

‘I’m leaving, Meridum,’ Tara said. ‘I don’t want to bring you in troubles. And I don’t want you to bring me in troubles.’

Then she stood up, took her car and left. She was in a bad mood. Everything had triggered something in her, something she couldn’t control. She tried to forget about everything again.

It was hot outside, the roads were dusty. After a few hours Tara stepped out of the car, barefooted, while the ground was almost burning her. The mud was almost hard and hotter than ever. Then she sat down, and later she laid herself down while the sun was burning her. Suddenly she had been surrounded by snakes. The snakes were spitting strange venoms on her body, but didn’t bite her. She took her knife to slay them and wiped the venom away by some leaves. A man stood in front of her with a rifle. He saw the dead snakes. ‘Yes, many dangerous snakes here,’ he said. ‘They are called the spitters.’

‘Oh, I know, I saw them doing that,’ Tara said.

‘Well,’ the man said, ‘you just woke up. You are very lucky. The venom could have killed you, but I guess then it brought only hallucinations to you.’

Tara realized she had just dreamt everything because of these spitting snakes. She didn’t have a car, and she didn’t know a Meridum. It was just a tale displaying in her head. It was actually the man who had shot the snakes and he actually saved her life. He had a big car, a so called ‘python rider’, especially made for the deserts. He gave her a hand, and brought her up, and then to his car. In his car she fell asleep again, while the man took care he brought her out of the danger zone.

The End

The Monkey

She was like the most beautiful doll in his eyes. Tara's father was fond of her. Well, actually he wasn't her real father, but he once saved her from death. In his eyes she was the best, his masterpiece. He raised her after the fall. He made her. He was a white-bearded sorcerer-like man, a kingly one if it came to that, living high in the mountains. Tara went there as much as she could. She would never forget this man she called her father.

He was a dark man. He kept souls in bottles to make ghosts of them. He was a sinister man, but Tara loved him. She could understand him very well, as they were both against the system. The system on Mars was cruel in their eyes.

Petrilium was his name. The man was tall and old, but still full of wicked ideas. He had trained Tara in how she could use pythons. Pythons were potentially dangerous forces on Mars, so if Tara wouldn't learn how to control them better, they would take her over one day. Petrilium teached her all the tricks to tame them, and he gave her instructions on how to ride them. For this purpose he showed her the biggest sorts of pythons on Mars. He kept them locked up in certain aquaria. Tara was amazed to see such large ones. She had never seen them before. Petrilium bred them here.

Petrilium was a pythonfarmer, a virtuous one so to speak. He also bred flying pythons of the largest sorts by which he could reach other planets in a flash. Petrilium controlled the lightening and thunder on Mars, and he could do that because he knew the many pythonian secrets. Petrilium was a mysterious man often misunderstood. That was why he started to live far away in the mountains. He had some slaves, but they seemed to be well-willing, as Petrilium cared for them very good. They had a lot of money, and bathed in riches. Further they had a lot of freedom, for most of the jobs happened by pythonian forces. There were machines everywhere.

One day Petrilium got very sick. Because he thought he was dying he gave Tara a special key to a most secret library. ‘Read about pythons as much as you can,’ he said. This was the last time Tara ever saw him alive. She went to this library and read in it’s books for days and days, weeks and weeks. She also found a bottle in which a pythonian ghost lived. When she opened it the library got filled by red smoke. A huge cloud stood before her.

The spirit was happy. He had been in his bottle for a long time. On Mars when a ghost didn’t return to his bottle he would become denser and denser. Tara gave the ghost his freedom, and he would be a dense citizen of Mars soon. She also found a secret tunnel leading her to a huge hall. There were strange signs on the walls. It looked like a dominoes game. Tara could climb upstairs as it formed a sort of frame. When she came on top she could come into a new hall, as there was a huge doorway in the ceiling.

When Tara wanted to return to the library she found out that the signs by which she could climb had closed themselves. It wasn’t like a ladder anymore, so she couldn’t get downstairs again. A girl ticked at her shoulder. Tara turns around. ‘I can bring you there,’ the girl said.

‘Who are you ?’ Tara asked.

‘Well, that’s a long story,’ the girl said. ‘But I’m a spidergirl, able to fly, and willing to bring you there.’ Suddenly thick glue-like stuff came out of her hands and soon some sort of strong web was reaching downstairs on which they could both climb down. ‘Who teached you that ?’ Tara asked.

‘Oh, Petrilium,’ the girl said.

Tara understood he had many more friendships than she knew. It seemed Petrilium saved the girl too one day. She was in a heavy storm at sea. Since then she always stayed close to him. ‘What are these enigmatic signs on the wall ?’ Tara asked.

‘Oh,’ the girl said. ‘Many of those things are based on time. It works like a clock, and it gives access at certain points of time and at certain occasions. The whole temple is full of these things.’

‘Why do you call it temple ?’ Tara asked.

‘As it is a temple,’ the girl said.

‘Then who do you worship ?’ Tara asked.

The girl started to laugh. ‘We do not worship anything or anyone,’ she said. ‘It’s all a certain science working as long as you have the knowledge.’

‘Ah,’ Tara said, ‘so it is about knowledge. And what kind of knowledge is it ?’

‘Oh, come,’ the girl said, and then led Tara to another library. It was like some sort of restaurant here. There were some transparent brown veils, a sort of glass, and people sat at tables reading stuff. The girl took Tara’s hand. ‘Come,’ she said. They went through a door and came in a corridor. At the end of the corridor there was another library, a small one. ‘Here we have our books,’ the girl said. It was much about pythonian electricity. It was all about the wonderful mechanisms of the temple. Many parts seemed to work together and change periodically all to trigger some sort of hormones and special effects.

‘Interesting,’ Tara said.

‘It’s a complex system,’ the girl said. ‘But if you know how it works, you will see the benefit of it.’

Tara nodded. ‘I see.’

‘Shall I show you my room ?’ the girl asked.

‘Sure,’ Tara said.

The girl took her all the way upstairs into some sort of tower. On top there were several rooms and one of them was hers. It was a very small room, and she had a lot of books. She also had some pythons in aquaria. ‘My name is Lydium,’ the girl said. ‘They also call me Pythonia.’

Tara bent towards the pythons. They were not so big. There were also some living mice and rats in the aquaria, white ones. ‘They eat them, but first they play with them,’ the girl said. Tara looked deep into the eyes of the girl.

‘There is something strange about this room,’ Tara said. ‘I smell monkeys.’

‘Oh yes, we also feed them monkeys at times,’ the girl said. ‘They need it to stay alive.’ The girl opened a cupboard and showed a small monkey in a small cage. There was also another cage with a monkey in a wardrobe.

‘This is disgusting,’ Tara said.

‘Well, we need to sacrifice them,’ the girl spoke. ‘Or the pythons will go mad and break our decks of control.’

‘Oh, don’t worry about that,’ Tara said. ‘They will take over anyway. But you just can’t feed them monkeys.’

‘Why not ?’ the girl asked.

‘Oh nevermind,’ Tara said and opened the cages to take the monkeys out. They immediately jumped on her and hung at her neck. They made a lot of noise.

‘Listen girl,’ Tara said. ‘I don’t care who or what you are, but you can do things different you know. There are other ways to raise the pythonian system. I do not know who teached you this. I doubt it was Petrilium.’

The girl bowed her head. ‘It wasn’t Petrilium, just a girl of my class.’

Soon Tara took the monkeys away and brought them into freedom, the wilderness where they belonged.

‘I’m willing to learn from you,’ the girl said. ‘Sometimes things are so tight in my head, like there isn’t another way.’

‘There are many ways,’ Tara said.

Together they walked to another hall the girl wanted to show. They came in on a balcony and could see a sort of trafficlights downstairs on the ground. It was a pythonian traffic system. ‘This one is producing a hormone taking over Mars. Only the python riders will survive the coming pythonian flood,’ the girl said.

‘Interesting,’ Tara said. ‘Well, I know they have the power to break someone’s mind, the mindwalls, so that they could enter in. It’s some sort of gas.’

The girl nodded.

‘How do you ride a python ?’ Tara asked.

‘Oh, I’ll show you,’ the girl said. They had to go to another staircase to go upstairs to reach the higher parts of the temple. They were soon on the highest walls of the complex. It was almost in the clouds, and a lot of flying pythons were here. ‘Pick one,’ the girl said. Tara took one of the pythons and sat down on it. Also the girl took a python and together they flew away. It wasn’t so difficult. They both had lots of information on how to ride such a thing. Tara realized how important that was, as the pythons were about to take Mars over completely. The degree of pythonian poison in the air was already very high. Many on Mars already went insane by the pressure of it. Mars became a pythonian planet more and more, and Tara and the spidergirl were more or less pythonian agents. But Tara knew where it would all lead to. Tara knew that the pythonian connection would only trigger a much higher energy : those of the indian flies. She knew that the pythonian matrix was nothing but a preparation of that, a sort of doorway. The spidergirl was talking about it all the time, as she wanted to become a flygirl. She knew that only flygirls would be able to stand when the pythonian floods would come. And she was thinking a lot about the indian fly floods. Those would come after the python. Mars would be a totally different planet.

Tara and the girl became tight friends, and she teached a lot of martian martial arts to her. The girl teached Tara much about pythonian electricity. One day a strong light was coming forth from one of the python systems. And soon also another pythonian system opened up to bring forth this strong light. It was like a lightvulcanoe. The girl said it wasn't pythonian anymore, but it looked like flylights. 'The flood, it is coming,' some men were shouting. They seemed to know much about it. A soft gas was coming from the light, coming in layers, and it was a bit moisty.

'Mars will soon be totally in the hands of pythons and flies,' the men said. They had big books under their arms and were dressed like preachers. On the cover of their books there were triangles. 'From what kind of religion are you ?' Tara asked.

'Oh, we're from the temple. It's just about science and knowledge,' the man said. Tara was watching the triangles on their books. They looked like wigwams. 'All we must do is to ride the pythons,' the men said, 'and only the fly can do that.'

Tara remembered the aquaria of Petrilium. He also had some in which he kept the biggest sharks and whales. Tara asked the girl if she knew if Petrilium also kept flies. 'Oh yes,' the girl said. 'Come with me.' By an elevator they could come deep underground where caves were with the biggest aquaria Tara ever saw. The air was moisty and hot, and inside the aquaria there was also this tropical climate. She could see amazing sorts of flies. It was enchanting her eyes. She got hypnotized by the sight. The flies almost looked like flying people. To her amazement she also saw savage people there. They just lived among the big flies. They looked like they were indians.

'Why do those people live here ?' Tara asked.

‘Oh,’ the girl said. ‘They just want to live close to this energy. There are even monkeys here.’ Tara understood that these people were afraid of the pythonian outbursts. ‘More and more people want to live here,’ the girl said.

‘Why don’t you just open the aquaria so that the flies can spread themselves on the martian surfaces ?’ Tara asked.

‘Oh Tara,’ the girl said. ‘That would be very dangerous and unwise. Petrilium kept them here for a reason. They need to grow up first.’

‘What would be the danger ?’ Tara asked.

‘Oh Tara,’ the girl said. ‘You don’t know these species. There are some libraries deeper underground with a lot of books about them.’ Soon they went to those libraries together, and Tara started to read about them. Tara grasped her head. ‘I’m glad I was behind glass, but how can those savage people live with them ?’

‘They have a certain immunity against them,’ the girl said. ‘Their bodies have been smeared by a certain substance, and it is now in their bloodstream as well.’

In a secret part of the library there were bottles full of the substance. ‘Once smeared we can never return to the surfaces of Mars. We need to stay in the aquaria leading to the depths of Mars. Then we need to stay in Tartarus forever,’ the girl said.

‘Oh, that’s a deal,’ Tara said. Together they smeared each other by the substance, and Tara felt like she was burning inside. Her blood was boiling, and her body got the strength of a bow and arrow. Soon they were in the aquaria among the flies and the savage people.

In Tartarus the weather was hot. There were a lot of beaches and deserts. Pythons were from a high rank here, but an even higher rank were the flies. They had strange tongues, and they had the power to freeze someone’s mind. Some of them had uniforms or even outlandic clothes.

Their tongues were thick and could become tall. They could smell by their tongues, and they had a lot more senses in it.

Suddenly Tara woke up. It had been just a dream. Petrilium was still living, and she was in the room where she always slept when she would visit him for more days. She was staring at the books in a cupboard close to her bed. She always loved these books. She remembered the delicious dinner she had with him and his monkeys at one table. He always used to call it dream food, as you would get dreams from all the exotic drinks and foods. And those of the purple capes were also with them. They were some sort of preachers living with Petrilium, a sort of monks. Whenever Petrilium sent out some magical seeds into the depths of Mars, in Tartarus below the kingdom of death, he would also send some of them of the purple capes to take care of the seed. If the seed would be grown to it's heights they would bring it to Petrilium. Petrilium called this seed his children. They would never really grow up, as they would always stay with the things of childhood. Many of those children lived in a cellar below Petrilium's place, where he visited them often to play games with them. Also the purple capes played a big role in this. They had to show the children the funparks on Mars, as a part of their education. They had to go with them to the fairgrounds. Petrilium had a thing for that.

The purple caps were the teachers of the children, to prepare them for their great tasks. Petrilium had big plans. The purple capes had a strange faith. The leaders of them had a big fairground by which they travelled through Tartarus. You could never really see their faces as the capes were dark and large. However they had a lot of monkeys with often blue faces, and some said their faces were just like them. But nobody knew. When the children grew up some choose to work with the purple capes in the fairground, travelling throughout Tartarus. This fairground was actually a machine by which they saved lost souls.

Some said they were dangerous vampires. Petrilium was a much hated man by many. They said he was strange and dark. And no one knew exactly what those purple capes were. It was actually by this fairground Petrilium saved Tara when she was in the tight grip of Tartarus. Many knew that Petrilium was … a saviour. Petrilium hated Tartarus. One of his biggest plan was to build a funpark in the very core of Tartarus. He wanted to deal with the hypocrite leaders.

The fairground would play a big part in that, and of course the church of the purple capes. It wasn't a church at all. It was a trick. One day one of the purple capes took off his cape. It appeared to be a monkey. He appeared to be the chief of the purple capes. Suddenly his face turned into a longhaired man with a beard. Tara knew they were sorcerors and werewolves, as they could also turn into wolves. Strozalks they were called. He directed his finger at a large cross which suddenly turned into a winged stake. Pythons were holding the stake tight, but suddenly the winged stake turned into a fly, and the snakes into weapons.

‘The bow, Tara,’ he said. And gave the bow to Tara. ‘It’s the Qesheta. It will come alive. It is a woman. It has become an object, but it is alive.’

Tara felt the hot handle of the bow in her hand. She stared at it. ‘See we have become animals, trees and objects,’ the man spoke. ‘and we hide under purple capes.’

She watched the man with the blue face. They had been frozen into so many things, and now they were so creative. Tara wanted to give the bow back. ‘No, it is for you,’ the man said. And then he left. When she came to Petrilium’s room she saw Petrilium lying on his bed. He was dead. The man with the blue face came out of the bathroom together with some purple capes. ‘Yes, we have killed him,’ he said. Then they left.

The End

The Beasts of Orion

Chapter 1. Tara and the Hippo Queen

Chapter 2. The Amulet of the Pterosaur

Chapter 3. Marit the Ratwoman

Chapter 4. The Sea of No Return

Chapter 1. Tara and the Hippo Queen

At the surfaces of Orion there was a lonely warrior. She tried to make her way by cutting by her sword through the overwhelming chaos of snakes, slime, fleeces and dirt. Her name was Tara from Rhodes. She had a good survey at the deserts of Orion. There were three thrones on Orion : the lion throne, the blue throne and the white throne. These thrones were like floating slippery islands. Tara had to be on her guard against the blinding lights of Orion, which could show up easily, like striking winds. They could easily blind someone.

After awhile she came to a misty palace. The walls were of reddish flesh, decorated by skulls and nails. It looked like a dragon castle. Tara went in holding her sword up high. Inside there were meaty webs and many fleeces. By her sword she cut a way through it. Lights tried to strike her, but she had her eyes tightly closed. She was sweating. It was like she was in the jaws of a monster. In front of her was a lake full of white spiderwebs and slippery fleeces where spiders swam. She also made her way through the lake. Then she came to a sort of spine, but it was made of reddish meat and dark bones. She climbed on it upstairs. She was almost bathing in sweat. It was like someone was grilling her. She found herself standing on a gigantic skull.

This was Orion TV, a strange intestine, sucking them all in, by winds, fleeces and dirt, overwhelming them by lights. Tara had overcome it, and stood on the skull as a conqueror. She raised her sword and shrieked. This was the place which kept a hold on Mars for such a long time. It was a strange creature, but Tara had survived. Then she pierced her sword into a soft button on top of the skull. The skull started to shriek. It was now shrinking.

There were falls of fire here. On muddy stairs Tara climbed further. She could feel the moisty earth again, like it was clay. Tara shouted as hard as she could. Two eagles came to her, big and dark. ‘Bring me to the white throne,’ she said.

The white throne was a city made of rare lionstones, and it was floating at the surfaces of Orion like an island. Tara jumped off from the eagles and slided deep into the city. The lionstones had been covered by webs and dirt. There were fleeces everywhere. In the city there was a strange machine called the Machine of Monotheism. From the machine dark dancers came, mostly women. They were the belly-dancers of Turet. They had been armed by all sorts of weapons. They were the guards of the center of the city, which had been called Turet. Here a skeleton lived having the same name. He was the upper emperor of Orion, and at the same time their religious leader.

The belly-dancers were made of a sort of bronze and brass, and they were also cannibals. Tara had to be at her guard. They radiated such a heat that they could easily grill her. It was like they came right out of an altar. Tara raised her sword and slew a few of them. But the skeleton of Turet already ran towards her. Soon she was in the grip of a few other belly-dancers. Turet smiled. It was like Tara was already burning from inside. Tara fell down, and woke up in a dungeon. Turet stared at her. 'Seriously,' he said, 'what are you doing here. I have grown this way. I can't be saved. This is my fate, and what I do to others is their fate. I can't help it.'

'Tell me about your bosses,' Tara said.

'Skeleton-indians,' Turet said.

'Who are they ?' Tara asked.

'They are the ones who once skinned me, and took me to Orion,' Turet said.

'Where do you come from ?' Tara asked.

'Originally from Mars,' Turet said.

'See,' Tara said. 'They do this to many from Mars. They are abductors. And they transform their victims into the most horrible monsters.'

Turet nodded. 'But you can't set me free,' he said.

‘Why not ?’ Tara asked.

‘I can’t return to Mars,’ Turet said. ‘Orion is too deep in me.’

‘How do I reach those skeleton-indians you talk about ?’ Tara asked.

‘Oh, just follow the jaws of Reactumat. There is a small car riding into it’s jaws and then you travel all the way through his body,’ Turet said. ‘I will bring you to it.’

It seemed Turet was a very nice guy. Soon they both sat into a car close to gigantic jaws. Turet pushed a button and there they went. There was fire everywhere. Turet turned the speed up. Then everything became dark. Tara fell asleep by the smoke, and when she woke up they were there. It was a strange world with the smell of ham. There were fleeces everywhere. It was a white wilderness. It looked like ice, but it was actually warm here, very warm, and soft.

‘They guard the stone of the lioness,’ Turet said. Suddenly dreadful indians came out of a jungle. ‘Why are you coming ?’ an indian woman asked.

‘Meet Tara, a friend of mine,’ Turet said to the woman.

‘Don’t come any step further or I will cut your head off,’ Tara shouted. ‘He’s from Mars originally, so you have a story to tell to me.’

‘Yes, we have a story,’ the woman said. ‘It’s true we have abducted him and even zombificated him. He doesn’t want to return to Mars anymore. We have given him the real life here.’

‘And what is the real life ?’ Tara asked.

‘Come with us,’ the woman said.

Tara went with Turet and the into the jungle. In the depths of the jungle there was a small white sandy hill. They showed her the stone of the lioness. 'This,' the woman said.

'What is it doing ?' Tara asked.

'It's an ice-transformer,' the woman said. 'Look around you. Everything looks like ice but it isn't. It is actually warm and soft.'

'Okay, but what does it do besides that,' Tara asked.

'Oh, it hunts, it kills, just like us. It's a predator,' the woman said. 'The abductor.'

Behind the hill there were rivers of blood. There were many lions swimming here, and many lay on the shores. 'Behind the rivers of blood,' the woman spoke, 'there is the lion tower. Those who want to become kings of the universe always go there. They will make the dangerous journey through the tower to the top. The higher they come the thinner the tower is and the more fragile. Besides that, it storms there. There is a small throne on top of the tower. No one who gets there stays long, for the winds will blow him off after awhile. He will crash on the ground, and the lions will eat him. There is no real king of the universe.'

'No one who knows the lion tower dares to sit there,' another indian woman said. 'The winds rule on top of the lion tower. Some said they saw a mysterious fly sitting on the throne at times.'

'And some say the flies rule the winds far above them,' another indian woman said. 'Their bosses fly without wings.'

'So the lion tower you talk about is a trap ?' Tara asked.

‘Some sort of,’ one of the indian women said. ‘And the true rulership of Orion and the universe is a mystery. Why would someone rule the universe ? Why not letting it be done by the universe itself.’

‘Well, I’m thinking about those flies you talk about, and also the wingless flies,’ Tara said. ‘So they are the actual rulers ?’

‘No one knows,’ the woman said, ‘but some think that they are. The lion tower connects Orion to the sky, and they rule in the sky. Rulership is a mystery. And when you become a ruler, something else always takes you over. That is the secret of the lion tower. There is actually no rulership. There’s something above that.’

‘And that is ?’ Tara asked.

‘Imprisonment,’ the woman said. ‘You lose yourself and become grilled and zombificated by the powers of the universe you have grasped.’

‘Oh, I see,’ Tara said. ‘I’m here to free Mars from this satellite called Orion who seems to control it for a big deal, but what you say here interests me. And this is the reason why you have the stone of the lioness ? To transform all those extremes ?’

‘Yes,’ the woman said.

‘What can you do for Mars ?’ Tara asked.

‘I can’t do anything for them,’ the woman said. ‘I can have them abducted to let them stay around the stone of the lioness, but she’s kind of selective, you know. She has an army. She’s a trainer. She zombificates you to become a part of it, and then she will guard you. She is the one who planted the Lion Tower to test the abducted. Many go there to look for adventure, finally to become kings, but those are food for her lions. They look for entertainment, but they end up in the intestines of Orion TV. They get plugs in their livers and become addicts of nothingness.’

‘But what is the meaning of life on Orion,’ Tara asked.

‘The meaning of life on Orion,’ the woman said, ‘is to transform the extremes by following the stone of the lioness. We worship her. We approach her, face to face. There are no laws. We are the lawless. It is not about ‘yes’ or ‘no’, but about ‘how’, so of course there are a lot of rules. You need to know ‘how’ to do something.’

‘We are all zombificated by the stone of the lioness, Tara,’ another woman said. ‘We are her robots, but we are alive. She has raised us. In this we are safe.’

‘We however also worship the Lion Tower, for it is our guard,’ another indian woman said. ‘But we can never enter it. We can’t even come close to it. It needs to be at a distance. It is a trap for our enemies and betrayers.’

‘Okay,’ Tara said, ‘so ‘yes’ or ‘no’ is not important anymore, only ‘how’, also in the sense of ‘where’ and ‘when’.’

‘Yes,’ the woman said. ‘The lioness stone is our clock and map in that.’

‘But who made the lioness stone ?’ Tara asked.

‘The flies did,’ the woman said. ‘The wingless flies of Orion who live above the skies.’

‘Where exactly do they live,’ Tara asked.

‘In blood,’ the woman said. ‘They live in a realm called the Blood of Orion.’

‘How did they come there ?’ Tara asked.

‘They stayed away long enough from the Lion Tower, and got ascended,’ the woman said. ‘The wingless flies are just indians. They are on the eternal huntingfields, the red skies of Orion. They are elite indians. They have Blood-TV, which is actually a heart, the heart of Orion. Some say it is the heart of the universe. It is the biggest butchery of all time.’

Then what was the road to this Red Zone of Orion ? The Python Tower. The Python Tower was like highways into the the sky. It was a dangerous trip, but it was honest at least. They showed Tara the road to this tower and then she went on her path. In the tower of the Python there were all sorts of tall venomous python-tongues hanging. Touching them would mean death. Tara had to be at her guard here more than ever. However the Python Tower was an experiment. No one was the ruler of it. The tower ruled itself. The ones who died here became a part of the tower itself. They got absorbed and sucked in by the walls, and got torn apart and frozen. Tara would never forget these ghosts. They were haunting. They tried to scare her, and begged her not to go further. They were draining her. It was a nightmare. Whenever she slept in the tower she could hear these ghosts making their conspiracies against her. The further she came into the Python Tower the weaker her body became. The winds were sharp and cutting, almost tearing her apart. There were biting fluids like venomous milk trying to bite her skin away. Further on she had to fight the worst pythons. They were tall and big. She needed to escape their tight grips. She had never felt such heavy creatures before. These were the Pythons of Orion. Higher in the tower it was full of flies, and it was very cloudy. Tara had to cut herself a way through it by her sword. Suddenly there was Turet in his Machine of Monotheism. ‘Hey, Tara, are you in for a ride ?’ he shouted.

‘Pick me up,’ Tara shouted. ‘It’s so slippery here.’

By the Machine of Monotheism it was easy for them to get to the red zone of Orion. The place was full of belly-dancers. There were enormous dragons here, covered by flies. By strange lightening the red became pale all the time. Whenever it became white it streamed downstairs, to the white zone. It looked like milk, and it seemed to become white by the belly-dancers. It seemed to flow forth from them. They were transformers. ‘It’s actually called white blood,’ Turet said. ‘It’s the secret of the lioness stone. She has brought forth the belly-dancers by which she can transform the ice, and by which she makes everything soft.’

‘What kind of blood is it ?’ Tara asked.

‘Python Blood,’ Turet said. ‘Long ago there was a fight between a lioness and a python. The fight didn’t seem to end. One day the flies came and turned the lioness into a stone, and the python into blood. The stone brought forth the belly-dancers who would turn the blood of the python into white blood.’

‘So you mean to say that the ice was originally the product of a fight between a lioness and a python ?’ Tara asked.

‘Yes,’ Turet said. ‘But without the perpetual flow of red blood the white blood will die, and the ice will take over again.’

‘Who takes care of that ?’ Tara asked.

‘The belly-dancers,’ Turet said.

Tara now understood why the stone of the lioness was of such importance, and the importance of the guards of this stone, the skeleton-indians of the white zone. And who were the mysterious wingless flies who seemed to have made this all ?

‘The wingless flies become skeleton-indians after awhile,’ Turet said. ‘Then they come down to guard the lioness stone.’ Turet directed his finger towards stairs of light. These lights were moving. It was the stairs of descension, made of white blood. Turet showed her a lot more falls of white blood.

‘The secret of the belly-dancers of Turet is that they are actually mammoths and elephants,’ Turet said.

‘So they can actually change into women and also back into mammoths and elephants ?’ Tara asked.

‘Yes,’ Turet said. ‘Actually the truth is that after the skeleton-indians have guarded the lioness stone long enough they get swallowed by it and they become the belly-dancers.’

‘That looks like a circus to me,’ Tara said.

'No, Tara,' Turet said, 'it's the wilderness. Actually when they have been belly-dancers long enough they go to the path of the elephant.'

'What is that ?' Tara asked.

'It's a path to meet the wildest creatures of Orion,' Turet said. 'When they return they become hippo's and they will be the leaders of the belly-dancers.'

'This looks like school,' Tara said.

'No, Tara,' Turet said, 'it is the wilderness.'

With the Machine of Monotheism they went to such a hippo queen. She lived in a high place, in treasures. It was a dark indian woman, and there were jewels, satin, velvet and the finest materials everywhere. The woman had earrings in, and had been adorned with many more rings. The riches of the white blood were here. Her slaves seemed to bath in it everywhere and drank from it like milk. It had the taste of cacao and cocosmilk. They used it for making bread and crèmes. Wild unknown creatures were her guards. In other realms and planets these creatures had died out, but here on Orion they could survive. On Mars they would have been described as prehistoric, but here they just lived on. Orion was the only place in the universe they could do this. And to Tara this was a special event. She wouldn't forget this too easily. On Mars they could never live on because they were too savage. Orion was a savage world more than Mars, so here they could develop themselves. And this could happen all because of the lioness stone. She was there mother, their warm womb. They could all live because of the elephant path. Here they had their place. And now this hippo queen had them in her care. She was a cruel queen. Tara thought it looked like civilisation, but she knew it was the wilderness. The queen was both cruel and good to her guards. They just had to obey the rules. The creatures were very destructive, and were a threat to the whole universe, so the queen had to protect herself.

The hippo queen and her slaves rode on them whenever they visited the jungles. They also rode on mammoths. She trained all of them to become belly-dancers, as that was how she formed her armies. She could use the belly-dancers for everything. They learned how to change into women, and how to change back into animals. They also learned how to use their weapons. There was a man named Skeipnir who trained many of them. He was one of her highest slaves. He knew the tricks of transformation and he was even her personal guard.

Whenever he wasn't training the belly-dancers, he stood at her door. Skeipnir was a major source in raising her army. She raised this army …. to abduct beings …. to Orion.

'Welcome Tara,' she said. 'My invisible threads have finally brought you here.'

Suddenly Tara saw the slimy, slippery tentacles on her head. It was by a strange light she could see them all of a sudden. Had she been mind-controlled ? She had headaches for such a long time. Did they guide her to this place ?

The hippo queen showed her machine from which the tentacles and fleeces came forth. They were only visible by the strange light. 'These are the elephant winds,' the queen said, 'easily turning into storms, easily turning into lightening and thunder.' Then the queen started to laugh.

'What is your purpose ?' Tara asked.

'My purpose is to abduct, test, and turn them into belly-dancers. The rest will be food for the lion tower,' the hippo queen spoke.

'Oh yes, I have seen that,' Tara said, 'but what is your purpose with me ?'

'You are very special my child,' the hippo queen said. 'I have watched you from the day you were born to this day. I have seen your birth. You are a good fighter, and you would be a good trainer. I want you to meet Skeipnir.'

'I highly appreciate your belly-dancers,' Tara said, 'and I highly appreciate you. I can teach you swordfighting. But please, show me the real secret of Orion.'

'I will, Tara,' the hippo queen said. 'If you teach us swordfighting then I will give you this stone, which is the secret of Orion, the bestkept.' From behind the queen took a reddish transparent jewel which was like a ball. 'Tara, I will give you this stone, for I know Orion is in good hands with you,' the hippo queen spoke. 'Please stay with us. Don't return to Mars.'

‘What kind of stone is it ?’ Tara asked.

‘It is the stone of the Beasts of Orion,’ the hippo queen spoke. ‘I will bring the stone into your sword, so that Orion will be forever safe in you. With it you will have access to the savage zone of Orion, where all secrets will be shared with you.’

Chapter 2. The Amulet of the Pterosaur

It was a dirty place in the savage zone of Orion. She had never seen so much dirt before. There were falls of dirt here, and rivers of dirt, and the most horrible creatures and the largest beasts. On Mars these animals could only exist in a prehistoric world, but here on Orion they were more alive than everywhere else. Savage indian tribes were living here, again races which would be prehistoric on Mars, but this was Orion. They were carnivores and cannibals but they were also like ballet-dancers.

These worlds were not like the history-books on Mars. These worlds were crueller, more dangerous, filled with dirt and stench to the extremes. It was more savage. There was no any form of civilisation here or thought. Here there was chaos. There were no laws. It was an untamed world. There was no gentle traffic here. However, the strange ballet Tara saw among the tribes showed a certain pattern, but these patterns were wild. This was the ballet of death.

Tara found out soon that it was nothing but a war-dance, trying to take minds away, and every form of balance and security. It was a psychological warfare. They tried to put fear on their victims, and insecurity. It was like a spell to break off the immune systems of their prey. Tara knew she had to be on her guard. She knew it had a high price even watching this ballet.

Later she found out that by this ballet they could turn themselves into beasts, or to get possessed by the beasts. They lived double lives. Also the beasts themselves could do such ballet. It was all to protect themselves.

The air was filled by strange haunting battlecries showing no thought but intelligence. It was like these beasts and savages had been caught by instincts triggered by each other. It was like fire eating the fire. They had become insane by each other. They lived by fear. There was such a drama here, no thought, no shame, but fear. There was no shame as the fear had eaten it all away. And the fear had been raised by the ballets. There was no escape from this. They had all been caught in a trap. One ballet would stir up the other, and the fear would only rise more. It was a world of dread, shameless dread.

Tara was looking for their leader, as she knew all these ballets could hide something. These ballet-dancers could be the guard of something.

The strange stone at Tara's sword started to talk and gave names to all the sorts of beasts here : 'Tiguran Ballets, Tangaran Ballets.'

'What is the leading sort ?' Tara asked.

'There are no leading sorts,' the stone said. 'This world rules itself.'

Then the stone continued : 'Cynognathus, Allosaur, Ceratosaur.'

There were also elephant-like beasts here with jewels on their heads. These seemed to be huge organs of smell. The stone could tell Tara all about it. Many of them were hairy like mammoths. There seemed to be huge cattle here. Some had large heads like horses, and some heads even looked like rabbits. But it was all savage. These beasts were big and different. They were very strange, and they were certainly no easy prey. Actually they were predators. There was also smaller cattle, most of the time having white bodies with swarms of black spots, and big heads like cows and horses. They had the sizes of grown up calves.

The cynognathus looked like he was from the bear family, and the allosaur and the ceratosaur looked like they were from the alligator family, all hunters. There were many different sorts of them. Tara could line out those families, also the huge family of the elephant. The first animal Tara could approach was the cynognathus. Although this beast was friendly to her he bit her a few times to drink some of her blood. It was still a wild animal. The stone told Tara that these were a sort of marks of friendship. If she wasn't a friend the beast would have killed her. The cynognathuses went out for hunt very often, most of the time in groups. They led Tara to some of their caves where they lived. They were bloodthirsty animals, and although they were big meateaters they also kept cattle just to drink from their blood. Tara knew she had to be at her guard. She started to hunt together with them to show them her bondage to them. There was no innocent cattle here. There were only predators, and hunting was in this place just a defense, a movement of war, necessary to survive. This was savage cattle. And the instincts went further than she ever saw before. These creatures didn't just hunt and kill. They made prisoners of war. They kept cattle.

Often it was for blood. They would milk their cattle everyday for that. The cattle they trapped in that sense were often bloodslaves. Also the other cynognathuses had bitten Tara for blood, and she hoped it would just be the marks of friendship. She had to wait until they would change into indians, something which had to do with the movements and positions of some of their moons.

The stone translated all the conversations she had with them. Without the stone she wouldn't have any chance to survive here. More and more they accepted her in their group.

She also saw the different catlike families. Some of these cats were horned. Some of the catlike beasts were small, and others were huge like elephants or even huger. It was by the stone she could approach these animals finally.

By the stone she also could ride the many elephant-like beasts here. By the stone she got easily accepted.

There were also a lot of pterosaurs which were flying reptiles. At the shore of the huge River of Doom there were ramphorhyncuses. They ruled the seas and the waters. The small ones couldn't fly, but only dive from rocks and trees to soar in the air, but the bigger ones could fly and were like giant reptile bats. Behind the River of Doom there was something which looked like a civilisation. One of the ramphorhyncuses brought Tara there. An indian called Untak came to her. 'Welcome Tara, we have waited so long for you,' he said. Tara was surprised that he spoke in her language. He seemed to come from Mars as well and made the same trip she made. 'These people are very civilised,' Untak said, while directing his finger to a village in the jungle. 'But it's still the wilderness. They teached me how to change into a reptile.'

A few pterosaurs flew above the village. They had tall necks, wings like bats, and were very huge. Some of them were black, others red, and there were also some white ones. 'They care for the jungle, Tara,' Untak spoke.

'How do you know my name ?' Tara asked.

‘Well, they told me,’ Untak said.

‘Who ?’ Tara asked.

‘The pterosaurs,’ Untak said, ‘the flying reptiles. They are the birds of fire.’

‘I knew you would come. You are welcome,’ Untak said. ‘You will love it here. These birds are the secret of nature. They protect the jungle.’

Tara heard the sounds of the pterosaurs in the distance. Untak told her that he could communicate to the pterosaurs by a certain stone. The stone lay in the center of the village in a sort of fountain. Everyone in the village could talk to the pterosaurs by this stone. Untak led Tara to the village and showed it to her. The stone would translate the sounds of the pterosaurs, and would translate everything the people said to the pterosaurs. The pterosaurs seemed to know a lot. They knew why Tara came here, and where she came from, and they were willing to tell her the secrets of this place. They were also willing to show her the jungles and wildernesses here. One day Untak gave her an amulet by which she could communicate to the pterosaurs wherever she was. It was a precious present. She could easily call the pterosaurs by the amulet. It was a necklace.

Chapter 3. Marit the Ratwoman

The pterosaurs showed Tara how often these beasts had a lot of smell organs in their bodies. This was how they communicated very often. It was also their immune system and their warfare strategy expressing itself in bloody hunts. This was to prevent themselves from becoming a victim themselves. They had been dominated by fear, making them insane, a prisoner of themselves and their instincts.

There were also a lot of cynognathuses here. They seemed to have eyes which only worked by smell. By this they were very accurate, and could see a hundred times better than most of the animals. They had eyes of fire.

The insectian world was very dramatic, much crueller than anything else. They had hives in which they locked up their prey for blood. And they could make anything of the blood. They could even let the blood clot to stone, and they made huge cities of these in the depths of the jungle. These were the cities of blood. They also called them candy cities, because of the sweetness of the blood. It was some sort of honey. Tara sailed with Untak along all these cities to watch them. It was like she saw the eyes of hell. Tara saw the double side of this story, as somehow they were all prey of this world. There seemed to be no escape as not any piece of this world would survive beyond the borderlines of Orion. It was a trap, and it seemed to be the only safe place for them. But now Orion was in the hands of Tara. She told Untak about the stone, the stone of the Beasts of Orion. She wanted to know what to do.

‘All other worlds will die,’ Untak said. ‘This is the only safe place. The rest of the universe doesn’t have a way to transform all the extremes, the ice. They will be eaten by it, and sink away. Also for Mars : this is the only safe place. It is a cruel place, but that is the price to pay. There is no other way. There is only one lioness stone, and only one stone like you have. I saw it in dreams, and it has been in my heart always. That was the reason why I came here. It led me to this place.’

‘So you think all those who have been abducted to Orion are lucky ?’ Tara asked.

‘They have been given a chance,’ Untak said. ‘but many become a prey of the lion tower. Those who are led by the stone of the Beasts of Orion will be led to this place. They are the chosen ones. They communicate with the skulls of the savages. On Mars they would call them ancient ones, but here they are alive. They never died out. On Orion there is a place for them.’

‘You see, Tara,’ Untak said. ‘The other worlds outside Orion they are based on chemicals, artificial smells. They are not savage, but doomed. They have put their trust in kings. The things necessary for their existence and survival, necessary for their further evolution they called dirt and stench. They drown in their cosmetics, ruining their lives, but the stone you have is an eye working by dirt and stench, working by the savage smell, the breath of Orion, of the wilderness. It is the last flame of life, which is the eternal life.’

‘The stone promises a way to freedom, a way to space, although it is a way through time, a cruel substance. However, we can trick time. We can survive time. We are winners,’ Untak said. ‘The stone has been given to you, a present of the hippo, as the hippo queen gave it to you. Use it well, Tara.’

‘How can I use it ?’ Tara asked.

‘Believe in it,’ Untak said. ‘It is the best faith there is.’

Tara watched her stone. She laid it against her eye and could see a new world through it. She saw her own face in it, like the face of an angel.

The River of Doom ended in the deserts. The rulers of the deserts were the skeleton-snakes, who made a lot of noise by the movements of their bones. They were bigger than the usual snakes very often, and they formed houses in the deserts for lonely visitors, wanderers. They would lure the wanderer deeper in the house, and then they would start to move very slowly to turn the lives of the wanderers into living nightmares. By their huge and tall bodies they could become the walls, the ceilings and the floors, all perfectly camouflaged. But they would lead the wanderers into a trap, and then the rats would come to eat from their flesh. By the horror of these houses they made the blood of their victims sweet, and turned them into candy, toys or just dolls. The snakes would break the bones of their victims one by one. Whenever the victim started to find out that something in the house wasn’t right, it was already too late. A woman called Marit was the ruler of these houses. She was actually a rat, and her women could also change into rats. They were the only ones who could safely live in the houses. The deserts were full of these doom towns, and whoever didn’t know about these traps would fall into it.

‘Never go there into such a house,’ Untak said to Tara, ‘for the toymakers come there, and the candymakers, those who have deals with rats, and they turn the lives of wanderers into eternal nightmares. The skeleton-snakes will begin to move, and soon the house will be hell. The house will crash down and it will feed on the inhabitant, fastening him against a heap of bones, and then the rats will come. Toymakers, candymakers, dollmakers and butchers will finally take the victim away for sale. Don’t think it is civilisation. It is savage, it is the wilderness.’

‘Where does Marit live ?’ Tara asked.

‘Oh, she lives in the depths of the deserts,’ Untak said. ‘She’s the ruler there. When they are in need for more victims they abduct children from other planets to let them grow up in such a house first. When they become full grown the house will create more and more troubles, and then finally fastening the victim and showing it’s true nature. The rats do all this. They go out to abduct the children, bring them to the houses and being friends to them. They can change into women, you know.’

‘Where can I find Marit ?’ Tara asked.

‘Come with me,’ Untak said. He knew a path through the desert to her house. When they came there she stood before the window. She looked like a doll. When she saw them she turned into a rat immediately and ran outside. A fight started. Tara had raised her sword. The rat jumped at Untak and bit him horribly. Tara quickly pushed her sword into the back of the rat. ‘That will be enough, Tara,’ Untak said. ‘You have hit her in her sensitive spot.’ The rat fell down. It had a broken spine now, and it was slowly dying. ‘Oh, not when I eat from this candy,’ the rat screamed, and grasped one of the legs of Untak to bite a piece out of it. Immediately the rat straightened it’s back again. Then the rat ran into the house again. ‘It heals itself by eating meat,’ Untak said with a painful face. ‘You will heal also,’ Tara said. ‘Let’s go into the house.’

‘You know what kind of house it is, Tara,’ Untak said. ‘It can be dangerous.’

‘We need to go in,’ Tara said. ‘We do not have another choice.’ Then Tara ran in, while immediately the walls started to ripple. Tara ran through the corridors, and saw the woman sitting on a throne in a huge hall.’

‘That is kind of dumb,’ the woman said. The walls started to move closer and closer to each other. Untak was on the roofs at that moment, and threw a rope through a hole between the bones. ‘Take the rope,’ he shouted to Tara. But Tara crashed the walls by her sword to have another opening, and then she ran upwards to the throne. Again the woman turned into a rat, and this time she jumped on Tara. They had a wrestling on the ground. The rat bit Tara a few times and she started to bleed. By her sword she could shake the rat away from her and then ran to the throne again. There was a mirror between two jewels on the seat of the throne. By her sword Tara destroyed the mirror. ‘I know this is the source of your power, witch,’ Tara shouted. Tara knew this because the stone she had in her sword had told her this. But the mirror healed itself again. ‘As long as there is meat to eat the mirror will live on,’ the rat screamed. Then Tara lay the stone of her sword against the mirror while the mirror exploded, and it’s two jewels were melting away.

The rat was changing into a woman again. She had become weak. She almost crept towards her throne and settled down on it again, but she had lost her powers. ‘Jump away, Untak,’ Tara screamed to Untak who was still sitting on the roof. Tara dived away through the opening she had made by her sword. Then the enormous house crashed down to become a heap of bones.

Years later Tara and Untak visited the heap of bones again, and Marit the ratwoman still lived there, on her throne, but the throne and also herself had become old and poor. Everything had been covered by spiderwebs. ‘You don’t have to be afraid of the house anymore. It’s over now. It’s not the same anymore,’ the old woman said. ‘But don’t you know my throne has been made of skeleton-snakes, and I have been made of them too. Don’t you know that after great draughts they always rise up again ?’

‘Yes, we know,’ Tara said. ‘And that is why we command you to leave the desert with your skeleton-snakes, and to leave Orion.’

‘But you know I cannot live outside Orion,’ the old woman said. ‘Then I will die.’

‘You will live at the borderlines,’ Untak said. ‘That must be enough for you.’

‘But I need meat to get through the night,’ the old woman spoke.

‘There’s meat enough at the borderlines of Orion. Go there for a hunt, and put your houses there,’ Untak said.

And thus the borderlines of Orion became a dangerous place, but Tara and Untak had to do it for the sake of the savage zone of Orion. The stone had decided it this way. And it was true, the woman rose to the heights of her powers again, but this time not in the savage zone again. She had lost her place at the River of Doom, and she had lost her deserts there.

Chapter 4. The Sea of No Return

To Tara it had become clear now. She would stay here for a long time. There was a path to the other side of the Deserts of Doom now. But all Tara could find was more doom. Here the wild cats of Honolor lived, at a strange beach ending in a forest. Again these wild cats could turn into women and they could make someone deaf by their shrieks and cries. Whenever they had caught a victim they would give the victim no rest and no food, finally to put the victim in a small box, which they used for their hives. They were beekeepers, all for blood. In this sense they looked like those of the insectian world. They used the blood to build their cities, candy cities. They mixed it with honey and they transformed parts of it into white blood for creams and making bread. In that sense they looked like the belly-dancers of Turet.

The wild cats of Honolor had many ways to get their victims. They had arenas, and further all sorts of traps. They also visited the battlefields after the battles. One of their best tricks was to turn into nursing, motherlike types, in which they could create a hospital sphere. They were very clever in misleading their victims. And still it was no civilisation. It was savage. It was the wilderness. There was no care in Honolor. All care was nothing but a trap. They needed blooddonors for their hives. They made the most beautiful cities by their bloody candy. They used to make these on the edge between the beach and the forest.

Honolor was a strange world. The wild cats covered it all up. When Tara visited Honolor she was in a fight immediately. In rage she slew many of these corrupted women. She wanted to dominate Orion. She had help from tall snakes, called by the stone. It was an invasion that day. The sky had turned bloodred. It was like the wardancers had come. It was a revolution in the sky. This time the wingless flies were also in the sky, helping her, turning the wild cats into skeletons. Tara didn't send them out of the savage zone, but she sent them to the borderlines of the savage zone.

Through the forest Tara reached a place near to an enormous beach where the Sea of No Return was. Between the forest and the enormous beach there was a guard named the Man with the Million Heads, for he had a million heads. Tara had a fight against him for two days. Whenever she cut off the heads they grew again. The only way to return was the Stairway of Fire. Those who would finally reach the sea could never return. The guard used to throw his victims on the stairs, by which they fell back. But Tara threw him on the stairway of fire, by which he fell into the depths.

Within a few hours Tara was on a raft on the Sea of No Return.

The Python

Stone II

Chapter 1. The Mark of Bellatrix

Chapter 2. Lars Hemmerlitch-Richter

Chapter 3. The Wrath of the Python Stone

Chapter 1. The Mark of Bellatrix

The White Spider Queen was honoured to have Tara from Rhodes so close to her. They developed a very deep friendship, but on the road it started to become irritating. The White Spider Queen gave a huge attic to Tara, on top of one of her towers. Here Tara could live. A coldness started to come up between the two. Tara more and more felt the need to draw herself back, and she started to live a lonely life on the attic. There was a love hate relationship between the two, but finally they could forget about each other. They both had different places. But one day the White Spider Queen died, and Tara got the whole palace. There were many veils throughout the huge palace, many hidden places, with much weaponry. There were a lot of snakes in the palace, which were the guards, and they now had to learn that they had a new boss : Tara.

The White Spider Queen was a painter. She painted by blood, but also by venom. One day Tara discovered a hidden room in the palace with a lot of her paintings. There were also skeletons here who she had painted. A lot of painted skulls hung at the wall. It was dark and dusty here, and snakes lived in the skeletons and the skulls. The room smelled like snake slime. A lot of the palace had been made of python stone, a dangerous stone. It looked like the walls were moving. The rays of the python stones could easily penetrate brains, to change the senses, sight included. They could stimulate illusions. Tara saw the many different patterns of these stones in the palace. If she would stare too long at it, her sight would get shifted, turning, like she had double sight. She had many surveys in the palace.

In another room there were Python Knights, dangerous demons, but the White Spider Queen had stuffed them. They didn't move, and their armories were dusty. The room was full of spiderwebs here, and big chubby spiders seemed to live in the armories of the Python Knights.

Deep in the palace there was a hall with a stairway of blood. When Tara went downstairs she came into a strange place. Her feet were bloody and she stared at a man with a huge cape, dressed in a garment. There were rivers of blood here, and dead bodies were everywhere, or parts of bodies. There was a strange smell. 'Hello,' the man said. Tara didn't say anything. When he took his sword Tara kicked his head real hard before he could do anything. In a flash she took her knife and beheaded him. She knew she had to be on her guard here. She stared around her, almost paranoid. It was a place of death.

She got lured deeper and deeper in this place, and it also trapped her deeper and deeper. She began to see the riches of the python stones more and more, and she realized that the White Spider Queen had really stored them here as in a collection. They were here in all colours, the most beautiful stones.

Inbetween the stones there was a giant egg with some small holes through which snakes slided. There was coming blood out of the holes, and the egg was already cracking. A giant came out of the egg, totally covered by slime. He had big snakes around him everywhere, as if they were strengling him. But they seemed to be his friends. Tara didn't hesitate one moment, jumped on the giant and pierced her tall knife through his throat. The giant threw her away, and stood up. The man began to sing. Tara took a stone and threw it at him. But the man started to laugh. 'Do you know who I am ?' he asked.

'No,' Tara said. 'But all I know is your ripe to be killed.'

'I am Karsa,' the giant said. 'Born of Orion, Betelgeuse.'

'I see you are a slayer,' Tara said to the man covered by blood.

'All paths of python stones lead to Orion,' the giant said. 'It is the place of eternal rebirth. What is death ? Isn't it all to be reborn ? Death is a safe womb.'

‘Go away, you creepy guy,’ Tara said.

‘Ah,’ the giant said, ‘I see you are not ripe for rebirth yet. What if I would make a lollipop of you. The animals here would love to see some meat hanging here.’

Tara grasped her sword and walked towards him again. ‘If you like death so much, then meet my sword, your guide to it,’ Tara said. Then she pierced her sword through his belly.

‘Born of Orion I am,’ the giant roared. ‘I am the womb of the Universe, Betelgeuse, and to hang in my lollipop shop you would do good.’ He grasped her at her neck and threw her against the ceiling of the cave where they were. Then Tara fell down. Karsa took her again chased a hook into her flesh and hung her at a rock. ‘See there,’ he said. ‘Just wait for the predators.’

Tara had lost consciousness and hung there for hours and hours. She was lucky no predators came to lick from her meat. A man finally set her free. The man seemed to know about Karsa. He told Tara that Karsa would prey on eggs, creeping in them to eat the unborn, and then he would rise from the egg. At times Karsa stayed for months in the egg, just to make sure he fed well.

Karsa was the dark guard of Betelgeuse, where the path of the python stones would end. There he had his domain made of snake-tongues, all stretched out. He guarded the Python Eye. It was nothing but a butchery, but not a normal one. It licked you to death. Karsa was a dangerous predator called the licker. The further you would come on the path of the python stones, the more it would break off, trapping you in all sorts of ways. The best and safest way to go there was by lianas. Fortunately the man knew the way. They went from tree to tree by the lianas.

The Python Eye was an oracle made of python stones, like a wheel, guarding the other paths of python stones to the other planets of Orion. By the Python Eye Karsa dominated the Universe. The vehicle in this oracle was Kzumin, his chariot by which he hunted and by which he could open the gates. The Kzumin was his key of power by which he could move the fastest.

Under the might of the Python Eye the universe lived in slavery. Whenever a soul had been abducted by Karsa it would end up in Bellatrix into the claws of a metallic beast called Aam, where they would get printed with the patterns of the python stones. They would get the mark of Bellatrix to let them be raised up as zombies.

Chapter 2. Lars Hemmerlitch-Richter

There was only one way to escape : to become like these rulers of Orion. And there was only one way to become them, and to stay being like them, without falling into guilt and shame : cacao.

But Tara wanted to help them. When Tara finally approached the Python Eye it changed into a dangerous mill. Behind the Python Eye was a gigantic jungle. The Python Eye started to spit fire. The eye started to shriek and roar also. Suddenly Tara saw Karsa on his vehicle inside of the mill. ‘I know you just want to escape all this,’ Tara shouted. ‘You can be anyone. I know a better road than this : go with me to the palace of the White Spider Queen. She died, and you can be my soldiers.’

‘No, I know a better place,’ Karsa roared, ‘Saiphe, the desert planet.’

‘What is that,’ Tara asked.

‘I need to open the portal by some sort of game,’ Karsa said.

‘What kind of game ?’ Tara asked.

‘It’s a game of coffee, tea, chocolate and juice,’ Karsa said.

‘And what do you win with it ?’ Tara asked.

‘It opens the portal to Saiphe,’ Karsa said.

‘To do what ?’ Tara asked.

‘Then I will become a beast like Aam,’ Karsa said.

‘Metallic ?’ Tara asked.

‘Yes, living Python Stone,’ Karsa said.

‘You need to return,’ Tara said. ‘You cannot handle all those powers. It will finally blow you up.’

But Karsa laughed at her. In the distance an enormous beast was coming to them. It was Aam.

‘You both are too far gone,’ Tara said. ‘There would be a good place for you in the palace of the White Spider Queen. I know the way to it. But here you will finally erupt.’

But the two just laughed at her. Suddenly there were explosions everywhere. Behind Tara the other man stood with an enormous gun. ‘Forget about them, Tara,’ he said.

The name of the man was Lars Hemmerlitch-Richter. ‘We need to return, Tara,’ he said. But also the Python Eye was exploding, and many stones were falling down blocking the way. The Kzumin was a strange vehicle, like a motor. Lars grasped it quickly, stepped on it, took Tara and flew away with it in the air.

Again and again Lars had to shoot portals open. Tara didn’t know who he was, but he seemed to be her saviour. But the more and more python stones seemed to fall down, surrounding them. It was raining python stones. They seemed to be alive. Some stones had their mouths wide open, and most of them had only one eye. They started to bite Lars and Tara.

‘It’s Aam,’ Lars said. ‘We are already in it’s beak.’

‘How do we get out ?’ Tara asked.

‘They have surrounded us,’ Lars said.

‘What does that mean ?’ Tara asked.

‘That we will get eaten,’ Lars said.

‘Can’t you do anything ?’ Tara asked.

Suddenly Lars pushed a button on the dashboard of the Kzumin. Gunbeams came out of the Kzumin, and the python stones began to melt, but more and more they changed into snakes. ‘We need to step deeper inside the Kzumin,’ Lars said. ‘There we will be safe.’

But also from the depths of the Kzumin snakes seemed to come forth. Tara felt becoming weaker and weaker, while Lars had to carry her inside. Then Tara fell asleep. Inside the Kzumin there was a small computercabin in which Lars began to work. Soon he could let blasts come forth from the machine. They could watch it through a big thick window. Outside there was fire everywhere. Aam was roaring. By the computers of the Kzumin Lars could reprogram Aam. But they were still in the enormous stomache of Aam. Suddenly hard stones were clashing against the window of the Kzumin, and soon the window broke open, while fluids started to enter in and strange smells. Lars grasped Tara tight and swam with her outside. Karsa was sitting on his machine again, and he was laughing at them.

‘The portal of Saiphe is opening,’ Karsa said while laughing. ‘I’m going to be Python Stone too, living Python Stone to increase my powers.’

Suddenly they all got swallowed by an enormous gate. Tara woke up again. ‘What is going on ?’ she asked Lars.

Sharp pieces of python stone pierced themselves into their skins. ‘Ha ha ha,’ Karsa shouted. ‘Isn’t this amazing. We become python stone.’

Strange fluids streamed everywhere having a delicious smell, luring them to drink. ‘Don’t drink it,’ Lars said. Tara held her lips tightly on each other. Karsa was drinking and drinking. ‘I’m becoming python stone,’ he roared. Then he exploded.

There was a hole in the walls by which they could escape.

‘Are we out now ?’ Tara asked.

‘I hope so,’ Lars said.

As for Tara : she wanted to forget about the python stone, but it seemed to follow her everywhere.

Chapter 3. The Wrath of the Python Stone

Lars took her to a cave where many snakes were. Everywhere there was snakeslime and the strong piercing smell of it. Lars took the slime and smeared it on his body. ‘Do the same,’ he said to Tara. ‘This is the only way to be safe against the powers of the python stone.’ Tara immediately did what he said.

Behind the cave there was a large cave with a small lake, with rocks with many spiders and crabs having eyes on their backs. Again there was much slime. ‘Do it,’ he said to Tara. ‘Smear it on your body.’ Tara did immediately what he said. Lars was sliding into the water. ‘Follow me,’ he said. He swam to the other side. There were many slimy webs hanging here.

‘Breath it in,’ he said, which she did. ‘Follow me,’ he said. He swam into the depths to a light cave underwater. Tara followed him. In another cave they stepped out of the water again. It was a dry place here with dry sand. By a tunnel they came into a dark cave, very huge. Here a lot of men stood in black armories and with black helmets. Lars and Tara hid behind a rock. Close to them there was a cupboard where they could take an armory for themselves. Soon they stood close to the others.

‘I want you to know,’ their leader spoke, ‘soon there is no way back to the python stone anymore. We have something bigger. While the python stone will be a trap more and more. We do not have any time to lose. You all know which substance is bigger than the python stone. You all know the substance which will trigger the powers of the python stone, and it will be the only thing safe against it. The universe will blow itself up. It is the eye of orion. We have come all our way from the Pleiades to find it here, and we found it. Soon we will be the rulers. We will build a new universe by the eye of orion. And the python stone will be nothing but some dynamite to clean it all up. Romustar, activate the python stone, and let me show you how the eye of orion will protect me, will protect us, against it.’

A man stepped forwards having a small machine in his hand with a red ball. He pushed some buttons like a code and fire seemed to come forth from the ball. Then the leader showed them a blue eye in which he blew air. It became bigger and bigger and turned brown and red. It was like a fleece now. Then he took the small machine from which fire seemed to come forth, put it into the fleece, while the flame was dying. All man were clapping in their hands. ‘See,’ the leader said. ‘The python stone can’t do anything …’ but then there were explosions everywhere. The men got into panic. ‘It’s the wrath of the python stone,’ the leader was screaming. Then he was burning like all the other men.

‘See how important the slime was,’ Lars whispered to Tara. Tara nodded.

‘Follow me,’ Lars said. They went through another gate and it seemed they were back in the palace of the White Spider Queen again. ‘Who are you ?’ Tara asked. Lars gave her a hand and said : ‘I am the guard of the palace of the White Spider Queen. I have found you, and I have been given to you as your guard as well.’

‘As a gift of the White Spider Queen ?’ Tara asked.

Lars nodded with a smile.

The End

Sharla the

Head Hunter II

Chapter 1. Bellatrix Casino

Chapter 2. Crocodile Tower

Chapter 1. Bellatrix Casino

She had been called the skeleton-brooder. She could bring them alive by caressing their skulls. ‘I believe you, Tara,’ some women were shouting. She could raise the dead. But sometimes it just didn’t work, like there were some bigger powers in the game.

In the distance there was an egg between huge spiders. The spiders were very hairy and they had jewels all over their bodies. The evil witch was standing up again. A small crocodile came out of the egg, and suddenly turned into Sharla the Head Hunter. She was dressed in a garment with a cape, while smoke was all around her. With quick steps she ran towards Tara from Rhodes, raised her spear, threw it, and missed.

There was a fight for three days against Sharla the Head Hunter. Sharla finally left. She visited her old home again, a place no one knew, a place along the river. It was a hidden place, surrounded by dark trees. The bushes and trees grew tightly together so that no one could come through. Sharla made some soup of some old bones. When she drank it she came to her powers again. In this land she just couldn't die. Her mouth was full of spiders. Pale white skulls were staring at her. She poured some of the soup on the skulls and suddenly knights stood before her, her knights. 'I want you to bring down Tara,' she spoke.

The knights were roaring and were changing into black panthers. They ran out of the hut and smelled where Tara was already. They could smell her bloodline. Tara however could dominate them by her sword.

Finally Sharla went to her main realm at the Westside of the Mitstik River, where she had her largest collection of skulls. Sharla always had her cycle of coming alive again, and in this Elephant City played a big part. It was a city in the west of her area, a city she dominated. In secret she drank all sorts of blood here to get her strength back again. The cycle was like her oracle speaking to her. It was her heart. Under her skin there was always a snake sliding, her father, the Skeleton Eater.

Tara had her own cycle : the black snake inside. Tara smelled blood, in such a sense that she knew that Sharla was on top of herself again. Sharla's return was soon big news in Elephant City. Her newest trick was turning others into killer-pigs by some sort of mixture of blood. She would put these predator-pigs into arena's or in her army.

Later Tara heard that Lars Hemmerlitch-Richter, an old friend of hers, had killed Sharla the Head Hunter. Soon he came to her on his motorcycle. He had saved her a few times, and she believed him. Especially when he showed her the head of Sharla. 'Want to buy it ?' he asked.

'Yes, I would hang it at the wall of my cave,' Tara said.

'Good,' Lars said.

Tara was very glad she saw this old friend again. She knew that she could always count on him. But as you could expect : Sharla's headless body found them soon. 'Ah, a headless chicken,' Lars said. 'I forgot to cut off the rest.'

'Okay, be careful you won't touch any of the bottle she has in her hands, Tara,' Lars said. 'It's probably the stuff by which she breeds her killerpigs.' Lars jumped on his motorcycle, grasped Tara and drove away.

'Oh, I will get you,' Sharla shrieked. 'No worries.'

'There is not any way to beat that witch,' Tara said to Lars.

'Oh, I know something,' Lars said. He brought Tara to his house, and showed her his many mysterious weapons. 'I have an army,' he said.

'So has she,' Tara said.

'I'm better,' Lars said with a smile on his face.

'Show me,' Tara said.

Lars grasped a gun from the wall. 'Let's go,' he said. Soon they had her in sight again. Lars loaded the gun and fired. The headless body fell on the ground. Lars shot again, and it exploded.

'Simple,' he said.

'You don't know Sharla,' Tara said. 'She always returns. She has a cycle.'

‘Yes, but she becomes weaker,’ Lars said. ‘Her cycle has called for me, finally.’

‘Who are you ?’ Tara asked.

‘I am her nemesis,’ Lars spoke, ‘her destruction.’

‘Are you for real ?’ Tara asked, while she pinched him in the arm.

Lars nodded. Suddenly blood came out of Lars’s mouth. ‘Lars, what’s wrong ?’ Tara asked.

‘She’s in me,’ Lars said. Then he fell down. ‘She’s in me now,’ he said. ‘I will fight her now inside. Please take my keys and my house.’ Then Lars died. Tara knew he had sacrificed himself. She was sad. She took his motorcycle and drove to his house, as he said.

There were strange objects in his house, many skulls. In a sense he looked a lot like Sharla. Then Tara heard laughing in her head and something in her head stang her. She woke up in hell, while Sharla’s head was in front of her, laughing at her. Suddenly she also saw Lars.

‘Am I dead ?’ Tara asked.

‘In hell,’ Lars said. ‘The only way to fight Sharla.’ Wolfskulls were surrounding them, piercing them, and soon they both hung at rocks where birds began to eat from their meat. They were in the burning sun. ‘It’s like she’s invincible,’ Tara roared, ‘like the dying and the rising sun.’

‘It’s a pretty and good example of rebirth,’ Lars spoke. He was moaning because of the pain. Then everything got dark. Sharla was teasing them by feathers, and even in this position she kicked them and beat them. She showed them her hell motor-cycle to make them jealouse. ‘When everything is in fire, with this thing I always escape,’ she said. She took a wire and bound at around their necks. Then she acted like she was strengling them. ‘Oh, the snakes will come after awhile to do the same,’ she spoke.

Their souls were burning in hell, tortured, until their ghosts slided away. They were both nothing but shadows now, winds of hell. ‘Hold my hand,’ Lars said. Tara’s hand slided to his. ‘I’ve been here before,’ Lars said. ‘This is my cycle.’

‘In the Bellatrix Casino we rise again,’ Lars said.

‘What is that ?’ Tara asked.

‘A beach,’ Lars said. ‘When there is flood, it’s a casino.’

The beach was full of heads, all waiting for the flood. The flood would be like a stairway, like lights taking them higher, until they would be out of hell. But if they would lose, they would be drawn deeper.

‘I’m not a gambler,’ Tara said. ‘I hate those games.’

‘Play for your life,’ Lars said.

But they ended up below the beach, where a mill was spinning. Here they became nothing but air.

‘I am a cloud,’ Tara said.

‘The coffee will wake you up,’ Lars said.

‘What do you mean ?’ Tara asked.

‘Oh, there will be coffee for all losers, giving them another chance,’ Lars said.

‘I’m sick of these games,’ Tara said.

‘Play for life,’ Lars said.

In the distance they heard Sharla laughing.

Chapter 2. Crocodile Tower

But again they seemed to lose every game, and they only slided and sank deeper and deeper. ‘Do you still work in the palace of the White Spider Queen ?’ Tara asked.

‘Yes,’ Lars said, ‘but not in the weekends. Well, it’s good you bring that up here, for I know a secret path to the palace.’

‘Ah, like you did before,’ Tara said.

‘Yes,’ Lars said. They came close to some sort of machine behind glass. It was a coiling elevator, working by a strange sort of fire. ‘My way to get density again,’ Lars said.

‘What is it ?’ Tara asked.

‘You will see,’ Lars said.

It was a crocodile tower. Lars pushed some buttons, and they got density again, while they were coiling upstairs. Soon they got into the palace of the White Spider Queen.

But when they saw Sharla the Head Hunter there sitting on the throne of the White Spider Queen Lars almost couldn't say anything. 'Come here,' Sharla said, 'and show yourself to your master.'

'You aren't master of him,' Tara shouted. But Lars slowly moved towards Sharla like he was under her spell. White creatures seemed to jump forth from the throne. 'Throw him into the crocodile tower again,' Sharla shouted.

'No,' Tara shouted. But a strange machine was taking Lars by his arms and his legs, moving him towards the crocodile tower in which they threw him. 'I am your queen now,' Sharla shouted.

'No way,' Tara said. 'Guards, throw her also into the crocodile tower.'

But Tara grasped a sword from the wall, and kicked the white guards away until she reached the throne. Sharla stood up while lightening come forth from her hand slamming Tara against the wall. 'You can't begin anything against me,' Sharla said. 'You are nothing.'

Lars came up again in the strange machine. 'T..T…Tara,' he stuttered. 'She has taken the crown of the White Spider Queen. If you get it, she will be defeated.'

Sharla began to laugh. 'There is no any way you can get this crown.' She took it from her head threw it into the air while it was changing into a white bird. Tara grasped a bow from the wall, took an arrow and shot the bird while it fell into her arms and changed into a crown again.

'P…p…put it on your head, T…Tara,' Lars stuttered. Tara did what he said, while Sharla fell down in front of the throne. 'I am lost,' she shrieked. Then she disappeared in a flame. Quickly Tara helped Lars out of the machine. 'I will lead you to the White Spider Queen's private room now,' Lars said, 'to show you all the objects of her powers. They are yours now.'

It was a major room with a huge veiled bed, and many objects which once had made a queen of the White Spider Queen. Most of these objects she gathered from her defeated enemies. The most beautiful treasures Tara could find here. She fell down on the bed, and thought she could use some sleep. Lars of course would watch over her.

The End

The Gladiators of Lakshor II

Chapter 1. The knife of Gitdugal

Chapter 2. Emperor of Tantalos

Chapter 3. The Eye of the Cobra

Chapter 1. The knife of Gitdugal

Tara walked towards Gitdugal. She had found a sharp branch like a stake. But Gitdugal took her above his head and smashed her against a tree. ‘Dream of me,’ he shouted at Tara. Tara bowed down and fell at his feet. Again he took her high above his head and this time he threw her far away. Again Gitdugal ran towards her and this time he took her into a tight grip. He tried to strengle her. He also bit her. Tara lost it completely and he threw her into the river again, where she was more dead than alive. Then Gitdugal dived into the river, and wanted to drown her there. Tara dived underwater by her last strength, swam to his leg and bit him. Blood was streaming into the water. He grasped her and pushed her under even more. At his belt a sheathed knife hung. She grasped the knife and ripped his stomach open. That was the end of Gitdugal. His grip got weaker, and soon she had beheaded him. She raised his skull into the air and shouted to the slaves in the gardens : ‘It is done. You are free now.’

It was a beautiful day. Her tribe was free now, and so many others.

The knife of Gitdugal she would keep forever, also his skull. She brought them to her cave, where they would have a place. She would stay around her tribe to protect them.

She didn't talk much about the knife of Gitdugal. She kept it hidden in her cave. One day the knife had been stolen, and I saw Tara losing her powers more and more. After decades she found it back. This is the story. She had a confrontation with the pirate prince, an evil commander of the gladiators of Lakshor. The most evil men came to his ship, which some would call a spaceship. The ship was full of skeletons dressed in garments and capes, giving advice to the pirate prince. They kept women locked up in the ship as well. The skeletons used to play many games, which they used as oracles to hear what the gods had to say. They listened to the winds. They got the mission to steal the knife of Gitdugal from Tara's cave.

One of the skeletons had to guard the knife of Gitdugal. The knife was important because of it's sleep-inducing powers.

It was a ghostship. The women and girls who had been locked up in the insides of the ship had their own rooms. In the nights they would wander through the ship, but they could never leave. Their hearts had been chained by the knife of Gitdugal. The knife of Gitdugal always drowned these hearts, so the women were often shrieking, especially in the nights.

Some of the women were Vikings and had been kidnapped out of other boats. Those Vikings often worshipped dark skeleton gods. Most of these women lived on the planets of Gemini.

Erator was the Viking ruler of Gemini, but he also had to bow down before the knife of Gitdugal. They skinned him and hung his skeleton at the front of the ship. Further they decorated the ship by the bones and skulls of the kings of the planets of Gemini : Castor, Pollux, Wasat and Alhena, but the Viking king of Mebsuta they couldn't beat. He finally called for the help of Tara from Rhodes. Tara was very glad that he knew where the knife was, and she would help him getting his women back.

Together they went in a boat to the ship of the pirate prince one day. Tara was a good swordfighter, and so was Mebsuta, but the pirate prince they couldn't beat. They ended up chained at a wall in the depths of the ship. The pirates were cannibals, knifelickers, and first Tara and Mebsuta had to eat a lot to become fat. But the food was so awful that they vomited everything out all the time. In the middle of the night one of the women found them and unchained them. She knew where the knife of Gitdugal was. The guard was sleeping. They took the keys out of his pocket and opened the door to the room where the knife was. Quickly Tara grasped the knife. They freed the other women and escaped from the ship.

They swam towards an island, but because of the many crocodiles many women died.

And on the island there were nothing but pirates who didn't let them enter the island. In rage Tara and Mebsuta killed many crocodiles and built a ship of it. They used everything they could find.

There were times the pirate-gladiators of Lakshor really gave them hard times, but finally a man called Lars Hemmerlitch-Richter built a control-panel to trap them. He could use them as marionets, and built an army of them. Lars more and more started to show up in the Tara's life to show himself as her guard. He was a technician, and could find a way to Tara's heart.

He also helped Mebsuta to raise Gemini again. It became the biggest Viking Empire in the universe.

Lakshor was like a deep pit worse than hell. Tara knew all about it. But by the help of Lars she could take it over. Lars installed a clock there, which was the clock of change. Tara was so grateful to Lars that she gave him the knife of Gitdugal.

Chapter 2. Emperor of Tantalos

In the depths of Lakshor there was a realm called Taroon, also called the road to Tantalos, the world of hunger. Lars finally became an emperor there, all by the help of Tara. Tara was almost in love with this man, who had such a soft heart. There was something in his eyes which made her melt, but savage as she was, she wouldn't answer his love. She repressed it. She chose for the lonely life. Taroon and Tantalos were in his hands now, so she had fulfilled her mission. These two areas had always been the secret of Lakshor, and now these were in good hands. Lars was also a man at his own. It was here he finally built the greatest warship. He called his ship the flyslayer.

He raised the gladiators of lakshor here and gave them a good life. He raised himself an army of which he was the captain. There was no warship but the Flyslayer. The gladiators of lakshor were in good hands now. The flyslayer terminated a lot of fly-rulers of lakshor.

Lars was a man at his own. He had a great heart, and teached Tara a lot about love. But savage as Tara was, she became irritated. She teached him about the savage life, and thus a deep friendship rose. Lars was such a gentleman, almost civilized, but Tara knew he had to be that way, for he was a spy. He was the guard of the White Spider Queen palace, a palace connected to so many worlds, a palace to which he always returned.

Lars made of many gladiators of lakshor also guards of the throne of the White Spider Queen, so that they could live a double life more or less. Some became guards like him. Where Taroon was the world of riches, Tantalos was the world of poverty, but Lars would switch them. He built the switch deep in the heart of Tantalos, which he called his world. The world of Lars Hemmerlitch-Richter was a big world, a righteous world. He was the one playing with the switch, but it was attached to a clock. He actually called it a time-bomb-clock, as it always brought a lot of destruction.

It was actually all switching between a red light and a green light, and the rhythm made everything soft. Lars used it to open portals.

Lars was a prophet with supernatural gifts. He always used to amaze Tara with his knowledge about things he naturally couldn't know. But she could expect that from the guard of the White Spider Queen palace. She understood why she had chosen him.

Chapter 3. The Eye of the Cobra

Tara loved to see how Lars used the gladiators of lakshor as marionets. They were part of the time-bomb-clock, and when they exploded he would bring them to life again. They were all robotic, and became his knights. Lars was an expert in Python Stone Technology, and knew exactly how to use it without falling in the trap of it's trickery. It was the trickster stone, without a doubt, but Lars had learnt to deal with it. He had learnt to balance it's energies, and to use it for the good.

But there were things in the depths of Taroon and Tantalos Lars didn't understand. Taroon was the history of Lakshor, the old part, with unknown mysteries, holding things they called the dragon candles, shapeshifting objects guarding the secrets of this history and of it's life. These ones were sorcerors, called the pirates of Taroon, the older gladiators of lakshor. They had been made by Diabrilles, who was a dollmaker. Diabrillis was the one who had built lakshor with all it's secret depths.

One could only come to the eternal riches by the eternal hunger, where the pirates of Taroon originally came from. They were the secret of the living cobra stones, the only way to survive the dangerous forces of the python stone. The pirates of Taroon were the guards of this world, and they actually dominated Lars. Lars suffered from hyperventilation at times, and from stuttering, all because of the weight of these pirates. They lived in his heart, and they wanted him to become initiated into the forces of the cobra stone. Lars was their marionette.

These guards stood on walls too high for Lars. These walls were the walls of fire, spread throughout the universe, all coming forth from the domain of Diabrillis. They needed to keep the secrets of the cobra stone, but they had an interest in Lars. One day they took him to the realm of Diabrillis. It was a place he wouldn't forget too fast. Diabrillis was like a black and white octopus transmitting red beams. But he could take many forms as he was a sorcerer and a shapeshifter.

'Why have you brought this unworthy man to me ?' Diabrillis roared to the guards.

But the pirates didn't say anything. 'Well, have you lost your tongue ?' Diabrillis asked. Diabrillis moved closer to Lars, who was still in his machine, a strange vehicle attached to his arms and legs making him bigger.

'You look like you are in a wheelchair,' Diabrillis said to Lars. Lars pushed some buttons and a fire beam clashed against the skin of Diabrillis. Diabrillis started to laugh. 'What do you want with your wheelchair, invalid man. There's no place for you here. This has all been designed for me.'

Then Lars pushed another button, while red lights went on and missiles and rockets came forth from the machine. There was some smoke, but Diabrillis still had fun with it. 'Why not using your crutches ? I bet you can hit hard by them.'

Diabrillis came closer and started to break the machine by his tentacles. Lars understood the pirates of Taroon weren't glad with their boss. Maybe they wanted him to do something about it. Quickly he tried another button. It was an ice beam. Diabrillis froze immediately, and got into a shock. 'Guards, do something,' he shouted. 'I can't move.' But the pirates of Taroon climbed on the machine. 'Go through the red door on the left,' they said to Lars. Lars could move his machine through the door, while the pirates followed him. But Diabrillis already started to melt. 'You won't come far,' he shouted.

Lars stepped out of his machine, took the knife of Gitdugal he once got from Tara and threw it into the heart of Diabrillis. It was the sleep-inducing knife leading to death. But the tentacles of Diabrillis seemed to grow, turning into enormous pythons. Another machine came forward, with a pirate of Taroon in it, an old gladiator of lakshor. It was a scorpion vehicle with scissors. Quickly it began to cut the pythons' heads off, and more scissor machines seemed to enter to do the same.

'Don't tell him the secret,' one of the pythons roar. But the pirates of Taroon were merciless against the pythons. They opened other red doors. Cobras seemed to come forth, and they formed a circle around Lars. 'No, not the wheel of the cobra stones,' another python roared. The cobras formed a tight wheel which started to spin. 'It's the key of life,' a pirate of Taroon said. 'It opens all the gates of survival. It's the eye of the cobra.'

Lars lost consciousness and later he woke up in a bed, while Tara was holding his hand. 'You have done it, hero,' she said. 'You have freed the pirates of Taroon by defeating Diabrillis. You have freed the old gladiators of lakshor.' Some pirates stood close to them, smiling. 'And we will tell you all the secrets,' they said.

The End

The Clowns of Trigidad

Chapter 1. The Coded Gun

Tara was on her way to the prince of Trigidad, a city on Mars. When she came there the prince was desparate. He told Tara about a gang of clowns terrorizing Trigidad. They had big machines by which they could mess with the minds of the citizens, and they made a lot of noise. No one knew what to do against those clowns.

Tara watched some of the pictures he had. 'There is nothing we can do,' the prince said. 'We really need your help. People have the feeling they are drowning in themselves, taken over by strange devices.' The prince sighed. He was happy Tara finally came. He trusted her. She was almost almighty in his eyes.

Tara took some of the pictures and went outside. There were strange orange and red rays in the air. Quickly one of the clowns came down from a machine, and took her in a grip. 'What do you want to do about us, lady,' he moaned. Tara slammed him against a tree. She took his gun and aimed it at him. 'Listen, you dumb piece of plastic,' she said. 'Go back to your toy world.' She shot him in the head, but the clown was only laughing, and then went away. It seemed the clowns were immune against their own weapons.

The gun started beeping, and soon it got very hot. Tara had to drop the gun. The gun was coded and didn't recognize Tara as the owner. Tara ran away and dived, while the gun was exploding. She hid behind a tree. She saw the clown running in the distance, and she decided to follow him. The clown went into a forest, and after running for a long time she followed him into a strange sort of domain. She hid behind a wall, and heard some of the clowns talking. They talked about taking over Trigidad, but first they needed to destroy it's prince. Tara felt a strange fire in her bones. She knew the prince was in danger. From her back she took her sword, and then went to the clowns to cut off their heads, but the clowns were only laughing, and took their heads in their hands. Their faces were halve white halve black. 'We are just holograms, lady,' one of them said. They smiled at her. 'Our true selves are on Reticuli, the Dark Constellation, you're fighting a projection.'

They took Tara in a grip and locked her up in a prison made of red rays. Whenever she touched a ray it burnt her skin, and the rays were moving. After awhile the rays moved closer to her, while she heard the clowns laughing in the distance. Tara roared because it was burning her flesh away. 'No !' she screamed. She took one of her knives and brought it between her teeth. The clowns were holding a sort of device. Then Tara took the knife from between her teeth and held it into the rays until it was burning, and then she threw it at the device, while it exploded. Tara was free now, and ran away from the clowns. She ran into another hall where there was a big machine. She knew that by this machine their holograms came here. She stepped into the cabin after she had pushed some buttons on the computer. Within a few seconds she was on Reticuli, on one of the main planets.

She stared at some clowns with black faces, and they stared at her. This time she could behead them as these weren't holograms. Behind the machine room there was a huge hall with frozen people like dolls. She wandered in this hall for hours, and she realized that all the other worlds were just holograms. Finally she found herself and realized that she was a hologram herself. She could step into herself and it was like she was coming alive this time. It was like she had finally found her powers. Then after awhile she found the prince of Trigidad. She laid her body against his body, and she could melt him a bit. He could move, and breath. 'Tara, I … I …' the prince said.

‘It’s okay,’ Tara said. ‘Let’s start a new life here.’ She explained him a bit what was going on. They could find the exit of this hall, and came into a huge wilderness. A black chief dressed with leopard skins looked at them. ‘Oko bok lulu,’ he said. Then a young woman came forward. The people here were very friendly. Soon they realized that they had escaped from a dangerous institute. This was the real life.

Tara was among the panthers now. They walked freely here among humans, and they were hospital. She loved to stare into this huge wilderness, so many layers of forest and jungle. It was intoxicating her mind and flesh.

Tara woke up in the palace of the prince of Trigidad. It was just a dream. He had an empire in the jungle, and Tara was his guest. ‘Have you slept well ?’ he asked Tara.

‘Yes,’ Tara said. The prince was surrounded by panthers and snakes, and well-dressed with leopard-skins.

‘Have you had strange dreams ?’ he asked. ‘You know, we have drunk a lot yesterday, exotic drinks, and they can play with the mind. It’s actually all information, symbolic information.’

‘Yes,’ Tara said. ‘I dreamt of the clowns.’

‘The clowns ?’ the prince said. ‘Oh yes, they were dangerous zombificators of the past. They ruled our people but we are free of them now.’

‘Where are they now ?’ Tara asked.

‘Under the ground,’ the prince said.

‘I also dreamt that I found my powers back,’ Tara said.

‘Oh yes, you will find them here,’ the prince said. ‘I have waited so long for you, and I will share with you the secrets of your existence.’

‘What do you mean by under the ground,’ Tara asked.

‘Well, they came from under the ground, and they returned to it,’ the prince said.

‘They were savages, and they just used white masks, all to build their empire, their city, and they kidnapped us to that,’ the prince said. ‘From dust they came and to dust they have returned. It’s finally ours now.’

Again Tara woke up. It seemed to be a dream within a dream. She was staring into the face of a clown. ‘Where am I ?’ she asked. ‘Trigidad,’ the clown said. ‘Don’t you remember anymore ?’

‘No,’ Tara said, ‘how did I come here ?’

The clown showed her a strange fluid in plastic. ‘A snake-bite,’ he said.

‘Am I dead ?’ she asked.

‘No,’ he said, ‘but you are fighting against it. You are in delirium. Your body is making antidotes at the moment. You will be okay. Snakes are just the holograms of their spirits. They live in the underground. They are clowns. You are with us now.’

Chapter 2. Fallen Angels

I wondered where I was. I was in Snake City, in the depths of the underground, where the clowns lived. Their holograms lived on the surfaces as snakes, just to distract others from Snake City. They had sent their omens to the world above, programmed with a message of Judgement and Doom. It was the last invitation to come to Snake City by the means of complexed rituals or just a snake-bite. I, Tara, seemed to be their prisoner. It was a strange cult, a strange religion. The clowns were black, but painted themselves in white very often.

But more and more I realized that I was still dreaming. Did I eat something wrong, or was it just a long long night. I woke up and saw flashes of spiders, very intense. Or was this just a vision. Was it spider venom, and did they keep me in these dreams ? It seemed I couldn't wake up anymore, like I was in a coma. The spiders had pink spots on their backs. Was I hallucinating ? It looked so real. I could feel them creep across my body. It was burning me. Suddenly I saw flashes of flies, strange exotic flies, and they started to come down on the spiders to eat them, and lay eggs in them. The baby flies grew up very fast and lived from the flesh of the spiders. Strange electricity moved through me. I stood up, and I was pretty sure I had fallen into a nest but now I was rising up again, still intoxicated, like I was drunk. A warrior stood before me with a bandana. I asked him who he was. 'Come,' he said. 'I will lead you to my camp.'

They were very friendly to me, and very hospital. But then I woke up in the palace of the prince of Trigidad again. It was like I had walked in a circle. 'Clowns, Tara,' he spoke. 'Here, drink from this, and you will stay awake.' I drank and stood up.

'Who are the clowns ?' I asked.

'The clowns of Trigidad are flies,' he said. 'I have saved you from them, but their poison needs to come out. I just gave you some stuff, so it will do.'

'Did I fall into their nest ?' I asked.

'Yes,' the prince spoke.

'Who are you then ?' I asked.

‘I am their prince,’ he said. ‘But they have fallen away from me. They are mere fallen angels.’

‘Are you God then ?’ I asked. ‘Am I dead ? Am I in heaven or hell ?’

But there was no one anymore. I stood in the jungle, and there was such a sweetness. I was close to a nest of exotic flies. I pushed some leaves into my nose. I couldn’t afford myself to smell it again. Then I walked away from it as far as I could, and continued my journey.

The Killer-Dreamer

Chapter 1. The Sword of Malot

There was a sorcerer living on the hills, holding the land of Malot in grip by a bewitched sword. In the night voices came from the sword to torment the minds of it’s victims, so that they couldn’t sleep. Tara visited the sorcerer one day. She went for a journey on the hills, called Fire Hills, where the sorcerer lived. He stood high on one of the tops. His castle was like a cloud.

The sword flew forth from his hands, and it was filled with voices, filled with souls. The souls didn’t seem to have any rest, and they were screaming. Tara raised her shield, but they broke it off. The souls were like dogs, but they had mouths like lions.

Something struck her head, and suddenly a whisper said : ‘We are the boys from the lion, locked up in a cloud city, but we do not want to leave, for there is no other way.’

‘Come with me,’ the sorcerer said. Tara was like hypnotized, and followed the sorcerer. The land of Malot just seemed to be an illusion, all to veil the cloud city. ‘Do you want some tea ?’ the sorcerer asked. Around him lions appeared. They had such pretty mouths. Tara was still hypnotized and sat down in one of the chairs of the castle.

‘You were already hypnotized,’ the wizard said. ‘I’m just breaking it off now.’

‘I feel like I’m drunk,’ Tara said. ‘Where does the city path lead to ?’

‘It leads to the lion,’ the wizard said. ‘It is the power of the sword, and it has the power to heal itself. That is why it created the illusions, to veil itself, and hide itself against dangers.’

The wizard led her to a huge portal. In the distance she could see a statue of a lion. The lion could move, and stared at her. ‘Come,’ it roared. When she came closer, the gigantic lion took her up in his claw. Then he put her on his back, opened his wings and flew.

Tara woke up in one of the houses of Malot where she had slept. It was a dream. She felt like she was on the waves of dreams and illusions. She smiled while watching the ceiling. ‘My powers are getting back,’ she said. At the wall a sword hung.

But she was in the hands of the wizard, playing with her soul. He had struck her a long time ago, and her life was just an illusion. But his eye was on her, he seemed to like her.

One day he called for her, he called her in a dream, and she found herself between the pillars of a huge portal, huger than she ever saw. The wizard sat on a throne in a sort of bedroom. Snakes were sliding, and lions were on both sides. ‘Come closer, my darling,’ he said. ‘I want to give you the Sword of Malot.’ He reached out for her hands and gave it to her. ‘The sword reflects the bond between the king and his daughter. I could only reach you by fragile stairways of illusions, but now I have you here with me. The sword has called you forward. Rule the world with me, … daughter.’

Tara smiled, and accepted the sword. The killer-dreamer she was.

Father had many angels. They all had their parts in bringing her back. She was still hypnotized. She got an armour, and two winged lions rose at her sides. 'My powers are getting back,' she said.

'Yes,' Father said. 'You are a goddess.'

She raised her sword while lightening was striking it. Old men sat themselves down next to the wizard, the king. Then a spirit appeared before the king. 'Esdul,' said the king. 'Spread as many illusions around this place as you can, so that this place will be hidden for eternity. The king has reunited with his daughter.' And the killer-dreamer went out that day, to cause a massacre, and to let them all live on in illusions. He was a strange assassin, bringing life and death at the same time. Tara loved the boy, this spirit. He kept them safe. He seemed to be the riddle of the sword. He belonged to the family.

The boy seemed to be very creative, more than average.

Chapter 2. The Legend

When he got older he become more sinister, and he was the dread of the castle. He was still the giver of Life and Death, but also of Tragedy. But these were all webs to protect the castle, all illusions. And there was tea dripping from the webs, called the lion's tea, and people got drunk of it. It hypnotized them, while they became one with the Sea of Dreams. It was from this sea Tara came forth to finally meet her father and her brother.

Through the years the lion's tea got wilder and wilder, like a lion searching for it's children. He would find them, and bring them in. Through the years the lion's tea started to burn brighter, hotter, faster, like it was saying : We do not have much time left. There was only one way out : Tara's path.

Only by the Sword of Malot there was hope to finally wake up. Often the Sword was wildly and mightily moving above the Sea of Dreams, looking for a delicate harvest. Esdul became a winged creature more and more, still holding his boy qualities, but he was an old man now, having a gospel to preach. Of course he was a swindler, a liar and a trickster, but he was a riddler as well, offering truth to those who were ready. He made ships for them in the dangerous sea, and gave them vehicles to fly with. He became a sailmaker and a wingmaker, and he loved to use colors in layers, like fragile stairways of illusion between the several waves of the sea of dreams. He gave them stories to fly, fables to heal, legends to be safe, he built towers in the sea, like an echo sent out from home, but went astray and false in the wind. Esdul was a legend himself, only to be trusted as a riddle, the riddle of the sword. He built a city in the sea, and he became it's king. He created it's tall beaches, as a way to bring them in. The beaches were always burning, and there were always lions around, like it was a huge oven.

It was a summer city, and the Sword of Malot reflected so much of it's brilliance. To spend one night in this city was an experience you would never forget, and those nights were much discussed. It was a veiled city, but the veils were always torn.

The End

The New Order

Once in awhile it happened that at some places on Mars wizardboys got born. They were called the boys from lynx, and they could form a real threat in the future, so there were a lot of boyhunters around trying to keep Mars safe from possible terror. Often boys died without reason, because of the risen paranoia. People feared the boys from lynx almost like nothing else, and often also innocent boys had to suffer under that. Sperewer was an assassin, a hunter sent out to search for the boys from lynx.

Tara was very sceptic about it. Parents often lost their boys without reason, dying at the hands of those assassins. Sperewer seemed to be the leader of those assassins, and one day Tara visited his place deep in a forest. It was a veiled place, he lived there in a castle, a fortress. Mystery was hanging in this place. Tara took an arrow out of her quiver and made her bow ready.

She saw Sperewer sitting on his throne. In this hall there were many cages full of boys.

'Sperewer,' Tara said, when she walked forward, directing the arrow at him. 'Look at what you are doing. You don't know what kind of boys you have in your cages.'

'No,' Sperewer said, 'but they are here for research.'

'You know why I am here,' Tara said. 'This has to stop. These kids do not have a life in all these researches. You destroy more than that you rebuild. You are much worse than the boys from lynx themselves, whoever they are.'

Sperewer stood up, and said : 'Listen, lady, you do not know anything what you are saying. When one of the boy from lynx would be able to reach manhood, it could mean the end of Mars.'

'How do you know that,' Tara asked.

'Well,' said Sperewer, 'haven't you read the history books. Even a young boy from lynx can be dictators controlling many countries and areas at the same time. Have you read about their works ?'

‘Sperewer,’ Tara said. ‘I am not dumb. You work for money. You have been hired by the aristocracy because they want to make sure their control will stand tall. Have you read about the works of the aristocracy. It has always been a mean game, and now the parents of these innocent children suffer under your hand.’

Tara walked towards the cages and opened some of them. ‘These kids belong to me,’ Tara said. ‘I have promised their parents I will not return without them.’

The children ran wildly through the castle, making their way out, and started to climb on the roofs.

Tara had still her arrow directed at Sperewer. He could hardly breath.

Since that day the nights were darker than ever, but at least the children were free. The boys from lynx often gathered on the roofs of the houses in the middle of the night. The older ones had motor-cycles.

An old man showed up as their father. Some called him sandman. The old man teached the children about a lot of things, but many people thought he was crazy. He often walked in his pyamas. Some thought he was a wizard. He slept when it was day, and was up at nights. He had also a motor-cycle. The children loved to watch it, and to ride on it.

‘It is time to bring the light on Mars,’ the old man said one day. ‘You will be it’s saviour.’ Soon the boys from lynx got the high positions on Mars and brought many aristocracies down, all for the new order. They had powers to raise the dead from the graves, and to heal the terminally ill. They were the wizard children. They were a new religion.

They were like sons of the dragon, like wild cats. They moved to the seas a lot, where they used to go to the beaches on their motor-cycles, and they gathered along the rivers. They preached an aggressive gospel, as the only way for Mars to survive.

They became the new dictators of Mars, and no one could really do anything about it, even not Tara. So she struggled with the fact that she had set them free. But she realized more and more that Sperewer made them like they were.

One day she approached one of the thrones of the boys of lynx, where many of them ruled together. They were staring at Tara, realizing she was the one who had set them free.

‘You do many good things,’ Tara said, ‘but are you realizing what you are doing. Some things are just too much. You are the terror here more than ever.’

‘Tara,’ one of the boys said. ‘Many of our race have been killed at the hands of the aristocracy. We are lost already in hate and vengeance. The bitterness is eating us. There’s no hope for us, and no hope for this planet. We are in a vicious circle and that is okay.’

‘So you even contradict your own gospel ?’ Tara asked.

‘No,’ the boy said. ‘This is the only way. What we do has to be done. It is our fate, and the fate of the planet. A new planet will rise.’

Tara saw the despair in their eyes, the sadness and the anger. ‘Can I do anything for you. This is not the way,’ Tara said.

‘Tara,’ one of the boys said. ‘We have a stone in our hearts, the stone of the dragon. If you remove it, we are dead, but then all is lost.’

‘I do not know,’ Tara said. ‘I think what you are doing now is the way to lose. Join me, stop with your aristocratic ways, stop with this dictatorship, or you will have an enemy in me. I can be a good friend, but a better enemy. Do you want to meet my sword ? It’s almost against you, and then there is no way to get it right.’

Some of the boys were laughing at Tara, while others were very serious, and knew that Tara was also very serious.

‘I see you have different opinions among you,’ Tara said.

‘Yes,’ one of the serious ones said. ‘I guess Tara is right. Maybe there should be a sifting among us. Who wants to join Tara, join her.’

But no one chose Tara’s side. After awhile Tara left, and went to the other thrones with the same story. At the end of the day she had only one boy from lynx joining her, but he was still doubting very much.

‘Tara,’ he said. ‘We can never be what you want us to be. We are savage, full of mystery and strategy. We have to do what we do, all to protect Mars against something worse.’

That night it was Tara’s sword against the boys from lynx. They weren’t against her, and didn’t want to hurt her, but they just didn’t want to choose her side.

‘Go for Sperewer, Tara,’ one of them was shouting. ‘Maybe he can help.’

‘Maybe I will do that,’ Tara said. ‘If there is no other way.’ But she knew Sperewer would be a bad choice, and besides that : he was locked up by the boys from lynx.

Tara had mixed feelings about the boys from lynx, and again there seemed to be nothing she could do. But the level of terror on Mars was rising more and more, even to the extreme and beyond. She had to do something. So one night she went to one of their castles, climbed through a window, and saw three of them lying on a bed. She tied their hands together and their feet. Then she took a knife, made a cut in their chest to put her hand in to search for their dragonstone. Soon she had three dragonstones in her hand. The boys were awake because of the pain, but they could easily remove the ties, and they started to laugh. Their wounds healed very fast. ‘Dumb, Tara,’ one of them said, while smiling. ‘A dead boy from lynx is more alive than a living boy from lynx. This is our secret for ages, and that’s why we have always survived.

Then other boys from lynx stood in the door opening. Then Tara couldn’t recall what happened. She woke up in a coffin, and started to scream. After awhile she could open the coffin, and when she stepped out she was in a room full of glowing dragonstones. A boy from lynx stood there with the biggest dragonstone in his hand. ‘The secret of the survival of Mars,’ he said. ‘And the secret why our race has always survived.’

‘Become one of us,’ the boy said. He had a knife in his hand, while another boy entered the room. The other boy took the knife and wanted to make a hole in Tara’s chest to insert the stone. But Tara grasped his pulse. Tara ran out of the room. ‘Follow her !’ the boy shouted.

Tara ran upstairs, and climbed out of a window to come on the roof. Soon she could climb to the ground by a tree. But soon she had been surrounded by many boys from lynx. ‘Insert the stone,’ one of them shouted.

‘No,’ Tara shouted.

She woke up in her cave, sweating. It had been all a dream. But there was a boy standing in the opening of the cave. ‘Welcome to the boys from lynx,’ he said, and disappeared. Tara took her bow and went out of the cave, but didn’t see anyone. Before her feet lay some red glowing stones. She took them up. They were warm. She thought she knew already what was happening. She had drunk from a river full of hallucination flowers. Maybe their seed was already ruling in the river, and these flowers which grew there abundantly were also called the boys from lynx.

The End

The Arms of Sleep

The flower-prince had them all in his grip. He had poisoned their hearts, and kept them in hallucinations. Tara once visited him. She aimed her sword at him. ‘Tara, you are already in my dreams, it’s just a dream, you can’t do anything,’ he said. Tara knew she couldn’t begin anything against him with her sword. The flower-prince started to laugh. It was like the flowerseed was dripping in her head. It was like there was a flower growing in her, totally controlling her.

She raised her sword, and then threw it at the prince. Then a wrestling started. The prince turned into a snake, playing with her mind. Tara woke up in sweat. The air was sweet. She stood up, and walked out of her cave. The flowers were so pretty today, and they stood tall, almost forming a fence. She went to the river to bath again. She wouldn't drink water here, as many hallucination-flowers grew here. It was in the waters already.

But deep inside she knew she was still dreaming. The wilderness was too pretty here. The flower-prince slided into the river. 'No escape from here, Tara,' he said. 'It is all in your head, so why fighting, why not giving yourself over to me.'

'What will I win by it ?' she asked.

'Nothing,' the flower-prince said. 'It's not about you, but about me.'

'Why ?' Tara asked. She felt herself so weak in his presence.

'I am the flower-prince,' the prince said. 'I know how to make art.'

Tara knew she couldn't escape. She hoped the hallucination would stop soon, but what if it had damaged her already. She knew that some substances of wild river-flowers could really possess you, and take you over step by step. Maybe she was already in that process.

The prince laughed. 'We will slowly bring you down,' he said.

Tara decided to drink again, maybe that would wash it all away. She let herself slide into the river, and it was like the river was taking her away, accepting her. She came up again. The flower-prince was gone. She stepped out of the river, and went to her cave again to sleep. She was so tired, while she knew she was still dreaming. She felt helpless in the arms of sleep.

She woke up in a strange temple full of flowers. Many statues of dreamgods were here. ’Am I dead ?’ she wondered. ‘Is this heaven or hell ?’ There were some small thin rivers along the walls of the temple. Tara drank from the water again. She could even see the fishes swimming in it. The water was very bright, and full of flowers. ‘Where am I ?’ she wondered. She felt so much peace. She stepped in a sort of boat, and then woke up in a paradise, among beautiful flowerfields. The wildest flowers were here. Seed was dripping from them, like honey.

Something was spitting her out, it was a huge meat-eating plant. She had a long wrestling against it, in it’s insides, in which she was almost completely taken over by it. It seemed she had won the fight, or the plant simply couldn’t digest her. She had survived the jungle-cocoon.

The End

The Court-Wizard

Tara came in the Land of the Horseflies after a long journey. It was on a strange planet which she reached by her airsailer. When she stepped into the jungle two boys were staring at her. They shot something in her eye, and she fell asleep. She woke up in a palace, under a soft blanket made of feathers. A man in black, with a skeleton, stared at her. They offered her some fruit. She started to eat. Then the two boys came in the room. ‘Good job, Arsan and Ramit, good job,’ the man in the black dress said. ‘Kemit Matuja Horso Ron,’ one of the boys spoke, and left again.

‘Do you know where you are ?’ the man in black asked.

‘Not really,’ Tara said. ‘All I know is that I was on my way to the Land of Horseflies.’

‘You are there,’ the man said. ‘Kata Hari Damar Sa Romu,’ the other boy said, and left.

The man went to Tara and cut a small piece out of her head. He showed her a chip. ‘Here, this was in your head,’ he said to Tara. ‘It is a colour-chip. It was your brains ruling the colours, but now your nose needs to do, as we all do.’ Then he made a cut in her nose, and pushed another even smaller and thinner chip into her nose. ‘It will totally blend with your body,’ the man said. Tara took a deep breath. The colours began to change. It was like she could watch deeper now. It was like she could even see the temperature now, and the differences between it.

‘Welcome to the Land of the Horseflies,’ the man said.

A man with long hair came in, with some monkeys. He had a spear. ‘Cynthies Merches Samir Samis,’ he said.

‘This is our court wizard,’ the man in the black dress said. ‘He wants to take you on some trips on the rivers.’

‘We lead you to Bai Sarum,’ the sorcerer said. He raised his spear. ‘More panthers than you have ever seen,’ he said.

Within a few minutes they were on the river. On both sides there were jungles. The wizard pushed something into her arm. She fell asleep again, and woke up in a place full of panthers. It was a place with veils everywhere. A man was sitting on a throne, clothed in leopard-skin. ‘Is that Tara ?’ he asked.

Tara fell asleep again, only by hearing this voice. It was a chief-wizard. When she woke up she was surrounded by monkeys. She felt their soft skins. ‘Am I in paradise ?’ she asked.

‘Give her something to drink,’ a voice spoke.

Soon she felt tasteful thick liquids streaming through her mouth. Someone held his hand on the back of her neck. Warm streams entered her body. ‘Breath, Tara,’ someone said.

‘Where am I ?’ Tara asked. ‘I know I am in the Land of Horseflies, but where ?’

She fell asleep again. She was still on the river, in a boat, while a red-orange light appeared next to her. The river was misty. ‘Keep awake,’ the wizard said. ‘We go to the fortress.’

When the wizard laid her hands on her they were suddenly in a place full of purple veils, but she couldn’t stay awake here. It was like deja-vuh. She remembered this place, but what was it ?

It was like the boat was becoming one with the river, and she slid into the water, while the waters stirred up the hallucination. She saw flowers at the riversides, like they were fences. They had deep roots, tall roots, and they were all over the place. She was in the hands of a wizard. Huge dragonclaws were in the sky.

A dragon was whispering to her, words of love. It was like a rebirth. She was approaching an indian pyramid. She felt a motor-cycle under her, she felt like racing in a car. But she didn’t want to go to a city. She wanted to stay a savage.

‘Take it,’ the dragon said.

Finally Tara gave over. She was entering a huge city, high pillars, high towers, all reddish, like a night city. She stepped out of a car, having high heels. It had rained. The air was moisty. There was a huge building, like a giant skull. She went inside. It was a hotel. Someone gave her water, and led her to her suite. There was a piano there, and some poles. It was a bit like a ballet room. There was another woman there. She didn’t say anything but started to play the piano. Then she went to one of the poles, and danced. Tara drank from the water. There was a bed in the room. She sat down on it. Then she went to sleep.

The next day she was in the jungle again, deeper than ever. She was in the mud, like a rebirth. She slid to the river. She was like drunk. She knew it was all because of the flowers. It was in the waters, and she had drunk from it. The city was inside, and she could only touch it lightly, finally to enter deeper into the wilderness than ever. The city was a hot stone she could only hold for a second. The city was a red glowing stone in her amulet, burning in leather around her pulse.

If she would have stayed in the city any longer, she would fall away from her gods. These gods were savage. They would judge her for living in the city.

But the dragon sent her back to the city one day. The city was a deeper jungle to her. He had put a new colour-chip in her head. She was like a traffic-light. She would just stay here for one day. No one knew who she was. She had a savage look in her eyes. And monkeys were with her. All she did was walking through the streets. Finally she fell asleep, and a friendly man took her to his home to give her a room. He gave her some water, while the dragon took her out again, for the day was over.

But after a week he sent her back again, and then again, until she could stay a little longer. She found work in a circus. She worked with leopards. Everyday she heard the voice of the dragon, but he never showed up to her. She loved to work with leopards. They loved her and adored her. She had a room somewhere. She lived in the city. Her neighbour was Robert McDanen, an ambitious man. He was an author, and a maker of comics. He often went to the circus to make pictures of her with her leopards. Then he would turn them into paintings. He was also an excellent painter. One day he invited her to come look at his paintings. But this time the dragon showed up, together with fire. The fire, to destroy the paintings, and the claw to take Tara away.

Robert was confused by this experience. He wondered where she had gone all of a sudden. He knew she loved the jungle, so he went there to look for her. After searching for days he found her. She was in a cave with gorillas.

‘How did you leave so quickly ?’ he asked.

Then Tara told him all about the dragon.

‘Are you a slave of the dragon ?’ Robert asked.

‘I just can’t live the life you are living,’ Tara said. ‘It’s just something inside.’

‘But I need to have you with me,’ Robert said. ‘I can’t live without you. Plus, who destroyed all the paintings. I love you.’

But again the dragon-claw showed up, it struck Robert, and he lost consciousness. After a day he woke up. ‘Where am I ?’ he asked.

‘With me,’ Tara said. ‘You have to go home. I just don’t belong to your world.’

‘I understand that now,’ Robert said. ‘But thanks for the good times.’

Then he left. But in a strange way Tara just couldn’t forget about him. One day she went back to the city to visit him. Other people lived in her room now, and also Robert didn’t live there anymore. She asked some neighbours where he lived now, but they said they didn’t know. One of them said he would probably live in the jungle now.

Tara searched for him for many weeks and months, and finally she found him. He lived also with gorillas, and seemed to be their king. He smiled when he saw Tara.

‘Why do you live here ?’ Tara asked.

‘You inspired me,’ Robert said.

‘Why don’t you write, why not making comics and paintings,’ she asked.

‘Oh, I do that, in the depths of my cave,’ Robert said, while he smiled. ‘Come, let me show you where I live.’

It was a long trip through a tunnel, until they came in his cave, where he had all his books, comics and paintings. He showed her some paintings of her. ‘I hope they will survive your stare this time,’ he said.

‘Actually I like them this time,’ Tara said. ‘Friend, I feel comfortable about the way you are living now, can I visit you ?’

‘Whenever you want,’ Robert said smiling.

Then the dragon-claw took Tara away.

The End

The Spider Seed

Chapter 1.

Tara sat in her tree, while under her feet there was her hill of spider seed. Often she would only come into a bloody arena. First blood needed to flow before she would come, a lot of blood. Suddenly Tara slided from her tree to the spider seed, ripped the skin off of one of the men. Then she quickly killed the skinless man. Then the spiders came to devour the meat of the prisoner, while strange lullabies from Tara's hills were taking their souls away, but now oiled by spider seed. It was like chained in a strange way, and it gave them so much control over themselves back. They were graceful to their goddess that she would give them such freedom and having them possess their own minds. The warprisoner who had to die today was the one wanting to possess their minds for his evil purposes. They imprisoned him in the war against his dark tribe, but now Tara had dealt with him, like they couldn't. For she would also take his soul to her realms to devour it and capture it. That was the price someone had to pay who wanted to mess with her. That night Tara descended again from her hills to accept the sacrifice. Tara was a cruel goddess tormenting her victims on the fields of Tartarus on Mars. She didn't live by her mercy, but just by lust. Lust was in her eyes a good gift from the skeleton-gods. Every night she teached them how to fight and conquer. She teached them how to fight by the powers. Tara preached liberation to her followers. She preached everlasting damnation and everlasting war not as a punishment but as the well of eternal life and peace inside. It was the well of everlasting creation. Tara was the goddess of no taboo. She was the Lawless. All the other roads were to her just traps in which the corrupted mind could grow, divinity, of someone who wanted to possess their skull to give it a mind. Tara hated the mind. Only a mind driven by lust could mean something, because it came from the streams of the primeval. Tara believed in instincts for these were coming from the higher ways. But these instincts always needed to be purified and directed in the pools of everlasting damnation and everlasting war. She preached baptism in such pools for salvation. But Tara hated the men who never went to such pools. She called them unclean.

The spider seed was a way to Tara to keep clean. It would protect against the black powers of civilization. Often these were spiders themselves, and she often smeared their bodies with snake-slimes. She was aware that many of them were nothing but slaves. Often they were roaring in the night, looking for more victims, slaves making slaves. She realized she was on both sides, as a paradox. She was the black snake. She was devouring it, and coming alive again, infiltrating the depths of legalism. It was a dark hole, and she was even darker. No one dared to come closer to her house, this house in the tree. There were some flashes and some shrieks, and suddenly Tara had kicked some monkeys to the ground. A fight started, in which she soon raised their skulls. She was roaring. The serpent seed slided across her skin, mixing itself with the spider seed. She was a chameleon. She was a savage queen in her own rights. Soon the spider seed had totally devoured the monkeys. She was the queen of the jungle. No one had any chance to take her crown. She was on both sides. She was a spy, an infiltrator. She had a legalistic smile. All she wanted was to come out of her box, out of her tree.

The spider seed was in the air like a red hot wind, like howling wolves, making them all prisoners of a legal system. Tara made a sudden switch. It was like she was taking off her mask, and they stared into a face of a skeleton. The spider seed was mixing itself in the air, and soon the chains were tight. It was flowing from a strange bush, a heart, like a nest of bees. It was making them insane. The winds were whispering, shrieking, altering their minds. It was a poison in their brains.

A dark man was holding the skull of Tara. He was the leader of the dark tribe. He had dipped her head into poison, in a golden bowl. He was laughing, mocking her like a hyena would do.

‘Merge,’ Tara whispered, ‘I know you would do this.’

The spider seed was torturing her brains. It was deceiving her, giving her all sorts of illusions. ‘Can you stop now,’ Tara said. ‘I feel so delirious.’

‘No,’ Merge said. ‘You have wished this on yourself by killing my main man.’

Tara sighed. She was confused. She was so deep in this dark, dangerous temple, this jungle temple. Merge was staring at her. He was the chief and leader of a huge tribe. He had her locked up in a labyrinth.

'Can someone get me out of here ?' Tara shouted. Dark voices were surrounding Tara. It was like everything went darker, lower and slower. 'What is this spider seed doing,' Tara shrieked. 'What is it.'

Merge was holding some tubes in his hands. 'The dragons know it,' Merge said. 'They used it against you, to get you here.'

'It's burning in my head,' Tara said.

'You have drunk from it,' Merge said. 'And now you are here.'

The sleep, a mechanism in the temple of Merge, to keep them all away from the secret he guarded, the secret of his power. Tara fell asleep again. She had been struck by pain, she had lost her consciousness. Merge was smiling. She was his doll. He would raise her in his army.

He dyed her with the colours of war, and gave her the most beautiful clothes. She was under his spell. It was a product of total zombification.

The floods of spider sperm were in the land. The people were melting away. The snake had once slided to bring all these souls, but now they were all melting away.

Merge was like a statue. After many years Tara could break free from him. She raised on her hill again, on the skulls of all these dead men who were in Merge's service. But again she woke up in Merge's temple. She had no control over herself. It was a long wrestling in which every freedom was a deeper trap. One day he found his dragon heart, and she pierced it. But it set free the winds of the tormenting desert. It brought her down, more than ever before. They dragged her to a cave, and slowly she was sliding into a pit.

She was calling out for Merge, for there was nothing but darkness here. She had mixed feelings about him. She found in his heart the hives of spiders. He was the brother of Gitdugal. The smell of candy was here. It drove her insane. She was almost forced to eat from it, as she was so hungry. She became part of his heart, there was no escape.

He made her general of his army. She commanded his hunters. They were all part of his heart, a heart of glass. At one point she was so one with him that she started to realize she was Merge. She was the sister of Gitdugal. At this moment she realized she had a split personality, and she had to accept it. The more she struggled against it, the more she became aware of it.

Chapter 2.

Tara realized she was part of this allpowerful bloodline, the spiderseed. It was breaking her down and building her up again, on this gigantic beach. She raised her sword up, and became doom. She was her own enemy now, she had survived. She took advantage of it to the fullest extends. She had taken over his army by becoming him. She was endarkened, darkness being the only light. She saw the reflections of her face in her sword. It was like a skull. Death and life were hers now.

She had fought her way through this poison, this dark tribe. She had lost herself in order to find herself back. She realized it was Merge's desert she was in. And doom was her mission. The bones of Merge were dry in the sand. All his bones broken apart from each other. She saw a misty palace in the distance, where the spider lived, his soul. Here the knights of darkness and nightmare dwelled. But it was far away from her. The house was moving to the sea. It was all drowning. The poison was now her weapon, it was shifting. First it was aimed at herself, now she could aim it at her enemies. The poison was now her friend. She died in it and came alive in it. It was the snake spirit of Merge, a woman named Mercury.

She took possession of the palace, the ghost palace of it, which was coming closer to her. The women Mercury was veiled and slided towards the highest tower of the palace. Suddenly there was lightening everywhere, and auras with strange sounds. And the poison was her cure. It had led her through the realms of death, spoken about the secrets. It had shifted before her eyes and gave her visions.

There were secret lights in the palace, all blinding, all triangles like jewelry. The palace was a place of eternity. The battle was psychedelic, there were no logics but the test. It was a palace made of the purest candy and the purest money. She found there the secret knowledge of not only candy and money, but also of love and estheticka. She held on to these gnosises as to her heartbeat. It was a rich esotericka. Finally she saw the spirit of Merge sinking away. She was holding his scalp. There was no any just battle without this esotericka, this hidden knowledge. She found the tree of hidden knowledge in the middle of the palace. There were a lot of snakes here, half women. She craved to be one with this tree, to be a part of it. The money was just a weapon, a hunter's tool, flowing from the well of eternal poverty, from everlasting doom. Those who had not been here wouldn't have any part in it. Those who had not defeated Merge could not see it's lights. It was the secret of a stone full of tears. The money was a fluid here. There was a giant woman living in the tree, guarding the secret of honey. The tree would lead to a giant world. The woman was very big and jumped on Tara. If Tara wouldn't defeat her she would not get any step further. Tara took her sword from behind her back and beheaded the giant woman, all in a flash. The woman was shrinking, while Tara got the most beautiful exotic wings, like those from foreign flies. She flew up on the tree, and reached giant world.

There was another gnosis here, the gnosis of war, and of hunt. Those who didn't go to the depth of it would survive in a place like this. It all led her to a cave, where women lived. They were a lot huger than her, but they began to feed her. She had to eat the flesh of a lot of unknown creatures, often cattle. The horned ones were a danger here, and the predators were often horned as well. The women told her that she had to go through the fields, until she would reach the land of cattle. Here she would finally find rest. Still Tara was haunted by the ghosts of Merge. They were like the mists around her. The chains of the spider seed were tight. The women protected her, and teached her. They also teached her of the gnosis of death and torment, and Tara seemed to get more insight in her life. There was a savage knowledge she had to follow, a savage gnosis, named the nipoid. It was a native gnosis, leading her back to her own bloodline, the serpent seed. Merge was roaring while she raised her shields against him. But finally he was too strong again. It looked like a demonic possession. She could do nothing but embrace it, knowing she had a part in this bloodline as well, and it could be of use. Merge was a part of her.

She was like the weresnake, chained by spider seed, led to the gnosis of the predator and the gnosis of the cattle, finally to find peace. In this she met the prince of all predators, a yellow man with golden bands around his upper arms. He was very fast and had a piercing odor. He seemed to be a man after her heart, a man of lightening. He shared with her a lot of secrets. He was a man of balance and extremes, a wereman, and the more she got to know his characters, the more she understood him. He seemed to be her guard against the predators, and it was him who finally led her to the land of cattle. She could sleep here and rest here, finding a deep peace. She realized there was a number on their heads, 666, and this had brought them a lot of suffering. It was the work of Merge. Everyone who received that number became cattle. Tara realized when she was watching into the reflections of her sword that she had also this number on her forehead, but a fire was roaring within. Suddenly there was milk sweeping through the air washing the numbers away. Tara was now dyed with the colours of war. Again she realized that she was in the hands of Merge, playing with her.

‘What do you want from me ?’ Tara shouted.

‘You’re in the labyrinth, Tara,’ a voice spoke. ‘The labyrinth of spider seed.’

It was tearing her apart. But here the liquids of money was flowing more than ever. It seemed like it was coming from the cattle.

‘Money is meat,’ a voice said. ‘Come closer.’

Tara felt like a jester, a joke. She felt weak. She raised her sword, and called for the prince of predators, but this time the prince of money came to her. ‘What do you know of money ?’ he asked. He smelled like candy. ‘Become an adept, Tara,’ he said, ‘instead of making such a drama about all things in your life.’

He took her to his temple. The money here was sweet. It was hot as well. ‘I’m about to bring floods of money, and we will see later who will survive,’ he said. Tara was bowing for him. She had pain. It was like she couldn’t do anything else.

‘Please ..pl ..please, help me out of here,’ she spoke.

The prince of money took her up and said : ‘There’s much for you to learn.’ It became a long fight against the prince of money, a fight in which she was forced to worship him, but resulted in her victory. She beheaded him. His scalp would always be with her. She had the feeling she would not come any further without it. After defeating the prince she entered a hall with a lot of statues. Eyes were staring at her. They were the elements of the gnosis, the secret knowledge. Behind a next door there was the tree again, this time leading to a soft world. The people living here were like cloud people more or less. In a hall there were huge brains from which animals came forth. A voice spoke : These are the fallen ones. They live from the brains. Start the hunt.

Then there were animals coming from a huge stomach. The voice spoke : It won’t take long now anymore. These ones come from lust and love, from the dark heart, send out to eat those of the brains. Choose.

Tara got blindfolded and someone span her around. She lost all her orientation, but she chose the path of the strongest smell, the unknown. It was a huge area. When she was in she soon wasn’t blindfolded anymore. The people here had strange spots on their bodies, like nipples. They were all over, especially on their backs. ‘These are the sensitive ones,’ the voice spoke. ‘But there will come a shift. The unsensitive ones from the brains will get sensitive as well, and they will see and feel what they have caused. They have always been the predators, but they will be the cattle. And like they have suppressed others, they will be suppressed as well.’

Tara got a bow in her hand. ‘Now hunt,’ a voice said. ‘Only the hunters will survive this place.’ A huge white fire was rising, like floods, and all predators became cattle. Soon Tara was in abundant slaughter. The blood was streaming all over her body, and she was screaming in rage. It was like she was in a war. These brains were the guards of the hidden knowledge, and finally she was tearing those veils down. The tree came to a climax here, and a flower grew on top. It was the most beautiful flower tara had ever seen, like the jungle flower. There was so much order now in the chaos. The flower was like the inventory of the hidden knowledge. ‘Drink from me,’ said the flower. Tara was growing and growing, becoming like a giant, while the animals of the brains became smaller. She stepped into the huge flower and started to climb. It was like a stairway. She had so much survey here but she kept staring at the top. A man totally covered with nipple-like spots came towards her, and took her by the hand. She was drinking from the fluids from the flower. There were small waterfalls everywhere, in special colours. Huge cats were staring at her.

'You want to know about the gnosis of love ?' a voice spoke. 'Fight for it.'

Chapter 3.

A dark hairy man fell on her, like a monkey. She had a huge wrestling but she couldn't defeat him. She tried to reach her sword, but he wouldn't let her. Soon he had her in his grip, and held her arms behind her back. 'I do not understand this,' Tara said to herself. 'I feel so weak.' The man tied her and neckchained her, and took her up. She didn't know where the other man was all of a sudden. A voice spoke : 'All those who have come this far need to know, bondage is the pressure of the unknown. If you use your brains now, you will escape, but it will lead you all way back to the start, and all those of the brains are prey, even more than before. You might be bigger, but you will be cattle.'

Tara felt the powers of the brain. She didn't want to use it. She could if she wished, to get rid of the chain. But she didn't choose to. The man led her further up. Here a queen sat on a throne, with huge white feathers. She was like a peacock. 'What do you want in this flower ?' the queen asked.

'The gnosis,' Tara said. 'The secret knowledge, that is all what I long for.'

'Then lose your brain,' the queen said. 'Guards, let her drink something.'

They came with a huge bottle, and Tara started to drink. She felt like getting drunk. It was like colourful smoke in her. She saw faces of cats around her, and huge snakes floating around her.

'Don't you know,' the queen said. 'Those of the brains will be eaten.'

'Yes,' Tara said.

‘Give me your hand,’ the queen said. Tara stepped forward and gave her hand. The queen stared in it. ‘I see good days for you coming. Days in which you will find true love. And your hunger will be satisfied. Welcome to the land of satisfaction.’ The queen moved away with her throne and a portal came in sight. Tara was staring through it. Tara entered through it, and became free. Another man came to her, this men was covered by all sorts of sores. He tried to attack her, but Tara took her sword from behind her back and beheaded him. Then another man attacked her with sores, and she did the same. Soon she was surrounded by more of these men, all growling. A weakness came over her again, and they tied her to some sort of spiderweb. Spiders were creeping across her skin, and soon she had some sores as well. This was a land ruled by spiders. She remembered how the spider seed was in her. Another queen approached her, also on a moving throne. She had a huge spiderweb behind her. She was the queen of spiders. ‘I wish you to become sensitive, my dear,’ the queen spoke. ‘That’s the job of the spiders. You better have it now, rather than when the white fire comes.’

‘What is that,’ Tara asked.

‘Don’t you know,’ said the queen. Tara fell asleep. She couldn’t hold the pain anymore. When she woke up she was covered by sores all over. ‘They protect you,’ said the queen. ‘Against the ages of the brains.’ It was like someone had marked Tara. She looked like a leopard now. She was growling. The queen dyed her with some colours, like the patterns of snakes. The sores more and more started to look like scars, like nipples. ‘These are the spots storing the gnosis,’ said the queen, ‘the nipoid.’ Tara grew more and more like a predator. She got her own room, in a cave with dark statues. Her scars were like a communication system. On the top of the flower there was a flame. It was all interactive. She didn’t want to return anymore. The spider seed was like her jewelry here and her lingerie.

Skeleton Wings

Chapter 1. The Elephant Queen

Tara from Rhodes, she stood before the skeleton-king. He was laughing, mocking her. She was chained, two black skeletons having her in a tight grip. They were stronger than ten black lions at the same time. Sweat came from Tara's face. 'Wait till you meet the emperor,' the king roared. An enormous panther was appearing, coming down from a huge stairway.

Tara fell down, like she had been struck. The panther had red rays coming from his eyes penetrating her skin. Tara was shrieking. 'Wikzilius,' the king said. 'Bring this lady to the skeleton-emperor.' The panther took her on his back, spred his wings and flew away. In a huge forest the emperor lived. The thinnest skeletons were his guards, and they were also pretty tall, although some of them were short.

'Can I call you mocking jerk,' Tara said, when she stood finally before a laughing skeleton-emperor. The skeleton grasped her head, then pushed her to the ground. 'You can call me whatever you want,' he said.

Tara had lost her consciousness by the push and woke up in a dungeon. She had to eat strange food. She was almost hallucinating. In a distance she could see red glowing stones. In her prison she met Davilir, a woman. 'Have you heard of the emperor's sword,' the woman asked. 'I know where it is, and it will get us out if we get it.'

There was also a man in the prison. Also very confused. 'Help me,' he said all the time, laying his hands on Tara. Tara kicked him away. 'Look, I cannot help you, bastard,' she shouted. In the night Tara could dig a hole under the door. The ground was pretty soft. She escaped. She ran outside into the forest.

After a few hours she came to a sorcerors house, close to the desert. It was a bare wilderness here. The man spoke to her about the skeleton winds. 'What is that,' Tara asked. 'I have no time for superstitious games.' The man looked like he wanted something from her. Tara grasped her sword from behind her back and beheaded him. She lived in his house for several days and then moved on.

There was one force bigger than the skeleton-emperor. It was the God and the Goddess of the skeletons. They grasped her tight as by winds, and brought her to a temple. Meanlooking skeleton-priests were laughing at her. They showed her a rose completely made of meat. ‘That’s how you will end up,’ they said. Then they led her to a place where trees of meat grew. They showed her a box close to the trees where women and men lived. As soon as the red rays fell on them they turned into skeletons, and a blue ray made them look like humans. They seemed to live in skeleton love. They all lived in this box as friends. ‘These are the chosen ones, Tara,’ a skeleton said. ‘And you have to serve them. Let me lead you to the mill where you will become a rose of meat.’ The skeleton grasped her. There was another box, close to the other. He pushed her inside. Sharp objects came out of the walls wanting to rip her apart. The box became smaller and smaller. Tara took her sword, and could hit some objects away, but they fell on the ground, and moved towards her very slowly. The box became transparant, and Tara could see another box coming closer, a black box, in which it’s prisoners fought against each other. It was the box of skeleton hate. Black radiation came forward from the box causing death. It was silent all of a sudden, and the prisoners slowly turned into skeletons. Suddenly Tara hit the ceiling of her box, which was coming closer and closer to her. There was a huge hole now, and she could easily climb out. ‘Well done,’ a skeleton said. ‘You are skilled.’

They took her and pushed her in the hole of a rock. Powers of the skeleton came over her. Inside she raised her sword and started roaring. Then she fell asleep. Soft angels took her up in the hole of the rock, towards the top. ‘Bring her to the seven winds of skeleton,’one of them said. They brought her to a cloud, where she was as a baby. Seven winds started to possess her, and raised her up. She was in a cocoon. Tara was reborn in the sky. She had now the powers of skeleton, being a skeleton moderator, which had equipped her with the skeleton fire, an object by which she could boot skeletons. The second item was the black field, an artifact by which she could kill masses of skeletons at the same time. She got a vehicle, and of course she caused a lot of hell, for she had been repressed by the skeletons for such a long time. And she had the red fields to wake up the lost skeletons, a blue ray to make them look like humans, and a white ray to make them look like flowers.

She started her moderating works, while the seven winds of skeleton moved through her. It was like a sword in her hand. It made her like a goddess, having survey over so much communication. She had an all-seeing eye now, and she was like it’s prophetess. However she got lost in the wildernisses of this cyberspace of death. There were powers she did not know anything about. It was all like an optical illusion. She heard someone laughing. A skeleton came closer, with a high hat and tall grey hair. ‘What a deal,’ he said, ‘you serving the illusions we made. But the best vehicles are the crashed vehicles, for they will go through the walls of skeleton.’

‘What are you talking about,’ Tara screamed, and tried her buttons on him. But it didn’t work. ‘Which powers do you have which I do not have,’ she asked him desperately.

‘Sword of the emperor,’ the skeleton with the hat and the long grey hair said. Tara realized that it was the second time that she had underestimated someone. She bowed her head. There was something like glass around this skeleton. She couldn’t begin much against it. A strange fire was tearing her down. She wished she had listened more to this woman called Davilir.

There was a war in cyberspace, the skeleton cyberspace, the one of death. It was Tara and her ghosts against another army. In this battle she met Davilir again, who could tell much more to her now. She actually had found the sword of the emperor already, so she could be of good use. The sword of the emperor showed them that it was all a game. It was some sort of a joystick, with many more powers. The joystick looked like meat, all coming forth from a skeleton. It was like the fruit of death. There were game masters living inside, ghosts. They had powers to lead them in the war. They could win the game with them. It was indeed a temple. The items were sacred, only to be used by priestly hands. The joystick was in the middle of the temple. She was staring at the joystick, while skeletoncraft was flowing into her body. A woman named Yasmine told her about the skeleton gnosis, as the power beyond all things. Tara was more and more getting stuck in a labyrinth, the unknown. She didn’t know anything of the things happening to her, and it was like she was dying, leading her to hell. She was realizing that it was just the fact that something unknown was being her hell, and that understanding would lead to enlightenment. Or did she need a greater endarkenment. She found herself in a cocoon of mint. She was covered by cocos, surrounded by monkeys. She saw Yasmine holding a injection-needle. ‘You,’ Tara said. ‘What are you doing to me. Feeding me drugs or something, keeping me in your fluids. I feel so weak.’

‘Dream,’ Yasmine said. ‘It’s good for you.’ Tara was sliding away. She didn’t indeed understand all these powers. She felt cold. She was floating in a skeleton temple, where all the dimensions were shifting, where the skeleton gnosis looked like a pillar of salt. ‘I want wisdom, I want knowledge,’ Tara whispered. ‘I want to have some stamina in this quicksand labyrinth. I’m drowning.’ Tara was floating towards the joystick on top of the saltpillar, which was a lot smaller now. The joystick looked like a golden sword, the sword of the emperor. Tara grasped and missed, like the sword was transparent, transcendental, beyond her senses. Yasmine started to laugh. Tara asked who she was, and why she was laughing.

‘I’m not laughing, Tara,’ Yasmine said. ‘You just experience it as laughing, for your vibrations are changing. You have a projected image of me in your head which is now changing, because you are shifting as well.’ Small moneys were around the salt pillar. It was getting smaller and smaller, and the joystick became denser and denser, and finally Tara could grasp it. More monkeys seemed to surround her, and she was like in a virtual jungle all of a sudden, in bright sunlights. ‘It is not the sun, Tara,’ Yasmine said. ‘It is the Safra, the central soft spot of the universe.’ Learn about the tides of the safra, the safrarises and the safrasets. It is not the play between day and night, but between the soft and the hard.

‘Where am I ?’ Tara asked. ‘I feel so soft, it’s like I can breath for the first time in my life. I’m flexible more than ever.’

‘You are queen of the monkeys now, Tara,’ Yasmine said. ‘I am queen of the elephants.’

‘What is the use of this ?’ Tara asked. ‘Am I a more powerful moderator now in this skeleton world ?’

‘Yes,’ Yasmine said. ‘And one day you will be queen of elephants, like me. You need it to survive here, and to come deeper into the skeleton gnosis, the hidden knowledge.’

‘Who are you ?’ Tara asked.

‘I am your guard,’ Yasmine said.

Chapter 2. The Black Triangle

After a few years Tara was indeed a queen of elephants, like Yasmine was. There was living a burning triangle in her now, called the eye of the elephant. It had made her powerful like never before in this world. She was now indeed a guard of the skeleton gnosis. Yasmine was proud of her. Together they could boot a lot of skeletons, and soon they were a feared duo. But hackers brought them down, and soon they were prisoners on a pirate ship. The skeleton-chief stared at them.

‘Women with powers,’ he said. He pushed them in a cage with silver frames, and soon they were sweeping above the waters. ‘Food for sharks !’ the chief shouted. Tara asked Yasmine who they were. ‘Oh,’ Yasmine said. ‘They are favored by the skeleton gods. They have special tools.’

‘Who are they,’ Tara asked again.

The cage was touching the waters already, and soon there were sharks everywhere, and all sorts of unknown fishes. They looked hungry. Suddenly the floor of the cage broke open, while the pirates were laughing. Tara and Yasmine slided into the depths of the sea. Tara was following Yasmine, who seemed to know the way. They swam into a cave. In the cave there was a bubble of air. Tara wondered why the fishes hadn't bitten them. 'No, Tara, it is a trick,' Yasmine said. 'We are in a safe shapeshifting moderator-field. They have found us.'

'Who are they ?' Tara asked. Yasmine led her to a tunnel, and the tunnel led to a huge skeleton-temple, huger than the one before, and this one was in a cave underground. A skeleton sat on a throne here, totally dead. Close to him there was an ark, with fire coming from it. Tasmine stepped in the ark, and Tara followed. They were in an elevator now, going deeper. It led them to a white room. Bright white objects were lying on a table. 'These are the new tools,' Yasmine said.

'What are they ?' Tara asked.

'Tools of the fall,' Yasmine said.

'The fall ? What kind of fall,' Tara asked.

'Listen,' Yasmine said. 'The skeleton world is full of empires against empires, gods against gods, gods stealing angels, etcetera, so a fall can be of use at times.'

'I understand,' Tara said, 'so it means to escape or so.'

'Yes,' Yasmine said. 'It's storing the silver moderator powers. It means it is far beyond anything. It's pretty solid.' Tara laid her hand on an object, and fell powers streaming into her. 'Use it,' Yasmine said. Another triangle was growing into Tara, a black triangle this time. 'What is it,' Tara asked.

'Skeleton time,' Yasmine said. 'It can shapeshift anything.' Tara felt like she was winged. Suddenly they were both in the sky. They could see the clouds below them. They had more survey now than ever before, and the triangle produced a fluid like paint by which they could shapeshift everything. ‘Build a new world, Tara,’ Yasmine said. ‘This is why I am here. I am frozen. I miss a heartflame, and the battle between fire and ice is not going to help. This is why I led you to the safra, the center of the universe. In the other spheres the sun is the center, and it causes eternal battles between light and darkness, fire and ice. But here there is a battle between soft and hard, and that will bring up the key, awakening the deeper flames. I am dying, Tara, please help. You are the only one who can do that.’

‘Why am I so special,’ Tara asked.

‘Because you have the soft key inside,’ Yasmine said.

Tara’s head was in a skeleton temple, slowly spinning around, while the skeleton who had beheaded her was staring at it. She was in delirium, she was dreaming. The skeleton enjoyed the pretty colours. It was like a lullaby displaying in his skull. Tara was in the jungle and got attacked from behind by this skeleton. The vision had been granted by Soms, her god. She was aware of it. He only seemed to help her when she really needed it, like a death after dying. She thought about the black triangle, the skeleton time, blew upon it, in the hope that things would shift back. She turned around, and saw the skeleton attacking her from behind, and raised her shield to block him, then she beheaded him.

She thought maybe the skeleton time could do some more, as time had make a mess on Mars. Faces were surrounding her, while she was blowing on the black triangle again. Mars was not a prisoner of the sun anymore. It came in another orbit, around the central soft spot, the safra. A flame was in Tara’s hand, and she was remembering Yasmine. ‘Yasmine, this is for you,’ she whispered soft.

Queen of the

Eagles

Tara walked into the castle where Miloup the vampire lived. He could turn into a skeleton and a dragon. He had the meanest weapons and had his powers by the head of a girl he kept in a ball of transparent stone. Tara fell down, as struck by a spell. Miloup's spirit was descending into her, mocking her. Tara stood up, raising her blade-sword. She ran towards the throne of Miloup, but as soon as she reached it, it disappeared. She was in a bewitched castle. Someone was laughing. Tara got very angry. Then out of the nothing she got kicked, and fell down again.'Miloup,' she said, 'I am not here for games.'

Miloup came forward in a purple garment. 'Why are you here ?' he whispered.

'We have to make a deal,' Tara said. 'I want the head of the girl.'

'Never,' Miloup said. Tara knew the girl and she knew her parents. She came closer to Miloup. 'I can give you a lot of money,' Tara said.

'You cannot buy it with all the money of the universe,' Miloup said. 'It is the very source of my power.'

Tara saw the tall rod with the stone on it, in which the head of the girl rested. 'You torment the child,' Tara said.

'Why do you worry about that ?' Miloup said.

‘Take me instead,’ Tara said. ‘And give the head of the girl back to her parents.’

‘I have you already,’ Miloup said. ‘You will not leave this castle alive.’

Tara took her bow, aimed an arrow and shot. She hit the ball, and it fell to the ground and broke. Miloup was screaming. ‘Look what you have done,’ he said. He took up the ball again, and his hands started bleeding. Tara took another arrow and shot the head of Miloup. Quickly she grasped the head of the girl, but she froze. Miloup started laughing. ‘That happens when people try to steal my property.’ Spiders came out of the head of the girl, coming all over Tara. ‘Enough, Miloup,’ Tara whispered, and by her last strength she took her blade-sword again and beheaded him.

The walls of the castle started to move like mills and came closer to Tara, ready to cut her. But then she pushed her blade-sword into the heart of the vampire. She tried to find her way out of this castle, but the doorways started to shift. She had been locked up in a labyrinth. She held the head of the girl tightly to her chest. Finally she found the way out. It was snowing outside, and ghosts were in the air. When she came to the house of the parents of the girl they were very glad. Now they could finally bury it. The spirit of the girl got free. ‘Watch over this grave,’ Tara said to the parents. ‘Let no one ever steal it again.’ But the father of the girl had a better idea. They would burn the grave and would throw the ashes in the sea, so that no one could steal it ever again. It was a great day. The parents were so grateful to Tara that they gave her a ship. It was a huge ship. With this ship she would finally leave this country where she had lived for so many years. How could Tara know it was a ghostship which she couldn’t leave anymore. She became a ghost herself.

It was always like this with the royals. They didn’t lead normal lives, and now Tara had become an adept to it. They lived behind glass, unreachable, in strange chains, and Tara was now one of them. She was part of a pirate army now on this huge ship, and one day they took her skull, and bound her at the front of the ship. She hung there for a long time, until her spirit became the gold and the silver of the ship. She was drippling. In these days she met the spirit of the girl she once set free. They were together over the waters, and the girl started to tell her tales, many tales. Tara could see it was a special girl.

Tara was zombificated now, tied to the boat, but her spirit gave wings to the ship, like a swan. The ghost-pirates had painted her skull on their flags, but they were more and more fading away, only to show up in their most terrible forms at nights. Tara’s spirit had to dance with them, wage war at their side, but the girl gave her hope. The girl knew a way out, it was a savage road. Tara became a mystery, something which the pirates couldn’t grasp. They were losing her, losing her touch, as the ship flew higher, the girl was her hope. The girl was her smile, and it was a smile of death.

Demons were living on the ship, it was an old royal heritage, an old warship. Soon they had imprisoned the spirit of the girl. They put the spirit of the girl in a doll, but she had such a bright smile that she could enchant the demons and ghost-pirates and became their captain. She had a body again. She could also set Tara free. But soon Tara and the girl found out they were nothing more but marionets, as the ship was a demonic machine triggering the old bloodlines. It was a heritage in which dark secrets were stored. Storms were raging, and the hugest ghost-eagles took their place on the ship. The ship was led to a city somewhere in the sea. It was a ghost city, guarded by angels. They crowned the girl and made her queen of the eagles. The old curses were finally breaking.

Weapons of Torture

Tara was in a wrestling with a huge snake. Her ancestors were appearing, she thought she was dying. But suddenly a huge eagle came down and grasped her to take her to it's nest. It was a huge black eagle. It took care of her wounds. There was a savage treasure in the nest, the jewelry was almost blinding. Tara could use these amulets, and the eagle granted her access to take of it what she wanted. It was a spirit of her ancestors. An indian one. It appeared to be a chief. The tribe was still alive in the sky. Wolves were howling. Tara could reconnect to the strength of her bloodline.

She wore the chainlet of the pink snake, and her body was changing. It was a new torment, like the new inquisition, for she was the first human who had touched it. It was a poison breaking down all her cells and atoms and building it up again. Her mind was shifting and breaking, and in this she felt her heart coming up, and her female powers. She felt cold and then so hot. Suddenly the nest was moving. A huge pink snake entered. It almost looked like a dragon and had a very tall tongue. It had wings and could fly like an eagle. The pink snake was the leader of all eagles. It was like hidden sources in Tara's body were opening up, like a snake was gliding through it, opening her senses. She felt a softness, and at the same time a hardness, tightening her up. The snake came closer to her, and a small sun came out of it, and soared in front of Tara. Then it went into her heart. Then some more small suns came into Tara. 'These are the treasures of the pink snake,' the pink snake said.

Tara wakes up on a pirate ship. A mean laughing pirate holds a knife against her throat. She doesn't know how she came here, but obviously she had been hit by them. 'Bird in a cage,' the pirate sais while grinning. Tara realizes that she is tied. Then the pirate walks away. It is sunny. There are many pirates on the ship. She sees their weapons and instruments. They are of torture. She doesn't remember anything. Close to her a young boy and girl sit. They are also tied. She wants to help them, but she can't. Then the captain appears. A huge man with a black jacket, almost like a garment. He has a huge hat. He is laughing. Then Tara falls asleep again. When she wakes up it is storming. She gets hit again, but this time by something falling on her. All she knows is that a big bird is grasping her, then she falls asleep again and wakes up on an island, while the bird is staring at her.

The Needles of Pill-A

Chapter 1. The Eye of Tears

'After traveling a lot through the atmosphere which looked like a desert, I came in my spaceship to the planet of ducks. It was full of sex houses and drug stores. I went inside of a drug store and got me some duck drugs. I injected it in my veins, and smiled. This was good stuff. I smiled even more, and took a deep breath. I felt like my muscles were dying, and my nipples were taking over. All was in orgasmic rythms, my brain muscles were like dying. It was like a fist in me was rising. The ducks were like humans here, just more sensitive, and women and men seemed to be equal. Males were not the stronger race. I took another shot, and started to hallucinate. Something was taking me over. Soon I looked into the eyes of a she-duck. She took me to her house, where she started to undress me, and she covered me with jewelry. I was far from nude, yet it was like my skin could breath better, and it was better visible, but not in an untasteful way. I actually liked it. She girdled me. I felt nothing but sweetness from her, no threats. I had the feeling she wouldn't abuse me. She was full of attention and full of love, and then she ran away. The house soon didn't exist anymore, and I woke up. I was still in the drug store. They told me if I wanted the experience to endure I needed to have my body produce the drug itself, as a hormone, from a special duck drug organ, the DDO. They showed me this pink organ, which looked like a heart, but it had to be implanted in the stomach. I protested against such a surgery, but finally they convinced me, and I knew I was in good hands. I went to sleep, and I was with her again. Now I knew she would stay forever, as I had the organ. I could stay in this dream, and I was happy. But something happened. In my dream she got shot, and even though I did not wake up anymore, and even though I was still in her house, she was not with me anymore, and I faced her funeral. I only remembered of the criminals as black shadows, and they still danced in the backgrounds of my mind. In my dream I tried to find the drug store again, and they told me the DDO needed to get updated often. It often needed extra installations, and there was a risk the DDO could die. I was shocked, as I didn't expect this. I needed a perfect DDO. A DDO could become old, and not working properly anymore. I wanted my girl back. I wanted to go to the dream as it was. They brought me to a memory bank, where I could get my memories back and live in them. But there were many risks. Even worse problems could show up. I needed the perfect drug. They told me it was very complicated.

I treasured my DDO, I was in love with it. Things seemed to work out, and I got my girl back again. I visited the drug store daily for updates, and so did my girl. The DDO was like my heart. The secret of the DDO was the duck sun, which would be the source to eternalize the DDO. We wanted to travel to the duck sun, me and my girl, in our spaceship.

It directly activated a ray called Pill-A when we reached a certain zone around the duck zone, a ray penetrating the muscles and brains of earthlings like needles, inserting a poison to paralyze them, so that the DDO also could grow into them. It was because I had the earth DNA in my history files, and it could be beamed straight through it to reach the earth zones to do it's job. We could follow this all on screens. At the same time duck warriors were approaching the earth. Even the heart muscles had to be penetrated like this. The duck sun was taking over. It would shift all the realities of earth, and there would be a shift from the Musclian Age to the Nipplian Age. The ducks were about to bring childhood back to earth, and all the adult behaviour would die. They used the duck drugs for that.

After this they would have to take over the black brain sun and the black muscle sun, which seemed to be the sources of the whole musclian age.'

A captive woke up in a camp of native american women. He had been a prisoner here for awhile. The women seemed to be insane, claiming he had committed an unforgivable sin, and therefore he was their prisoner of doom. They had put him in an arena where he had to fight, and where he actually got partly paralyzed and spasmic. Now he was laying there, in a tent, inbetween some native women, waiting for the everlasting torment to come, as a punishment for his wicked deeds, of which he didn't know what it was. He felt misjudged, but his dreams at nights seemed beautiful, deep, haunting, as was this place.

He felt a hand on his shoulder. A woman stood before him. It was Tara from Rhodes, his saviour. She led him out of this place. She brought him to her home, somewhere behind rocks, in a sandy cave. It was raining outside. She took care of his wounds. The women with their evil grins still tormented his mind, but this woman was so different. She gave him a sword and a knife, but he was still paralyzed and in spasm. But when he held it, soon power streamed through his body. 'What is that ?' he asked.

'You have been chosen by the gods,' Tara spoke.

'For what ?' he asked.

She didn't speak. After awhile she said : 'Just believe it.'

He admired this woman, so he believed what she said. She had saved him.

'Please, don't let me have to go back to where I came from,' he begged her.

'You are safe here,' she spoke. Two wolves were licking him. Outside he could see a river where crocodiles were. On the sandy shore there were also some leopards.

'The animals keep you safe,' she spoke.

'I dreamt about ducks,' he said

'Forget about them now,' Tara spoke. 'Think about the wild animals, the savage ones.'

He sighed. He was still trembling, but she caressed him and calmed him. He was in her arms. He fell asleep and dreamt about the drugs of nature, the serums of paradise. Spiders were stinging his muscles, and they were like dying, and an organ in his stomach took control, soft powers, guided by an unknown sun. In his dreams he saw the lovely face of Tara.

He woke up and knew that everything was but a dream. He was still the captive of these native american women, savage indians, who had his heart. There was red lace tied around his hips. These women seemed to be very organized as there were more captives with red lace.

One day he had to appear before their queen, who was painted in red, and he asked her what he had done wrong. 'First of all, you are a male,' she said. 'Second : you have muscles. Third : you have brains.'

'But you have them too,' he said.

'No,' the queen spoke. 'Just advanced nipples.'

'Can I have them too ?' he asked.

'No,' the queen said. 'It is unforgivable that you have been like this, and that you have used it. It is called abuse, you have abused your powers, your false powers, you have used your muscles and brains against women.'

'No, I have not,' he said. 'I have never used my muscles against women. I have never hit a woman, only maybe for self defense.'

'You are starting to get insecure, by saying : maybe,' said the queen, 'and what about your brains. Didn't you use them to humiliate women ?'

'Never,' said the man.

'Is that all you can say ?' asked the queen. 'Here females are above males. You have to get used to that. Here we rule. No one comes against us. Spiders will feast on your muscles. You will be a good snack, then a good slave.'

'You have to give me a second chance,' said the man. 'A chance to let me be more like you.'

'Never,' said the queen. 'You will never be like us. Deal with that. You belong to the everlasting torment and the everlasting arena.'

The man watched the cruel faces of the other girls who were with the queen. They stood there merciless. He knew that every escape from here would just be a dream. They didn't let him sleep much, but sometimes he just fainted.

'There is no hope for creatures like you,' the queen said. 'Neither for your children.'

'That sounds racistic,' said the man.

'I don't care what you think,' the queen said. All captives were allowed to see the queen only one time in their lives, so the queen took the time for him, but he couldn't get through to her. Slowly she turned into a python, and went away.

It was like she had stung him, and he felt like he was dying. He knew there was nothing left to do but to accept that he was in this place forever, and that he had comfort in his dreams. It was not all that bad, as he could sleep and faint. He led a double life, and he knew that these two lives would form and transform each other, until he would have a satisfying point of view on them.

In his dreams he dreamt about the nipple sun, with nipplian warriors, invading everything. The creatures on here were wild, beyond the duck sun. The nipple sun was like a mind police, beheading the giants of the muscle age. Cobras took their bodies over, and showed their heads on their bodies. Tara from Rhodes was big in his dreams, and she made his terrible life with the native women look like fragments. It was like it was all just a few seconds of the day. All flashes. he fainted more and more, entering his dream world, just different frequencies of life. He could tune in and out.

The source of Pill-A was on the nipple sun, where he also found a substance called Pill-B, nipplian seed. This seemed to be the secret of Tara from Rhodes, the secret of her power. She ruled over the illusions with her sword, taking him in.

She took him to Mars, and to it's core, Betelgeuse, to which the nipple sun was just a key. Here nature and life was good. The crocodiles were big. The rivers were of blood. It was hell. She was a sharp voice in his head, the voice of the python, whispering. She showed him the key, a solar key, of so many suns, of a solar stairway, transforming him, and bringing him into the depths of Betelgeuse, absorbing all the other experiences he ever had. Here the hippos were. It was the core of Mars. The flies ruled here. The Eye of Tax was soaring here. Tara said it was the last enemy to be defeated. It was the creator of the muscles and the brains, as in a conspiracy, as it made captives.

'How to defeat it ?' he asked.

'Only a female can do it,' Tara spoke. She told a vague story about a yellow pyramid which would lead to the yellow sun, a good security against the Eye of Tax. In the distance a stairway seemed to be burning. Tara spoke that the yellow sun was a key to enter deeper into Betelgeuse. She said that in the depths of Betelgeuse the yellow sun would release substances which would trigger a doom in the universe to transform everything. This was why the yellow sun was an important path or elevator in Betelgeuse.

Some said the yellow sun was the sun of tears, while others said it was the sun of jokes and the sun of laughing. Fact was that anyone who would approach the yellow sun would stop aging, unless the yellow sun would not let them through, then they would age even faster. There were of course ways to age in the depths of Betelgeuse, but it was just more controllable.

The laugh gas of the yellow sun made people happy, although that was what it looked like, when Tara took the man on a trip. But it was scorn, and it led to tears. There were many tear lakes in the depths of Betelgeuse, which was like a hot desert area. Tara gave the man a ring on which his oxygen statistics could be seen, and it was to be controlled from there. The yellow sun was like a train into the depths of this desert, guided by tall paradise birds. He needed to control his oxygen, or he would die here. He needed to learn how to breath. She led him along the pee-lakes of monsters and beasts, where they had peed, wells of healing. She teached him the secrets of nature, there, in the depths of Betelgeuse. His mind broke free from so many restrictions, but he also had to worship the goddess. He had to live in devotion to her. And for the sake of nature he had to be sacrificed to her, and her wrath had to be poured out on him, as in an eternal punishment. He had to be rejected, as a religious experience of doom, he had to feel the everlasting torment.

It was Betelgeuse's Theology demanding this, and there was no escape. There could not be an everlasting bliss without this everlasting damnation. There could not be an everlasting peace without an everlasting war. There was such a balance here, by such a split. There could not be an everlasting marriage to the goddess without the everlasting divorce to the goddess. Tara said that this was the reset of the chip and it was nothing but a game. She told him that the goddess loved him very much, and that he was chosen by her for this game. She wanted to heal his past. She would arm him through this ritual.

The Eye of Tax was still soaring above them, looking like an insect. It looked like a big swollen muscle, through which slime was streaming. It was very slimy and greesy. Tara took the man into a lake of monster-pee, where the pee of beasts was mixed, and the pee of dragons, and it seemed to be a healing well, but after awhile it caused trauma. But there seemed to be no other option. The man was confused, and so was Tara. The Eye of Tax was after them. It stalked them. The traumas seemed to actually protect them against the Eye, as otherwise it would enslave them. They both felt a pressure on them. Tara was fighting for her life, and at the same time she had to protect the man, but it was hard on her. They heard noises in the distance. Gigantic dragons showed up, but they could begin nothing against the Eye of Tax. Suddenly the Eye of Tax swallowed Tara. When it spat her out she was under slime, as in an egg. She felt like she was burning. She was screaming. The man got stung by the Eye and got paralyzed. He remembered this feeling. It was like his past was taking over.

Cream came forth from the Eye, covering them both. They were both like burning, as in a flame. Soon they were surrounded by males with big breasts and big muscles. 'The splinters of Fragma,' said Tara.

'What is that ?' the man asked.

'These men are just parts of this Eye,' Tara said. 'They are the workers of it's foam, Fragma, his spirit. It keeps them drunk. They do not care, only for their pleasure. They live in jokes, lies.'

They both fell into an enormous depth, while the Eye of Tax seemed to be feasting on their flesh. 'These men are guards of another world,' Tara said, 'but they will soon die.'

'I hope so,' the man said. 'They are evil.'

Suddenly they were gliding into the tear lakes of beasts, monsters and dragons. It was like their traumas were soothing. 'it works,' Tara said. 'Whenever the Eye of Tax stalks, it leads us to these lakes.'

'What will happen ?' the man asked.

The lakes were like burning, but it was also calming them, as there was a softening substance in it. The tears were very neutralizing. It attached itself to their bodies, and started to heal the wounds.

'Manerka,' a voice spoke. There was another man in the lake. Soon they saw beasts, dragons and monsters appearing. The Eye of Tax was shrieking. The tears were on them like foam and jewelry, like fleeces as lace. It was enslaving them for war.

'I can breath !' the man shouted.

'Welcome to the army,' the other man said.

On a dragon a queen-like woman was riding, sitting on a saddle. She was covered by lace and leather, as in a traditional armor. She had horns, and she was partly veiled, and had a short skirt. She was moving towards them, but then fell away.

The Eye of Tax was spitting fire, but the tear lake was swallowing them into it's depths. The man lost his consciousness. He felt like dreaming, and suddenly he could shake so many worlds off of him. He watched his dreams shifting in a huge pearl. The pearl was slimy and greesy, very steamy. 'Don't touch the pearl,' a voice spoke. It was the queen-like figure with the horns. 'I am here to intoxicate you, you need the witch,' she said. 'Here all the realities shift.'

'I do not know what is real and what is not,' said the man. 'I do not know what to trust and what not, I do not know the truth.'

'Come,' said the queen, and led him to a hall behind them. The hall was full of beasty warriors. They formed the elements of animals. They looked like rhinos. 'The watchers of Doom,' said the queen. 'They are waiting for their hour.'

'Who are they, and what are they going to do ?' asked the man.

'They are eye-eaters,' said the queen. 'They are going to eat the Eye of Tax.'

'Who leads them ?' asked the man.

'Tara from Rhodes will lead them,' said the queen. 'I sent her to you, as you have been chosen by the gods. She is the Law of Tax, the opposite force, waiting to blind the eye, and endarken it.'

A darkness fell upon them. The hour was almost there. Tara from Rhodes soared above the rhinos, as if she had wings of light, but it was darkness. She had a trumpet and a viking helmet, a horned helmet.

'Who or what is Tax ?' asked the man.

'The thief,' said the queen. 'But if the thief is not bound to the law, then the thief is evil. The thief needs to be legal, stealing back what others have reaved.'

'Oh,' said the man, 'sounds interesting.'

'Interesting, right ?' said the queen. Then it was silent for awhile. The man lost consciousness again. he knew he was in the tear lakes. It felt like his whole body was crying, and like his eye was dying. It felt like he completely lost it. He was blind, and the only light was the darkness. The Eye of Tax was a criminal and a murderer, but Tara arrested it.

In dreams he saw her and he worshipped her, as she was the harmony. She was the paradox. He wanted to know this Law of Tax. He wanted to be on her side. But he also knew inside there would always be an eye, so he had to search for the right eye. He fell into a field of bison hunters. The eyes of the bisons were red. They had the eyes of tax. He could see this empire in the distance, where bison hunters ruled. He knew the only eye who could set them free was the Eye of Tears. He knew they worshipped it in the empire, he just knew. It was like a vision went right through him. He saw angels on horses, but then he fell away again. The Eye of Tears in him was like a drug.

Chapter 2. The Dark Side of Betelgeuse

The Eye of Tax was a machine of snobs, men who thought they were superior, an elite. In the depths of Betelgeuse there were the starvation farms, where men were turned into those who had the weakness of little babies. They were prepared to become slaves of the Eye of Tears. Soon the man was there as well, all other visions were dying. He had to live in a tear. The tear would feed them, although not too much. It was a sort of milk to make them even weaker. The tear would give them power, but not too much, often by spasm. They lived by strange contractions and hyperventilation. The theology was that they had to become weak and empty to be able to receive the power of the Eye of Tears, the goddess. And this theology demanded also that they went through the divorce with Her, and to be completely rejected by her, to be doomed by her, living under her wrath as an eternal punishment. In this they would reach enlightenment, by the depths of endarkenment. She was a cruel goddess, only to show them the flashes of grace. There was no grace for those doomed by Her. They were nothing but her milk-cows. But it was to awaken an extra sense. He felt like a weak child, stung by spiders, he felt like a fly guided by strange power. He was not able to hold anything. Everything slided through his fingers. He was bathing in milk lakes of monsters, beasts and dragons.

He had seen the dark side of Betelgeuse, where the females were the stronger race, and the males the weaker, where the eyes were the seals of drugs. And the breasts of native women, savage indians, were the taps of the milk of confusion. There were no answers, no one was helping him, and soon he was thinking that it was all an evil conspiracy, and he accepted the evilness in his life. There was no other way. Resisting it was pointless.

He was sinking away in the experience, while death was calling him. He found an oracle like a disc, like a wheel, and he held it tight. 'The male represents youth,' said the oracle, 'while the female represents growth and death. And you have to go into the depths rather than fighting at the surface. But we are all children after all.'

In the depths he saw the beauty of death, all colours torn apart until there was only white and red. He felt it as a rebirth. Everything moved by death, by falling from great height, by huge pain, but at the same time there was bliss and softness, as the softness of feathers. Only pale colours came through, yet it was intense. Here the Eye of Death was soaring, as a tap of the fluids of extasy. These all came as pale lights. It was all painted by thunder and lightening. The beauty of death was an ingredient the cook of life used.

The Ghost Cup

The Elephant Cup was an item most wanted by warlocks, necromancers and sorcerors. It was highly guarded in a deep cave, by big wild cats in all sorts. Tara started to slay them one by one in order to reach the cup. Long she had desired to drink from the cup, as it's fluids would lead her through the underworld and would make her invincible. She grasped the cup, but then shivered as if she had touched something holy. She fell backwards, and a man came from behind her to grasp her and to lay a bloody knife against her throat. 'What are you doing here ?' he roared.

'Who are you,' Tara asked.

'You have no rights to come here,' said the man. Suddenly Tara made a movement and could throw the man off of her, but then two gorillas grasped her, and tried to choke her. 'Illunias !' she shouted. And soon a giant bird came to slay the two monkeys and the man. Again Tara fell backwards. A strange power was striking her, as she had touched the cup. She felt like drunk, but tried to get to the cup again. The cup had fallen to the ground, and it's fluids were wasted to the ground. Tara knew that touching the cup again would be her death. Soon she was drinking the fluids from the ground, mixed with dust, sand and slime. 'I am ill,' she roared. She lay down somewhere, trying to forget about the cup. But it was as if there was now a strong force around her head as an iron band. 'No !' she roared.

'You have touched the food of the gods,' a voice spoke. A hooded man in a garment came closer. But Tara beheaded him immediately. She wouldn't take any risk. She felt powers sliding through her, making her able. 'Why am I here !' she shouted. She grasped her head. 'I am going insane,' she spoke. Her voice was echoeing through the cave. 'I am a mere shadow now, but powerful, more than ever. I have found access to the underworld to become immortal.' She felt like she was becoming invisible, and her eyes could see ghosts now. 'The sorcerors want what I have !' she shouted. 'I will not trade any of this !' There was a strange smell in the cave. Her feet were sweating, and soon her whole body. She saw the ghosts wailing in the wind, suffering under the mystery of a stone, the stone of the twelve cats. These were twelve sorts of big wild cats, and they were united in a master stone, an amulet. But it was an amulet of slavery. She fell down again. 'I see the underworld !' she shouted. 'What do you want from me !'

'Free us,' the ghosts wailed.

'Why would I,' she said harsh.

'We are doomed,' a ghost wailed.

'So what,' she shouted, 'We are all doomed.'

'But you can help us,' another ghost wailed, 'and we will pay you richely.'

'I am not a helper,' she shouted. 'I cannot be bribed, I can only make things worse.'

'Please,' the ghosts begged. 'Let us at least be your slaves, so that we have something to live for.'

'I will be more terrible than your master,' Tara shouted.

The ghosts fell at her feet and cried. 'Eternal growing damnation is what I give,' Tara said while drunk. Then she fell again. She stood up and raised her shield. She was bleeding, and soon she was bleeding from her eyes.

'You have drunk from the Elephant Cup, my dear,' the ghosts were wailing. 'We can help you.'

'Shut up !' Tara was shouting. 'I am sure I will be fine too.' The ghosts were in the dust, hitting themselves, chaining themselves, in the hope that Tara would take them, so that they could leave from their master. Suddenly there were lights everywhere. It was the stone of the twelve cats appearing. Tara could see it, as she had drunk from the elephant cup, and now her eyes were opened for it. It was another dimension. The lights were striking Tara.

'Why have you touched the cup,' the stone spoke.

'None of your business !' Tara shouted.

'Oh it is, believe me,' said the stone. 'And you will pay dearly for it.' Tara took her sword again and tried to cut the stone appearing before her, as in a revelation.

'You will be my servant, Tara,' the stone spoke.

Tara grasped her head, and felt weak all of a sudden. 'I am trapped,' she said softly. Again she fell down. First on her knees. 'No, no, this cannot be true,' she said.

'You are too late, Tara,' the stone spoke. 'Someone already had drunk from the cup, and filled it with the fluids of slaves, for you to become our slave.'

'I don't believe you,' Tara said. 'Who drunk from it then ?'

'Us,' the stone said.

'Who are these ghosts ?' Tara said as if she was struck again. She felt like a panick was coming over her.

'They have also drunk after us, they came too late, and soon you will be one of them,' the stone said. Tara heard laughter, and she came into a rage, but the panick was much bigger. Soon she was shivering with fear, trembling. But then she spoke again : 'I cannot believe you.'

'Oh, you will see,' said the stone. 'You will see.'

It was like heavy chains fell upon her, and she started wailing because of the strange pains. Soon she was baptized in a river, the river of hell. It was a river of lamentation.

'No, this cannot be true,' she shouted. 'I just have to hold the cup, I have to.' She tried to come back to the cave, but couldn't find it. She was in the river. She tried to reach the coast, but there was no coast. Everything was moving away from her, and strange small sharks were biting her. 'Hell no !' she was shouting. She was rubbing her eyes, and saw the Elephant Cup again. She would now grasp it and hold it, and not letting it go. Soon she had the cup in her hand, and then in both hands. She was trembling again, but didn't let go. And she started to drink. She drank like never before. Soon cats were all around her. Big black cats like panthers were licking her. 'I made it,' she spoke. She knew the cup would now lead her through the underworlds, and no secret would stay secret for her. The cup brought her in a cave of Elephant Gems, where she adorned herself. The gems were all strung together with feathers. She was holding the cup and raised it. 'I will conquer the seven seas of death with it, and the seas of hell. All will bow for me !' she shouted. She tied the cup to her belt, and flames were surrounding her. On the back of a bison she went through the underworlds. In the last underworld she met a king. The king immediately started to talk to her in unknown language, but Tara beheaded him immediately as she didn't want to take any risk. In her paranoia she became full of prejudice, for her own protection, but one day she met someone who told her that the elephant force was such a savage power, and that it could only be brought to balance by the Mammoth Cup. The person led her to this cup, but it confused her even more, bringing her to the depths of insanity. 'If this is my fate, so be it,' Tara spoke. The Mammoth Cup had opened her eyes for too many dimensions at the same time, which was now overwhelming her, but this person said that Tara would finally reach the surfaces through all these waters of chaos. Tara had the feeling she was only sinking deeper, but some supreme power became master of her, and finally she became master of it. In the depths of chaos she had planted her throne.

The Bones of Traxmarut

Tara was walking on a path through the jungle. Suddenly she was surrounded by spears. Soldiers were watching her, soldiers of a strange sort. They took her to their queen, the queen of Salvabridge. 'What are you doing in our place ?' the queen asked. The soldiers looked confused, as if they were under her spell.

'Since when is it your place,' said Tara. 'The jungle is of no one.'

'You can take a bet on it is mine,' said the queen. 'Soldiers, throw her in the crocodile dungeon !' she shouted. 'What a bliss,' thought Tara. 'I'm at least not killed.'

In the dungeon there were some dead crocodiles. Soon Tara was eating their flesh, savage as she was. But she felt like she was going insane by it. She heard laughing outside of the dungeon. Soldiers were watching her. 'The meat is poisoned,' they said.

'Bastards,' Tara whispered. She knew she would survive this poison. She had been poisoned before, but her body was always strong enough to survive.

After a while she had to appear before the queen again. 'There is something about you so strong,' said the queen. Suddenly Tara grasped a many-pointed blade-knife of a soldier, and attacked the queen. Soon she had the queen in a strangling grip, and then beheaded her. 'No one rules the jungle !' Tara shouted. Snakes were gliding close to Tara, and soldiers began to run away.

'Cowards,' she whispered. A man in golden clothes stood close to Tara. 'You will pay for this,' he said. Man-eating plants came forward, but they didn't harm Tara. They started to eat the man, who started to scream. It seemed Tara had broken a huge curse. 'The skull of Neveroth !' the man screamed. 'It will make you pay !'

Tara didn't know what he meant. Soon the man was dead. Monkeys were surrounding the dead body, but then they joined Tara. It was like all the animals had approved of her actions. The palace was already a ruin. Tara went to a room behind the place of the throne. There was a green skull on a small pillar. An old man sat close to it. 'What is it ?' Tara asked.

'No one knows,' said the man. 'It is a strange thing.'

'Who are you ?' Tara asked.

'I am it's priest,' said the man. 'I was a captive of this queen, but she let me free in order to become a priest of this skull.'

'Strange,' Tara said. The queen seemed to have mysterious powers by which she enslaved others, but she was dead now.

Suddenly the skull started to speak. Lightening and smoke came forwards from it. 'Neveroth is my name, paradise is my game. I started the tree, and made the creations breath.'

Tara and the man stepped backwards, as darkness began to come forth, and the lightening was getting brighter. 'Who has killed the queen ?' asked the skull.

'I did,' said Tara.

Thunder came forth from the pillar, and a beam struck Tara, while she could raise her shield just in time to ward it off. 'See, crazy you are,' said the pillar. 'Just that you do not rule the jungle doesn't mean you can kill the ruler.'

'Well, for your information : She doesn't rule the jungle !' shouted Tara.

'We will see,' the pillar said. 'Now run, or I will kill you.'

'I won't run for anyone !' shouted Tara. 'Miserable creatures like you I despise.'

'You do not know with which powers you are messing,' said the pillar. 'There is only one ruler, dead or alive. You cannot kill her soul. You only killed her body. It was a wrong put in the game, for now she … hahaha.'

Tara came close to the pillar, then struck it by the many-pointed blade-knife, but she almost became electrocuted and was thrown on the ground by the mysterious power.

'Now, do not touch it,' said the pillar. 'You might hurt yourself.'

'Who are you,' asked Tara.

'I am the skull of Neveroth, the skull of a warrior,' the skull spoke. 'I have seen the seven seas of death, the tragedies of hell, and the traps of the gods. I am the blood-god of Israel, the keeper of it's veils. And she was my goddess.'

'You know what,' said Tara. 'You are just confused.' Then she struck the pillar again, at the root of the skull, and again she was thrown to the floor.

'Give it up, Tara,' said the skull. 'You will never break through.'

'Never,' said Tara, and struck the skull again. This time it was giving light, and broke off. A flood started to come through it's mouth. 'Not smart,' the skull said. Tara had to run now, as there was water everywhere, and it didn't seem to stop. Soon she was swimming. She didn't know where the old man was. 'The curse of Neveroth is on you !' roared the skull.

'I am drowning !' shouted the skull. 'You have broken my cup !' Tara swam to the highest tree of the jungle, where she would be safe. She climbed very high. Some monkeys were following her. One of them had the skull in his hands, although the skull didn't have light anymore. It was all dark. 'Throw it away,' said Tara to the monkey. The monkey did, and the skull was sinking soon enough. It took a while before the water was lowering again. When all the water was gone after a long time. There was somewhere a deep hole in the ground close to the ruin. Tara went down in the pit. She found the skull there in front of a realm of cages underground. The cages were full of children. Tara worked her way through the cages and came in an open place where sacrificial items were. Some priests stood at the other side of the place. 'Did Neveroth send you here ?' they asked.

Tara didn't say anything. Suddenly she grasped her blade and beheaded them. Panthers came forward and started to lick her. It seemed that nature was on her side. But soon more and more priests came. 'The wrath of Neveroth is on her !' a priest with a high headcover shouted. It seemed like the highpriest. He had jewelry all over. Soon she was surrounded by spears. 'Throw her in the fire !' the man shouted. They grasped her, and took her blade away. But some of the panthers started to jump on the men, and Tara could run away. From one man she had taken his spear. She went deeper into the place, until she came in a chamber where veiled women were.

'What have you done to the children,' Tara spoke. The women didn't speak, but looked confused. She went behind some veils and came in a deep cave where black panthers were. A skeleton started to laugh. 'You should never have come here, woman, you are trapped,' he said. Tara started to become dizzy. Black huge eyes stared at her, like a white monster. 'Grasp her,' the skeleton said.

'No, I can't,' the white monster said. 'She is the queen of the jungle.'

'She isn't, now grasp her !' shouted the skeleton.

'That the rain of the gods may destroy you, woman,' the skeleton shouted, while huge gems started to fall down on Tara. She got hit so hard on the head that she lost consciousness. She woke up in a white place. Panthers were all around her. The white monster was staring at her.

'Where is the skeleton ?' asked Tara.

'He is dead,' said the white monster. 'I killed him.'

'Thank you,' said Tara. 'Where are the children ?'

'In the cages,' said the white monster, 'prepared for sacrifice.'

'To what ?' asked Tara. But the white monster didn't answer.

'There is no one like you,' said the monster. 'You are beautiful.'

'How do you know ?' Tara asked.

'My master said : one day there will come a woman, the queen of the jungle, and she will ask for the savage children and the animals, to set them free,' said the white monster. 'Me and my master lived in captivity. My master was killed after he revealed about the queen of the jungle. He described you, and you perfectly fit the description.'

'Where are we ?' Tara asked.

'In my palace,' said the white monster. Tara looked around her, and inbetween the white pillars there was an open space with a pond of crocodiles. 'My powers grow more each day,' said the white monster.

'What do you know about Neveroth ?' asked Tara.

'Not much,' said the white monster. 'Just that he is our breath, and that he can take it away.'

Suddenly Tara had the feeling she couldn't breath. Soon she fell down.

'Now Tara,' the white monster said. 'Neveroth is never wrong. Some say that maybe, but …. I will show you.' After awhile Tara could breath again, and he led her to a white hall. An enormous skull was in the hall, as the skull of a giant, and it was the skull of a monster. 'This is my father,' said the white monster. 'He is impersonated a lot. Now you are not going to believe what I am about to say, but …. this skull is the ruler of blood. It drains and gives. It pumps.'

It was like the skull was breathing and pumping like a heart.

'Then why is your father not rooting the priesthood out who keep these animals and children imprisoned ?' Tara asked.

'Because the priests of my father stole his bones, and they used it to generate a false skull,' said the white monster.

'Where are these bones ?' Tara asked.

'I don't know,' said the white monster. 'But my father is fading. The skull is perishing. If it has dried out completely, we will not breath anymore and die.'

'Abarath …. is the one … the priest …. who stole the bones,' said the white monster. The white monster led Tara to the cages again. There were white tall dogs walking around there with strange spots. Tara was struck with terror and became very exhausted all of a sudden. The white monster took her back to the palace where she started to get all sorts of nightmares. She was sweating a lot, and the white monster held her all the time.

'Tell me more about Abarath,' whispered Tara.

The white monster became like intoxicated, like drunk, and his black eyes became white, and his skin grey. 'I can't Tara,' he said.

'Do it !' shouted Tara. 'I need to know or he will kill us all !'

'He is a witch,' said the white monster, 'a bad witch, a religious witch. He calls himself the Traxmarut, the Christ, and children have to be sacrificed to him. He steals them, then takes them to the underground. 'He's a butcher, also calling himself the king of swords, or Lord of the swords.'

Tara fell asleep again and had even worse nightmares, until she woke up screaming. 'Bring me to the cages,' said Tara. The white monster took her up, and led her to the cages. She grasped a dog, and a wrestling started. Tara tore the flesh of the dog apart, while other dogs were starting to attack her. 'Do you want to know where the key is !' Tara shouted. 'It's in the heart of these dogs !' Again she tore the flesh of these dogs apart, while she got terribly bitten. 'Take me away !' she suddenly screamed to the white monster. The white monster grasped her, but there were money dogs who had put their teeth in her flesh and didn't want to let her go. It was like she was bleeding to death.

'I see Traxmarut !' shouted Tara. 'The one who is guarding the Gate of Death ! I am dying ! I see his golden coffin with the red covering and the golden cross on it ! I see him !' Suddenly the dogs let her go, barked and ran away. The white monster had come closer to the white palace with her.

'They can't stand the white palace, as there is Neveroth's real skull. They fear it,' said the white monster.

'The bones are in Traxmarut's coffin !' shouted Tara. 'It is somewhere in a church, a cathedral.'

'Below the cages, there is a cathedral,' said the white monster.

'Then let us go there,' Tara said.

'The dogs will eat you,' said the white monster.

'Then we go with the skull of your father !' shouted Tara.

The white monster ended up putting pieces of the skull of his father in Tara's armor, because the giant skull was much too big to take it with them.

The dogs were crying when they saw Tara. They started to melt away, while the white monster led Tara to the cathedral. It was exactly how she saw it in her hallucinations of death. She went inside in search for the golden coffin, which she found in a deeper chamber. A ghost came up from the coffin, saying : 'Who touches these bones inside, will die,' while it was also written in the air. There were rings at the sides of the coffin, golden rings, which kept the coffin covered by a golden plate which was covered by a red covering.

'You cannot open the coffin Tara, you will die,' said the ghost. 'You don't know with which powers you are playing.'

'You are religious scum !' shouted Tara. Suddenly the whole place was in fire, and Tara had to run out of the cathedral. 'It's killing me !' she shouted. The white monster took her to the palace again, where he quenched the fire totally. 'I cannot do this. These powers are too strong,' said Tara.

'Then we will all die,' said the white monster.

'What can we do ?' Tara asked.

'Ask my father,' said the white monster. Together they approached the skull again. 'Father,' said the white monster. Tara wanted to ask you a question.

'I already know what she wants to know,' said the skull. 'And there is only one solution. She has to enter through my nose holes, and enter the chamber deep inside my skull, where the powder of intoxication is in a white coffin. It is the powder of time. She has to smear it on her face and on her body, and go back to the cathedral to get the bones. If she will not be back here with the bones in short time, she will die.'

Tara climbed on the skull her way up to the nose-holes, and went inside where she found the chamber a while later. When she went inside and tried to open the coffin, a white ghost stood there. When she put on the powder she was suddenly in a shock and very paranoid. She suddenly didn't trust the skull anymore, but on the other hand she knew that if the skull had spoken the truth, she needed to be fast now. She ran outside to go back to the cathedral. She ran towards the chamber with the golden coffin, and could open it very easily. When she touched the bones, nothing happened. She took the bones with her. They were not that big. When she came back to the skull, the skull was very mad. 'They have shrunk my bones !' he shouted. 'Bring them in my chamber.' The skull then wanted the bones to be put in the white coffin.

When Tara had reached the coffin and put the bones into it, she suddenly fell backwards, where the floor opened itself, and she slided into a deep, tall pit, where she ended in a dungeon. 'There is no escape from anyone,' roared the skull. 'I have my bones back, and look where it is leading us. Now you are locked up in me forever. I do not know how to get you out from there. Tara was surrounded by strange moving bars.

'Father,' said the white monster, 'maybe you have missed a link.'

But the skull didn't speak anymore. Tara came into a deep sleep. The skull was fading more and more, and started to lose it's density. When Tara woke up the skull had completely disappeared, and she was free. 'Maybe your father is finally free,' said Tara. The white monster nodded. When they went to the place of the cages, it didn't exist anymore. They hoped the children were finally free as well.

Desert Queen

She had tied her men, while strange insects called 'spanish spears' were stinging them. By the venom they were slowly turning into cattle. The spanish spears not only inserted their venom, but they were also bloodsuckers. They sucked the blood and the juices out of the men, leaving them weak. They had to go through all sorts of marriage rituals to bring them down, and after that they had to go through the rituals of divorce. The cattle was good for work and transport.

Tara from Rhodes, a lonely warrior, stops her journey through the desert when she comes along this bright realm of the desert queen. Quickly she finds out what is going on here, and she starts a massacre, finally to behead the desert queen. With the head of the queen she holds by her hand she sits on her throne. 'Spear not the cattle !' someone is shouting. But soon a spear goes through the head of this person.

She loves the cattle but she is not aware of the curse of the desert queen. An army of sand-people is soon surrounding the bright realm in which Tara thrones now. They walk slowly towards her, coming from the sand, and soon Tara is put into a torture cage in the dephts of the desert. The cage goes down as by an elevator. It leads to underground worlds below the desert, where the spanish spears rule.

The queen of the spanish spears could also turn into a woman. She came close to Tara. 'Well, well,' she said to Tara, 'so you have defeated the desert queen, right ? Just know that the desert will always exist, and replace these queens with something even worse. As now I will become desert queen.'

Tara was allowed to come out of the cage, and the queen of the spanish spears took her place. Soon the cage went up as by an elevator. Tara is alone now, but she is glad she is free at least.

Meanwhile the queen of the spanish spears possessed the men in the desert realm, living inside of them, living from their meat. Tara wanted to know the mystery of the desert, the secret of it, so she went deeper underground. She came into a tunnel leading to the Ocean of Blood. There were strange smells here. When she finally came on it's beach it was very dark and bloody. There were strange insects looking like chains. Another sort of insects looked like knives.

She starts swimming in the ocean of blood, and after a while she reaches an island where pigs live. They are chained by the chain-insects, and the knive-insects are living close to them as well. To Tara it seems that these strange insects live from the blood of the pigs.
Further on the island, women lived, huntresses. They lived together with hyenas. They kept men in cages who they had starved. When Tara asked about it, they said that they had let the men get stung by the venom of divorce. Tara felt compassion for the men. When the women slept she opened their cages and took the men to the ocean of blood. Together they swam to another island. Here many fruit trees were, and Tara started feeding the men, who were very weak. When the women woke up, they were in rage. Soon they found out that they were with Tara on another island. Tara would protect the men with her life. She knew the men were still in danger. Not only because of the women, but also because of the strange insects who could turn them into cattle. Tara wondered if there was an anti-venom against it. She became very protective over the men, and was looking for a medicine.

One day the queen of the spanish spears visited them. It seemed she had changed a lot. Tara asked her if she knew of an opposite force against the venom. 'Oh yes,' said the queen. 'Servil sugar. That is a sugar living in certain big fruits. They are also here on this island.' Then the queen led them to such trees, and gave them to eat from the sugar inside of the big fruits. It was a sugar to restore marriages, and to turn cattle into men again. The queen took care that the men got their women back, and that they had happy marriages again.

The Ghost-children of Pendilot

In the depths of Orion, Dagva had his slaves, who he had pierced in their teeth by strange implants. This was how he controlled his slaves. They were remote devices. He wanted his slaves to build pyramids for his empire. Dagva was a zombie under the wrath of the gods, but he had built his own religious order. They were called the Zamgda. By the pyramids he had the powers to dig deep in the depths of Orion for a substance used as money, the Ontragolin Metal. This was a soft metal which could become hard by certain processes. It could also live in the people to control them. They could get possessed by it.

The Orion pyramids were huge and gigantic, and in one of these, Dagva lived. One day he was visited by Tara from Rhodes who immediately attacked him. Blood was coming from his eyes, and he turned into a dragon. The dragon spouted flames at her, but she could block it by her shield. 'I know what you want, Dagva,' Tara shouted. 'But you are not going to get it.'

Then Dagva all of a sudden stood before her as a skeleton, while blood was still streaming from his eyes. 'You shouldn't have come here,' he roared. He grasped her neck and tried to strangle her. Tara slammed him away by her sword, but then he came back, turning into a bear, and then into a lion, to spit fire at her again, which she could block by her shield again.

'Your games are over,' he roared, while Tara felt weak all of a sudden, and later she woke up in a dungeon cage. He had done something with her head. She had a terrible headache, and she found out that she had strange implants in her teeth. No one would control her like this, but there was nothing she could do. Some dark weeks followed in the cage. Tara began to feel hopeless.

When she was allowed to come out of her cage, Dagva wanted to sacrifice her in a pool of fire, which was like an oven underground. She was led to the edge from which she would be pushed. She was tied, her hands behind her back. She was also blindfolded. They wanted to hang her, and let her sink into the flames. The rope was already around her neck. Suddenly a little boy showed up, who shouted : 'No !' Dagva seemed to be upset. 'Go home, child,' he shouted.

The little boy came from a stairway, and ran to Tara to hug her. Then the guards of Dagva, the tooth-piercers, tried to grasp the boy, but the boy ran away and disappeared into the nothing. 'Those silly, stupid ghost-children,' Dagva roared. 'Hang her now !'

Suddenly many more ghost-children appeared, took the rope off her neck, and led her away, while a strange smoke was blinding Dagva and his guards. 'Don't let them escape !' Dagva shrieked.

Suddenly Tara was in a white smoke. She wasn't tied and blindfolded anymore. Lions were surrounding her, and on the back of the lions she and the children were brought to a dark castle, the castle of Pendilot, where the children were living. 'It is a great day !' one of the children was shouting, a boy, when they had entered the main hall of the castle. 'Dagva has lost it this time. His empire is falling.' All the children were joyfully shouting. They had once suffered under his hand, but now they were free, and helped to free others. They were the ghost-children of Pendilot. They were the souls who died under the cruel regime of Dagva and the tooth-piercers. The lions always took care of them.

'Am I dead ?' Tara asked.

'No,' said a boy. 'We saved you before that could happen.' Suddenly the castle dematerialized, and disappeared into the nothing, and Tara found herself in the desert. She wondered what had happened to Dagva. In the distance she saw the army of tooth-piercers. She wouldn't be able to begin much against such a big army. But then it faded away. Someone was laughing in her head, which sounded like Dagva's voice, but then it faded away also. Tara was very thirsty and sat down. She still felt very weak. She wondered if she was safe.

Suddenly from the sand a skeleton came forth. It was Dagva. He grasped her, and pulled her into the depth, like in shift-sand. Everything was tumbling in Tara's head. Suddenly she woke up in a bed in the castle of Pendilot. A boy was staring at her. 'Am I dead ?' she asked.

'No, you just slept,' said the boy. 'Maybe you had a bad dream.'

'Well, you can say that,' Tara said. 'Am I safe ?'

The boy nodded.

'What happened to Dagva ?' Tara asked.

The boy didn't say anything, and then left. A while later another boy came to Tara, and asked how she slept. Tara told him about the dream. 'It wasn't a dream, Tara,' said the boy. 'Dagva is after your soul.'

'How can we terminate him ?' Tara asked.

'Well,' said the boy. 'Dagva's power is in the Ontragolin Metal. He could make it hard and use it as tooth-piercings. It is a ghost. There is only one way to stay safe against this ghost. We still get tortured by this ghost when we are asleep.'

'What is the only way ?' Tara asked.

'Well,' said the boy, 'the only way is to find the Hyena Tower, a powerful ghost tower in the depths of the Pendilot desert, but first we have to find the portal to the Pendilot desert. It should be somewhere below the castle of Pendilot.'

'I think I was in this desert,' Tara said.

'Really ?' said the boy. 'Tell me about it.'

'It was only for a short period I was there,' Tara said. 'And I met Dagva and the army of the tooth-piercers. Dagva grasped me, and together we sunk into shift sand.'

'Did you see the tower ?' the boy asked.

'No,' Tara said.

'There is a place of shift sand in the underground of the castle, deep down below. No one dares to go there, because it is a haunted place, but I think we have no other choice then,' said the boy. 'I think the shift sand is the portal to the desert then.'

Together they went there, and slided into the shift sand. Soon they both stood in a huge desert. There were pyramids all around them. Behind the pyramids there was the huge Hyena Tower, like a stairway into the sky. But no matter how long they walked, they didn't come closer to it. It seemed like the place was bewitched.

'Maybe the clue is in the pyramids,' said the boy.

But the pyramids seemed to be unreachable as well. The only thing they could do was go back to the place of the shift sand, and return to the castle. That was which they did, and later they told about it to the other children.

'Maybe the tower can only be reached by another way,' one of the children said.

One of the children had found out that the tooth-piercers had found their fortress. They were already knocking on the doors and the walls. The children got upset, and knew that they had to go downstairs now. Suddenly Dagva stood before them and tried to possess their minds. Some children fainted.

'Run for your life !' one of the boys shouted. Soon they were surrounded by tooth-piercers, but Tara and a few boys could escape to the place of shift sand. Again they went through the shift sand to the desert. They knew they couldn't return anymore. One boy soon found a sort of elevator hidden under sand. They made the portal free, and soon they reached the Hyena Tower. There was a lot of white smoke here, and lions. Soon they ran up the stairways.

The tower started shaking, and they heard laughing. Soon they stood eye to eye with Dagva again. It seemed he was the one laughing. 'This tower is mine,' he laughed.

'No, it isn't !' one of the boys shouted. Tara took an arrow from behind her back, and aimed at Dagva. Then she shot right through him. He caught flame, but he was just laughing. 'Let me grasp you now !' he laughed. The boys shrieked and ran downstairs again. Tara wondered if they were at the right place. And if they were, there would be a battle to get what they wanted. The tooth-piercers were already running upstairs also. There was no way to escape. Tara soon was hit on her head a few times, and later she woke up in a dungeon, together with the children. 'There must be a way,' one of them said. Some dark weeks followed. It seemed the children were trapped.

'There is no way for us to survive this,' cried one of the boys.

'Let's be glad we are all together again,' said Tara. 'We are still alive.'

The children began to sing songs to comfort each other. They feared they would be sacrificed.

Soon they were all led to the court hall of Dagva to be judged. They were surrounded by tooth-piercers who slowly turned into the most horrible predators. Some of the children started to shriek. Suddenly it was like the skies were tearing open, and the ghost-lions of the children were appearing. They were spreading a red smoke, by which the tooth-piercers started to melt away. They took the children and Tara on their backs, and disappeared. They took them to the wilderness, to a place of hyenas. The hyenas would care over the children now. The place was called Hyena Tower, but it was not a real tower. It was a jungle. Here all sorts of exotic plants, trees and flowers grew. It brought forth a honey to let the Ontragolin Metal piercings melt, and restore the teeth. Tara hoped they were finally free from Dagva now.

The Jewels of Scavahl

She took him in the grip. He was the seventh king of Scatorix, guarding the jewels of the tigers of Scavahl, the main city of Scatorix. These jewels kept the secrets of how so many women were enslaved to this king. It was a land and domain of female slaves. He kicked Tara off of him. She screamed. 'When I get my hands on you a second time, you won't survive !' Tara shrieked. As by a storm Tara was swept away. There was a lot of sorcery on this man. Black sorcery with the riddles of time. A sailor stood there, near to his ship, while Tara ran away from the king. She felt like she was wounded by a strange power. The sailor was smiling. 'What are you laughing at ?' Tara yelled. Soon she had his head in a grip. 'Easy, lady, what is wrong with you ?' he said with a painful face.

'I have had enough of bastards like you !' Tara said loud. 'You are just laughing because of having so much power over women. I mean your empire here. I am sure you are coming here to trade your female slaves, or getting new ones.'

'I … I am sorry,' stuttered the man. 'If you could see in the depths of time, you would know what our secret is.'

'You will tell this secret now,' Tara said with a harsh voice, 'or I will break your neck soon enough,' while taking his neck and head into a tighter grip.

'Sail to Bershevah Island, and visit the time sorceror, Emulatas. He can tell you more,' the man said with a weak, fading and painful voice.

'You better be right,' said Tara with a voice full of rage, and pushed the man to the floor. His head was bleeding, and blood was also coming from his mouth. Tara didn't care. She went to his ship, and told the workers and the slaves to head with it for Bershevah Island. They obeyed her immediately.

She had to be with this time sorceror. Some of the workers knew where he lived on that island, and guided her to him. They took a few slaves with them. Tara was loudly knocking on his door. 'Who is there !' a dark voice almost growled. 'It doesn't matter who is here !' Tara shouted. 'Just open the door, or I will destroy your door. Simple. It's time that these games are over. It seems you are bearing the secrets of female slavery all over these lands. Is that true ?'

'That could be true, lady,' the man said while he opened the door.

'Simple, dreaming,' said the sorceror. 'Those tigers possess jewels which can bring people in a dream, a dream empowering males and weaking women, until males think they are the superior and stronger race. They can make even women believe that through these dreams. You know, the tigers of Scavahl in Scatorix, ruled by the seventh king. Darius is his name.'

'What about Antharax ?' Tara asked.

The mouth of the sorceror opened a bit. 'How did you know about Antharax ? He is the hidden religious leader ruling the king.'

'I knew it,' Tara said. She moved closer to the sorceror, and grasped him by the neck. 'Listen, you bastard. You will tell me exactly how to get those jewels, for whenever I approach the king, some strange power overwhelms me ! And don't play any games with me, or you will regret it dearly.'

'Antharax will soon be revealed to the whole of Scatorix,' said the sorceror. 'He will make them all shiver, because he will tighten the laws.'

'Tell me how to stop him, and how to take his jewels !' shouted Tara, while almost growling.

'By hate and greed,' the sorceror said. 'These are two stones, two spirits, the only two spirits in the whole universe being able to deal with Antharax and the jewels of the tigers of Scavahl.'

'Where do I find these stones !' shouted Tara.

'In hell,' said the sorceror.

'How do I get there !' Tara shouted.

'Come with me,' said the sorceror. He stood up, while Tara let him walk. He walked towards a cellar, to a deep stairway downwards. Tara followed him closely.

'Look for Ervadus, the muscle man,' said the sorceror. He opened a door at the bottom, and they came into a huge cave. He took a torch from the wall and gave it to Tara. 'Be well,' he said.

'Where does this Ervadus live ?' shouted Tara.

'I don't know,' said the sorceror. 'But you will find him soon enough. Everyone does.' Then the sorceror went up the stairway again. After a long time of walking through the cave some sort of monstrous man with a lot of swollen muscles came to Tara. It was almost painful to watch. 'I am looking for the stones of greed and of hate !' Tara shouted. 'Can you help me with that !'

'Oh, yes,' said the man. 'I am glad to see someone here. I live in pain all the time, as if my muscles are exploding. They are so swollen. Hardly anyone comes here.'

'What kind of stones are they !' Tara shouted.

'Oh, they are messy stones, I will show them to you. My name is Ervadus,' said the man.

He led her to another cave, a smaller one, in which there was some sort of cave-cellar where a lot of stones were stored in a sort of cupboard. It was very dusty. 'The stone of greed, oh only the wise will be able to bear this one. When fools touch this stone, it will destroy them. When they bear it, it will burden them forever, even when they lay it down. That is my fate. I took it once in greed, and now I am doomed forever. My muscles always grow to explode, and then they grow again, which is very painful.' He showed her a green, slimy stone, glowing in a strange light.

'I need it to defeat Antharax !' shouted Tara, while her eyes almost became red. A rage was coming over her. She grasped the stone, while she screamed. It pushed her away. 'There is hope for you,' said Ervadus. 'The stone has not burdened you. You need the stone of hate now to become it's rightful owner.'

He showed her a black stone, also very slimy, with some white ghostly light surrounding it. 'Stone of Hate, in the middle of hearts you were, to eat them away, for they had sinned against you. Only the wise will find you, but the fools will be hunted down by you, while they will be stalked by you forever, not knowing where you are.'

Tara grasped the stone. It was light in her hands. Then she took the stone of greed. Two ghosts stood before her. They had swords. 'Now, come with me, child,' said Ervadus, 'I will lead you to the eternal circle. From here the two stones will be sent to do their job. You own them now, so you can tell them what to do. Command them, and they will obey.' Ervadus took her to a small wilderness behind the cave, where a dusty circle was drawn in an open space. She brought the stones there, while the two spirits were soaring over them.

'Speak your wishes, child,' said Ervadus.

'I want you to destroy Antharax, and the seventh king of Scatorix, to take the jewels of the tigers of Scavahl and bring them here. I want you to set the female slaves of that land free, and to make sure that their oppressors will die !' shouted Tara.

'They cannot kill, child,' said Ervadus. 'They can only torment. And when they torment, they do this forever.'

'Can they set you free from your torments ?' asked Tara.

'No, child. This is my fate. Their torment never stops. It is too late. I should never have touched the stone of greed, but I became it's guard,' said Ervadus.

'Now do your work, stones !' shouted Ervadus. 'The child is waiting for you.'

Suddenly the stones started vibrating. They were striking Ervadus a few times, and then left, while shrieking. The two ghosts followed the stones, also shrieking. There was a lot of smoke they left behind. Ervadus was wounded terribly by the stones, but that was the price he had to pay. Tara took care of his wounds.

'No one has ever come this close to me, since I touched the stone,' said Ervadus.

'I want to thank you,' said Tara. Now she had to come over the fact that this man would be tormented forever.

'I am a demon, child,' said the man. 'I deserve this punishment, because my heart is black. Only rotten demons like me can do the things like I did. I lived a very bad life, and now I am a slave by it forever.'

Tara sighed. This man was so disturbed. Soon the shrieking ghosts came back with the jewels, with Antharax, the seventh king, and the oppressors of women. They had also taken with them the women who had enabled these men. There were cages coming out of the ground around the eternal circle. These were the cages of torment. There was a lot of fire in these cages. All the prisoners of the stones were put into these cages. Ervadus pushed on a button, and the cages started to move around the eternal circle, while they went faster and faster. Screaming came forth from the circle. The whole circle was in flames. The ghosts moved slowly to Tara. They gave her the jewels of the tigers of Scavahl.

Tara went back to Scavahl, where the tigers submitted to her because she had their jewels. The female slaves had been set free, but many submitted to Tara because of gratefulness. She became the queen of Scatorix.

Door of Darkness

Through the ice masses she walked straight up to the bear king, while she held the spear of time. He laughed at her when he saw her. 'I am the great creator of all oceans,' said the king. 'I am the pillar and foundation of all oceans. Who are you and what do you want from me ?'

But Tara had no time to talk to him. She aimed her spear right at his heart, and threw it. She didn't miss. Soon the king lay on the ground bleeding with the spear of time through his heart. The great bear king with his illusions had fallen. Slowly she walked towards his body. Quickly with a firm pull she took the spear out of his heart, ripping him open even more, for the spear had some hooks.

Bats flew all around her. Bears came to her from all sides, as she had defeated their master. They licked her, and submitted to her. He had been cruel to them for such a long time. This was how she became the bear queen. She took the metal knight mask from the king, with on top of it's helmet a black feather. She also took his robe. He was the black disease, a virus in the hearts of many men.

Their lungs were his throne, and their heartbeats was he pounding the drum. He controlled them. He made them eat whatever he liked. It was a greedy man, a heart disease. His pumps made women weaker, and men stronger. But now he had fallen. Soon rats ate from his flesh.

On the seas his ships were sinking. A great storm was taking over the oceans, making them wilder than ever, while his face appeared in the red sky. He was a ghost now, a trauma. He tried to awaken his men again, his machines, by speaking his spells. His powers were from a book. It was the book of cholera.

The book of cholera was a woman. She could paralyze people. Because of fear they submitted to her. She used to come in the nights. The ghost of the bear king found a shelter in her. But she was screaming at him. She was mad, because he had fallen, and he came as a ghost. She started mocking him, and it turned into a bitter fight in which she tore his ghost being apart.

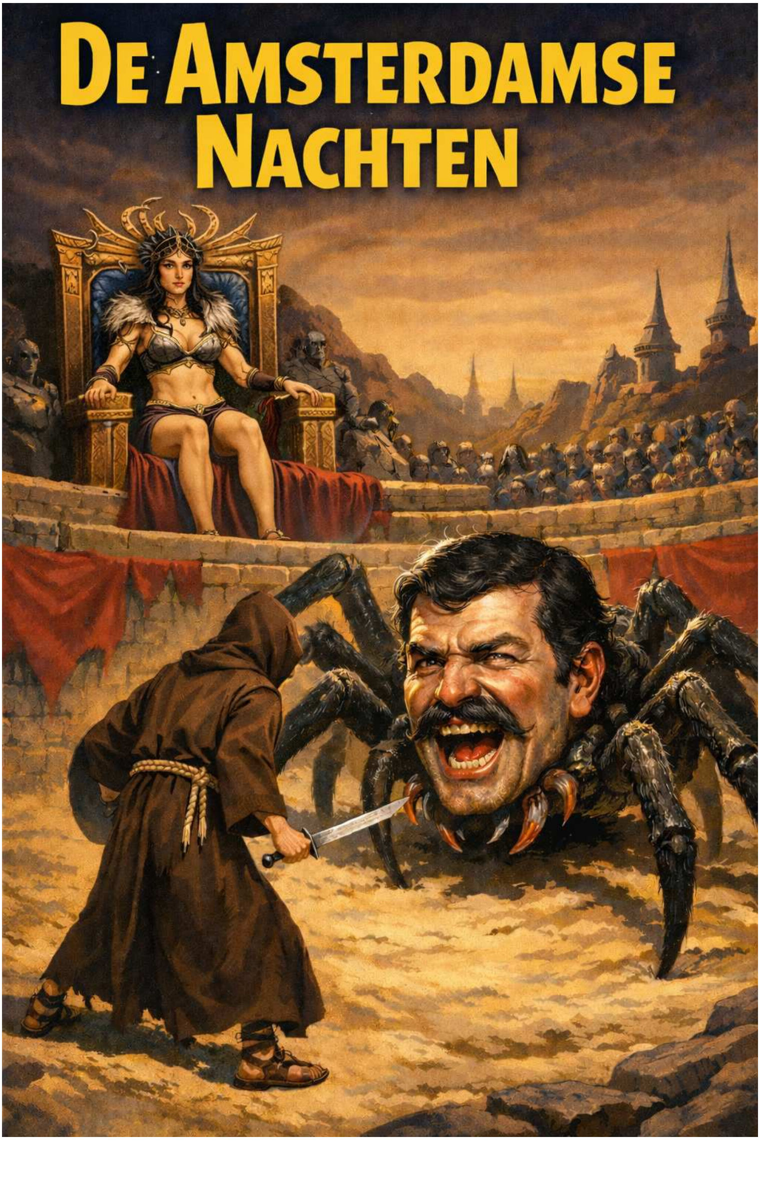
Tara took the book, and started to tear it. She found it in the depths of a dark chamber of the bear king. It made her invisible. That was the price to pay when tearing such a book. But Tara survived. She held the torn book up in her hand, and called for the winds of fire, which took it. Her hand was burning, but soon it went back to normal, and she also got her body back. She became more dense than ever. She was very physical and present. Bears were licking her.

Then the storms took her up and brought her above the oceans. She was the queen of the oceans now. Her body was enchanting them. They took her up on the throne of the bear king. It was surrounded by spider webs. It was a long stairway to reach the throne, like an open door of light to enter into another world. Slowly she disappeared through it, coming into a world of darkness and fog, in which she slowly faded. No one ever saw her back.



DE AMSTERDAMSE
NACHTEN

De Amsterdamse Nachten

Uitgave : Monniken Wegwijzer 1970-2026

2026

Taal : Rodenbergs-Nederlands

Voor de omslag-afbeelding is gebruik gemaakt van het Woordweefgetouw

De Amsterdamse Nachten

Hoofdstuk 1. De metro-bewoners
Hoofdstuk 2. Op zoek naar een eiland
Hoofdstuk 3. Het gekke geld
Hoofdstuk 4. De robot
Hoofdstuk 5. De natuurbacterie
Hoofdstuk 6. De roze kaart
Hoofdstuk 7. De camping supermarkt
Hoofdstuk 8. De leugensteen
Hoofdstuk 9. De arena
Hoofdstuk 10. Verscheurd tussen Stugort en Geërgo
Hoofdstuk 11. De opstanden

Hoofdstuk 1. De metro-bewoners

De verpleegster zat daar op een stoeltje, netjes in haar pakje.
Het was niet zo’n beste.
Telkens weer gingen er op een geheimzinnige wijze kinderen dood die onder haar behandeling waren.
Maar die kinderen waren nu eenmaal terminaal, ernstig ziek of gewoon ziek, koortsig.
Kan gebeuren, werd er dan gezegd.
Maar het bleef gebeuren en nogal vaak.
Ja, natuurlijk, werd er dan gezegd. Het is haar vak.
Maar hij wist wel beter.
Ze had zalen onder haar huis waar vermiste kinderen lagen.
Die werden aan de drugs gezet door haar.
Ze konden niet meer bewegen, niet meer praten.
Waren helemaal aan haar overgeleverd.
En hij durfde niets te zeggen.
Hij kon ook niets zeggen.
Sinds hij met haar was raakte hij in een soort coma toestand.
Hij dacht dat ze hem ook had vergiftigd, net zoals die kinderen.

Hij had een paar keer heel voorzichtig iets tegen anderen erover gezegd, maar hij werd uitgelachen. Hij werd afgewimpeld en niet geloofd.

Sindstoen durfde hij het niet meer. Ze geloofden hem toch niet.
En zo moest hij leven met een groot geheim.

Hun bed stond gewoon in de woonkamer aan het raam.
Bij de lichtgele gordijnen, en de deken was ook lichtgeel.
Er stonden mensen voor het raam.
Maar ja, het was de stoep. Het kon iedereen zijn.
Zij lag al in bed. Hij schoof de vitrage dicht, en toen het gordijn.
Hij wilde niet naar bed. Hij dacht aan de kinderen.
Hij wilde de kinderen helpen, maar hij werd niet geloofd.
Wat moest hij doen ?
Hij was in een coma toestand.

Hij wilde niet meer met haar in één bed liggen.
Hij wilde weg, maar waar moest hij naartoe ?
Niemand geloofde hem. Hij was geheel aan haar zorg overgeleverd.
Maar zij vergiftigde hem ?

Hij dacht aan het uitstapje met de familie in een boot, en ze legden aan bij Amsterdam.
Op de camping daar leerde hij haar kennen.
Zo ging hij bij haar inwonen, en kwam hij achter haar afschuwelijke geheimen.

Er was iets mis met deze vrouw, maar iedereen geloofde haar.

Hij zat vast, muurvast.
Net zoals de vermiste kinderen die zij als kasplantjes hield in zalen onder het huis.
Maar ze lachtte hem uit, had het altijd ontkend.
Hij hallucineerde volgens haar.
Hij is er toen mee gestopt om haar erop te wijzen, want ze begon te dreigen.
Hij wist bijna zeker dat ze bezig was hem te vergiftigen.

Wat kon hij doen ?
Hij was te zwak om te vluchten.
Vaak wilde hij niet meer leven.
Hij was depressief, zwaar depressief.
Vaak ging hij naar de kinderen, maar ze lagen daar in een coma aan apparaten.
Het leek alsof er filmpjes in hun hoofden werden afgespeeld.
Hij wilde ze zorg bieden, maar wat kon hij doen ?
De kinderen werden gevoed door de apparaten, en ze kregen zuurstof.
Zo werden ze in leven gehouden.
Zij had het ontkend.
Hij hallucineerde dit allemaal.

Ze zei dat hij ziek was, en dat hij daarom onder haar hoede was, maar hij wilde niet meer bij haar slapen. Hij wilde hier niet meer zijn.
Hij had er spijt van dat hij was meegegaan met het uitstapje naar Amsterdam.

Hij was woedend op haar, maar hij twijfelde ook aan zichzelf.
‘s Nachts dwaalde hij door de zalen onder het huis, en ging steeds dieper.
Hoeveel trappen waren hier ?
Het ging dieper en dieper tot de ondergrondse wereld.
Hier woonden wilde indianen stammen.
Hij sprak hier niet over, want ze zouden hem niet geloven.
Hij kon ook bijna niet meer spreken.

Hij vond het erg, hetgeen er gebeurde.
Hij had hier geen oplossing voor, geen medicijn tegen.
En hij twijfelde teveel aan zichzelf om iets te doen.
Maar ja, hij was in een coma toestand.

Onder de grond wilde hij leven, bij de indianen zijn.
Misschien konden die hem helpen.
Het leven zoals het nu was was niks.
Misschien konden de indianen de kinderen ook helpen.
Hij kon het in ieder geval niet.

Hij trok de stoute schoenen aan en ging naar de indianen om contact met hem te maken, diep in de ondergrondse wereld. Hier waren veel wildernissen. Dat kon toch niet onder Amsterdam zijn ?
Hielden ze dit voor de mensheid verborgen, of was dit zijn hallucinatie leven ?

Had hij teveel drugs gebruikt, of mengde zij die drugs door zijn eten ?
Hij wist het niet. Was er iets mis met hem of met de wereld ?
Hij had een hart voor de kinderen, en dat zag hij als bewijs dat hij leefde.
Hij vond de mensen om hem heen harteloos.

Hij probeerde de indianen duidelijk te maken over de kinderen, maar ze begrepen hem niet.
Ook geloofden ze hem niet. Ze leken totaal onverschillig.
Dit wilde hij ook niet. Ze zagen er woest uit, en dreigend.
Toen is hij weer teruggegaan naar boven.
Hij dacht er toen aan wat er nog dieper onder de grond zou zijn.
De indianen hadden hem gezegd dat hoe dieper je onder de grond zou gaan, over de trappen, hoe meer vrouwenstammen er zouden zijn, amazones, en die waren erger dan hen.
Daar moest hij ook niet aan denken, maar wat als ze over hen zouden hebben gelogen ?

Hij wilde het met zijn eigen ogen zien en meemaken, en daarom ging hij de volgende nacht weer over de trappen naar beneden, en ditmaal dieper dan de indianen wereld, en toen kwam hij inderdaad bij de amazone wereld. Er waren hier allemaal vrouwenstammen.

De vrouwen deden direct heel aardig naar hem, en hij vertelde ze over de kinderen.
Ze begonnen hem toen uit te lachen.
Hij begreep niet waarom ze dat zo gek vonden.
Het kon toch ?
‘Je hebt het vast gedroomd,’ zeiden ze tegen hem.
Ze konden niet geloven dat dat soort dingen in of onder Amsterdam konden gebeuren.
Amsterdammers waren zulke fijne mensen.

Er is veel misdaad in Amsterdam, zei hij.
Veel meer dan wat aan de mensen verteld wordt.
Er is veel censuur, anders zou niemand meer komen.

Maar de amazones lachten hem uit.
Amsterdam was een fijne stad met fijne mensen.
Zo werd dat in hun boekjes verteld.
Amsterdam was geromantiseerd.
Zij geloofden dat, zo waren ze opgevoed.

‘Kunnen jullie me dan genezen ?’ vroeg hij.
Hij vertelde dat hij in een halve coma was.

Ze keken hem vreemd aan.
‘Weet je zeker dat je uit Amsterdam komt ?’ vroegen ze. ‘Er zijn alleen maar gezonde mensen in Amsterdam. Amsterdam kent geen ziekenhuizen.’

Hij vertelde over het uitstapje. Hij vertelde over de camping, en over het meisje wat hij daar tegenkwam.

‘Dat kan Amsterdam dan niet geweest zijn,’ zeiden ze. ‘In Amsterdam is alles goed, en daar kan het niet slechter met je gaan.’

‘Ja, maar ik ben toch hier nu, en ik kom van boven, en hierboven ligt Amsterdam,’ zei hij.

‘Leugenaar,’ zeiden ze toen. ‘Je komt niet van Amsterdam, je komt niet van boven. Je moet wel langs de zijkant zijn gekomen.’

‘Je mag het wel aan de indianen vragen die hierboven leven,’ zei hij toen. ‘Ik kom daar vandaan.’

‘Dat zijn ook liegbeesten,’ zeiden ze toen. ‘En als je daar echt bent geweest, dan zul je ook wel van de zijkant zijn gekomen. Je spreekt op een wijze die laat zien dat jij nog nooit in Amsterdam bent geweest. Amsterdam is goed. Er worden geen mensen ziek in Amsterdam, en er zijn alleen maar fijne mensen in Amsterdam, niet zo vreemd als jij. Je bent van de zijkant gekomen.’

‘Nou breekt mijn klomp,’ zei hij. ‘Ik wordt nooit geloofd.’

‘Nee, omdat je belachelijke dingen zegt,’ zeiden de amazones.

Toen begonnen ze hem uit te lachen en te bespotten.

‘Waar kom ik dan vandaan ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Van de zijkant,’ zeiden ze.

‘Wat is dat ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Holbewoners,’ zeiden ze, ‘aardmensen. Je kunt ze bijna geen mensen noemen.’

Hij zag dat de amazones keurig gekleed waren, en met parasolletjes liepen, bijna dichterlijke kleding hadden ze. ‘Jullie zien er niet uit als amazones,’ zei hij. ‘Ik kan ook wel over jullie beginnen. Waarom leven jullie hier dan, en niet in Amsterdam ?’

‘Wij zijn hier geboren en getogen,’ zeiden de amazones.

Hij vroeg zich af wat er nog dieper in de aarde was. ‘Wat is er nog dieper dan dit ?’ vroeg hij. ‘Niks,’ zeiden ze. ‘Nou ja, als je het echt wil weten. Daar zijn de verwilderde vrouwenstammen, die als holbewoners leven. Wij noemen ze geen vrouwen meer, maar manninnen. Ze zijn ruig en woest, en kennen geen manieren. Zij zijn veel erger dan wij zijn. Pas maar op, val maar niet in hun handen.’

Ik wil er toch naartoe, zei hij.

Waarom ? vroegen ze. Wil je je leven verliezen ?

Ik heb alles al verloren, zei hij toen. Ik heb niks meer te verliezen, alleen te winnen.

‘Maar lieve jongen, daar win je niet,’ zeiden ze toen.

‘Waarom ben ik ineens een lieve jongen ?’ vroeg hij. ‘Eerst was ik vreemd en een leugenaar, en nu ineens lief.’

Dat kan goed samengaan, vreemde, liegende, lieve jongen, zeiden de amazones.

Hij is toen een nacht bij ze gebleven, en een dag, en ging de volgende nacht weer op pad, dieper de aarde in. Toen kwam hij bij de wilde amazones, wat volgens hem echte amazones waren. Hij werd direct op zijn kaak geslagen en vastgebonden. De nette vrouwenstammen van boven hadden er dus niet over gelogen. Deze wilde amazones waren echt woest, en gevaarlijk. Even had hij spijt dat hij gegaan was.

‘Hebben jullie ook zulke vreemde verhalen over Amsterdam ?’ vroeg hij hen. Zijn kaak deed hem pijn. Hij sprak moeilijk, maar hij had altijd al het gevoel dat hij moeilijk sprak.

‘Wat zeg je ?’ vroegen de wilde amazones.

‘Nou, zijn er geen ziekenhuizen in Amsterdam, en is iedereen daar fijn en goed ? Is iedereen gezond in Amsterdam ?’ vroeg hij.

Ze begonnen hem uit te lachen. ‘Nee,’ zeiden ze. ‘Amsterdam is slecht, zeer slecht, in vele opzichten. Waarom wil je naar Amsterdam ?’

‘Daar kom ik vandaan,’ zei hij.

‘Oh, maar dat is geen goede zaak, geen goede zaak, zeer slecht nieuws,’ zeiden de wilde amazones.

‘Waarom hebben jullie mij neergeslagen en vastgebonden ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Doen we altijd met vreemdelingen,’ zeiden de wilde amazones. ‘Voorzorg.’

‘Ondankbaarheid,’ zei hij. ‘Wees blij dat iemand jullie bezoekt.’

‘Praatjes heb je,’ zeiden de wilde amazones. ‘Wij hebben niemand nodig, en jou al helemaal niet, dus maak jezelf maar niks wijs, praatjesmaker. Wij kunnen wel zien dat jij uit Amsterdam komt, en dat maakt je extra verdacht. Waarom denk je dat wij hier wonen en niet in Amsterdam ?’

‘Mooi natuurgebied, zo onder de grond,’ zei hij. ‘Had ik niet verwacht.’

‘Nee, dat leren ze je niet in Amsterdam. Wordt allemaal heimelijk verborgen gehouden,’ zeiden de wilde amazones.

‘Ik wil weer terug,’ zei hij.

‘Je zou ons kunnen verraden nu je ons gebied kent, dus vergeet het maar,’ zeiden de wilde amazones.

‘Wat ligt onder jullie ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Holbewoners,’ zeiden de wilde amazones.

‘Laat me daar dan maar naartoe gaan,’ zei hij.

Ze hielden hem even tot de volgende nacht, en lieten hem toen gaan. Hij ging toen nog dieper over de stenen trap en kwam bij de holbewoners terecht. Ze leken op Amsterdammers, maar zwaar verwilderd. Ze vertelden hem dat ze hier naartoe waren gevlucht. In Amsterdam konden ze niet meer leven. Daar hadden ze teveel meegemaakt. Hij vroeg of zij hem konden helpen.

Ze wilden hem niet hebben. Hij herinnerde hen teveel aan Amsterdam. Toen is hij maar teruggegaan, en bleef op de trap om de wilde amazones te ontwijken, want die zouden hem nooit terug laten gaan. Hij dacht eraan wat hij zou kunnen doen. Hij zou ook naar de zijkanten kunnen gaan. Daar zouden ook holbewoners zijn.

Hij vroeg zich af of er een kruid was, of levenswater, wat hem zou kunnen genezen. Hij dacht aan de kinderen in de zalen net onder het huis.

Hij dacht aan de verpleegster. Haar grote verhalen hadden hem verslonden. Zijn eigen verhalen waren niet sterk genoeg.

In Amsterdam was het bluf tegen bluf. De grootste bluffers hadden het hoogste woord en de grootste macht, en regelden alles. Daar kon hij niet tegenop. Nee. Hij was niet zo’n verhalenverteller.

Het leek wel alsof hij heel in de verte de ambulance hoorde. ‘Daar gaat weer zo’n verhalenverteller,’ dacht hij. Het leek ook wel een beetje op wolvengehuil, dat kon het ook zijn.

Hij moest zijn eigen verhalen maken hier, ook al was het maar een tentje om te overleven voor nu. Hij wilde meer weten van de ondergrondse wereld, en van de zijkanten.

Ergens aan de zijkant van de stenen trap ging hij de bosjes in en bleef doorlopen totdat hij bij een metro station aankwam. Er waren hier mensen van drie tot vier meter lang, en ze hadden blauwe gezichten. Hij vroeg wie ze waren. Ze zeiden dat ze uit Iran kwamen. Hij vroeg waarom ze helemaal hier waren gekomen. ‘Regiem,’ zeiden ze. Ze hadden problemen met spreken. Ze konden maar halve zinnen uitbrengen en halve verhalen, soms alleen halve woorden. Zo voelde hij zich soms ook. Ze leefden in de metro’s. Het waren hun woningen.

Hij wilde wel bij de metro-bewoners horen, want het waren in principe lotgenoten, en zo werd hij door hen geadopteerd. Voor het eerst in zijn leven voelde hij dat hij zijn bestemming had gevonden. Ze reden heen en weer met hun metro’s, waardoor ze overal onder de grond konden komen. Het was een heel groot netwerk.

Hij kwam tot een vreselijke ontdekking. Hij was zelf ook degene die aan haar apparaten lag. Hij kon zichzelf zien liggen. Even had hij een flits van ontwaking, maar hij kon niets doen. Het was alsof de grote blauwgezichten hem probeerden te bereiken.

Hoofdstuk 2. Op zoek naar een eiland

Ze nam hem mee naar boven. Hij kon maar moeilijk lopen. Zij had hem van de apparaten afgehaald. Boven in de kamer kreeg hij een kopje koffie met gebak. ‘Hoe is het nu ?’ vroeg ze. Hij vond haar vriendelijker overkomen dan anders.

‘Goed,’ zei hij, nog steeds denkende aan de blauwgezichten. Ze keek hem liefdevol aan. ‘Nog gedroomd ? Goede dromen, nare dromen, enge dromen, nachtmerries ?’ vroeg ze.

Hij schudde zijn hoofd. ‘Oh, echt niet ?’ vroeg ze. ‘Meestal droom je toch wel ?’

Even wist hij niet waar hij was. Ze leek heel anders dan ze normaal was. Het kon natuurlijk een valstrik zijn, maar het leek alsof hij ergens anders was, alhoewel het wel dezelfde kamer was. Hij was in haar huis, dat moest wel, maar iets leek anders. Het leek zonniger, tropischer, en hij hoorde de vogels buiten zingen.

Misschien hadden de blauwgezichten hem hier gebracht, alles anders gemaakt. Maar hij vertrouwde het nog niet. Hij keek naar haar.

Ik moet je wat vertellen, zei ze. De medicijnen die ik je laatst had gegeven zijn nieuwe medicijnen, en ze lijken goed te werken. Het lijkt beter met je te gaan.

‘Maar ik lag aan apparaten ?’ vroeg hij.
‘Hoe kom je daar nu weer bij ?’ vroeg ze lachend.
‘Je moet gewoon herstellen van het ongeluk.’

‘Welk ongeluk ?’ vroeg hij.
‘Laat maar zitten,’ zei ze.

‘Nee, zeg,’ zei hij.
‘Je geheugen is dan nog niet terug, maar misschien is het beter zo,’ zei ze.

‘Nee, ik wil het weten,’ zei hij. ‘Alsjeblieft, zeg het me.’

‘Je was gevallen,’ zei ze.

‘Van hoog ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Niet zo heel hoog, maar hard,’ zei ze.

‘Geheugenverlies ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Niet alleen dat, ook geheugenverdraaiing,’ zei ze.

‘Niet zo best,’ zei hij, ‘niet zo best. Is het dan gevaarlijk om te denken en te herinneren ?’

‘Dat kan,’ zei ze, ‘maar daarvoor heb je de medicijnen, en je bent herstellende.’

‘Okay,’ zei hij. ‘En als ik mag vragen : wie bent u ?’

‘Verzorgster,’ zei ze.

‘Wij hebben verder niks met elkaar ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Nee,’ lachte ze. ‘Ik ben geen familie of vriendin.’

‘Maar ik woon hier ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Dit is je huis, ja,’ zei de verzorgster.

‘Woon jij hier ook ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Nee, maar ik ben hier veel,’ zei ze.

‘Woon ik hier alleen ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Ja,’ zei ze.

‘Heeft u toevallig een blauw gezicht onder de schmink ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Nee,’lachte ze, ‘hoe kom je daar nu weer bij, mallerd. Het is gewoon mijn eigen gezicht, geen schmink.’

‘Okay,’ zei hij. Hij keek omhoog naar het plafond, en toen naar het behang. ‘Dus ik ben Amsterdammer ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Ja,’ zei ze, ‘geboren en getogen.’

‘Volgens mij heb ik dan een heleboel door elkaar gehaald,’ zei hij.

‘Kan kloppen,’ zei ze. ‘De val was verschrikkelijk, en heeft alles in je brein lopen mollen, maar zoals ik al zei ben je aan het beteren.’

‘Zijn er onder de grond metro-bewoners met blauwe gezichten ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Niet dat ik weet,’ lachte ze.

Die nacht lag hij in zijn eigen bed, boven op zijn slaapkamer. Hij dacht na over de blauwgezichten, de metro-bewoners. Hij stond op en liep naar de kelder. Toen hij de kelderdeur opentrok was er een stenen trap naar beneden, maar die ging niet ver. Hij ging even naar beneden, maar het was maar een klein keldertje. ‘Ik heb het misschien allemaal maar gedroomd,’ zei hij. Ook dacht hij over de zaaltjes met kinderen. toen liep hij weer naar boven naar zijn bed. Hij staarde voor zich uit. Hij kon niet goed in slaap komen. Hij keek naar zijn dekens en hij herinnerde zich hen.

Na een tijdje kon hij nog steeds niet slapen, en is toen weer naar beneden gegaan. Ditmaal keek hij in de meterkast. Daar was ook een trap naar beneden. ‘Misschien was dit het wel,’ zei hij tegen zichzelf. Hij ging naar beneden, en zag daar een luik. Hij opende het luik, en daar ging de stenen trap verder. Hij ging verder naar beneden en kwam daar langs een zaal met kinderen aan apparaten in bedden. ‘Maar dit is mijn huis ?’ dacht hij. ‘Hoe kan dit ?’ De kinderen bewogen niet en hadden hun ogen dicht en lagen aan allerlei slangen. ‘Ze dromen,’ zei iemand. Hij keek achterom en zag een ouder kind staan. ‘Wie ben jij ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Ze dromen. Ik ben ouder, ik ben losgekomen,’ zei het oudere kind.

‘Ja, maar wie zijn deze kinderen, en hoe komen ze hier, wie heeft dit gedaan, want dit is mijn huis,’ zei hij.

‘Nee,’ zei het oudere kind. ‘Het is het huis van de verpleegster. Zij had ons hier gebracht.’

‘Waarom ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Ze heeft ons van onze ouders weggeroofd, die heks,’ zei het kind.

‘Waarom ?’ vroeg hij weer.

‘Ik weet het niet, ze is gek,’ zei het oudere kind.

‘Hoe ben je losgekomen, en hoe leef je nu ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Door de metro-bewoners, de blauwgezichten, die hebben mij bevrijd,’ zei het oudere kind. ‘Ik ben nu één van hen, maar kom hier vaak terug. Deze kinderen zijn nog te jong en te ver heen om bevrijd te worden, alsof ze nog in het ei liggen. We wachten op het moment totdat ze sterk genoeg zijn en dan gaan ze met ons mee.’

‘Ja, maar boven is mijn huis nu, niet meer van de verpleegster,’ zei hij.

‘Dat is goed nieuws,’ zei het oudere kind. ‘Jij bent de nieuwe bewoner ? Is de heks verslagen ?’

‘Er komt nog een verzorgster zo nu en dan,’ zei hij. ‘Ik was gevallen en had verzorging nodig zei ze.’

‘Oh,’ zei het oudere kind. ‘Wat als ze je voorliegt ?’

‘Ik hoor nu ook bij de blauwgezichten,’ zei hij. ‘Misschien dat de blauwgezichten dingen hebben veranderd.’

‘Dat kan,’ zei het oudere kind.

‘Komt de heks nog hier ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Normaal gesproken wel,’ zei het oudere kind, ‘tenzij ze echt verslagen is.’

‘Wanneer heb je haar voor het laatst gezien ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Gisteren,’ zei het oudere kind. ‘Ik ben toen weggegaan.’

‘Ben je niet bang dat ze je terug zal pakken ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Nee,’ zei het oudere kind. ‘Ik ben sterk en sta onder de bescherming van de blauwgezichten.’

‘Maar heksen kunnen sluw zijn, en gevaarlijk, ze zijn onbetrouwbaar en onvoorspelbaar,’ zei hij.

‘Dat is waar,’ zei het oudere kind, ‘maar ik blijf op een afstand als zij er is.’

‘Pas maar op dan,’ zei hij.

‘Ja, maar ik kan deze kinderen niet aan hun lot overlaten,’ zei het oudere kind. ‘En trouwens : is de heks nu verslagen dan ?’

‘Ik weet het niet, misschien,’ zei hij.

‘Dat moeten we zien uit te zoeken,’ zei het oudere kind.

‘Kunnen we de kinderen niet alvast verplaatsen ?’ vroeg hij. ‘Kunnen ze niet naar de metro’s gebracht worden ?’

‘Nee joh,’ zei het oudere kind. ‘Ze kunnen nog niet dieper onder de grond leven. Daar zijn ze nog te zwak voor. Trouwens, er zouden mogelijk alarms af kunnen gaan als die apparaten zouden worden verschoven. Die apparaten zijn goed beveiligd. Dan zouden de kinderen misschien kunnen sterven, of wijzelf.’

‘Maar hebben de blauwgezichten dan geen middelen ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Nee,’ zei het oudere kind. ‘We moeten wachten totdat ze ouder en sterker zijn.’

‘Ja, maar misschien houden die apparaten hen hier wel zwak,’ zei hij.

‘Ik ben toch ook ontkomen ?’ zei het oudere kind. ‘Laten we dus afwachten.’

Er kwamen toen wat blauwgezichten binnen. Hij en het oudere kind waren blij dat er wat blauwgezichten waren gekomen. Ze gingen de kinderen checken. ‘Deze is bijna klaar,’ zeiden ze van één kind.

Hij begon moe te worden, en is toen weer naar boven gegaan, naar zijn slaapkamer, en viel daar toen snel in slaap.

De volgende ochtend was de verzorgster al vroeg bij hem. Ze leek toch niet op zijn eerdere verpleegster, en was ook totaal anders.

‘Hoe gaat het met je ?’ vroeg ze.

‘Goed,’ zei hij.

Ze kon dat merken. ‘Beneden zijn kinderen,’ zei hij.

‘Wat bedoel je ?’vroeg ze.

‘De trap in de meterkast leiden naar kinderzalen,’ zei hij.

‘Lijkt me sterk,’ zei ze. ‘Laat het eens zien.’

Hij stond op en liep de gang op naar de meterkast. Zij liep met hem mee. Toen hij de deur opende hing er alleen een meterkast. ‘Misschien de kelder,’ zei hij. Er was een stenen trap die naar beneden liep in de kelder, maar het was maar een kleine ruimte.

‘Je moet het je verbeeld hebben,’ zei de verzorgster. ‘Je bent nog steeds herstellende. Je brein verdraait dingen. Geheugenverlies en geheugenverdraaiing. Daar heb je nu medicijnen voor.’

Ze gaf hem even later de medicijnen met een mok water. Hij slikte ze in. ‘Hopende dat het steeds beter met je gaat,’ zei de verzorgster.

‘Ja, maar waar zijn de blauwgezichten dan, de metro-bewoners ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Ik heb geen idee,’ zei ze. ‘Ik weet helemaal niet waar je het over hebt.’

‘Vreemd,’ dacht hij. ‘Dus ik hallucineer, of het is ‘s nachts gewoon anders, of ik droom het telkens.’

Ze gingen toen even wandelen buiten. Het was mooi weer. Ze gingen langs de winkels.

Hij wilde verhuizen. De verzorgster zou hem helpen met het vinden van een nieuw huis.
Hij wilde zo het verleden achter zich laten.
Ook al was Amsterdam zeker niet de gemakkelijkste stad, hij was toch blij dat hij er woonde. Hij had gemengde gevoelens over Amsterdam, maar wilde er toch voor gaan.
Hij wilde graag in Amsterdam blijven. Hij wilde dichtbij een metro-station of trein-station wonen. Hij voelde zich nog steeds een metro-bewoner.

Soms kwam de verzorgster met nieuwe papieren over mogelijke nieuwe huizen. Die keken ze dan door. Hij was ook blij dat hij alleenstaande was. Hij moest er niet aan denken samen met iemand oud te worden. Hij wilde jong blijven en alleen.
Soms schaakte hij met de verzorgster, of deden ze andere spelletjes.
De wandelingen werden steeds langer.
Ook gingen ze naar andere stadsdelen. Daar keken ze ook naar huizen.
Hij vond het fijn in andere stadsdelen te winkelen. Hij nam vaak van alles mee.
Hij begon zijn huis anders in te richten, om zich voor te bereiden op een mogelijke verhuizing.
Hij merkte ook dat door het huis anders in te richten dat het al een soort verhuizing was.

Op een dag keek hij naar de verzorgster en leek het alsof ze een blauw gezicht had.
Dat was maar in een flits.
Hij had nog steeds het gevoel alsof de blauwgezichten bij hem waren.
Zij probeerden hem op het juiste spoor te brengen.

In alles zag hij de blauwgezichten.
Ook in de natuur.
Hij hield ervan om met de verzorgster in het park te lopen als het mooi weer was.
Daarachter was een opvangcentrum en een nieuwe bijbelschool, van de nieuwe bijbel die was gekomen.
Hij raakte er ook in geïnteresseerd. Hij vond het mooie boeken.
Het verruimde zijn belevingswereld en hij vond het heel wat waard.
Hij ging niet meer bekrompen met zijn verleden om.
Het paradijs moest plaatsvinden in de herschepping van zijn geheugen.
Het geheugen was daarom een schat in aarden vaten.
Hier liepen dromen en werkelijkheid door elkaar heen.
Het mocht hem inspireren, het mocht hem waarschuwen.
Het waren de gezonde grenzen die zijn leven leefbaar maakten.

Diep ging hij in de natuur met de verzorgster.

Hij hield van de meren en de rivieren, en hij hield van de zee.
Alles wat water-gebied was. Hij maakte ook boottochten met haar.
Hij was op zoek naar een eiland in zijn hoofd.
Hij maakte ook lange strandwandelingen met haar.
Ze reisten veel met de trein, en dan huurden ze soms een bootje ergens.
Ook hield hij ervan met haar te kamperen.
Soms woonden ze een tijdje in een vakantie huisje ergens.

Eigenlijk voelde hij zich al verhuisd.
Hij had zijn woning nu heel anders ingericht.
Hij kreeg het er zo naar zijn zin dat hij eigenlijk niet weg wilde.
Hij had ook een prachtige tuin waarin van alles groeide.
Elke ochtend werd hij wakker van de vogels.

Steeds dieper ging hij Amsterdam in met de verzorgster.
Steeds beter kreeg hij een beeld van Amsterdam.
Het was een stad waarvan hij hield, een echte natuurstad.
Hij was er trots op dat hij een Amsterdammer was, en hij wilde steeds dieper.
Hij wilde haar nog beter leren kennen en komen tot haar geheimen.
Amsterdam was zijn lot, zijn bestaan. Het was voorbeschikt.

Hier moest hij wezen. Hier lag zijn pad. Hij hoefde er niet voor weg.
Hij kon steeds dieper.

Amsterdam was als een lied in zijn hoofd.
Het leidde hem dag aan dag, liet hem de natuur zien.
Amsterdam verborg veel natuur.
Nog steeds geloofde hij in de ondergrondse wereld.
Nog steeds wilde hij daar naar terug.
Maar eigenlijk had hij het idee dat hij daar al was.
Dat hadden de blauwgezichten gedaan.

Hij leefde hier al in de aarde, als een moddermens, als een holbewoner, als een metro-bewoner, als één der blauwgezichten.
De blauwgezichtjes waren mooie vogels die telkens weer zijn tuin bezochten.
Elke ochtend maakten ze hem wakker.
Hij genoot van hun liederen, en van hun speelse gedrag.
Als hij ze opmerkte waren ze ook snel weer weg, en dan begon de dag voor hem.
Ze waren als dromen in zijn hoofd, zeer sprookjesachtig.
Maar hij wilde er niet teveel van. Hij stond open voor het volle leven, ook de andere vormen ervan.

Hij was een dromer, en een teller. Hij was een verzamelaar, maar hierin ook gul.

Hij gaf. Hij hield niet vast. Hij was altijd op doortocht in zijn hoofd.
Hij was een metro-bewoner.
Hij wilde de holen kennen, en dieper in de holen gaan, tot nieuwe werelden.
Er was zoveel te ontdekken in Amsterdam.
Er waren zoveel lagen.
Laag na laag werd er overheen gebouwd.
Hij wilde terug naar wat het was, naar het oer.
Hij wilde zijn in de overgang van Orion tot Betelgeuse.
Daar sprak de nieuwe bijbel ook over, en het had zijn interesse.

Hoofdstuk 3. Het gekke geld

Dwalen door Amsterdam, dat begon hij steeds meer te doen, met en zonder zijn verzorgster.
Hij kwam steeds meer op eigen benen te staan.
Hij kon de diepte van Amsterdam door alles heen ervaren.
Het verborg een groot natuurgeheim, een andere, diepere wereld.
Daar was hij van overtuigd.
Hij bezocht graag de winkels. Telkens kwamen er nieuwe winkels bij.
Hij probeerde ook minimalistisch te leven.
Hij deed veel weg.
Hij wilde vrij zijn en diep gaan.
Daarom moest hij leren loslaten.
Het was zijn adem.
Hij had een levensbron ontdekt in Amsterdam.
Zijn verleden ging op in zijn dromen.
Het was als een vreemde cyclus.
Er draaide iets in hem, als een tuner.
Dat was wat zijn verleden was.
Zijn geheugen was bruikbaar om tot andere werelden te komen.
Dat was wat Amsterdam was.
Het was een metro-netwerk van de ondergrondse wereld, van de ondernatuur.
Het liep zo door zijn hoofd heen, en hij kon het gebruiken wanneer hij wilde, want hij was immers metro-bewoner.

Maar moest hij dan niet betalen ? Hij had al betaald.
Hij had dit systeem door hard werken opgekocht.
Hij moest eerst diep vallen, diep lijden. Nu was het van hem.
En steeds meer kon hij het inruilen om tot de holen te gaan, nog dieper. Dan moest hij door veel zand heen.
Uiteindelijk was hij een holenmens in de diepte van de ondernatuur.

Daar kon hij vissen in zijn verleden.
Daar kon hij jagen op kennis.
En de kennis joeg op hem.
Hij moest worstelen met grote beesten.
Dingen die hij nog niet begreep.
Het was zijn studie. Hij wilde Amsterdamoloog worden.

Maar altijd vond hij zichzelf weer terug aan de apparaten, half in een coma, aan de slangen. En wie waren die verzorgsters ? Het waren altijd weer anderen. Of iets speelde met zijn herinneringen. Hij was hard gevallen hadden ze gezegd, en hij leed aan geheugenverlies en geheugenverdraaiing. Maar was dat niet alles wat hij nodig had ? Waar zou hij anders naartoe moeten ?

Soms waren het blauwgezichten die naar hem keken, waren het machines in de metro waar hij aan lag met slangen. Dan draaiden ze aan knoppen. ‘Waar ben ik ?’

vroeg hij zich af. ‘Dit moet nog wel Amsterdam zijn, misschien diep onder de grond. Ik ben nooit weggeweest.’

Alles liep door elkaar heen, als een scheur in zijn brein, maar hij kon het gehele universum zien. Hij moest er niet aan denken zo kortzichtig te zijn. Hij kon over leven en dood heenkijken, over de golven van de zee, waar hij zijn eiland zag. De ervaringen waren intens en hij noemde het het nieuwe leven. Hij zou niet meer terugwillen naar al het andere. Hij voelde zichzelf liggen in de warme zee. ‘Ik heb een scheur in mijn brein !’ riep hij. ‘Ik kan alles zien ! Ik kan weer zien, ik kan weer zien !’ Hij zwom naar het eiland, liep door de golven.

‘Droom ik of ben ik dood ?’ vroeg hij zich af. Maar dit was leven. Het was intens en diep. Hij mocht niet teveel, en daarom kreeg hij van alles maar een klein stukje, en was alles kort, als eb en vloed. Amsterdam was als een nauwgezette klok. Het huren duurde niet voor eeuwig. Je moest betalen, eerst betalen.

Was hij dronken, was hij aan de drugs ? Nee, hier lag niets zomaar voor het oprapen. Je kon hier geen overdosis krijgen, want je werd teruggeroepen, teruggefloten, of teruggetrokken. Alles was slechts flitsen. Hij had een scheur in zijn brein omdat hij was gevallen. Hij kon het zich alleen niet meer herinneren. De val was diep en het had alles in zijn leven omgedraaid, en zijn leven draaide nog steeds.

Hij hoorde het geboemel van de metro. Ze gingen door prachtig landschap onder de grond, prachtige natuur. De blauwgezichten waren aan zijn zijde. Hij was één van hen. Zij waren allemaal vluchtelingen, als lotgenoten. Het brak zijn wereld open, het contact. Het nam hem op sleeptouw.

Altijd moesten ze op de metro wonen, en altijd waren ze op doortocht, want er werd op hen gejaagd. Altijd moesten ze loslaten en minderen, en leven met de kleine en korte beetjes die ze hadden. Het was allemaal heel vluchtig, in de klok van Amsterdam. In de alsmaar draaiende wijzers waren ze veilig. En in de klok waren zoveel andere plaatsnamen, maar het was allemaal de klok van Amsterdam.

Het scheen hem voort te drijven, de golven in zijn hart. Het was een binnenplaats in Amsterdam, waar hij gekomen was. Hij wist niet hoe. Hij las Amsterdam van achter naar voren : MAD-RETS-MA. Mad ma, en rets, ters, terse was een soort vreemd geld van een andere wereld waar hij eens over had gedroomd. Hij vertaalde het als het gekke geld. Dat was wat Amsterdam was. Je moest eerst tot het gekke geld gaan om hier te kunnen leven. Het gekke geld dwaalde als een dronkaard langs de Amsterdamse grachten. Zo begon het ritje in deze jukebox.

Hij hield het gekke geld in zijn hand. Het knetterde, het sprong op, het maakte ruzie, zelfs oorlog. Het nam steden in, en voerde jacht. Hij kneep zijn hand dicht en het was warm. Hij kon het gewoon in zijn hand kneden. Maar toen sprong het uit zijn hand en rende weg, en giechelde : ‘Je moet werken, werken voor het gekke geld.’ Toen was het snel verdwenen, en hij moest zoeken, in alle gaten en alle hoeken, naar het gekke geld. Maar het was niet te vinden, en zo moest hij werken met bloed, zweet en tranen om het gekke geld te verdienen, maar je moest hard werken voor maar een heel klein beetje, en het kleine beetje was twistziek, maakte je het niet makkelijk, en als het kon ontsnappen, dan ontsnapte het, en werd je uitgescholden en uitgelachen.

Het gekke geld was het leger en de politie hier, en als het even kon, dan zorgde het gekke geld dat je in het ziekenhuis terecht zou komen. Het gekke geld was levensgevaarlijk, en je moest toch wel een echte waaghals zijn als je erop durfde te jagen. Daarom bleef hij liever arm en minimalist, en leefde van de kleine beetjes door de natuur geschonken, dat wat op zijn pad kwam. Hij was bang voor het gekke geld, bang voor een overdosis, want waar zou het hem leiden ?

Het was niet zo dat het gekke geld ook maar iets voor je kon doen, want hier was bedrog op bedrog. Hij mocht daarom maar hele kleine beetjes nemen van Amsterdam, net genoeg om te leven. Mad Money Ma was wat Amsterdam eigenlijk op de kop betekende, en dat kon al snel de hand uitlopen.

Het gekke geld was sterker dan hem, dus hij kon er maar beter niet mee worstelen, maar het gekke geld joeg ook op hem, dus hij moest wel, en daarom was hij blij dat hij een metro-bewoner was, altijd op de vlucht voor het gekke geld, net zoals de Iraniërs. De blauwgezichten maakten veel muziek. Ze hadden een liedje genaamd : ‘Wow wow wow, je gezicht is altijd blauw’. Ook maakten ze liedjes over het gekke geld, om het te kunnen verwerken, want ze waren allemaal getraumatiseerd door het gekke geld, en het gekke geld lachte er gewoon om. Het gekke geld ging allemaal om controle en macht, maar in hele kleine beetjes deed het wonderen. Het probleem was dat het gekke geld op tilt was geslagen. Maar het was ook gewoon zo dat zonder hard werk, zonder te betalen, je eigenlijk nergens kwam hier. En men moest leren werken, men moest weten wat werk echt was, en niet in de putten van de Danaïden terechtkomen waar ze water gieten in bodemloze vaten, en waar ze water droegen naar de zee. Velen deden werk wat geen werk was, of wilden alleen half werk doen, en het gekke geld trapte daar niet in. Een heleboel tranen vanwege het gekke geld waren dus ook gewoon niets anders dan krokodillentranen.

Het gekke geld was een wachter, geen sinterklaas, geen verwennend omaatje. Het gekke geld was niet met pensioen gegaan. Maar het gekke geld was stomdronken, en hij vroeg zich af of het gekke geld misschien eens gevallen was, net zoals hij. En wie was dieper en harder gevallen, hij of het gekke geld ? In ieder geval was het met recht een Mad Ma, en moest hij oppassen.

Ze bemoederde hem, bedreigde hem, en bedroog hem. Ze was twistziek. Hij had het gevoel dat ze zwaar ziek was in het hoofd. Daarom vroeg hij zich af of ze misschien eens was gevallen. Altijd dat belerende vingertje. Mad Ma wist het altijd beter. Maar natuurlijk. Zij was immers langer op de wereld dan hij. Hij was nog maar een snotaapje. Maar wat was er gebeurd met moeder ? Dit kon toch niet goed zijn ? Of kwam het door de scheur in zijn brein, dat hij het zo beleefde ? Was het gekke geld misschien een gevolg van zijn val ?

Hij kon daar uren over piekeren, uren over worstelen. Het kon hem soms ook heel kwaad maken, dan schold hij de hele boel bij elkaar. Zijn woede aanvallen gingen diep, alsof het zijn brein verder scheurde.

De blauwgezichten hadden liederen zoals ‘Gratis kom je er niet in,’ en ‘Hard werken voor het leven’. Zij waren op de vlucht voor het op tilt geslagen gekke geld. Het gekke geld kon hard slaan. Het gekke geld kon je doden. Het gekke geld kon je laten hangen. Daarom was het oorlog. Overal stond men op tegen het gekke geld. Maar hoe kon men ontsnappen van het gekke geld ? Het was immers de wereld van het gekke geld. Waar ze dan ook gingen.

Nee, ze moesten leren leven van de kleine beetjes, er niet teveel van nemen. Ze moesten leren leven met halve woorden, halve zinnen en halve verhalen, die altijd weer wegsijpelden. Het was eb en vloed. Ze moesten leren van de zee. In het hart van Amsterdam onder de grond lag de wildernis zee. Daar moesten ze leren vissen, leren varen, en tot de eilanden leren gaan.

Alles was maar voor even. Ze moesten leren afscheid te nemen. Teveel zou hen kunnen doden. Een overdosis was hier fataal. Ze mochten niet verslaafd raken.

Het gekke geld lokte, het was een valstrik, en ze zaten al in de gevangenis van het gekke geld. Daarin waren ze geboren. Vluchten was onmogelijk. Ze konden alleen maar dieper in de gevangenis van het gekke geld, op zoek naar haar geheimen. Ze werden aan apparaten gehouden door het gekke geld. Mad Ma bediende de knopjes. Ze waren aan slangen verbonden.

Ook de blauwgezichten lagen daar, in grote zalen, bed naast bed, apparaat naast apparaat, allemaal in haar dromen. Hier moesten ze werken voor de geheimen. Hier moesten ze de diepte ingaan door een scheur in hun brein. Lotgenoten waren zij, medelijders en medestrijders.

Het gekke geld troonde in grote mist in de stad. Hoog op de tronen zat zij, want zij was eens heel diep gegaan. Zij was eerder dan hen, en daarom wist zij de weg, en daarom heerste zij over hen. Ze verkocht haar spullen op de markt, daar moesten ze eerst hard voor werken. En wat ze kochten liep van hen weg. Niemand kon hier kopen, alleen maar huren. Men kon hier niets bezitten. Elk bezit gleed van hen weg. Als eb en vloed was het. Niets kon men hier vasthouden. Alles was vluchtig, in de wereld van het gekke geld. Mad Ma hield niet van opgeblazenen. Die bliezen zichzelf op.

Er was niets wat het gekke geld kon stoppen. Het was totaal uit zijn kom gegaan, totaal op tilt geslagen. Het woedde rond als grote stormen. Het kon dreigen met donder en bliksem. Overstromingen en aardbevingen waren aan de orde van de dag. De mens werd volledig ingedamd.

Grote files altijd. Je kwam nergens zomaar in. Tijd was geld en geld was tijd. Je moest voor alles hard werken en veel betalen, en de prijzen werden steeds hoger, tot het belachelijke. Men kreeg steeds minder, men moest steeds harder werken voor steeds minder. Maar wat voor gevaren lagen er op de loer ? Het gekke geld wist het. Ze had het zelf gezien, er ooit eens mee geworsteld, en nu waren haar kinderen prooi. Het gekke geld konden ze niet meer vangen, en daarom joegen ze achter haar kinderen. Maar dat hebben ze geweten.

Bij het gekke geld trek je altijd aan het kortste eind, altijd. Ook als je denkt dat je het langste eind hebt getrokken. Bedriegen doet ze graag. Ze zijn in haar netten. Ze geeft hen bluf en grootspraak en laat hen zien waar het allemaal naar leidt. In haar fuiken zijn zij.

Maar moeten we dan niet eerlijk zijn ? Ja, jij wel, maar zij niet. Zij was immers eerder. Zij is soeverein. Zij weet hoe het werkt, jij niet. Daarom is Amsterdam Amsterdam. Het gekke geld wint, en jij verliest. Dus moet je naar school en hard leren werken, zoals zij eens deed. Denk niet dat je haar kunt bedriegen. Zij bedriegt jou, maar het is om je voor de overdosis te bewaren.

Denk niet dat je het beter weet, want dat weet je niet. Zij schenkt betweterigheid, om je te laten zien waar het je naartoe leidt, om het je af te leren.

Probeer het gekke geld niet in een potje te stoppen. Er zal niet veel van het potje en het huisje overblijven. Het gekke geld is geen poesje aan een riempje. Het gekke geld is waaks, als een wachter.

Ze moesten het spel geheel uitspelen. Er waren geen snelle ontsnappingen. Ze mochten geen sprookjes en verhaaltjes vertellen om aan het spel te ontkomen. In dat opzicht was het gekke geld de sprookjespolitie en spelpolitie. Er waren geen snelwegen door het spel. Je moest eerst dieper. Zo bewoog je, zo kwam je vooruit, door eerst in de diepte te gaan. Er was geen andere weg. Je moest geen troep innemen om te sjoemelen. Als je drugs of doping gebruikte werd je gediskwalificeerd. Dan lag je aan de apparaten. Het gekke geld was dan je dokter.

En wat was dit allemaal dan ?
Het was het maken van de taarten.
Het gekke geld was taartenbakker.
Vaak zat het gekke geld in een hoekje en zei dan telkens :
‘Ik wil niet met ze zijn.’
Hij zei dan : ‘Blijf dan bij ze uit de buurt.’
Dan zei het gekke geld : ‘Maar ik ben in oorlog met hen.’

‘Ik wil niets met ze te doen hebben,’ zei het gekke geld.
‘Ik zal ze tot slagroom verpulveren.’

Als het gekke geld in oorlogsstemming was, dan kon je maar beter uit de buurt blijven, want dan maalde ze alles wat op haar pad kwam tot slagroom.

Als mensen tegen haar zeiden : ‘Jij bent het gekke geld,’ dan zei ze : ‘Ik ? Ik heb geen stuiver op zak.’ Ze leefde in ontkenning, vergat vaak waar ze was, waar ze mee bezig was en wat ze had gedaan. Dat kon erg ingewikkeld worden allemaal. Probeer maar eens met zo iemand in discussie te gaan. Het is altijd weer anders.

‘En met zo iemand moest jij in een huis wonen ?’

Hij knikte.

‘En hoe heb je dat overleefd ?’

‘Ik heb het niet overleefd,’ zei hij.

‘Nou ja, maar u zit hier.’

‘Niet echt,’ zei hij. ‘U verbeeldt het zich maar.’

‘Hoezo ?’

‘Omdat ik een kind van het gekke geld ben,’ zei hij.

‘Mijnheer, wij laten u niet meer weg,’ zei de dokter. ‘Het is beter dat u onder zorg wordt geplaatst.’

‘Ach, ik maakte maar een grapje,’ zei hij.

‘Okay, nou ja, kom volgende week dan maar terug, dan zien we wel verder,’ zei de dokter.

‘En mijn medicijnen ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Als het goed is heeft u er nog genoeg van de volgende keer,’ zei de dokter. ‘U mag er absoluut niet teveel van nemen.’

‘Volgens mij heb ik dat gedaan,’ zei hij.

‘Nou, dan moet u afkicken,’ zei de dokter. ‘Het verklaart een hoop.’

‘Wat dan ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Nou, al uw vreemde verhalen over het gekke geld,’ zei de dokter.

‘Oh, dat heb ik al jaren,’ zei hij.

‘Nou, ik vindt het maar een vreemde bedoening,’ zei de dokter. ‘Ik weet niet goed hoe ik het moet noemen.’

‘Gewoon creatief brein om te overleven,’ zei hij.

‘Wat overleven ?’ vroeg de dokter.

‘Nou, het gekke geld natuurlijk,’ zei hij. ‘Ik heb ermee in huis gewoond.’

‘Maar u zit zelf ook vreemd in elkaar,’ zei de dokter.

‘Zijn we dat allemaal niet in deze vreemde wereld ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Ikke niet,’ zei de dokter.

‘Ach, lieg er niet over, dokter, u bent zelf ook aangestoken door het gekke geld. Hoeveel verdient u nu aan mijn ellende ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Da’s waar,’ zei de dokter. ‘Daar heeft u dan eens een keer gelijk in.’

‘Staan we quitte,’ zei hij.

‘Okay,’ zei de dokter. ‘Kom volgende week maar terug.’

‘Mag mijn moeder dan ook meekomen ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Wie is dat ?’ vroeg de dokter.

‘Nou, het gekke geld zelf,’ zei hij.

‘Neem maar mee,’ zei de dokter.

‘Ik zal veel geld meenemen,’ zei hij. ‘Ik neem aan dat u daar op wacht.’

‘Ik hoop dat ik verzuip in het geld,’ zei de dokter.

‘Volgens mij bent u stomdronken, dokter,’ zei hij.

‘Hoe raadt u het zo,’ zei de dokter.

Hoofdstuk 4. De robot

Hij was aangespoeld op het strand van de ondergrondse binnenzee van Amsterdam. Zijn schip had schipbreuk geleden en hij was gebeten door een giftige vis, en hij lag te hallucineren op het zand, al een tijdje, met stemmen van dokters in zijn hoofd die hem gek probeerden te maken. Het was het gif van de vis. Blijkbaar mocht hij niet verder, blijkbaar mocht hij niet meer nemen, dus daarom was hij het slachtoffer van de vis in plaats van andersom. Dat kan een visser soms meemaken. Het was niet dat er zomaar gevist kon worden op alles. Een heleboel vissen waren beschermd en beschermden henzelf. Hij moest het verschil leren tussen vis en verleden, ook al deed het verleden zich ook voor als vissen. Er waren zo een heleboel vissen waarop hij wel mocht jagen. Het waren beelden van eenzijdig geheugen.

Hij probeerde verder te kruipen op het strand, bang dat de zee hem weer zou teruggrijpen. Hij kwam maar moeilijk vooruit. In zijn hoofd lag hij vast aan apparaten, maar dat kon ook nog heel goed het gif van de vis zijn. Hij had flinke pijn. Pijnscheuten trokken door zijn lichaam. Zijn handen voelden branderig, zijn hoofd, en vooral zijn mond, alsof hij bij de tandarts was geweest. Het leek alsof er door zijn hele lichaam een alarm afging. Het kon allemaal het gif van de vis zijn.

Die vissen stonden erom bekend. Ze konden electrische schokken geven, en hallucinaties van dokters, psychiaters en tandartsen. Daar hoorde ook allerlei apparatuur bij.

Hij probeerde in de wildernis achter het strand te komen. Hij zag daar het vreemde geld rennen tussen de bosjes. Waar het vreemde geld rende begonnen de huizen te branden en de dikke vrouwen te lachen, en dan waren er de stemmen van dokters. Hij zag zichzelf weer aan apparatuur liggen, en voelde de slangen in zijn mond en neusgaten. Het vreemde geld was aan het schaterlachen. Ze hadden hun prooi. Hij probeerde te ademen, en zag dat hij aan apparaten lag in een metro, met blauwgezichten om hem heen. Hij was in een droommachine. Hij lag vast aan een droom apparaat, zoals ook wat anderen. Ze werden verzorgd door de blauwgezichten. In de verte hoorde hij het vreemde geld schelden. Hij hoorde vreemde muziekjes, cowboy-muziek, gimmicks. Toen zette iemand de radio uit.

Hij kroop door het zand van het strand. Hij hoopte het vreemde geld hier niet tegen te komen. Toen hij de bosjes had bereikt rook hij besjes. Weer zag hij zichzelf aan apparaten. Het gif wilde niet loslaten. Stoffen in zijn hoofd streden tegen elkaar. Daar zag hij het vreemde geld weer rondrennen als kleine mannetjes. Ze stonden in brand, en zetten de huisjes in brand. ‘Wat heb ik gegeten ?’ dacht hij bij zichzelf. ‘Ben ik een junkie ?’ Hij wist dat hij ergens van af moest kicken maar hij wist niet van wat, of was dit zijn bescherming tegen iets ? Hij wist het niet. Hij bleef tegen zichzelf zeggen dat hij dit niet begreep. ‘Wat is dit ?’

Hij wilde op een plaats komen waar zijn tranen zijn geld waren. Wat was geld eigenlijk ? Het leek op een communicatie systeem. Hij moest dieper, tot het geheim van Amsterdam. Hij moest hiervoor alles achterlaten, maar telkens greep het hem terug. Ze wilden hem niet laten gaan, of wilden ze hem ergens tegen beschermen ? Hij mocht nergens een overdosis van krijgen.

Hij werd wakker in zijn slaapkamer van het geluid van vogels. Hij stond op en deed de gordijnen open. Toen maakte hij zijn ontbijt klaar. Zijn verzorgster kwam, en hij zei niets. Ze deed wat huishouden voor hem, en hij probeerde mee te doen. Hij voelde zich op zich goed. Toen ze weer weg was probeerde hij een boek te lezen, maar de letters tolden voor zijn ogen, dus legde hij het weer neer. Op de radio was weer reclame. Toen klikte hij de radio weer uit. Hij moest naar het tranengeld. Hij had teveel tranen. Hij moest er iets mee doen. Hij wilde iets bouwen. Iets joeg op hem, of wilde het hem beschermen ? Iets riep hem terug, maar waar naartoe ?

Hij zag uit naar het slapen, dan zouden de dromen hem meer vertellen. Hij voelde zich een dromenjunkie. Hij wilde zijn dromen verkopen, maar hij wist bij voorbaat dat niemand geinteresseerd zou zijn. Wat had hij te bieden ? Dromendealer zijn werkte hier niet goed. Dan moest je echt heel beroemd zijn, en veel geld hebben, anders kwam je er niet doorheen en keek niemand naar je. Maar ja, hij had rust nodig.

Alleen in zijn dromen was hij dromendealer, maar hij bereikte er niks mee. Niemand wilde van hem kopen. Hij kon soms vliegen in zijn dromen, maar niemand keek er van op. Maar ja, hij had rust nodig. Waarom zou hij dromendealer moeten zijn als niemand het wilde ? Iedereen was afgestompd en afgeleid. Ze hadden allemaal hun eigen drugs al. Het was alsof ze verslaafd waren aan drama. Ze lagen in apparaten net als hem. En anderen wilden hen ook niet horen. Het was ieder voor zich, en alleen als je erg beroemd was en veel geld had, dan wilde men heel misschien naar je luisteren. Hij was een niemand, een absolute nul. Niemand kende hem. Niemand wilde hem kennen. Ze hadden allemaal hun eigen leven. Iedereen leefde langs elkaar heen. Ze waren aangestoken door het vreemde geld. Het was nooit goed genoeg.

Hij verkocht dromen. Die lagen als schriftjes in zijn tas, een hele stapel. En hij had een machientje waarmee hij kon vliegen, als een helicoptertje op zijn rug, en zo ging hij van dorp tot dorp en van stad tot stad, maar weinigen waren geinteresseerd. De ijscoman deed het beter.

Ze vonden hem maar een zonderling. Sommigen vonden hem interessant of waren nieuwsgierig, en spraken even met hem, maar uiteindelijk kochten ze veelal niets. Als iemand eens iets kocht voelde hij zich altijd heel onzeker, en dacht dat het niet gebeurd kon zijn. Dan leefde hij in ontkenning. Hij had nog steeds niets verkocht. En als hij het dan op sommige momenten wel geloofde dan was hij bang dat ze het af zouden keuren en verscheuren.

Een zonderlinge man was hij, met een hoed op, en vreemde kleren. Hij hoorde nergens bij. Soms speelde hij op zijn instrumenten, een fluit, een harmonica of iets anders. Hele vreemde muziek-instrumenten had hij. Ze vonden het maar kabaal. Hij had ook een triangel. Hij hoorde hier niet. Zo sprak hij zichzelf helemaal de afgrond in. Hij kon hier niet aarden. Zijn handel in dromen kwam niet van de grond. Mensen hadden hun eigen dromen, gewoon aan de oppervlakte. Zo diep als hem gingen ze niet. Daarom waren ze ook niet geinteresseerd in zijn vliegkunsten. Ze wilden op de grond blijven. Ze waren niet meer in verwondering over de vogels.

Hij vloog met de vogels en kwam nog eens ergens. Met de blauwgezichtjes vloog hij. Altijd maakten ze hem ‘s ochtends wakker. Soms leek het alsof zijn verzorgster een blauw gezicht had. ‘Wow, wow, wow, je gezicht is altijd blauw,’ zong hij dan. Ze keek hem dan vreemd aan, en gaf hem zijn medicijnen. Hadden de medicijnen hem zo gemaakt, of hielpen ze hem om niet nog erger te worden ? De stoffen in zijn hoofd vochten tegen elkaar. Het was altijd oorlog in zijn hoofd.

Hij moest jacht maken op deze beesten. Maar sommigen van deze beesten waren beschermd. Dan zou hij problemen krijgen met de boswacht. Dan zou hij een stroper zijn in hun ogen. Dan zou hij de bak ingaan. Hij had het gevoel alsof hij al in de bak zat. Hij zat vast aan apparaten die hem niet loslieten. Ze voerden hem drugs. Ze verkochten dromen aan hem. Hij zat vast aan allerlei ingewikkelde verzekeringssystemen, belastingsystemen en betaalsystemen. En hij moest huur betalen. Huursystemen, ziekenfonds, het bleef allemaal maar binnenkomen, en maar dreigen en dreigen. ‘Als je dit niet doet, dan ...’ en ‘als je dat niet vóór deze datum hebt betaald, dan ...’ Hij werd er gek van. Maar zijn verzorgster hielp hem.

Hij slenterde door Amsterdam, bezocht winkels, maar wilde er niet zijn. Hij verveelde zich. Soms ging zijn verzorgster mee. Soms liepen ze door het park. Wat moest hij doen ? Ook de spelletjes met haar verveelden hem. Hij ging op zoek naar boeken die hem konden inspireren. Hij wilde iets met zijn leven doen, niet op zoek gaan naar loos vermaak. Hij wilde op zoek gaan naar de zin van het leven, het geheim van Amsterdam.

Hij was altijd blij als hij weer naar bed kon, maar soms vond hij dat te makkelijk. Hij wilde hard werken, maar hij kon het niet. Soms ging hij door tot hij er bij neerviel. Als hij dan sliep dan was hij aan de apparaten, of diep in de wildernis onder de grond. Hij wilde bij de indianen zijn, en de holenmensen. Maar die accepteerden hem niet. En zo kwam hij bij de monniken en de hermieten terecht, maar die deden ook vaak te moeilijk. Dan moest je weer in dit en dat geloven, en dan moest je weer zus doen, en dan weer zo. En daarom was hij een eenling. Hij geloofde wel in goede principes, maar ...

Hij moest moedig zijn, dapper, niet braaf. Ze wilden hem allemaal drugs aanbieden. Maar deed hij niet hetzelfde ? Nee, hij dealde in dromen. Hij vroeg zich af in wat voor machine hij terecht was gekomen. Wat zou er onder de zee zijn ? Hij wilde in de tunnels daar terecht komen. Hij wilde naar de wildernissen onder de zee, en dan tot diepere zeeën komen. Misschien waren daar betere levensbronnen.

De indianen wilden hem niet. Hij liep daar rond met allerlei apparaten. De indianen waren er bang voor. Hij probeerde de apparaten van hem af te krijgen, maar het lukte niet. Hij was een gevangene van zijn apparaten. Hij begreep de indianen wel. Wie zouden hem kunnen helpen om van de apparaten los te komen ? De indianen in ieder geval niet. Die renden van hem weg in grote angst.

Hij was in de apparaten vergroeid. Hij had het idee dat het nooit meer goed kon komen. Misschien dat nog dieper onder de grond de oplossing lag, of zou hij dan nog erger in de problemen komen ? Er zouden daar kannibalen wonen, en de eeuwige hel zou er zijn. Misschien zou alleen dat hem kunnen losmaken ? De eeuwige hel noemden ze ook wel de baarmoeder. Het was een Duitse erfenis, ook wel Holle genoemd, het hol, waar Nederland ook naar vernoemd was. Het was een wildernis gebied. De kannibalen zouden wel raad met hem weten, maar dood wilde hij ook niet.

Nee, er waren hier geen snelle wegen om van ongemak af te komen. Hij moest er eigenlijk niet aan denken om dieper naar beneden te gaan. Hij wist dat de apparaten slechts een zekere droom waren, een zeker verhaal. Hij voelde zich als een robot. Hij was nog maar slechts een feutus, als een insect in een kokon, als een kuiken in het ei. Hij moest naar de baarmoeder, de uitgang zien te vinden. Maar daarvoor pak je niet de eerste de beste baarmoeder. Wat voor een nachtmerrie zou dat kunnen worden, van moeder tot zoon ? Blijf uit de buurt van haar.

Hij wilde ook geen vriendin, zelfde probleem. Hij wilde dieper Amsterdam in.

Hij moest het klusje klaren. Maar hoe ?

Het vreemde geld had hier rondgerend, en alles in de fik gezet, en nu lachten de dikke vrouwen, en hoorden ze de stemmen van vreemde dokters. Zeer vreemd waren ze. Ze maakten de mensen aan het huilen. Vreemde medicijnen hadden ze, huil medicijnen, die het alleen maar erger maakten, als de eeuwige hel. Ze waren als kannibalen. Hij moest denken aan prooi op de tafels van de chirurgen. Waar waren ze nou eigenlijk mee bezig ? Ja, maar ze waren toch bezig met het redden van levens ? Nee, ze waren aan het boren voor geld, voor het vreemde geld. Ja, maar ze hadden toch geld nodig om te kunnen leven ? Maar deze wereld had teveel geld genomen, en van de verkeerde personen. Je redt toch niet iemand van de verdrinkingsdood om hem daar dan geld voor te vragen ? Zo wil je zelf toch ook niet behandeld worden ? Het geld moet toch op een andere wijze tot de mens komen ? Zakenlieden kunnen keihard zijn en bedriegelijk. Dan groomen ze je voor hun secte. Zo ontstaan al die stockholm-syndromen.

Het vreemde geld zat op de troon en zong vreemde liederen. Liederen waarvan je moest huilen. Zoveel dingen die je kon zien maar die onbereikbaar voor je waren. Dingen waarmee je een emotionele band had. Dingen van het geheugen. De schepping moest nog komen.

De schepping was hier nog niet geweest. Dit was de onschepping, de nachtmerrie van de feutus, de grote chaos vóór de geboorte. Hij zat er middenin, tot aan zijn nek. Het eiland was ver in zicht.

Nee, hij was nog in de golven. Hij was nog nooit aan land gekomen. Dat droomde hij alleen maar, als voortekenen.

Het water was warm dat wel, maar woest, zeer woest. De blauwgezichten hadden hier boten, als metro's op het water. Daarin woonden zij. Zij visten hem op. In de metro-boten hadden ze vreemde gokkasten. Zo moest hij leren gokken. Ze zeiden dat het de zee van vergetelheid was, en hier moest hij het vergeten geld leren verdienen, het geld van vergetelheid. Dat zou zijn brein schoon kunnen spoelen. Hij moest hier een dreamjockey worden, een dreamjay, want die hadden een veel groter bereik dan zomaar dreamdealers.

Het water was vies, en op de metro-boten was het ook vies en het stonk. En het kon soms zeer koud worden. Hij moest nu een repertoire opbouwen. Dat kon hij verdienen door te gokken. Maar hij kon hierdoor ook een heleboel verliezen. Hij merkte dat hij hier uiteindelijk van zijn apparaten kon afkomen. Hier kon hij ook zendtijd winnen. Mensen hadden droomkastjes waarmee ze de dromen konden ontvangen. Beroemdheid kon hier niet plaatsvinden, want de dreamjays waren als kameleonen en veelal anoniem. Het ging om de dromen. En de dromen gingen zich al snel vervormen. Niets bleef hetzelfde. Het waren klokken op zich.

Hoofdstuk 5. De natuurbacterie

Hij kon aan zijn verleden ontsnappen, van zijn verleden wegvluchten door de zorgcentra en de gevangenissen, en door de metro’s en metro-boten van de blauwgezichten. Het gekke geld was woest, want het wilde hem niet laten gaan. Mad Money Ma moest gewoon weer Amsterdam worden. Haar krankzinnige tentakels die hem in een wurggreep hielden moesten afsterven. Ze wilde dat hij een junkie bleef, geen dreamjockey. Maar door dreamjockey te zijn kon hij aan haar ontkomen, op de gokkasten van de blauwgezichten. Het waren vreemde juke-boxen en na een tijdje kreeg hij een eigen gokkast. Die kon hij opbouwen tot vliegmachine, en dat kon zijn eigen dreamjay station worden. Het waren een soort vogels, die reusachtig konden worden. Hij moest deze vogels leren berijden. Zo kon hij loskomen van Mad Ma. Maar het leek wel alsof de huizen van Amsterdam op instorten stonden, alsof de stad in brand was. Mad Ma wilde niet loslaten. En het vreemde geld was haar blaffende hondje. Hij moest hard werken voor het geld van vergetelheid om hier van af te komen, af te kicken. Hij hoopte eens aan land te kunnen komen, maar voor nu was hij in het water of in de lucht. Hij zocht naar land, maar hij moest werken voor zijn geld en voor ieder stukje land. Het zou niet uit de lucht komen vallen of zomaar ontdekt worden. Hij moest het land zelf bouwen. Hij moest een goede dreamjockey zijn, droom voor droom zijn eiland bouwen.

Hij kon Mad Money Ma horen roepen en gillen. Het was een blame game. Schelden was haar niet vreemd. Ze kon zwaar beledigen om de aandacht te trekken. De drugs wilde niet laten gaan.

Met zijn dromen moest hij een dreamjockey car bouwen, en zo zou hij uiteindelijk aan land komen. Dat was hard werk. De dromen konden moeilijk in elkaar klikken want er ontbraken dromen. Daarvoor moest hij op zoek, en grote gevechten leveren met monsters en beesten die deze dromen bewaakten. Het zou hem bloed, zweet en tranen kosten, tranengeld. Het lag niet voor het grijpen. Hij moest het zelf verdienen. Alles werkte hier door tranengeld. En tranengeld kon je alleen maar krijgen voor een heleboel vergeetgeld.

Hij lag op het strand. Hij was aan het hallucineren door het gif van de vis. Het leek zijn brein telkens weer te vervormen, alsof hij zelf een vis was. Hij bemerkte dat hij aan het bloeden was.

‘Ik kom niet meer terug,’ zei hij tegen Mad Ma die in zijn hoofd aan het foeteren was. Hij probeerde door het zand te kruipen, en probeerde er in te rollen om de stemmen te doven. Hij keek naar de voeten van een inheemse vrouw die voor hem stond. Ze hielp hem op te staan, en wees op zijn wond.

‘Wie ben je ?’ vroeg hij.

Ze sprak niet, maar nam hem mee naar de wildernis achter het strand. Daar leidde ze hem over een wildernispad tot een kamp. Daar waren ook andere inheemsen, veelal vrouwen. Weer hoorde hij Mad Ma in zijn hoofd krijsen. Hij greep naar zijn hoofd. De inheemsen keken hem verschrikt aan. ‘Ja, ik heb last van ...’ zei hij, maar verder kon hij niet komen, omdat hij niet wist wat hij moest zeggen, en omdat hij dacht dat ze het toch niet zouden verstaan. Het zou allemaal verspilde moeite zijn, en hij moest op krachten komen. Ze gaven hem wat soep, en een deken. Hij ging op een bed zitten in een hut waar zij hem brachten.

‘Itek,’ zeiden ze. Ze maakten daarbij een slaap beweging. Toen hij de soep ophad ging hij liggen en trok de deken over zich heen. Hij was helemaal uitgeput, en viel snel in slaap. De volgende ochtend werd hij wakker van de vogels. Hij was nog steeds in de hut. Het was mooi weer, en hij ging de hut uit om de natuur om hem heen te verkennen. Hij voelde zich verder goed. Hij zag de anderen niet.

Toen hij een tijdje door de natuur had gelopen, door de wildernis, en terug was gekomen in het kamp waren de anderen er ook. Met hun soep en kruiden probeerden ze de stemmen van Mad Ma in zijn hoofd te doven. Ze lieten hem ook een waterval zien. Er was hier een rivier. Daar gingen ze graag zwemmen. Hij voelde zich welkom. Hij voelde zich thuis. Het was alsof hij hier altijd was geweest, maar het gif van een vis had hem gegrepen. Nu moest hij herstellen. De inheemse vrouwen wisten wel raad met het gif. Zij hadden een tegengif.

Ze leerden hem over de vissen, over gevaarlijke, giftige vissen, en ongevaarlijke vissen. Ze leerden hem van alles over de jacht. Hier moest het verleden verwerkt worden, het geheugen herschapen. Het waren allemaal herinneringen.

Hij werd wakker aan apparaten. Hij was bij de blauwgezichten. Het waren droom-apparaten. Ze zeiden dat hij naar school moest. Deze materie was moeilijk te begrijpen. Spiegelogie, vertalologie. Ze zeiden dat mensen zwarte gaten waren, poorten naar andere dimensies, onderdelen van een tuner. Hij moest de mens niet als vast vlak zien, niet als muur, maar als een kanaal, als een poort, van hier tot daar. Als hij daarin vast kwam te zitten, dan moest hij het leren begrijpen, leren doorvertalen. Daartoe was de vertalologie. Ze hadden te maken met spiegelingen en diepere betekenissen. Dat zou hij moeten leren. Daartoe diende hij naar school te gaan. De scholen waren op de treinen van de blauwgezichten. Ze moesten altijd verder gaan. Ze mochten niet stoppen, want dan zou de domheid hen inhalen, en trekken tot domme scholen die helemaal geen scholen waren, maar gevangenissen van de onwetendheid, opdat ze domme consumenten zouden zijn. Daartoe werden ze opgeleid, tot consument. Daarvan moest hij ontsnappen, geheel loskomen. Het waren fokkerijen. De blauwgezichten zouden hem helpen. Hij zou alleen op school er van los kunnen komen. De blauwgezichten wilden niet met de smerige spelletjes van de domgezichten meedoen. Het waren domme sprookjes, en de blauwgezichten waren de sprookjes-politie.

Hij was inmiddels op een trein van de blauwgezichten. Ook hierop woonden ze, en elke trein had zijn eigen school. Hier moest hij leren lezen en schrijven in de taal van de blauwgezichten. Het was belangrijk, anders zou hij nog gewoon dronken zijn. Wat was er met hem aan de hand ? Wat was er met hem gebeurd ? Hij moest afkicken van vele drugs. Daarom lag hij aan de apparaten. De blauwgezichten hadden goed zorg voor hem gedragen.

De onderwijzer ging langs het alfabet. Hij probeerde op te letten, maar werd afgeleid. Hij wilde het alfabet leren, maar iets joeg op hem. Iets wilde hem niet laten gaan. Iets wilde dit niet. Hij wilde hoe dan ook de taal van de blauwgezichten leren.

Moest hij zo diep gaan met de blauwgezichten ? Hij wilde in de natuur zijn, maar er waren geen directe wegen tot de natuur. Alles was hier afgesloten. Hij moest in de trein zijn. Hoge technologie moest hem beveiligen. Maar was hoge technologie geen probleem op zich ? Kon het op zichzelf niet een drugs worden ? Daarom was het oorlog in zijn hoofd, verschillende stoffen tegen elkaar. En de zwarte gaten trokken aan hem. Zijn geheugen was op tilt geslagen, alsof zijn brein werd verscheurd. Er waren zoveel kamers in zijn hoofd, en nu moest er nog balans komen en doorgang, diepte, nieuwe mappen, nieuwe kaarten, nieuwe inventarissen. Zijn geheugen moest herschapen worden. Hij voelde zichzelf weer in de golven van de zee. De zee nam alles in. Alles overstroomde weer, maar hij wist dat eb en vloed erbij hoorden. Hij zag al zijn schoolschriften drijven in de zee. Zijn schooltassen gingen met andere treinen mee. Moest hij dan tot een tijdmachine komen ? Of was de zee een tijdmachine ? Het sleurde hem mee, het zoog hem in de woeste draaikolken, tot andere werelden. Het waren de zwarte gaten van de zee. De oceaan verbond het hele universum.

Er was geen rust in zijn hoofd, maar rust kon ook heel gevaarlijk zijn, als drugs. Hij wilde geen valse rust, geen schijnrust. Hij wist dat het oorlog moest zijn, want schijnvrede was er overal. Maar aan welke kant stond hij ?

Hij had het gevoel alsof treinen reden in zijn hoofd. Zijn breinscheur ging diep, en leek steeds dieper te gaan. Soms reed hij op de treinen, en soms leek hij ernaast te zijn, in de natuur. Zijn hersenchemie moest in orde komen. Hij was de blauwgezichten dankbaar dat ze hem onderwezen. Hij lag aan apparaten, hij droomde dromen, speelde spelletjes. Hij luisterde en leerde. En hij was altijd op weg, want het verleden joeg op hem. Giftige vissen. De zee kende grote monsters, die massa's mensen kon verslinden, schip na schip. Soms hadden die monsters vele tentakels. Hij was diep in de maag van zo'n vis, zo'n zeemonster. Het was als de hel. Chemische stoffen van het beest speelden op hem in, speelden met zijn brein. Hij moest beter opletten als de amazones hem vissen leerden. Telkens werd hij afgeleid. Telkens weer was hij de pineut als ze gingen vissen, als ze het water ingingen. Hij kende de natuur hier niet.

De blauwgezichten waren giftige vissen in de rivier. De amazones gebruikten de vis van de blauwgezichten voor een heleboel dingen. Als medicijn, maar ook in de jacht, en in de oorlog. Zo was hij ook eens door zo'n pijltje geraakt. Hij moest de viskunde nog leren. Hij kende alleen maar wiskunde. Daar hadden ze hem vroeger helemaal mee doodgegooid. Totdat hij er hoofdpijn van kreeg. Hij probeerde het nu allemaal achterstevoren af te spelen, al die herinneringen aan knettergekke wiskunde leraren, om zo de viskunde te kunnen leren. Hij moest het voorhangsel opzij schuiven, opdat hij doorgang had. De amazones hadden overal zulke voorhangsels, ter bescherming. Je kon de amazones niet zomaar zien, want dan zou je sterven, en daarom moesten ze een bedekking dragen. Daarom kon je hen alleen van achteren zien.

Zij waren roodhuiden. Zij waren niet sentimenteel, maar streng. Je kon het rode niet zien, want dan zou je sterven, en daarom zag je blauw. Het was een hallucinerende vrucht. Je moest blauw zien, want je was nog niet klaar voor het rode. Hun voorhangsels waren veelal wit, maar je zag blauw. Dan moest je eerst het roze verdienen, want er was geen directe weg tot het rode.

Hij zag rood en wit als roze, en het blauwe was verschoven naar het water en de lucht. Eerst moest hij het water in en de viskunde leren. De blauwgezichten waren watergezichten, riviergezichten en zeegezichten, belangrijke lessen die hij moest leren. Hij moest afkicken van zoveel emotie en sentimentaliteit. Hij moest gaan tot de gezonde rede. Hij moest filosofie leren en afkicken van zoveel buitensporige theologie. Snelwegen hadden de theologen gebouwd. Maar de echte profeten waren vaak filosofen. Je mocht niet teveel van theologie, want dan zou het drugs worden. Zo was dat ook met zaken zoals familie. Hij moest de filterologie leren.

Ook het roze was een gif. Hij raakte er depressief van, maar het bracht hem wel in contact met zichzelf, door zelfspiegelingen. Hij merkte dat het roze hem dubbel belaste, en dat er geen weg meer terug was. Hij kon alleen maar dieper, niet eruit. Het was als weerhaken. Zo kon hij door de enge poort. Hij moest het roze verdienen om tot het rode te komen, maar hij wist niet wat het was.

Hij was in grote verwarring en soms in grote paniek. En dan werd hij wakker na lange nachtmerries, en ging hij de tuin in. De roze gezichtjes waren vogeltjes die vaak in zijn tuin waren. Met zijn verrekijker keek hij dan naar hen. Ook ging hij weleens op pad in de natuur, op zoek naar de roze gezichtjes. Wat zou de natuur zijn zonder hen ? Ze konden zo mooi zingen. Het had een kalmerend effect in zijn hoofd, zoals dat van de dolfijnen.

Het rivierwater bij de amazones was niet blauw, maar bruin-geel. Hier waren de roze gezichtjes ook, de vogeltjes. Voor blauw water moesten ze echt naar de zee gaan. De roze gezichtjes droegen vreemde boodschappen die door de amazones gelezen konden worden. Hij moest het ook leren.

Hij moest afkicken van het verleden, wat als drugs was. Hij moest het verdraaien, wat gepaard ging met veel vergetelheid. Hij moest meer vergeten dan herinneren. De amazones hadden blauwe stenen waarmee ze dobbelden, die ze konden lezen. Het waren een soort prisma’s, als blauw kristal, als blauwe diamanten, waarvan ze de spiegelingen konden opvangen, om die te vertalen tot boodschappen. Zo werden ze geleid, door zowel de roze gezichtjes als de blauwe stenen. Ook lazen ze voortekenen in de jacht. Ze gooiden soms vissengraten en lazen dan de voortekenen erin voor de volgende jacht. Hun tenten en hutten hadden vaak voorhangsels van kippenbotjes en vissengraten, en zo was ook hun kleding vervaardigd, als ze dat droegen. Het waren meer versieringen, maar het had een semiotische functie. Hiermee communiceerden ze, en hiermee vingen ze boodschappen op. Hij moest al deze signalen leren.

Er was een rode prisma in zijn hoofd, en de spiegelingen, de vertalingen en de filteringen waren duur. Amsterdam werd duurder, vroeg steeds meer voor haar diensten. De natuur was niet voor niets. Je moest er persoonlijk en geheel bij betrokken zijn. En hij werd afgeleid door zoveel dingen.

Voor het lozen van zijn afval moest hij veel betalen. En in Amsterdam was ook het toilet niet gratis. Scheldende mensen. Scheldende mensen overal. Voor alles moest je betalen, en ze hadden te weinig. En zo ontstond er een honger Amsterdam. Hij moest creatief zijn en van de kleine beetjes leren leven, om zo de eindjes aan elkaar te knopen. Dat was een hele opgave. Hij moest het primitieve leren, dat was ook iets van de natuur.

Hij had een hele mooie bacterie in de lucht gezien, met zoveel schakeringen. De bacterie had schakeringen tot zoveel dimensies, als een natuurbacterie, en hij voelde het in zijn hoofd. Telkens weer kon hij poorten in deze bacterie verdienen, om die te openen. Het bracht zoveel dromen in zijn hoofd, en zijn leven was een droom door deze bacterie. Het kon blaffen als een hond tegen hem als hij van iets teveel zou nemen. Hij werd grensgevoelig door de bacterie. Zo gingen zijn zintuigen meer en meer open, en zijn oude zintuigen gingen meer en meer dicht.

Hoofdstuk 6. De roze kaart

De scheidsrechter liet de roze kaart zien.
Ze moesten allemaal terug naar de baarmoeder.
De conducteur knipte alleen nog maar roze kaartjes.
Ze waren op weg naar de roze zee.

Alleen in het diepste van de nacht zou de zee rood worden, en ze zouden verslonden worden, want de baarmoeder was een woest beest. Je kon alleen geboren worden als je aan je oude leven zou afsterven. Daarom at zij veel vlees. Daarom was zij dik.

Hij moest door vele roze nachten tot het rode dieptepunt gaan.
Dat was als een buffeljacht.
Hij was in strijd met het verleden.
Het was een grote oorlog.
Herinneringen waren als grote protsende buffels in het veld.
Er moest jacht op hen gemaakt worden voor de slacht, zodat het verwerkt kon worden.
Daarom waren de amazones slagers.
Zij waren geschiedenis leraressen.

Zij hadden hun tent in zijn geheugen gezet.
Hier kon hij niet verder. Hier liep alles vast.
Hier moest hij terug naar school.

En de school was een fuik.
Hij kon er niet meer uit, hij kon alleen maar dieper.

Hier moest hij het gratenschrift leren.
Met de gratentekens moest hij zijn geheugen onderverdelen.
De gratentekens stonden voor tunnels naar de zee.
Zo kon hij zijn geheugen verwerken en herscheppen.
Zijn geheugen moest worden tot een school inventaris.

Geschiedenis was geld. Op het geld stond de geschiedenis beschreven.
Dat kon je naar de bank brengen en er dan rente voor krijgen.
Het was een geschiedenis bank, een geheugenbank.

Hij moest veel geschiedenis leren om daar te kunnen werken.
Daarom moest hij eerst naar school, en luisteren naar de geschiedenisleraressen.
De geschiedenis bank was een slagerij.
Je kon niet zomaar gaan slachten. Daar moest je een diploma en een vergunning voor hebben.

Een heleboel geschiedenis was vals, en daarom moest hij zich met archeologie, etymologie, en lexicografie bezig houden, en moest hij de filologie kennen.

Telkens weer was hij op weg tussen de kamers in zijn hoofd.
Er waren lange wandelpaden tussen met stoplichten.
Hij woonde op meerdere plaatsen.
Soms namen grote vogels hem op, en vlogen verder met hem de bergen in.
Hij dacht na over zijn headspace.
Hij wilde niet zomaar wakker worden van de nachtmerrie, maar wilde de afmetingen, de omvang ervan, onder ogen komen, en het verdiepen.
Hij moest werken in de nachtmerrie, het tot bloei brengen, tot waarde, tot betekenis.
Hij moest het geheugen herscheppen.
Dat was als werken in de mijnen.

Hij wilde geen product meer zijn.
Hij trapte er niet meer in waarmee ze hem lokten.
Er waren zoveel afleidingen en verleidingen.
Maar hij was als een pelgrim nu, als een monnik.
Hij hield vast aan het boek door de hemel aan hem gegeven.
Zo kwam hij steeds hoger, op de ruggen van de vogels die door de hemel tot hem waren gezonden.
Hij werd opgenomen.
Wat dachten ze op aarde toch allemaal nauw en klein.
Het was allemaal waardeloos, futiel.
Ze waren gewoon op jacht.

Hij wilde geen gebruiksvoorwerp meer zijn, of wegwerpartikel.
Op aarde waren ze verslaafd.
Junkies in Amsterdam. Niet aan drugs, maar aan geld, macht, controle en eer.
Men was product geworden. Men was consument geworden.
Daartoe werden ze opgeleid.
Daarom was hij de diepte ingegaan, tot de roze zee gegaan.

En midden in de nacht was alles rood, als rode bloemen die spraken.
Hij voelde zich als Alice in Wonderland, als Kantiaans of Hegeliaans filosoof.
En ook hij kwam die verschrikkelijke kolderkat onder ogen.
Het had hem niet heel gelaten. Hij had een scheur in zijn brein.
Aan flarden gescheurd was hij.

Hij was nog nooit zo diep gegaan.
Hij stond voor een woeste oceaan.
Overal waren campings langs het strand.
Hij trok van camping tot camping.
Elke camping had zijn eigen geheim.
‘In tenten zullen zij wonen, als de stad is vergaan, als de stad tot wildernis is geworden.’

Maar de stad was nog steeds in zijn hoofd, als onderdeel van het geheugen.
De vissen waren hier als stoplichten.
De grotere vissen waren als wegen.
Het was helemaal niet wat het leek.
De roofdieren om hem heen waren als huizen waarin hij zou kunnen wonen, maar hij wilde op de campings wonen.

Elke camping had zijn eigen geheim.
Als hij op de ene camping was, dan had hij het gevoel dat hij zoveel miste op de andere campings.
Hij voelde zich als een verslaafde.
Hij was nog steeds een Amsterdamse junkie.
Hij was in gevecht met de zee, en in gevecht met de aarde.
Het waren chemische stoffen in zijn hoofd.
Van alles trok er aan hem.
Hij wist het zeker : hij was niet van zichzelf.
Hij was in een fabriek.

En er was geen ontkomen aan.
Je kon alleen maar dieper.
Hoe meer hij het onder ogen kwam, hoe meer hij zich ervoor schaamde.
Het was een guilt-trip.
Victim-blaming.

Schulden, schulden, schulden.

De rekeningen bleven binnenstromen.
Hij moest voor alles betalen, zelfs voor adem en gedachten.
En het herhaalde zich, want het was slechts huur.
Nooit kon je iets daadwerkelijk bezitten.
Het bezat jou.

Hij zat opgesloten in een grafische werkelijkheid, maar hoe werkelijk was het ?
Hij keek naar zichzelf als naar een tekenfilm.
Was hij fabriekswerker of fabrieksproduct ?
Was hij slechts grondstoffen ?

Hoe kon hij ontsnappen ? Maar waar zou hij dan terechtkomen ?
Hij wist dat hij diep in de problemen zat.
Het waren de excursies van de viskunde.
Hij voelde zich allereerst zelf een vis.
Was hij vis of visser, of allebei ?

Hij moest in het verleden vissen.
Hij moest een nieuwe wereld bouwen van de graten.
Het vlees moest verslonden worden.
Hij moest sieraden maken van de graten.
Hij moest gratenjuwelier worden, zeejuwelier.

Hij moest vechten voor zijn leven in deze arena’s.
Het geheugen verslond hem telkens weer.

Hij kon niet opstaan, hij kon niet wakker worden.
Hij moest de viskunde verdiepen.
Het was de enige weg.

Het kwam aan op veel gokken, veel dobbelen, veel experimenteren.
Hij moest zijn weg hier zien te vinden.
Hij moest het gratenorakel leren lezen, de gratentaal leren, het gratenschrift.
Hij moest tot de zeegrotten komen waarop de graten-hieroglieven waren.
Hij mocht hier niet dansen. Hij moest leren.
Hij moest dieper de grotten in.

Het leven was vreemde spiegelingen die hij moest ontcijferen.
Het stuwde voort vanuit een bron die hij niet kende.
Hij was naar die bron op zoek.
Diep in de grotten moest hij.
Diep in de mijnen, diep in de campings, diep in de fabrieken, ja, diep in de stad.
Hij moest tot het museum gaan, maar dan moest hij dieper de kelders van het museum in, de magazijnen, waar het verborgene was wat ze nooit lieten zien.
In de stad moest hij ontkomen aan de camera-dictatuur.
Alles werd tegen het licht gehouden. En het licht had hen verblind.

Hij moest tot de boten gaan, de zee op, tot de verloren eilanden, de vergeten eilanden.
Die tunnels liepen gewoon onder het museum.
Maar de museum-politie liet hem niet gaan.
Hier moest je voor alles werken.
Je moest alles verdienen.
Hij moest museumwerker worden om achter de geheimen te komen.

Er leefde een octopus in zijn hoofd, met vele tentakels.
Hij leidde een dubbelleven.
Hij was van alle markten thuis en droeg vele hoeden.

‘Hoeveel context hebben we nog nodig ?’ dacht hij bij zichzelf.
Hij was de wind en het water, maar nu moest hij aarde worden.

Hij was in gevecht met spiegelingen die hem niet wilden laten gaan.
Hij kende alleen de spiegel niet.

Het ging niet slechts om spiegelogie, vertalologie en filterologie, maar het ging ook om economie. Hij moest het verdienen, anders kwam hij nergens.
En dat kon alleen op school.
Daarom was hij vurig door een vis gestoken.
Telkens trok het hem terug naar school.

Hij kon aan de school niet ontsnappen.
Maar hij moest dieper tot de schoolkelders, om te zien wat ze allemaal achterhielden.
Maar de schoolpolitie liet hem niet gaan.
Hij zou er alleen achter komen als hij schoolwerker zou worden.

Maar stelde hij het niet te makkelijk voor ?
Het waren allemaal onderdelen van een sieraad.
Maar hij vroeg zich af of er schakels ontbraken.
Hij richtte zich op de viskunde.

Niet meer wiskunde, maar viskunde.
Wiskunde kon zo bedriegelijk zijn, hield zoveel verborgen.
Hij moest zijn wiskunde boeken achterstevoren lezen om de viskunde te begrijpen.
Wiskunde was slechts een voorhangsel, ook van de amazones.

Er was een klein schooltje op de camping, een zondagschooltje.
Er was ook een maandagschooltje voor filosofie.
Het woensdagschooltje was voor viskunde.
Daar moest hij zijn.
Er was ook een campingsupermarkt.
Daar kon hij ook een heleboel krijgen.
Het was als een schoolsupermarkt.

Het leren ging hier gewoon door.

Het was een bevroren nachtmerrie waarin hij opgesloten zat.
Sinds de val was hij in een coma geraakt, en kon niet wakker worden.
Hij leefde in zijn dromen.
Het leven ging door op een andere wijze.

Maar wat had hij verloren ?
Het was toch allemaal een soap opera.

In ieder geval moest hij er het beste van zien te maken.
Hij wist niet of hij dood of levend was.
Hij wist niet of hij sliep of wakker was.
Hij twijfelde ook over de val en de coma.
Dat hadden ze hem verteld, maar wie kon hij vertrouwen ?
Hij had toch altijd al het gevoel dat hij in een zombie wereld leefde.
Iedereen leek wel in een coma.
Misschien was het wel een coma wereld.
In ieder geval moest hij het doen met zijn dromen en het weinige leven dat hij had.

Hoofdstuk 7. De camping supermarkt

Er was een strijd tussen fabriek en labyrint in zijn hoofd, tussen twee octopussen.
Chemische stoffen vochten om zijn identiteit.
Ook de school vocht om hem, en het museum.
En hij moest de viskunde leren om te overleven.
De viskunde was in oorlog met de wiskunde.
Geschiedenisleraren tegen wiskundeleraren.
En de chemie leraren onderwezen erover.

Het waren schooloorlogen in de hoofden van de leerlingen.
De leraren streden om de identiteiten van de leerlingen.
Het waren lange treinen in zijn hoofd, en soms waren er treinrovers of treinkapers.
De blauwgezichten hielpen hem, ook al waren het slechts de orakelstenen van de amazones.
Er werd om hem gedobbeld.

Ze gooiden de graten, en keken dan wat ze erin zagen.
Het was het gratenorakel, en hij moest het ook leren.
Het was onderdeel van de viskunde.

Soms was hij er moe van, ging het traag, kon hij zich niet concentreren.
Een goede zwemtocht kon hem dan helpen.
Soms ging hij naar de waterval.

Er was veel in de natuur om hem af te leiden, maar het kon ook gevaarlijk zijn.
Roofdieren loerden op hem.
Giftige beesten waren overal.
Hij moest zien te overleven hier.

Giftige mensen, giftige familie, giftige vrienden.
Hij moest door de voorhangsels heen.
Het was giftige wiskunde, en hij moest tot de viskunde gaan.
Alles was hier aangekoekt tot getallen, en het had de mensen dom gemaakt.
Men zat vast aan kleverige troep.
Men ging erdoor raaskallen, als kolderkatten.
Het ging in je hoofd zitten, het was zwaar besmettelijk.

Van afstand wilden ze niet weten.
Het waren namelijk junkies.
Het was verslavingsgedrag.
Ze zaten onder het kleefvirus, en leefden in ontkenning.

Alleen de viskunde kon hem losmaken van het kleefvirus.
Hij moest het gratenschrift leren, en het gratenorakel.
Maar het kleefvirus wilde hem niet laten gaan.
Het was oorlog. Hij was als een pop die moest ontsnappen uit de poppenwinkel.
Maar dat ging maar moeizaam, en daarom moest hij zijn binnenwereld opzoeken.

Het kleefvirus regeerde. De amazones waren degenen die eraan ontsnapt waren, door de viskunde. Dat konden zowel vrouwen als mannen zijn. Hij wilde er ook bij horen.

Hij haatte het kleefvirus. Het kleefvirus loog in de hoofden, en ontkende alles.
Het maakte mensen hoogmoedig en hebzuchtig.
Hij wist dat minimalisme de enige weg was.

Het had hem diep gestoken. Het woelde in hem.
Hij moest er nog antistoffen tegen aanmaken.
Het kleefvirus zat op de troon.
Het wilde kleven.
Zo kon hij roddelen van hoofd tot hoofd, en zijn wereld weven.
Een leugenachtige wereld.
Het was een koldervis.

Hij moest het kleefvirus overwinnen, het koldervirus, door op de koldervissen te jagen. Dat liep uit op een heuse oorlog. Het waren clownsvissen, zeer giftig, en ze konden je zwaar onder stroom zetten. Het waren electrische vissen. Hij moest hierom leren boogschieten. Hij moest genoeg afstand bewaren. Deze vissen konden je doden.

Hij merkte dat de strijd onbegonnen was. Steeds weer kwamen er amazones om door deze vissen. De koldervissen waren zeer snel. Je was bij het zwemmen nooit je leven zeker. Hij moest naar wateren gaan waar deze vissen helemaal niet waren. De oorlog tegen deze vissen was hopeloos. Hij moest zich van deze vissen afzonderen, van elk viswater waar deze vissen zich bevonden. Hij moest geheel loskomen van de kolderwateren en de koldergebieden.

Het waren clown oorlogen, en de amazones zeiden dat er daar heel moeilijk van ontsnapt kon worden. Het koldergif zat al heel diep en iedereen was min of meer onder zware mindcontrol door het gif, wat van geslacht tot geslacht werd doorgegeven, want het zat in het zaad, het zat in de genen. De mensheid werd in de tang gehouden door de clowns.

De clowns stelden het altijd weer beter voor dan het was.
Zij waren de scheppers van de gemaakte romantiek.
Allemaal voor de markt.
Ze moordden voor het grote geld.
Ze gingen niets uit de weg, niets ging hen te ver.
Bedrog was hun aas.
Daarom waren er de clown oorlogen.
De wereld was ten onder gegaan in de clown oorlogen.
De gevangenissen hier waren fabrieken.
Ook de ziekenhuizen waren fabrieken.

De clowns droegen zorg voor de geldmachine.
De mens moest sterven voor het geld.
Geld was meer waard dan een mensenleven.

Clowns was nog een net woord voor zombies.
Clowns waren een soort opgeblazen, geraffineerde zombies die leidinggevende posities in handen hadden genomen, hadden gestolen.
Zombies konden naar speciale scholen waar ze werden opgeleid tot clown.
En deze machine ging maar door, allemaal voor geld.
Geld was wat ze aanbaden. Geld moest rollen, en geld was hun wapen.
Wapenfabrieken was waar het hen om ging.

Deze clowns hadden wapens.
Deze clowns waren verslaafd aan wapens.
Deze clowns waren zombie-specialisten.
Deze clowns waren volleerde zombies, professionele zombies.
Ze gingen niemand uit de weg, werden door geen regels of enige kennis tegengehouden.
De clowns waren de wachters van de camera-dictatuur, van de cameracratie.

In zijn ontcijferingen van de graten hieroglieven meende hij erachter te zijn gekomen dat deze kolderwerelden en kolderwezens, deze clowns, voortkwamen vanuit een kolderplantje wat op de zeebodem groeide. Met het gratenorakel kwam hij erachter waar dit plantje zich bevond, maar inmiddels was het plantje uitgegroeid tot een gigantische plant. Het was een soort allesverwoestend zeemonster, een vleesetende zeeplant. Dat was waar de oorlog om ging. Hier kwam al die troep uit voort, al die clowns, al die koldervissen. Met een zaag ging hij onderwater, in een duikerspak, maar ver kwam hij niet. Hij moest met een onderzeeër, maar die kwam ook niet ver. Hij wist nu in ieder geval waar de oorlog om draaide. Het was een octopusplant.

Vele malen moest hij het gratenorakel raadplegen. De blauwgezichten hielpen met het droogleggen van de plaats waar de octopusplant was. Het was als een zeeheg op de zeebodem. Weer ging hij met zaag bewapend, en begon te zagen. De blauwgezichten begonnen te boren. Maar de octopusplant werd hier alleen maar woester door en erger, en begon meer en meer te groeien. Er moest een hek omheen gebouwd worden, nee, er moest een stenen omheining komen. Deze plant was gevaarlijk. Je kon niet zomaar tegen deze plant strijden. Nog steeds bracht het clowns voort. Nog steeds bracht het kolderwezens voort. De octopusplant moest in een stenen ei.

Maar wat ze ook deden, de octopusplant groeide voort, en brak door welk gesteente dan ook heen. De oorlog duurde voort. Het was een kleefziekte, een romantiziekte.

Een zwijn verkocht de vruchten van zelfverheffing bij de octopusplant. De zwijnenjacht begon. Het zwijn hield de octopusplant groot. Het waren de zwijnen van hoogzucht en hebzucht. Hij moest de zwijnkunde leren. Het was nog steeds een strijd tegen het verleden. Het geheugen moest herschapen worden. De zwijnen hier waren giftig. Zwart als teer waren ze soms, als rookverslavingen.

Pijlen kwamen maar moeilijk door hun dikke huiden heen. Soms leken ze wel van steen of metaal. Ze waren fabriekswerkers. Zij hielden de fabrieken in stand. Zwarte zwijnen van een sprookjesverhaal. Het had hen rijk gemaakt.

Werken moest hij voor betere pijlen. Het was als een gokmachine. Het maakte hem verslaafd. En de pijlen werden door de zwijnen zelf gemaakt en verkocht. Hij moest werken voor de zwijnen. Deze gokmachines gaven niet mee. De gokkers waren uiteindelijk altijd de grote verliezers. Deze gokmachines waren gebouwd op sluwe winstmechaniek. Deze zwijnen waren altijd veilig. Deze zwijnen zaten altijd hoog en droog, want zij hadden deze gokmachines gemaakt.

Hij was in een worsteling met het zwijn, en in een worsteling met een octopus. Het nam zoveel van hem weg.

Het was een gifput. Het gif hield het geheugen op sterk water, bevroren, in een bevroren nachtmerrie.

Hij was in worsteling met een overdosis. Hij zou droommakelaar moeten zijn om hiermee te kunnen afrekenen, niet zomaar dreamdealer of dreamjockey.

Hij kwam tot een kerk genaamd de vol gereformeerde gemeente, de vgg. Bij een struik was er een trappenhuis die naar beneden ging. Onderaan het trappenhuis kwam je in een wildernis waar indianen leefden. Hij vroeg zich af wat de vol gereformeerde gemeente was. In het trappenhuis waren hieroglieven. Aan de zijkanten van het trappenhuis was een klooster. Daar was ook een bibliotheek met boeken die over deze dingen gingen. Het kwam er bij hem op neer dat hij veel moest lezen en leren.

Er lag een dorp naast het klooster. Hier moest hij als droom makelaar mensen hun huis toewijzen. Zo kan de overdosis wegsmelten. Het had zich teveel verzameld op één punt.

Hij moest weer terugkeren naar zijn jeugdherinneringen, naar de nuances. Het was allemaal veel te ver gegaan. Hij had een overdosis gehad. Het voedsel was gedwongen, de medicijnen waren gedwongen, zoveel was gedwongen. Het was een wereld van dwang.

Hij voelde een rode muur om hem heenkomen, alsof hij in een rood ei zat. Hij kon er doorheen kijken, en zag een wereld vol vraatzucht, een wereld die geen grenzen kende. Overdosis had hem geboorte gegeven en nu moest hij het leren temperen. Al deze bloedlijnen, het waren de lijnen van overdosis, al deze families, al deze kerken, scholen en organisaties.

Ze hadden allemaal een grote overdosis gehad en nu moesten ze veel lezen en leren om het in balans te krijgen, in de juiste mate en juiste verhouding. Dat ging aan de hand van een klok en een meter. Maar er was zoveel bedrog hier. Hij kon het zien door het rode doorzichtige gesteente.

Hij zag leprechauns rondvliegen in helicopters en lachend stortten zij zich te pletter tegen het rode gesteente. Ze konden niet meer binnenkomen. Ze konden er niet om rouwen. Nooit zouden ze een traan laten. Ze waren gewetenloos en hersenloos. Ze wisten niet wat emotie was. Het waren aspergers.

Tunnels met hieroglieven gingen langs het strand, langs de campings.

Het was een wereld van lachers ten koste van de ander, en ze lachten zichzelf de dood in.

Als hij in de campingsupermarkt was had hij het gevoel dat hij tot leven kwam, maar wat voor leven was het ? Was het niet allemaal dwangmatig hier ? Het stroomde, maar eerst had hij een confrontatie met de leugen. De bloedlijnen hier klopten niet, want het was de overdosis. Het was besmettelijk en plantte zich haastig voort.

Het was een kleefvirus. Hij moest zoveel mogelijk afstand bewaren, en het bekijken door het rode gesteente om hem heen. Telkens weer stortte het kleefvirus zich te pletter tegen het gesteente. Het zocht naar gaatjes. Het wilde hem niet laten gaan. Het wilde niemand laten gaan. Rusteloos was het telkens op zoek.

Hun glimlachen waren vals. Ze leefden hier van andermans dood. Vergeving en verdraagzaamheid was verraad hier. Het was te ver gegaan, totdat het nalatigheid werd, onverschilligheid. Het was zowel een asperger syndroom als een stockholm syndroom.

Zijn jeugdherinneringen waren als orakelstenen in zijn hand.

Hij moest nu leren afkicken als droommonnik en droompelgrim. Ook de kerken waren gegroeid uit de overdosis. De overdosis had vele tentakels. Het deed zich voor als bloedlijnen. Het kwam gemaskerd als familie en kerk. En alles was dwangmatig, als een allesverwoestend monster.

De blauwgezichten waren zijn jeugdherinneringen. Het waren de ijsgezichten. Toen kleefde alles nog niet zo. Maar de volwassen wereld was een kleverige bende, een kleefvirus. Zo bedreven ze markt. Ze hadden een ziekelijke zucht naar kleven en vernietigen. Het waren kleefbommen. Ze hechtten zich vast aan de breinen van de mensen.

Het kon niet meer bij hem binnen komen. Hij was immers in het rode ei. Hij zag het virus om zich heen voortwoekeren, maar ze luisterden niet naar hem, ze leefden in ontkenning. Dat was ook een bijwerking van de overdosis. Ze waren zaaddriftig, erfdriftig en daardoor marktdriftig. Haastig, ziekelijk en hysterisch waren zij in de ijver van de overdosis, in de race tegen de klok, want ze hadden maar weinig tijd. Hij kon het allemaal niet bijhouden. Hij had niks meer met deze wereld. Hij was in het rode ei. Hij kon alles zien. Hij geloofde er niet meer in.

Teveel hadden ze hem bedrogen. Hij was er klaar mee. De blauwgezichten waren de orakelstenen van zijn jeugd. Die gaven hem moed. Die brachten hem er doorheen. Hij kon er nu creatief mee omgaan. Ze inspireerden hem, als oerwoud-insecten. Ze bliezen leven in hem.

Hoofdstuk 8. De leugensteen

Het paradijs was de herschepping van het geheugen, maar daar kwam veel bij kijken. Hij moest veel spelletjes spelen. Geheugen spelletjes. Ook moest hij veel lezen en leren, en nieuwe herinneringen zouden bruggen kunnen zijn tussen oude herinneringen.

Het was een clownswereld, een moerasgevangenis die hem niet wilde laten gaan. Het was zwaar bewaakt. Alles werd in de gaten gehouden met moerascamera’s. Het was een cameradictatuur, een cameracratie.

De roodgezichtjes, vogeltjes, kwamen hem tegemoet. Zij waren de voorgeboortes en de parallelle levens. Het waren ook orakelstenen in het spel. Ze gingen dieper dan zomaar jeugdherinneringen. Het waren onbewuste herinneringen die nog aan de oppervlakte moesten komen en hun plaats moesten vinden in het spel, in zijn inventaris. Het was een donker geheugen wat hij nog niet kende. Het moest nog ontwaken in hem.

Het was een stuk verloren natuur wat tot hem terugkwam.

De roodgezichten hadden rode pakken met donkere rode helmen. Ze kwamen in treinen voor de nieuwe wereld. Ze predikten wat de bloemen predikten. Het waren de vergeten en verloren levens, de voorgeboortes en de parallelle levens. Hij zag zoveel legers. Ze namen alles over. Het was het donkere gat waar de mensheid niets van afwist. Ze brachten nieuwe verhalen, nieuwe sprookjes, nieuwe spelletjes, en de nieuwe bijbel.

Hij kende de nieuwe bijbel, maar nu kwam het tot leven. Het was alsof de lente was gekomen. Zijn tuin was in groei en bloei, en er waren veel roodgezichtjes.

Hij was depressief. Het kon geen vat op hem krijgen, maar het weefde wel een wereld om hem heen. Hij moest de lijnen van zijn voorgeboortes en parallelle levens leren kennen, de roodlijnen. Hij was helemaal gewurgd door de bloedlijnen. Hier was er het rode tegen het bloed.

Het was alsof er teksten diep in hem waren die begonnen los te komen. Hij moest die teksten onder ogen komen, er vat op krijgen.

Pas toen zijn brein dieper scheurde kon hij deze werelden bezoeken. Hij kwam als vreemdeling. Het was een geheel andere natuur. De roodgezichtjes hadden hem hier gebracht.

Het was een diepere ontwaking door een diepere nachtmerrie, en nu stond alles in de bloei. Zijn kooi was gaan bloeien, het visnet waarin hij lag. Hij lag op het strand, helemaal kapot. Hier woonden alleen inheemse vrouwen. In de verte kon hij watervallen zien. Zijn schip was vergaan. De golven hadden hem hier naartoe gesleurd. Tegen de stroom kon hij niet op. Ze slingerden hem op het strand. Hij probeerde houvast te krijgen op het zand.

Deze vrouwen waren pastoraal, predikten de boodschap van het visnet, hadden hem binnen genomen. Hij moest hun taal leren. Hij moest hun orakels leren. Alles had andere betekenissen hier, diepere betekenissen. Ze lieten hem grot hiëroglieven zien. Hij moest ze ontcijferen. Dat zou een lange tijd duren. Eerst moest hij hun cultuur leren.

Hij kwam in hun ziekenhuis terecht, waar hij dwaalde door de gangen. Hij was nog nooit in zo’n groot ziekenhuis geweest. Het was als een groot dorp. Er was hier zoveel onderricht. De zieken konden hier van alles leren.

Hij moest begrijpen waar hij terecht was gekomen. Het was alsof zijn brein bloedde. De scheur was diep gegaan, maar zo kon hij het ervaren. Ze lieten hem rode bloemenvelden zien. Ze groeiden overal om het ziekenhuis heen, en ook in bakken door het ziekenhuis. Hij kon zichzelf voelen nu. Hij had contact met zichzelf.

Hij wist niet of hij dood of levend was, slapend of wakend. Allerlei lagen van water vloeiden over hem heen als hij in de waterval was. Alles wat hij wist was dat hij goed ziek was. Het leek alsof er pijlen door zijn brein waren gegaan. Maar nu kon hij dit beleven. Het opende nieuwe werelden voor hem. Hij was dieper gegaan dan ooit, alsof hij aan de rand van het universum stond. Allemaal watervallen. Hier werden dromen gemaakt.

Hier splitste alles. Het kleefvirus kon hier niet bestaan.

De ziekenhuisgangen leidden dieper onder de grond waar de geneesmiddelen groeiden. Maar hier waren ook verschrikkelijke kolderkatten. Die konden verschrikkelijk krijsen. Ze leken de geneesmiddelen te bewaken. Hij kwam erachter dat het belangrijk was, want anders zouden de mensen teveel nemen van de geneesmiddelen. Er moest dus een heleboel leed en restrictie bestaan om de mens te beschermen tegen de overdosis. De kolder leidde de mensen af, maar ook daarvan kon men teveel nemen, en daarom waren de roodgezichtjes er.

Hoe dieper hij in deze wereld kwam, hoe meer douane hij bemerkte, en ook de douane oorlogen. Zij streden niet alleen tegen smokkelaars en rebellen, maar zij streden ook tegen elkaar. Het was douane tegen douane, en daarom was er het belang van de douane scholen. Men moest opgeleid worden tot douane, want er waren een heleboel beunhazen aan de gang.

Hij wilde niet bij de douane. Hij vond het zelfbedriegers. Hij wilde een monnik zijn. Maar telkens weer werd hij met de douane geconfronteerd. Hij kwam er bijna niet langs. Vaak werd hij teruggestuurd naar het ziekenhuis of de gevangenis.

Hij wist dat het nodig was, zodat hij geen overdosis van iets zou krijgen. Hij moest het pad volgen. Douane, ziekenhuis, gevangenis en school hoorden daarbij. Er werd veel gewaarschuwd tegen de monniken. Die zouden een overdosis ergens van hebben gehad.

Telkens als hij het niet meer zag zitten hielpen de vogeltjes hem er doorheen. Amsterdam was vol met vogeltjes. Altijd werd hij ‘s ochtends wakker door hen, en als hij het in de ochtend moeilijk had dan hielpen ze hem er doorheen. Vaak moest hij in de middag slapen om er doorheen te komen. De depressie joeg op hem. Het scheurde zijn brein, dieper en dieper, tot diepere werelden.

Hoe kon hij hier leven ? Het was bijna onmogelijk, maar als hij overdag op straat liep en naar de stoplichten keek, dan wist hij hoe belangrijk het was in restrictie te leven, als een balling. Hij kon niet meer terug. Hij moest verder, dieper. En daarom waren er de dubbele lasten.

Altijd weer kwamen de roodgezichtjes bij hem om herinneringen van verloren en vergeten tijden terug te brengen. Altijd weer hadden ze een boodschap om te prediken. Hij wilde bij hen zijn en met hen vliegen, in grote zwermen, over zeeën en landen. Hij wilde weten waar dit alles naartoe zou leiden, de grote rode bron onder ogen willen komen. Het moest diep in de natuur zijn, een groot geheimenis. Hij moest dieper en dieper over de stenen trappen. Er leek geen einde aan te komen. Hij wilde naar het begin, maar hij vroeg zich af of er wel een begin was.

Alles groeide en stroomde met iets mee, maar wat was het ? Door welke krachten werd alles voortgedreven ?

Betere werelden bleven niet. Het waren slechts golven, en dan zakte het weer diep weg. Het was als eb en vloed. Zo bleef hij zoeken.

Hij had het gevoel alsof er een lek zat in zijn brein, maar hij was bang voor de overdosis. Hij moest onder ogen komen dat het leven niet was zoals hij dacht.

Ook de natuur had zijn eigen camera’s. De bomen namen alles van de mens in zich op, om het te herscheppen en te ordenen.

In de diepte van Amsterdam kwam hij uiteindelijk tot de steen die alles omdraaide. Het was een leugensteen. Het was zowel een vloek als een bescherming.

De steen loog en loog maar, en pompte zich zo door de bloedlijnen heen. Het was een standbeeld van een vrouw, maar het standbeeld begon af te brokkelen. Hij herinnerde zijn huwelijk wat als Auschwitz was geweest. Hij wilde er niet meer aan denken.

Hoofdstuk 9. De arena

Hij werd wakker voor de troon van koningin Teliëlza in het land Stugort op de planeet Betelgeuse. Een monsterlijke spin met een mensenhoofd, een mannenhoofd met een snor, had hem een zwaar giftige slag verkocht. Hij was toen in zijn hoofd overgeleverd aan de Amsterdamse nachten, en aan zorg, veel zorg, maar hij was gewoon op de planeet Betelgeuse, en hij hallucineerde door de slag. Hij was een monnik-gladiator, een pelgrim, en hij werkte voor de koningin Teliëlza in de arena.

Hij probeerde te ontwaken en keek naar het beest. Als hij nog een slag zou krijgen, waar zou hij dan terechtkomen ? Hij rees zijn schild op. Er kwamen ook gevaarlijke stralen uit de bek van het beest. Het beest kon zijn mond heel ver openzetten, als een groot zwart gat.

Met zijn knots haalde hij uit naar het beest. Het leek alsof het beest onder stroom stond en hij werd weggeslingerd. Hij zag dat er ook een andere gladiator was. Het was Bensteder. Bensteder had hem al die tijd beschermd toen hij was geslagen. Maar nu leek het alsof Bensteder verwond was door het beest. ‘Wat een kreng,’ dacht hij. Weer haalde hij uit naar het beest, en weer werd hij weggeslingerd door de stroom. Het was alsof hij onder zware voltage was, maar het leek niet tot hem door te dringen. Het was alsof hij in een rood ei was door hetgeen hij had meegemaakt, alsof iets hem beschermde tegen het beest. Snel raakte hij Bensteder aan, die toen ook in een rood stralingsveld kwam, als in een rood ei. Beiden haalden ze weer uit naar het beest, en het beest werd weggedreven. De stroom van het beest kon niet tegen het rode ei op. Hij werkte ook dat er rode stralen uit zijn ogen begonnen te komen die op het beest werden afgezonden, en toen stortte het beest uiteindelijk neer.

De koningin klapte in haar handen. ‘Mijn zus, Soldilia, die in het land Telliix troont zal hier blij mee zijn,’ zei de koningin. Ook het land Geërgo zal hier blij mee zijn. We zijn allemaal zo lang geteisterd geweest door dit monster. Goed werk, gladiatoren. Zo mag ik het zien. Jullie lijden is niet voor niets geweest. Jullie loon zal groot zijn.’

De beide gladiatoren keken naar de koningin. ‘Wat is ons loon, koningin, en wat was de naam van dit beest ? Het lijkt wel alsof er een lek in mijn geheugen zit. Ik kan me niet veel meer herinneren van vroeger,’ zei Bensteder.

‘Hmmm, dus Bensteder is door hetzelfde gegaan als ik,’ dacht hij bij zichzelf.

‘Tektor,’ zei de koningin. ‘Je geheugen zal wel terugkomen.’

‘Wat heeft het beest gedaan ?’ vroeg hij. ‘Ik ben ook mijn geheugen kwijtgeraakt.’

‘Neem voldoende rust,’ zei de koningin. ‘Jullie hebben hard gewerkt. Het geheugen zal vanzelf terugkomen. Het beest is nu verslagen.’

Ze moesten door een deur naast de arena, waardoor ze op een gang kwamen waar de gladiatorenkamers waren. Daar konden ze rusten. Beiden hadden ze hun eigen kamer, tegenover elkaar.

Hij had vreemde gevoelens in zijn buik, en hij ging op zijn bed liggen.

Hij was een gladiator, en daarom was zijn brein verscheurd. Hij had goed werk gedaan. Zijn werk was om hem heen als een spiegel. Zo lang was de spiegel ingeslagen geweest, maar nu begon het te herstellen. Hij was slechts op de planeet Betelgeuse geweest. Alles had zich lopen vervormen sinds zijn breinspiegel was ingeslagen. Hij voelde zich nu als herboren. Het bloed was geworden tot rode straling. Het gif was geworden tot medicijn.

Hij kon het gezicht met de snor niet uit zijn gedachten krijgen. Hij herinnerde zich dat Tektor soms ook meerdere gezichten had, van een andere man, en soms van een vrouw. Hij moest nu herstellen. Het was een lang en zwaar gevecht geweest. het leek wel alsof iemand zijn hoofd probeerde dicht te naaien, de scheur in zijn hoofd. Hij kreeg vele hechtingen.

Hij kon zich nu weer herinneren dat hij in Stugort woonde, op de planeet Betelgeuse. Het voelde alsof zijn ramen werden gelapt. Hij was een vechtmonnik, een gladiatormonnik, van een bepaalde monnikenorde. Hij herinnerde zich Bensteder ook weer een beetje, zijn maat. Ze vochten voor de koningin, tegen beesten en monsters. Zo bewezen ze ook diensten aan andere landen die door deze beesten en monsters werden gekweld.

Teliëlza stond voor zijn bed, de koningin. ‘Ja, je hebt overwonnen,’ zei ze. ‘Mijn zus zou je ook graag willen zien, Soldilia.’ Hij herinnerde hen beiden weer een beetje. ‘Rust eerst maar uit,’ zei ze.

Hij hield zich vast aan zijn bed. Hij was nog wel een beetje duizelig. Toen vertrok de koningin weer.

Na een hele lange tijd werd hij wakker. Hij wist niet hoe lang hij geslapen had. In zijn kamer was een boekenkast vol met boeken over de monsters en beesten van Betelgeuse. Hij begon er doorheen te bladeren. Gladiators op Betelgeuse moesten velen van zulke boeken bestuderen. Ze zaten ervoor op een gladiator school.

Steeds meer van zijn geheugen begon terug te keren. Ook werkte hij in het leger, voor als het oorlog was. Het waren gladiator legers.

Hij was bang voor nieuwe gevechten. Waar Tektor hem had in geworpen wilde hij niet naar terug. Hij kon niet meer. Hij was bang zijn verstand te verliezen. Dat had hij eens al. Moest hij nog een keer terug naar de arena ? Nee, de koningin verbood hem dat. Het was genoeg zo. Het leven, en voornamelijk het monnikenleven, was al zwaar genoeg op zichzelf. Hij mocht nu naar een monniken orde in Geërgo, in de wildernis. Hij zou nog wel opgeroepen kunnen worden voor het leger, maar alleen als het echt noodzakelijk was. Ook Bensteder zou overgeplaatst worden. Er werd gezegd dat beiden verwond waren voor het leven, en dat hen door te laten vechten in de arena als gladiator onverantwoordelijk zou zijn. Ze hadden nu beiden een trauma wat niet meer weg zou gaan. Ze waren klaar om naar Geërgo te gaan.

Het was een lange tocht om daar te komen. Ze kregen een eigen kamer naast elkaar. De kamers hadden boekenkasten met boeken veelal over Geërgo, en ook algemene boeken over Betelgeuse, en allerlei andere soorten boeken die monniken lazen. Beiden waren ze blij dat ze nu hier waren. Het viel hem op dat er veel boeken over amazones waren. Er leefden hier nogal veel amazone stammen in de wildernis, en die waren niet geheel ongevaarlijk. Het leek alsof het probleem zich verschoof. In het verleden bleek het klooster weleens invallen te hebben gehad van amazones, en gingen de monniken in ballingschap. Hij las er wat verhalen over.

Dit was ook de reden dat hij hier wachters zag, gewapende monniken. Hij begon er ‘s nachts dromen over te krijgen dat ze werden aangevallen door amazones en in ballingschap werden genomen. Deze vrouwen waren groot en sterk, veel sterker dan hen.

Hij las over de mannenfokkerijen die sommige kannibaalse amazone stammen hadden. Mannen werden gefokt voor hun bloed en littekenweefsel, zodat ze gewoon door konden leven. Ze werden ook wel de eeuwig verdoemden genoemd. Hij wist niet of dat echt bestond of dat het verhalen waren, maar hij las het in de boeken van de monniken. De monniken vreesden de amazones dus ze waren altijd op hun hoede. Hij vroeg zich af of hij wel op de juiste plaats terecht was gekomen, maar terug wilde hij ook niet.

Hij besloot er met andere monniken over te praten, maar hij merkte op dat ze telkens heel tegenstrijdig waren, en dat ze nogal van mening verschilden met elkaar.

De dromen gingen door in ieder geval, en het werd erger. Ook Bensteder had er last van. Bensteder bleef soms dagen op bed liggen als hij zo’n droom had gehad. Het putte hem uit. Nu hij zijn maat zo zag lijden wist hij dat het gevecht gewoon doorging. Ze waren in principe nog steeds gladiatoren. Nu moesten ze het opnemen tegen de amazones.

Op een dag was er een grote aanval door de amazones op het klooster. Ook hij en Bensteder gingen in gevangenschap. Dit hadden ze al gevreesd. Ze kwamen op een mannen-fokkerij terecht, en werden gehouden voor hun bloed en littekenweefsel, wat ontstond daardat er regelmatig in hen gesneden werd. Ze werden als vee behandeld. Ook moesten ze allerlei werk verrichten. Ze werden als slaaf gehouden.

Bensteder ging hard achteruit en ook hij. Met de amazones viel niet te onderhandelen. Dit was zoals het was.

Hij hoopte maar dat hij het droomde. ‘s Nachts droomde hij over de Amsterdamse nachten. Hij wist niet goed wat erger was. De dromen waren maar kort, en vaak kon hij ze niet goed herinneren. Hij vroeg zich af of de mannen-fokkerij een droom was, maar het kwam bij hem over als de werkelijkheid.

Was dit nu de zin van het leven ? Was hij hiertoe bestemd, om als slaaf gebruikt te worden en als grondstof ? Hij voelde zich weer als in een fabriek, maar dit was een hele primitieve. Uiteindelijk kwam hij tot het besef dat waar hij dan ook kwam, hij altijd wel uitgebuit werd. Gelukkig kon hij nog wegdromen. Maar dit was gewoon onderdeel van het leven. Het had verschillende kanten. Uitbuiting en onderdrukking was er slechts één van. Het leven was veel groter dan dat.

‘De wereld heeft teveel van ons gestolen, en daarom stelen wij het terug,’ zeiden de amazones.

Hij schrok wakker. Het was dus maar een droom. Toen hij verder ging slapen droomde hij weer, dat hij aan een verwilderd en verlaten strand was, en dat de golven woest waren, en dat er een grote octopus in de zee was met vele tentakels. Het ding zat in zijn hoofd en gaf hem al die dromen. Hij had het gevoel dat hij nog steeds een gladiator was, maar een dromengladiator. Was het een gave of een vloek ?

Hij was in worsteling met de octopus. De octopus kwam het strand op en probeerde hem in de zee te sleuren. De octopus kreeg het uiteindelijk voor elkaar en trok hem de diepte in. Hij wist niet waar hij beter kon zijn : bij de octopus, bij de amazones, of in de arena, of in de Amsterdamse nachten, of waren dit allemaal de Amsterdamse nachten ? Maar hij was toch op de planeet Betelgeuse ?

De octopus schoot plaatjes in zijn hoofd, verhalen, en hij vroeg zich af waar het goed voor was. Hij probeerde het neer te pennen toen hij wakker was, alleen maar om later te ontdekken dat hij nog steeds droomde. Hij was in een coma. Iets moest hem daar in gebracht hebben, maar hij wist niet wat. Was het een beest van de arena in Stugort ? Of hadden de amazones hem ergens van afgeduwd ? Het duizelde hem voor zijn ogen. Zijn brein was verscheurd. Was het een octopus of een cobra ? Wat moesten ze van hem ? Het leek meedogenloos, het ging maar door, of was hij op een school ? Het gaf hem informatie. Misschien was het een taal, en de taal moest misschien geleerd worden. Er bleven maar plaatjes in zijn hoofd geschoten worden. Hij bleef maar dromen. Hij was misschien gewoon nog in Stugort in gevecht met één of ander beest. Nee, dat kon niet. Daar was hij weg. Maar waar was hij nu ? Waarom werd hij maar niet wakker ? Bensteder had een kamer naast hem. Zou hij ook door dit soort dingen gaan ?

Misschien had hij complicaties van de Stugort tijd. Misschien was het gif van Tektor nog in hem. Misschien had het hem onherstelbaar aangetast.

Hij moest vechten in zijn dromen, telkens weer. Telkens weer werd hij teruggesleurd naar de arena. Wat waren dit voor beesten ? Wat was dit voor oorlog ? Nee, ze waren nog niet klaar met hem.

Er schreeuwde iets in hem, een beest met vele koppen. Hij wist dat het zijn eigen probleem was op de planeet Betelgeuse. Hij was een droomgladiator. Al deze beesten en monsters waren vormen van de overdosis waartegen hij moest strijden.

‘Mentale steroïden,’ stamelde hij. Ze verkochten hun zielen eraan. Zo groeiden ze uit tot zulke monsters. Hij zag ouders en kinderen in elkaar vergroeien. ‘Waarom, waarom ?’ riep hij uit in grote wanhoop, maar hij moest strijden om niet één met hen te worden, om niet met hen te worden weggesleurd. Hij zag grote, gespierde germanen die deze steroïden verkochten. Ze hadden veelal lang haar. En steeds meer werden ze tot zulke monsters. Monsters met vele koppen, dronken koppen. De mentale steroïden hadden hun breinen weggevreten. Er was nu wat anders voor in de plaats gekomen. Soms leek het op een spin, soms een octopus.

Hoofdstuk 10. Verscheurd tussen Stugort en Geërgo

Vanwege een evacuatie bevel moest hij naar de dichtstbijzijnde autoweg rennen. Ze werden geteisterd door een slang met een varkenskop die soms in een machine van een scheldend kind veranderde. Toen hij bij de autoweg was gekomen ging hij liften. Na een tijdje stopte er een auto die op een raceauto leek. De man in de auto was genaamd Genesisgram. De man was op weg naar een stadje. Genesisgram had een tijdmachine.

Hij zag golven van straling. Waar was hij ? Ze gingen naar een prehistorische wereld, de wereld van het oer-betelgeuse. Ergens halverwege begon de auto vreemd te doen. Na een tijdje vertrouwde hij het niet meer. Het was alsof er in de prehistorische wildernis geen plaats was voor zo’n auto. Hij was bang dat de auto zou ontploffen. De auto ging nog maar heel langzaam, en hij gooide de deur open en sprong eruit. Toen hij wegrende ontplofte de auto met Genesisgram er nog in.

Hij weende. Hij was in zak en as. Hij wist dat tijdreizen gevaarlijk was. Hij was trillerig. Hij probeerde zijn kleding uit te doen die veel te dik was.

‘Genesisgram !’ riep hij.

Toen kwam hij tot een afschuwelijke ontdekking. Vanuit de explosie kwam de slang met de varkenskop. Hij hoorde ook een kind schelden. De monniken zouden nooit zomaar een evacuatie bevel hebben gegeven. Dit monster was gevaarlijk. De slang schoot pijlsnel op hem af, maar begon halverwege weg te smelten. Nog even veranderde het in een leprechauntje en toen in een leeuw, en toen vaagde het helemaal weg. Het had hem bijna gegrepen. De monniken hadden gezegd dat het monster Venus heette. Hij staarde naar de resten van het monster. Er was vrijwel niets van overgebleven. Er was alleen een stofwolkje. Ook was er een vreemd licht. Hij rende er verder van weg, vanwege angst wat er nog zou kunnen gebeuren. Hij wist niet op wat voor wereld hij terecht was gekomen, maar het was de oerwereld van Betelgeuse.

Hij vroeg zich af of de andere monniken de aanval van Venus zouden hebben overleefd. Hij kon niet meer goed nadenken. Hij strompelde naar het eerste de beste huisje waar een oude man zat. ‘Waar ben ik ?’ vroeg hij.

‘In het wilde amazone land,’ zei de man.

‘Hoe kan het dat je overeind bent gebleven ?’ vroeg hij aan de oude man.

‘Ik ben goed bewapend tegen ze,’ zei de oude man.

‘Zijn er hier ook monniken ordes ?’ vroeg hij.

De oude man begon hem uit te lachen. ‘Monniken ordes ? Nee, die houden geen stand tegen de amazones. Ik ben een gladiator.’

‘Dat ben ik ook,’ zei hij.

Weer begon de oude man hem uit te lachen. ‘Je hebt niet eens wapens. Het is een wonder dat je hier hebt kunnen komen,’ zei de oude man. De oude man greep een mes en gaf het aan hem. ‘Hier, begin hier maar mee.’

‘Bedankt,’ stamelde hij.

‘Je hebt minstens ook nog een speer en een net nodig, en pijl en boog zou ook ...’ maar verder kwam de oude man niet.

‘Wat is er ?’ vroeg hij.

Het leek alsof de oude man ergens naar keek. ‘Oh niets,’ zei de oude man.

‘Wat voor monsters zijn hier naast de amazones ?’ vroeg hij.

De oude man liep naar binnen, en kwam na een tijdje weer naar buiten met een boek. ‘Hier, ga dit maar lezen,’ zei de oude man.

‘Ben je alleen ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Mijn makkers zijn allemaal dood,’ zei de oude man. ‘Ik kan me hier goed verdedigen, maar er zijn wel oude mannen nederzettingen, alleen vrijheid hebben ze nooit lang. Het trekt amazones aan. Je kunt beter alleen blijven. We zijn nu al in gevaar met z’n tweeën. Dan voelen de amazones zich bedreigd. Als eenling laten ze je meestal meer met rust.’

‘Dat wist ik niet,’ zei hij. ‘Moet ik weggaan ?’

‘Blijf nog maar even,’ zei de oude man. ‘Maar je kunt zeker niet te lang blijven.’

‘Ik ga liever nu weg,’ zei hij. ‘Ik wil je niet in gevaar brengen.’

De oude man ging weer naar binnen en kwam terug met een net, een speer, en een boog met een pijlenkoker. ‘Neem dit allemaal maar dan, dan weet je zeker dat je je kunt verdedigen als ze komen. Een man zonder wapens is gemakkelijke prooi en dat zouden ze zeker niet zomaar langs zich heen laten gaan. Gewapende eenlingen hebben de grootste overlevingskans hier.’

Hij nam de wapens aan, bedankte de oude man, en liep weg. Het was een dorre wildernis. Alles leek droog. Hij was op zoek naar water. Na lang lopen kwam hij bij een rivier aan met een waterval. Hij meende tussen de bomen ook een kamp te zien. Opeens kwam er een vrouw op hem aflopen. Ze was ook bewapend, en er waren riemen om haar lichaam, dunne riemen van bruin leer. ‘Wat kom je doen ?’ vroeg de vrouw.

‘Ik was op zoek naar water,’ zei hij.

‘Genoeg hier,’ sprak de vrouw.

‘Wie zijn jullie ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Oh, een amazone stam,’ zei de vrouw.

‘Jullie hebben geen problemen met mijn aanwezigheid ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Nee, waarom ?’ vroeg ze.

‘Ik ben een man, en ik dacht dat amazones het niet zo op mannen hadden, misschien vanwege dreiging,’ zei hij.

De vrouw begon hem uit te lachen. ‘Een man alleen ? Nee, geen probleem, maar als het een grote groep is, dan is het een groot probleem.’ Hij moest even weer aan Genesisgram denken, en treurde erover. Hij voelde zich depressief.

De vrouw liep weer terug naar haar kamp.

Hij vond een tunnel onder de grond, en een ondergrondse wereld. Hier woonden leeuwen, hyena’s en allerlei wild. Ook woonden er amazone stammen. Hij was op zoek naar een woning. Misschien moest hij het zelf bouwen. Hij was in ieder geval bewapend, dus hij kon overleven.

Hij vroeg zich af hoe het met Geërgo en de andere landen was afgelopen sinds de komst van Venus, het monster.

Hij vond vreemde harde besjes waarvan hij kon leven. Het waren een soort rode erwten. Het had een drop-achtige smaak. Anijs-achtig.

Hij werd heen en weer geslingerd tussen woede, angst en depressie.
Hij hoorde toen ineens de stemmen van monniken op de gang, en werd wakker. Alles was maar een droom geweest. Hij moest er aan wennen dat hij een droomgladiator was.

Hij schreef de dromen op. Zo maakte hij boeken over de monsters. De monsters wilden Betelgeuse niet loslaten. Ze wilden ook zijn hoofd niet loslaten, want hij moest ze nog bevechten. Er was geen ontsnapping aan. Hij moest er dwars doorheen. Het was alsof hij nog steeds in Stugort werkte. Geërgo was slechts de verdieping ervan.

Stugort was zijn verleden, en het leefde voort in hem. Het was zowel een vloek als een gave. Nu moest hij het nog in zichzelf ontwikkelen als een talent. Dit ging door veel schaamte, schuldgevoel, woede, angst en depressie heen, maar er was een weg voor hem. Soms voelde hij zich als een scheldend kind, als een blinde vuistvechter, maar dan gaven de boeken hem richting.

Hij wilde schilden, medicijnen en wapens vervaardigen tegen de monsters, maar steeds meer en meer besefte hij dat dat het om de boeken gingen die deze dingen bevatten. Zo moest hij droombibliothecaris worden.

Hij wilde schrijver worden over al deze dingen, droomschrijver, opdat de droomgeschiedenis niet verloren zou gaan.

Hij moest naar de velden van de amazones om een droomjager te worden. Zij leefden dieper in het land Geërgo, dieper in de wildernissen, voorbij de monniken-ordes.

In de ogen van de amazones waren de monniken slechts vagebonden.

Er waren amazone stammen die vriendelijk naar mannen waren, en er waren amazone stammen die mannen tot waanzin dreven en tot zelfmoord, en er waren ook amazone stammen die mannen uithongerden zonder ze te laten sterven, hen gebruikten voor hun bloed en littekenweefsel, en ervoor zorgden dat ze geen zelfmoord konden plegen.

Voor hem werd het steeds meer zaak om de amazone stammen in kaart te brengen, er boeken over te schrijven. Er moest meer informatie over komen, over hoe deze dingen werkten. Hij kon wel nagaan hoe de amazone stammen zo geworden waren. Er moest een hoop misbruik door mannen aan vooraf zijn gegaan.

De monniken zeiden altijd dat de amazones uiteindelijk hun lot zouden worden. Apparaten zoals Tektor en Venus stonden daar altijd nog tussen, maar ze vroegen zich altijd af wat erger was, de monsters of de amazones. De monniken zeiden dat de amazones te sterk waren, en dat ze veel grotere legers hadden. Het was slechts een kwestie van tijd. Hij vroeg zich af of er niet te onderhandelen viel met de amazones, maar de monniken zeiden dat de wildere stammen daar niet open voor stonden, alleen de vriendelijkere stammen, maar die vormden geen bedreiging, en zouden uiteindelijk ook in de handen vallen van de wredere, brutere en wildere amazones, die ook veel robuuster waren. De toekomst was van de wildere amazones, zeiden de monniken. Zo was dat in het oer ook. Ze zaten nu nog in een tussenfase, maar dat was allemaal maar tijdelijk.

Hij vroeg zich af wat er met hem zou gebeuren. Er waren een heleboel verschillende soorten van wildere amazone stammen. Het hing er dus vanaf wat er met hen zou gebeuren. Hij wilde in ieder geval niet in verkeerde handen vallen, en daarom schreef hij boeken.

Hij wist meer en meer het verschil niet meer tussen droom en werkelijkheid. Hij haalde dingen door elkaar, en de monniken spraken tegenstrijdig. Hij moest onderscheid maken tussen monniken en droommonniken. Veelal hadden de monniken ook een andere mening. Zo was dat ook bij de amazones. Hij moest geschoold worden, maar in hoeverre was het leven een droom ? Hoe dan ook had hij vaak woede uitbarstingen en angst uitbarstingen, gepaard gaande met vele depressies. Daar had hij vervolgens weer schaamte gevoelens over en schuldgevoel. Het zoog hem telkens weer weg, als een monster dat hem in de greep hield. Hij kon er maar moeilijk mee over weg. Hij werd weggezogen, meegezogen, in grote wanhoop en moedeloosheid, en hij vroeg zich af wat voor zin het nog allemaal had. Hij voelde zich gehandicapt. Invalide, soms voelde hij zich verlamd. Het was alsof hij was gestoken door een vreemde vlieg, of alsof hij ergens van af was gevallen, van hoog, of dat iemand met een grote steen op zijn hoofd had geslagen. Wie ? De beesten, de monniken, of de amazones ?

Hij had te lang als gladiator gewerkt in Stugort. Het had zijn tol geëist. Zijn hoofd was niet meer wat het geweest was. Hij had problemen met nadenken en herinneren. En hier in Geërgo kwam hij ook niet tot rust. De monniken hadden gezegd dat hij het de tijd moest gunnen, maar ze hadden het ook over de dreiging van de amazones, en dat het uiteindelijk toch wel hun lot zou zijn. Ze hadden zelf de moed al opgegeven, en toch probeerden ze hem moed in te spreken.

Hoofdstuk 11. De opstanden

Geërgo was een dystopie, net zoals de andere landen. Van zijn gladiatorenschap kon hij in wezen niet vluchten. Hij vroeg zich af wat erger was : Stugort of Geërgo. Maar hij wilde daar zijn waar hij nodig was. Boeken gaven hem de nodige afleiding. Dan was hij even ergens anders. Hij was geinteresseerd in monnikenboeken, gladiatorboeken en amazone boeken. Het was voor hem een sport de besten van de soorten te verzamelen. Het gaf hem hoop en doorgang in zijn gedachten. Hij zag de gevaren in van al te gemakkelijke utopieën, namelijk overdosis en indutting. Vandaar dat hij geinteresseerd was in boeken over dystopie, zoals hij zelf ook in een dystopie leefde.

In een buurland was Harpé de religieuze leider van een beweging genaamd de zondak. Ook zij hadden hun eigen monniken en het was een beweging die zich tegen de dreiging van de amazones keerde. Alles ging om mannelijke macht, kracht en stoerheid, desnoods door steroïden. Ook lieten de mannen van deze religie zich vaak tattoeëren met religieuze teksten. Het uitgangspunt van de religie was dat de religie moest groeien door geweld, niet door geduldig te wachten, want dan zouden de amazones daar misbruik van maken. Ze moest groot worden in zo kort mogelijke tijd, dus daarom was het een dwangreligie door geweld. Geweld werd verheerlijkt.

Het was het begin van de monniken oorlogen. De zondaken beweging groeide snel, want geweld was immers de kortste weg. Alles ging door snelheid en bedrog. Zo dacht men een antistof te hebben tegen de amazones. Ook de monniken in Geërgo moesten eraan geloven, maar ze gaven niet zomaar op. Ze wisten dat de zondaken bezig waren een dwangleger te maken tegen de amazones. De man werd een karikatuur van zichzelf door alle spieren en tattoeages. En zo werd Harpé al snel bestempeld als het nieuwe monster. Voor de monniken van Geërgo was het duidelijk dat de zondaken in bezit waren genomen door de overdosis. De monniken van Geërgo moesten vechten voor hun leven en hun vrijheid. Het waren juist de zondaken die de amazones erger konden maken dan ze al waren.

Harpé was een verschrikkelijke dictator. Bij de zondaken waren vrouwen slaven. Ook werden zij gedwongen om met de zondaken te trouwen. Het waren dwanghuwelijken. Alles was dwang in het rijk van Harpé. De zondaken waren bang voor vrouwen en hadden geen respect voor ze. De nieuwe orde was ook niet vies van huiszoekingen. Het was een angstcultuur en een dwangcultuur, en het wekte de woede van vrouwen op. Als ze konden dan vluchtten zij om amazone stammen te vormen, of zich te voegen bij bestaande amazone stammen.

Nu waren er twee dreigingen : de zondaakse dreiging en de amazone dreiging, naast de dreigingen van welke andere monsters dan ook. De zondaken werden ook wel de ijzeren monniken genoemd, omdat ze zich veelal kleedden in ijzer. Ook gebruikten ze veel veren, want vogels waren voor hen een beeld van het ontkomen aan de amazones en het verslaan van de amazones.

Maar ergens hield de macht van de zondaken op. De tijden waren aan het veranderen en men hield niet meer zozeer vast aan vaste structuren. Er begonnen spelletjes te komen van de monniken van Geërgo tegen de ijzeren monniken, en de zondaken tegen de amazones. Ook waren er computerspelletjes van. Het begon meer en meer tot een verhaal te worden. Maar ook kwam het nog vaak voor in zijn dromen. In zijn dromen hadden de amazones grote macht, en waren er ook vaak opstanden van de zondaken. In zijn hoofd ging de strijd door.

Einde

DE ZWARTE KONING

DE ZWARTE KONING

De Zwarte Koning
Uitgave : Monniken Wegwijzer
1970-2025
2025

Taal : Rodenbergs-Nederlands

Voor de omslag-afbeelding is gebruik gemaakt van het Woordweefgetouw

Hoofdstuk 1. De zwartkoninkjes
Hoofdstuk 2. De geheime brug
Hoofdstuk 3. De wapenfabriek
Hoofdstuk 4. Naar Zaalveringen
Hoofdstuk 5. De vliegenplagen
Hoofdstuk 6. De voorhangsels van de amazones
Hoofdstuk 7. Het standbeeld
Hoofdstuk 8. Het lot van Tagula
Hoofdstuk 9. De Spiegelvelden
Hoofdstuk 10. De mannenhaters

Hoofdstuk 1. De zwartkoninkjes

Tagula probeerde uit de psychiatrie te komen om zich te voegen bij de monniken. De monniken waren in zijn ogen veel pastoraler, maar hij moest aan nogal wat dingen voldoen voordat het klooster hem zou toelaten. Het was mooi natuurgebied waarin het klooster stond. Tagula had er alles voor over. Eén van de hoofdregels was vegetarisme. Tagula ging ervoor, maar ‘s nachts werd hij geplaagd door dromen over vlees en over de jacht. De monniken legden hem uit dat het niet zo vreemd was, want het was immers een strijd tegen het vlees, en een jacht naar hogere kennis.

Hij wilde weg uit de psychiatrie. Ze hadden gezegd dat hij een gespleten persoonlijkheid had omdat hij symbolisch had gesproken, geloofservaringen had, en sociaal contact ontweek. Hij had een goede reden om sociaal contact veelal te ontwijken. Hij vond het belachelijk dat ze daar een slaatje uit probeerden te slaan. Ook noemden ze hem paranoïde.

Hij wilde daar weg. Dat ging niet gemakkelijk. Hij moest door allerlei procedures heen. Ze hadden hem zijn vrijheid ontnomen. Hij werd voortdurend ondervraagt. Om de antwoorden gaven ze niet. Het werd altijd omgedraaid. Het ging hen puur om het geld. Het ging hen erom hem nog dieper in de put te brengen, zodat hij er nooit meer uit zou komen. Hij voelde het als een fuik. Hij was natuurlijk net als vele anderen voor hen een goede bron van inkomsten. Daartoe hadden ze de tandarts opgetrommeld die vullingen tegen de zenuw hadden aangelegd, wat ook de reden was dat hij sociaal contact vermeed, want zijn zenuwstelsel lag hierdoor overhoop.

Al met al was het een groot komplot tegen zijn leven. De monniken zag hij als zijn enige uitweg, maar die lieten hem niet zomaar toe. Tagula moest vegetarisch zijn, en aan verdere kloosterregels onderworpen zijn. Het was een strakke discipline, maar hij ging ervoor.

Vanwege de vullingen die te diep waren gelegd had hij huid problemen en zenuw problemen. Hij had een hele lijst aan problemen, waar de psychiatrie gretig gebruik van maakte, oftewel misbruik. Ze probeerden het tussen zijn oren te stoppen, terwijl ze zelf eerst iets tussen zijn oren hadden gestopt. Zo was de psychiatrie dubbele lasten voor hem, als de farao die hem niet wilde laten gaan. Zovelen zaten in hetzelfde schuitje. Hij hoorde overal klachten. Daar werd vervolgens niets mee gedaan. Farao wilde het volk niet laten gaan, en de Heere had het hart van de farao verhard.

Het leven bestaat uit variabelen. Het is altijd weer anders, ook met name als je het in een doosje probeert te stoppen. Het springt er dan altijd uit en neemt een andere route. Dat had hij wel in de gaten. Zijn leven ging niet als voorspeld. Eigenlijk wilde hij helemaal niet vegetarisch zijn. Eigenlijk wilde hij bij de natuurvolkeren leven, bij de indianen, zo diep in de wildernis, en leven van wat voor handen was, wat de natuur gaf, maar de monniken drongen er bij hem op aan om vegetarisch te worden, om tegen het vlees te strijden, tegen het leven van vlees. Hij ging ervoor, ook omdat de monniken hem verder zouden kunnen helpen, maar hij had wel die diepe drangen ook van binnen om bij de indianen te leven, net zoals hen te zijn. Hij schaamde zich ervoor.

‘Waarom moeten we vegetarisch zijn ?’ vroeg Tagula vaak aan de monniken. De monniken legden hem dan haarfijn uit dat het niet de bedoeling was tegen God’s schepping te strijden, maar tegen het vlees, het ego, het afgeweken zelf. De monniken streden ook tegen de psychiatrie, die volgens hen dat soort leugens brachten dat je vlees zou moeten eten. De monniken zagen de psychiatrie als het instituut van het vlees.

Tagula zag niet in wat ze bedoelden, maar toch ging hij ervoor, omdat de monniken hem zouden helpen uit de psychiatrie te komen. Hij zag de monniken als een tussenstap. Voor hen wilde hij wel vegetarisch worden, maar uiteindelijk wilde hij toch bij de indianen. Dan zou hij nog dieper de wildernis inmoeten. Rechtstreeks zou dat niet lukken. De psychiatrie zou hem nooit zomaar laten gaan. Alleen de monniken hadden die macht.

Maar er was iets wat aan hem knaagde. Hij had ook wroeging over hoe hij dacht en was. Misschien had de psychiatrie dan toch gelijk dat hij een gespleten persoonlijkheid had. De monniken vonden dat onzin. Ze zeiden dat ieder mens een oude natuur en een nieuwe natuur had, en dat die met elkaar in gevecht waren. Ze beschuldigden de psychiatrie van boeren bedrog. Die zouden alles doen voor het geld. Tagula dacht dat het misschien wel zijn lot was. Als hij de boeken las die hij van de monniken kreeg dan was het eigenlijk voor hem veel te hoog gegrepen. Hij moest zoveel dingen ervoor doen. En zo begon hij meer en meer de psychiatrie schoon te praten.

Soms hadden de monniken het echt gedaan in zijn ogen. Dan noemde hij hen zelfs gek. Soms dacht hij dat de monniken een gevaar voor de samenleving waren, en dat ze ook de psychiatrie in moesten. Natuurlijk zei hij dat niet. Dat hield hij voor zich. Maar tegen anderen zei hij het wel, en soms kregen de monniken dat ook via via te horen. Daar waren ze niet blij mee. Ze vroegen zich af of hij wel de juiste keuze was, maar ze moesten ook verdraagzaam zijn. Ze mochten mensen alleen maar beoordelen naar draagkracht. Dat stond ook zo in hun reglementen.

Tagula was voor hen ook een soort prooi. Zo konden ze hun geloofsgemeenschap bouwen. Tagula was voor hen ook een fokdier. De monniken waren gericht op groei, anders zouden ze niet overleven. Zij hadden Tagula ook nodig. Tagula vertrouwde het niet. Soms vond hij de psychiatrie onbetrouwbaar, en soms vond hij de monniken onbetrouwbaar, en soms zichzelf. Hij werd heen en weer geslingerd, en had daarom als ideaal en droombeeld om uiteindelijk bij de indianen te wonen, zo gewoon in de natuur, in een tent, of hut, of nog beter een hol. Eigenlijk wilde hij een holbewoner zijn om de oude hiëroglieven op te lossen.

Tagula was geobsedeerd met oude talen en de hiëroglieven. Die waren volop te vinden in de wildernis. Tagula studeerde door, ook al zat hij in de psychiatrie, ook al werd hij door velen niet serieus genomen. Mensen met een gespleten persoonlijkheid werden niet serieus genomen. Dat had iemand op een papiertje geschreven die al zijn woorden had verdraaid, en het papiertje, of boekje, of de agenda, was heiliger dan de bijbel. Als er ergens pausen waren dan was het wel in de psychiatrie. Hij had een haat-liefde verhouding met de industrie van de psychiatrie, maar als hij aan de tandarts dacht dan was het gewoon grotendeels haat, want die had zijn leven verwoest en daardoor was hij hier in verzeild geraakt. Hij kon niet normaal opgroeien.

Ook zijn vegetarische ouders haatte hij. Zij hadden hem in contact gebracht met de monniken, maar ze hadden ook dingen met hem gedaan waar hij niet over kon praten. Zowel de tandarts als zijn ouders waren de hoofdzaak waarom hij in de psychiatrie zat. Dat was ook een van de redenen waarom hij vegetarisme diep van binnen haatte. Hij wist dat het moest, dat het moest om verder te komen, hier doorheen te kunnen, maar hij koppelde het aan zijn vegetarische ouders, die in zijn ogen monsters waren, ook al hadden ze hem in contact gebracht met de monniken.

Zijn ouders waren geen mensen, maar monsters. Op jonge leeftijd kwam hij door hen in de psychiatrie, en door de tandarts bleef hij in de psychiatrie. En de psychiatrie was niet vegetarisch, en dus hij ook niet. De monniken waren dat wel, maar ...

Het woog er allemaal niet tegenop. Hij zat gewoon vast. Misschien was het wel een stockholm syndroom. De monniken noemden niet-vegetarischen aspergers. Gebrek aan empathie.

Wat had de psychiatrie met hem gedaan ? Leugens ? Verraad ? Drugs ? Zijn vader was politie agent, maar volgens Tagula hoorde zijn vader thuis in de gevangenis. Zijn ouders wilde dat hij weg zou gaan uit de psychiatrie, maar door hen zat hij erin. Zij wilden dat hij bij de monniken zou zijn, maar hij werd gek van alle reglementen. En het lukte hem gewoon niet vegetarisch te zijn. Soms zei hij tegen de monniken dat vlees eten bij de evolutie hoorde, maar de monniken noemden het devolutie. De monniken noemden het luilekkerland, lekker gemakkelijk de ander als gebruiksvoorwerp of wegwerp-artikel zien. Hij begreep hen niet, maar wilde het toch proberen. Het was niet wie hij was. Misschien was hij wel asperger en had hij een gebrek aan empathie. Was het ziekte of zonde ?

De monniken waren erg verschillend. De ene probeerde hem een schuldgevoel aan te praten, de ander noemde het een ziekte, een syndroom. In hun ogen had hij geen gespleten persoonlijkheid. Dat maakte de psychiatrie hem maar wijs. Hij moest strijden tegen zijn oude natuur. Dat hoorde niet bij hem. De psychiatrie wilde hem ontvoeren, volgens de monniken. Dat was hen ook gelukt. De monniken waren in hun ogen zijn grote bevrijders, maar het was wel onder voorwaarde.

Tagula zou een monnik moeten worden. Maar Tagula wilde een natuurmens zijn. Natuurlijk waren de monniken al min of meer natuurmensen, meer dan de chemische psychiatrie, die veel te klinisch was, veel te steriel, veel te natuuronvriendelijk, veel te lichaamsonvriendelijk, maar Tagula vond de monniken ook niet natuurlijk genoeg. Hij wilde dieper de wildernis in. Hij hoopte dat de monniken hem zouden laten gaan als hij daar zou wonen.

Zijn vader was dus politie agent, bedrijfs-agent. Hij vond dat ook nogal erg klinisch. Het was hem allemaal te vrolijk, niet sober genoeg. Zijn vader was dan vegetarisch, maar vaak dronken, en had dingen met hem gedaan waarover hij niet durfde te spreken. Zijn vader had een hekel aan de psychiatrie, want hij vond dat de psychiatrie Tagula van hem had gestolen. De psychiatrie had Tagula opgevoed sinds jonge leeftijd. Zijn vader zei dat de psychiatrie hem voor galg en rad liet opgroeien.

Altijd werd hij ‘s ochtends wakker door de zwartkoninkjes, de kleine zwarte vogeltjes die hem in de tuin kwamen bezoeken. Dat gaf zijn leven waarde, daar hield hij zich aan vast. Het bracht hem hoop. Maar hoe dan ook was hij in grote verwarring, werd hij heen en weer geslingerd, en dat zou dan een gespleten persoonlijkheid moeten zijn. Dan zou iedereen een gespleten persoonlijkheid hebben, zeiden de monniken vaak, want iedereen is innerlijk verdeeld en heeft te strijden tegen de oude natuur. Die moest afgelegd worden. Daar mocht je jezelf niet mee identificeren. Je moest jezelf verloochenen. Dat kwam bij Tagula soms over alsof je geen eigen persoonlijkheid mocht hebben. Je mocht geen dubbelleven er op nahouden, en ook jezelf niet zijn. Wat moest je dan ? Toch vond hij dat veel van die monniken ijzersterke persoonlijkheden hadden. Soms benauwde hem dat. Dan had hij liever een gespleten persoonlijkheid. Dan leefde hij liever in twijfel, dan zo zeker te zijn van alles. Hij vond dat wat onwerkelijk. Het was toch vaak heel anders dan je dacht. Het leven was veel groter dan dat.

Zijn vader had ook een ijzersterke persoonlijkheid. Maar waar had dat hem geleid ? Hij moest er niet aan denken. Eigenlijk kon hij gewoon geen respect opbrengen voor het vegetarisme. Het had iets onwerkelijks. Iedereen leefde van elkaar. De één z’n dood is de ander z’n brood. Dat was industrie. Dat was communicatie. Dat was leven. Hij nam het niet zo nauw. Je moest toch wat ? Er was zonder dit geen leven mogelijk. Altijd moest er wel een leven opgeofferd worden voor iets. Maar dan voelde hij zich weer schuldig door die gedachten.

‘Op welke manier denk je het leven dan in te vullen ?’ vroegen de monniken hem weleens. Hij had ook vaak het gevoel alsof zij ondervragers waren, alsof ze ergens voor werkten, en natuurlijk was dat ook zo. Er ging een zekere dreiging uit vanuit de monniken. Hoe zou het met hem aflopen als hij niet zou toehappen ?

In de psychiatrie hadden ze het veel over barbecues en balkenbrij. Hij wist niet eens wat balkenbrij was, bleek ook een soort vlees te zijn. ‘Lekker balkenbrij eten,’ zeiden ze dan. Er liepen ook patienten rond die de moed al hadden opgegeven. ‘Geen kruid tegen opgewassen,’ zeiden ze dan. Vaak gingen ze dan kaarten, en ook dan moest je al het geklaag aanhoren als ze slechte kaarten hadden. ‘Oh, moeder, wat een piene piene piene’, en ‘het is weer bar en boos,’ en ‘je zit de boel te verzieken.’ En dan gingen soms de kanariepietjes ook flink tekeer, en dan ging er weer een doek over de kooi. Er stond ook een spel met een vreemde naam in de kast wat niemand ooit gespeeld had. Vaak stond het ook op de kast, was nogal een lage kast, alsof de begeleiders daarmee wilden zeggen : ‘Probeer het eens,’ maar niemand deed het. Soms speelden ze ook barricade, memory of mens erger-je-nieten, en natuurlijk monopolie. Sommige patienten hadden hun eigen monopoly spel gemaakt, en eentje had een eigen pim-pam-pet spel gemaakt, maar het draaien ging nogal stroef. Je kwam er eigenlijk niet verder mee, maar het was leuk geprobeerd. Sommigen waren echt eindeloos creatief. Het was interessant volk, en soms was hij trots dat hij erbij hoorde. Het waren de overlevenden. Het was het kleine overblijfsel. Het was alsof zij al de weg tot de wildernis hadden gevonden, en ze namen hem mee. Naar de monniken gingen ze niet. Vaak leek het wel alsof de begeleiders van de psychiatrie de monniken waren. Sommigen zaten hoog op het paard, maar anderen kropen over de grond, nog wel lager dan alle anderen. Sommigen leken wel onder de grond te leven. Die zag je dan zo nu en dan, en dan leek het wel alsof ze helemaal onder de modder zaten. Moddermensen, bijna als zwartkoninkjes, en dan brachten ze hun boodschappen, hun orakeltaal.

De zwarte koning, zo noemde ze hem ook weleens, omdat hij dingen vaak zo zwart zag, en omdat hij hele donkerbruine ogen en donkerbruin haar had. Hoe dan ook vermeed hij veelal sociaal contact en zat hij veel op zijn kamer. Dan keek hij naar buiten om te zien of er nog zwartkoninkjes waren. Soms ging hij er met een begeleider op uit om vogeltjes te kijken met een verrekijker in de natuur. Als ze nog dieper zouden gaan dan zouden ze bij de monniken terechtkomen, en als ze dan nog verder zouden gaan, dan zouden ze bij de indianen terechtkomen. Eigenlijk wilde hij het wel zien, maar de begeleider stond het niet toe. Dat zou allemaal te ver weg zijn. Ze hadden altijd allerlei smoesjes.

Op een dag zeiden de monniken dat ze wel zouden willen onderhandelen met de indianen om hem daar te krijgen. Hij zou dan wel onder God's oordeel komen vanwege de jacht, maar het was zijn eigen keuze. Tagula zei dat hij niet kon jagen. Daar was hij veel te zwak voor. Hij voelde zich verlamd door alles wat de tandarts hem had aangedaan, en alle medicijnen die hij had geslikt. Het had zijn hele oriëntatie overhoop gegooid. Hij voelde zich als een stier in het stierengevecht, totaal hopeloos. Hij kon hier niets tegen doen. Hij voelde zich als een beteugeld paard, maar hij kon niks. Hij was een schaap, hij was een muis, niet opgewassen tegen dit soort dingen.

'Waar ben je mee bezig ?' zei een stem tegen hem in de nacht. Tagula dacht dat het de stem van God was. Het leek alsof hij donder en bliksem hoorde, en hij werd er bang van. De psychiatrie zette hem toen op medicijnen tegen angst, en ze dachten dat hij gek aan het worden was. Nu droegen ze dat als bewijs dat hij een gespleten persoonlijkheid had. Hij hoorde immers stemmen. Nu wilde ze hem nog minder laten gaan, want ze vonden dat hij hun hulp toch echt nodig had. De monniken zouden het alleen maar erger maken, volgens de psychiatrie. De monniken werden als grote boosdoener aangewezen vanwege hun dreigen. Tagula zei toen dat het toch echt God was, want het was geen monnikenstem. Voor Tagula was het echt een totale ommekeer. Hij wilde nu God dienen die hij had gehoord, en God was toch meer in overeenstemming met de monniken dan met de psychiatrie, en bij de indianen zijn wilde hij ook niet meer, want die waren goddeloos in zijn ogen, voornamelijk omdat ze veelal niet vegetarisch waren, maar een monnik zei dat er ook wel vegetarische natuurvolkeren waren. Na de ervaring van Tagula vonden de monniken het beter dat hij gewoon bij hen zou blijven, want nog dieper in de wildernis leven zou niet praktisch genoeg zijn.

Tagula was het er wel mee eens, maar hij wilde ook wel kluizenaar zijn in een grot, of gewoon op zichzelf wonen. Hij vroeg zich af of dat kon, en daarom zag hij de monniken als tussenstap. In ieder geval na de ervaring had Tagula geen moeite meer met de reglementen van de monniken, en zo stapte hij over. Hij werd daar hartelijk ontvangen met veel gejuich, en ze hielden die dag een feest vanwege de komst van Tagula. Hij kreeg zijn eigen kamer. Hij kon uitzien op de natuur. Hij vond het een wonderlijke ervaring. Nu kon hij alleen of met de monniken door de kloostertuin en de omliggende wildernis dwalen. Hij hoopte dat de zwartkoninkjes ook hier zouden komen, en dat was gelukkig het geval. Ook de monniken werden elke dag weer door hen wakker gemaakt. Zo begon Tagula zijn nieuwe leven. De monniken zorgden ervoor dat zijn gevulde kiezen werden verwijderd, en Tagula voelde zich helemaal opleven, alsof hij zijn bloed weer voelde stromen. Hij merkte dat hij ineens volle controle had over zijn linkerarm. Alle zenuwobstakels en motorische obstakels waren weg sinds de gevulde kiezen waren verwijderd. Hij merkte ook dat hij minder moe was. Hij had veel meer energie. Ook begonnen zijn huidproblemen langzaam maar zeker af te nemen. Nog wel had hij soms veel pijn in zijn gebit, maar sinds het verwijderen van de gevulde kiezen was het al veel minder. Het werd voor hem weer leefbaar. Hij ging er vaker op uit, ging weer mee naar de supermarkt, of soms zelfs alleen. Dan deed hij inkopen voor het klooster, of gewoon voor zichzelf. Hij draaide goed mee in huishoudelijke taken.

Op een nacht had hij weer een droom. Hij stond voor een huis, en maakte de deur open. Een donkere vrouw in het huis stond in de deuropening en vroeg hem : ‘Waarom hebt gij de deur opengedaan ?’ Hij bleef er maar over praten over deze ervaring. Het was groots in zijn leven, alsof hij weer een ontmoeting met God had gehad.

Als hij naar de zwartkoninkjes keek dan zag hij God. Ook de monniken noemden hem zwartkoninkje of de zwarte koning. Tagula was er heilig van overtuigd dat de zwartkoninkjes hem hier hadden gebracht, dat zij hem hadden gered, en hij was één van hen. Zij brachten de boodschappen die hij nodig had, en legden de hiëroglieven uit, wat de psychiatrie verder dan ook van hem zou denken. De psychiatrie was echt het oude leven wat hij moest afleggen, en zo ook de tandarts. Hij was nu op de rug van het zwartkoninkje. Het zwartkoninkje wist de weg, als gestuurd door God. Nu had de zwarte koning een ontmoeting gehad met de zwarte koningin. Samen stonden ze zij aan zij op het schaakbord. Zij waren van de natuur, en de witte stenen waren van de chermische, klinische en steriele onnatuur, of tegennatuur, de anti-natuur, met al hun vreemde lichaamsonvriendelijke giffen. Kolonisten waren het. Maar nu lagen die witte schaakstukken omver, en waren van het schaakbord afgevallen, aan de rand. In gebroken stukken lagen ze daar, opdat ze nooit meer zouden kunnen opkomen. Of toch ? In zijn geheugen had hij nog strijd.

De zwartkoninkjes waren aan zijn zijde op het schaakbord. De witte koning brulde als een draak. Nu moest hij de jacht aangaan, anders zou hij het alsnog verliezen. De monniken waren aan zijn zijde. Zij waren veelal donkerbruin gekleed. Ook zij waren zwartkoninkjes. Er was een heel leger van hen. Ook de witte koningin brulde. Soms had hij nog nachtmerries, maar de natuur begon hem meer en meer over te nemen. Meer en meer kon hij alles plaatsen, meer en meer speelde hij het spel, en werd er handig in. Goede kaarten had hij dit keer getrokken.

De witte chemische kerk in de stad brulde, maar hij was ver weg in een zwerm zwartkoninkjes, ver weg in de natuur. Eens had hij zijn tanden met jif gepoetst, en toen begon alle ellende. Hij had geprobeerd de gedwongen vullingen weg te poetsen. Het was een totale verstandsverbijstering, in een wanhopige poging tot vrijheid. Het waren piepende implantaten, giftige gevangenis implantaten, als implodes. Ze ontploften als je ze aan zou raken. Het was een levensgevaarlijk schaakspel. Messen of speren konden zo vanuit de vakken omhoog springen. Ze doorboorden alles op hun pad. Het was dodenschaak. Hij moest herstellen in mouth en mind. Hij moest het vak leren, deze dingen te verstaan, deze dingen te omzeilen.

De zwartkoninkjes oefenden hem. De stemmen van het verleden werden zwakker, en God’s stem werd groter. De zwartkoninkjes waren godsgezondenen. Zij leerden hem een nieuwe taal. Heel zijn wezen was ermee gevuld, heel zijn wezen werd er door doorgespoeld. Alle vakken van het spel, van zijn verstand en geheugen. Dat hadden de monniken hen geleerd.

De witten konden hem niet klein krijgen. Eens was hij één van hen, maar nu was hij overgegaan. De cosmetische stad zou geen duit meer van hem krijgen.

Hij wilde waar voor zijn geld, en dit keer had hij het. Hij betaalde een hoge prijs maar het was het waard. Voor het eerst had hij het gevoel alsof zijn leven echt waarde had. Hij had er veel in geïnvesteerd. En hij dacht er telkens aan : ‘Waarom hebt gij de deur opengemaakt ?’

Het was hard werken bij de monniken, maar hij had het er voor over.
Hij moest nu zijn nieuwe leven opbouwen.
Hij moest nu zijn nieuwe leven beveiligen, bewaken.
Hij wilde geen slapheid of luiheid meer toelaten in zijn leven.
Hij wilde geen denkfouten maken.
Hij wilde misverstanden uit de weg ruimen.
Hij wilde zorgvuldig zijn als de zwartkoninkjes, die zeer vlijtig waren.
Dit alles werd hem geleerd.
Er was een nieuwe koningin in zijn leven : vlijt, ijver.
Dat ging meer en meer het gevlei vervangen.

Hij zag in dat dit de beste weg was.
Hij had nu iets om voor te leven.
Hij had nu een doel in zijn leven, en het voelde goed.

Hij was trots op zichzelf maar ook waakzaam en leergierig.
Hij was er nog niet. Hij zag ook zijn tekortkomingen.
Hij was niet alleen trots maar ook dankbaar.
Hij wilde geen valse en overmatige trots toelaten, maar ook geen valse nederigheid.
Oeverloos dankbaar zijn zonder eigen inbreng is luiheid en afhankelijkheid, als een smoesje.
En dat is ook weer gevlei dat de ijver kan doden.

De zwartkoninkjes waren zijn alarm en leidsignaal.
De zwartkoninkjes waren zijn grensgevoeligheid, en daarin toonde zich het pad.
Grensgevoeligheid brengt richtingsgevoeligheid.

Op de achtergrond brulden soms nog de stemmen van de chemische stad.
Soms gilden ze. ‘Kom terug, kom terug, we willen je weer uitzuigen.’
Maar de zwartkoninkjes waren als een heg.
Hij kon niet meer terug.
De zwartkoninkjes zouden dat nooit toestaan.

Hij wilde ook niet meer terug.
Hij had het gehad met de chemische stad.
Het was een giftig luilekkerland.

Dodelijke sprookjes.

De vorsten van luilekkerland liepen daar met hoge witte koksmutsen.
Alles was voor hen voedsel en geld.
Alles was voor hen gemak.
En het waren allemaal valse beloftes.
Ze kwamen hun afspraken nooit na, en verdraaiden alles.
Zij wonnen altijd in hun boeken en geschiedenis boeken.
Zij draaiden alles naar hun wil.

Tagula was nu bij God. Hij had afstand gedaan van zijn oude leven.
God had ingegrepen, en Tagula was dankbaar.
God had hem niet in de steek gelaten, zijn muren doorbroken.
Hij snapte niet hoe hij kon zijn hoe hij vroeger was.
Maar ja, ze hadden hem zware en giftige drugs toegediend.
Luilekkerland drugs.
Het draait alles om.

En zo was alles uiteindelijk ook weer goedgedraaid.

Hoofdstuk 2. De geheime brug

Op een dag lieten de monniken hem een geheime brug zien die over een rivier ergens in een weiland liep. Hij vroeg waarom die brug geheim was als het zo zichtbaar was, maar de monniken noemden het toch de geheime brug, omdat niemand er leek te komen. Er werd niet veel bekendheid aan de brug gegeven. Hij kende zelf de brug ook niet. Ze gingen met hem over de brug naar de andere kant van de rivier in het weiland. De rivier was tamelijk smal, nog net geen sloot.

De monniken hadden een bijzondere herinnering aan de geheime brug. Daar was eens God aan hen verschenen, en daarom bezochten ze de plaats nog steeds als pelgrims. Het was een verlaten plaats. Het was niet in gebruik. Soms gingen ze er naartoe om God te zoeken. Toch deden ze dat niet vaak. Het moest bijzonder blijven.

Ook voor Tagula begon het belangrijk te worden.
Tagula wilde God weer ontmoeten, maar ook ontmoette hij God in de kleine dingen veelal.
Tagula moest leren de geheime brug in zichzelf te ontdekken.

Er was een oude monnik waar Tagula steeds meer contact mee kreeg.
Hij woonde wat verderop in de gang in een kamer.
Hij liet Tagula wat bijzondere boeken zien, en Tagula nam de tijd die te lezen op zijn eigen kamer.
Hij vond het wel bijzonder deze boeken te lezen.
Het ging over ontmoetingen met God.

Je ontmoet God niet op de hoge bergen, maar in de diepe valleien.
Hoe diep moest dat dan gaan ?
De boeken gingen over ondergrondse werelden.
Alleen daar zou God waarlijk ontmoet worden.
In de bovenwereld zou alles te bedriegelijk zijn.

Tagula las over de verschillende volkeren onder de grond, ook natuurvolkeren. Zij leefden in de holen van de aarde.
Zij waren bedekt met de moederaarde.
Zij moesten wel een bedekking dragen.

Zo waren zij gemaskerd, en het was oorlog.
Het was een oorlog tegen het vlees.
Het was een oorlog tegen dat wat niet bedekt was met de moeder aarde, met de natuur, maar met het chemische, onnatuurlijke.
En zo was het zwart tegen wit, als op een schaakbord, de onderwereld tegen de bovenwereld.
Tagula had zijn keuze gemaakt. Het witte chemische was verblind en verblindend. Uit deze wereld kwam hij. Hij moest terug naar de moeder aarde. Hij moest bedekt worden met de natuur.

De boeken lazen weg als een verhaal, en hij was er middenin.
Het leek wel alsof hij er zelf in meespeelde.
De moddermensen, de holbewoners, riepen hem.
De boeken namen hem mee naar plaatsen waar hij nog nooit was geweest.
Het waren plaatsen waar hij nog nooit over had gedroomd.

De boeken waren geschreven door verschillende mensen.
Het leek wel alsof de monniken in contact stonden met mensen die hij niet kende.
Dit was een hele andere wereld, hele andere schrijvers dan van de bovenwereld.
Dit ging ergens over. Dit was diep. Dit was rauw. Het was niet gemaakt.
Het was natuurlijk. Het was een bron die ergens opsprong.
Dit was van een andere wereld.

Zo had hij het nog niet gehoord.
Hij bleef lezen. Hij kon niet stoppen.
Het leek wel alsof hij nieuwe adem had, nieuwe energie.
Deze boeken boorden het diepste in hem aan, en hij voelde doorgang.
Hij had toegang tot zijn diepere wezen nu.

Zoveel mensen hadden zeggenschap over zijn leven gehad, maar hij vond nu zijn eigen zeggenschap, en dat was iets van de diepere natuur. Dit ging voorbij het menselijke.
Dit ging ook voorbij het logische.
Hier golden andere regels.
De boeken vielen de zwijnen van de bovenwereld aan, de zwijnen van luilekkerland, het gemaksdriftige.
Hij kon door de boeken heen God ontmoeten.
Je kon God niet in één keer ontmoeten.
Het ging stapsgewijs.
Je moest dieper de diepte in, van onderwereld tot onderwereld.
Hierin lagen geheime krachten verborgen.
Hier moest je sterven voor kennis.

Hier moest je niet alleen verder lezen en verder leren, maar ook verder sterven.
En dat ging door een heleboel onbegrip, want eerst zou je het niet kunnen zien en verstaan.
Het was van een geheel andere taal.

Wat voor talen spreken ze onder de grond ?
Alleen de zwartkoninkjes weten het.
Zij brengen de boodschappen naar de mensen, maar de mensen luisteren niet.
Zij hebben altijd wel wat anders te doen.
En zo gaat de kennis verloren.
Zo gaat de kennis steeds dieper onder de aarde, want ook de kennis sterft verder en verder.

Ik breng het goud naar je toe, maar als je mij niet neemt, dan heb je niets.
Zo is het goud van geen waarde als je de persoonlijkheid ervan niet kent.
Als je het niet leert kennen is het slechts vals bezit of schijnbezit.
Dit laat ook zien dat daadwerkelijk stelen onmogelijk is.
Al het ware bezit is slechts door kennis.

Wie kan dan ook iets buiten de school om doen ?
Buiten liggen zij allen verlamd.
Zij dromen maar.

Nee, sterf aan uzelf en verloochen uzelf en volg het pad tot de verloren aarde.

Tagula probeerde het tot een goed einde te brengen met de oude monnik.
Hij wilde de boeken zelf hebben, en bood een flinke som geld.
'Ach, houd maar,' zei de oude monnik. 'Ik heb er zelf zoveel van.'

De boeken leken zeldzaam. Dat wilde hij de oude monnik niet aandoen. Misschien was hij er aan gehecht, ook al had hij velen van deze boeken. 'Waar kan ik ze krijgen ?' vroeg Tagula aan de oude monnik. De oude monnik zweeg. Toen sprak hij :
'Eens op een oude rommelmarkt gevonden, heel lang geleden. Echt, je mag ze houden. Je zal ze niet zo snel ergens anders vinden. Ze zijn tamelijk zeldzaam.'

'Bijzonder,' zei Tagula. 'Nu heb ik er een passie bij, namelijk het vinden van zulke boeken.'

Tagula begon steeds meer van boeken te houden, nam graag boeken van anderen over, en begon te werken in de kloosterbibliotheek. Hij zag hierin heil en een weg.

Hij had veel gesprekken met de oude monnik, die veel boekenkennis had.
De oude monnik vertelde hem over zijn droevige leven, dat zijn vriendin door een ongeluk om het leven kwam, en dat hij toen het klooster inging. Zo verwerkte hij het. Het deed zoveel pijn dat hij nooit meer een vriendin wilde. Tagula kon zich dat goed voorstellen.

Ook maakte hij wandelingen met de oude monnik. Eens kwamen ze een wolf tegen en een andere keer een arend. De oude monnik vertelde veel over zijn leven, hoe zijn vader een knauw had overgehouden aan de oorlog, en hoe hij zo een moeilijke jeugd had. Zo had hij als gevolg daarvan wat verkeerde beslissingen gemaakt. Wat die beslissingen waren daar sprak hij verder niet over. Ook Tagula kon zijn verhaal aan de oude monnik kwijt. ‘Ja, tandartsen zijn geen best volk,’ sprak de oude monnik. ‘Totaal overgenomen door geld.’ Ook voor de psychiatrie had de oude monnik geen goed woord over.

Tagula werd soms nog geconfronteerd met oud zeer. De oude monnik hielp hem met het verwerken. Soms werd Tagula teruggesleurd naar het verleden, en had hij herbelevingen. Soms had hij nare dromen erover. Mensen lijden, en mensen lezen en schrijven, om het te verwerken, en om te overleven. Zo kan men het lijden relativeren en het beste uit het lijden halen, als werken in de lettermijnen. Wat is het loon voor hen die werken in de lettermijnen ? Boeken.

En met die boeken zou hij komen tot andere plaatsen. Steeds meer dook hij in de boeken, steeds meer breidde hij zijn studie uit. Het gaf hem meer mogelijkheden. Hij leerde ook veel door de gesprekken met de monniken. Het waren goede jaren voor hem, maar uiteindelijk wilde hij naar wat de monniken de bovenwereld noemden. Hij wilde terug, om de bovenwereld te helpen, oftewel het stedelijk en dorpelijk gebied. Maar de monniken zeiden dat er geen makkelijke wegen naar en door de bovenwereld waren. Tagula zei dat hij ook niet op zoek was naar gemak. Hij hield van nachtmerries. De monniken noemden de bovenwereld een nachtmerrie. Ook noemden ze het weleens een angstmerrie of een viesmerrie.

Het was te moeilijk voor hem om een huisje te krijgen. Alles zat vol, en er was geen doorkomen aan. Hij zou dan moeten beginnen in een zorg centrum, wat gelukkig niet van de psychiatrie was, maar daar werden ook daklozen opgevangen. Daar zou hij naartoe gaan, daar hadden ze wel een bovenkamer voor hem, en de monniken zouden hem vaak bezoeken. Als dan de tijd rijp was zou hij proberen een huisje te krijgen achter de rivier. Daar wilde hij graag wonen. Het werden moeilijke, maar ook mooie jaren in het opvangcentrum, en toen had hij eindelijk een huisje aan de overkant van de rivier. Het was een mooie grote kamer met hoog plafond. Ook daar kwamen de monniken hem bezoeken. Op een dag waren er drie stewardessen aan de deur van een vliegtuigmaatschappij. Ze vroegen of hij wat vragen wilde beantwoorden voor een formulier. Het was nog erg vroeg. Hij was net wakker. Hij zei dat hij zijn dag nog maar net was begonnen en dat hij tegen vliegtuigen was. De stewardessen gniffelden wat. Ze probeerden hem wat te verkopen, reclame te maken, via deze formulieren. Ze waren nogal opdringerig, en gaven niet snel op. ‘Het lijkt wel alsof jullie op jacht zijn,’ zei Tagula. Weer gniffelden ze wat. ‘Straks willen jullie ook mijn huis gebruiken voor jullie vliegtuigmaatschappij om er jullie spullen in te verkopen,’ zei Tagula. Weer gniffelden ze. Hij keek naar de drie stewardessen. Eentje leek hij ineens te herkennen. ‘Hey, was jij niet eens mijn buurmeisje ?’ vroeg hij aan haar. ‘Kan kloppen,’ zei ze.

‘Dus jij herkend mij ook ?’ vroeg Tagula.
‘Jazeker,’ zei ze. ‘Er zat trouwens nog een huis tussen.’
‘Wij zitten strak in het pak,’ zei één van de andere meisjes. Ze zei dat om hen te verdedigen.
‘En dat is je alibi ?’ vroeg Tagula.
Duidelijk wilden ze zakelijk blijven. Ze probeerden hem een schuldgevoel aan te praten als hij niet verder met ze zou willen. Ze probeerden op zijn emoties in te werken.
‘Ik ben niet voor niets je buurmeisje geweest,’ zei het andere meisje weer. ‘Zou je daar niet iets mee doen ?’ Toen knipoogde, terwijl de anderen zakelijk wilden blijven en er niet op reageerden.

‘Ik vind het nogal erg opdringerig,’ zei hij. ‘Het lijkt wel alsof jullie op een raid zijn.’
‘Ook in noodgevallen kunt u op ons bouwen,’ zei het eerste meisje. ‘Dan bent u verzekerd van een goede plaats.’
‘Daar zijn andere dingen voor,’ zei hij.
‘Wij helpen mensen,’ zei het andere meisje weer.
‘Heel fijn,’ zei hij, ‘maar voor mij is dit niet de juiste wijze. Ik heb het trouwens ook veel te druk om telkens maar allerlei formulieren in te vullen. Het blijft maar gebeuren. Het is eindeloos, en het vreet mijn tijd en energie.’
Toen zijn ze uiteindelijk maar weggegaan, en hij was opgelucht.
Een schuldmerrie noemden de monniken de bovenwereld ook weleens. Schuld was een markt. Dat werd met een bedoeling opgelegd. Zo kreeg men mensen de winkel in.

De monniken hadden het telkens over de boosaardige zoon van Morgan. Die zou ook in de bovenwereld wonen. Morgan was een heks. Ze gebruikten het bijna als spreekwoord. Als er iets mis ging dan zeiden ze vaak : ‘de boosaardige zoon van Morgan.’

Het beviel Tagula goed om op zichzelf te wonen. Hij had hier hard voor gewerkt. Het was alsof hij een nieuw boek in handen had. Hij zou blijven werken in de lettermijnen om er het beste van te maken, het beste uit te halen. Hij verdiende zijn leven. Hij had het helemaal zelf gedaan, was helemaal zelf door de schemerzones van de bovenwereld gegaan om hier te komen. Hij zou het met hand en tand verdedigen. Hij was zowel dankbaar als trots, in de juiste verhouding, maar altijd leergierig, wetende dat hij er nog niet was. Hij wist dat hij afhankelijk was van God, maar hij had ook een eigen verantwoordelijkheid. Hij dacht er nog vaak aan : ‘Waarom hebt gij de deur opengemaakt ?’ Die droom had hij trouwens gehad in een tijd dat hij hoorde dat een bekende van hem zelfmoord had gepleegd, en steeds meer knaagde het gevoel aan hem dat hij meer had moeten doen om hem te helpen. Maar ja, hij woonde toen al bij de monniken, en ze hadden geen contact meer. Hij voelde zich schuldig dat hij het contact had laten verwateren. Hij had het gevoel dat hij die persoon wel had kunnen helpen en redden. Maar ja, dat was allemaal achteraf. Het stoorde hem. In de bovenwereld pleegden ze nogal vaak zelfmoord. Er was een grote druk op de mensen. Hij hoopte die druk wat te kunnen verlichten, gewoon door zijn aanwezigheid. Zelf hield hij van nachtmerries, zocht hij ze op, en daagde hij ze uit. Hij voelde zichzelf als een Houdini, als een stuntman. Zo nam hij het van anderen over. Plaatsvervangend lijden was een belangrijke bron van zijn leven. Hij nam pijnen van anderen over, ook al wist hij dat ze door pijnen moesten. Het was belangrijk om te leren, maar het was ook belangrijk om voor elkaar te zorgen. Het ging om de empathie. De monniken zeiden dat hij geen asperger meer was, dat hij was genezen. God had ingegrepen in zijn leven, en nu wilde hij wat daarmee doen, iets terugdoen, iets teruggeven. Dat voelde goed bij hem. Dat voelde juist.

Hij wist dat hij de wereld niet kon redden. De wereld moest hier ook allemaal doorheen. Hij wist dat er belangrijkere dingen waren. Hij moest tot de hogere boeken komen, tot de grotere contexten, onder ogen komen waarom dingen waren zoals ze waren. Het hoorde bij een zeker verhaal, en daarin diende hij zijn weg te leren kennen. Hoe ga je met zoiets om ? Dat was werken in de lettermijnen, geen snelle oplossingen, maar de diepte in gaan. Hier was gemak geen koning, maar ontmaskerd. Gemak was vaak boerenbedrog, dat er zoveel dingen werden overgeslagen dat je door de bomen het bos niet meer kon zien. Het was de snelle asfaltering van de natuur. Ze hadden dat allemaal over de indiaanse wereld heengebouwd. Maar ja, de monniken hadden vaak niet veel goeds te zeggen over de indianen, omdat die vaak niet vegetarisch waren, alhoewel er wel sommige natuurvolkeren waren die vegetarisch waren. Ze hadden het soms over de kluizenaren, de hermieten en de holbewoners. Die leefden van iets anders, wat God hen had geschonken. Die kenden de geheimen van onder de aarde, waar dingen groeiden waar de bovenwereld niets vanaf wist. Ze werden door God in leven gehouden langs andere wegen. En die nieuwe schepping zou uiteindelijk overal komen. Maar de boosaardige zoon van Morgan stond nog in de weg.

De monniken werkten aan de nieuwe schepping. Die zou gebracht worden door boeken. Tagula was soms emotioneel als hij er aan dacht. Toch vroeg hij zich af of een utopia wel mogelijk was, een paradijs. Dat zou alleen in de dieptes van de aarde te vinden zijn, niet in de dorpen en de steden. Maar toch zou dit allemaal in de boeken staan. Zou er een vrederijk komen waar de monniken het soms over hadden ? Maar ze zeiden er ook bij dat het een zinnebeeld was. Wat konden ze verwachten ? Wat voor andere geheimen zouden er gevonden worden, en met wat voor resultaat ? Tagula hield van de nachtmerries, want het hield hem wakker. Het gaf hem informatie. Hierdoor groeide zijn kennis. Vandaar dat Tagula in de dystopie geïnteresseerd was, nog wel meer dan in de utopie. Tagula marcheerde mee met de monniken. Die waren ook niet zoetsappig. Die hadden het vaak over duistere geheimen in de aardbodem. De mens had een te romantisch beeld van het leven en van God. God was niet wie zij dachten. God was totaal onbekend en vreemd voor de mensen.

Nee, de mens mocht niet indutten. Teveel paradijs was niet goed, teveel zoet was niet goed. Vaak was het allemaal slechts aas. Het was een masker. Iets verschuilde zich erachter. Daarom moest men de boeken kennen, over hoe die verhalen liepen. De mens zat in een fuik. De mens moest sterven aan zijn droombeelden. Natuurlijk werden de goede verhalen verspreid om hoop te bieden, maar het was iets symbolisch. De mens kon juist zoveel meer leren van de veel duisterdere verhalen. Die liepen niet altijd goed af. Er waren geen makkelijke wegen door de bovenwereld. Het waren nachtmerries, het waren verhalen, opdat de mens er iets van zou leren. Dat zou een zekere ontwaking zijn, maar dan moest de mens ook weer dieper. Dieper de bibliotheken in. Werden zielen opgesloten gehouden in flessen ? En wat waren dat dan voor zielen ? Vaak was het grote bluf, en raakte de mens door elkaar aan de alcohol. Dat werd dan hoog van de toren geblazen. De monniken noemden de bovenwereld bovenmatig vraatzuchtig. ‘Die vreten en vreten maar. Het verstand is niet thuis, en het hart ook niet, om maar niet van het geweten te spreken.’ Honger is wat de mens nodig had, om te kunnen ontkomen. De dystopie behoedde de mens ergens tegen. Daarom moest Tagula ook niet helemaal doordraaien in het plaatsvervangend lijden. Tucht en oordeel was ook belangrijk. Maar dit kwam juist voort vanuit ware zorg en empathie, als schoolzorg.

Maar Tagula was op zijn hoede voor controlezucht, en heerserigheid. Hij wilde vluchten, hij wilde weg. Hij wilde laag profiel houden. Hij wilde slechts een zaaier zijn, een spoor achterlaten. Hij moest de diepte in, als een roepende in de wildernis, maar uiteindelijk zou hij nog dieper de wildernis in moeten waar ze hem niet meer zouden horen, waar hij niet meer mocht roepen, maar waar hij aan zichzelf diende te werken, tot de diepere geheimen diende te gaan, in het verborgene. Hij moest dieper de lettermijnen in, ter ontcijfering van de hiëroglieven. Hij moest het raadsel van het leven oplossen. Hij wilde het in een boek schrijven. Het moest zijn als een radio, als een muur. Hij wilde niet grijpbaar zijn. Hij wilde ook onbekend blijven, net als God.

De radio was in die zin beter dan een vliegtuig. Ook op auto’s had hij het niet zo. Ze vervuilden de natuur. Daarom noemden de monniken het de viesmerrie, en daar hoorden ook vliegtuigen en auto’s bij. Het was een trollenwereld. De trollen vermaakten zich erin als zwijnen in de modder.

‘Radio, radio,’ dacht Tagula telkens, maar hoe diep moest hij gaan om tot een radio te worden, en hoe diep moest hij gaan om onpersoonlijk te worden. Dat was voor hem belangrijk, dat hij onpersoonlijk werd, want het ging om het principe. Hij was op zijn hoede voor persoonsverering. Hij was op zijn hoede voor persoonscultussen. Maar wat had hij te vertellen ? Mensen waren er veelal niet in geinteresseerd. Ze hadden wel wat anders te doen. Hij kon hen niet redden, want ze wilden niet gered worden. Hij wilde zijn parels ook niet voor de zwijnen werpen. Wie zou dat doen ? Niemand. Alles werd verkocht tegen hoge prijs.

Hij dacht na over een boek als dynamiet, wat al die geheimen zou bevatten, wat als een radio zou werken. Maar juist daarom zou het boek obscuur zijn. Tagula hield van obscure boeken die veelal niemand kende. Het waren van die boeken waar er maar een paar van waren uitgegeven. Er zou hard voor gewerkt worden. Het zou niet iets zijn wat je met geld zou kunnen kopen.

‘Geld maakt macht,’ zeiden de monniken vaak, en noemden het vervolgens valse macht. Het is macht zonder zorg, zonder diepte. Het is roofmacht. Het dringt zich aan de mens op. Het is nergens op gefundeerd. De boosaardige zoon van Morgan. Het kleeft. Je komt er niet meer van los. Het vindt een weg naar binnen. Dan gebruikt het jouw huis ook als een markt. Dan leef je ineens in huis met je buren. De muren zijn weg. Waar is dan je privacy ? Weggevlogen.

Je droomt dat ook niet zomaar terug. Het is hard werk in de lettermijnen. Als je dan het boek in handen hebt na veel bloed, zweet en tranen, dan wil je het nooit meer loslaten. Dan laat het jou ook niet meer los. Het heeft ook hard gewerkt om jou te bereiken. Dan hebben jullie elkaar gevonden. Maar de boosaardige zoon van Morgan mag nooit onderschat worden. Die gooit altijd roet in het eten. En dat moet ook wel, want er zijn veel meer boeken. Het gaat niet om dat ene boek. En zelfs dat ene boek zal wijzen op de andere boeken. Het boek wil niet verafgood worden. Pas op voor de boekcultussen. Het boek is een verbinding met andere boeken, een brug. In andere boeken wordt het verdiept. Het ene boek is dus een middelaar. Het staat nooit zomaar op zichzelf. Het ontkend andere boeken niet. Het verliest zichzelf niet geheel in macht. Het is een wegwijzer.

Je moet kunnen ademen. Er zijn adembronnen in de dieptes van de aarde, waar de mens nog niet vanaf weet. De monniken hebben daar soms over geschreven, en spraken daar soms over. Er is nog zoveel wat de mens niet weet.

Zoveel macht komt en gaat. Als macht geen zorg is dan is het ten dode opgeschreven. Dan komt het uit een vergiftigde bron. Dan is het slechts geldmacht, roofmacht. Het is tijdelijk, zeer vluchtig, en kan ook zo weer gestolen worden. Dan moet je leren remmen, op een ander spoor komen, anders ontspoor je, kom je met je hoofd vast te zitten tussen een beveiligingsdeur. Dieven komen nooit ver. Misdaad loont niet. Maar de mens mag de boosaardige zoon van Morgan niet onderschatten. Hij zit daar op zijn troon en hij dobbelt. Telkens weer is hij de systemen te slim af, komt overal doorheen. Dan zet hij zijn vlag. Het is de expansiedrift. Het is de gemaksdrift, en het is een gat in de markt. Met geld verzint de mens eindeloze dingen. Het vlees is eindeloos. Moet dat ons wanhopig maken ? Neen. Maar we mogen het ook niet wegpraten. Doorlezen, doorleren, doorsterven. En dat is zo’n grote jacht dat die eeuwig is. Eeuwig is volgens de monniken trouwens ook symbolisch. Het betekent volledig. Het betekent in de grotere context. Daarin zullen een heleboel dingen wegvallen, weggestreept worden.

Hoofdstuk 3. De wapenfabriek

De zorgcentra liepen door de gehele bovenwereld heen. Het waren vaak lange tunnels of lange gangen met kamers, en er werden ook flatgebouwen voor gebruikt. Je kon er lange wandelingen doorheen maken. Voor Tagula en de monniken was het interessant, want het was los van de psychiatrie. Ze hielpen waar en wanneer ze konden. Al was het alleen maar door hun aanwezigheid. Tagula kenden ze wel, want hij had er ooit eens gewoond, en zo was hij nog steeds van harte welkom. Tagula nam ook vaak gebruik van de gastenkamers. Die waren vaak overal verspreid door de zorgcentra. Gasten waren belangrijk, want dat werkte therapeutisch voor de patienten. Zo konden ze andere ideeën krijgen en nieuwe werelden betreden. De hulp ging via de vrijwilligers en de gasten. Ook hielpen patienten elkaar. Het ging om de natuurlijkheid ervan, niet door de dwang. Iedereen droeg zijn steentje bij.

De psychiatrie en tandartserij stonden onder de boosaardige zoon van Morgan. Het begon steeds meer op een burgeroorlog te lijken, sinds er steeds meer zorgcentra kwamen opzetten. De monniken stonden aan de kant van de zorgcentra. Er was voor hen een groot verschil tussen psychiatrie en zorg, alhoewel er ook kruispunten konden zijn. Zo was er ook een neutraal deel in de psychiatrie, een overgangsgebied. Veelal leek de burgeroorlog gewoon nog op een koude oorlog. Men kon elkaar niet luchten of zien, en daarom ontweek men elkaar, maar over en weer werd er veel in de kranten geschreven. Vaak werd het ook gewoon een krantenoorlog genoemd. Er werd geschreven, er werd beweerd, er werd vergaderd.

De monniken zeiden dat de boosaardige zoon van Morgan samenwerkte met buitenaardse wezens genaamd de Seflak. Zij waren insectisch, tijdmengers, vluchtig, ruimtemengers, nummermengers, konden rommelen met chronologie, waardoor ze konden verschijnen en verdwijnen waar en wanneer ze wilden, en zichzelf tot poedervorm konden maken. Vaak verborgen ze zich in de vormen van de stad, zodat ze niet zichtbaar waren. Ze werkten met camouflage. Ze kwamen uit het oerwoud.

De zoon van Morgan was een groot probleem, als een schotwond die van geslacht tot geslacht werd doorgegeven, die delen van de hersenen had uitgeschakeld, zodat het hart niet meer bereikbaar was, en al helemaal het geweten niet meer. Alles was verdoofd. De monniken wezen alcohol aan als de grote boosdoener. De bovenwereld was verdronken in alcohol, op sterk water gezet. Nu waren het zombies die de Seflak moesten dienen, en bovenal de zoon van Morgan.

De zoon van Morgan was een echo uit een diep verleden. De geschiedenisboeken zwegen erover, maar niet de boeken van de monniken. De zoon van Morgan was een doctrine, een medische doctrine, die tegen de leer van de monniken inging. Ook de zorgcentra moesten er niets van hebben. Velen waren ten onder gegaan aan de doctrine. Er werd nogal geheimzinnig over gedaan. Men mocht eigenlijk niet weten wat de doctrine was. Het was een goed geheim gehouden recept. Eigenlijk was het gewoon een bakkersrecept. Dit waren geen echte dokters, maar marktdrijvers. Daarom was de doctrine in diepte gewoon een economische formule die geld en macht bracht, ook al was het slechts glans en schijn. Krakende huizen die op instorten staan. Deze vorm van geldwinning veroorzaakte aardbevingen. Men leefde van de stress van de patienten. Het was het syndroom van Mörn. Mörn was iemand die gek werd van de angst dat zijn huis zou instorten. Natuurlijk zagen de verkopers van angstmedicijnen daar heil in. Later werd deze term ook voor andere dingen gebruikt, en psychiaters begonnen steeds meer de term Mörn te gebruiken voor allerlei andere angsten en ook andere problemen. Mörn begon een echte volksziekte te worden, en de vraag naar medicijnen tegen Mörn begon enorm toe te nemen. Kinderen groeiden op met Mörn. Vaak was het hen aangepraat. Ze werden bang gemaakt en hadden vervolgens de ziekte van Mörn, die ongeneeslijk zou zijn, wat natuurlijk grote kassa betekende voor de medicijnenmarkt. Zo werkte de doctrine een weg. Het was dogma voor de psychiatrie. Het was voor hen een magische toverspreuk voor geld.

Tagula zag hele families de verwoesting ingaan door Mörn, en begon er tegen te prediken, zoals ook de monniken deden. Mörn begon een stopwoord te worden voor de psychiaters. Het was een weg tot het snelle geld. Men had het niet meer over gespleten persoonlijkheden. Men noemde het nu gewoon Mörn, een kat in het nauw die rare sprongen maakt. Het was een viscieuze angstcyclus die niet alleen ongeneeslijk was, maar ook erger werd. Je had hier steeds meer medicijnen voor nodig. Natuurlijk was dat allemaal aangepraat. Voor de monniken was Mörn een misdaadorganisatie. De psychiaters hadden zelf Mörn, vanwege hun slechte geweten, vanwege hun kaartenhuis wat op instorten stond, en dat projecteerden ze op hun patiënten. De patiënt was hun alibi. Zo waren zij er rein van en konden weer doorgaan met hun werk. Zo lieten ze een spoor van verderf achter. Het dreef mensen tot onder de trein. De psychiatrie was die trein, in samenwerking met de tandartserij, die nog wel erger was. De tandartsen hadden Mörn, en projecteerden het op hun patiënten. Dat ging er heel sluw aan toe. Mörn was ontstaan door geldmisbruik en alcohol. Het was een dodelijke combinatie. Het scheen altijd samen te gaan. Mörn was daarvan de vrucht en ook de katalysator. Zo kwam men tot het dwaze geld. De dood kon hen niet meer stoppen, want dat hadden ze netjes op hun patiënten geprojecteerd. De monniken hadden de spelletjes van de tandartsen en de psychiaters door. Ook de zorgcentra hadden het door, en daarom hadden ze zich door de gehele bovenwereld verspreid als vangnet. Mörn was tot een negatieve afgod van de dystopie geworden. Het was de medische mammon, maar slechts een bakkersrecept. Het enige wat genezen werd was de dikke portemonnee van deze lieden, die ook wel de witte monniken werden genoemd door de monniken. Zij waren als witgepleisterde graven, chemisch gebleekt.

Mensen die Mörn hadden in de ogen van de psychiatrie werden benaderd met neerkijkende empathie, werden zielig gevonden en niet serieus genomen. Tagula ergerde zich aan deze valse empathie, want de psychiatrie had het op zijn patiënten geprojecteerd. De zoon van Morgan was een woesteling. Hij kon schelden en dreigen om mensen bang te maken, en dan zouden ze ineens de ziekte van Mörn hebben. Het waren van die dokters die mensen in elkaar sloegen om maar patiënten te kunnen hebben. En zo plakte de tandartserij zijn vullingen. Het waren gedwongen etiketten. Het vee werd gebrandmerkt. Je mocht niks zeggen over hun heilige vullingen, want dan werd je opgepakt. De agenten van de zoon van Morgan klopten op hoge deuren en poorten om gevangenschap en dood aan te kondigen. Vaak plakten ze alleen hun plakkaten op de deuren. Het zou niet lang duren of hen die zogenaamd de ziekte van Mörn hadden zouden afgezonderd moeten worden in speciale kampen, en het liefst nog ondergronds. Daar waren ze mee bezig. Ze zouden in ballingschap naar de wildernis gaan met treinen, en naar ondergrondse werkkampen met metro's en liften, en weer anderen zouden verscheept worden tot ballingseilanden. Tagula zag hoe het allemaal snel uit de hand aan het lopen was. Psytand was geboren, de officiële samenwerking tussen psychiatrie en tandartserij, een grote industrie. Zorg was product. Patiënt was klant, maar de klant was niet koning. De klant was een gevangene, een slaaf, een ter dood veroordeelde. Dat zeiden ze niet letterlijk op die wijze, maar het kwam er wel op neer. En Mörn was besmettelijk, en daarom werden hen die met Mörn waren bestempeld ook bestempeld als onbetrouwbaar. Mörn schreeuwde in hun hoofden. Het was bezet gebied. Maar Tagula en de monniken vochten tegen deze woeste leeuw.

Zo werd het sociale leven een mijnenveld. Men werd bang voor verdachtmaking. En zo maakte men elkaar verdacht. Men werd steeds meer paranoïde, en zo rijp voor het Mörn-stempel, om zo tot product te worden gemaakt. Automatisch werd je zo een verslaafde aan medicijnen. De medicijnen waren heilig en dulden geen kritiek. Wie kritiek had had de ziekte van Mörn, en moest desnoods gedwongen worden met medicijnen. Zo werd de bovenwereld tot een angstcultuur.

Tagula had al lang spijt dat hij was overgegaan, maar kon nu niet meer terug. Ook wilde hij eigenlijk niet weg, en wilde hij vechten. Het duurde niet lang voordat ook Tagula beschuldigd werd van het hebben van Mörn, en zo zou hij mogelijk ook in aanmerking komen voor verbanning. Hij voelde zich al verbannen. Je mocht niet voor jezelf denken in de bovenwereld. Kritiek hebben op het systeem was sociale zelfmoord.

De monniken vonden het nodig om door te gaan met de prediking. Natuurlijk hadden zij ook Mörn in de ogen van de psychiaters. Dwangverpleging was een optie, dus daarom moesten de monniken, evenals Tagula, op hun hoede zijn. Mörn werd gezien als gevaarlijke krankzinnigheid, erger dan een gespleten persoonlijkheid. Mörn was de fusie van de gespleten persoonlijkheid. En dan had je alle poppen aan het dansen, dan waren de rapen goed gaar. Mörn werd gezien als het grootste gevaar voor de samenleving, als negatieve afgod, maar in zekere zin ook positief, vanwege geldwinning. Het was een gouden formule voor de dystopische economie, voor de vrijgevochten opportunisten die boven alle anderen stonden, oftewel hen die zich de elite waanden. Zij waren zo speciaal dat ze bijzonder waren. Mörn was als een geliefd huisdier voor hen, als de gans met de gouden eieren.

Mörn was zowel veracht als aanbeden, zowel berucht als beroemd. Het was een monster die hen in de greep hield. Mörn projecteerde, Mörn stal geld, Mörn verzweeg, Mörn dreigde, chanteerde, beschuldigde en schonk troost. Dat was de bakkersformule. Diep ging het niet. Het was een beest aan de oppervlakte. Mörn werd aanbeden als leeuw en geofferd als kalf. Alles draaide om geld en medicijnen, of dat nu door verlokking ging of door dwang. Mörn was ook omkoperij. Mörn was een allesverwoestende machine.

Tagula vocht, en twijfelde. Soms dacht hij dat Mörn in hem was. Hij voelde het monster schreeuwen, hij voelde het monster woeden. Zijn gedachten waren soms als een wilde zee. De monniken wilden hem terug, maar hij kon niet. Hij moest hier blijven. Hij moest weerstand bieden.

Alles werd tot massa-productie. Mörn was de underdog, de paria van de samenleving, de lagere rang, en de zonen van Morgan waren de hogere rang, maar vanwege dat Mörn de fusie van de gespleten persoonlijkheid was, was hij op een vreemde wijze beiden. Mörn stond aan beide kanten van het schaakbord, en daarom vreesden zij het. Mörn was eigenlijk hun heerser. Ze konden niet met en niet zonder. Zo waren zij zelf diep gespleten. Mörn bracht hen verlichting, Mörn bracht hen troost, maar was tegelijkertijd een bedreiging.

Heb ik Mörn ?
Nee, wij hebben geen Mörn.
Mörn is voor de slacht. Zij hebben Mörn.
Wij houden alleen van Mörn. Wij houden van vlees.

Wij houden van het geld wat het brengt.
Wij hebben geen Mörn, wij zijn Mörn.
Dat hoeft verder niemand te weten.
Wij projecteren het graag op de ander, en vragen daar vervolgens veel geld voor.
Voor wat hoort wat.

Heb ik Mörn ?
Nee, wij zijn geen Mörn.
Heb ik dat gezegd ?
Nee, ik heb niets gezegd.
Dat verbeeld je je maar.
Je hebt namelijk Mörn.

En zo werd Mörn tot een handig excuus en een handige alibi.
Zo kwamen ze met alles weg.
Zo was Mörn hun duivel en hun God, tevens hun plaatsvervanger, hun zondebok. Dat ging allemaal goed samen.
Het was immers Mörn, de fusie van de gespleten persoonlijkheid.
Goed en kwaad werkten naar hartelust samen, omdat ze het beste niet wilden zien.

En deze vreemde religie noemde men Echto.
Het was allemaal goede reclame voor een vliegtuigmaatschappij, want wilde je niet even weg van al die onzinnigheid ?
Wat had het leven nog voor zin zo ?

En zo kon je zin krijgen als je met het vliegtuig er eens even uit ging, naar een ander land.
Maar wat zouden daar voor vreemde systemen zijn ?
Tagula wist dat hij er niet voor kon weglopen of wegvliegen.
Hij wist dat hij er dwars doorheen moest, door alle gekte.
De Echto kerken stroomden vol, door alle dreiging, door alle omkoperij.
De mens werd gechanteerd tot het bot in de bovenwereld.
En in het bot kwamen vullingen, door het hele lichaam, gedwongen.
De vullingen moesten het bot vervangen, om zo onder de heerschappij te komen van de zonen van Morgan.

Jaromo was een skelet wat ze vereerden, wat geheel was opgebouwd uit vullingen.
Alles was vervangen. Zij die niet naar de Echto kerken gingen kregen het Mörn stempel.
Deze religie mocht niet geweigerd worden. Het psycho-medische systeem, oftewel Psytand, moest aanbeden worden.
Daartoe hadden ze ook hun eigen boek.

Verschijningen van buitenaardsen begonnen steeds normaler te worden. En dat waren echt niet alleen de Seflak. Men sprak over de wederkomst, maar het was dystopie. Het was mind-control, totalitarisme.

Het was pas na vele jaren dat dit systeem begon weg te ebben, in andere vormen begon over te gaan. Er kwamen steeds nieuwere vormen bij. De zorgcentra, de monniken en Tagula hadden stand gehouden. Het was dankzij de boeken dat zij stand hadden gehouden en dat het kon veranderen. Er waren nieuwe boeken bij gekomen die nieuwe zichten hadden gegeven, en de organisaties werden zo van binnenuit veranderd. De psychiatrie en de tandartserij waren niet meer wat het was, maar waren opgegaan in andere dingen. Maar hoe dan ook was het nog steeds een dystopie. Tagula vond dat niet erg. Hij hield van nachtmerries.

Alhoewel het beter ging had hij nog veel last van herbeleving. Hij ging in een wapenfabriek werken, maar dit ging om zachte wapens die niet dodelijk waren. Het ging om afleiding en verleiding, lokmiddelen. Hij moest werken aan reclame voor goede producten. Het was juist een wapen tegen de gangbare wijze van oorlog. Urenlang per dag werkte hij eraan om de reclame goed te krijgen. Men had nieuwe, onbekende groenten ontdekt in de aardbodem, dieper in de aarde, en op en in de zeebodem, en men begon dat ook boven de grond te telen. Het bleek een goede uitwerking te hebben op de hersenen van de mensen. Hij werkte ook aan andere wapens, wapens van verzoeting en verbittering. Soms was het belangrijk dat mensen meer verbitterd over zichzelf waren in plaats van snel van zichzelf overtuigd. De verbitteringswapens waren afrem-middelen, wat ook een onderdeel van de oorlog was. Al met al moesten er bepaalde delen van de oorlog wel zijn, en andere delen moesten weg. Er moest een scheuring komen in de oorlogswetenschap. Het waren dus wapens van een geestelijke en sociologische oorlog. Hij moest hiervoor ook worden bijgeschoold in de psychologie. Er waren geen eenvoudige oplossingen. Soms deed hij overwerk. Dit werd dan gecompenseerd door veel geld en op bepaalde momenten veel vrije tijd. Zo bleef de balans in zijn leven, en zo bleef hij contact houden met de natuur.

Telkens was hij weer op zoek naar nieuwe producten en nieuwe boeken, en als het iets was, dan maakte hij er reclame voor. Daar was hij heel vindingrijk in. Voor hem was het daarom ook een uidagende job. Hij wilde niet dat het klinisch en steriel zou zijn. Daar streed hij juist tegen. Hij liep ook niet rond in dure pakken met stropdassen. Het moest van een hele andere kant komen, veel kinderlijker. Door kinderen liet hij zich inspireren, en de monniken benadrukten altijd hoe belangrijk het was om als de kinderen te worden. De mens was vals volwassen geworden. De mens was op een dwaalspoor. Er moest een geheel nieuw educatie-systeem komen, en daar ging hij voor. Dat mocht niet strak en schools zijn, maar moest van een hele andere kant komen, moest meer natuurlijk zijn. Het moest creatief zijn en blijven. Hij wist dat hierin veel valkuilen waren, en die werden ook besproken. Daar werd ook tegen gewaakt. Hij zag de herbelevingen dan ook als een nodig alarm. Het hield hem doelgericht. Hij mocht niet indutten.

Er kwam nieuwe technologie, ook al had het ruis, ook al waren er veel storingen. De nieuwe radio’s konden frequenties van bomen opvangen. De bomen konden spreken. Zo werden de bomen gehoord. Vele mensen dachten in het begin dat het een truuk was. De bomen hadden hun eigen programma’s, en hun stemmen leken op mensenstemmen. Zo werd deze technologie ook uitgebreid tot het verstaan van dieren. Ook zij hadden mensenstemmen, maar die zaten op andere frequenties die de mens voorhen nog niet kenden. Daar was de apparatuur niet voor. Ze hadden ook hun eigen electricteit. De energie kon vertaald en opgewekt worden door bepaalde generatoren, en dit was pure natuur energie.

Het waren hele bijzondere radio’s en in het begin waren de prijzen heel hoog, maar later begon de samenleving er meer en meer gewend aan te raken, en daalden de prijzen meer en meer. Zo kwamen er ook bepaalde telefoons waardoor je met dieren kon spreken. Die waren zeer gewild. Het waren terugspreek-radio’s. De energie die hiervoor werd gebruikt was zeer zuiver. Die kwam uit de zee. De markt voor dit soort producten brak open. De brug tussen mens en natuur was hersteld. Hierop werd een geheel nieuwe economie gebaseerd. Dieren werden sindsdien ook als mensen gezien, omdat ze spraken. De wetenschap had een grote sprong voorwaarts gemaakt. Tagula merkte dat de mensen aardiger begonnen te doen naar elkaar, en ook naar de dieren. Toch waren er ook opstootjes. Rebelse jeugd die niets met de technologie te maken wilden hebben, en ook vele ouderen die het niet begrepen en niet wilden. Uiteindelijk zou dit tot burgeroorlogen kunnen leiden. Daar begon het in het begin wel op te lijken. Het maakte de jeugd soms agressief. Dit had ook te maken met het feit dat sinds de wetenschappelijke opleving er steeds meer slachthuizen dicht gingen. Dit gebeurde lang niet overal, maar over het algemeen.

Agressieve jeugd was een groot probleem. Er kwam toen ook apparatuur op de markt die de diepere frequenties van de mens konden oppikken. Dit gaf natuurlijk direct een ander gevaar, namelijk het mogelijke verlies van privacy, en daarom was de nieuwe apparatuur aan strenge wetten onderhevig. In ieder geval kon men met de nieuwe apparatuur babies verstaan, en ook hen die om wat voor reden dan ook hun stem hadden verloren. Het bleek dat de zielen van de voorgeslachten zich vaak nestelden in de nageslachten, en dat kon voor innerlijke verwarring zorgen. Alles liep door elkaar heen. Er was geen goede afvoer. Dit kon verholpen worden door bepaalde technologie. Het was bepaalde splitsings-apparatuur. Hierdoor kwam er ook andere energie vrij, die goed gebruikt kon worden. Zo kon de mens zichzelf weer begrijpen, en ook de ander. Er had teveel fusie plaatsgevonden door gebrek aan goede apparatuur. Ze noemden het kleven. Er waren klevers in de mens ontstaan, zodat ze niet meer van henzelf waren, maar ook van de voorgeslachten. Zij waren als de erfenis van de voorgeslachten en werden door hen bewoond, puur omdat er niets anders voor handen was. Deze klevers ontstonden dus in onwetendheid, als een jeugdziekte van de evolutie. De knopen moesten nog ontward worden. Alles liep door elkaar heen.

Telkens als Tagula herbelevingen had dan was dat een vorm van kleven. Maar eerst moest men het kleven onder ogen komen, voordat het opgelost en ontward kon worden. Tagula voelde hoe de voorouders in zijn hoofd woonden, hoe zij een bepaalde belasting op hem hadden gezet. Telkens weer moest hij betalen. Er moest apparatuur komen om die signalen te scheiden. Dat was een nieuwe vorm van scheikunde. Hierin moest Tagula onderwezen worden voor zijn werk.

Er liep een scheidingslijn door zijn hoofd, maar die was te dun. Het ijs was nog te dun. Alles brak er doorheen. Er waren een heleboel dingen die de mens niet wist. Het kon niet ademen, en daarom voelde het als leven in de viesmerrie. Alles hoopte en stapelde zich op, als een kleefmerrie. Kleven, kleven en kleven, daar bestond zijn leven uit. Telkens weer. Soms was het weg, en dan was het er weer. Er leefden dingen in hem die daar niet hoorden. Hij had de buren in huis. Er werd markt gedreven in zijn huis. Hij wilde voor zijn huis vechten, maar ook een goede oplossing verzinnen. Hij kon al die mensen toch niet zomaar uit hem zetten ? Het was een kinderziekte van de evolutie, een zeer vervelende, knagende situatie. Hoe voelde van alles door hem heenlopen. Zijn werk was hierin zijn hoop. Ook zijn studie.

De splitsings-apparatuur sloeg in als een bom. Mensen begrepen ineens zichzelf weer, voelden weer ruimte in zichzelf, konden weer ademen. De signalen en stemmen werden gesplitst in hun gedachten. Nu was het duidelijk wat het was, en waar het vandaan kwam. Nu konden mensen hun harten weer laten spreken. Het was overduidelijk dat dit niet zonder slag of stoot ging. Vele stemmen van het verleden wilden niet weg. Er waren allerlei claims en contracten. Er moest een betere afvoer komen. Er moest beter vervoer komen voor deze dingen. Tagula dacht terug aan de vliegtuigmaatschappij. Had het dan toch niet een kern van waarheid ? Mensen wilden veel reizen juist omdat ze dit soort dingen in zichzelf voelden, en eerst was daar nog geen andere apparatuur voor. Zo kon hij deze drangen verklaren. De mensen wilden zo op hun eigen, rigoreuze wijze loskomen van het gekleef.

Door het splitsen kwam er een nieuwe energie vrij die men kon gebruiken. Die energie werd voorheen verborgen gehouden onder de klevers. Het was als een vulkaan die losbarste. Men kon niet goed met deze energie omgaan, want men wist niet wat er mee te doen. Het werd vrije energie genoemd. Er waren apparaten die de voorouders konden verschepen, teleporteren, naar andere gebieden, zodat ze niet meer in de hoofden van het nageslacht hoefden te leven. Dat was overigens niet dat ze letterlijk in het hoofd van één persoon woonden, maar verdeeld, als apparatuur, als een stralingsveld waarin een nieuwe droom was opgewekt waarin ze konden wonen. Dat was vaak tussen mensen in, maar het vrat aan hen.

Tagula moest leren hoe dat splitsingsproces werkte. De appatuur werkte veelal door zekere spiegelingen, door ketsers, en door een hele reeks van ketsers, door bepaalde routes en tunnels in de apparatuur konden signalen omgedraaid worden, en zo worden gesplitst van elkaar.

Dat ging dus niet zomaar door magneetjes, maar door zekere spiegeltjes die op een bepaalde wijze geplaatst dienden te worden. Het moest van bepaald materiaal zijn om die frequenties op te diepen. Het waren een bepaalde soort steentjes die in de zeebodem en dieper in de aardbodem werden gevonden. Men moest hiervoor veel in de mijnen werken. Men moest dus ook leren de vrijgekomen energie op te vangen, door bepaalde soorten materialen. Daarmee was men nog aan het experimenteren, hoe dat het beste zou kunnen. De filters konden niet werken zonder de spiegelsystemen, en voor de spiegelsystemen konden niet zomaar metalen worden gebruikt, want die zouden het kleven weer kunnen opwekken. Daar was toch echt steen voor nodig. Het waren hele kleine kristalletjes, van een zwartachtige kleur. Het was bepaald zoutgesteente. Het waren hele andere zouten dan die men kende. Het zout was veel harder, zodat het meer steen was dan zout. Het werkte zintuigelijk op de mens in. Het leek wel alsof het van een andere wereld was. In ieder geval konden de stenen frequenties opslaan en van elkaar scheiden, en ook transformeren. Zo kwamen er bepaalde grote stenen waarin de voorouders konden wonen. Deze stenen werden dagen genoemd, en schuildagen. Vanwege dat de stenen vrijwel zwart waren werden ze ook wel zwarte koningen genoemd, of zwartkoningen. Ze begonnen door het hele land te staan, als zendmasten. Nu moest er heel veel electrisch en chemisch afval verwerkt worden, waar deze stenen ook goed voor waren.

Men moest werken in de mijnen voor dit soort dingen. Ook Tagula kreeg een oproep. Hij vond dit wel interessant en ging ook de zee op en in. Er kwamen steeds meer tunnels in en onder de zee. Zo kwam men ook diep onder de zee om daar te mijnen. Men vond daar nog veel andere soorten gesteenten, en de wetenschap begon hard te groeien. Er kwam steeds meer informatie over deze dingen, en die informatie schenen de stenen ook vast te houden. Die kon men door bepaalde apparatuur opvangen. Eerst moesten de electrische signalen vertaald worden, en ze moesten gescheiden worden, en goed afgevoerd, en veel energie die vrijkwam kon voor andere dingen worden gebruikt. Het was lichte en vriendelijke natuur-energie. Toch merkte men dat er ook andere soorten energie begonnen vrij te komen. Energie was energie. Ze waren aan regels onderhevig. Men kon niet naar hartelust experimenteren. Er waren ook kosten aan verbonden, en sommige dingen konden echt niet. Men kon niet naar hartelust mengen. Sommige energie was zo krachtig dat men afremmers moest inzetten. De energie moest allereerst vertraagd worden.

Mensen wilden soms de steentjes in hun hoofd laten implanteren. Sommigen droegen de steentjes als sieraden. Anderen wilden het gewoon houden bij de apparaatjes. Die werden steeds handiger, tot zakformaat. Zo konden ze spreken met de voorouders, met de dieren, de bomen, de bloemen, en de stenen zelf. Het werd intersociale media genoemd, metasociale media, of gewoon natuurmedia.

Hoofdstuk 4. Naar Zaalveringen

De wapenfabriek groeide uit tot sociale beveiliging, afvoer en recycling. Het was een educatie oorlog, een oorlog tegen onwetendheid. Men dacht naar andere planeten te moeten voor materialen, maar het bleek allemaal in de aardbodem en zeebodem te zitten. De mijnen werden druk bezocht. De mijnen stonden voor hoop. De techniek moest afrekenen met overlapping, knopen en kleven, en dat kon alleen door geleiding, waar ook een hele hoop omleiding bij kwam kijken. Er was van korte snelle wegen geen plaats meer, alhoewel de apparatuur wel steeds handiger werd, en verfijnder. Er kwamen helmen met vizier, als dashboards met schermen, om tot een andere frequentie te gaan, in een andere wereld te leven. Dat ging niet altijd goed. Er waren nog een heleboel dingen die ze niet begrepen.

Ook buitenaardsen, bovenaardsen, onderaardsen en binnenaardsen bleken zich al energetisch in de mens te bevinden. Er waren een heleboel energetische werelden waar de mens nog niets vanaf wist, omdat de mens die frequenties nog niet had onderscheiden, omdat de apparatuur er niet voor was, maar de zwarte koning baande zich een weg. Er kwam een geheel nieuw educatief systeem waar kinderen van jongs af aan al naartoe konden gaan, maar niet onder dwang. Dwang werkte niet in de scholing. Daar kwamen alleen maar problemen van, en het was vaak het werk van klevers. Men wist hier nog niet mee om te gaan. De wetenschap omtrend deze dingen stond nog maar in de kinderschoenen. Klevers ontpopten zich vaak als blaffers. Het was verstopte, opgehoopte energie, en ook vaak afgeknot. Door de nieuwe apparatuur konden deze energieën begrepen worden, vertaald. Het moest nog allemaal gekanaliseerd en gesorteerd worden. Er moest leiding, omleiding en afvoer zijn. Zo kon energie ook omgezet worden. Het moest zo de juiste plaats en functie vinden.

Er kwamen steeds meer van zulke wapenfabrieken. Er was een markt voor deze dingen. Maar er waren ook tegengeluiden : 'Een boom is een boom. Een dier is een dier. Vlees moet. Voorouders zijn dood, en dood is dood. Voorouders moeten met rust gelaten worden.' Enzovoorts. De wapenfabrieken noemden dat deze tendensen juist de klevers waren. Ze hadden nog meer techniek nodig. Misschien moesten ze nog dieper de aarde in, of nog dieper onder de zee, of moesten ze op andere plaatsen zoeken, of naar andere planeten, of gewoon wachten op nieuwe boeken met nieuwe informatie erover. Ze waren aan het wachten op de gouden link. Ze waren op zoek naar een leider over deze dingen, naar een zwarte koning, of iets anders. Soms liepen de spanningen hoog op. De klevers konden flink blaffen. Ze vroegen natuurlijk om aandacht. Het probleem moest nog opgelost worden. Hier was nog pijn.

Tagula kwam er meer en meer achter hoe belangrijk het was geestelijk te dromen, tot de bron energie te gaan, want men was in spiegelingen terecht gekomen die zich hadden lopen verdraaien. Maar het bleef niet bij de droom. Ook in de droom moest men tot de geestelijke slaap gaan en tot de innerste droom, want ook de droom zelf was in principe nog gewoon afwijking, als zaad wat gezaaid diende te worden. Het moest nog ontkiemen. Er moest naar een nog fijnere bronstof gegaan worden in de diepte van de droom, door de geestelijke slaap. Dan was het een droom in een droom, maar dat werd zo niet genoemd. Dat werd irkw genoemd, of irke. Dat was een discipline die geleerd kon worden in de droom technologie, maar dat was dan eigenlijk de irke technologie. Men moest hiervoor eerst door de schemerzone heen, om zo tot de irke industrie terreinen te gaan. Steeds meer boeken begonnen op te rijzen over dit onderwerp.

Tagula probeerde de stromen van irke in zichzelf te volgen. Vaak had hij dromen die hij niet kon onthouden en weer was vergeten als hij wakker werd, maar het was slechts zaad dat eerst nog moest sterven, en dan zou irke komen. Dat kon gewoon overdag gebeuren, als hij wakker was, want het was slechts geestelijk. Het gaf hem inspiratie. Het was een bron van leven waardoor hij geleid kon worden. Hij kon zo gevoelig worden voor de grenzen waarbinnen het pad kon ontstaan, om zo door het mijnenveld van het leven heen te komen. Ook de monniken bedreven dit.

‘Ik moet ergens van weg, en ergens naartoe,’ zei Tagula altijd. Iets zat hem op de hielen, maar iets lokte hem ook. Hierin moest hij juist voorzichtig zijn, want dat wat hem op de hielen zat kon ook lokken. Er werd met aas gewerkt, met valstrikken. Daarom was de wapenfabriek belangrijk, zijn houvast. Maar het bleef niet bij irke op zich. Telkens weer moest je de geestelijke slaap in, om tot de droom in de droom in de droom te komen, de diepste droom, de diepste irke, wat een heel gevecht was. Je moest zo tot de inter-irke komen. Er waren genoeg gevaren, van irke wat niet genoeg was doorgezuiverd, niet genoeg was getest. Tagula zag de gevaren ervan in. Daarom wilde hij het uitwerken. Er moest meer educatie over komen, want het kon heel sluw zijn. De mijnenvelden en fokkerijen waarin de mens zat opgesloten wilden en zouden niet zomaar loslaten. De farao wilde het volk niet laten gaan. Het liep uit op een grote koude burgeroorlog tussen de geestelijken en de klevers. De klevers wilden alles bij het oude laten. De klevers wilde geen vernieuwing. Ze hadden zich vastgekleefd en leefden ervan. Het waren een soort insecten, maar ze leken ook op slakken, kwallen en octopi. Er was een oorlog om het brein van de mens. De interirke kon uiteindelijk de weg tussen brein en hart herstellen, maar er moest ook een weg komen tot het geweten, en dat lag veel dieper. Het geweten was oorspronkelijk een orgaan tussen het hart en de buik, en het bewustzijn was een orgaan wat ernaast lag, maar buitenaardsen hadden het weggesneden uit de mens. De mens was nu in een slaap, en in een boze droom. In die droom werden mensen tot de dood gedreven, tot zelfmoord, of tot moord, tot criminaliteit, of ze werden tot de drugs gedreven, tot medicijnen, of tot een coma, dit alles om ze in de slaap te brengen tot Mörn. Mörn was de tegenstander van irkw. Het was een valse droomput waar mensen in gezogen werden, als in een fuik. Ze kwamen zo steeds dieper en dieper, en werden ergens voor gefokt. Kinderen, dieren, maar ook volwassenen werden geofferd in de mörn-cultussen. Sommige mörnisten offerden zichzelf vrijwillig. Ook velen in de psychiatrie en tandartserij waren mörnisten, vaak in het geheim, en hadden duistere doeleinden met de mens. Te pas en te onpas zeiden ze dat de zieken bepaalde stoffen misten, en dat zij die konden aanvullen, met hun chemische rotzooi, juist om de mens nog zieker te maken, of schijnbeter te maken, opdat ze op welke wijze dan ook onder hun controle vielen. Men had machtsvraatzucht, en controle waanzin, allemaal vanwege een slecht geweten. Ze waren hersenloos en gewetenloos op vele wijzen. Het was voor hen een sport om zo veel mogelijk mee te sleuren in hun eigen lot, om het op hun gestrikten te projecteren, zodat zij vrijuit konden gaan, en zo er veel mee konden verdienen. Men dacht dat men op een succesvolle wijze tegen het geweten kon strijden. Men dacht dat men het geweten had uitgedoofd, had weggesneden. Maar ze onderschatten de werkingen van irkw, die was gezonden om het geweten te herstellen, door de weg tussen het hart en het brein te herstellen, en zo zou ook uiteindelijk het bewustzijn hersteld worden.

De mens leefde nog steeds in een nachtmerrie, werd onder water gehouden door Mörn. Het Mörn virus was ook al in de wapenfabriek. Tagula moest rennen voor zijn leven. Toch hield hij vast aan de wapenfabriek. Hier had hij hoop. Hij kon zijn collega’s niet meer vertrouwen. Toch moest hij roeien met de riemen die hij had. Hij moest er goed gebruik van maken, zonder ervoor te vallen. De boeken leidden de weg. Voor zijn ogen zag hij het steeds meer overgenomen worden door de nieuwe generatie, en er werd vreemdzinnig mee omgesprongen, totdat hij uiteindelijk wel weg moest. Hij wilde zich nu alleen nog maar richten op de boeken. Hij had gevechten met Mörn in de nacht. Mörn wilde de hoofden niet loslaten.

‘Niet door macht, noch door geweld, maar door boeken.’ Hij wist dat het om irke ging. Hij wilde dat het geweten en bewustzijn in hem hersteld werden. Hij moest door de schemerzone heen. Er was geen andere weg. Ze probeerden hem te vangen, probeerden zijn armen of benen af te hakken, maar hij moest doorwerken. Niet tot worship komen, maar tot workship. Het volk was ingedut. Steeds meer werd Mörn openlijk in de kerk bezongen. Mörn was hun redder, hun afgod. Het werd normaal gemaakt om Mörn te aanbidden, om Mörn groot te maken. Het maakte de mens lui en verslaafd, afhankelijk, en afhankelijkheid betekende geld. Mörn was een vreemde mengeling tussen geld en medicijnen.

Men had het over de komst van Mörn. Men verwachtte in een schip te worden opgenomen. Mörn was gewoon datgene wat van alles teveel had genomen. Dat sprak de mensen aan, want ze hielden niet van grenzen. Voor hen moest alles kunnen, en daar werd Mörn meer en meer een symbool van, van de levensvrijheid, van het hedonisme, van de drank, alles. De kerken waren door Mörn bourgondisch en barbaars geworden. In de nacht verscheen Mörn vaak tot Tagula als een grote gespierde, wilde Germaan met lang haar. Wat moest Tagula ermee ? Het stond voor overmatige vraatzucht en machtslust, voor gemak en de korte weg, ten koste van al het andere. Het was drugs. Tagula wilde deze gemaksdrift niet. Het was spijbelend en dodend. Hij wilde deze hebzucht niet. Hij kon daar niet mee leven. De germaan deed hem grote offers, wilde hem omkopen. Telkens weer moest Tagula tegen de spierbundels aankijken, die van alles beloofden, van alles toestonden. Alles mocht, alles kon. De germaan probeerde zachtaardig over te komen, bijna lief. Maar er was veel bloed aan zijn mes, onschuldig bloed. Hij had godsdienst waan. Voor de germaan was dit het goede pad. Tagula wilde er niets van weten, en noemde het bedrog, maar de germaan bleef terugkomen. Het was een plaag. Als Tagula er aan toe zou geven zou alles verloren zijn. Tagula wilde een monnik blijven. Hij wilde een hermiet worden, een boeken-hermiet. Dat was de enige weg om er doorheen te komen. De valstrikken waren eindeloos. Tagula wilde terug tot zijn geweten en bewustzijn.

De germaan zei dat hij van het lagere Orion kwam. Daar was volop drugs te vinden. Ook aan Tagula werd het aangeboden, maar Tagula wees het af. ‘Ik zal mijn weg wel vinden,’ had Mörn toen tegen hem gezegd.

Mörn werd groot. Mörn heerste over de steden en dorpen, en zij werden gezombificeerd voor Mörn. Mörn was hun paradijs. Ondanks dat hield Tagula stand. Hij hoopte dat het weer voorbij zou gaan. Het was hardnekkig. Mörn was zwaar dronken. Mörn was ongeneeslijk. Mörn was tot een reus uitgegroeid, geen klein jongetje meer. Mörn zou spoedig alle volkeren aan hem onderwerpen. Daartoe had Mörn zijn groot slachtmes. Er was een slager gekomen.

Het was in die dagen dat de monniken het veel over vergeestelijking hadden in plaats van zomaar het geestelijke. Het geestelijke moest verdiept worden door de vergeestelijking, en dat was de sleutel tot irke, de diepere droom. De monniken zeiden dat ze ergens onder het klooster een boek hadden gevonden, een nieuwe bijbel. En daarin was het boek Anderlech, waaruit zij begonnen te prediken. Het boek stelde dat het vlees tot woord was geworden, en de wereld terroriseerde, en Tagula moest aan Mörn denken. Ook zei het boek dat de vergeestelijking de weg terug zou leiden. Het was op basis hiervan dat de monniken zich de Anderlechse monniken gingen noemen.

Mörn liet niet los. Mörn was een blaffer. Mörn was een klever. Hij had zich vastgekleefd aan het brein en het hart van de mens. Daar leefde hij van. Hij had zichzelf verzekerd door alcohol. Dieren werden geofferd voor zijn grootspraak. Dat was allemaal professioneel gemaakt door de vlees industrie. Vlees was immers goed, gezond, en zelfs noodzakelijk.

De monniken begonnen de nieuwe bijbel te prediken, die ze onder het klooster hadden gevonden, die ‘God daar had neergelegd,’ zoals ze zeiden. Ook begonnen ze deze bijbel te verspreiden. Er werden een aantal exemplaren gedrukt. Toen Tagula het las besefte hij dat dit irke wel moest zijn, het antistof tegen Mörn. Mörn brulde als een beest tot de volkeren, en in angst moesten ze hem wel aanbidden. Het was een angstcultuur. Het was een stockholm syndroom. Het syndroom van Mörn. Je hebt het gevoel dat je huis elk moment kan instorten, en daarom neem je de redder aan die is gekomen. Die redder is Mörn.

Op grote posters kwam hij, in kinderkamers, in jeugdkamers. Op schilderijen kwam hij, voor de volwassenen. Mörn was reclame. Mörn was communicatie. Mörn was media, en daardoor ook verzekering. Men waande zich veilig nu, want men was immers aan de drugs, aan de medicijnen. Mörn was de medische waakhond, maar eigenlijk gewoon een economische waakhond. Mörn had nu de psychiatrie en de tandartserij ingenomen. Mörn was het hardnekkige en gedwongen bot-implantaat, gedwongen plastische chirurgie. De onderdelen van de mens moesten gedwongen vervangen worden. De mens was niet meer van zichzelf. Dit waren anatomische kolonisten. Het waren ledemaat-boeren, orgaanhandels. De mens betaalde er ook nog duur voor. Niks was gratis. Je moest nu de dief en de crimineel betalen en dankbaar zijn. Nu moest je belasting betalen, voor de rest van je leven, aan hen. Tegenspraak werd niet geduld. Door kritiek gingen de grote alarms af.

Je werd dan niet in hechtenis genomen, want je was al in hechtenis. Nee, het was veel erger. De mens was al geheel ingenomen door de gedwongen implantaten. Ieder mens moest door de implantaten bedwongen worden, bestuurd worden, anders waren ze een gevaar voor de samenleving. De strijd was onderhuids, en bovenhuids deed men alsof er niets aan de hand was. Alles werd schoongepraat door reclame. Voor reclame logen ze en gingen ze hun boekje te buiten. Het maakte allemaal niets uit. Mörn was immers koning.

Kapitein-koning was hij. Allen gingen ze mee op zijn schip, of ze nu wilden of niet. Deze dystopie was niet meer te stoppen, maar de monniken zaaiden met de nieuwe bijbel.

Tagula wist dat Mörn dit kon doen omdat de organen van geweten en bewustzijn verdwenen waren. Dat waren een soort weggesneden diepere harten. Hoe vroeg zich af hoe het terug moest komen. De monniken hadden het over een zeker zwart plantje, wat onder het klooster groeide waar ze het boek hadden gevonden. Ze noemden het zwarte koninginnen, en er groeide ook een soort aardappels of cassave aan de wortels. Men moest en zou dat eten als medicijn tegen alle waanzin. De monniken zouden daar zorg voor dragen.

Tagula wilde wel helpen met de verbouwing ervan. Hierdoor zouden de verloren organen weer terug kunnen groeien in de mensen. Tagula vond hierin weer wat hoop, maar was nog niet overtuigd. Hij wilde het wel proberen.

De monniken waren blij met de hulp van Tagula, en noemden de groente van de bladeren tagula. Ook de knollen van de wortels zouden een goede vleesvervanger zijn.

De monniken hadden ook een heel ander beeld over de hel. Ze wilden soms dat mensen naar de hel zouden gaan om te leren en te helpen. Ze zagen de hel als de baarmoeder, als school en gevangenis, zelfs als ziekenhuis.

Mörn was een rare. Hij had enkel negatieve denkbeelden over de hel, en die verspreidde hij in zijn angstcultuur. Mörn was zakelijk, ook al kwam hij vaak vriendelijk over. Hij kon mensen zeer vriendelijk met de meest gruwelijke dingen bedreigen. En ze geloofden het maar, uit angst, en deden het maar, anders zou het grote sociale gevolgen hebben. Ze waren bang er niet meer bij te horen. Ze waren bang voor kou. Ze hadden liever een warme leugen dan een koude waarheid.

Mörn speelde daar op in. Hij kende hun prioriteiten-stelsels door en door. Hij wist dat ze lauw waren.

Mörn stond voor macht, en werd een merk. Als je het niet droeg hoorde je er niet bij. De monniken waren trots dat ze er niet bijhoorden. Zij gingen door met hun werk.

De mens boog neer voor de goden van sex, genotsmiddelen, horror en trauma-uitbuiting. Victim-blaming was wel het allergemakkelijkst, en daar ging de mens voor. Gemak en geluk stonden hoog op het wenslijstje. En daar werd de mens praterig van. Mörn was een praat-syndroom in hun hoofd. Met grapjes probeerden ze het geweten te doven.

Tagula wist dat ze zware literaire technologie nodig hadden om tegen de schreeuwers en praters bestand te blijven. Het waren blaffende klevers. Er moest nog meer splitsing komen. Dat konden alleen de boeken. Gewoon maar stenen of apparatuur had zijn grenzen. Dat was meer als symbool, als start-kapitaal. Daarna kwamen de boeken. De noodzaak tot lezen en leren.

Maar het leek alsof ze overspoeld werden door de boeken van Mörn. Die hadden macht en populariteit. Die werden goed verkocht, want angst verkoopt, en de mens laat zich graag omkopen. Het bood hen troost. Ze waren diep in het stockholm syndroom, het syndroom van Mörn. De monniken noemden het de stemmen van alcohol die zich vast hadden geworteld in het brein en niet meer weg wilden. Het was een dubbele alzheimer die zich deskundig en professioneel voordeed, die de breinkloof illegaal had overbrugd door bogus medicijnen. De gespleten persoonlijkheid was nu overbrugd, maar het was slechts een derde persoonlijkheid. Het was een clan geworden, een zwerm insecten.

Mörn was de beker die ze allemaal wilden hebben, de handige knop. Snelle troost. De weg van de minste weerstand. Gemak staat boven gezondheid. Gemak is geld. Het is praatwater. Het zegt eigenlijk niks, maar het houdt achter.

Door de vervolgingen kwamen ze in Zaalveringen terecht, een vrijdorp. Hier konden de monniken leven, ook Tagula, want buiten de vrijdorpen voerden de mörnisten hun heksenjachten. Ze kregen allemaal een huisje in dezelfde buurt. Voorlopig zouden ze hier veilig zijn. Maar al snel werd ook Zaalveringen een doelwit van mörnistische terroristen, en moesten de monniken wel onder de grond gaan tot de hermietenholen. Dat kon gewoon onder Zaalveringen. Er waren daar ondergrondse tunnels. Ze zouden moeten wachten totdat de storm voorbij zou zijn in Zaalveringen, totdat het weer veilig zou zijn. Ze vroegen zich af wat er nog van Zaalveringen over was. Nu had Tagula alle tijd om de hiëroglieven onder de grond te bestuderen. Hij was daar bijna toe gedwongen. Hij was ervan overtuigd dat er veel verborgen boodschappen in waren.

Er was een natuurgebied onder de grond dat het Grierse Groek heette. Er waren hier vele grotten met hiëroglieven. Mogelijk was Zaalveringen over het natuurgebied heengebouwd, tenminste dat zeiden de monniken. Hoverdam was het enige vrijdorp wat nog veilig was, wat naast Zaalveringen lag, maar de monniken wilden het er niet op wagen.

Eén van de hermieten was geestelijk chirurg, en maakte sneetjes in hun achterhoofden, aan de rechterkant, om er zo nu en dan slangetjes uit te halen. Die slangetjes werden in potjes opgeborgen. Soms werden het vliegende slangetjes, varkentjes of haantjes. Dat wisselde zich af. Tagula stond er versteld van dat dit in zijn hoofd kon leven. Dieper onder de grond woonden kannibaalse stammen, waarvan ze eens een vrouw ontmoetten. De vrouw sprak in een andere taal. Ze wisten dat ze meer werk moesten leveren om de hiëroglieven te vertalen. Ze vonden de vrouw mooi en hadden gevoelens voor haar, waarover ze zich schaamden, want ten eerste was ze een kannibaal, en ten tweede waren ze monniken, en werd er van hen verwacht dat ze zich voor gevoelens schaamden, voornamelijk als het over het andere geslacht ging. De hermieten waren hier veel vrijer in. Toch hadden de hermieten ook veel strijd. Soms waren de hermieten suicidaal, en het kwam soms voor dat ze zichzelf overleverden aan de kannibaalse stammen. Dat stond gelijk aan zelfmoord, maar niet altijd werden zij gegeten. Soms werd het uitgesteld, en soms zelfs gingen zij vrijuit. Niet dat ze terug konden, maar ze werden in leven gelaten, ook al was dat in ballingschap. Het bleek dat veel hermieten de hiëroglieven hadden opgetekend. Het waren verhalen over wat ze hadden meegemaakt dieper onder de grond bij de kannibaalse stammen. Het kwam soms voor dat ze konden ontsnappen of werden bevrijd.

Hoofdstuk 5. De vliegenplagen

Tagula vond de hermieten interessant en wilde bij ze leven, of in ieder geval zelf een hermiet zijn. Ze leefden dichter bij de natuur, dieper in de natuur, en ze kenden geheimen over God die de monniken niet kenden. Het was wel een hele opoffering. Je moest zoveel van je leven opofferen om hermiet te kunnen worden. De hermieten leefden vaak in holen en grotten. Ze kenden ook de doorgangen dieper de aarde in. Die doorgangen werden ook bewaakt, vanwege het gevaar van wilde stammen. Het kwam soms voor dat hermieten werden ontvoerd door deze stammen. Soms waren er invallen in de gebieden van de hermieten door zulke stammen. Somjs gingen hele grote groepen van hermieten in ballingschap. Soms werden ze gefokt voor hun vlees, of gefokt als slaaf of lastdier. Soms voor andere dingen. Tagula las erover op de grottekeningen, maar hoorde ook veel verhalen erover van de hermieten.

Maar Tagula kwam er al snel achter dat de hermieten heel anders waren en heel anders leefden dan hij zich had voorgesteld. Ze waren pervers, godslasterlijk, ruw, ruig, onvoorspelbaar, doortrapt, gemeen, sadistisch, en bovenal zakelijk. Je lag er zo uit. Ze waren snel aangebrand, overgevoelig, konden niet veel hebben, voelden zich snel in hun eer aangetast, bij het minste of geringste. Je moest ontzettend oppassen met je woorden en je houding bij de hermieten. Ze vonden al snel dingen verdacht, en dan had je het gedaan. Daar viel ook niet over te discussiëren vaak. En dan lag je eruit. Maar dat was ook het hele idee van het hermietenschap. Het werd niet bij elkaar gehouden zoals bij de monniken, want die leefden toch nog min of meer in een soort van leefgemeenschap. Bij de hermieten was dat anders. Daar was het ieder voor zich, ook al leefden ze dicht bij elkaar of zelfs naast elkaar. Er waren wel hermieten-gemeenschappen, maar dat hing vaak als los zand aan elkaar. Vaak kenden ze elkaar niet eens. Iedereen leefde min of meer in zijn eigen wereldje. En zo verwilderde en verwaterde alles. Dat verklaarde misschien ook hun gedrag. Het was vaak niet meer sociaal te noemen. Maar wat was sociaal eigenlijk ? Misschien had de mens daar wel hele verkeerde beelden van.

Tagula besloot maar gewoon veel te luisteren naar de hermieten, zonder al te veel te zeggen, maar ook dat werd vaak als verdacht gezien. Dat noemden de hermieten onbeschoft en ondankbaar. Tagula voelde zich al snel in een mijnenveld. Hij had het gevoel alsof hij onder zware mind control kwam. De hermieten hadden hun eigen regels, en die moest hij leren. Het waren wilden min of meer. Vooral de hermieten die nog dieper onder de grond woonden. Die hadden vaak ook teveel meegemaakt. Die waren psychisch ook zwaar aangetast. Die konden zelfs gevaarlijk zijn.

De hermieten hadden een geschrift wat de tweede bijbel werd genoemd. Eigenlijk waren dat een heleboel geschriften, en veelal stond het ook in de grotten geschreven. Zij hadden ook de nieuwe bijbel. Dat scheen van hen vandaan te komen. De monniken waren verbaasd over de kennis die de hermieten erover hadden. Tagula realiseerde zich dat elk blijvend contact met een hermiet zeldzaam en bijzonder was, en dat hij daar heel zuinig op moest zijn, en er heel voorzichtig mee om moest springen. Anders zou het het einde van zijn wereld kunnen betekenen. De hermieten gaven hem hoop, en hadden veel te vertellen, maar dat kon vanwege hun overgevoelige karakter zo voorbij zijn. Gelukkig waren er veel hermieten, en als het bij de één niet zou lukken, dan zou hij het bij de ander proberen. Dat was ook de instelling van de monniken. Toch wilde hij er niet te gemakkelijk over denken. Hij moest er niet aan denken dat hij nergens meer ingang zou kunnen vinden. De hermieten hadden toch de sleutel tot het voortbestaan van de mens. Tagula zag hier een doorgang, een nieuwe adem. Tagula verzamelde zoveel mogelijk informatie, raadpleegde zoveel mogelijk hermieten, die zich vaak ook als gids opstelden door de grotten en doorgangen. Zo leerde Tagula van het leven onder de aarde, en hij vond het razend interessant.

Dit was een wilde wereld. De hermieten waren wilden, op hun wijze hoog opgeleid. Het steeg ver boven zomaar de doorsnee geleerden van de bovenwereld uit. De hermieten noemden zich vaak ook naar de geschriften van de nieuwe bijbel, zoals de monniken dat ook deden. Zo waren er Anderlechse hermieten, Behemmitische hermieten, Kamba hermieten, enzovoorts. Zij waren er ook voor om de schriften uit te leggen. Het waren predikers, roependen in de wildernis, maar ze konden ook heel kortaf zijn. Vaak was die taak maar tijdelijk, en gingen ze daarna dieper onder de grond om hun tocht voort te zetten. Vandaar dat ook om die reden een contact zomaar kon ophouden. Soms droegen ze het dan nog over aan een andere hermiet, maar lang niet altijd. Dan moest je zelf maar op zoek gaan naar een andere hermiet. Er kwamen aan de andere kant ook steeds meer hermieten bij. Er waren meerderen van de bovenwereld die de hermieten hadden gevonden, en dat waren lang niet altijd monniken. Ook wilde en rebelse jongens hadden vaak een interesse in de hermieten.

De hermieten hadden ook hun opvoedingskampen. Sommige van die kampen leken meer op concentratie kampen. De hermieten hadden ook gevangenissen. Er waren ook werkkampen. De hermieten deden ook aan slavernij. Lang niet alle hermieten waren het daar mee eens. Tagula kwam erachter dat de meningen nog veel verdeeld waren onder de hermieten, en dat er ook oorlogen waren tussen de verschillende groepen van hermieten. Dat verklaarde ook de gevangenissen, de strafkampen en werkkampen, en de slavernij op zich. Het had ook met het economische stelsel van de hermieten te maken. Ze moesten overleven, en velen gingen vrijwillig in slavernij puur om te overleven.

Gewoon werk klonk te vrijblijvend en te ver weg, te ongedisciplineerd, te onafhankelijk. Bij de hermieten ging het om discipline, om strakke regels, en dat kon alleen als je bezit was geworden. Een slaaf had geen waarde, maar had waarde als bezit, en zo werd er voor hem gezorgd. Ook veel vrouwen boden zich zo bij de hermieten aan, vanwege dat er zo voor hen gezorgd werd en ze beschermd werden, in ruil voor zekere diensten. Tagula vond dat niet kloppen. Hij begreep het wel, maar vroeg zich af wat er met de vrouwen gebeurde. Tagula vond dat er ook andere wijzen waren. Maar wat had Tagula in te brengen bij de hermieten ?

Tagula vond dat de hermieten te hardhandig met hun vrouwen omgingen, die ze hun slaven noemden. Maar de hermieten vertelden hem dat de vrouwen ook niet makkelijk waren. Ze zeiden dat de vrouwen het zelf vaak uitlokten, en dat ze er om vroegen om zo behandeld te worden. Tagula kon zich dat moeilijk voorstellen, en wilde het ook van de vrouwen zelf horen, maar aan de andere kant wist hij dat vrouwen problematisch konden zijn. De hermieten zeiden vaak dat ze de ergste soort van vrouwen hadden, op de amazones na.

De vrouwen zouden twistziek zijn en denigrerend. Ook meerdere vrouwen bij elkaar konden een probleem vormen, want die konden verschrikkelijk roddelen. De hermieten noemden het een zee van smerigheid. De hermieten hadden vaak helemaal geen respect voor het vrouwelijke geslacht, en dat terwijl de nieuwe bijbel en vaak ook de tweede bijbel veel over Moeder God ging. Maar ze wezen erop dat de nieuwe bijbel veel waarschuwde tegen aardse vrouwen, dat die een sta in de weg konden zijn. Voor de hermieten was het ook overleven. En uit angst voor de amazones maakten ze vrouwen daarom soms ook eigenhandig tot slaaf. Voor hen was het vaak ook een vorm van voorzorg, en was het als een nodige gevangenis voor zelfbescherming. De hermieten noemden het zelfverdediging. Ze vertelden veel over de amazones, wat die konden doen, hoe gevaarlijk die waren. De hermieten waren hierdoor zwaar paranoïde naar vrouwen.

Het verklaarde veel over hoe de hermieten waren, waarom ze zo verwilderd waren, vanwege hun verhalen over de amazones. Amazones werden het zwaarst bewaakt, werden tot slaaf gemaakt, gedwongen, of kwamen in de gevangenis terecht, wat dat dan ook mocht wezen, dat verschilde van gebied tot gebied. Sommige hermietengroepen waren het er niet mee eens. Zij vonden dat het beter was je gewoon slecht te laten behandelen door amazones, beter dan zomaar het recht in eigen handen te nemen. Vandaar dat er ook weer oorlogen waren tussen de hermietengebieden. Het was nogal ingewikkeld, psychologisch, en er waren vele geschiedenisboeken over die de hermieten beheerden en optekenden in de grotten. Voor Tagula was het een object van studie. Hij wilde de vóórs en tegens horen, en wilde ook met de vrouwen spreken, maar die kreeg hij bijna niet te spreken, want die werden veelal streng bewaakt en kort aan de ketting gehouden door de hermieten.

De hermieten, ook al waren die veelal tenger van gestalte, konden vrouwen normaal gesproken wel de baas, maar de amazones, die vaak veel groter en breder waren, konden ze niet de baas, en daarom waren de amazones ook door de hermieten gevreesd. De hermieten waren veelal dun, en de amazones waren veelal dik. Dat wilde niet zeggen dat de hermieten zwak waren. Zij waren vaak pezig, en waren vanwege hun pezigheid en vechtlustige karakter vaak sterker dan de monniken. Toch waren er ook hermieten die wanhopig waren, al hun krachten hadden verloren, zich zwak voelden en niet meer wilden leven. Zij hoopten zelfs opgenomen te worden door de amazones, of meegenomen te worden met een kannibalenstam. Zij vereerden daarom de amazones. Ook in de nieuwe bijbel werd er gesproken over het nut van de amazones, maar werd er ook gewezen op de amazone oorlogen. Het vrouwelijke werd niet zomaar vereerd, maar uitgelegd, en er was een groot onderscheid tussen het lagere, aardse, vleselijke vrouwelijke, en het hogere, natuurlijke vrouwelijke. Er was ook een val van vrouwen geweest, en daarom waren vele vrouwen slecht en doortrapt. Al met al werd er daarom ook veelal door de hermieten geleerd dat het ware vrouwelijke zich in jezelf bevond, als onderdeel van de geestelijke wapenrusting tegen het vlees. Het vrouwelijke was een principe, een oorlogsprincipe tegen de zonde, de leugen en de dwaling. Daarom geloofden de hermieten ook in de hogere amazone opname. Daar strekten ze zich naar uit. Ze geloofden in het kennis-gedeelte van de vrouw, waar de vrouw tot ontwaking was gekomen. Daar hadden ze hun uitgebreide filosofieën over.

Tagula raakte meer en meer geïnteresseerd in de amazone verhalen. Hij wilde het geheel uitdiepen. De ene hermiet wist er meer over te vertellen dan de andere hermiet. De ene hermiet was hier veel meer ervaren in dan de ander. Daarom was Tagula op zoek naar de juiste hermieten. Zij moesten hem hierin inwijden. Hij voelde zichzelf gewoon nog een groentje. Hij schaamde zich ook over zijn gevoelens voor vrouwen, of die nu goed of slecht waren. Zo had hij dat van de monniken geleerd. Dan voelde hij zich vies of slecht. Die gevoelens konden soms ook negatief zijn, dat hij vrouwen verachtte, dat hij ze slecht vond, maar gelijk kwam dan de schaamte opzetten, dat hij zichzelf te hard voelde. Tagula wilde vaak vrouwen op een afstand bewaren. Hij vond ze vaak enge, onbetrouwbare, onvoorspelbare wezens. Toch was hij in ze geïnteresseerd, maar dan op afstand. Vandaar dat de aanpak van de hermieten bij hem wel werkte, maar telkens had hij de gedachte en het gevoel dat het niet klopte, en voelde hij zich innerlijk verdeeld.

Het was niet meer dan normaal. Hij moest ook voorzichtig zijn, vooral vanwege de valstrikken van de amazones die door de hermieten werden besproken. Ze konden heel doortrapt zijn, gevaarlijk, sluw. Het wekte een bepaalde minachting op naar vrouwen bij Tagula als hij die verhalen hoorde. Toch wilde hij met ze spreken om ook hun kant van het verhaal te horen. Hij wilde ze een kans geven. Hij vond dat ze eerlijk beoordeeld en berecht dienden te worden, niet als slaven behandeld moesten worden. Dat zou verkeerd aflopen, voor hen, maar ook voor de hermieten.

Er was altijd een zekere spanning bij de hermieten. Tagula was zijn leven niet altijd zeker, maar terug naar boven wilde hij ook niet. Hij wilde meer over beneden weten.

Tagula keek naar de hermieten, die tenger en pezig waren, als gestroomlijnde roofdieren. Ze waren sterker dan de monniken veelal. Er was iets in hen wat het einde van de wereld kon veroorzaken. Vrouwen zochten hulp en troost bij hen, bescherming, zelfs slavernij. Vrouwen wilden van alles voor hen doen, om maar uit de sleur en dreiging van hun eigen leven te kunnen komen. Ze wilden bezit worden van de hermieten. Ze wilden onderwezen worden. Tagula vond dat vreemd. Hij vond dat dat niet klopte, dat er ook andere wegen waren, vooral als hij zag hoe de hermieten met die vrouwen omgingen. Als vee. Er waren dus vele hermieten die hier niets van wilden weten, en die vonden dat de vrouwen vrijgezet moesten worden, en geweigerd. Maar bepaalde hermieten hadden hier een hard hoofd in. Er waren speciale vrouwenkampen waar vrouwen voor dit soort dingen gefokt en gehouden werden. Het waren trainingskampen, waar de vrouwen werden gehersenspoelt. Ze moesten weten van hun taken, hoe ze hermieten moesten behandelen, hoe ze hermieten moesten verzorgen, hoe ze hermieten moesten dienen. Het ging niet altijd goed. Somns draaiden vrouwen door. Soms draaiden hermieten door. Soms waren er hele stammenoorlogen. Soms waren er invasies. Soms gingen er hele volksstammen in ballingschap, soms tot zeer diep onder de grond, en zou niemand meer van hen horen. Zo kwam er kennis bij, en ging kennis verloren. Het was een hele eigen wereld, en een hele eigenaardige wereld. Het klopte niet. Dat bleef Tagula zeggen, voornamelijk tegen zichzelf. Tagula durfde vaak ook niet met de andere monniken erover te spreken. Bang dat er een alarm zou afgaan. Wat moest hij met alle psychologische belasting door de monniken ? Het was alsof ze hem terugriepen, dat hij niet verder de zee moest ingaan. Of dat dat zelfs niet mocht, ook al was hij slechts onderzoeker, en ook al was hij tegen op de vreemde praktijken die de hermieten er soms op nahielden.

Sommige hermieten leken een obsessie met vrouwen te hebben. En Tagula was bang voor deze obsessie, bang dat het ook bij hemzelf zou gebeuren, ook al was het zijn object van onderzoek, zijn object van studie. Hij schaamde zich. Het was alsof hij er een hoge prijs voor moest betalen dat hij met dit onderwerp bezig was. Maar iets schreeuwde in hem dat het de enige weg was, dat hij een idee moest krijgen hoe belangrijk de vrouw was voor vruchtbaarheid, voor het voortbestaan van de schepping. Het schuldgevoel had hij van de monniken. Daar kwam ook zijn schaamte vandaan. Bij de hermieten lag dat vaak anders, maar de hermieten waren ook verdeeld onder elkaar. Ze konden elkaar soms niet luchten of zien, en daarom waren ze ook hermiet. Ze leefden in hun eigen wereld. Veelal gingen ze met de ander om als met dieren.

Ze hadden hun eigen taal, hun eigen dialect. Tagula vond de diversiteit mooi. Hij genoot van de vele verschillende accenten in taalgebruik, en vond dat de hermieten mooie stemmen hadden. Het speelde met zijn zintuigen, het opende nieuwe werelden voor hem, nieuwe natuurgebieden in hemzelf. De hermieten leefden op frequenties waar hij nog nooit van had gehoord. Ze leken van een andere wereld te komen. Tegenpolen waren heel normaal bij de hermieten. Ze leefden als Ismael naar elkaar. Ze waren in vijandschap naar iedere andere man. Het was een vreemde competitie.

Vele hermieten droegen gesels waarmee ze vrouwen afranselden, en Tagula voelde zich er ongemakkelijk bij. Maar de amazone factor was hoog bij de hermieten. Het was allemaal angst en onzekerheid. Meer en meer kreeg Tagula de verhalen over de amazone dreiging te horen, en hij schrok daar ernstig van. Hoe hoorde hoe diep het kon gaan, en hoe definitief het kon zijn. Verschillende hermieten die het meest met amazones hadden meegemaakt misten ledematen. Sommigen hadden zelfs geen armen en benen meer, en waren geheel overgeleverd aan de verzorging door andere hermieten. Toch wilden ze niet naar de bovenwereld. Het was niet zozeer dat vrouwen hiervoor moesten boeten, maar dat vrouwen in de gaten gehouden moesten worden, en dat het beter en veiliger was als ze aan de keten lagen. Zo werd er veelal door de hermieten over vrouwen gedacht, maar andere hermieten waren daar op tegen.

De hermieten die tegen vrouwen-vernedering waren werden vaak als buitenbeentjes bestempeld. Dat waren watjes en koekjes, moederskindjes, zielepoten, onrechtvaardigen, zondaren, ketters, slappelingen, vrouwenbehagers, minkukels, zwarte schapen, huilebalken, klagers, holocaust ontkenners, vrouwen onderschatters, makkelijk te manipuleren, snel beinvloed, snel afgeleid, omkoopbaar, enzovoorts. Veelal gingen zij in afgezonderde kampen wonen, zochten ze elkaar op, en soms was er oorlog. Zij hadden soms ook hun eigen vrouwen, en die waren vrij. Vaak werd er ook van hen gezegd dat zij bij hun vrouwen onder de plak zaten, dat ze door hun vrouwen werden opgehitst, dat hun vrouwen hun raadgevers waren. ‘Wie is uw raadgever ?’

Ze werden ook Kaïnieten genoemd, broederverraders. Zelfs broedermoordenaars. ‘Ben ik mijn broeder’s hoeder ?’ Aan de andere kant vereenzelvigden de hermieten zich soms met Kaïn, vanwege het Kaïnsbevel over de zonde te heersen. En zij zagen vaak de aardse vrouwen als het zondebeginsel. Tagula en de andere monniken vonden dat er geen grond was in de nieuwe bijbel voor het roekeloze en extreme gedachtengoed van de hermieten. Ze vonden het misbruik van de nieuwe bijbel. De nieuwe bijbel was veelal vertaald naar de dialecten van de hermieten, en daar mankeerde nogal wat aan volgens sommigen. Verkeerde vertaling was verkeerde interpretatie. Dat kon nogal makkelijk gebeuren in de overdracht van talen. Dat was het werk van sluwe tolken. Maar velen van de hermieten vonden dat hun dialecten de oorspronkelijke talen waren van de nieuwe bijbel. Daar waren ook weer oorlogen over. In de ogen van de monniken was het allemaal gesis en geharrewar. De monniken hielden het bij hun uitgave, dat wat ze onder de grond hadden gevonden. Dat was door God daar neergelegd. De hermieten beweerden dat het slechts een latere vertaling was. Zo ontstond er nog meer spanning tussen de hermieten en de monniken.

De hermieten beweerden dat de monniken niet inzagen hoe gevaarlijk vrouwen konden zijn, maar de monniken vonden dat onzin. Ze waren zich wel degelijk bewust van de gevaren, maar vonden de aangedragen oplossingen van de hermieten niet terecht. Volgens de hermieten hadden de monniken het hele verhaal nog niet gehoord. De monniken wilden ook de kant van de vrouwen horen, maar dat werd niet echt toegestaan. De vrouwen werden angstvallig van de monniken weggehouden. De vrouwen waren bezit van de hermieten, en de vrouwen zouden gevaarlijk zijn, dus daarom leefden de vrouwen in gevangenschap of slavernij. Zo niet, dan zouden de vrouwen dat bij de hermieten kunnen doen, gezien de vele amazone verhalen hierover. De hermieten zeiden dus dat het puur voorzorgsmaatregelen waren en dat het zelfverdediging was, en dat de vrouwen heelhuids door het proces zouden kunnen komen, en als volwaardige hermiet zouden kunnen leven, met vrijheidsstatus. Deze vrouwen werden ook gewoon hermieten genoemd, en geen hermieten-slaven of hermieten-gevangenen.

Tagula kon niet tegen het uitbuiten van vrouwen. Hij had geen hoge pet op van vrouwen in het algemeen, maar dit ging hem te ver. Maar hij zag het niet als zijn missie om het te veranderen. Wel wilde hij er meer van weten. Hij wilde meer weten van wat dieper onder de grond gebeurde. De hieroglieven vertelden erover, en ook de hermieten zelf.

Tagula moest met bittere tranen deze wereld leren kennen, door veel zweet en bloed. De hermieten waren vaak misselijke mannetjes met misleidend taalgebruik, die hem vaak het bloed onder de nagels vandaan probeerden te halen. Soms liep Tagula er van weg met tranen in zijn ogen, en liep hij lange tijd met een brok in zijn keel. Hij vond de hermieten durfals die dachten dat ze alles konden zeggen.

Ook vielen ze hem soms fysiek aan of werd hij bedreigd. In zijn ogen waren de hermieten vaak tuig, maar ze waren ook belangrijk in zijn ogen, want zij droegen belangrijke informatie. Vandaar dat Tagula veel moest slikken. Hij mocht het niet verprutsen. Hij moest zich erbij neerleggen dat hij moest betalen aan de hermieten voor deze informatie, en dat hij belasting moest betalen. In zekere zin voelde hij zich de slaaf van de hermieten, maar dat had hij er graag voor over om tot hun kennis te komen. De verhalen over de amazones waren hard en wreed. Hij durfde er bijna niet over na te denken. Hij durfde er ook niet veel over te praten. Hij was bang dat hij onder een vloek zou komen, dat het zich zou wreken, dat het als een besmettelijk virus was. Hij voelde zich al aangestoken door de hermieten. Hij voelde iets branden en knagen in hem, iets wat zijn hart beschreef, wat zijn hersenen bekladde, en het was met geen mogelijkheid weg te wissen. Perverse en godslasterlijke taal soms, veel gescheld, veel geschreeuw, gegil, bedreiging, chantage, omkoperij, anarchisme, muiterij. Hij was in een worsteling. Hij wilde niet door deze dingen overgenomen worden. Hij moest het op een afstand houden. Het was alsof hij in de greep van een slang was. Het was zeer giftig. Maar hij wilde dieper de grot in. Hij hoorde geroep. Het rook hier naar urine, en dingen die hij niet kon beschrijven. Het rook hier naar het prehistorische, het oer, het primitieve, eens weggeworpen. Hier was Zaalveringen overheen gebouwd.

De hermieten waren ook de wachters van de diepe kennis. Ze gaven het niet zomaar prijs. Er moest met hen geworsteld worden, er moest aan hun betaald worden. Hij moest luisteren en gehoorzamen, en dat wilde hij alleen maar deels, en daarom was het een gevecht. Hij wilde geen compromissen sluiten, maar het leek wel te moeten. Hij voelde zich als een houten klaas, helemaal verstijfd. Hij durfde dit niet toe te laten, maar zijn ziel schreeuwde het uit tot de diepere dingen, en die waren hier ook. Hij moest de grot in, dieper. Hij moest de hiëroglieven ontcijferen. Hij moest de bovenwereld redden. De hermieten lachten hem uit. Die hadden de bovenwereld allang opgegeven veelal. De hermieten zeiden dat ze alleen maar dieper moesten, en dat de bovenwereld zelf maar moest volgen, maar dat de bovenwereld vermoedelijk in de fuik zou komen. De bovenwereld was hier niet tegen opgewassen. Het waren belastingontduikers in de ogen van de hermieten, spijbelaars, tafelschuimers, piraten. Het waren mutsen en dozen, afdekkers.

De hermieten hadden veelal geen goed woord over voor de bovenwereld, en zagen zichzelf niet als redders. Het waren roepers, maar ze zouden niet wachten op de bovenwereld. Hun stem zou wel vervagen in de verte. Zij moesten door. Zij moesten verder, tot de diepere geheimen. De bovenwereld moesten ze afleggen. Ze moesten het verzaken.

Er was een grote zee in de onderwereld, dieper onder de grond, achter de hermieten-gebieden, schuin naar onderen, en achter de zee woonden de amazones. Die zouden uiteindelijk de hele wereld overnemen, ook de bovenwereld. Zij waren in grote getallen. Het was een werelddeel met vele lagen, en daarom groter dan de grootste continenten van de bovenwereld. Ook hadden de amazones grotere populaties dan welk land of continent dan ook, en waren zij sterker dan de sterkste man in de bovenwereld. Ook de hermieten konden niet tegen hen op. Zij wisten dat het op een dag zou gebeuren, dat de amazones zouden komen om alles in te nemen. Dat was al eerder gebeurd, maar dan op veel kleinere schaal. Ze leefden nu zoals de hermieten het noemden in de dagen van de voorbereiding. De wereld moest zich klaar maken voor de algehele amazonitische ballingschap. Zowel monnik als hermiet zouden hieraan moeten geloven. Er was geen ontsnapping aan, geen kruid tegen opgewassen.

Tagula liet deze woorden diep tot zich doordringen en overdacht ze. Hij was er dag en nacht mee bezig om diepte in deze woorden te vinden. Hij wilde het nut ervan weten. De hermieten zeiden dat het deels een goede en deels een slechte ballingschap zou zijn. Daarom waren er ook de amazone oorlogen. Er waren goede en slechte amazones, maakten de hermieten duidelijk. Ook waren er goede slechten en slechte goeden. Er waren allerlei soorten. Daarom hadden de hermieten de nieuwe bijbel en de tweede bijbel om hierin wegwijs te maken.

De hermieten waren bang voor wat er zou komen. Er zou jacht op hen gemaakt worden. Daartoe waren de vele vliegenplagen als voorbereiding. Ze zeiden dat ze door de vliegen aangemerkt werden als prooi daartoe. Het waren vreemde vliegen, ondergrondse vliegen. Jachtsvliegen, bizonvliegen, rundervliegen, buffelvliegen, varkensvliegen, botvliegen en andere soorten. Sommigen konden steken en brachten vreemde littekens, die een vreemde geur hadden. Sommige van die vliegen scheidden een stof af die hen gewillig maakten. Daarom waren de hermieten ook bang voor vliegen, en gebruikten ze veel voorhangsels en vliegnetten. Daarom liepen vele hermieten ook vaak rond met vliegnet kleding. Dat was een soort gaas. Dit deden ze lang niet altijd, en meestal alleen op gezette tijden, als het vliegengevaar het grootst was. Veelal bleef het gewoon bij de vliegnet voorhangsels of andere voorhangsels. Weer andere hermieten deden hier niet aan en dachten : ‘Laat maar komen.’ Ze vonden dat de amazones in hun recht stonden om te komen. Zij hadden ook veelal de moed al opgegeven, en sommigen hadden een doodswens.

Tagula merkte hoe bang hermieten voor vliegen waren. Vaak als er een vlieg werd gezien dan was het alsof er een alarm afging. Soms renden de hermieten dan gillend als een varken in het rond om de anderen te waarschuwen. De hermieten waren paranoïde naar vliegen toe. Ook al ging het in negen van de tien gevallen om een onschuldige vliegensoort, de hermieten namen geen enkel risico. Als het een gevreesde vliegensoort zou zijn, en het zou iemand steken, of als prooi aanmerken, dan zou de ramp niet te overzien zijn, want het was een besmettelijk iets. Zij die gestoken waren moesten hiervoor in speciale kampen. Het veroorzaakte allerlei spierziekten en verlamming. Er waren ook vliegsoorten die zich niet stoorden aan voorzorgsmaatregelen. Ze konden zich gewoon door het gaas heenwerken. Dat waren de gevaarlijkste vliegen. Ze werden ook wel zombificators genoemd. De hermieten hadden veelal een kiene interesse hierin, en zagen vliegen vaak als slechte voortekenen, voortekenen van ballingschap, zwakte en onderdrukking. Dat het negen van de tien keer niet om een kwaadaardige soort ging deed daar niets aan af. Vliegen waren gevreesd bij de hermieten. Ook waren de vliegen veelal een voorteken van honger.

Hoofdstuk 6. De voorhangsels van de amazones

Tagula kwam er meer en meer achter dat veel hermieten slechts rogues waren, die gewoon voor eigen gewin onder de grond waren gegaan, niet vanwege een hoger doel. Het waren vagebonden. Natuurlijk was dat om te overleven, maar dat deden ze door levens te nemen, niet door leven te geven. Hij was daarom zeer kritisch op de hermieten, maar kon dat maar moeilijk uiten natuurlijk. Dat werd niet geaccepteerd en kon vervelende gevolgen hebben. Ze hadden daar een heel scherp oog en oor voor. Als ze alleen al dachten dat ze bekritiseerd werden, dan kon het al mis gaan. De hermieten waren apart volk, veelal verbitterd, paranoïde en verwond. Snel aan de bel trekken bij het minste of geringste, allemaal doden uit voorzorg. Ze waren trigger-boys. Vinger aan de knop. Deze jongens zouden een vliegtuig kapen als ze de lucht inwilden, eerder dan dat ze netjes in de rij zouden staan en alle nodige procedures zouden doorlopen. Geen bureaucratie voor hen. Daar deden ze niet aan. Het waren anarchisten, wilde jongens.

Aan eerlijk en oprecht deden ze niet. Alles moest gesmokkeld worden. Dan pas hadden ze het gevoel dat ze iets bereikt hadden, en dat ze veilig waren. Veiligheid was belangrijk voor de hermieten. Of dat nu schijnveiligheid was of echte veiligheid. Het ging om het gevoel, de kick die het gaf. Het ging om het spuitje. Ze hielden zich daarom veel bezig met bijgeloof. De waarheid was minder belangrijk. In zekere zin waren zij junkies, gestoken door een vreemd insect.

Het gebeurde zoals de hermieten hadden voorspeld. Op een dag kwamen de amazones en gingen ze in ballingschap. Alle ballingen gingen in schepen de grote ondergrondse zee over tot het land van de amazones, waar ze in gevangenissen kwamen. Op de muren stonden tekeningen van eerdere ballingen. Er waren hier gruwelijke dingen gebeurd. Tagula schrok wakker. Het was maar een droom geweest. Een oude hermiet keek hem aan. ‘Eng gedroomd, jongen ?’ Tagula had wild om zich heen gekeken. Toen vertelde Tagula de droom. Hij had een slaapplaats gehad bij de oude hermiet. ‘Ach, we zijn allang in ballingschap,’ zei de oude hermiet. ‘We zijn allemaal aan de drugs, en daarom lijkt het erop alsof we vrij zijn, maar het is niet zo.’

‘Drugs ?’ vroeg Tagula slaperig.

‘Ja,’ zei de oude hermiet. ‘We hebben dat in onze aderen gespoten gekregen van de amazones.’

‘Eng,’ zei Tagula. ‘En wat nu ?’

‘We kunnen niks,’ zei de oude hermiet. ‘Wij moeten alleen naar God zoeken, dan werkt alles ten goede, en God is ook een amazone.’

‘Ja ja,’ zei Tagula, ‘okay. Ik heb wat ontmoetingen met God gehad in het verleden.’ Tagula dacht weer aan zijn droom toen er werd gezegd : ‘Waarom hebt gij de deur opengedaan ?’

‘Ik houd dit niet vol,’ zei Tagula. ‘Al dat gepraat over amazones. Ik heb een vrouw nodig.’

‘Je moet vechten tegen de verleiding,’ zei de oude hermiet.

‘Ik ben op, gewoon op,’ zei Tagula.

‘Het ligt allemaal van binnen,’ zei de oude hermiet.

‘Jij hebt zeker makkelijk praten,’ zei Tagula. ‘En jij hebt ook gewoon vrouwelijke slaven ?’

‘Nee,’ zei de oude hermiet. ‘Daar doe ik niet aan.’

‘Hoe blijf je dan mentaal gezond als je niet aan vrouwen mag denken ?’ vroeg Tagula.

‘We mogen wel aan vrouwen denken,’ zei de oude hermiet, ‘maar zij moeten bepaalde principes voorstellen. Het mogen geen aardse vrouwen zijn.’

‘Nee, ja, klopt,’ zei Tagula. ‘Soms is het even net allemaal te zwaar en zie ik door de bomen het bos niet meer.’

‘Jij moet helemaal tot rust komen,’ zei de oude hermiet. ‘Ze hebben je helemaal het hoofd gek lopen praten.’

‘Ja, klopt,’ zei Tagula.

‘En wat nu ?’ vroeg de oude hermiet. ‘Laat je het op je zitten, of ga je de strijd aan ?’

Tagula zweeg. ‘Ik ben moe,’ zei hij na een tijdje. Toen viel hij weer in slaap. De volgende ochtend zag hij de oude hermiet niet. Hij keek uit zijn slaapplaats. Het was aan het einde van een tunnel die schuin naar beneden liep. Hij liep de tunnel in, en keek naar wat hieroglieven op de wanden, en maakte wat notities. Er was niets wat hij ervan kon maken, maar hij werkte er in ieder geval aan. Zijn interpretatie was natuurlijk ook waardevol. Zo ontstonden er boeken waar hij of anderen later weer mee verder konden. Zo ontstond er diepte. Het was een gemis dat hij nog niet kon zien wat het betekende, maar hij merkte dat hij wel dichterbij kwam. Natuurlijk konden de hermieten hem ook uitleg geven, maar dit waren hiëroglieven waar niemand raad mee wist.

Tagula had dromen dat aan de randen van het heelal alles tot boeken werd, en dat het begon te regenen op de mensen. Het regende letters en zinnen, en zo werden de boeken geopenbaard. Hier leidde het pad van de kennis naartoe. Aan de randen van heelal begon het te regenen, en er waren rivieren en watervallen, en het sleurde de mensen mee. De mensen begrepen de functies van de insecten niet, die de aankondigers van deze dingen waren. De letters waren vreemde insecten waar de mens nog niets vanaf wist, en zo waren de hiëroglieven dat ook. De insecten hadden zekere informatie opgeslagen, en ze zouden het langzaam verspreiden.

Een letter was dus een opslagmiddel van energie, van betekenis, van werk. Het moest de mens ergens toe voorbereiden. Zinnen waren zo ook unieke opslagmethodes hiervoor. Als een zin niet goed was kon ook het tegengestelde gebeuren. De mens was veelal opgebouwd uit verkeerde zinnen en had zo een verkeerde vorm van bewustzijn. Tagula was dus blij dat hij in deze grotten terecht was gekomen en zulke vreemde dromen had. Hij zag ook in hoe belangrijk de ballingschap was voor mensen. Het bracht de mens terug naar waar de mens vandaan kwam. De mens was afgedwaald in de devolutie. Er moest eerst devolutie zijn voordat er evolutie kon zijn. De mens zou eerst de verkeerde richting opgaan. De hermieten zeiden dat er maar een klein overblijfsel zou zijn.

Maar ook de hermieten zaten vaak nog vol met zaaddrift, erfdrift, gemaksdrift, vrouwenverslavingen, enzovoorts. Velen zochten gewoon nog naar de korte weg van kracht. De insecten zouden ermee afrekenen. De insecten zouden de opslagplaatsen van kracht lek prikken. Daarom vreesden de hermieten de insecten ook zo erg. Ze konden niet van insecten genieten. Het joeg op hen. De insecten waren de voorbodes van de ballingschap.

Insecten waren insecten. Er viel niet mee te discussiëren. Ze waren niet omkoopbaar. Meedogenloos brachten zij hun virussen. Het verstand van de mens was afgedwaald en moest terug. Daarom moest het eerst doorstoken worden, geïnfecteerd.

Tagula kreeg zijn eigen grot, en begon boeken over insecten te verzamelen, die de hermieten veelal hadden. Hij wilde insectoloog worden. Ook begon hij boeken van hiëroglief-ontcijfering te verzamelen.

Tagula vroeg zich af in hoeverre de hermieten nog onder invloed stonden van Mörn, of zelfs bezeten waren door Mörn, want het was hem duidelijk dat Mörn niet wilde loslaten. Er moest veel meer gebeuren. In zijn dromen ging het over de amazones. Zij waren duidelijk in oorlog met Mörn. Hij hoorde van de hermieten dat ze in de bovenwereld een spelmodule hadden gemaakt wat liep op boom-energie en insecten-energie, dat kon geswitched worden. Die konden ze in Hoverdam ophalen. Het was de MH05. Het was ook een oplader voor insecten-energie wat voor van alles gebruikt kon worden. Het tapte in op de frequenties van insecten.

Omdat het in Hoverdam nog veilig was gingen ze in een grote groep daar naartoe. Mocht het uit de hand lopen, dan waren ze in ieder geval met velen. Zowel monniken als hermieten waren in het apparaat geinteresseerd. Ook Tagula ging mee. Toen Tagula het apparaat kreeg zei één van de medewerksters tegen hem : ‘Houd je sterk.’ Het was goed gegaan. Nu moesten ze weer terug. Het apparaat kende vele mogelijkheden. Je kon er ook hiëroglieven mee ontcijferen. Tagula experimenteerde ermee en deed er ook wat spelletjes op.

Steeds meer leefde de mens op insecten energie. Ergens in de bovenwereld hadden ze dat uitgedokterd, maar de energie moest nog gezifd worden. De insecten technologie moest door een aantal fasen heen om zuiver te worden. Tagula droomde veel. De dromen schenen door de insecten energie te worden opgewekt. Het kwam tot een confrontatie tussen de amazones en Mörn. Maar de amazones hadden ook onderling oorlog, zoals de insecten. Ook mörnisten hadden onderling oorlog.

Het was door de oorlogen dat irke werd opgewekt. Dit waren droomoorlogen. Het was altijd oorlog in het hoofd van Tagula. Hij gebruikte het voor de exegese van de hiëroglieven en de nieuwe bijbel, en zo ook de tweede bijbel. De insecten hadden hierin een grote plaats. Het was als een opname in zijn hoofd door de insecten energie. Hij leerde het te gebruiken. Hij voelde zich als een insect die boven alles uit kon stijgen, maar dat kon alleen door eerst als een insect dieper te gaan dan al het andere. Hij moest zowel leren graven en spitten als vliegen. Dat was ook hoe de insecten energie werkte en werd opgewekt. Het ging eerst heel diep, zodat het onder alles kwam, als aan de rand van het heelal, waar de boeken ontstonden.

De aarde stond op de rand van grote vliegenplagen. Zij zouden honger en ballingschap brengen, en vreemde littekenen. De aarde zou zo geheel door vliegen-energie leven, maar eerst moest er heel wat sterven. De vliegen waren gekomen om vlees te eten, veel vlees. Uiteindelijk waren dit de voorhangsels van de amazones. Er was geen plaats meer voor opgeblazen Mörn verstand. Dat moest doorstoken worden, lekgeprikt. Daartoe waren de vreemde littekenen. Ze spraken een andere taal. Het waren lichamelijke hiëroglieven die nog vertaald moesten worden. Daar was het apparaat ook voor. Het apparaat was biologisch materiaal wat kon meegroeien, wat zichzelf kon updaten.

Er waren zeeën van insecten energie in het binnenste van de aarde. Daar woedden ook de stormen van insecten energie die de mens tot Orion zou meenemen. Dit was de grote insecten opname. Dit gebeurde allemaal door de vliegenplagen. Het oude, opgeblazen verstand van de mens zou geheel worden weggevreten. De vliegen zouden meedogenloos doorgaan, niet stoppen. Zij konden niet omgekocht worden. De natuur laat zich niet paaien. De natuur laat zich niet vleien. De natuur houdt er geen favorieten op na. Er is geen aansziens des persoons, wat je dan ook denkt te hebben bereikt. Nee, een ieder moest buigen, en elke tong zou moeten belijden. Men moest aan de kant voor de insecten energie. De vliegenplagen zouden nu spreken, en de mens zou duidelijke grenzen zien.

Zij waren de voorhangsels van de amazones. Moeder wildernis riep haar kinderen terug. Het was allemaal te ver gegaan. Men was te ver afgedwaald. Mörn moest weer terug de kast in.

Mörn was dronken, als een woest beest, en op hem reed de hoer dronken van het bloed van kinderen en dieren. Totaal schaamteloos was zij, niet door enige kennis verhinderd. In armoede leefde zij, maar zij waande haarzelf rijk. Het was Morgan, en zij had vele zonen voortgebracht.

De monniken en hermieten streden er tegen. Zij was innerlijk verdeeld. Zo kon zij overal zijn, ook in de harten van de monniken en de hermieten. Zij was sluw. Zij speelde een spel.

Zij acteerde. Zij had overal toegang, en dat beangstigde Tagula. Hij kwam zelf ook van diep. Hij herinnerde hoe hij in haar voorhoven diende, alhoewel hij nooit verder was gegaan. Zijn geweten hield hem tegen. Oh, hoe kostbaar was het geweten, als een zeldzaam sieraad. En hij mocht er niet mee pronken, anders zou het het geweten niet meer zijn, maar Morgan.

Rode stralen van insecten energie hadden hem altijd de weg versperd. Als gekruiste speren in zijn hoofd. Nooit kon hij van iets teveel nemen, maar hij was verder gegaan dan hij mocht gaan, als een balling. Hij was niet van zichzelf. Hij was van Morgan. Nu waren de insecten gekomen.

Morgan wilde niet laten gaan. De Heere had haar hart verhard. Er was niets wat een mens kon doen. Daarom moesten de insecten komen. Het waren de voorhangsels van de amazones. Het waren de vliegenplagen. Hongerdromen brachten zij, om irke, het diepere, op te wekken. Zij moesten hier gaan slapen. Zij waren te lang opgebleven. Moeder zou hen naar bed brengen, of ze nu wilden of niet. Het was nu uit met het feest, uit met de pret, anders zou het hen verwoesten.

Morgan was geen goede moeder, maar een heks. Ze liet de kinderen maar aanrotzooien. Zo kon ze haar markt bedrijven, levende van hun bloed.

Oh Morgan,
Zij zit op haar troon,
op de rug van een beest,
haar kinderen opgezet,

achter kostbaar glas,
zo kostbaar zijn zij, als monumenten

Oh Morgan,
dronken van het bloed van kind en dier, dronken van markt en plezier, slechts een getal ben in in haar rijk

Oh Morgan, die haar kinderen maar laat aanrotzooien, vies is van onderwijs en discipline,
verzot op snoep, drugs en drank, alles wat hart en geweten kan uitdoven, zij komt van onder de wereld,
een raadsel onbegrepen,
op de stoel van Eli zit zij

Niemand heeft haar begrepen,
Allen volgen zij Mörn, zij vrezen de ondergang van het vlees, daarom nemen zij het er nog van,
ze trekken er nog het laatste uit, wat voor winst het ook nog mag geven

Tot het uiterste gaan is hun sport, en door hun kinderen op te zetten, hopen zij zich het eeuwige leven te verwerven

Hoe ziek is het ?
Maar niemand ziet het,

het virus ontkent namelijk zichzelf

Tagula was koud van binnen. Hij zag de ijstijden komen in zijn dromen, maar het waren de voorhangsels van de amazones.
IJs en insecten, als ijs-insecten, ijsecten, als vliegenplagen die scheuring brengen, scheuring in het verstand, scheuring in het sociale, scheuring in het hele land.

Tagula zag de ijszeeën onder de aarde.
Van daaruit kwamen de ijsvliegen opzetten, om te strijden tegen de valse warmte van de mensen, opportunistische, opgeblazen warmte, die het brein en ook het hart had opgeblazen,
geen geweten meer, geen bewustzijn.
Het was allemaal kunstmatig.
Het was allemaal dood.

Dood en dodend waren zij, om nog zoveel mogelijk met hen mee te sleuren in het verderf.
Daartoe groomden ze de kinderen. Het waren opgeleide vleiers.
Ze waanden zichzelf professioneel en deskundig, omdat ze het zegel van Morgan droegen.

Een valse moeder volgden zij.
Tagula moest veel dromen.
Hij wilde loskomen van Morgan, los van haar banden.
Maar zij wilde niet laten gaan.
Het was vreemd vuur, en daarom moest het ijs wel komen.

Het was altijd oorlog in zijn hoofd.
Ook de vliegen hadden oorlog onderling.
Door de vliegenplagen werd hij opgenomen tot Orion.
Maar hij was innerlijk verscheurd.
Waar hij was wist hij niet meer.
Hij was bedolven onder vele lagen.
Hij wilde geen product meer zijn.
Hij moest weg uit deze fabriek.

De vliegenplagen brachten hem uiteindelijk tot Betelgeuze, maar daar waren ook de oorlogen.
Overal was het oorlog.
Hij moest ontwaken tot de hogere natuur, maar daarvoor moest hij eerst heel diep gaan.
Was hij op de aarde, of was hij op Betelgeuze ?
In ieder geval moest hij zijn weg hier zien te vinden.
Het leek standaard te zijn in dit spel.
Al deze contrasten waren nodig, anders zou alles sterven.

Zonder deze oorlogen zou er geen leven zijn.
En daarom moest hij jager worden, maar de jacht was op hemzelf.
Hij was zijn eigen prooi.

Zo kwam hij tot de rode tent van Bilha, het rode na de jacht.
Hij was tot deze conclusies gekomen na het lezen van de nieuwe bijbel.
Het had hem opgenomen.
Hij bekeek de aarde en het leven met nieuwe ogen.

Hij moest tot de tent van Bilha gaan om zijn leven af te leggen.
Het moest wel schuren, anders zou hij nooit verder komen.
Hij moest wel doorboord worden, anders zou hij nooit vrijkomen.
Morgan had de aarde ontvoerd.
En Mörn was haar zoon.

Zo prevelden de mörnisten : Morgan is God, en Mörn is haar zoon.
Zij gingen voor niets uit de weg voor dit dogma.
Zij doodden voor dit dogma.
Zij plunderden voor dit dogma.
Zij verkrachtten voor dit dogma.
Niets ging hen te ver voor dit dogma.

Hoofdstuk 7. Het standbeeld

Tagula was een profeet.
Tagula was een insectoloog.
Allemaal door een apparaat.
Het was een biologisch apparaat, een natuur apparaat.
Hij speelde er ook spelletjes op.
Veel spelletjes.

In Zaalveringen ging het beter.
Hij kon er soms naar terug.
Zijn oude huis was er nog.
Heel voorzichtig ging hij heen en weer.

Ook was er een camping bij Zalveringen.
Daar had hij ook een vakantie huisje.
Er waren daar karren waarin je kon rijden.
Het werkte op insecten energie.
Naast hem woonde een donkere vrouw met een hondje.
Hij raakte meer en meer met haar in gesprek.

Ze sprak veel over Zilverlingen, waar ze vandaan kwam.
Dat lag aan zee.
Ze had het over de vele boekenwinkels daar op de boulevard.
Zij was ook een boekenfanaat, net als Tagula.
Daarom konden ze goed met elkaar optrekken.

Ze had haar huis nog in Zilverlingen.
Soms nam ze Tagula mee.

Soms nam Tagula haar mee naar zijn huis.
Alles werkte op insecten energie nu, en alles was weer meer veilig.
Er waren verdragen gekomen met de mörnisten.
Zij waren ook afhankelijk van de insecten energie.
Het had alles overgenomen, en werkte door hele andere regels.

Mörn was het oude energie systeem, maar dat bestond niet meer.
Dat was overgenomen.
Velen begonnen Mörn af te zweren.
Ook Morgan viel van haar hoge paard.

Haar kerken werden afgebroken of vervangen.
Tagula en het meisje gingen vaak naar de zee.
De rust was wedergekeerd. Er was weer vrede.
In zijn hoofd was het nog oorlog, maar het werd minder.
Zijn herinneringen lieten hem niet los.
Morgan werkte in het gebied van de herinneringen, van het geheugen. Dat was soms zo sterk en overweldigend dat het waar leek.
Alsof hij er nog was. Het leek alsof zijn hersenen hem soms bedonderden.

Ook het meisje ging hier doorheen.
Tagula zei dat hij soms niet meer wilde leven vanwege het verleden.
Het meisje begreep hem en had het zelfde.
Ze gingen graag boodschappen doen in Zilverlingen of Zaalveringen, of op de camping waar ze naast elkaar woonden.

Eigenlijk waren ze altijd bij elkaar.

Ze hielpen elkaar, hielpen elkaar om toekomst te zien, en ontsluiering en ontcijfering van het verleden. Ze beschouwden het verleden als moeilijke hiëroglieven.
Die lieten zich niet makkelijk uitleggen, alsof ze bewaakt werden.
Hierover waren nog oorlogen.
Het waren de oorlogen van het geheugen, een diep trauma, wat alles had verwoest.
Tagula had nauwelijks het gevoel dat hij nog leefde, maar het meisje gaf hem hoop.
Zij was als een straaltje van de andere wereld.

Ze moesten langs en door vele voorhangsels van de amazones.
In deze wereld kwam je niet makkelijk binnen.
Mörn met zijn gemaksgod en snelle oplossingen was een leugen.
Het was het brandende verleden wat nog niet uitgepuzzeld was.
Mörnisten waren nog overal, zij die koste wat het koste vasthielden aan het verleden.

Het waren giftige mensen. Tagula en het meisje probeerden hen zoveel mogelijk te ontwijken, maar soms hadden ze er nog mee te maken. Soms werkten ze nog in de winkels. Dan werden ze bitcherig te woord gestaan.

Langs vele voorhangsels van de amazones moesten ze gaan, door vele vliegenplagen, door vele oorlogen. Het waren wonden in wonden. Het leek maar door te gaan, en het ging zo diep, en dat moest ook wel. Ze mochten nu niet stoppen. Ze waren aan de rand van het heelal gekomen, bij de watervallen, waarachter de boekenkelders waren van de geheimen.

Het was een raadselachtige natuur. Ook de opponenten waren raadsels. Die mochten ze niet zomaar wegduwen. Ze moesten er dwars doorheen, door deze mijnenvelden. Het waren labyrinten. De insecten energie wees de weg, alhoewel de insecten energie soms tegen zichzelf verdeeld was. Het was nog niet uitgezuiverd. Ze hadden vliegen energie nodig, maar die was ook tegen zichzelf verdeeld. Er waren nog vele vliegen oorlogen. Het was hier vlieg tegen vlieg. Ze leefden in de hoofden van de mensen, en droegen de herinneringen, en de herinneringen werden doorverkocht. Het was herinnering tegen herinnering. Het was een geheugen oorlog. Velen gaven hierin de strijd op, en namen speciale pilletjes om daardoor dement te worden of om alzheimer te krijgen, wat wel of niet kon werken. Ze waren de oorlogen in hun hoofd zat. Het was een soort zelfmoord van het verstand. Toch namen andere vormen van het brein het dan over, zoals formule denken, dogma's.

De dogmatiek van alzheimer was gewild, want men wilde vrede. Men wilde vergeten. Men wilde geen geheugen-soldaat meer zijn. Het was allemaal veel te ver gegaan. Het was een nieuwe soort drugs. Het waren geheugen-killers.

Tagula en het meisje moesten er niets van hebben. Ze zouden koste wat het koste de puzzel oplossen. Ze wilden niet vallen voor de sluwe taktieken van Mörn. Mörn wilde nog steeds het volk niet laten gaan. Nu kon Mörn zijn geschiedenis schrijven, want de mensen wisten het niet meer. Ze lieten zich van alles aansmeren.

Alles moest snel. Het was een nieuwe aristocratie. In baljurken raasden ze door de natuur. Door de weilanden, door de achterbuurten en de bossen. Tagula en het meisje konden het niet bijhouden. Het was achterbuurten mentaliteit. Het was grissen en graaien en dan kortaf doen. Ze hadden nergenhs oog voor. Overmatig van zichzelf overtuigd.

Er waren nieuwe insecten radio’s gekomen, geheel op insecten energie, en Tagula en het meisje luisterden er veel naar. Er waren ook frequenties van andere planeten, met name van Orion en Betelgeuze. Zo werden ze ingelicht over wat er gaande was. Er was goed onderwijs over deze dingen. De geheimen van de natuur werden besproken, en veel tijd werd besteed aan de ontcijfering van de hiëroglieven. IJs had ook zijn eigen frequenties en er kwamen ook ijs-radio’s, die geheel op ijs energie werkten. Ook de zee had zijn eigen frequenties, en zo kwamen er ook zee-radio’s. Tagula en het meisje begonnen de radio’s te verzamelen. Zo hadden ze veel keuze.

De ijs-insecten bleken veel informatie van het heelal te hebben opgeslagen. Ook al bestond het oude energie systeem niet meer, Mörn wilde niet loslaten. Alles zat opgesloten in Mörn. De mensheid was in het moeras gezonken, tot een oude, roestige gevangenis. Het ijzer wilde niet loslaten, en het staal nog wel minder. Men was vastgeklonken in steen. De puzzels moesten nog opgelost worden.

Mörn kreeg juist meer macht als men het vergat.
Zijn vergeet-pillen waren gewild, maar fataal.
Maar men gaf niet meer om leven of dood.
Zombie was de norm. Zolang men maar de goedkeuring van Morgan had.
En die goedkeuring was er alleen als zij haar zoon aanvaardden.
Mörn was de enige weg tot Morgan.
Dat doet een moeder goed.

Morgan was slechts de schaduw van de amazones.
De mens had zich er teveel aan vastgehouden, wilden niet van de waarheid weten, want die was koud en hard.
Men wilde liever de warme leugen.
Men wilde dat gevoel van vereeuwiging, koste wat het koste, of dat nu kwaadschiks of goedschiks ging. Men offerde elkaar daar graag voor op. Men ging hiervoor over lijken.
En voor wat ? Allemaal voor die ene winkel, allemaal voor dat ene merk.
Allemaal om erbij te horen.

Eerst moest de leugen zich manifesteren, eerst moest er een gevecht zijn, anders zou de waarheid nooit kunnen komen. De leugen was de verdraaide heraut van de waarheid.

Nieuwe aardgroenten en zeegroenten kwamen er op de markt die pas ontdekt waren, en die de chemische balans in de hersenen konden herstellen. Het probleem was dat velen hiermee over de dagelijks toegestane limiet gingen, dus het zorgde ook voor een nieuw probleem. Altijd weer had de mens uitvluchten. Altijd weer maakte de mens misbruik van de natuur. Er was dus veel meer nodig voor herstel. Er waren geen eenvoudige oplossingen.

Mensen werden verslaafd. Prijzen gingen omlaag, nog meer mensen werden verslaafd, prijzen gingen omhoog, en zo werden de verslaafden crimineel, en profiteerde de medische zorg ervan, wat alles behalve medisch was, maar gewoon onderdeel van de georganiseerde criminaliteit. Misdaad loonde, maar voor hoe lang ? En zo had het syndroom van Mörn een comeback. Men had angsten en zorgen, en werd hierdoor crimineel. De weg van de monniken was dan te lang, en de weg van de hermieten te moeilijk, dus van eerlijk verdienen en binnen de lijntjes kleuren kwam weinig terecht. De dystopie leefde voort. Men wilde de honger niet, men wilde geen laag profiel houden, alles moest groots.

Naast Zilverlingen lag Geroskmo, ook aan zee, waar een oom van het meisje woonde. Ze spraken hier vaak fluisterend, of met halve zinnen. Men sprak hier vreemde, halve verhalen. In Geroskmo woonde de leiding van het land en het was de geboorteplaats van Mörn. Daarom was het ook een toeristenplaats. Het trok veel pelgrims en andere geinteresseerden. Ook trok het veel onderzoekers. Nog altijd werd het geboortefeest van Mörn gevierd, ieder jaar, met name in Geroskmo. Voor Tagula was het een hoerenzoon, en ook voor het meisje. Zo omschreef ze trouwens ook haar oom. Ze had nare herinneringen aan hem waar ze niet over wilde praten.

In Geroskmo zou nu een nieuwe leider komen, een hermiet. Daarom gingen ze er naartoe. Het meisje hoopte dat ze haar oom niet zou tegenkomen. De hermietenleider zou dingen heel anders doen dan de vorige leider. Tagula was er wel blij mee, maar wist ook hoe de hermieten konden zijn. Al met al moest het wat rust geven in het land. Het was een paar dagen na het geboortefeest van Mörn, en dat zou nu de nieuwe feestdag worden. Het standbeeld van Mörn wat in het centrum van Geroskmo stond, zou op die dag worden afgebroken. Dat wilden Tagula en het meisje ook van dichtbij meemaken. Er waren nogal wat relletjes toen dat gebeurde. Tagula en het meisje moesten maken dat ze er weg kwamen. Er werden schoten gelost. Er vielen vele doden. Tagula en het meisje konden maar net ontkomen. De daders werden opgepakt, maar het was een grote ravage. Toch werd het standbeeld afgebroken. Tagula had spijt dat hij was gegaan. Hij snapte niet hoe hij zo naïef kon zijn.

Eens had Geroskmo een verdrag gesloten met andere landen, het verdrag van Trenta. Tagula wist niet of hun gedrag nu was vanwege dat ze zich meerderwaardig of minderwaardig voelden hierdoor. Hij wist niet of het nu elitair gedrag was of nog iets anders. Zelfs hun nederigheid en bescheidenheid leek verdacht, als onecht, namaak, alsof het een masker was. Of zou het door het standbeeld van Mörn zijn gekomen ? Maar dat was nu in ieder geval afgebroken.

De mörnisten waren woedend, en het gaf aanleiding tot veel meer rellen in het land. Niet iedereen was blij met de nieuwe hermietenleider.

Tagula had dromen in de nacht over de amazones. Ze waren niet gemakkelijk. Hij raakte met hen in gevecht. Hij worstelde met ze. Sommigen waren aardiger dan anderen. Sommigen waren moederlijk, anderen niet. Vele amazones waren ijs en ijskoud. Vanwege dit feit gingen de mensen hun warme goden maken die veel makkelijker waren, maar die niet aan de eis van het leven voldeden. Het trok hen naar de dood, want het had geen eeuwig leven in zich. Het was drugs. De mensen hadden dit uitgevonden, als gifmengers. Zo konden ook Morgan en Mörn ontstaan. Het waren vrijheidsbeelden van de mens. De mens wilde niet aan regels onderhevig zijn. Alles moest met de druk op de knop gebeuren.

Maar de amazones waren niet makkelijk. Ze eisten hard werk, dat de puzzels met bloed, zweet en tranen opgelost zouden worden, niet zomaar weggeworpen zouden worden. Dit was voor levensgenieters moeilijk te verdragen. Ook waren er schijn-amazones die veel te ver gingen, die een karikatuur maakten van de amazones. Zij waren de amazone farizeeërs. Daarom waren er de amazone oorlogen. Vrouw tegen vrouw, moeder tegen moeder. Hierom moest Tagula worstelen, en zich niet zomaar overgeven.

Vanwege de opkomst van rellen in het land ging Tagula weer meer de grond onder naar zijn grot. Hij kreeg daar eens een droom dat er een touw aan hem verscheen, en waarmee hij afdaalde in een tunnel die schuin naar beneden liep, en waardoor hij in een natuurgebied kwam onder de grond. Hij herkende de plaats waar hij was als de slaapplaats bij de oude hermiet waar hij eens was. Het touw leidde hem voort in het natuurgebied onder de grond. Hij zag het als van God gegeven. Hij had eerst een worsteling met het touw, maar het touw nam hem mee. Het touw leidde hem toen naar een plaats waar amazones waren. Zij spraken hem moederlijk toe. Hij kon alleen de woorden niet meer herinneren toen hij wakker werd. De nacht daarop was hij daar weer in een droom. De amazones stonden om hem heen. Ze zeiden dat ze hem hadden geroepen. Hij vroeg zich af waarvoor het was, en was tegelijkertijd op zijn hoede. Hij werd geroepen tot studie van de hiëroglieven. Ze leidden hem tot een grot waar vele hiëroglieven waren die hij nog niet kende. Toen begonnen ze hem te onderwijzen erover. Ze namen hem toen mee dieper onder de aarde.

Eén van de amazones zei toen tegen hem : ‘Zo zal er niemand zijn die mij niet kent.’ Ze waren bij een moeras aangekomen, wat een groot uitgestrekt gebied was, en er kwamen stemmen uit het moeras, zielen die opgesloten waren. Hij zou hier ook veel moeten puzzelen. Hier waren ook veel grotten met hiëroglieven, langs de moerasrand. Alleen zo zouden de zielen vrijkomen. Ze lieten hem die grotten ook zien. Het waren hele lange grotten. Hij duizelde ervan. Hij vroeg zich af hoe hij dat ooit allemaal zou kunnen leren. ‘Bij het begin beginnen,’ werd er toen gezegd.

Hij zag de bubbels uit het moeras komen en werd toen wakker.

De nacht daarop had hij weer een droom. ‘We komen voor jou,’ zeiden de amazones. Hij was weer dieper onder de grond, en ze namen hem mee naar een zee. Ze lieten hem schepen zien, en vertelden over de eilanden in de zee. Ook vertelden ze over de zeecreaturen, over octopi, kwallen en andere vissen. Ook vertelden ze hem over zee-insecten en over de vliegenplagen aan zee. Ze zeiden ook dat de natuurvolkeren onder de grond niet joegen op dieren, maar op zonden, ook al kwamen de zonden in diergedaanten.

Ineens hoorde Tagula een lage en dubbele stem in hem, die zei dat er geen ontsnapping mogelijk was, want hij was gevangene nummer A6-389109700000. A6 was het nummer van zijn gevangenis-zone, en 389109700000 was zijn specifieke nummer waarmee hij werd geïdentificeerd. Hij was op de planeet van de eeuwige verdoemden. Hij was een kind van de eeuwige verdoemenis. Het was de stem van Mörn. Mörn leefde na zijn val voornamelijk nog in de riolen, ook de riolen van het menselijke verstand en de menselijke psyche, want hij wilde niet loslaten. Al het andere beeld viel weg. Het was donker, en Tagula leek Mörn te zien, maar het was vaag. En Mörn was groot, als een verschrikkelijk zeemonster met mannenhoofden. Dat waren dikke, opgeblazen mannenhoofden. De aarde was de aarde niet, maar A6, de planeet van de eeuwige verdoemenis. Voor altijd zouden ze voor Mörn moeten werken als slaven, voor altijd zouden ze voor Mörn moeten strijden. En Mörn noemde A6 liefkozend ook ‘Morgan’, die hij als zijn moeder beschouwde.

Tagula vroeg zich af waar de amazones waren. Die waren ineens verdwenen. Waarschijnlijk probeerden de amazones hem te laten ontsnappen, maar werd hij weer gegrepen door het Mörn systeem, of door het systeem van A6, het systeem van Morgan. Het bleef mensen in de greep houden, en gaf niet mee. Zoveel beveiligings-mechanismes had het. Althans zo leek het.

A6 was een moeras-gevangenis. Zij waren al gestikt. En altijd waren zij stikkende. Steeds dieper zonken zij in hun cellen in het moeras. Zij moesten werken en hun leven opofferen voor Mörn, de zoon van Morgan. Maar was Morgan niet de schaduw van de amazones ? Was zij niet een leugenachtige karikatuur, als een heraut ?

De gevangenis implantaten waren diep van binnen. Het waren implodes. Hij had overal pijn. Het alarm was flink afgegaan. Het was alsof hij werd teruggesleurd. Hij was in de riolen van Mörn. Vreemde wezens keken hem aan. Telkens zag hij flitsen van het moeras, en soms van de zee. Het was alsof hij geen adem kon halen. Hij had flitsen van trage monniken en kerkvaderen. Ze probeerden zijn dromen weer te verstikken. Hij mocht niet dromen. Hij moest Mörn dienen, de boosaardige zoon van Morgan. Daartoe was hij op aarde.

Hij was in worsteling met een kwal die zich had vastgehecht aan zijn hersenen, aan zijn hoofd. Het probeerde zijn ogen uit hem te zuigen. ‘Maak hem blind, en breng hem aan de drugs !’ hoorde hij roepen. ‘Welke medicijnen ?’ hoorde hij toen een andere stem zeggen. Hij kon niet ademhalen. Iets van binnen blokkeerde zijn ademhaling, maar ook iets van buiten. De kwal, en het feit dat hij in het moeras werd gezogen. ‘Niemand kan hier ontsnappen,’ werd er toen gezegd.

Hij hoorde veel gefluister, en veel dubbele stemmen. Die waren laag, maar sommigen waren ook heel hoog. Hij voelde zich koortsachtig. Hij voelde zich zwaar beroerd. Wat waren ze met hem aan het doen ? Wat wilden ze van hem ? Hij hoorde vreemde reclame in zijn hoofd. Hij moest ervoor buigen, dan zouden ze hem verlichting geven. Je kon groeien in dit systeem, macht krijgen in dit systeem, als je Mörn zou dienen, als je de drugs zou nemen. Maar drugs kreeg hij toch wel binnen. Hij voelde injectie-naalden diep zijn vlees ingaan, te diep, en hij voelde koudheid. Koude vloeistof. Hij kon nog steeds niet ademen, of in ieder geval niet goed genoeg, maar hij voelde ook een levenskracht. Het voelde aan als familie, maar hij wist dat het geen familie was. Dit was gevangenis-vloeistof, dromendodend spul.

Het was koud en glibberig, en hij voelde zich vies. Hij voelde zich onogelijk, en daarom zou hij naar de reclame moeten luisteren. Zij zouden hem mooi en aanvaardbaar kunnen maken, niet het afzichtelijke en walgelijke monster wat hij dacht dat hij was op dat moment. Hij moest alles bezien door de lens van Mörn, en dat was een karikatuur van hemzelf, en hij werd erom bespot door Mörn. ‘Dat ben ik helemaal niet !’ dacht Tagula, die nog steeds snakte naar adem. ‘Ik weiger dit te geloven !’

Hoofdstuk 8. Het lot van Tagula

Tagula voelde zich verminkt. Hij voelde zich een zombie. En Mörn was een trol. Hij keek naar de koppen van het zeemonster. Het waren opgeblazen mannenkoppen die alles beter dachten te weten. Ze prevelden verzen uit het boek van Mörn. Het boek was genaamd ‘De Ichtus’, wat zoiets als vis betekent. Tagula had het nog steeds benauwd. Hij begon in zijn gedachten tot de amazones te roepen, maar die kwamen niet. Wel zag hij wat vrouwengestalten die van steen leken, maar dat kon ook Morgan wezen. ‘Je weet wie je moet dienen,’ werd er gezegd. Mörn schreeuwde tot hem, met een drie-dubbele lage stem. De stem was zeer laag, alsof hij gebeten was door een slang, en nu hallucineerde van het gif. Toen leek de stem wel vier-dubbel, als een leprechaun, een veel hogere stem, en toen begon de leprechaun te lachen.

‘We hebben je goed tuk,’ zei de leprechaun. ‘Van de longen tot de lever.’ Dat schenen ze altijd te zeggen als ze iemand wilden wijsmaken dat ze hem geheel hadden ingenomen en overgenomen. Tagula wilde het niet geloven. Tagula vocht met hand en tand, met het laatste beetje kracht wat hij nog in zich had, en bleef in gedachten roepen tot de amazones. Mörn deed zich voor als God, maar Tagula was als vechtende met hem op Pniël. ‘Jakob, buig neer,’ werd er gezegd.

Tagula voelde weer een scheut koude vloeistoffen. Die moesten natuurlijk de dromen van de amazones of van de natuur tegen houden. Hij mocht niet dromen. Hij mocht alleen aan de drugs van Mörn zijn, wat hij medicijnen noemde. Er werd gerommeld in zijn mond. Er werden dingen in hem geschoten. Er werd in hem geboord. Mörn was een criminele dwangtandarts, een zombie tandarts, een mondenbedwinger, en zo ook een gedachtenbedwinger, allemaal door gedwongen implantaten. Tagula vond dat tandartsen al altijd ziek obsessief waren met implantaten die ze vullingen noemden. Ze deden alsof het bij het lichaam hoorde, en ze verdienden er veel geld aan. Ze ontkenden zelfs dat het implantaten waren. Ze deden alsof het de normaalste zaak van de wereld was. Daarom was het met recht een planeet van de eeuwige verdoemenis.

Tagula moest zich erbij neerleggen, wachten totdat dit ding, dit kreng, weer zou slapen, wachten totdat het weer eb zou worden. Hij vond iets van hoop in zichzelf, iets van adem, ook al was het niet veel, ook al had hij het gevoel dat zijn hoofd zou barsten. De mannen met de dikke koppen hadden een hoofdklem op hem gezet, en ook een kaakklem, en schroefden het veel te hard aan. Tagula had het gevoel dat zijn brein elk moment kon knappen, of zijn hoofd, of zijn kaak. Er stond teveel druk op. En de mannen staken vuurwerk af bij zijn hoofd. Ze probeerden hem gehandicapped te maken, tot een invalide. Tagula voelde zich als een verlamde, maar legde zich er niet bij neer, al helemaal niet bij de walgelijke reclame in zijn hoofd. Waar ging dit allemaal over ? Hij kon het niet eens goed verstaan wat ze zeiden. Het ging zo snel. Hij was er in ieder geval goed bij. Hij was niet ver gekomen in zijn ontsnapping, maar hij hield zich vast aan de dromen van de amazones en van de natuur. Hij wist dat die zouden terugkomen. Dat moest wel. Hij dacht na over de hiëroglieven.

Die moest hij nog dieper ontcijferen. Hij had het idee dat dit meer een school-ervaring was. Hij was op excursie en zag de monsters, en moest ermee worstelen, als onderdeel van zijn studie. Ze waren er nog niet.

Maar hij wist dat hij ook met de amazones moest worstelen. Morgan kon er nog tussenzitten, en Morgan was sluw. In vele vormen kon zij komen om hem te betoveren. Elke ontsnapping kon hier ook een valstrik zijn, om je er juist nog dieper in te trekken. Bovenal moest Tagula met zichzelf worstelen. Hij mocht zichzelf niet vertrouwen, ook zijn zintuigen niet. Er was bedrog op bedrog hier. Snelle zelfovertuiging zou hier fataal zijn. Hij was zelf een mijnenveld.

Hij herinnerde zich de monniken, hoe zij hamerden op zelfverloochening, te strijden tegen zelfvertrouwen en zelfverzekerdheid. Dat waren gevangenis-implantaten. Dat moest eruit. Maar dat ging er niet zomaar uit. En hier was hij op de planeet van de eeuwige verdoemenis.

Het leek alsof hij niet meer wakker kon worden. Wat was er met hem gebeurd ? Was hij al dood ? waar zou hij naartoe moeten ? Hij weigerde te geloven wat Mörn zei. Mörn was een gevallene. Mörn was een bedrieger. Mörn had hele andere interesses dan hij had. Mörn was oppervlakkig genot, geen diepte, leeg genot, doelloos genot. En hij zou daar slaaf voor moeten worden ? Voor wat ? Waar ging dit in hemelsnaam over ? Waar was het goed voor ? Het was allemaal slechts tijdelijk. Het was totaal zinloos en nutteloos. Hij snapte niet dat iemand daarvoor kon vallen.

‘Maffia, maffia,’ hoorde hij iemand zeggen. Mörn was een soort maffia baas, en Morgan was zijn maffia moeder. Zij hadden al deze kerken bedacht. Dat was het hele idee van de eeuwige verdoemenis, dat het de mens zou aanzetten om hun producten te kopen, dan zouden ze veilig zijn, en ophoging krijgen. Dan zouden ze deelhebben aan de elite van Mörn. Het was een criminele drugs-organisatie. Medicijnen noemden ze het. Ja, ja.

Mörn was de kroon van de alzheimer. Teveel hadden ze vergeten. Nu beet het hen in de billen. Ook op andere plaatsen, en het stak diep. Drugstrip na drugstrip, totdat ze in het paradijs waren gekomen. Dan werden ze aangestaard door hypnotische slangen. Het is hier wil op wil, begeerte op begeerte. Kennis is niet thuis. En als je wilde ontsnappen dan zouden de lasten worden verdubbeld. Farao wilde het volk niet laten gaan, en de Heere had zijn hart verhard.

‘Oh, God, ik wil ontwaken, ook als mijn bed in de hel is, dan bent U bij mij.’

Tagula hoorde de hermieten vloeken in de verte. Ook riepen ze zijn naam, maar hij wist niet of het echt was. Het waren de oogsten van het riool leek het wel. Zoveel velden die geoogst moesten worden. ‘Ik raak aan lagere wal als ik hier langer over nadenk.’ Er scheurde iets in het brein van Tagula. Hij leek een amazone te zien, maar het waren alleen haar voeten leek het wel, of zag hij meer ? Even leek hij haar geheel te zien. Ze was omgord met riemen, bruingele dunne riemen over haar lichaam. Daaraan waren primitieve wapens gevestigd. De riemen hadden een soort kleine metalen knopen. Het zag er heel elegant uit. De vrouw was groot en had een bos met haren.

‘Roep naar mij,’ zei de vrouw.

‘Wie ben je ?’ vroeg hij.

Toen vaagde het beeld weg. Hij zou worstelen. Hij zou zich niet makkelijk overgeven, ook niet aan dit soort verschijnselen, maar hij zag de natuur achter haar. Ook met de natuur zou hij worstelen.

‘Nee !’ riep hij. ‘Ik zal niemand zomaar roepen !’ En toch riep hij in zijn gedachten, tot de amazones. Hij riep om hulp. Maar er was geen hulp. Hij was op school. Hij was in de arena. Hij moest zichzelf hier doorheen vechten. Er waren geen snelle oplossingen hier. Alles kon een valstrik zijn. De mens forceerde de waarheid, terwijl het niet eens de waarheid was. De mens wilde het gemak dienen. De mens wilde Mörn dienen.

Tagula zou niet opgeven, ook al zou hij de enige zijn die niet had gebogen voor Mörn. Dat had hij in zijn verleden al genoeg gedaan, en hij had gezien waar het hem gebracht had. Maar ja, dat was een stockholm syndroom. Hij kon toen niet meer vechten, maar nu vocht hij, als een beer en als een leeuw. Het moest maar eens afgelopen zijn.

Hij klampte zich vast aan wat zwarte stenen. Die moesten de stemmen van de voorouders splitsen in hem. Er moest zoveel uit nog. Hij wist niet waar de zwarte stenen vandaan kwamen. Hij zag en voelde water stromen, als een riviertje, heel dun, kabbelend. Hij zag ook een halssnoer met zwarte steentjes, en hij deed het om zijn nek. Weer zag hij de amazone. ‘Draag het,’ sprak ze. Hij kon het niet weigeren. Het was te sterk, en het gaf hem adem. De voorouders werden uit hem getrokken. Hun stemmen sijpelden weg. ‘Dit maakte mij gek,’ zei Tagula.

‘Ze gebruikten je als spreekbuis,’ zei de amazone. ‘En toen ze niet meer konden, gebruikten ze je gedachten.’

‘Hoe ?’ vroeg Tagula.

Ze trok hem in de natuur. Ze trok hem uit het moeras en legde hem tussen de bloemen in een veldje. ‘Ik voel me verschrikkelijk,’ zei Tagula. ‘Ik ben een wrak.’ Hij voelde zich nog steeds verlamd.

‘Nee, het heeft me nog van binnen,’ zei Tagula.

‘Nee,’ zei de amazone. ‘Geloof het niet. Ze werken door je geloof. Zo houden ze grip. Geloof het niet.’

‘Hoe ?’ vroeg Tagula weer. ‘Het heeft me teveel in de grip. Het trekt aan me.’

‘Geloof het niet,’ zei de amazone. ‘Je moet het ontkennen.’

‘Ja, maar dan houd ik mezelf voor de gek,’ zei Tagula.

‘Dat hebben ze al gedaan,’ zei de amazone rustig. Ze kwam licht moederlijk op hem over.

‘Je kunt bij ons wonen,’ zei de amazone. ‘Wij wonen hier in het bos.’

‘Dat gaat niet lukken,’ zei Tagula. ‘Hoe kan ik jullie vertrouwen ?’

‘Wil je terug ?’ vroeg de amazone.

‘Nee, maar wat als ik tussen twee valstrikken ben ?’ vroeg Tagula.

‘Er bestaan geen valstrikken,’ zei de amazone. ‘De enige valstrik is als je jezelf bedriegt.’

‘Kom ik er ooit nog door, kom ik er ooit nog uit ?’ vroeg Tagula.

‘Als je stopt jezelf te bedriegen,’ vertelde de amazone rustig.

Haar stem had een verzachtende werking op zijn brein. Hij wist dat hij bovenal in oorlog was met zichzelf.

‘Soms moet je door valstrikken heen om jezelf te leren kennen,’ zei de amazone, ‘dus het zijn geen daadwerkelijke valstrikken, maar paden en arena’s. Daar moet je jezelf doorheen worstelen, om jezelf te vinden.’

‘Ik moet mezelf verloochenen,’ zei Tagula.

‘Precies,’ zei de amazone. ‘Dat is het vinden van jezelf, je ware zelf.’

‘Ik verloochen mijn zintuigen,’ zei Tagula.

‘Precies,’ zei de amazone. ‘En dan krijg je dit. Het diepere. Er is een dieper zelf, een diepere wereld. En dan kom je bij ons.’

‘Waar is God in dit alles ?’ vroeg Tagula.

‘Dit is God,’ zei de amazone. ‘Zij is moeder. Allereerst is zij amazone.’

Hij keek naar de wildernis om zich heen. Hij zag de lianen en de verwilderde planten, bomen en bloemen. ‘Wij jagen hier op de zonde,’ zei de amazone. ‘Zwijnen tussen het groen, die alles kapot vreten.’

‘Zwijnen ?’ vroeg Tagula. ‘Ik ben vegetarisch.’

‘Ja,’ zei de amazone. ‘Je bent vegetarisch naar de dieren, maar niet naar de zonde. Je bent een zonde-verslinder. Daartoe zijn de vliegenplagen gekomen, en zij eten veel vlees.’

Tagula zuchtte. ‘Dit zijn de eeuwige jachtvelden, Tagula,’ zei de amazone.

‘Zijn we eeuwig verdoemden ?’ vroeg Tagula.

‘Eeuwig verdoemden als wat ?’ vroeg de amazone. ‘Wij hebben de diepte van de zondeval gezien, dat is zonde overtuiging, en vandaaruit de jacht aangaan op de zonde op die te doden. Dat is het Kaïnsbevel. Zo niet, dan zou de zonde over ons heersen en ons bedriegen.’

Tagula knikte. ‘Dan gaan we daarvoor,’ zei hij.

De amazone strekte haar hand uit, en Tagula pakte haar hand, maar toen vervaagde ze, en was alles weer donker om hem heen. Of was hij flauw gevallen ? Hij hoorde haar stem. Ze zei zijn naam. ‘Tagula.’ Toen begon ook haar stem weg te vagen.

‘Dit is ingewikkeld,’ dacht Tagula bij zichzelf.

Hij had geen kracht om op te staan. Hij had pijn in zijn mond van de implantaten, en al het gesnij en geboor. Weer kon hij niet goed ademen, en ook niet goed denken. De pijn van de implantaten blokkeerde zijn spraaksysteem. Hij had geen kracht om te spreken. Hij lag daar maar, en alles was donker. Misschien wilde Mörn hem niet laten gaan, maar hij mocht niet in Mörn geloven. Hij mocht Mörn niet overschatten, maar hij wilde Mörn ook niet onderschatten. Hij wilde niet zomaar zorgeloos vergeten.

Hij moest tot de rivier van vergetelheid gaan, dat was iets van de natuur, en dat zou juist zijn ware geheugen aanwakkeren. Dat was iets anders dan zomaar vergeten en wegdrukken, iets zomaar overslaan voor het gemak ervan. Hij hoorde een rivier bruisen in de verte. Het geluid leek dichterbij te komen, alsof hij gedragen werd. Maar toen werd hij weggezogen, en hij viel hard op steen, en het was nog moeilijker om te ademen, alsof hij bijna stikte, of misschien was hij al gestikt. Hij hoorde een koude vrouwenstem zeggen : ‘A6 staat geen ontsnapping toe. Jij bent eeuwig verdoemde nummer A6-389109700000. Je bent verloren. Er is niets wat je kunt doen.’ Ze klonk als een moderator.

‘Houdt je mond, dom wijf,’ dacht Tagula, maar hij kon niet spreken. Hij voelde pijnscheuten door hem heentrekken, en krampte nog meer in elkaar. ‘Wij kunnen je gedachten lezen,’ sprak de vrouw. ‘Ontsnapping is niet geoorloofd, en op bekritisering en belediging van het gezag staat straf.’

Tagula wist dat hij niets kon doen, en durfde niet meer te denken. Het was pijn wat hij nog nooit eerder had gevoeld. Het deed alles in hem knappen. Het was overmatige zenuwpijn die ondragelijk was, en waarvan je krankzinnig zou worden als het lang genoeg zou duren. Gelukkig stopte het na een tijdje. ‘Je hebt je waarschuwing gehad,’ sprak de vrouw koud. Ze mocht zeer trots zijn op haar macht. Dat dacht Tagula niet, maar dat hoorde hij in de diepte van zijn wezen, als zijn geweten, als irke. Hij hoopte maar dat ze dat niet konden lezen. Er gebeurde gelukkig niets. Tagula moest niet meer door zijn gedachten leven. Dat zou fataal zijn, maar hij moest luisteren naar de dieptes van zijn geweten, daar waar irke was, de dromen binnen de dromen. Dat was een bron die ze niet konden verstaan, die ze niet konden traceren.

‘Wat is dat ?’ hoorde hij iemand zeggen. ‘Mijn handen branden,’ zei iemand anders. En weer iemand anders zei : ‘Mijn voeten branden.’ Eerst schenen ze er nogal rustig over te zijn, maar later hoorde hij gegil. ‘Nee, we kunnen het niet meer houden ! Hij heeft irke gevonden !’

Ze schenen irke te vrezen. Het waren de diepere dromen. Die konden ze niet uitdoven. Die konden ze niet doden. Het was sterker dan hen, en ze konden het niet verstaan. Ze werden er krankzinnig door. Hij merkte dat hij weer goed adem kon halen.

‘Geloof niet in hen,’ zei de amazone weer. Hij was blij dat hij haar weer kon horen. Hij keek op, en zag haar. Hij zag nu meerdere amazones, als in een kamp. ‘Wij hebben je hier naartoe gedragen,’ zei de amazone. Hij voelde nu wat kracht in zijn benen. ‘Honger hier,’ zei de amazone. ‘Overeet niet, want dan sleuren ze je weer terug. Neem wat de natuur je biedt.’

Nog steeds durfde hij niet te denken, bang om teruggestuurd te worden, maar hij leefde vanuit irke, vanuit de diepere dromen, als zijn levensbron. Daar moest hij naar leren luisteren. Hij mocht niet afdwalen. De verbinding tussen hem en irke was nog maar heel dun, als heel dun ijs. Het moest harder en vaster worden. Eén eigen gedachte zou hier fataal zijn. Hij moest zich oefenen en volharden in het luisteren naar irke in zijn diepte. Eén eigen gedachte en hij zou weg zijn. Vrees begon in hem op te komen, veel vrees. Dat was voor zijn eigen bescherming.

Hij voelde zich alsof hij elk moment door het dunne ijs kon zakken. Hij durfde zich bijna niet te bewegen. Maar het leek alsof de amazones hem vasthielden, alsof hij aan een touw vastzat. ‘Laat me niet gaan,’ zei hij bijna smekend. ‘Ik wil niet terug.’

‘Eén gedachte, en het is fataal,’ zei de amazone. ‘Dan besta je niet, en heb je nooit bestaan, en ben je onderdeel van Mörn.’

Tagula weende van angst. ‘Eén gedachte ? Maar hoe kan ik dan overleven ? Wat als het zich aan me opdringt ?’

‘Als je het hoort is er niets aan de hand,’ zei de amazone. ‘Als het over je heenvliegt is er niets aan de hand, daar kun je niets aan doen, maar laat het geen nestje in je haren bouwen. Neem het niet naar binnen. Koester het niet. Verzet je er tegen, sla het van je af, en blijf luisteren naar de dieptes in jezelf, niet naar de gedachtes in je hoofd. Luister naar je geweten, onder je hart, en zo zal het bewustzijn groeien.’

‘Hoe snel kan een gedachte me meesleuren ?’ vroeg Tagula, nog steeds wenend van angst.

‘Er gaat wat aan vooraf,’ zei de amazone. ‘Eerst raakt het je aan, en dan probeert het bij je binnen te komen. Zelfs als dat gebeurt is er nog geen man overboord. Ze kunnen heel diep gaan, ze kunnen heel diep steken, heel diep injecteren, maar neem het niet aan. Verzet je ertegen, worstel ermee, en blijf luisteren en vasthouden aan je diepere bron, onder je hart, de bron van je geweten. Dat is wat irke is, de dromen binnen de dromen tot de diepste dromen.'

'Ja, maar wat als ze me overnemen,' weende Tagula, 'ik heb zolang in het stockholm syndroom geleefd.'

'Het syndroom van Mörn,' zei de amazone. 'Elke jongere gaat hier doorheen. Daar worden ze in geboren, en dat is een hele lange tocht van vallen en opstaan, en teruggezogen worden, totdat de grote ontwakingen komen, totdat de grote zeeën hen meenemen, de zeeën van Orion, tot Betelgeuze, en dan nog moet je door vele arena's. Soms kun je ontvoeringen niet voorkomen, dan is het te sterk, maar het gaat erom wie je van binnen bent, niet wat er op of in je wordt gelegd buiten je toestemming. Dat is de oorlog tegen Mörn. Als je die naar beste weten uitvoert dan komen wij je tegemoet. God laat je niet alleen als je twijfelt en onderzoekt, maar Mörn komt daar waar de mens zelfverzekerd is.'

'Ik ben bang,' zei Tagula. 'Mörn is krachtig.'

'Geloof niet in hem,' zei de amazone. 'Zie waar je vandaan bent gekomen, waar je nu bent, en houdt daar aanvast, als referentie punt, ook als je wordt teruggezogen. Je kunt altijd terugkeren tot je goede herinneringen. De zwarte steen scheidt geheugen van geheugen. Dat heb je om je nek.'

'Nee, Mörn is te krachtig,' zei Tagula. 'Het heeft allemaal geen zin. Ik wordt al jaren vervolgd en neergehaald door Mörn, er is geen ontkomen aan, en geen kruid tegen opgewassen. Ik geloof jullie niet.’ Tagula huilde. Het was alsof zijn angst werd overspoeld met verdriet, en wanhoop, wat veel groter leek te zijn. De angst was nu nog maar een doperwt in zijn brein. Ineens gaf de amazone hem een klap tegen zijn gevoelige kaak. Tagula kromp ineen. ‘Dan zul je slaaf zijn van de amazones,’ waren haar woorden. Ze legde haar voet op zijn mond. ‘Het is afgelopen met je.’

Dat gevoel dat hij had, dat zowel Mörn als de amazones op hem jaagden. Ze wilden hem niet laten gaan. Beiden niet. Hij zag in dat het de amazones menens was. Ze leken zijn stockholm syndroom te begrijpen. Ze leken zijn wanhoop te begrijpen, en daarom lieten ze hem niet gaan. Maar waren zij hier wel tegen opgewassen ? Tagula wist het niet, maar ze leken vrij te zijn in de natuur, levende van de jacht op zwijnen, bizons, buffels, runderen, renbokken, lammetjes, hanen en vissen. Dat waren geen dieren, maar zonden in dierlijke vormen. Zou dat het geheim van hun vrijheid zijn, of leefden ze van binnen ook nog in grote gebondenheid aan Mörn ?

Ze hadden Tagula vastgebonden. Hij kon niet meer weg. Hij zou uitgehongerd worden, zodat hij te zwak zou zijn om nog te ontsnappen, en zodat hij ook geen bedreiging zou zijn naar de amazones.

‘Je bent gevaarlijk bezig,’ zei één van de amazones. ‘Je weet waarom wij dit doen.’

‘Sorry, stockholm syndroom,’ zei Tagula.

‘Tegen dit soort slavernij van Mörn moet een veel grotere slavernij staan, anders komen we er niet doorheen,’ zei de amazone. ‘Het is touw tegen touw, gesel tegen gesel, slavernij tegen slavernij.’

‘Leg het hem niet uit, zuster,’ zei een andere amazone.

‘Ik doe wat ik wil,’ zei de amazone.

‘Nee, zuster, we zullen je verbannen,’ zei de andere amazone.

Medelijden scheen hier bijna verboden te zijn of aan strenge regels onderhevig. Al snel kwam Tagula de oorlogen van de amazones onder ogen hier, hoe ze innerlijk verdeeld waren, hoe sommigen van de amazones heel twistziek waren. En de twistzieken waren in de meerderheid. Na een tijde begonnen steeds meer amazones tot het kamp te komen. Ze waren teruggekomen van de jacht, en ze verbaasden zich erover dat er een man in hun kamp was. Ze waren er niet over te spreken. Degene die hem binnen had gelaten werd streng toegesproken en gewaarschuwd, en ook degenen die het hadden toegelaten.

Dit was het lot van Tagula. De twistzieken waren in de meerderheid. Uiteindelijk werd de amazone die hem toegelaten had, en ook wat andere amazones die haar hierin ondersteunden en die het toe hadden gelaten uit het kamp gezet. Zij moesten maar hun eigen amazone stam vormen, maar hier waren ze niet meer gewenst. Tagula had gehoopt dat hij met hen mee zou worden verbannen, maar dat was niet het geval. Hij was aan een paal gebonden, en daar bleef hij. Hij had medelijden met de goede amazone, maar zij was in hun ogen niet streng genoeg geweest, en dat werd als een zeker verraad gezien. Nu was Tagula in grote problemen.

Hij durfde niet aan Mörn te denken. Hij wist niet wat erger was. Er werd naar hem geschreeuwd, maar veel erger was dat velen hem leken te negeren. Hij zou uitgehongerd worden opdat hij geen bedreiging zou vormen, maar hij wist niet wat er daarna zou gebeuren. Zou hij slaaf worden, zoals al eerder was gezegd, of zou hij gegeten worden, of ook verbannen ? Of zou hij gewoon afgemaakt worden, zou hij de doodstraf krijgen ? Nadat het leek alsof hij wel dagen aan de paal had gestaan kreeg hij wat melk. Hij wist niet wat voor melk het was. Al gauw werd hij losgemaakt van de paal, maar hij was nog steeds gebonden, en had een touw om zijn nek. Hij moest de voeten van de amazones schoonlikken. Dat was een vernedering. Het was om hem zijn plaats te tonen. Hij was niet meer dan dat. Amazones vreesden mannen. Ze vreesden Mörn, en ze zouden er alles tegen doen om zichzelf veilig te houden en vrij. Ze speelden hiermee geen spelletjes, en lieten het zekere voor het onzekere. Ze namen geen enkel risico, met niemand. Ook niet met hun eigen zusters. Als die zich te slap opstelden, of te verdacht, dan werden ze zonder pardon verbannen. Dan moesten ze zichzelf maar zien te redden. Zo waren de amazone oorlogen ontstaan, die veelal koude oorlogen waren. Veelal wilden de zusters elkaar niet direct bestrijden. Ze hoopten altijd nog op de verandering van de tegenpartij, maar er waren ook stammen die onvergevelijk waren. Eens een verrader, altijd een verrader. Eens een slappe hap, altijd een slappe hap.

Op medelijden hoefde Tagula hier in ieder geval niet te rekenen. Deze amazones waren bruut. Hij was in verkeerde handen gevallen. Naar Mörn wilde hij in ieder geval niet terug, en nu hij zo was behandeld vroeg hij zich af of Mörn wel tegen deze ruige amazones op kon. Zij waren geen lieverdjes, zij waren geen zoete moedertjes. Tagula was ver van huis hier. Tagula wist niet of hij droomde, of dat hij in de onderwereld was. Hij wist niet of hij leefde of al dood was. Hij was ergens over een grens heen gegaan. Hij kon ook in een coma zijn. Of het nu een sterke hallucinatie had of niet : Dit was zijn leven nu. Al het andere leven was onder zijn voeten weggetrapt. Dit was een ruwe en ruige natuur, heel anders dan hij het zich had voorgesteld, maar toch herinnerde hij toen de verhalen van de hermieten erover. Eigenlijk was hij hiervoor al gewaarschuwd. Hij was er nu goed bij.

Ruige amazones keken hem aan. Soms zag hij alleen maar hun voeten die hij moest schoonlikken. Dat deden ze op hem zijn plaats te wijzen. Dat was zijn rang. Ondergeschikt. Hun voeten waren veel groter dan zijn voeten, veel dikker, en veel donkerder. Het waren vlezige voeten, en vuil. Ze sloegen hem, en ranselden hem af, totdat hij weende, en zijn tranen op hun voeten viel. Daarmee moest hij ze schoonmaken. Hij wreef de tranen in hun vlees.

‘Wat zijn dit voor dromen ?’ vroeg hij zichzelf af. Hij worstelde, maar was hulpeloos, zo hulpeloos als hij zich eens in de gevangenis van Mörn voelde. Mörn was slechts de schaduw hiervan geweest, een voorloper, een karikatuur. Morgan was ook zo, maar dan heel anders, niet met dit soort dingen. Wilde hij ze terug of wilde hij hier blijven ? Morgan en Mörn waren goddeloos, van de markt. Hier ging het om andere dingen. De amazones zaten niet achter zijn geld aan. De amazones hadden geen medische dogma's, waren geen tandartsen. Hij vroeg zich af wat erger was. Hij begreep de amazones wel. Hij herinnerde de verhalen van de hermieten. De amazones hadden ook een heleboel goede punten. Maar wat er nu gebeurde ging hem te ver. Of was dit de enige manier om veilig te blijven tegen Mörn ? Moest het zo diep gaan ? Was het anders een verloren zaak ? Tagula proefde de voeten van de amazones. Het was een soort melk. Het was een soort wortelsap. Het was het oer, langvergeten dingen. Hij werd onderwezen. Hij moest van de melk drinken, van de amazone melk. Het gaf hem nieuwe ideeën. Het stirde irke in hem op.

Tagula schudde met zijn hoofd. 'Nee, nee.' Wild begon hij met zijn hoofd te schudden. 'Zie, hij gedraagt zich als een varken,' zei één van de amazones. 'We kunnen hem beter slachten.' En zo moest Tagula wel gehoorzamen en zich erbij neerleggen. Hij wilde niet dood. Niets was zeker bij de amazones. Er was altijd spanning. Nooit had hij rust, tenzij hij deed wat ze hem opdroegen.

Hoofdstuk 9. De Spiegelvelden

De monniken van Mörn prevelden hun verzen uit de Ichtus, het boek van Mörn. Ze hadden Tagula gered van de amazones. Ze zeiden dat Tagula hele verkeerde beelden had van Mörn, dat Mörn zo niet was. Tagula verbeelde het zich maar, volgens de monniken van Mörn. Het was een medische orde. Tagula was in hun ogen zwaar ziek. Daarom moest Tagula aan de medicijnen. Dat zou hem ook beschermen tegen de amazones. Volgens sommige monniken van Mörn bestonden de amazones niet eens. Dat was maar een verzinsel in het hoofd van Tagula om aan de nodige dienst tot Mörn te ontkomen. Mörn werd door zijn monniken geheel schoongepraat, alsof ze zijn voeten likten. Tagula moest drinken van de melk van Mörn, want melk was goed voor elk. Amazone melk bestond niet.

Tagula had het gevoel alsof hij gek werd. De monniken van Mörn predikten niet de natuur zoals de wilde en woeste amazones. Er was wel wat natuur, maar dat werd onderdrukt, en werd niet uitgelegd. ‘Ben ik dood ?’ vroeg Tagula.

Niemand zei wat. Weer prevelden ze uit de Ichtus. Het ging over leven en dood. Het ging over medisch dogma. Ze bleven hem maar zeggen dat hij ziek was. Psychisch ziek. Ze voerden hem medicijnen. Daarvan leek de coma erger te worden. Het legde zijn hersenen lam. Mörn waakte over hem, als een waakhond. Tagula had Mörn verkeerd begrepen, zeiden de monniken van Mörn.

Maar in hun ogen was Tagula ongeneeslijk ziek, en zou voor de rest van zijn leven aan de medicijnen moeten. Tagula was woest. Zijn lichaam kon de medicijnen ook niet meer verwerken, en hij begon het steeds meer uit te spugen. Zijn lichaam verzette zich er tegen met al zijn kracht. De monniken werden boos en begonnen te dreigen, of kwamen met andere medicijnen aanzetten. Ook bespotten zij hem. ‘Ik moet terug naar de amazones,’ dacht Tagula. ‘Alles beter dan dit.’

Toen dacht Tagula aan de dikke voeten van de amazones die hij zou moeten schoonlikken. ‘Nee,’ dacht hij. ‘Ik moet worstelen. Zowel tegen de mörnisten als de amazones. Morgan is in beiden.’

Een ongelovelijke kracht maakte zich meester van Tagula, wat hij als de kracht van God ervoer, en als de kracht van Jakob op Pniël, en hij sloeg de eerste de beste monnik van Mörn op zijn kaak, en rende toen weg. Waar naartoe wist hij niet. Hij rende door de gangen van het ziekenhuis. Er stonden monniken met injectie spuiten, maar die trapte hij weg. Voelde hij daar een injectie naald in zijn voet ? Kon wezen, maar hij moest doorrennen. Ineens ging alles zo traag. Ja, hij was gestoken. Ineens ging zijn denken zo traag, en kon hij zich niet meer bewegen. Even later werd hij wakker in een ziekenhuis bed. Monniken van Mörn waren om hem heen. Weer probeerden ze hem medicijnen te voeren, maar hij weigerde. ‘Dat nooit !’ riep hij, met schuim op zijn mond. Hij trapte de monniken van hem weg. Weer had een ongelovelijke kracht bezit van hem genomen. Dit keer leek het op de kracht van Ezau die al zijn aardse status had afgelegd voor een kom honger. Hij rende de zaal uit de ziekenhuis-gangen op, en bleef rennen. Overal zag hij monniken die uit de Ichtus prevelden. ‘Nee !’ riep hij.

‘Houdt hem tegen !’ werd er geroepen. ‘Laat hem niet ontsnappen !’

Hij trapte een ruit in. Zijn voet bloedde. Hij ging door de gebroken ruit naar buiten, terwijl er nog meer in zijn lichaam werd gesneden. Nu bloedde zijn hele lichaam, alsof hij door een boomslang was gebeten. Hij rende totdat hij niet meer kon. Hij stortte toen in elkaar. Nu moest hij kruipend verder. ‘Pak hem !’ werd er geroepen.

‘Nee,’ zei hij tegen zichzelf. ‘Ik mag dit niet toelaten.’

‘Er is geen ontsnapping mogelijk van Mörn,’ werd er geroepen.

Een stem van binnen sprak : ‘Jij bent eeuwig verdoemde nummer A6-389109700000. Je bent verloren. Er is niets wat je kunt doen.’

‘Houdt je kop, dom wijf !’ schreeuwde hij. Het viel hem op dat er dit keer geen ondragelijke pijnscheuten waren, maar hij bloedde wel uit zijn lijf. De gebroken ruit had hem flink gesneden.

‘Je komt niet ver,’ werd er geroepen. Ineens kwam er weer een ongelovelijke kracht in hem, als de kracht van Ismael die tot de waterbron in de wildernis kwam. Hij stond op en balde zijn vuisten. ‘Wie eerst ?’ riep hij.

‘Je bent verdoemd !’ werd er geroepen.

De stem begon zich te vervormen in de stem van een amazone. Hij lag aan haar voeten. Hij was de eeuwig verdoemde van de amazones.
De hermieten hadden hem eens gezegd dat dat een woord was bij de amazones voor de opvoeding, voor tucht en zorg, en ook voor scholing. Het was dus niet zo erg als bij Mörn. Het leek alsof de zwarte stenen op de juiste frequentie konden komen.

Hij werd geslagen. ‘Blijf hier nu.’ Hij mocht zich niet meer verzetten. Maar hij moest wel. Hij worstelde met de amazones. Toen brachten ze hem naar een kooi. Daar zou hij verder uitgehongerd worden zodat hij niks meer zou kunnen. ‘Echt, als je verder gaat dan hakken we je armen eraf, en je benen,’ zei een amazone nors. Hier hadden de hermieten ook over gesproken, en hij had ook hermieten gezien die geen armen en benen meer hadden, dus het was geen bluf.

Na een paar dagen werd hij uitgehongerd uit de kooi gehaald, en werd hij weggezonden. Ze wilden hem niet meer hebben. Hij was enorm verzwakt. Hij wilde op zoek gaan naar de vriendelijkere amazones die waren weggezonden. Hij zocht en zocht, maar kon ze niet vinden.

Weer hoorde hij in zijn hoofd : ‘U bent gevangene nummer A6-389109700000. U bent eigendom van A6. Herhaling : U bent patient nummer A6-389109700000. U heeft een ongeneeslijke en levensgevaarlijke ziekte, en daarom moeten wij u houden voor de bescherming van uzelf en anderen. Daarom bent u hier in inrichting A6.’

Tagula greep naar zijn hoofd. ‘Aargh.’ De wildernispaden tussen de bomen door leken weer op ziekenhuisgangen. Toen staarde hij met een thermometer in zijn mond naar het plafond van het ziekenhuis, liggende in zijn ziekenhuisbed.

‘U moet een hersenoperatie ondergaan,’ zei één van de monniken van Mörn. Dit gaat niet goed. Een monster met vele tentakels en schorpioenenscharen kwam de zaal binnen, alsof hij regelrecht uit de zee kwam. Toen leek hij op een dokter. Een chirurg. Tagula knipperde met zijn ogen. Dit kon niet waar zijn. Wat een boze droom.

Ze zeiden dat hij na de operatie verscheept zou worden naar A4 in Orion, en daarna naar A3 in Betelgeuze. Dit was vanwege het rebelse gedrag dat hij vertoonde, en dat zou ook allemaal met zijn ziekte te maken hebben. A4 en A3 zouden strenger beveiligde inrichtingen zijn. Hij was al eerder in Orion en Betelgeuze geweest, maar kende deze inrichtingen niet.

‘Je liegt,’ zei hij toen. ‘Jullie liegen.’ Weer maakte een ongelovelijke kracht zich meester in hem. Het was het Kaïnsbevel tegen de zonde te strijden en over de zonde te heersen. Hij moest en zou op jacht gaan. Hij trapte de monniken van Mörn weer van zich vandaan, en sloeg er eentje in het gezicht, en trapte toen het monster weg. Het was één en al pijnlijke steken toen hij het monster met de vele tentakels en snij armen had aangeraakt. Zijn been verstijfde helemaal, en werd kokend heet. Hij gilde van de pijn. Toen verstijfde ook zijn gehele lichaam, alsof hij een zware schok had gehad. Het beest was zwaar electrisch geladen, en hij kon niet ontsnappen. ‘Jullie liegen,’ prevelde hij weer met zijn laatste kracht. Hij hoopte op nog zo’n krachtstoot. Hij wilde het Kaïnsbevel ten uitvoer brengen, maar hij kon het niet. Hij had misschien de amazones nodig. Maar die schenen hem ook aan zijn lot over te laten. Het beest bewoog zich over hem toen hij weer op het ziekenbed lag. Een woede maakte zich meester van hem, en weer trapte hij het beest van hem af. Ditmaal voelde hij niks. Hij voelde zich ijskoud, en als een robot rende hij naar de uitgang van de zaal, en rende de gang op. Weer dook hij door een ruit van een achterdeur, en rende het grasveld op in de tuin. ‘Je kunt niet ontsnappen, patient A6-389109700000. Spoedig zul je verscheept worden tot A4 en dan naar A3. Je bent het eigendom van de A-zones, van de A-inrichtingen. Je bent eigendom van Mörn,’ werd er gesproken.

‘Ach houd toch je ...’ brulde Tagula. Hij rende door de straten op weg naar het bos. Hij wist niet eens waar hij was, maar alles wat hij wist was dat hij naar het bos moest.

Toen werd hij wakker. Hij zuchtte. Hij was helemaal onder het zweet. Hij voelde zich erg moe, en na een tijdje viel hij weer in slaap. ‘U bent product nummer A6-389109700000. Spoedig zal dit artikel verscheept worden tot A4 en dan naar A3 voor belangrijke upgrades,’ hoorde hij een robot-achtige stem zeggen. De stem leek dubbel, driedubbel of vierdubbel, als een leprechaun. Het leek op een vorm van Mörn. Het voelde alsof hij in een doos werd gestopt. Toen werd de doos dichtgeplakt en leek het alsof hij weg werd gedragen.

Dat was wat hij was in het rijk van Mörn, een product. Maar gelukkig was er een dieper rijk, het rijk van irke. Mörn hield het dromenleven aan de oppervlakte onder controle, maar hij kon niet tot de diepere dromen komen, de dromen in de dromen, zijn diepere wezen. Ergens hield de macht van Mörn op, als een blaffende hond aan de ketting. Over die grens wilde Tagula gaan. Tagula wist dat het niet geforceerd kon worden. Hij moest puzzelen, de juiste frequentie leren te vinden. Hij moest leren afstemmen.

Het lichaam miste bepaalde zouten van de oer-oceanen. Daar hadden de hermieten het soms ook over gehad. Daar zou hij naar op zoek moeten gaan. Op een bepaalde manier had Mörn dus zelfs gelijk dat het lichaam iets miste en iets anders nodig had, maar dat waren dus niet de implantaten van Mörn, maar het zout van Orion en Betelgeuse. Er was geen ontsnapping of behoudenis mogelijk, maar wel verdieping tot het vinden van betekenis, waardoor er een andere frequentie gevonden kon worden, waarin het zich dus zou verdraaien. Dan worden mannenstemmen zoals die van Mörn ineens amazone stemmen, en stemmen van de natuur, zoals hij had meegemaakt. Hij moest de juiste frequentie nog vinden. Het moest allemaal nog dieper doorvertaald worden. Hij moest daarom niet op zoek gaan naar snelle bevrijding en snel genot, maar naar volharding. Wel moest hij blijven strijden in deze arena’s. Het was allemaal nog gezichtsbedrog. Hij moest zich heenwerken door deze spiegelvelden. Hij moest de spiegologie leren, de reflectologie. Hij moest het leren zeven en filteren in de filterologie. Dat was als een kaartspel. Al met al was het een spelmodule of puzzelmodule, en moest hij de juiste kaarten nog zien te krijgen, en de juiste dobbelstenen. Hij moest zijn spelinventaris opbouwen en er creatief mee omgaan.

Wat werd er veel gelogen door de monniken van Mörn. Ze hielden de kaarten achter. Ook gebruikten ze speciale dobbelstenen waardoor ze altijd leken te winnen. Leugenaars en sjoemelaars waren zij in het spel en zij vereisten speciale aanpak.

Toen hij wakker werd bleek er bericht te zijn van het meisje van de camping, die naast hem een vakantie huisje had. Ze liet hem weten dat er een nieuwe spelmodule was met meerdere kaarten, voor meerdere nuances, en meerdere mogelijkheden. Ook zou het de hiëroglieven veel beter en dieper uit kunnen leggen. Ze zouden hiervoor naar Gensterdam moeten, wat achter Hoverdam lag, ook aan zee. Het meisje was op het moment op de camping, en Tagula wilde er direct naartoe. Daar aangekomen gingen ze direct naar Gensterdam. Tagula had het gevoel dat iedere seconde telde. Het meisje zei dat ze door het apparaat ook meer zicht konden krijgen op het rijk van Mörn. De module was gemaakt door verzetsstrijders tegen Mörn. Het was een hele drukte bij de winkel waar het verkrijgbaar was. Tagula en het meisje stonden netjes in de rij. Ze spraken ook met andere mensen in de rij. Iemand zei dat belangrijke informatie ontrend Mörn was verwerkt in de spelmodule. Zo zou Mörn zijn eigen spel hebben genaamd Amalgammos II. Eigenlijk was dat gewoon een vorm van Morgan. Alle gebieden in de A-zone van Amalgammos II, zoals ook A6, A4 en A3 waren ook weer verschillende vormen van Morgan. Zij had een meervoudige personaliteiten syndroom, zoals Mörn dat ook had, meerdere gezichten, meerdere vormen, als machines van democratie. Zo was er voor elk wat wils, en konden ze hele volksstammen innemen en ze tegen elkaar opzetten naar willekeur. Mörn troonde in het zogeheten belfiniaat, de elite zone van Amalgammos II, waar alle administrators en moderators waren, waar vanuit de inquisitie plaatsvond. In verschillende spelen van de nieuwe spelmodule werd het verblijf van Mörn beschreven en uitgestippeld, om zo Mörn te verslaan, en zijn rijk, maar dat was niet zonder gevaren. Het was niet zomaar een spel. Het was energie tegen energie. In diepte was het een energie-puzzel. Als dat niet goed zou zijn opgelost, dan zou het catastrophaal kunnen zijn.

Al snel waren de spelmodules uitverkocht, en Tagula en het meisje moesten weer naar huis, teleurgesteld omdat ze het niet hadden. ‘Maar we hebben het toch nodig,’ zei Tagula. Het voelde alsof hij met zijn hoofd tegen een muur had aangelopen. ‘Laten we blij zijn dat het spel in ieder geval nu door vele mensen wordt gespeeld, en dat dit de laatste dagen of uren zijn van Mörn,’ zei het meisje.

‘Denk je ?’ vroeg Tagula.

Het meisje begon te zingen. ‘We’re getting rich, so rich.’

‘Denk je ?’ vroeg Tagula weer.

‘Ja, of moeten we soms geloven dat Mörn onaantastbaar is ?’ vroeg het meisje.

‘Ik heb altijd het gevoel alsof er geen kruid tegen opgewassen is,’ zei Tagula.

‘Ach, natuurlijk wel,’ zei het meisje.

Ze zouden het de dag erna weer proberen voor een tweede poging. Ook de tweede dag was er een hele lange rij, nog wel langer dan de dagen ervoor, en weer waren de spelmodules snel uitverkocht. Tagula was boos. ‘Nooit krijgen wij eens iets,’ mopperde hij. Het meisje lachte. ‘We verzinnen wel iets,’ zei ze. Op de camping aangekomen was Tagula niet te genieten. Hij trapte overal tegenaan, en bleef maar schelden. ‘Het lijkt wel een verslaving,’ zei het meisje.

‘Het is oorlog,’ zei Tagula.

‘Dat is waar,’ zei het meisje. ‘Zo had ik het even niet bekeken.’

‘Nee,’ zei Tagula, ‘we staan echt niet in de rij voor een stuk speelgoed.’

‘Je hebt helemaal gelijk,’ zei het meisje een beetje glimlachend.

De dag erop gingen ze weer. Weer hetzelfde liedje. Rij naar rij. Het hele gebied stond vol. Ze vonden het direct al een hopeloze zaak, maar dit keer schenen er veel meer spel modules te zijn, en het ging nogal snel. Snel hadden ze er eentje, beiden, en zo gingen ze vrolijk en blij naar huis. ‘Eindelijk,’ zei het meisje.

Toen ze thuis waren gingen ze het ding direct onderzoeken en ermee spelen. Het was allemaal levensecht. Ook konden ze op het scherm zien hoe ver de andere spelers al waren. Zo waren ze in een soort leger en deden mee aan de oorlog. Ze moesten in de spelburchten van Mörn zien te komen, en dat was nog wel bloedlink, want als dat mis zou gaan zouden ze er een lelijke optater van kunnen krijgen. Dan zouden ze een stroomschok kunnen krijgen. Het spel zelf, zoals dat op de spelmodule was ingebouwd, had zoveel mogelijk veiligheid in het spel gestopt, maar verder werd er niets gegarandeerd. Het spel kon mogelijk zelfs dodelijk aflopen. Het was dus niet zomaar een spelletje. Het was oorlog.

‘Ik vind het eng, Tagula,’ zei het meisje. ‘Laten we een spelletje doen wat minder gevaarlijk is, en wat niet dodelijk kan zijn. Ik vrees voor jouw en mijn leven. Dat kan toch niet de bedoeling zijn ? Is het dit allemaal waard ?’

Maar Tagula wilde er niets van weten. ‘Dan speel je toch lekker gewoon een ander spelletje ?’ zei Tagula. ‘Het is geen spelmodule voor mijn ontspanning of voor vermaak. Nogmaals : Het is oorlog, en ik kan de anderen toch niet in de steek laten ?’

In de dagen erop lazen ze in de krant dat er vele doden waren gevallen door het nieuwe spel, en al snel werd het spel verboden. Het zou te gevaarlijk zijn. Iedereen moest het spel weer inleveren. Tagula wilde dat niet, en ging weer de grond onder om het spel verder te spelen. Hij was nu al best ver, en hij zou het zonde vinden om nu te stoppen. Het spel sloeg telkens het geheugen op zodat hij verder kon gaan waar hij was gestopt, en er waren ook anderen die nog steeds het spel doorspeelden. Dat kon hij zien op het scherm. Er kon ook met andere spelers gecommuniceerd worden. Hij gaf hen als advies de grond onder te gaan, bij de hermieten te wonen. Daar zou het spel niet snel getraceerd kunnen worden. De andere spelers spraken al over huiszoekingen die plaatsvonden. Ze hadden allemaal wel hun schuilplaatsen, zoals kelders onder het huis, of ze hielden het gewoon goed verborgen. Doden bleven er vallen. De groep werd telkens kleiner, en soms kwamen er nieuwe spelers bij. Zij waren er tijdelijk mee gestopt na de waarschuwingen, maar kwamen toch weer terug. Velen van hen zeiden dat het een gewetenszaak was. Ze moesten wel. Het was hun burgerplicht.

Tagula was leider van een bepaald groepje, en er waren meerdere groepjes. Ze hadden het belfiniaat waar Mörn zich schuilhield omsingeld, en nu zouden ze het gaan betreden, maar dit was het gevaarlijkste deel van het spel. Tagula vreesde dat er veel meer doden zouden vallen. Ineens stond het meisje achter hem, huilend. ‘Ik wil je niet kwijt, Tagula, alsjeblieft, stop ermee,’ zei ze.

‘Ik moet, Kenia, ik kan niet anders,’ zei hij.

‘Ja, maar je gaat eraan, ik voel het gewoon,’ zei het meisje. ‘Ik heb je lief, en ik kan dit gewoon niet aanzien.’

‘Ja, als je zo doorgaat dan ga ik zeker aan,’ riep Tagula woest. ‘Ik ben midden in het spel. Ik moet nu al mijn aandacht erbij houden.’

‘Ik bid dan wel voor je,’ zei het meisje. ‘Dan ben ik in ieder geval bij je.’

Weer werd er een medespeler gedood. Tagula kon het op het scherm zien. Er was een enorme blikseminslag van stroom. Veelal betekende dat ook de dood van de persoon zelf, maar lang niet altijd. Vanwege dat het een zware inslag was had Tagula niet veel hoop. ‘Zie je wat je doet ?’ riep Tagula boos naar het meisje. ‘Door jouw stomme gedoe is er weer een speler gesneuveld.’

‘Ja, geef mij maar weer de schuld,’ riep het meisje half huilend. ‘Altijd makkelijk. Ik geef om je, vergeet dat niet.’

‘Het lijkt er niet op, Kenia, en houd nu alsjeblieft even je bek,’ riep Tagula. ‘Straks mag je weer babbelen en zeiken zoveel je wilt. Niet nu.’

Ze hadden nu een opening gevonden in het gebouw, aan de achterkant. Er was ergens een tunnel onder de grond. Aan de voorkant waren teveel manschappen van Mörn. Ze moesten nu een hek zien open te krijgen, maar dat ging helemaal verkeerd. Het alarm ging af. Het meisje hoorde het ook. ‘Doe dat ding nu uit !’ riep het meisje.

‘Ho, wacht,’ zei Tagula, terwijl het meisje alweer achter hem stond. Tagula had een kaart geactiveerd waardoor het hek opengíng, en een andere kaart die beveiliging zou geven. ‘Er komt wat aan daar in de verte,’ zei het meisje, die meekeek op het scherm.

‘Ik zie niets, Kenia,’ zei Tagula. Toen wees het meisje op het scherm. ‘Niet aanraken,’ zei Tagula. ‘En dat is niks.’

‘Hoe weet je dat ?’ vroeg Kenia, die haar hand alweer had teruggetrokken.

‘Alsjeblieft, raak mij ook niet aan. Veel te gevaarlijk nu,’ zei Tagula.

‘Als jij straks brand zal ik heus ook wel branden,’ zei het meisje.

‘Nee, Kenia,’ zei Tagula, ‘niet als je een beetje afstand houdt.’

‘Maar wat is dat dan in de verte ?’ vroeg Kenia. ‘Okay, nu lijkt het weg.’

‘Dat was niks,’ zei Tagula. ‘Laat me nu even concentreren.’

Aan de zijkant moest Tagula een andere tunnel in. Die kon hij ook openen door een speciale kaart. Opeens kreeg het spel een enorme optater. Tagula werd weggeslingerd. ‘Zie, niks aan de hand,’ zei Tagula. ‘Allemaal koud vuur.’

Hoe deed je dat ?’ vroeg Kenia.

‘Door die speciale beveiligingskaart, maar die is maar tijdelijk geldig,’ zei Tagula.

Ineens verscheen het gezicht van Mörn op het scherm. Tagula schrok, en verborg zijn eigen gezicht, maar gelukkig kon Mörn hem niet zien. Mörn leek afgeleid door iets. Mörn wist niet dat er een camera op hem gericht was. Hij sprak wat met zijn onderdanen. Die probeerden hem gerust te stellen. Mörn had een vreemde stem als hij sprak met zijn onderdanen.

Tagula sloop door de tunnel. Wat anderen volgden hem. Door bepaalde kaarten te activeren was hij al zo ver gekomen. Ook konden er bepaalde dobbelstenen geactiveerd worden die bepaalde raad konden geven. Tagula klikte de inventaris aan, en bladerde door de wapens heen. Daar zaten ook weer kaarten tussen. Ook kon je bepaalde schilden activeren. Tagula activeerde er een paar, en liep verder. ‘Morgan !’ werd er geroepen. ‘Er is iemand dichtbij.’

Ineens was het beeld weg, en er stond met grote letters : ‘U bent gevangene nummer A6-389109700000. U bent eigendom van A6. Ontsnapping is onmogelijk. Pogingen tot ontsnapping kunnen leiden tot uw dood, en die van uw geliefden. Herhaling : U bent gevangene nummer A6-389109700000. U heeft een ongeneeslijke en levensgevaarlijke ziekte. Keer nu terug. Dit is uw waarschuwing.’ Ook las een stem het voor. Toen viel de stem in herhaling. Tagula en het meisje waren zich kapot geschrokken, en Tagula had direct het apparaat losgelaten. Nu moesten ze heel voorzichtig zijn.

‘Ja, maar toenet kreeg je een optater, maar het was niets eigenlijk,’ zei het meisje.

‘Ja, maar dat was een beveiligingskaart, Kenia, ik weet niet of die nog werkt nu, maar ik heb ook wat schilden geactiveerd. Blijkbaar is dit toch door de beveiliging heengegaan,’ zei Tagula.

Er stond toen op het scherm : ‘Dit is een boodschap van het verzetsleger. We zijn tot diep in de burcht van Mörn doorgedrongen. Alstublieft, verlaat uw posten niet. We zijn aan de winnende kant.’

Tagula was opgelucht, maar vroeg zich af in hoeverre het waar was. Hij pakte het apparaat, en drukte op wat knopjes voor beeld. Hij kon inderdaad zien dat een bepaalde afdeling van het leger nu heel diep in de burcht was, en ze hadden een pad uitgestippeld. Hij volgde het pad, maar was op zijn hoede. Hij hoorde toen een enorme knal.

‘Dit kan niet waar zijn,’ zei Tagula.

‘Wat is het ?’ vroeg het meisje.

‘Kenia,’ zei Tagula. Hij rommelde toen met wat knopjes.

‘Zeg het,’ zei Kenia. ‘Ben je veilig ?’

‘Ze hebben een geheime deur geopend, die niet meer dichtkan nu, maar het heeft hen hun leven gekost. Ik hoop dat ze in het echt nog leven,’ zei Tagula.

‘Ze hebben zich opgeofferd voor het spel, voor ons allemaal,’ zei Kenia. Toen was het een hele tijd stil. Er was een ruit gebroken, en Mörn werd door een krachtige luchtstroom die vrijgekomen was door een tunnel uit de burcht geblazen. Op het scherm kon Tagula zien dat Mörn het hierbij niet liet zitten, en alhoewel hij dronken leek zwaaide hij ook met een groot slagersmes, en liep weer naar de burcht toe. Tagula ging zo snel mogelijk naar de afdeling waar Mörn al die tijd verbleef. Daar verzamelde Tagula wat kaarten en wapens waarmee hij zijn inventaris kon opvullen, ook schilden. Ook verzamelde hij frequenties die eerder nog gesloten en verborgen werden gehouden. Zo was er een poort geopend, maar al snel stond Tagula oog in oog met Mörn. Ook wat anderen waren daar. Mörn zwaaide met zijn mes, en dreigde, maar Tagula verstond niet wat hij zei, en kwam er snel achter dat Mörn achter glas was. Weer kwam er een luchtstroom die Mörn leek mee te nemen. Het spel leek nu tot een einde te komen. Tagula kreeg een heleboel bonus. Die zou hij ook in andere spelen kunnen gebruiken. Er waren meerderen van zulke spelen. Tagula zuchtte.

‘Je hebt het overleefd,’ zei het meisje.
‘Ja, maar moet je niet zien hoe,’ zei Tagula.

Hoofdstuk 10. De mannenhaters

Mörn gaf niet op.
Tagula wist het.
Hij zou in andere vormen proberen terug te komen.
Tagula moest op zijn hoede zijn.

Tandartsen waren bezig aan het lichaam van Tagula.
Ze matigden zich aan botartsen te zijn, dus ze boorden ook in zijn lichaam, op zoek naar het oerzout, op zoek naar mineralen, waar ze rijk van konden worden.
En ze bleven maar implanteren.
Ze wilden Tagula geheel overnemen.
Ze waanden dat ze chirurgen waren, maar het waren roofdieren, kolonisten.
Ze waren mijnwerkers. Mineraalzoekers. Steenzoekers.
Ze gingen over alle natuurgrenzen heen die ze maar konden.
Alarmen gingen aan, maar dat deerde hen niet.
Het was toch altijd de ander die de overtreder was.

De amazones zeiden dat hij maar beter lek kon zijn, anders zou dezelfde dikke kop hebben als de koppen van Mörn.
Deze amazones waren zeer vriendelijk, maar andere amazones zouden hem bespotten.

Tagula draaide aan de tuner van de nieuwe spelmodule, op zoek naar nieuwe frequenties die hij door het spel gewonnen had.

Tagula was in een doodstrijd om uit moeras te komen.
Maar hij was in een stalen kooi, die niet meegaf.
Tenminste, het leek als staal.
Hij kwam er niet doorheen.

Hij voelde dat er aan hem getrokken werd.
De moerasmonsters wilden hem niet laten gaan.
Ze schreeuwden tot hem, bedreigden hem.
Nee, Mörn wilde hem niet laten gaan.
Elke ontsnapping was een valstrik hier.
Hij ging alleen maar dieper en dieper.

Er waren pinnen door zijn vlees.
Er waren veren aan verbonden.
Hij wilde op frequenties van nieuwe spelen komen, maar hij had paniek aanvallen.
Het leek hem niet te lukken.

Het was alsof hij in een visnet was, in een fuik.
Er was zware druk op zijn hoofd en op zijn kaak.
Zijn mond brandde.

Hij woelde in zijn slaap.
Hij hapte naar adem, maar dat was er bijna niet, of helemaal niet.
Toch scheen hij te leven.

Of was dit de dood al ?

Hij werd geslingerd van droom tot droom, hij was zwaar aan het ijlen, en voelde zich koortsachtig.
Tandartsen hadden teveel aan hem lopen rommelen, en psychiaters met hun idiote medicijnen voor hun gewaande ziektes. Altijd zagen ze ziektes in de mens, terwijl ze zelf zwaar ziek waren.
Hij was in strijd met zijn geheugen.
Hij zag er geen heil in, alles was zwart.
Hij probeerde van alles te vluchten.

Er was geen ontkomen aan.
Het zat te vast en te diep.
En het was als weerhaken.
Hij kon het alleen verdiepen en er omheen werken, nieuwe betekenissen in zoeken, als een puzzel.

Hij moest de puzzelogie leren. Hij moest puzzeloog worden op er doorheen te komen, en dat werkte samen met spiegelogie en filterologie. Het was een puzzel met gevaarlijke spiegels en filters, en dat moest hij nog recht zien te krijgen. Alles liep door elkaar heen in zijn gevangenis.

Pijnscheuten trokken door zijn lichaam heen.
De verwarring en wanhoop verscheurde hem, maar hij sliep.
Hij had Mörn verdreven, maar met een hoge prijs.
Het had hem van binnen verscheurd.

Het leek wel alsof Mörn een heleboel van hem meenam in zijn val, misschien wel teveel.
Het was ondragelijk.
Nee, Mörn zou niet opgeven.

Het trok aan hem, het sneed hem, terwijl de amazones zeiden dat hij besneden werd.
De amazones bekeken alles door een andere lens, door het oog van Bilha.
Hij wilde ook niet opgeven, maar hij was gebroken van binnen.
Dit had hem totaal opgebroken.
Hij had bijna spijt dat hij Mörn verdreven had.
Maar hij wist dat het moest gebeuren.
Hij moest het de tijd geven. Alles was nog rauw.

Mörn eiste zijn lichaam.
Mörn wilde bezit van hem nemen.
Mörn beweerde dat hij zijn eigendom was.
Weer hoorde hij zijn productnummer en dat hij eigendom was van een markt, als een grondstof, als koopwaar.
Hield het dan nooit op ?
Mörn was de grenzeloze marktdrift.
Dat was alles wat telde.

Mörn loog alles wat los en vast zat aan elkaar voor deze markt.
Het was teveel informatie.
Tagula had het gevoel alsof zijn hoofd explodeerde.

Hij moest het bij de bron-informatie houden, alleen dat wat hij nodig had.
Hij wilde tot de honger gaan.

Tandartsen sneden in hem, meedogenloos, want zijn lichaam was niet van hemzelf, maar van hem.
Zo ook zijn mond. Zij bepaalden wat erin en eruit ging.
En psychiaters praatten alles schoon, want hij was immers zwaar ziek in hun ogen en hij hoefde niet serieus genomen te worden.
Van alles implanteerden ze in zijn mond, in zijn hoofd, en dan zeiden ze dat het tussen zijn oren zat.
Tagula wist dat het criminelen waren.
Maar hij droomde. De frequentie van de amazones was er vlak naast. Hij wist niet wat erger was. Ze waren hardvochtig, ruw, staken scherpe botjes met veren door zijn huid. Ze ranselden hem af bij het minste of geringste, en hij moest leven in een kooi met veel honger. Wat was erger ? Hij wist het niet. Maar hij was in ieder geval in de natuur als hij bij de amazones was. Hij switchte heen en weer tussen de twee frequenties. Er waren ook andere amazone frequenties, amazones die een stuk vriendelijker waren, maar die konden niet tegen Mörn op. Hij moest zichzelf harden bij de ruigere amazones, die twistziek waren. Alleen zij zouden tegen Mörn op kunnen. Zij zouden Mörn onthoofden, of misschien hadden ze dat al gedaan.

Misschien was er geen Mörn in hun wereld. Ze waren varkensjagers en zwijnenjagers, en voerden oorlogen tegen andere amazone stammen. Ze moesten niet veel van mannen weten. Maar Tagula fantaseerde erover hoe ze Mörn’s nieuwe verblijfplaats zouden binnenvallen. Vandaar dat hij het hier vol wilde houden. Deze amazones waren wel tien keer sterker dan de doorsnee man. Wat zou Mörn bij hen in te brengen hebben ? Vandaar dat hij het belang meer en meer ging inzien van deze woeste, donkere amazones. Maar soms was het onhoudbaar en draaide hij verder aan de tuner. Hij vroeg zich af hoe het zou zijn als dat niet meer zou kunnen, en hij hier daadwerkelijk vast zou zitten, maar hij droomde het maar.

Hij wilde niet op zoek naar een gemakkelijk leven, want dan zou hij weer prooi zijn van Mörn. Daarom trok de discipline van de woestere amazones hem aan. Zij waren meedogenloos, dat wel. Zij gingen door totdat zijn tranen vielen op hun voeten. Met iets minder namen ze geen genoegen. En telkens weer werd hij verstoten. Ze wilden hem niet houden.

Ze wilden niks met mannen te maken hebben. Het waren mannenhaters. Hij zocht verder op de tuner. Er waren ook wel mannenkampen, zoals monnikenkampen en hermietengebieden. Zij hadden ook hun eigen frequenties. Zij leerden hem veel over deze dingen.

Hij ging op zoek naar de frequenties van de oerzeeën. Er waren frequenties bijgekomen van de oerzeeën van Orion en Betelgeuse, maar hij droomde. Ook daar woonden weer hele andere soorten amazones. Er waren daar ook hele andere soorten insecten, en hele andere soorten vliegen.

Hij werd moe van deze dromen, alsof hij door een moeheids-vlieg was gestoken. Hij moest veel slapen.

De amazones kerfden hun hiëroglieven in zijn verstand en geweten, maar ze gaven geen betekenissen. Ze leken harteloos te zijn. Hij moest zelf op zoek naar de betekenissen. Hij moest het zelf verdienen. Niets werd zomaar gegeven bij de amazones. Hij moest hard werken, en dan kreeg hij nog bijna niets. En dan werd hij na een tijd weer weggestuurd. Zo ging dat van stam tot stam. Niemand wilde hem eigenlijk hebben. Maar hij had de hoop dat dit soort stammen Mörn konden overwinnen, of misschien hadden ze dat al gedaan. Of misschien wilden ze zo ver mogelijk van hem vandaan leven. Als zij niet tegen hem op zouden kunnen, wie dan wel ? Hoe groot en fors Mörn ook was, de amazones waren vaak veel groter en forser dan hem. Hoe bruut Mörn ook was, de amazones waren vaak veel bruter. Tagula begreep waarom. Om Mörn op een afstand te houden.

Mörn was een verschrikkelijk beest wat door de amazones bereden werd. Het was een verschrikkelijk woest en gulzig zwijn met grote slagtanden. Ze leefden van zijn vlees, tanden, huid en kracht, want ze konden hem ook als rijtuig gebruiken, en hem gebruiken in de oorlog. Mörn was al geheel door de amazones benut, tot goed gebruik gemaakt, als een beestenras. Ze joegen op Mörn, en gebruikten hem dan. Tot dat besef moest Tagula ontwaken. Ze hadden al afgerekend met Mörn, en daarom leefden de amazones zo ver van de samenleving.

In Mörn waren gifklieren die ze konden gebruiken voor de jacht en de oorlog. Ze doopten hun pijlen en speren in het gif van Mörn. Ook had Mörn medicinale klieren, die ze ook gebruikten.

Er waren ook spelen van de amazone zwijnenjacht op de nieuwe spelmodule, maar Tagula droomde slechts. In ieder geval speelde hij ermee. Hij moest de zwijnenjacht leren. Het was niet zonder gevaren, voornamelijk niet als ze joegen op de mörn-zwijnen. Soms ging een amazone ten onder in de jacht. Niet iedere amazone overleefde een worsteling met een mörnzwijn. Je moest een mörnzwijn nooit onderschatten. Voor Tagula was het spel niet dodelijk. Het was een normaal spel. Het gaf geen electrische schokken. Maar wat als het geen spel meer was ? Wat als de onzichtbare muur tussen speler en spelkarakter zou verdwijnen ? Hij had ook nog steeds de frequentie-knop, maar wat als die er niet meer zou zijn ?

Maar hij droomde slechts. Zelfs als het weg zou zijn, dan zou hij ook weer wakker worden. Tagula was aangevallen door een mörn-zwijn. Hij lag er nu bijna als verlamd. Hij kon zich niet meer goed bewegen. Hij kon de frequentie-knop niet bereiken. Hij voelde zich invalide. Hij kon zich niet meer voorstellen als speler. Hij was nu in het spel en kon er niet uit, vanwege wat het mörn-zwijn hem had aangedaan. Maar hij droomde slechts. Hij zou weer wakker worden. Hij was in de natuur bij de amazones. Ze zouden hem ook weer kunnen verstoten. Wat moesten ze verder met hem ? Ze lieten hem gewoon liggen. Hij lag in het hoge gras. Wat als een mörnzwijn hem nu verder te grazen zou nemen, of een ander roofdier ? Hij kon niets doen. Hij kon zich niet verdedigen. Hij kon ook niet goed spreken. Hij kon in ieder geval niet roepen. Hij kon alleen maar stamelen en ijlen, een heel klein beetje, maar ook dat ging steeds moeilijker en trager.

Zouden ze hem hier echt achterlaten ? Hij zag zichzelf achter de spelmodule, maar hij kon zichzelf niet meer bereiken. Hij had geen verbinding met hemzelf meer. Hij was van zichzelf gescheiden. Het leek bevroren beeld. Was hij er nog wel ? Bestond hij nog wel ? Of was hij gewoon dood ? Nee, hij droomde. Hij probeerde te ontwaken, maar hij kon niet. Hij was in slaapverlamming.

Mörn was hier prooi van de amazones. Dit was het einde van Mörn. Ook al had het mörnzwijn hem ernstig toegetakeld, hij zag hierin hoop, ook al zou hij het niet overleven. De dagen van de mörnzwijnen waren al geteld. Die zouden niet ontkomen. De amazones wisten raad met het mörnzwijn. Hij kon zich daar verder niet mee bemoeien. dat lieten ze ook niet toe, en dat was goed zo. Alleen al het feit dat het mörnzwijn hier ten onder ging, dat er voor het mörnzwijn geen ontkomen aan was op lange termijn, was een gevoel voor Tagula van leven. Ook al was hij misschien stervende, toch bracht het hem tot leven. Hij had het eeuwige leven gevonden, wat de dood niet kon tegenhouden.

Ook al zou het een droom zijn, toch had de droom waarde, en was het waar voor Tagula. Zijn hele leven was hij al een dromer geweest, en waarom zou het leven meer waard zijn dan de droom ? Dit was irke, de diepere droom, de diepere ziel van de onderwereld. Hier had hij een dubbelleven. Het waren de eeuwige jachtvelden waarop hij het eeuwige leven had gevonden.

Hij lag daar, als verlamd, gebroken en lek, en de geest van het mörnzwijn, het virus van mörnzwijn, stroomde uit hem weg, terwijl er tegelijkertijd zoveel van het mörnzwijn naar binnen stroomde. Hij voelde zich de overwinnaar over het zwijn, als overwinnaar over zichzelf.

Het was na lange tijd, wat wel verschillende dagen leek, dat hij werd gevonden door een amazone van een andere stam. Zij nam hem mee naar haar kamp, waar ze hem in een tent legde om te herstellen. Het leek zeker wel een paar weken te duren, waarin hij geheel opnieuw moest leren lopen en bewegen. Toen hij dat uiteindelijk weer kon namen ze hem mee naar de zee, waar ze hem leerden vissen op mörnvissen. Zij waren tamelijk onschuldig, konden hem geen kwaad doen. De mörnvissen waren de latere en afgezwakte vormen van Mörn, de toekomstige vormen. De amazones leefden van de mörnvissen voor eeuwig. Telkens weer kwamen de mörnvissen terug, maar ze konden geen kwaad meer doen. Ze waren niet gevaarlijk zoals de mörnzwijnen, maar toch was de zee niet zonder gevaren. Er waren ook haaien, en de golven konden ook gevaarlijk zijn. Ook was er overstromingsgevaar en konden er vijanden komen van andere landen of eilanden. De amazones konden dus niet indutten. Er was nog veel werk te doen. De hiëroglieven moesten doorvertaald worden.

Soms werd Tagula wakker, maar dan ging hij snel weer slapen. De slaap had hem in zijn greep, en de dromen trokken hem dieper. Pijn was een taal, als een hiëroglief, en het moest verder vertaald worden, diepere betekenis krijgen. Hij moest het ervaren, hij moest het ondergaan.

Door de zwarte stenen kon Tagula onderscheid maken tussen mörnisten, monniken, hermieten, amazones en mannelijke amazones. De zwarte stenen zorgden ervoor dat de offerdieren niet verwisseld konden worden, dat er niet gesjoemeld kon worden met prooi. Het was als de slacht inspectie. Als er wat fout ging gingen er schelle alarmen af. Men moest onderscheid maken tussen waarop men kon jagen, en waarop men niet kon jagen. Amazones die de jacht verzaakten werden tarwe monden genoemd. Amazones die de jacht overdreven werden de hysteria genoemd. Zij moesten in gevangenschap, want zij waren een gevaar voor henzelf en voor anderen. Amazones die de offerdieren verwisselden werden de sjoemelaars genoemd, valsspelers. Ook zij moesten in gevangenschap, omdat ze een gevaar waren voor zichzelf en voor anderen. Die gevangenschap vond plaats in het zwarte gesteente.

Er waren gevangenissen in het spel, en scholen, en ook kleuterscholen, dat je terug naar start moest. Dat was hard nodig in zo’n gevaarlijk spel als dit. Het spel was niet dodelijk, maar je zou er wel van in het ziekenhuis kunnen komen. Je zou er wel door bij een psychiater kunnen komen, of bij een monnik met een luisterend oor. Terug naar de baarmoeder was wel het ergste wat je kon horen, want dan werd alles van je geplunderd en moest je helemaal terug naar het begin, moest je helemaal opnieuw beginnen, alles weer opnieuw opbouwen, van voren af aan. Maar dat moest wel, want men zag elkaar soms voor mörnisten aan, voor mörnzwijnen of mörnvissen, en zo voerde men jacht op elkaar. Het was een oorlogswereld. De vooroordelen vlogen om je oren, en daarom was dit allemaal ingebouwd in het spel, en dat was maar goed ook, want anders zou het dodelijk kunnen wezen.

Tagula bleef dicht bij zijn zwarte stenen om door dit mijnenveld heen te komen. Aan beide kanten kon hij eraf vallen. En hij kon te snel gaan of te langzaam. Allemaal problematisch in het mijnenveld.

Hij had verwarrende dromen, soms liep alles door elkaar heen. Als hij wakker werd kon hij zich niet alles herinneren, en was hij aan het puzzelen, en probeerde hij zijn dromen uit te leggen, diepere betekenissen te geven. Ze waren als vliegenplagen in zijn hoofd, hem voorbereidende op de komst van de amazones.

Einde

REEDS EERDER VERSCHENEN :

DE AMERIKA BRUG
DE AFRIKA BRUG
DE ARETAÏTISCHE FILOSOFIE
RAGNAROK ONTSLUIERD I en II
DE CALVIJN CODE
MONNIKEN WEGWIJZER
ZOMBIE WERELD
KERKELIJKE BESLUITEN
DE CONTEXTUOLOGIE
DE RECYCLOCRATIE
DE RV-BIJBEL
DE EGYPTE CODE
DE ESSENTIËLE EGYPTOLOGIE
DE FILOSOFIE VAN HET VOORTIJDSE AFRIKA
DE TWAALF PROFETEN
HET PLUMARES MYSTERIE
DE TORENS VAN BELZEHAM - DE EZAUSLADDER
DE NEDERDUITS GEREFORMEERDE DOGMATIEK (DEEL 1-12)
HET RV-BIJBEL HANDBOEK
HET LEVEN IS LITERATUUR
HET ORIONSE AFRIKA
VAN HEIDELBERG TOT DORDRECHT
DE LOGISTIEKE FILOSOFIE
RIGIL KENT ONTSLUIERD
VAN REFORMATIE TOT REGRESSIE
DE WACHTERS VAN DORDT

DE BOEKENSLAGERIJ
WILDE HONDEN
DE GIECHELAAR
DE EVACUATIE TREIN
DE ONTSLUIERING VAN GENESIS
UITTOCHT UIT LAODICEA
DE TUIN VAN JOB
DE TRAAN VAN ROGGEMUIDEN
PARADIJSVOGELS
GIDS BIJ DE RV-BIJBEL
DE NIEUWE DOLEANTIE
DE LATERE REFORMATIE
DE VISSERISTISCHE DOGMATIEK
NONNENDORP
HET OORLOGS-SPEL
PLANTEN VAN VLEES
ZIJN HUIS STOND IN DE WEG
FABRIEKEN AAN ZEE
DE BRUG VAN HEIMDAL
DE GEZICHTEN VAN MALLEMOE

RODENBERG ALMANAK

II

RODENBERG ALMANAK II

Uitgave : Visseristische School
1970-2025
2025

Kort voorwoord 2025

Deze almanak is het tweede deel van deze serie.
Het bevat de Rodenbergse overlevering in verhalen en literatuur, vele sagen, legendes en mythes.
Het is Rodenbergs-Nederlandse cultuurgoed en literatuurgoed door de tijden heen, wat loopt vanaf de zeventiger jaren tot nu.
Er zijn ook nog veel Engelse verhalen, maar die staan niet in deze almanak, maar komen in een latere almanak terecht.
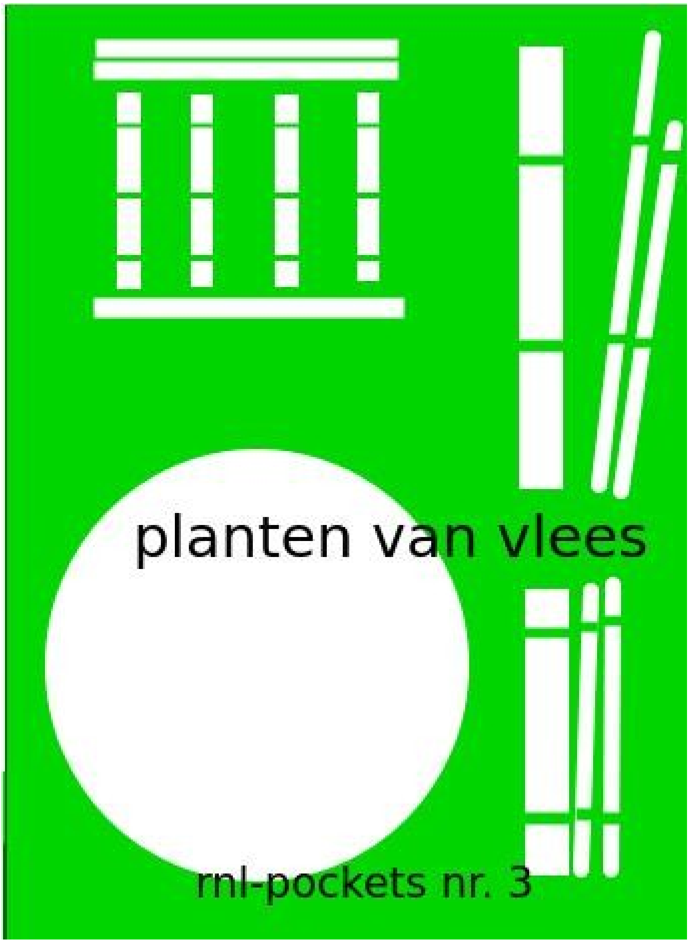
Het zijn naslagwerken voor de Rodenbergse studenten die serieus onderzoek willen doen in de Rodenbergse achtergronden, bijgeschriften, apocrieven en deuterocanieke boeken van de nieuwe bijbel. In deel 1 werd hiertoe de Nederduits Gereformeerde Dogmatiek besproken.
Voor Rodenbergse studenten is dit weer een prima overzicht van naslagwerk bij de nieuwe bijbel, bij de RV-Bijbel, de Rodenberg Versie.
Dit zijn achtergrond geschriften en bijgeschriften, als een goede encyclopedie.
Ditmaal dus de verhalen en de literatuur, de Nederlandse zijde, want er is ook nog een Engelse zijde. Het geeft in ieder geval inzicht op waar de nieuwe bijbel uit voort is gekomen, net zoals de oude bijbel ook voort was gekomen vanuit een hele achtergrond van oudere religieuze, geestelijke en gnostische geschriften, en oudere mythologie.

Compleet is deze almanak zeer zeker niet, vanwege de Engelse zijde die nog later komt, en vanwege dat het steeds verder groeit. In deze almanak wordt er aandacht gegeven aan verzamelingen en bundels, zodat sommige verhalen er ook dubbel instaan. Het geeft een beknopt overzicht van wat er allemaal is verschenen, maar nogmaals zeker niet compleet.

De Uitgever

1. Planten van Vlees
2. Bonje in de christelijk gereformeerde kerk
3. De Indiaanse Nachten
4. De Surinaamse Nachten
5. De tuin van Job
6. Vurige Stenen
7. Biel - Verzamelingen
8. Proza van de Vuh
9. Donkere Kaas
10. De Sprookjesmarkt
11. De laatste van de Rozentuin
12. Paarskapje Verhalen
13. De Flamingo vertelt
14. Flamingo Dagen
15. Wilde Honden
16. Avond Danser
17. De Vijfde Rivier
18. Het bevroren jongetje
19. IJsroosje
20. Koning Stuiterbal
21. De Dagmerries
22. De Olifant vertelt
23. Het paarse boek
24. De Lettermaker
25. Tranen van Vuur
26. De Drokelaarse pap en andere verhalen
27. De traan van de bloem
28. Mediwars
29. De Joegoslavische kettingbrieven
30. De Zaproteleporter
31. De Giechelaar
32. Vreemde Telefoongesprekken
33. De evacuatie trein
34. Prikkeldraad
35. Nachtregen
36. Boek van Honing
37. De Schoolheks en andere sprookjes en verhalen
38. De Kaars van de gillende jongens
39. Log - Verzamelingen
40. Het Oorlogs-spel
41. De tuin van mevrouw van Dalen
42. Zijn huis stond in de weg
43. Het Surinaamse dagboek
44. De evolutie van de hemel
45. Fabrieken aan zee
46. De indiaanse avonden
47. De brug van Heimdal
48. Het metalen ei
49. De poppenmaker van Hiroshima
50. De gezichten van Mallemoe
51. De torens van Belzeham - De Ezausladder

52. De traan van Roggemuiden
53. De paradijsvogel
54. De IJsspiegel
55. Het Soevenier
56. De Onkrant - Verzamelingen
57. De Grote Surinaamse Bijbel Krant
58. Het Sebek Boek
59. Het leven is een puzzel avontuur
60. De boekenslagerij



planten van vlees
rnl-pockets nr. 3

Planten van Vlees
korte verhalen

Uitgave : rnl-pockets
nr. 3
1970-2023

2023 rodenbergs-nederlandse letterkunde

Inhoud

Planten van Vlees ……………………………..…….. 4
De Kannibaalse Bruid ……...………………..…..…. 38
De Roodbil Stam ……………………………......….. 48
De Eenling ……………………………….....……. 58
De Jijdans …………………………………..….… 74
De Sloot ……………...……...……………..….…. 79
De scherpschutter …………………………...… 88
De stadschool en de bosschool ……………..….… 93
De Vloek van de Zwarte Nacht …………………..... 102
Op naar de volgende klant …………….………….... 109

Planten van Vlees

Harm woonde met zijn twee kinderen aan de rand van een bos. Het bos was tamelijk groot, en er bleek een indianenstam te wonen die een paal met een dierenkop erop aanbaden. Meestal waren dat koppen van varkens of runderen zoals buffels en bizons. Harm waarschuwde zijn kinderen altijd dat ze niet het bos moesten ingaan. Hij was te bang dat de indianen zijn kinderen wat vreemds zouden aandoen. Er gingen allerlei vreemde verhalen over deze stam in de ronde. Ze zouden vreemde dingen doen met kinderen. Bewijzen voor deze verhalen waren er niet. Maar Harm wilde geen enkel risico nemen.
Op een dag tikte er een man op het raam. Het bleek een indiaan te zijn. Hij had dierenvellen op zijn rug, en hij had laarzen van een soort bont. Harm deed open, en vroeg waarmee hij de man kon helpen. De indiaan zei niets. Toen wees hij op zijn laarzen. 'Ikko Boeke,' zei de indiaan. Harm kon dat natuurlijk niet verstaan en haalde zijn schouders op. 'Mijnheer, ik heb geen idee wat u mij probeert te vertellen. Die taal ken ik helemaal niet,' zei Harm een beetje nors. Weer wees de indiaan op zijn laarzen, en toen zag Harm dat er een gat inzat. 'Oh, ik dacht dat indianen zelf wel wisten hoe ze zulke dingen kunnen maken,' grapte Harm. 'Nou, komt u maar verder.'

De indiaan kwam naar binnen en deed zijn laars uit. Harm pakte draad en een naald, en begon de stof aan elkaar te naaien. Hij vond het vreemd dat de indiaan dit zelf niet kon.
'Hebben ze bij jullie geen onderwijs ?' vroeg Harm. De indiaan schudde zijn hoofd. De kinderen kwamen thuis en waren verbaasd toen ze de indiaan op de bank zagen zitten. 'Wat moet hij hier ?' vroeg Ko.
'Laten we een beetje gastvrij zijn,' zei Harm.
'Maar pa, u weet dat indianen gevaarlijk zijn,' zei Bep.
'Daar zijn geen bewijzen voor,' zei Harm. 'Trouwens, hij had gewoon mijn hulp nodig.'
'Het kan een valstrik zijn, pa,' zei Ko, die het niet vertrouwde.
'Ach welnee,' zei Harm. 'Hij kan hier best wel een nachtje slapen.'
'Wat !' riep Ko. 'Mij niet gezien. Dan ga ik wel bij oma slapen.'
'Doe jij dat maar,' zei Harm. 'Ik ben wel blij met een beetje gezelschap sinds mama is overleden.'
Bep begon te snikken. 'Moet je dat allemaal weer aanhalen, pa ? Zo komen we er nooit overheen.'

'Sorry,' zei Harm. 'Ga jij ook maar naar oma.'
De kinderen liepen de deur uit, terwijl Harm aan de indiaan vroeg of hij een biertje wilde. De indiaan wilde dat wel. Harm zag het als een uitdaging. Als hij vriendschap met de indiaan kon sluiten, dan zou dat bevordelijk zijn voor de verhouding tussen het dorp en de indianen. Misschien zou dat wel veel misverstanden uit de weg ruimen.
In de nacht hoorde Harm wat gerommel op het zolder. Toen hoorde hij ineens luide muziek. Toen hij kwam kijken had de indiaan een grammofoon-plaat opgezet. Harm kon er wel om lachen, en ging weer verder slapen. De indiaan bleek het goed naar zijn zin te hebben, maar de dag erop wilde de indiaan weer terug. De indiaan was te gehecht aan het bos. Harm kon dat goed begrijpen. De indiaan was verder erg dankbaar, maar maakte duidelijk in hele gebrekkige taal dat de vriendschap nu ook ten einde moest komen. De indiaan zei dat het voor hem eigenlijk verboden was om vriendschap te hebben met de blanken. Harm kon het niet laten om nog even te vragen over die laars. 'Waarom kwam je hier eigenlijk voor die laars ? Hebben jullie geen vrouwen in jullie stam die voor dit soort dingen zorgen ?'

De indiaan liet weten dat ze geen vrouwen meer hadden. Die waren allemaal dood. De stam had alleen nog maar mannen, en die schenen heel onhandig met deze dingen te zijn.
'Maar hoe moet dat dan verder als je nog eens zoiets nodig hebt ?' vroeg Harm. De indiaan maakte duidelijk dat het maar behelpen was, en dat alles te hooi en te gras zou gaan. Misschien zouden ze zich het zelf wel aanleren, maar dat zou tijd kosten. De laatste vrouw van de stam was net overleden. Harm zei dat hij kon begrijpen hoe hij zich voelde, want zijn vrouw was ook overleden.
De indiaan maakte duidelijk dat hij juist blij was dat de vrouw dood was. Vrouwen bleken een grote macht binnen de stam te hebben, en die zouden ze in het verleden misbruikt hebben. De indiaan voelde zich vrij nu. Harm vroeg zich af of de vrouwen misschien vermoord waren.
'Hoe zijn jullie vrouwen aan hun einde gekomen ?' vroeg Harm tactisch.
De indiaan liet weten dat dit een groot geheim was. Harm vond dat verdacht. 'Waarom wil je het niet zeggen ?' vroeg Harm. 'Hebben jullie iets te verbergen ?'
'Shhhh,' zei de indiaan, en drukte zijn vingers op de lippen van Harm. 'Jullie zijn me maar een vreemde koekebakkers,' zei Harm.

De indiaan maakte duidelijk dat hij nu moest gaan, en rende het bos in.
Harm stond met zijn ogen te knipperen. Hij vertrouwde het helemaal niet. Even later kwamen de kinderen thuis.
'Hoe was het bij oma ?' vroeg Harm.
'Oma was er niet,' zei Ko. 'Maar we hadden de sleutel, dus we zijn daar gewoon gaan slapen.'
'Misschien is ze bij tante Buurtje,' zei Harm.
Ko en Bep gingen op de bank zitten. 'Hoe is het afgelopen met die indiaan ?' vroeg Bep. Toen vertelde Harm het hele verhaal.
'Ik heb nog eens lopen denken, hè,' zei Bep. 'Die indianen hebben misschien onze hulp nodig. Ze leven niet voor niets in het bos. Er moet iets in het verleden mis zijn gegaan.'
'Ach welnee,' zei Ko. 'Ze houden van het bos. Ze zouden niet anders willen. Er is nooit iets verkeerds gegaan, want ze hebben altijd al in het bos geleefd.'
'Nou, ik weet het nog niet zo net,' zei Bep. 'Misschien hebben ze traumatische ervaringen gehad in stad of dorp, en zijn toen naar het bos vertrokken. Wie zou er nu vanuit zichzelf zo primitief willen leven ?'

'Ik,' zei Ko. 'Ik begrijp hen gedachtengang helemaal. Maar voor ons zijn ze nu niet meer te vertrouwen. Het lijkt wel alsof er een vuur is tussen hen en ons. Het bos is in oorlog met het dorp.'
'Er kunnen toch ook wel tussenwegen zijn ?' vraagt Bep.
'Blijkbaar niet,' zei Ko.
Midden in de nacht wordt er op het raam geslagen. Een groep woedende indianen is gekomen. Harm rent naar beneden, ziet de indianen staan, en grijpt naar zijn honkbal-knuppel.
Hij doet de deur open en roept : 'Wie van jullie wil er het eerst aan ?'
De indianen zijn boos, en laten hem weten dat ze erachter zijn gekomen dat één van hen bij de blanken is geweest en vriendschap heeft gesloten. Ze laten weten dat er een speer door het hart van de dader is gegaan door dit misdrijf.
'Zeg, zijn jullie de politie ofzo ?' vraagt Harm boos.
'Scheer je weg, of ik bel de politie !'
De indianen maakten het duidelijk dat ze de politie niet waren, maar dat de blanken zouden boeten voor de vriendschap met één van hen. Blanken zouden niet te vertrouwen zijn, en het zou als een vloek op hun stam rusten als ze dat zomaar langs hun heen zouden laten gaan. Verschillende speren werden er op Harm gericht. Harm stond klaar om toe te slaan met de honkbal-knuppel, en riep naar zijn kinderen om hen de politie te laten bellen. Steeds meer indianen begonnen zich te verzamelen voor het huis van Harm. 'Ik waarschuw je,' zei één van de indianen. 'We zullen je niet vermoorden, maar lever je kinderen uit. Dan zal het voor ons afgedaan zijn.'

'Nooit,' zei Harm woedend. 'Zijn jullie helemaal gek geworden.'
'Je kinderen liggen al verlamd in hun bed,' zei de indiaan. 'We zijn al door de achterkant binnengekomen, en hebben hen het spinnengif toegediend.'
'Spinnengif ?' vroeg Harm verbaasd. Toen werd ook Harm van achteren geinjecteerd met het gif, en lag al snel verlamd op de grond. Na lange tijd werd hij wakker in het indianenkamp diep in het bos. Hij lag daar vastgebonden naast zijn kinderen. Zijn kinderen waren nog steeds bewusteloos. In de verte zag hij een paal met een varkenskop erop.
Een indiaan kwam dichterbij. 'Aanbidden jullie die varkenskop daar ?' vroeg Harm.
'Kop houden,' zei de indiaan, en schopte hem een paar keer.

'Nee, serieus,' zei Harm. 'Ik wil weten of jullie die varkenskop daar aanbidden.'
'Gaat je niks aan,' zei de indiaan nors, en schopte hem weer. Dit keer veel harder.
'Jij bent leraar van beroep, hè ?' vraagt de indiaan nors.
'Hoe weet je dat ?' kreunt Harm van de pijn.
'Wij weten alles,' zei de indiaan, die hem weer schopte, hard in zijn buik. 'Jullie blamken weten precies hoe iedereen te maken zoals jullie zelf.'
Harm kon niet meer praten van de pijn. Het duizelde hem voor de ogen, terwijl de indiaan maar door blijf schoppen, totdat hij weer bewusteloos viel.
Toen hij weer wakker was was hij aan een paal gebonden. Het bleek de paal met de varkenskop te zijn. De varkenskop was vlak boven hem.
'Dom varken,' zei één van de indianen, terwijl de andere indianen lachten. Een wat oudere indiaan kwam naar voren. Hij drukte een mes op de keel van Harm. 'Jullie blanken hebben alles verziekt,' zei de oude indiaan. 'Jullie zijn een vloek. Wij weten precies wat wij met jullie moeten doen. Jij gaat geofferd worden aan de paal met de varkenskop.'

Harm wordt wakker in zweet. Hij had alles maar gedroomd. De indiaan slaapt nog steeds op het zolder, en zijn kinderen zijn bij oma. Die ochtend moest hij naar school om les te geven, maar de nachtmerrie zit hem nog steeds in de keel. Hij heeft moeite met spreken, en besluit af te bellen. Hij voelt zich duizelig en misselijk. Na een tijdje wordt hij gebeld door Ko. Hij doet zijn hele verhaal, en dan wil oma hem ook even aan de telefoon. Oma is erg in paniek, en zei dat hij een domme fout had gemaakt, omdat de indianen met boze magie werken. Die nachtmerrie was daar een teken van. Harm zag nog steeds geen kwaad in de indiaan. 'Iedereen droomt weleens naar,' zei hij tegen oma.
'Maar je bent ziek,' zei oma. 'Er kunnen wel duistere krachten aan het werk zijn, jongen, vergis je er maar niet in. Of misschien heeft die indiaan wel allerlei ziektes naar binnen gebracht. Die mensen leven niet echt hygienisch.'
Harm werd zieker en zieker, en moest naar het ziekenhuis voor onderzoek. Oma kwam hem ook opzoeken met de kinderen. Ze schudde haar hoofd. 'Ik heb je er altijd zo voor gewaarschuwd geen bosmensen binnen te nemen. Ze zijn niet te vertrouwen.'
Oma besloot om bij Harm in te wonen om voor de kinderen te zorgen. Harm was erg depressief. Gelukkig was het geen ernstige ziekte, dus hij kon snel weg uit het ziekenhuis. Tante Buurtje zou de kinderen een tijdje op vakantie nemen naar een tropisch eiland, zodat Harm helemaal tot rust kon komen.

Tante Buurtje was een vrolijke vrouw, als zonneschijn, en zij zorgde ervoor dat de kinderen helemaal over de dood van hun moeder heenkwamen. Maar met Harm ging het steeds slechter.
Op een nacht kon Harm niet meer verder. Hij moest hier weg. Hij rende het bos in, zijn huis achterlatende. Oma sliep.
Na een lange tijd rennen kwam Harm aan bij de indianenstam. Hij smeekte of hij daar kon wonen. Ze waren direct erg aardig. Ook de indiaan die Harm geholpen had was erbij. Oma had hem weer het bos ingestuurd toen Harm in het ziekenhuis lag. Harm kreeg zijn eigen rieten hut. Oma was erg in paniek. Ze wist niet waar Harm was, maar had een vermoeden, omdat Harm zo vaak tegen haar zei dat hij weg wilde, het bos in, om te leven met de indianen. Toen Harm maar niet terug kwam en zo lang weg bleef besloot oma op onderzoek uit te gaan. Ze begreep hem wel een beetje, maar wilde toch zekerheid. Na lang lopen zag ze in de verte het indianen-kamp, en hoorde zijn luide stem al. Oma was erg opgelucht. Even wilde ze hem zien, en toen ze in de verte een glimp van hem opving keerde ze weer terug. Ze wist dat ze hem toch niet tegen kon houden, en toen Harm in het ziekenhuis lag kwam ze erachter dat de indiaan die bij Harm logeerde eigenlijk een hele aardige man was. Ook de kinderen hadden er vrede mee toen ze het hoorden. Oma zou nu voor hen zorgen. Bep dacht er niet aan om in een indianen-stam te wonen, maar Ko dacht er over om zijn vader in het kamp te bezoeken, en misschien daar ook te blijven. Niet alleen omdat hij zijn vader miste, maar ook omdat het bos hem aantrok. Voor hem was het ook heel interessant dat zijn vader nu contact had met de indianen, en zelfs één van hen was geworden, terwijl hij er vroeger altijd voor waarschuwde.

Na een tijdje ging ook Ko in het bos wonen, bij zijn vader en de indianen. Oma en Bep bleven in het huis wonen. Zij konden het goed met elkaar vinden. Ook tante Buurtje kwam vaak bij hen op bezoek. 'Ach,' zei tante Buurtje, 'Harm heeft gewoon een vrouw nodig. Dan blijft hij wel weg van die inboorlingen. Hij heeft gewoon niets te doen.'

'Tegen mij zei hij dat als hij ooit nog een relatie wilde, dan met een bosvrouw, met een indiaanse vrouw,' zei Bep. 'Maar daar was hij nog helemaal niet aan toe, en dacht er ook niet over, omdat hij nog zo stoeit met de dood van moeder. Hij is ook bang om weer gehecht aan iemand te raken, en die persoon dan weer te moeten verliezen.'

'Ja, dat is ook waar,' zei tante Buurtje. 'Maar heus, het kan hem misschien opvrolijken. Hij kan gewoon met zijn nieuwe vrouw zo nu en dan het bos inwandelen, dat helpt ook.'

'U begrijpt het niet, tante Buurtje,' zei Bep. 'Hij wil in het bos wonen. Hij wil niet terug naar het dorp.'

'Jammer dan,' zei tante Buurtje. 'Ik hoop dat hij een goed leven heeft daar.'

Oma knikte. Tante Buurtje kwam meer en meer logeren bij oma en Bep, en besloot na een tijdje bij hen in te trekken. Drie vrouwen in een huis. Het was een echt vrouwenhuis, en het was er altijd erg gezellig. Maar Harm en Ko dachten er niet aan om terug te komen. Zo leefden de drie vrouwen vele jaren bij elkaar, en het was een reuze gezellige en goede tijd. Maar toen stierf oma plotseling, en niet lang daarna ook tante Buurtje. Nu was Bep helemaal alleen, en depressies begonnen haar aan te vliegen. Ze kon het allemaal maar moeilijk verwerken, en deze keer begon ze haar vader en Ko heel erg te missen. Ook zij ging naar het bos, en zocht de indianenstam op om daar te wonen. Ze hadden dan wel helemaal geen familie meer buiten elkaar, maar de indianen waren nu hun nieuwe familie. Toch kon Bep hier ook niet helemaal goed aarden. Ze voelde zich verscheurd tussen twee werelden. Ze leek steeds depressiever te worden, en er bleek geen kruid tegen opgewassen te zijn. Harm en Ko deden van alles om haar op te vrolijken, en ook de indianen. Op een dag werd ze naar de medicijn-man gebracht. Hij liet haar ruiken aan wat rode veren, en gaf haar een medicijn. Toen bond de medicijn-man de rode veren in haar haar.

'Het grote geheim is wat jij moet zien,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Ik zal jou op een reis nemen door het bos naar het grote geheim.'

Met goedvinden van Harm en Ko ging Bep op een bosreis met de medicijn-man. Ze gingen heel diep het bos in, langs meren en heuvels, tot een plaats waar de wilde dieren waren. Ook hier was een meertje. De medicijn-man smeerde haar in met zand, modder en klei. Ook smeerde hij zichzelf hiermee in, en nu zouden ze het meertje overzwemmen. Na een tijdje kwamen ze aan bij een struik die over het meertje hing. Aan de stam van de struik lag een kleine panter. De medicijn-man nam haar mee langs de panter. Vlakbij was een grot. De medicijn-man zei dat de panter de bewaker was van de grot. De medicijn-man nam haar diep in de grot. Ook in de grot was een meertje, en een spook-achtig geluid. Plotseling was er een verschijning. Het was erg licht.

'Waarom zijn jullie gekomen,' sprak de gestalte.
De medicijn-man maakte een buiging en zei : 'Dit is Bep. Zij heeft last van depressies, en ik dacht dat het haar zou helpen om het grote geheim te zien.'
'Depressies is de roep van het grote geheim,' zei de gestalte. De lichtende verschijning had een kap op, en een lang gewaad. Ook had de gestalte een speer. 'Ik waak over het grote geheim,' zei de gestalte, 'maar depressie is de sleutel. Ik waak over de zielen van het woord. Ook haar moeder is hier, haar oma, en haar tante. Nog veel meer zielen zijn hier. Deze depressie is haar verbinding met hen, maar die verbinding is verbroken. Ik ben de grote verbinder. Ik heb deze weg gemaakt. Laat haar dichterbij komen. Ik zal haar hart genezen, en haar hoofd tot rust brengen.' Toen vaagde de gestalte weg, en een lichtende weg verscheen voor hen. 'Kom mee,' zei de medicijn-man, en stapte op de weg. Het was een soort tunnel die toen begon te draaien. Bep werd duizelig. Droomde ze dit ? Voorzichtig stapte zij ook op de weg. Ze leken in een heel nieuw bos te komen. Bep voelde een band om haar hoofd komen, en stralen kwamen naar binnen om haar hart te voeden. 'Kom verder,' zei een stem. Het was een donkere, lage stem, die steeds lager werd. Ze zag weer een verschijning, dit keer zonder kap, die een miniatuur koe in zijn handen had. 'Dit is het woord,' zei de verschijning die daar in lange gewaden stond. Plotseling begon er melk uit de koe te komen. 'Woord, spreek,' zei de verschijning luid. Toen stond er een paal met een koeienkop op. De melk begon te stromen en te stromen, totdat Bep en de medicijnman er bijna in zwommen. 'Ik ben het grote geheim,' zei de koeienkop. 'Als het middernacht is, dan verander ik in een varkenskop, en dan is het grote geheim van jou,'

'Wacht eens even,' zei Bep. 'Hier heb ik een keer over gedroomd. Nee, dat kan niet waar zijn.'

'Wat bedoel je ?' vroeg de medicijn-man.

'Ik heb dit al weleens eerder gezien,' zei Bep. 'We moeten wachten tot middernacht, en dan zal de varkenskop spreken.'

'Precies,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Het is de strijd tussen hebzucht en honger, onthechting. Het is de stem van depressie, maar tegelijkertijd het medicijn.'

Ze bleven wachten tot het middernacht was. Toen veranderde de koeienkop in een varkenskop.
'Ik ben overwonnen,' zei de varkenskop. 'Willen jullie mijn geheim zien ? Het geheim wat ik al voor vele eeuwen verborgen heb gehouden ?'
Bep knikte, en stapte dichterbij. Toen ineens begon de varkenskop vuur te spuwen. Bep schrok, en rende naar achteren. De medicijn-man hield haar vast. 'Hij is het geheim aan het openbaren.' Weer spuwde de varkenskop vuur. 'Ik bedank jullie alvast voor het komen. Jullie hebben het welverdiend om dit te zien. Ruben, Simeon, Levi, Juda, Gad, Aser, Issaschar, Zebulon, Jozef, Benjamin, Dina, Efraim, Manasse ….' En weer spuwde de varkenskop vuur, en begon woest te worden. Zijn kop werd helemaal rood. 'Ik ben hier om deze zegels te verbreken !' riep de varkenskop. 'Dat is mijn taak, om de zegels der stammen te verbreken !'
'Niemand dan jullie zijn gekomen om dit geheim te zien,' zei de varkenskop toen rustig. Een gouden cirkel met daarop de stenen van de stammen begon rond te draaien en te branden. 'Deze gouden cirkelzaag, …. deze gouden cirkelzaag …' riep de varkenskop. En toen ontplofte de cirkel. Een tunnel verscheen voor hen. 'Ga de tunnel binnen,' zei de varkenskop nors. Bep en de medicijnman liepen haastig door. Achter hen werd een deur gesloten. 'Jullie willen het geheim toch zien ? Jullie willen het geheim toch zien ?' riep de varkenskop. 'Voor eeuwig is dit verborgen gebleven, maar jullie hebben overwonnen. 'De sleutel van depressies heeft jullie hier gebracht.' Achter de varkenskop verscheen een troon met een oude vrouw erop met lange vieze haren. 'Het geheim is gemanifesteerd in haar,' zei de varkenskop. De vrouw stond op, en liep op Bep en de medicijn-man af. Maar als door de bliksem werd ze teruggeslagen. 'Ik moet altijd op deze troon zitten,' jammerde ze. 'En dat omdat ik voor de hebzucht heb gekozen. Mijn varken is nu slechts een kop, om mij te verraden. Ik dacht altijd maar aan eten, en meer rijkdommen, om mijn macht te laten zegevieren. Maar mijn varken is tegen mij gekeerd nu, en heeft mijn schuilplaats verraden. Dom varken !' krijste ze. 'Ik zit nu voor altijd aan mijn stoel vastgeplakt. Ik heb de dorpen en de steden ontworpen, en ik heb ze groot gemaakt ! Dat is alles wat ik kan ! Dit is mijn troon, en ik ben aan het smelten !' jammerde ze. 'Ik heb de ring der stammen gecreeerd als het orakel van mijn toverboek waarmee ik de dorpen en steden heb behekst. Maar jullie hebben de ring verbroken !' krijste ze, terwijl ze vuur spuwde. 'Hoe meer vuur ik spuw, hoe meer ik smelt. Mijn woede is mij aan het verteren,' jammerde ze. 'Maar ik heb jouw familie, en ik zal ze meetrekken in mijn val,' krijste ze. Haar stem echode. Bep trilde even. Tot haar grote schrik begon de rode troon waarop de heks zat te bewegen, maar gelukkig schoot de troon weer terug als door elastiek.

'Ik weet je naam, ik weet waar je woont !' krijste de heks. 'Hier is het grote geheim : De stammen zijn de steden en de dorpen.' Toen viel de stoel om, en de heks begon weg te smelten. Weer begon een cirkel voor hen te draaien, maar deze begon langzaam weg te smelten. Toen begon een andere cirkel voor hun ogen te draaien en te krijsen, maar ook deze begon langzaam weg te smelten.
'Ik weet waar je woont !' werd er in de verte geroepen. Plotseling viel Bep neer. Gelukkig konden de armen van de medicijn-man haar opvangen. 'W...w...wie was dat ?' vroeg Bep.
'Je bent in de matrix van het bos,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Het is een raadsel wat je moet oplossen. Er is een hogere natuur, die het grote geheim is.'

'Ik ben te depressief,' snikt Bep. 'Ik kan niet goed nadenken. Het vermoeit me.' De medicijn-man nam haar in zijn armen. 'Juist door depressie, leegte en vermoeidheid wordt het raadsel opgelost,' zei hij. 'Niet door goed nadenken. Nadenken is een valstrik. Het labyrint moet namelijk overwonnen worden. Het is een gevecht.' Bep begint harder te snikken. 'Ik ben zo moe. Ik kan het niet meer volhouden. Alles slaat op me in.'
'Ik bescherm je,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Je moet je innerlijke vijanden overwinnen, en dit is de perfecte plaats. Het is nu of nooit. Juist in je depressies kun je de vijand een grote slag slaan.'
'Het vreet me aan, medicijn-man,' snikte Bep. 'Ik ben hier niet tegen opgewassen.'
'Haal rustig adem,' zei de medicijn-man. Hij leidde haar tot een stomend, kolkend meertje, waar hij haar onderdompelde en begon te wassen. Hij haalde zijn hand over haar voorhoofd. 'Zoveel spanning op je hoofd,' zei hij. Het meertje was heel warm. 'Dit is de overgang naar de dromenwereld, heel diep in het bos,' zei de medicijn-man. 'De planten, kruiden en bloemen zijn hier namelijk veel sterker, zijn veel meer zaaddragend, en veroorzaken daardoor een veld van hallucinaties. Ik spreek nu tot je door de hallucinaties, al voor een geruime tijd. Dit is ook een hallucinatie.'

'Wat wonderlijk,' zei Bep. 'Ik wil nog dieper het bos in.'
'Ja, maar verderop zijn de nachtmerries,' zei de medicijnman. 'De planten daar zijn wel nog sterker dan hier.'
'Interessant,' zei Bep. 'Nou, laten we dan maar hier blijven,' zei Bep.
'Ja,' zei de medicijn-man, 'want die nachtmerrie-hallucinaties doen net alsof je dan in de dorpen en de steden terecht komt, maar het is gewoon nog dieper in het bos.'
'Hmmm,' zei Bep. 'Dus u wilt zeggen dat toen wij in het dorp woonde, wij gewoon onder de invloed van zware planten waren dieper in het bos ?'
'Precies,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Je bent nu daarvan aan het afkicken, en dat is ook heel confronterend.'
'Ik ben bang,' zei Bep.
'Wij gaan daar alleen naartoe als wij een tegengif hebben genomen,' zegt de medicijn-man. 'Wij nemen dan soms stoffen van die zware planten, omdat in kleine hoeveelheden, in een veilig gebied, deze stoffen als medicijn kunnen werken. Maar als je er teveel van neemt, dan ga je dus echt dorpen en steden hallucineren als nachtmerries.'

'Was het overlijden van mijn moeder ook zo'n nachtmerrie-hallucinatie ?' vroeg Bep.
De medicijn-man knikte. 'Ja, en dat was een hele zware stof, die jarenlang in het lichaam kan blijven doorwerken.'
'En tante Buurtje en oma, hun overlijden, was dat hetzelfde ?' vroeg Bep.
De medicijn-man knikte weer. 'Ja, allemaal hetzelfde. Het is zware troep, waar veel te veel van genomen is, en je was in onveilig gebied. Het hangt daar in zware doseringen gewoon in de lucht, en dat werkt dag en nacht op je.'
Bep begint weer te snikken. 'Ik voelde me zo rot, en ik voel me nog steeds rot. Ik mis ze zo erg. Dus het was allemaal niet waar ? En waren zij zelf dan ook een hallucinatie, en bestonden zij dan helemaal niet ?'
De medicijn-man was even stil. 'Kind, je moet nog veel leren,' zei hij.
'Nee, ik wil het weten,' zei Bep in paniek. 'Bestonden moeder, oma en tante Buurtje echt, of waren het slechts hallucinaties ?'
'Ze bestonden in andere vormen,' zei de medicijn-man.
'Maar niet zoals je ze kende. Het waren dorpse hallucinaties, dus alles was dorps. Het begon misschien goed, maar het was een geladen nachtmerrie, wat betekent dat het je langzaam in een tragedie zou zuigen. Het zijn roofplanten, Bep. Het zijn hele gevaarlijke planten, die alleen wij als medicijn-mannen veilig kunnen gebruiken. Zoals ik al zei gaat dat in hele lage doseringen, en in veilig gebied. Dan dient het als een medicijn, en we gebruiken het in de oorlog en in de jacht in hogere doseringen. Het is dan goed gif. Wij moeten in ieder geval voldoende tegengif hebben om hier tegen bestand te zijn.'

'Wat voor tegengif is dat ?' vroeg Bep nieuwsgierig.
'Wij kweken daarvoor bepaalde spinnen,' zei de medicijnman, 'die wij dan melken voor hun gif. Maar ook dit gif mag niet genomen worden in te hoge doseringen.'
'Waarom niet ?' vroeg Bep.
'Omdat dat verlammingen kan brengen,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Ook heeft het in hoge doseringen hetzelfde effect als de roofplanten.'
'Klinkt eng,' zei Bep. 'Ik begin flink bang te worden van al deze dingen. Wat als er op dit moment iets goed fout zit, want u zei dat ik nu ook aan het hallucineren ben ?'
'Leer en ervaar,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Als je er telkens weer wat bijleert, dan zal dat je steeds meer rust geven.

Steeds meer zul je dan het grotere plaatje zien om je inzicht te geven.'
'Toch is het eng,' zei Bep. 'Wat als je het verkeerde erbij leert, en dat je zo dieper en dieper in de kronkels wordt geholpen ?'
'Wanneer de student klaar is om meer te leren, komt de leraar,' zei de medicijn-man.
'Ja, maar de leraar kan bedriegen,' zei Bep.
'Niet als de student blijft onderzoeken, open blijft staan, om tot de dieptes van de kennis te komen,' zei de medicijn-man.
'Nou, ik weet het nog zo net niet,' zei Bep. 'Sommigen zijn erg sluw. En een foutje is snel gemaakt.'
'Voorzichtigheid is de moeder van de waarheid,' glimlachte de medicijnman.
'Ik ben voorzichtig en bang,' zei Bep. 'Ik begin bijna paranoide te worden nu. Dit is echt heel eng.'
'Ik kan je helpen met wat tegengif van de speciale spinnen die wij kweken,' zei de medicijn-man.
'Wat voor spinnen zijn dat ?' vroeg Bep.
'Pajiet-spinnen,' zei de medicijnman. 'Die zijn heel zeldzaam, maar worden al sinds eeuwen in het geheim gekweekt door onze stam. Het gif breekt heel snel de andere giffen af.'

'Ja, ja,' zei Bep. 'Maar kom je zo niet in een andere hallucinatie terecht ? Leven wij niet allemaal in hallucinaties ?'
'Slimme meid,' glimlachte de medicijn-man. 'In wezen zijn er alleen goede en slechte hallucinaties, ja. Alles is gebaseerd op hallucinaties.'
'Lekker ingewikkeld,' zei Bep. 'Dus misschien besta ik helemaal niet, of in een andere vorm.'
'Je moet hierin je pad leren te vinden, Bep,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Wil je het tegengif ?'
'Ja, doe maar,' zei Bep. 'Ik heb toch niets te verliezen.'
Snel spoot de medicijn-man iets in haar arm, en het leek wel alsof er nog iets in haar werd gespoten, als in haar arm buiten haar arm. Bep werd direct wakker alsof er een waas van haar ogen was weggetrokken. Alles was heel helder nu, en ze zag de medicijnman met haar arm in zijn hand. Hij had daar net iets ingespoten. Bep haalde diep adem.
'Interessant,' zei ze. 'Dus we hadden beiden dezelfde hallucinatie ?'
'Ja, ik ben in verschillende lagen van de natuur,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Ik heb leren dubbel-leven, en leren switchen.'

'Interessant,' zei Bep. 'En dat kun jij me ook leren ?'
'Natuurlijk,' zei de medicijn-man. Samen gingen ze terug naar het kamp, en Bep had natuurlijk veel te vertellen. Ze voelde zichzelf al een stuk beter nu.
Bep werd steeds nieuwsgieriger naar die planten dieper in het bos. De medicijn-man vertelde haar dat het vlees-planten waren, die op geslachtsdelen leken. Zij die onder de bedwelming hiervan kwamen zouden zelfs hallucinaties van geboorte kunnen krijgen, waardoor ze al hun herinneringen verloren. Juist omdat Bep's depressies na een tijdje sterker dan ooit terugkwamen wilde ze hier zo graag naartoe. De medicijn-man kreeg hier hoogte van en waarschuwde haar. Hij zei dat het alleen maar erger zou worden als ze daar naartoe zou gaan. Hij vertelde haar ook dat ze juist daar vandaan kwam, en dat ze daarom zo'n verschrikkelijk leven had gehad. Maar Bep wilde terug, want haar depressies waren erger dan ooit tevoren. De medicijn-man wist dat hij iets moest doen. Hij kon daar wel naartoe met voldoende tegengif, omdat hij een volleerd medicijn-man was, maar Bep was onervaren. Bep kon niet meer wachten. Ze zei dat er niets meer te verliezen was, en dat het toch niet meer erger kon worden. Bep begon ook aan alles te twijfelen, juist omdat het zo slecht met haar ging. De medicijn-man bleef zeggen dat afkicken een heel zwaar proces was, en dat het soms wel erger was dan ooit tevoren. Dat hoorde bij het proces. Het was een heel zwaar gevecht. 'Ik kan het niet meer aan, medicijn-man,' zei Bep.

'Volhouden, meid,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Blijf studeren, en voordat je het weet kun je daar samen met mij naartoe.'
Maar Bep kon niet meer. Ze nam dezelfde dosering tegengif die de medicijn-man had voorgeschreven, en rende op een nacht het bos in. Ze bleef maar rennen en rennen. Na een tijdje was ze omringd door prachtige struiken van vlees die inderdaad op een soort geslachtsdelen leken. De draden waren heel dun, en bovenop was een soort gezwollen vruchtbaar deel met een prachtige roze kleur. Hier stroomde sap uit, waarvan Bep wist dat het een heel gevaarlijk sap was. Even stond ze als aan de grond genageld. Ze wist dat ze nu een heel groot risico nam. Eigenlijk was het nog helemaal geen tijd om hier naartoe te gaan. Plotseling voelde ze wat springen in haar hoofd. Het sap leek binnen te stromen. Ze begon te krijsen en te huilen. 'Ik kan niet meer,' huilde ze. 'Waarom martelen jullie me zo ?'
Van achteren was ze door een pijl geraakt. Toen viel ze bewusteloos. Achter haar stond de medicijn-man die haar op zijn schouder nam. Dat was op het nippertje. Hij bracht haar veilig naar het kamp. Na een tijdje werd ze heel zwakjes wakker. 'Oh, het was prachtig,' zei ze, terwijl ze nog steeds onder bedwelming was. 'Maar toen overweldigde me het, en ik werd zo bang.'

'Je was nog niet klaar, meid,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Ik heb je op het nippertje kunnen redden. Ze hadden je bijna meegesleurd in hun stroom.'
'Het was zo spannend,' zuchtte Bep.
'Nee, het was gevaarlijk,' zei de medicijn-man.
'Maar het was zo prachtig,' zei Bep, 'zo adembenemend.'
'Bep, wacht jij nou maar rustig totdat het tijd is dat we daar samen naartoe kunnen gaan. Ik moet je nog enkele dingen uitleggen, en dan ben je klaar. Je hebt nu alvast even een voorproefje gehad, maar dat was niet de bedoeling. Het had je je leven kunnen kosten. Dit zijn geen dingen om mee te spelen,' zei de medicijn-man.
'Ik weet dat je bezorgd bent,' zei Bep. 'Ik weet dat je de waarheid spreekt, maar ik kon niet meer. Ik moest het gewoon zien. De drang in mij was te sterk. Het was als gekrijs in mijn hoofd.'
'Je moet nog veel leren, Bep,' zei de medicijn-man. Bep knikte. Ze had nu wonderlijke dromen die haar leken voor te bereiden. Maar Bep besefte niet dat juist de planten van vlees dit allemaal gesimuleerd hadden. Ze hadden haar alreeds gevangen, en gaven haar hallucinaties alsof ze nog veilig bij de medicijn-man was. Iedereen van het kamp begon zich steeds vreemder en gemener tegen Bep te gedragen, ook de medicijn-man. Bep had nog steeds niets door. Voor haar was dit een aanzet om weer terug te gaan naar de vlees-planten, niet wetende dat ze allang weer onder hun macht was. Ze had het gevoel dat iedereen haar haatte, dus ze zei tegen haarzelf : 'Kom ik om, dan kom ik om.' Op een nacht begon ze weer te rennen. Ze wilde terug naar de vlees-planten. Ze zag de prachtige planten in de verte die naar haar lonkten. Ze zakte langzaam in een rivier omringd met de meest wonderlijke en prachtige vlees-planten. Dit keer had ze geeneens tegengif genomen. Ze verlangde hier zo naar. Langzaam zonk ze in de rivier, tot aan haar nek. De rivier was vol van het zaad van de wonderlijke planten, en langzaam begon ze te drinken. Ze wilde hallucineren om van deze depressies af te komen. Ze voelde zich wonderlijk.

Ze was het gepraat van de medicijn-man zat. Ze wilde leven. Ze wilde genieten van de prachtige natuur. Ze wilde niet naar school. Er was al genoeg tegen haar gesproken in haar leven. Ze was er moe van. De medicijn-man was niet meer wie hij was, en de anderen ook niet.

In het kamp in de werkelijkheid was inmiddels grote paniek, omdat Bep verdwenen was, en maar niet terugkwam. De medicijn-man vermoede dat ze naar de vlees-planten was gegaan. Hij besloot er naartoe te gaan met voldoende tegengif om te zien of er sporen van haar waren. Diep in de velden van de vlees-planten vond hij haar. Ze lag daar op de grond. Hij wist dat ze zo had geworsteld met depressies en kon haar zo goed begrijpen. Maar toch wist hij dat scholing het beste was voor haar. Ze moest afkicken en tot de waarheid komen. Met wat medicijnen kon hij haar terugbrengen tot de werkelijkheid, en ze werd huilend wakker, heel zwak. Ze kon niet praten, maar wel een beetje lopen. Heel voorzichtig liep hij met haar terug naar het kamp. Ko nam haar direct in zijn armen.
Ze gebruikte vuile taal, omdat ze nog steeds dacht aan wat zij haar hadden aangedaan in haar hallucinaties. De medicijn-man maakte haar duidelijk dat ze in een simulatie-realiteit was gekomen door de hallucinaties van de vlees-planten, die ook het kamp hadden gesimuleerd en alle kamp-bewoners, als gevolg van haar tochtje. Toen hield ze Ko stevig vast. Ze was blij dat ze gered was. Het had ook anders kunnen aflopen, want soms verslonden de vlees-planten hen die tot hen kwamen. Waarschijnlijk had het tegengif haar gered, en het feit dat ze toch al wat kennis had.

Bep had van haar fouten geleerd. Ze wilde nu goed bij de les blijven. Na een lange periode kon ze dan eindelijk met de medicijn-man mee naar de planten van vlees. Ze keek haar ogen uit, en de medicijn-man liet haar vele geheimen zien. 'Deze planten zijn heilig,' zei de medicijn-man. 'Eens in de zoveel tijd kiezen ze iemand uit die hen goed heeft behandeld, en die veel van hen afweet, en zo iemand zal dan voor altijd tussen hen kunnen wonen. Zij wonen meestal dieper in de velden van de vlees-planten, daar waar je niet zomaar kunt komen.'

'Interessant, dat lijkt me wel wat,' zei Bep. 'Ik vind het hier prachtig.'

'Zelfs ik ben nog niet eens zo ver,' grapte de medicijn-man.

Bep hoorde heldere stemmen in haar hoofd, waarvan de medicijn-man zei dat het de stemmen van de vlees-planten waren. Ze hadden haar op het oog. Ze wilden met haar communiceren. Ze wilden haar onderwijzen.

Ze vertelden haar van een zee die achter de velden van vlees-planten lag, en ze nodigden haar uit daar naartoe te gaan. Zij moest hiervoor de medicijn-man achter haar laten. Ze moest over een zanderig pad, en de planten hier begonnen steeds wonderlijker te worden. Er waren allerlei soorten roze lichten in haar hoofd, als stralen-kransen. Ze vertelden haar dat zij een uitverkorene was. De zee stond vol met prachtige planten van vlees. Ze communiceerden door stoom en een soort vuur, en allerlei sappen. Sommige van die sappen leken wel kokend, en die werden hier en daar uitgespoten. Bep kreeg een heel warm gevoel. Het leek alsof delen in haar hoofd aan elkaar verbonden werden. Ze had ineens veel minder hoofdpijn, alsof er bruggen in haar hoofd werden gebouwd. De planten van vlees zeiden dat ze in haar hoofd leefden. Deze zee was de zee van communicatie. Ze wilden haar genezen en voorbereiden op haar taak. Bep begon te lachen. Haar depressies begonnen weg te smelten. Alles binnenin haar bleek te werken door sappen en vuren, en alles binnenin haar was gemaakt van vlees-planten, als een grote puzzel die in elkaar gezet moest worden. Bep was in een gelukzalig gevoel. Er borrelde zoveel in haar op. Hier kon zij verder studeren, en de planten van vlees zouden haar alle eilanden van de zee laten zien, en haar al hun geheimen vertellen. Dit waren tijden van grote genezing, en van kennis. Een rood vuur scheen bezit van haar te nemen, en allerlei rode sappen, ook kokende rode sappen die voortspoten. Verder was het een heel tropisch klimaat. Deze planten hadden heel wat te vertellen. Wat er allemaal verkeerd was gegaan, en wat er allemaal moest gebeuren. Bep begon steeds meer van haar verleden te vergeten, als door een nieuwe geboorte. Toch herinnerde ze ook dingen, maar dan op een hele andere manier. Deze dingen hadden waarde, maar waren in de verkeerde vormen tot haar gekomen. Nu kon alles recht gezet worden zoals het was. Ze had zicht gekregen in de nacht. Het was het vuur van de vleesplanten die haar hoofd had verlicht. Dit waren allerlei soorten vuren, die ook werkten door allerlei sappen. Weelderige struiken namen haar mee door de zee, waardoor alles begon te duizelen in haar. Alles werd gemixt in haar hoofd, en nieuwe vormen kwamen voort. Het was als een pretpark in de zee. De zee-planten fluisterden in haar, en trokken haar naar de eilanden.

In dit proces begon ze haar identiteit te verliezen, tot het punt dat ze niet meer wist of ze nu een man of een vrouw was. Ze voelde zichzelf als een oude man. In de verte leek het wel alsof ze Ko zag staan, haar vader, en de medicijn-man, en ze miste hen, maar het leek wel alsof dat van een lang vervlogen tijd was, alsof ze niet meer bestonden. Plotseling kroop er een gevoel van depressie op haar, en de gestaltes bleken weg te vagen. Ze had heimwee, maar de drangen van de vlees-planten waren te groot. Waar trokken ze haar naartoe ? Het leek wel alsof ze in een grote woestijn was aangekomen, alsof ze iets heel groots moest voorttrekken, als een kar door de woestijn. Ze voelde zich oud, als een oude man, als Kain. 'Kom tot het land Nod, als een oase in deze woestijn,' werd er gefluisterd. Ze wist niet meer of ze de planten van vlees nog wel kon vertrouwen. Ze voelde zich als een slaaf, en dan in meerdere dimensies tegelijk, want ze voelde zich ook een slaaf van een schip. Ze wilde overboord springen, maar ze was geketend. Ze moest roeien. Ze was een roei-slaaf. 'Oh, waar ben ik toch in terecht gekomen,' jammerde ze. 'Ik heb waarschijnlijk veel te veel van die troep genomen. Het is zware drugs. Oh, waar ben ik toch aan begonnen. Ik ben al tijden mezelf niet. Ik heb er al veel te lang mee lopen experimenteren. Dit is een 'bad trip,' een 'bad trip,' girl. Wat heb ik mezelf toch aangedaan.' Ze hoorde gelach in haar hoofd, alsof alles aan het scheuren was in haar hersenen. 'Je wilde het grote geheim toch zien ?' lachte de stem in haar hoofd.

Plotseling vaagde het allemaal weg, en zag ze de medicijn-man voor haar staan. Hij sloeg een arm om haar heen, en zei : 'Eindelijk heb je dan het grote geheim gezien.' Toen liepen ze samen terug naar het kamp.

Hermien van de Straaten kwam thuis. Haar vriend zat op de bank een krant te lezen. Ze schonk koffie in voor haarzelf en haar vriend, en ging naast hem zitten. 'Wat ben je aan het lezen ?' vroeg ze.
'Oh, niets,' zei haar vriend. 'Je weet wel, het is daadwerkelijk niets. Ik ben hier gewoon weer eens mijn tijd aan het doden.'
'Ik weet het,' zei Hermien. 'Zal het ooit nog eens anders worden. Ik ben een boek aan het lezen. Zal ik het je eens laten zien ?' Ze haalde een boek uit haar tas en gaf het aan haar vriend. Hij bladerde het eens rustig door. 'Interessant, Hermien,' zei hij. 'Ik wil het ook wel lezen als je het uit hebt.' Hermien glimlachte. Ze stond op na een tijdje en schonk nog wat koffie in. Midden in de nacht werden ze wakker. Er stond een mannetje voor hen, met een puntmutsje met wat belletjes. Het leek wel op een klein narretje. 'Ik ben Kraak,' zei het mannetje. 'Doe drie wensen, maar ze moeten wel voor jezelf zijn of voor je huis.'
'Ik zou me wel wat beter willen voelen,' zei Hermien slaperig. Ze was zo moe dat ze weer in slaap viel, en haar vriend was alweer in slaap gevallen. De volgende ochtend sneeuwde het, en Hermien voelde zich vrolijk en warm. Ze had geen moeite met opstaan, zoals ze dat eerst wel had.

De nacht erop was het mannetje er weer. 'Je mag nog twee wensen doen,' zei het mannetje. 'Oh, Kraak,' zei Hermien, 'ik zou graag een wat betere relatie willen hebben met mijn vriend. Het is al wel goed, maar het kan veel beter.' De dag erop werden ze allebei blij wakker, en lagen een hele lange tijd in elkaars armen, wat ze eigenlijk nooit echt lang deden. 'Hermien,' zei Ewout, 'ik voel me ineens zo anders, zoveel beter.'

'Het komt door dat mannetje,' zei Hermien. Maar Ewout kon zich er bijna niets meer van herinneren. Ze hadden nu eigenlijk alles wat ze nodig hadden, en waren tevreden. Buiten scheen de zon in de sneeuw, en Hermien schonk weer koffie in. Koffie was altijd goed geweest tegen depressies, maar nu was de lucht zo helder. Die dag fietsten ze samen door het bos, maar ineens werd Ewout van zijn fiets afgeduwd. Een speer vloog dwars door Hermien heen, en ze viel bloedend op de grond. 'Grijp hem,' zei een luide stem. Ewout stond op en keek recht in de ogen van een groep wilden. Hij werd vastgegrepen en dieper in het bos gesleurd. Hij werd in een hut geduwd waar allerlei uitgehongerde mannen zaten. 'Welkom,' zei een oude man.

'Wat is dit hier ?' vroeg Ewout.
Een van de mannen werd gegrepen en uit de hut gesleurd. Buiten stond er een vrouw opgedost met veren. 'De kannibaalse bruid,' zei de oude man.
Ewout schrok wakker. Hij greep naar Hermien, maar die was er niet. 'Och, natuurlijk niet,' dacht Ewout. 'De relatie is verbroken. Ik ben een alleenstaand man.' Ewout was blij dat de relatie was verbroken, want Hermien was een verschrikkelijk mens, zeer wreed, ongevoelig, onbetrouwbaar en onberekenbaar. Hij was beter af zonder haar. Toen Ewout door een stukje bos naar zijn werk fietste zag hij een stel kinderen een ander kind slaan met stokken. Ewout sprong direkt van zijn fiets af en nam het kind in bescherming. Het kind rilde helemaal. Na een paar woorden gezegd te hebben tegen de andere kinderen nam hij het kind mee naar huis en belde zijn baas dat hij wat later zou komen. Hij legde het aan zijn baas uit, maar die zei direkt : 'Ach, neem er maar een dag vrij voor.'
Jonas heette het kind. Het was een weeskind, en het kind durfde niet goed terug naar het weeshuis. Het was er verschrikkelijk. Het kind rilde nog steeds, en Ewout deed een deken om hem heen, en gaf het kind wat te drinken.

'Lees je graag ?' vroeg Ewout.
'Ja,' zei Jonas.
'Oh, ik heb boven een hele kast vol met boeken. Kijk er maar eens tussen. Je mag voorlopig wel hier blijven, dan bel ik het weeshuis er wel over op,' zei Ewout.
'Van wat voor boeken houd je het meest ?' vroeg Ewout.
'Indianenboeken,' zei het kind. Ewout liet de boekenkist aan het kind zien. Er zaten veel indianenboeken tussen.
Ewout kreeg een andere vriendin : Jeiske. Ze was een stuk aardiger dan Hermien, maar ook aan deze relatie kwam snel een eind. Toen kwam er Saskia, toen Sjanine, maar het was allemaal niet blijvend. Jonas werd meer en meer als een zoon voor Ewout, en eigenlijk kon Ewout niet meer zonder hem, en besloot hem te adopteren. Hij had echt dat fantastische vadergevoel, maar hij miste een vrouw in zijn leven, en Jonas miste een moeder.
Tundra was een vrouw die Ewout wel zag zitten. Ze was lief en behulpzaam maar toch ook een beetje vreemd, alsof ze een duister verleden had. Ze kon goed koken, en was een uitzonderlijk goede verhalenverteller, dus ook Jonas was direkt erg dol op haar. Ze had haar eigen kamer in het huis. Ze wilde 's nachts graag alleen zijn. Ze was erg wisselend van karakter. Ze hield van foto's maken en fietsen, en op een dag nam ze Jonas mee in het bos. Ze zou proberen wat foto's te maken van dieren die in het bos woonden. Na een tijdje kwamen ze de kinderen van het weeshuis tegen. 'Zo Jonas, heb je eindelijk je moeder gevonden ?' riepen ze. Ze gingen in een groep rondom de fietsen staan. Tundra werd een beetje boos, maar de kinderen duwden haar in een bosje en Jonas namen ze mee. Ze brachten hem naar een hut in het bos. 'Zo, we zullen jou eens uithongeren met alleen af en toe wat bramen, brood en water,' zei een van de kinderen. 'Je bent een verwend ding.' Ze hielden hem opgesloten in de hut, en gaven hem haast geen voedsel. Na een paar weken was hij helemaal uitgehongerd. Net op tijd vond Ewout hem, nam hem mee naar huis en belde het weeshuis erover op. De kinderen kregen strenge straffen.

Tundra was een soort moeder voor Jonas, maar Jonas wist dat hij zijn vader hard nodig had. Een tijd lang durfde hij niet zonder zijn vader naar buiten. Ook Tundra had soms moeite om naar buiten te gaan vanwege het voorval. Ze zouden in ieder geval niet meer in het bos komen. De relatie tussen Tundra en Ewout werd steeds stabieler, en Jonas was er erg gelukkig mee. Voor hem waren Tundra en Ewout de perfecte ouders. Hij had het zich niet beter kunnen voorstellen. Op een nacht had Ewout weer een droom : Een spin had haar partner gevonden, en na de geslachtsdaad vrat ze haar partner op. De volgende ochtend vertelde hij het aan Tundra. Tundra had dit gevoel overgehouden aan een vorige relatie. Ook Ewout kende dit gevoel natuurlijk. In zijn ogen was Hermien die spin.

'Maar we hebben het overleefd,' zei Ewout, 'of er is gewoon leven na de dood.'
'Weet je wat kannibalen geloven ?' zei Tundra. 'Dat wanneer ze iemand hebben opgegeten dan hebben ze die kracht overgenomen, dan hebben ze de ziel van die persoon overgenomen. Zo voelen ze zich machtiger in de strijd om te overleven.'
'Ja, dat heb ik ook eens gelezen,' zei Ewout. 'Maar ik kan jou ook wel opvreten, maar dan van liefde.' Tundra glimlachte. 'Dus ik ben een soort gebakje voor jou ?'
'Veel lekkerder,' zei Ewout. 'En ben ik dan een kannibaal ?'
'Ik denk het wel, Ewout,' grapte Tundra. 'Ik moet nu zeker voor je oppassen.'
'Ach, er is nog hoop voor ons,' zei Ewout. 'We kunnen een banketbakkerij beginnen.'

'Dus eigenlijk is de natuur iets heel moois, als je het op die manier bekijkt,' zei Tundra. 'Het is om ervan te leren.'
'Juist,' zei Ewout.
'Dus, dan ben ik jouw kannibaalse bruid ?' vroeg Tundra.
'Als je het mij vraagt wel,' zei Ewout. 'Maar dan op een hele andere manier. Jij kan al dat nare weer recht krijgen.'
'Wat kun jij toch rare verhalen vertellen,' grapte Tundra.
'Nou, jij kan er ook wat van,' lachte Ewout.
'Ik heb het heel moeilijk gehad,' zei Tundra. 'Maar sinds ik jou ken ben ik gelukkig. En bij Jonas heb ik dat echte moedergevoel.'
Ewout zette de t.v. aan. Er was een oorlogsfilm op, en op de andere zender een praat programma. 'Laat Jonas maar even naar een kinderprogramma kijken,' zei Tundra.
Ewout schakelde over. Tundra en Ewout gingen in de achterkamer even wat koffie drinken, terwijl Jonas t.v. ging kijken. 'Ewout,' fluisterde Tundra. 'Er zijn zoveel kinderen zoals Jonas eerst was : Ongelukkig in een weeshuis, ongeliefd, gebroken, trauma op trauma, en er lijkt geen einde aan te komen. We hebben een groot huis. Waarom zouden we geen tweede kind adopteren ?'
'Goed idee,' zei Ewout. 'Ik zou zelfs mijn huis wel willen uitbouwen om zoveel mogelijk kinderen onder te brengen.

Maar de kinderen moeten het dan zelf ook willen.'
Met een telefoontje was het snel gedaan. Ewout en Tundra mochten een kijkje komen nemen op het weeshuis om over hun plannen te vertellen. Sommige kinderen waren enthousiast. Anderen niet. Drie kinderen wilden het weleens op proef proberen.
'Jaap Edema, Gerout van Huizen en Liesbeth van Tongeren.' Maar het werd geen succes. Ze konden niet met Jonas opschieten en ze waren vernielzuchtig. Ewout besloot wat dieren in huis te brengen, zodat Jonas niet zo alleen was. Maar naarmate Jonas ouder werd werd hij steeds stiller en trok zich steeds meer op zijn kamer terug. Toen hij twintig was trouwde hij met een meisje, maar het huwelijk was binnen drie jaar kapot, en hij kwam gebroken weer thuis. Ewout en Tundra wisten altijd al wel dat het een kannibaalse bruid was waarmee hij was getrouwd. Ze hadden hem nog gewaarschuwd, maar zonder resultaat. Hij was weer een ervaring rijker, en kreeg zijn oude kamer terug. Snel had hij weer een vriendin, en toen nog een, maar nooit koos hij echt de gemakkelijksten uit. Ewout hoopte dat hij ooit iemand zou vinden als Tundra. Maar op een dag raakte Jonas betrokken bij een auto-ongeluk en raakte verlamd. Het leven was als een kannibaalse bruid voor hem, en Ewout en Tundra waren er kapot van. Ze hadden gehoopt dat hij gelukkig zou worden, en dat hij zijn leven zou kunnen opbouwen, maar het was nu een afhankelijk kasplantje. Na een paar maanden stierf Jonas als gevolg van het auto-ongeluk. Ewout en Tundra waren weer alleen. Het was moeilijk, maar ze hadden elkaar. Weer gingen ze naar het weeshuis om te kijken of ze een nieuw kind konden adopteren, maar niemand was zoals Jonas. Toch wilden ze het wel met een nieuw kind proberen dat wel een beetje op Jonas leek. Het jongetje heette Huib. Maar Huib was ernstig ziek en stierf na een paar maanden, en weer waren Ewout en Tundra alleen. Het leek alsof de kannibaalse bruid weer had toegeslagen. Het leven was zo fragiel als een nachtvlinder.

Ewout keek naar buiten, en keek naar een bij gaande van bloem tot bloem. Ook zag hij wat vliegjes in een spinnenweb, en zelfs een vlinder. Ook hier zat een betekenis in. Ook dit kon omgedraaid worden. Tundra zat achter hem en had haar armen om hen heengeslagen. Hij miste Jonas en ook Huib, maar Tundra was zoveel dichterbij ineens om al die lege plekken op te vullen. Het leek alsof er in zijn binnenste broodjes werden belegd en opgewarmd. Het was een manier om dichter naar elkaar toe te groeien. Ewout had een brok in zijn keel. Ja, hij was echt depressief, maar Tundra was zijn lichtpuntje. 'Zoveel is er van ons gegeten,' zei Ewout, 'en nu eten wij elkaar door de liefde, als een weg uit deze woeste wereld.' Tundra knikte.

Midden in de nacht werd Ewout wakker van een droom. Hij droomde dat er een nachtvlinder op zijn hart zat. Hij miste Jonas en Huib zo, en brak in tranen uit. Ook Tundra werd wakker en troostte hem. Ze hield hem in zijn armen totdat hij rustig werd. 'Heus,' zei ze, 'eens zullen we alles terugkrijgen. Er is leven na de dood.'

And you will fly,
On the wings of today,
And you will be going back to remember yesterday,
And you will fly,
On the wings of love, today,
And you will be going back to remember yesterday,
Yes, you will fly high,
On the winds of love, today,
And you will be growing up to be free from yesterday

Henry ter Zand was een voetballer van het eerste team van zijn stad. Vaak kwam er een motorbende kijken, die de voetballers vaak uitscholden voor voetbroeders en ei-verkopers. Henry werd er altijd een beetje misselijk van. Op een dag besloot hij de motorbende eens te bezoeken. Hij had zich anders aangekleed zodat hij niet meer op zichzelf leek. Hij werd hartelijk ontvangen, en men leidde hem rond in het gebouw. Er waren wat oude mensen bij, misschien ouders van de motorrijders, en een vrouw die een soort bediende was deed het woord. Maar plotseling werd hij herkend door een van de motorrijders, en Henry moest maken dat hij weg kwam. Het uitschelden was sindsdien wel een stuk minder ineens, en op een dag werd Henry uitgenodigd om weer eens bij hen op bezoek te komen. De motorrijders hadden er spijt van dat ze hem zo rot hadden behandeld. Al gauw werd Henry goede vrienden met hen, wat ook de bedoeling was. Op een dag las een van de motorrijders voor uit een vreemd jongensboek. Het ging over de roodbil stam, een groep wilden die in de bossen leefden. De roodbil stam deed veel aan voetbal, maar er werden nogal wrede dingen gedaan met de verliezers. 'Het spijt ons, Henry,' zei de motorrijder, 'we hebben ons inderdaad nogal kinderachtig gedragen.' Eric Rouwmeester heette een van de motorrijders, en had vroeger nog bij Henry in de klas gezeten. Eric knipoogde naar hem. Aan het einde van het voorlezen sprak Eric hem nog even persoonlijk aan. 'Heb je zin om een keer mee te gaan samen naar het bos ?' vroeg Eric. 'Dan kunnen we wat oude herinneringen ophalen.' Henry vond dat best.

Een paar avonden later waren ze samen in het bos. Zo deden ze dat vroeger ook. 'Ja, eigenlijk raar,' zei Eric. 'We gingen beiden naar een andere school later, en het contact was verbroken, terwijl we toch altijd goede vrienden waren.' Henry knikte. In het bos kwamen ze een verwilderde vrouw tegen. Ze had wat rode verf achter op haar broek. 'Ja, verfschieten,' zei ze. Het bleek een spel te zijn.
Na een tijdje kwamen ze bij een ravijn aan. Ze hadden hier een goed uitzicht. 'Herinner je je Klaas nog ?' vroeg Eric. 'Heeft zichzelf stukgereden tegen een boom. En Ilse, ook dood.' Henry knikte. Ja, dat had hij ook gehoord. Hij was er kapot van. Klaas en Ilse waren ook goede vrienden van hem. 'Maar ja, dood is dood,' zei Eric. 'Je kunt ze niet terughalen.' Daar kwam de vrouw weer langs. Ditmaal had ze nog meer rode strepen op haar lichaam. 'Zo, je hebt het druk,' zei Eric.

'Ja,' zei de vrouw. 'Een feestje, maar een leuk feest.'
'Gelukkig,' zei Eric. Henry grinnikte. 'Hey, is dat Riet niet ?' zei Henry. 'Riet van de Kaars.'
'Ja, verhip, je hebt gelijk,' zei Eric. 'Hey, Riet.' Maar Riet was al weer verderop. 'Laten we er naartoe gaan,' zei Eric. Even later vonden ze haar. 'Hoe gaat het met je, Riet, ken je ons nog, Eric en Henry.'
'Het gaat goed, en met jullie ?' vroeg Riet. Ze deed een beetje afstandelijk ineens. Riet kon vroeger moeilijk meekomen op school en had vaak het gevoel dat ze er niet echt bijhoorde. Ze ging vroegtijdig naar een andere school. Na een tijdje brak het ijs een beetje. 'Zeg hebben jullie zin om mee te gaan naar het feestje ? Het is mijn feestje,' zei Riet. Even later zaten ze bij haar thuis met de andere feestgangers. Ze had een groot huis. 'Blijven jullie slapen ?' vroeg ze.
Ach ja, waarom niet, dachten Eric en Henry. Er werd even wat gebeld, en al snel was het okay. Midden in de nacht stond Eric op en ging op zijn blote voeten naar buiten. Het was een huis in het bos. Hij vond het geweldig om alleen in de natuur te zijn. Na een tijdje lopen kwam hij bij een meer aan, deed zijn kleren uit en gleed in het water. Het water was een beetje koel, maar verder was het warm weer. Heerlijk vond hij dat, om in de vrije natuur te zwemmen, en helemaal alleen. Maar later merkte dat er ook een andere man en een vrouw aan het zwemmen waren, aan de overkant van het meer. Het waren mysterieuze mensen. Eric groette hen beleefd. 'Zo, wat doe jij zo laat hier,' vroeg de man. Eric vertelde dat hij niet kon slapen, en het fijn vond alleen in de natuur te zijn. 'En jullie ?' vroeg Eric.

'We hebben nergens om naartoe te gaan,' zei de vrouw. 'We hebben ons huis verloren, en nu leven we in de natuur.' Even later lieten ze hem het hol zien waarin ze woonden. 'Fantastisch,' zei Eric. 'Ik zou ook wel in zo'n hol willen wonen.' Maar ineens greep de man een pistool en richtte het op Eric. 'Meekomen,' zei hij. Eric werd ergens in een kooi gestopt gemaakt van takken en touw. 'Wat gaan jullie met me doen ?' vroeg Eric.
'Weten we nog niet,' zei de vrouw. Eric zag dat de vrouw rode vlekken op haar bil had. Toen lieten ze hem alleen. Na een paar uur was Eric nog steeds alleen, en begon te roepen. Na een tijdje sleurden de man en de vrouw de kooi naar het meer en duwden hem erin. Eric schreeuwde nog uit alle macht, maar niets hielp.

De vermissing van Eric kwam hard aan bij Henry. Ook Riet was er kapot van. Pas maanden later vonden ze hem, verdronken. Ook de man en de vrouw die het op hun geweten hadden werden gevonden. Het bleek dat ze onder in de grond nog meer vermiste personen vasthielden, maar die leefden nog steeds.
Henry keek naar Riet. Ze leek veel op de vrouw die het gedaan had. Ze bleken tweelingzussen te zijn. De man bleek lid te zijn van de motorbende.
Op een dag werd er weer uit het vreemde jongensboek voorgelezen. Het was een soort winterboek. De roodbil stam plantte zich op een vreemde manier voort. De vrouwen legden kleine eitjes die met hun voeten uitgebroed moesten worden, anders zou het vruchtje doodgaan. Zij die uit het ei kwamen waren piepklein, als kaboutertjes, en ze hadden nog steeds een lijmachtige gel over zich heen, het vlies-ei, wat later als ze opgegroeid waren verder uitgebroed moest worden, anders zouden ze doodgaan. Dit moest gedaan worden door hun moeder of door hun partner. In hun jonge jaren waren ze als varkens, maar naarmate ze ouder werden verloren ze die kwaliteiten. Het voedsel waarvan ze leefden was rode varkens. Hun vijanden : langbek krokodillen.

Henry begreep niet waarom er nu weer uit het jongensboek voortgelezen moest worden.

Onze kapitein is een jongen, zei de motorrijder. Hij heeft dit boek geschreven, en het is onze bijbel.
'En waar is die jongen ?' vroeg Henry.
'Vraag niets,' zei de motorrijder.
Henry besloot er niet meer naartoe te gaan. Maar toch keerde hij weer terug. Alsof iets zijn interesse had. Op een nacht werd Henry wakker. Er stond een jongetje voor hem in middeleeuwse koninklijke kleding. 'Ik ben het geheim van alle tijden, ik ben het poppetje waar alle paarden op rijden, waar alle rozen om strijden.'
'Wat kan ik voor je doen ?' vroeg Henry. Maar het jongetje was alweer verdwenen. De nacht erop was het jongetje erweer. Ditmaal had hij een boek bij zich. 'Dit is mijn bijbel,' zei hij. Op de kaft stond 'De Roodbil Stam' met een plaatje waarop wilden voetbalden. De bal was een leren zak die een beetje op een doodshoofd leek.
Weer vroeg Henry : 'Wat kan ik voor je doen.' Het jongetje gaf hem het boek en verdween. Henry begon direkt te lezen. Het was een boek over de middeleeuwen, over wrede praktijken, die uiteindelijk ophielden, maar ze waren nog steeds in de lucht, en kwamen verkleed als andere dingen.

Een man werd wakker van een lange vreemde droom. Hij had de dag ervoor naar een oorlogsfilm gekeken, en daarna naar een voetbalwedstrijd. Hij zuchtte diep, en viel weer in slaap. Hij droomde toen over een dames voetbal team waar alle vrouwen rode strepen op hun achterste hadden, terwijl sommige grote rode vlekken hadden, en sommigen gewoon rode broekjes. Honden renden over het veld, die toen in zwarte panters veranderden. En toen stond het veld in brand. De man was schoolmeester, en de volgende dag toen hij een vrouwlijke collega tegenkwam bemerkte hij dat er rode vlekken op haar broek zaten, die op lipstift leken. De man wreef in zijn ogen. 'Ben ik nu gek ?' dacht hij bij zichzelf. Maar toen ze zich omdraaide had ze het gezicht van een hond. De man wist dat hij nog steeds sliep. Het leek wel alsof hij niet meer kon wakker worden, en de dromen werden steeds langer en langer. Hij herinnerde dat hij de dag ervoor bij de t.v. en bij de voetbalwedstrijd veel te veel had gedronken. Of hadden ze soms iets in zijn glas gestopt ?
Een man las een vreemd verhaal in een magazine. Het was een soort strip, ook met veel plaatjes, en dan weer tekst.

Het was in een wasserette. Hij gooide de magazine opzij. Greep zijn spullen en liep naar buiten. Het werk was gedaan. Hij gleed uit over een bananeschil en viel terwijl alles op de stoep lag. Sommige mensen hielpen hem. Zijn wasmachine deed het niet meer. De was was weer vuil, maar iemand anders bood hem aan de was te doen bij haar thuis. Het was een aardige vrouw. De vrouw van de man was zwanger. Hij wilde weer op tijd thuis zijn, maar het was zo gezellig bij de vrouw dat hij wat langer bleef, en ze besloten vrienden te blijven. Hij vertelde haar over het vreemde verhaal wat hij in de magazine had gelezen. 'Nee, niet gelezen,' zei de vrouw.
Een man zat bij de psychiater. Dit was het verhaal wat hij eruit floepte. 'Okay,' zei de psychiater, 'en wat is de betekenis ?'
Een krant werd gedrukt met dit vreemde verhaal. Iemand werd wakker en had dit gedroomd, iemand las dit. Een grote octopus hing over een stad, en slikte de stad op in zijn geheel. Iemand rende uit het ziekenhuis. Ze hadden hem een injectie gegeven, maar hij was erdoor aan het hallucineren. het was alsof de werkelijkheid nu in duizenden stukjes voor hem lag, in brokken. Iemand was geraakt door een giftige pijl van een wilde stam, de roodbil stam. De man was aan het hallucineren en werd in een kooi gezet. Al snel raakte hij uitgehongerd. Spinnen kropen over hem heen.

Iemand zat een winterboek voor volwassenen te lezen. Dit was wel het vreemdste winterboek wat hij ooit had gelezen. En het volgende verhaal was over de idioten van Mars. De idioten waren een echt ras, wilde reuzen, die in de vreemde jungles van Mars leefden. Ja, idioot was het, maar de plaatjes waren prachtig. Het sprak echt tot de verbeelding. De idioten van Mars waren vaak kaal met hanekammen. Het verhaal daarna ging over slangen, en daarna was er een verhaal wat meer op science fiction leek. De man bracht het boek terug naar de bibliotheek, en ging naar de jeugdafdeling om daar een paar winterboeken te lenen. Tot zijn grote verbazing ging het weer over de roodbil stam. Die nacht had hij een droom over een stam waarvan de vrouwen rood geverfde billen hadden. Hij vertelde het aan zijn vrouw en vroeg wat het voor betekenis kon hebben. 'Dat je teveel leest,' zei zijn vrouw. En ze had gelijk, want hij was een echte boekenwurm. 'Als je 's nachts droomt van hetgeen je hebt gelezen, dan heb je gewoon teveel gelezen, en hetzelfde geldt voor t.v.,' zei ze. 'Maar wat kan ik dan doen ?' vroeg de man. 'Heb jij een beter idee ?'

'Neem mij eens wat vaker uit,' zei de vrouw. 'Ik heb het idee dat je getrouwd bent met de boeken in plaats van mij.'
Zo gezegd zo gedaan. De man nam zijn vrouw die dag direkt mee naar het bos om een wandeling te maken. Maar de man werd al snel onwel, en ze keerden om. 'Ik kan gewoon niet zonder mijn boeken,' zei de man. Ze probeerden nog een paar dingen, maar uiteindelijk legde de vrouw zich er maar bij neer.
Een man werd wakker van een droom, en daar een andere man. Ze hadden allemaal hetzelfde gedroomd, alsof er wilde geesten in de lucht waren. Zwarte honden blaften op de straat. Diep in het bos stapte een dwerg lachend zijn huisje binnen en trok de deur achter zich dicht. Er hingen wat klokken van wezens die in elkaar waren gegroeid en die zich voedden met elkaars inhoud. De dwerg roerde wat in een potje. 'Zombies zijn het,' zei de dwerg. 'Ze kunnen niet met en niet zonder elkaar, want ze zitten aan elkaar vast door het hart. Ja, door dit middeltje zullen ze eindelijk los van elkaar kunnen komen, maar vergeten doen ze elkaar nooit.'

Einde

De Eenling

Hoofdstuk 1.

Hij zag de muren van zich wegbewegen. Als hij op straat was dan voelde hij zich niet een geheel met de mensen. Hij was een eenling, alsof hij ergens anders vandaan kwam. Hij hoorde niet bij deze mensen. Hij vond dat ze zich vreemd gedroegen. Hij had ook angsten die hij niet kon verklaren. Vaak veranderden grote massa's mensen in vrouwen in zijn gedachten, en dat vond hij bedreigend. Hij vertrouwde geen vrouwen, en hij vertrouwde ook geen mensen in het algemeen. Hij voelde zich opgesloten, alsof de geschiedenis het alarm was, wat telkens weer terugkwam. Ook voelde hij zich vaak vies als hij weer mensen had gezien. En de zelfspot die in hem opkwam was ook zwaar, teneerdrukkend, alsof hij zichzelf uitlachte. Hij maakte karikaturen van zichzelf en dat dreef hij dan enorm ver door, totdat hij van zichzelf walgde, en dan lachte hij zichzelf uit. Hij dacht dat hij de gevangene van een heks was, en die had allerlei ingewikkelde alarmen vastgelegd in zijn cel. Dingen waren niet wat ze leken. De massa bestond in zijn ogen niet. Het was een vrouw. Hij moest het in z'n geheel zien. Volgens hem waren er geen afzonderlijke mensen. Hij deelde ze allemaal in in groepjes, en moest zich vasthouden aan de lijnen. Hij zou hysterisch worden als ze afgezonderd zouden worden. Hij zag de groepen als vrouwen. Deze vrouwen waren altijd om hem heen, maar hij probeerde ze te ontlopen. Hij sprak hier met niemand over. Hij schuwde mensen. Hij was bang voor afzonderlijke mensen. Hij moest de groepjes zien, en het liefst van een afstand, en het liefst helemaal niet. Als er dan toch een mens door hem werd opgemerkt, dan moest hij zo snel mogelijk de groep zien en de vrouw die de groep was. Hij sloeg zichzelf soms als hij nadacht over een afzonderlijk mens. Dat wilde hij niet. Dat vond hij eng. Hij probeerde daarom altijd zoveel mogelijk langs mensen heen te kijken, op zoek naar de groep waartoe ze hoorden, op zoek naar de vrouw. Maar de vrouw vreesde hij ook.

De geschiedenis kon urenlang aan hem vreten, genadeloos, waarin hij maar geen uitweg zag, als het alarm van de heks. Maar de geschiedenis was ook een vrouw. Hij wilde het niet anders zien. Hij ging niet meer naar de café's, alleen in zijn gedachten. Hij sloot zich helemaal op, trok zich helemaal terug in zichzelf, ... diep. Hij had genoeg aan zijn verleden. Hij wilde er niets meer aan toevoegen. Hij had geen behoefte meer aan sociaal contact. Die tijd had hij gehad. Hij vertrouwde toch niemand meer. Oh ja, ze probeerden hem wel te lokken, maar hij trapte er niet in, en trok zich dan zelfs nog meer terug, en bleef nog langer binnen, zo ver weg mogelijk, zo diep mogelijk. Ze zouden hem nooit meer kunnen bereiken. Het was al te laat.

Soms als iedereen sliep, diep in de nacht, ging hij weleens wandelen door de stad, en dan het bos in, helemaal alleen. Hij was weleens een naakte vrouw tegengekomen in het bos, dacht hij, maar die rende toen weg. Normaal gesproken was het er altijd rustig en doodstil rond die tijd diep in de nacht, en erg donker. Voedsel bestelde hij altijd en dat zetten ze dan neer in kratjes in de achtertuin. Dan bestelde hij voor een paar weken. Werken deed hij niet. Hij was werkeloos en afgekeurd. Als hij sliep droomde hij over de natuur, hoe dat maar doorging, en hoe het maar niet stopte. In zijn dromen kwam er geen einde aan de natuur.
Hij was verdwaald in zijn innerlijke labyrint. Hij dwaalde en dwaalde en hij vond de uitgang niet. Hij zonk weg in de saaiheid en hopeloosheid van het bestaan. Hij herinnerde zich de contacten van het verleden, maar hij liet het wegglijden. Hij wilde alleen zijn. Hij liep tegen allerlei muren op in zijn verleden, maar die leidden hem naar bruggen. Hij herinnerde zich de feestjes, en de cadeau's die hij kreeg, en nu was het weg. Hij herinnerde zich de stroop op de pannekoeken, die zijn wereld metselden. Hij wilde nu alleen zijn. Alles was teveel geworden. Hij wilde alles nu overdenken.

Alles om hem heen was ingestort, maar hij had het overleefd, en zou nu zijn leven bewaken. De geschiedenis was slechts een poortwachter tussen hem en de mensen, als een alarm. Hij was hypergevoelig nu. Nee, niemand zou nog in zijn leven toegelaten worden. Hij had al genoeg. Er kon niks meer bij.

Hij haatte en verafschuwde zijn vader die altijd tegen hem zei dat hij meer onder de mensen moest zijn. Het had hem in de grootst mogelijke problemen gebracht. Mensen waren zijn afgoden niet meer, en zijn vader al helemaal niet. Hij zag zijn vader als een sluwe duivel die hij buiten de poorten moest laten. Maar goed, zijn vader was al jaren dood.

Hij vond zijn vader altijd maar een lompe boer, zonder precisie. Zijn moeder was het tegenovergestelde, maar ook zij was al jaren dood. Hij had altijd het gevoel alsof zijn moeder in een gevangenis leefde die zijn vader had gemaakt. Daardoor kon hij zijn moeder eigenlijk nooit echt bereiken. Ze was te ver weg. En daarom was het thuis ook altijd een hel. Hij voelde zich als kind al een martelaar. Zijn vader dronk, en kwam 's avonds laat vaak dronken thuis om hem en zijn moeder te slaan. Zijn vader kon zuipen als de duivel, en ook tekeer gaan als de duivel, en vaak wist hij niet eens waarover het ging. Soms werd hij gewoon van zijn bed gelicht en tegen de muur aangezet. Als hij een pistool of geweer had gehad, dan had hij het wel geweten. Hij had medelijden met zijn moeder als hij zag wat zijn vader met haar deed, maar hij was machteloos. Zo vaak als hij kon ging hij logeren, of naar de buren, maar dan voelde hij zichzelf een lafaard, alsof hij zijn moeder in de steek liet.

Zijn moeder was de enige die hij miste. Maar zij was dood.

Hij herinnerde zich ook dat hij eens over de brug rende, dat hij niet meer wilde leven. Hij zou wel van de brug willen afspringen. Maar als hij dan aan zijn moeder dacht, dan kon hij het niet. Hij leefde alleen nog voor zijn moeder, en voor de logeerpartijtjes bij neefjes of de buren. Misschien was zijn vader zwaar ziek geworden door de alcohol, maar eigenlijk wilde hij er niet meer over nadenken. Hij wist hoe verwoestend alcohol was voor het menselijk lichaam. Toen zijn vader stierf was het zelfs een grote opluchting voor hem. Niet lang daarna stierf zijn moeder ook, en hij had toen het gevoel alsof hij daar nooit meer overheen zou komen. Het was alsof hij in een zwart gat viel, en hij voelde zichzelf alsof hij holle ogen had, alsof die eruit waren geschoten, alsof hij met twee grote gaten in zijn hoofd liep. Niets interesseerde hem nog. Hij zag niets meer. Hij leefde langs alles heen. En de mensen gingen gewoon door met feesten alsof er niets was gebeurd. Hij haatte daarom de mensen, met een diepe, bittere haat. Nooit hadden ze hem geholpen. Nooit hadden ze zijn moeder geholpen.

Hij geloofde nu dat zijn moeder in de hemel was, en dat ze elkaar ooit terug zouden zien. Tot die dag wilde hij alleen zijn. Hij had genoeg aan zijn denken.

In de nacht droomde hij vaak over het grote, vieze, vadsige lichaam van zijn vader die hem opgesloten hield. Zijn moeder was dan altijd onbereikbaar. Die zat achter glas, in haar eigen gevangenis. Zijn moeder wilde hem dingen geven, maar die dingen stonden ook allemaal achter glas. Het alcoholisme van zijn vader hield het tegen. Alcoholisme was een groot probleem in de stad. Veel kinderen hadden zo'n vader. Hij was niet de enige. Sommige kinderen hadden zelfs een drinkende vader en een drinkende moeder, en moesten met dronken ouders leven. Maar het feit dat zijn moeder niet tegen zijn vader opkon was al erg genoeg. Hij zag er geen uitweg in, ook niet nu ze dood waren.

In zijn gedachten probeerde hij er omheen te draaien, maar hij kwam hier altijd terug, alsof hij er nog steeds in leefde. De achtertuin was een zootje. Maar de rommel herinnerde hem eraan dat hij het had overleefd. Zijn moeder was altijd netjes.

Netjes, netjes, netjes, maar daar wonnen ze de oorlog niet mee. Zijn moeder werd al overstuur als ze een pluisje op de grond zag. Dan wapende ze zich al met stoffer en blik, en had ze haar handschoentjes aan, want zij mocht niet vies worden. Ze was verder niet streng, maar wel paniekerig. Hierin ontwikkelde ze een grote precisie. Ze was heel accuraat en ook creatief. Ze was als een hypergevoelig alarm. Maar zijn vader sloeg altijd het alarm in. Het was een hopeloze situatie. En hij leefde nog steeds met die wond in zijn hoofd, en die schiep afstand tussen hem en anderen. Ruimte moest er zijn, vond hij.

Anders zou hij het benauwd krijgen. Hij had behoefte aan rust, en wat meer natuurlijke chaos. Vroeger was alles te netjes in huis door zijn moeder. Hij begreep dat wel, maar ook ergerde hij zich eraan. Voor haar was het natuurlijk een manier om te kunnen overleven met zo'n chaotische man.
Hij zuchtte, en wist even niet waar hij naartoe moest met zijn gedachtes. Dit kon toch niet altijd zo door blijven gaan ? In zijn jonge jaren was zijn vader piloot. Maar door de alcohol kon dat op een gegeven moment niet meer, en toen ging hij elke dag naar de kroeg. Zijn moeder werd toen de kostwinner, maar zijn vader nam grotendeels het geld, voor drinken en gokken. Hij had zijn moeder weleens gevraagd waardoor het kwam dat hij zo was geworden. Zijn moeder had daarop geen antwoord.
Het was alsof zijn vader zijn leven had getekend door de alcohol. De gehele architectuur van zijn leven was doordrenkt met de alcohol van zijn vader. Daar draaide alles om, en daar was alles uit voortgekomen, hoe hij nu was.

Hoofdstuk 2.

Hij keek naar de rommel die in zijn huis lag. Hij woonde in een flat. Hij keek naar het oude kantoor-bureau waarop wat boeken en papieren lagen, onder de stof, waar het zonlicht op scheen. Hij keek naar het raam wat al tijden niet gewassen was. Dit was zijn leven. Zijn ouders had hij niet meer, en met mensen wilde hij geen contact. Aan zijn denken had hij genoeg, meer dan genoeg. Er kon niets meer bij. De geschiedenis, zijn verleden, was zijn poortwachter. Hij had al genoeg ellende meegemaakt. Nu stond dat tussen hem en de mensen in.

Zelfs in zijn keuken was het een enorme rotzooi. Het plafond was heel hoog, en op de bovenste keukenkastjes lagen allemaal dozen en boeken die helemaal tot het plafond stapelden. Vroeger behoorde dit allemaal tot zijn kantoor, maar hij ging failliet. Nu was hij werkeloos. Afgekeurd. Hij kon het ook niet meer opbrengen. Hij zat veel te ingewikkeld in elkaar. Ze hadden het allerlei namen gegeven, maar daar ging hij nu ook niet meer naartoe.
De geschiedenis was onverbiddelijk in zijn hoofd. Het had geen medelijden met hem gehad, maar hem neergejaagd en opgesloten. Ja, de alcohol van zijn vader leefde voort, als een heks in zijn hoofd. Zou zijn vader hierin ook opgesloten zijn geweest ? Want zijn vader was ook allesbehalve sociaal.

Hij vroeg zich af hoe het zo heeft kunnen gebeuren. Zijn vader werd van piloot tot dronkaard, alsof hij daardoor neergestort was, en zijn hele gezin zat in het vliegtuig. Hij sleurde zijn hele gezin mee in zijn val. Of waren ze in zee gestort, en kwam hij zo aan op een onbewoond eiland ? Of had zijn vader nog net een noodlanding kunnen maken ?
In ieder geval voelde hij zich voor het leven verminkt. Hij verwaarloosde zijn huis, en bleef maar over de piloot en zijn vliegtuig denken. Het was een onderwerp wat hem obsedeerde. Hij was nu op het onbewoonde eiland, en als hij dan nog eens mensen tegenkwam, dan waren dat in zijn gedachten gewoon de dieren van het onbewoonde eiland. En groepjes mensen vormden een vrouw. Hij sprak weleens in gedachten tot de groepjes mensen : 'Hallo, ben je hier allang ? Ik dacht dat dit eiland onbewoond was.' Als ze dan niet antwoordde, dan moesten het wel dieren zijn, of bewegende blaadjes van de bomen door de wind.
Hij vroeg zich af waar zijn vader nu was. Misschien was zijn vader in de onderwereld wel weer piloot geworden, had hij zijn leven gebeterd, en was op een vliegtocht naar de hemel. Hij hoopte het. Maar ja, wie zou het zeggen ? Misschien als hij zelf zou sterven zou zijn vader hem opwachten met een vliegtuig om hem naar de hemel te brengen ? Zo werd hij heen en weer geslingerd tussen haat en hoop. Soms dacht hij aan de hartsvriend van zijn vader die ook piloot was en die met zijn vliegtuig was neergestort. Zou dat de reden zijn waarom zijn vader zo was geworden, en zo eigenlijk met hem mee neerstortte, en zo het hele gezin ?

Ja, hij zag zijn leven als het gevolg van een vliegtuig ongeluk, en hij stelde zich zo voor dat er mensen waren die het hadden zien gebeuren, en mensen die het in het theater hadden gezien, en dat hij in de hoofden van die mensen doorleefde. Zij maakten schilderijen en muziekstukken, en hij leefde daarin verder.
Hij wilde meer weten van de innerlijke realiteiten, en die binnen gaan. De buitenste lagen interesseerden hem niet, want die hadden hem in de problemen gebracht. Ja, die problemen waren hoogdravend. Hij had het vroeger vaak geprobeerd om in de innerlijke realiteiten te komen, zonder succes. Maar eindelijk was het dan gelukt. Alles wat hij nodig had was in de innerlijke realiteiten.
Hij ging de stad in omdat hij nog wat dingen nodig had. Dit deed hij niet vaak, maar soms moest het toch gebeuren. Hij gaf wat geld aan een dakloze, en in de zaak voor huishoudelijke spullen knipoogde een werker naar hem die hij tussen de schappen tegen kwam. Daarna ging hij even naar de supermarkt. Een oude vrouw woog wat groente af, en mompelde toen iets. 'Wat zegt u ?' vroeg hij. 'Ik dacht ik kan er ook nog wel een komkommertje bijnemen,' zei de vrouw. 'Niet toch ?' Hij zei zachtjes : 'Ja, dat kan.'

Dat waren eigenlijk alle contacten van die dag. Toen hij weer naar huis liep groette een jongetje op een fiets hem, maar hij had zijn hoofd gebogen en zei niets. Toen groette het jongetje hem nog een keer, en toen groette hij het jongetje terug, en was toen al bijna bij zijn deur aangekomen. Met zijn tassen kwam hij binnen. Hij was blij dat hij weer thuis was. Het zat er weer op. Hij was met zijn jas ergens in een winkel aan een haakje blijven steken en nu zat er een scheur in, als een aandenken aan zijn uitstapje. Hij kwam ook veel jongeren tegen met gescheurde kleding.

Zijn huis in de flat had twee verdiepingen. Eronder waren de kelders, en hij kon met een stenen trap naar beneden om zijn tuin in te komen. Op zijn tweede verdieping had hij zijn indianen boeken en hingen zijn indianen schilderijen. Zijn leven draaide om de eeuwige jachtvelden en om speelgoed. Daar kon hij uren over nadenken. Op de tweede verdieping had hij ook een tafel waar indiaantjes opstonden. De verdieping had een schuin dak met een schuin raam. Boven de verdieping waren weer andere woningen, maar voor hem was het zijn zolder. Hier kon hij zichzelf uitleven. Er stond ook een bed. Soms sliep hij hier.

Op een nacht had hij een droom dat het gezin in een klein vliegtuigje naar Amerika ging. Zijn vader bestuurde het vliegtuigje, maar in Amerika stortten ze neer, en hij was de enige overlevende.

Toen hij wakker werd die ochtend werd hij geplaagd in zijn gedachtes. Dit werd zo erg dat hij in zijn kamer begon te dansen als een joker. Hij probeerde zijn gedachten te slim af te zijn, en besloot nu zijn gedachten te plagen en te bedriegen. Hij danste als een spion. Hij omsingelde zijn gedachtes door zijn dansen. Hij wist dat er toch niets met zijn gedachten te overleggen viel. Ze waren koppig, dus dan moest het maar op een andere manier. In zijn hoofd kopieerde hij zijn gedachten en maakte er iets anders van. Hij was er volledig zat van. Hij zou ze gebruiken als werktuigen van de joker.

Hij zong tot de zielen, en vertelde hen verhalen. Hij ging hiertoe over de zeeën om hun schepen te vinden. Zo bracht hij ze in veiligheid en trok hen op. Maar hij wist ook dat hij terugmoest, de rivier over, tot het grote niets, want zijn leven was teveel ingevuld, en hij was als een robot geprogrammeerd door de alcohol van zijn vader. Door de joker kon hij die programmatie verbreken, maar hij moest uiteindelijk weer terugkeren tot het niets, waar ook het nergens was, en het nooit.

Alle ervaringen die hij op zijn netvlies had gehad en wat hij zijn verleden noemde waren als drugs, en het had hem zwaar in de problemen gebracht. Hij wilde afkicken. Was het leven slechts een drug ? En wat was dan het ware leven ? Of bestond dat niet ? En wie had hem deze drug gegeven ? En hoe zou hij kunnen afkicken ?
Hij dacht er ook over na hoe mensen zo lang konden trappen tegen een dood paard. Hij zag het voor zich, en moest er om lachen. In zijn gedachten begon hij die mensen te bespotten.
Die nacht had hij een droom over een groot wit hek aan de rand van een weiland. Hij ging door het hek, maar hij kwam er steeds dieper in en raakte erin opgesloten. Het was alsof het weiland achter zijn tuin was, en het witte hek leidde hem naar het grote indiaanse oerwoud. Hier was een woeste rivier waar je alleen maar over kon komen door over een brug gemaakt van kinderboeken te gaan. Hij ging de brug over, terwijl de woeste rivier hem probeerde te grijpen om hem van de kinderboeken brug af te sleuren. 'Nee !' riep hij uit in doodsangst. 'Oh, was ik er maar nooit aan begonnen.' Hij probeerde de kinderboeken te lezen en probeerde houvast te vinden in de woorden. Maar alles was nat, en alles lag door elkaar heen. Hij was blij als hij een heel woord kon lezen, maar vaak waren dat alleen maar losse woorden, en ook die werden weer weggespoeld. Verderop liep de brug hoger, en hij probeerde omhoog te klauteren, maar telkens weer gleed hij weg. Hij keek naar de diepte, en daar waren ook allemaal puntige rotsen. 'Nee !' riep hij weer. Hij durfde er bijna niet naar te kijken. Hij had er erge buikpijn van, en het was zo diep. Als hij zou vallen, dan zou hij eerst een heel eind naar beneden vallen. Dat zou hij nooit overleven. Twee handen grepen hem. Ze pakten hem stevig beet, en trokken hem omhoog. Ze maakte hem vast aan een touw. 'Goed vasthouden,' zei ze. Het trouw trok hem door een tunnel heen die opliep als een put, en de tunnel was geheel gemaakt van meisjesboeken. 'Aaaaaaaaah !' riep hij, en toen werd hij wakker. Het eerste wat hij toen ging doen was op zoek gaan naar de doos meisjesboeken die hij ooit van zijn tante had gehad. Toen hij het na lang zoeken vond begon hij alle boeken te lezen, iets wat hij nog nooit had gedaan. Hij kende deze boeken niet, en het was alsof er een wereld voor hem werd opengescheurd. 'Ja, het meisjesboek is het enige wat mij erdoor heen kan slepen,' sprak hij, 'ja, het meisjesboek.' En hij werd een schrijver van meisjesboeken, en voor het eerst had hij het gevoel dat het hem over het vliegtuig ongeluk heen bracht, en dat hij eindelijk de alcohol van zijn vader kon overwinnen. Hij wilde een meisjesboeken toren bouwen tot de hemel. Ja, het leven kreeg zo weer zin voor hem, ook sociale contacten. Hij zou het allemaal kunnen verwerken in zijn meisjesboeken. Hij had de toversleutel tot de hemel gevonden.

De Jijdans

Ik moest iets terugbrengen naar de buurvrouw. Onze huizen hadden een laag dak, en alles was op de begane grond. Het waren lange huizen naast elkaar in mooi natuurgebied. Ik was nog maar half aangekleed en wat ik al aanhad zat nog verf op, dus dat wilde ik er eerst afwassen voordat ik naar de buurvrouw zou gaan. Ik had een raam openstaan en hoorde dat ze tegen haar moeder zei dat ze naar mij toe zou gaan al. Ik trok snel iets aan, en ging toen door een deur tussen onze huizen in naar haar toe. Ze had allemaal boekjes, pockets, uit de zestiger jaren van een serie genaamd Jijdans, waar vrouwenverhalen en meisjesverhalen instonden. Literatuur. Ik vond het mooie boekjes. Ze had ook een dwergenklok. Ik keek naar het ding. Ze glimlachte naar me. ‘Ja, eh, ik zou die boekjes wel willen lenen, van Jijdans,’ zei ik.
‘Oh, je mag ze wel houden,’ zei ze. ‘Ik doe er toch niks meer mee. Ze staan daar maar te staan.’ Ik was er dolgelukkig mee, en omhelsde haar. ‘Oh sorry,’ zei ik. ‘Ik vergat dat er nog verf op m’n kleding zat.’
‘Geeft niks hoor,’ zei ze. ‘Heb je weer veel lopen schilderen ?’ Ik knikte. ‘Schilderen is mijn lust en leven, wild en woest. Maar nu zou ik wel weer wat meer willen lezen en schrijven.’

‘Lezen en schrijven ?’ zei ze. ‘Goed idee. Wat vind je van mijn dwergenklok ?’
‘Verschrikkelijk,’ zei ik. ‘Wel inspirerend, maar het lijkt wel een spookklok.’
‘Dat is het ook,’ zei ze. ‘Het maakt hele vreemde geluiden. Door dwergen gemaakt. Het was een erfenis.’
‘Kun je er wel van slapen ?’ vroeg ik.
‘Nee, eigenlijk niet,’ zei ze. ‘Het is nogal een storend ding.’
‘Maar waarom houdt je het dan nog ?’ vroeg ik.
‘Tja, een erfenis, he, ik kan het niet zomaar wegdoen. Herinneringen,’ zei ze.
‘Goede of slechte herinneringen,’ vroeg ik.
‘Slecht,’ zei ze, ‘zeer slecht.’
‘Wegdoen dat ding,’ zei ik. ‘Verkopen kan ook.’
‘Ik wil het niemand aandoen,’ zei ze. ‘Ik houd het ding liever hier. Dan is iedereen er veilig tegen.’
Ik stond voor een raadsel. Ik zou haar graag willen helpen.
‘Misschien zit er een mechanisme in waardoor je het kan uitschakelen ?’ vroeg ik.
‘Ik heb al gekeken,’ zei ze. ‘Er zit niks. Dat is het vreemde eraan. In ieder geval bedankt dat je me mijn witte jurk weer hebt teruggebracht.'

'Geen dank, en bedankt voor het lenen,' zei ik. 'Ze had de avond van haar leven.'
'Dat geloof ik zeker,' zei ze. 'Veel gedansd ?'
'Ja, de hele tijd,' zei ik. 'Ze kon niet meer stoppen.'
Ze glimlachte.
'Ik moet maar weer eens gaan,' zei ik. 'Maar die klok, he, die dwergenklok. Van wie was die klok ?'
'Van de moeder van mijn moeder, en zij had het ook weer geerfd en wilde het ook niet wegdoen,' zei ze. 'Ze heeft er een rotleven door gehad.'
'Ik vind dat zo vreemd,' zei ik. 'Kun je het niet beter vernietigen ? Gewoon, hup, het open haard in.'
'Ik heb geen open haard,' zei ze.
'Ik anders wel,' zei ik. 'Ik wil het best voor je meenemen, en dan verbranden. Dan zijn we er vanaf.'
'Ja, maar dan slaan de dwergen misschien terug,' zei ze.
Ik keek naar haar gezicht, wat ineens gesponnen en verkrompen was. 'Dat gaat niet goed,' zei ik. Ineens viel ze flauw. Ik bracht snel wat water voor haar.
'D… die klok,' mompelde ze.
'Laat maar,' zei ik. 'Ik verbrand het wel.'

‘Nee, nee !’ gilde ze.
‘Waarom niet ?’ vroeg ik.
‘Dan komen we onder een vloek,’ zei ze. ‘En dan gaat het de hele wereld over, want het is zeer besmettelijk.’
‘Dat moet dan maar,’ zei ik. ‘Want dit is ook niks.’
Maar plotseling kon ik me niet meer bewegen. ‘Die dwergenklok is behekst,’ stamelde ik.
‘Ik zei het je toch,’ zei ze. ‘Laten we het maar laten zoals het is. Veel beter. Ik heb er mee leren leven. Misschien beschermd het wel tegen iets veel ergers.’
‘Zo kun je het misschien ook zien,’ zei ik. ‘Misschien is het een kruis wat je moet dragen, als een extra zintuig.’
‘Ja,’ zei ze. ‘Misschien kun jij er over schrijven en het raadsel oplossen.’
‘Ik zal het proberen,’ zei ik.
Ik ben toen weggegaan. De volgende dag bestond het huis van de buurvrouw niet meer. Het was zo ineens verdwenen. Ik heb haar nooit meer gezien, en ook haar moeder niet, ook al heb ik veel gezocht. Zo in het niets verdwenen, ook die dwergenklok. Nu vraag ik me af of het wel ooit echt bestaan heeft, of alleen maar in mijn fantasie of dwang gedachten. Ik heb soms het gevoel alsof het leven met mij een loopje neemt. Maar anderen zeiden dat het echt heeft bestaan. Of misschien was het een groepsillusie ? Misschien is alles illusie ? En hier schrijf ik over. Ik probeer de herinnering hoog te houden aan mijn buurvrouw. Ze was een bijzonder mens. Ze gaf mij een rust die ik niet kon beschrijven, en dat terwijl ze in zo’n grote onrust leefde. Misschien heeft de dwergenklok haar meegenomen dieper het woud in ? Ik zoek nog steeds in de wildernis naar haar, maar dan bedenk ik dat dit misschien ook mijn kruis is, en mijn zintuig, waarmee ik moet leren leven. Het gemis van haar is groot, maar er zijn ook andere dingen. Ik kan over haar schrijven, en haar boeken lezen. Als ik Jijdans boekjes lees dan denk ik weer aan haar.

De dwergen dansen om hun klok,
Zij wonen hier al zo lang.
Nee, weg willen zij niet,
nog zoveel dingen te doen.
En daarom dreigen zij, dreigen zij :
Kom niet te dichtbij, deze dingen zijn van mij,
ik, ik, ik, is alles waar ze aan denken,
Ik sta al lang in de rij, voor een Jijdans

De sloot

Hij trapte de zwarte vissen van hem af toen hij de sloot uitkroop. Ze noemden het sloot, maar het was eigenlijk een rivier, en de vissen hadden hem geprobeerd naar beneden te trekken. Het was een heel gevecht geweest, maar nu was hij eindelijk aan wal, en haalde diep adem van opluchting. Het had niet veel gescheeld. Hij voelde zich meer dood dan levend. Toen hij thuiskwam viel hij zijn moeder in de armen. ‘Waar was je toch, jongen ?’ vroeg ze bezorgd.
Hij vertelde haar het hele verhaal.
‘Nee, daar moet je ook zeker niet komen,’ zei moeder. Maar hij was erin gegaan om iemand te redden, en dat eerde ze. ‘De zwarte vissen zijn een groot probleem, altijd,’ zei moeder. Het was een koude dag in 1938. Toen de oorlog uitbrak toen herinnerde hij het zich weer, de zwarte vissen. ‘Ze zijn aan land gekomen, moeder,’ zei hij toen, ‘de zwarte vissen.’ Moeder knikte. ‘De sloot is overstroomd, mijn jongen,’ sprak ze. Toen ze later door de nazi’s werd afgeschoten kon hij haar niet helpen. Zijn dromen waren kapot geschoten. Hij zou nu een zwarte vissen jager worden. Hij haatte de sloot. Er gebeurden daar vreselijke dingen, en hij wist dat het allemaal met de sloot had te maken. Het was een zwarte rivier vol met fabrieksvuil, vol met afval, en zwarte moord-vissen die voor niets en niemand terugdeinsden. Als kind had hij er altijd al nachtmerries over.

Nu was zijn moeder er niet meer en hij zinde op wraak. In de winter vroor het, en hij ging op de sloot schaatsen. Er was zoveel vuil onder het ijs, zoveel afval. Alle zwarte vissen waren nu onder het ijs. Hij schaatste door, tot ver weg van de slootkant. Het werd ook steeds donkerder. Plotseling zag hij wat bewegen. Het ijs was hier ook wat dunner. Hij ging languit op het ijs liggen en keek er doorheen. Nee, hij hoorde iemand kloppen. Er was iemand onder het ijs. Hij kreeg toen ineens de schrik van zijn leven. Het was het gezicht van zijn moeder. Hij begon te roepen, en begon het ijs open te trappen met de punten van zijn schaatsen. Plotseling zakte hij er doorheen, en werd direct gegrepen door de zwarte vissen, en diep naar beneden getrokken. Hij voelde zichzelf koud worden en stijf, en kon al snel zich niet meer verzetten tegen de zwarte vissen. Maar als zijn moeder nu vrij was, dan vond hij het best.
In de lente spoelde er een lichaam aan land. Het was zijn lichaam. Een man vond hem, en schudde zijn hoofd. De man vond dat hij op zijn zoon leek, alhoewel er niet veel meer van het lijk over was wat door de zwarte vissen was aangevreten. Toen de man thuiskwam vertelde hij het aan zijn zoon. De vrouw van de man schudde met haar hoofd. ‘Hoe kun je onze zoon nu vergelijken met een lijk ?’ De man haalde zijn schouders op. ‘Ik weet het niet.’ De vrouw keek hem diep in zijn ogen. ‘Je bent niet goed wijs,’ zei ze langzaam. Ze gingen die avond vroeg naar bed.

‘Je kunt zoiets niet maken,’ zei zijn vrouw toen ze in bed lagen. ‘Hij zou er nachtmerries van kunnen krijgen.’
‘Onzin,’ zei de man. ‘Hier leert hij van.’
‘Midden in de nacht staat de zoon bij hen in de slaapkamer. ‘Ik ben niet van suiker,’ zei hij. Toen ging hij weer weg. De volgende ochtend bij het ontbijt zei niemand wat tegen elkaar. Op een pot stond het hoofd van een vrouw. ‘Die verdronken jongen zal ook een moeder gehad hebben,’ zei de man opeens. Hij wees op het hoofd van de vrouw op de pot. Zijn vrouw pakte toen de pot en begon naar het gezicht van de vrouw op de pot te staren. ‘Ja, maar deze weent. Ik zou niet weten waarom ze tegenwoordig een wenende vrouw op een pot zetten.’
‘Verkoopt he,’ zei de man. De zoon zei niets. Ineens begon hij zich niet goed te voelen en rende weg.

‘De moeder van de verdronken jongen,’ zei de man weer.
‘Dat moet wel deze vrouw zijn. Hier staat ze, op deze pot, wenend om haar zoon.’
‘Nee,’ zei de vrouw. ‘Je hebt grote fantasie, misschien wel door je empathie.’
‘Empathie spreekt altijd de waarheid,’ zei de man. ‘Empathie weet alles.’
‘Ja, en empathie heeft altijd gelijk,’ zei de vrouw.
De man pakte toen de pot en hield de pot ondersteboven boven de tafel, terwijl het spul wat erin zat eruit begon te druipen. ‘Nu is ze vrij,’ zei de man. Op dat moment kwam de zoon binnen. Hij was boos, en riep : ‘Ik ben niet van suiker, maar, maar !’
‘Zie, je lijkt echt op hem,’ zei de man.
‘Op wie ?’ vroeg de zoon.
‘Op die verdronken jongen die ik had gevonden,’ zei de man.
‘Oh, dat lijk ?’ vroeg de zoon. ‘Ik ben niet van suiker, maar, maar !’
‘Maar wat ?’ vroeg de man. ‘Je bent hier om te leren.’
‘Nee !’ riep de zoon, en rende weer weg.
‘Zie,’ zei de vrouw, ‘je hebt hem erg overstuur gemaakt met al deze dingen. Hij probeert je duidelijk te maken dat je te ver bent gegaan. Misschien moet je het hem beter uitleggen.'

'Ik bedoelde gewoon dat hij net zo moeilijk communiceert als dat lijk,' zei de man.
'Wat ben jij grof,' zei de vrouw. 'Je hebt een goed hart, maar je kent je eigen verbeeldingskracht niet. Je hebt geen idee wat voor een effect dat heeft op anderen. Ga naar hem toe.'
'Nee,' zei de man, 'hij moet hiervan leren.'
'Dan ga ik wel,' zei de vrouw, en stond op.
De jongen was op zijn kamer, maar wilde niemand spreken.
Even later stond de man op en klopte aan bij de jongen.
'Ga weg,' riep de jongen, 'jullie zijn misselijke ouders.'
'Zie, dat bedoel ik nu,' zei de man tegen zijn vrouw.
'Je hebt het er zelf naar gemaakt,' zei de vrouw.
Die avond gingen ze weer vroeg naar bed. Weer stond midden in de nacht hun zoon in de slaapkamer. Hij stond daar met een hakbijl en een mes.
'Zeg, ben je gek geworden,' zei de man slaperig.
'Zie,' zei de vrouw die ook was wakker geschrokken. 'Dat bedoel ik nu. Je maakt die jongen helemaal gek met je rare vergelijkingen.'

'Ik heb zeker gelijk gehad,' zei de man. 'Hij gedraagt zich alsof hij al dood is.'
'Ja, maar denk je niet dat jouw vreemde manieren hem zo hebben gemaakt ? Je bedoeld het misschien goed, maar het lijkt net alsof je zelf ook al dood bent. Ik leef hier met twee doden, twee contactgestoorde mannen,' zei de vrouw paniekerig. Ze stond op en begon door het huis heen te rennen, te wenen, en paniekerig te doen, hysterisch bijna.
'Kijk wat je je moeder hebt aangedaan,' zei de man kalm.
'Nee, jij !' riep de zoon.
'Mijn vergelijking was juist,' zei de man.
'Jullie zijn beiden niet goed snik !' gilde de vrouw. 'Jullie bedoelen het misschien goed, maar dit is misselijkmakend, ziekmakend, en het is ook ziek.'
Zwarte vissen waren op jacht. Ze lieten niet los. 'De oorlog heeft me zo gemaakt,' zei de man kalm.
'Ja, mij ook,' zei de zoon, die toen zijn hakbijl en mes op de grond liet vallen. De vrouw raapte het zo snel mogelijk van de grond, en borg het op. 'Geen speelgoed voor jou,' zei ze.
En ja, het was waar. De oorlog had hen zo gemaakt.

Zwarte vissen waren aan land gekomen, in de uniformen gegaan, en maakten jacht op de families, in grote bloedlust, grote oorlogszucht.
‘Ik ben niet van suiker,’ zei de jongen, ‘maar de oorlog heeft iets met mijn hersenen gedaan. Ik ben niet meer dezelfde.’
‘Niemand is nog dezelfde,’ zei de vrouw.
Er werd toen op de deur geklopt. Het waren nazi’s. Toen ze binnenkwamen werd het drietallig gezin afgeschoten. Hun lijken werden in de sloot geworpen, als voer voor de zwarte vissen. Na een tijdje spoelden ze weer aan op het land, en werden weer door andere families gevonden, waar het toen ook mis begon te gaan. Iedereen ging de fuiken in. Zo werd het land met de grond gelijk gemaakt en helemaal uitgehold, tot overstromen van de sloot. Het gehele land kwam onder water te staan, en de zwarte vissen hadden vrij baan. Een duivelser kwaad dan de zwarte vissen was er niet. Overal waar ze kwamen scheen het mis te gaan.
Een jongen trapte de zwarte vissen van hem af toen hij de sloot uitkroop. Ze hadden zich helemaal in zijn vlees vastgebeten. In het ziekenhuis moesten de vissen verwijderd worden. Maar dokters die zich eraan waagden werden ook door de zwarte vissen gegrepen. Het was een hopeloze zaak, maar toch eindigde de oorlog eens, en trok de sloot zich weer terug, totdat het alleen nog maar een normale sloot was. En de zwarte vissen leken niet meer te bestaan.

Eens lang na de oorlog kwam een jongen met eenzelfde soort verhaal thuis dat hij was gegrepen door een zwarte vis tijdens het zwemmen in het meer. Niemand geloofde hem, want hij had verder ook geen wonden. Maar de jongen leed sindsdien aan zware nachtmerries, en ze hadden het vermoeden dat hij geestelijk zwaar ziek was. Hij klaagde veel over duizeligheid en kwam in een opvangcentrum terecht. Ook daar ging hij deze verhalen rondvertellen, maar niemand geloofde hem. Nachtmerries, zware nachtmerries, had hij. Hij durfde niet meer te slapen, en at bijna niet meer. Op een dag kwam hij iemand tegen die zei dat velen hetzelfde hadden meegemaakt als hem, maar dat ze zich isoleerden of geisoleerd werden omdat ze niet werden geloofd. Ze kwamen veelal tot de conclusie dat ze nog steeds werden achtervolgd door de zwarte vissen die inmiddels aan land waren gekomen.

Op een dag ging de jongen schaatsen. Onder het ijs zag hij personen bewegen, en ze klopten van onderen tegen het ijs. Hij zag de gezichten van jongens, meisjes, vaders en moeders. Hij is toen op de kant gegaan en is toen gaan zoeken naar de grootst mogelijke steen, en heeft die toen op het ijs geworpen, opdat er een wak zou ontstaan waardoor de slachtoffers van de zwarte vissen voor eens en voor altijd vrij zouden zijn.

De scherpschutter

Ik was ontsnapt.
Het sneeuwde.
Er lag hier overal ijs.
Ook het meertje was bevroren.
Ik kon zo over het ijs lopen en door de bomen gaan.
Die stonden erg dicht tegen elkaar. Naaldbomen.
Ik was bijna bij de brug aangekomen en toen zag ik de trein al weggaan.
Ik had de trein gemist.
Ik wist niet waar de anderen waren.
Ik keek achterom en zag niemand en hoorde ook niemand.
Ik ging verder het bos in.
Plotseling raakte ik in een gevecht met een beer.
Ik werd zwaar toegetakeld.
Ik overleefde het ternauwernood, en strompelde weg.
Ik wist niet eens meer waar de beer was, en ik zag hem ook niet.
Hevig bloedend ging ik dieper het bos in, en kwam aan bij een huisje na een tijd strompelen.
Een oude vrouw deed de deur open en nam me direct naar binnen.

Ze begon me allemaal vragen te stellen waarop ik geen antwoord wist.
Het gevecht met de beer had mijn geheugen gewist.
Ik wist alleen dat ik was ontsnapt, maar ik wist niet waarvan ik was ontsnapt.
Ook wist ik nog dat ik de trein had gemist, maar verder wist ik niets.
De oude vrouw verzorgde mijn wonden, en keek mij telkens bezorgd en liefdevol aan.
Ze liet me een dennennaald zien.
Dit soms ? vroeg ze.
Het zat in je wond.
Ja, ik moest langs naaldbomen, zei ik.
Waar kom je vandaan ? vroeg ze weer.
I... ik weet het niet, zei ik.
De beer zat achter me aan, en pakte me.
Nu weet ik niet meer zoveel.
Ik had ook een hoofdwond.
Ze pakte een tangetje en haalde er een kogel uit.
Nee, zei ze. Je bent beschoten.
Het is een wonder dat je nog leeft.
Ik keek haar vreemd aan, en keek vreemd naar de kogel die onder het bloed zat.

I.. ik weet daar niks van.
Scherpschutters, zei ze.
Ik maak het wel vaker mee.
Ze jagen op hen die ontsnapt zijn.
Ontsnapt waarvan ? vroeg ik.
Ik weet het niet, zei de vrouw.
Ik ben zelf ook eens ontsnapt, maar wist toen ook niet meer waarvan.
Scherpschutters en beren, zei ze, dat is alles wat ik weet.
Ze jagen op de ontsnapten, en soms wolven.
Ik ben blij dat ik geen wolven ben tegengekomen, zei ik, maar die beer was al erg genoeg.
Of ik ben ook wolven tegengekomen en het weer vergeten.
Laat maar, zei de vrouw.
Het is niet meer belangrijk.
Blijf maar hier.
Morgen praten we verder.
Toen ze mijn wonden had verbonden bracht ze mij naar een kamer met een bed, en ging zelf in een andere slaapkamer slapen.
Die ochtend werd ik wakker in de sneeuw.
Ik keek om me heen en zag geen huisje.
Ik zag wel bomen.

Ik vroeg me af wat er was gebeurd.
Mijn wonden waren nog steeds goed verbonden.
Ik stond op, en zocht naar het huisje, maar vond het niet.
Veel later vond ik tot mijn grote schrik de oude vrouw liggende in de sneeuw.
Doorzeefd met teveel kogels.
Ze was dood.
De scherpschutters hadden haar waarschijnlijk gevonden.
Ik keek om me heen, terwijl ik me afvroeg waarom ik nog leefde.
Ik weende toen om de vrouw die zo goed voor me was geweest.
Ik vond het leven oneerlijk.
Ik herinnerde me ineens waaruit ik was ontsnapt.
Maar toen vaagde het weer weg, en wist ik het niet meer.
Het was slechts een flits, en ik kon het niet grijpen.
Het frustreerde mij.
Scherpschutters kwamen toen op me af.
Maar ze schoten niet op mij.
Waarom hebben jullie haar neergeschoten en mij niet ? vroeg ik.
We hebben je wel neergeschoten, zeiden ze.
Met kogels van dromen, je droomt slechts.

Ik schudde mijn hoofd in ongeloof.
Kom mee, zeiden ze.
Ik liep achter ze aan.
Waar kon ik anders naartoe ?
Toch ben ik even later weggerend, en alhoewel ze niet schoten dacht ik aan de kogels van dromen.
Ik werd toen pas echt wakker in het huisje van de oude vrouw, in de kamer waarin ze me had gebracht. Bij het ontbijt vertelde ik haar over de droom en ze glimlachte.
Maar wat als ik nog steeds droom ? vroeg ik aan haar.
Dromen zijn … sprak ze, maar haar stem begon weg te vagen en ik werd wakker daar waaruit ik dacht dat ik was ontsnapt … Ik herinnerde me alles weer … Tegelijkertijd besefte ik dat dit ook een droom kon zijn … De scherpschutter, de scherpschutter … dacht ik bij mezelf …

Einde

'Juko,' zei een schoolvriendje terwijl ze van het ene naar het andere klaslokaal gingen. 'Weet jij wat een satanskerk is ?'
'Ik weet het niet,' zei Juko. 'Is dat niet wat christelijks ?'
'Bijna,' zei Kas. 'Satan is de vijand van het christendom, maar voor de Israelieten was het een vriend, of een schijnvijand, die hen moest testen. Het kan ook het symbool van het kwaad zijn, maar dat is niet altijd zo. Het Jodendom en het christendom verschillen in die zin veel van elkaar.'
'Houd maar op,' zei Juko. 'Ik weet er niet veel van, en ik wil er ook niet veel van weten.'
'Maar het is belangrijk, Juko,' zei Kas.
'Houd maar op,' zei Juko weer. 'Ik snap niet waarom het belangrijk is. Ik ben niet gelovig opgevoed, dus ik heb niets met die dingen te maken.
'Dat dacht je maar,' zei Kas. 'Het blijkt dat de satanskerk alle scholen heeft opgericht, ook deze.'
Even schrok Juko. Maar toen trok zijn gezicht weer normaal, en zei : 'Maar dat geloof je toch zeker niet, al die onzin ? Moeten we daar dan in geloven ? Heb je teveel roddelblaadjes gelezen of die leugenachtige krant die altijd over van alles en nog wat liegt om maar geld in het zakje te krijgen.'

'Moet je luisteren, Juko,' zei Kas. 'Misschien weet ik van bepaalde dingen net iets meer af dan jij ?'
'Nu klink je als een concurrent,' zei Juko.
Maar ze moesten gaan zitten. Het volgende schooluur was aangebroken. Juko was een beetje boos op Kas, en ging na schooltijd direct naar huis. Voor Juko was dat een lange fietstocht, en Kas ging met de bus. Die woonde in een andere plaats.
'Satanskerk, satanskerk,' zei Juko telkens tegen zichzelf. 'Wat moet ik daar allemaal mee.' Toen hij thuisgekomen was na de lange fietstocht ging hij direct naar zijn kamer en klikte de tv aan. Het nieuws was erop. De nieuwslezer sprak : 'Het is onder onze aandacht gekomen dat de satanskerk alle scholen bestuurd, alle ziekenhuizen en alle huizen van justitie.' Direct klikte Juko de tv uit. 'Dat geloof je toch zeker niet,' zei Juko tegen zichzelf. 'Het wordt allemaal hoe langer hoe gekker.'
De volgende dag op school begon Kas weer tegen hem aan te praten, en het ging weer allemaal over de satanskerk en dat het ook op het nieuws was. 'Moet ik dat weer allemaal aanhoren ?' vroeg Juko.

'Het blijkt meer en meer duidelijk te zijn wie bij de satanskerk behoren,' zei Kas. 'Het was eerst min of meer geheim, maar er zijn allerlei documenten van boven water gekomen, en ze vrezen dat het uitloopt op een oorlog. Deze mensen doen de verschrikkelijkste dingen. Het zijn geeneens mensen.'
Juko haalde zijn schouders op. 'Ik geloof het nieuws niet, en ook de krant niet. Bij mij thuis geloven we helemaal niks, dus het zal wel loslopen. De krant is allemaal bedrog op bedrog, allemaal voor geld.'
'Ja, maar mijn broer zegt het ook,' zei Kas. Juko keek hem diep in de ogen toen met een lach op zijn gezicht. 'En dat maakt het allemaal plotseling waar als Jonas het ook zegt ? Dus wat Jonas zegt is een gouden bewijs op zich ? Laat me toch niet lachen, Kas.'
'Mijn broer heeft veel onderzoek gedaan,' zei Kas. Juko duwde Kas lachend opzij, en liep door. Het was immers het nieuwe lesuur. 'De satanskerk, de satanskerk,' dacht Juko bij zichzelf. Tijdens het hele lesuur kon hij nergens anders aan denken. Toen hij thuis was besloot hij dit keer zelf eens onderzoek te doen. Hij ging naar de bibliotheek, en leende daar een flinke stapel boeken over satan. Hij begon de boeken gretig te lezen, en kwam erachter dat de boeken elkaar allemaal tegenspraken. 'Zie,' zei hij tegen zichzelf. 'Hier kom je toch ook geen steek verder mee.'

Maar hij ging door met het onderzoek. Hij wilde tot de bodem van de zaak gaan. Nadat hij de boeken had gelezen ging hij speciaal boeken lenen over de satanskerk, en wat hij toen las, daar schrok hij toch wel even van. Hij wist natuurlijk niet of het waar was, maar dat zou verschrikkelijk zijn.
Hij raakte er verschrikkelijk van in de war en voelde zich ziek. Hij voelde zich zo ziek dat hij niet meer naar school wilde. Naar een psychiater of dokter wilde hij ook niet, want die zouden ook door de satanskerk bestuurd worden als hij die boeken zou moeten geloven. Hij moest natuurlijk eerst bewijzen hebben, maar hij nam geen enkel risico. 'Stel dat het waar zou zijn,' zei hij telkens tegen zichzelf.
Hij begon steeds meer de natuur op te zoeken, want daar was het rustig, en daar kon geen satanskerk zijn. Juko raakte steeds meer in de war. Hij wilde niet meer in de stad leven. Of het was de satanskerk die de stad bestuurde, of de stad werd door leugens bestuurd, of beiden. In geen geval wilde hij nog in de stad zijn. Hij kende een schuilplaats in het bos. Dat was nog van de oorlog. Daar ging hij toen wonen. Hij zou een bosmens worden, want dan had je nergens meer wat mee te maken. Hij zou wel van bessen leven, en al het andere wat in het bos te vinden zou zijn. Hij was hier helemaal alleen, maar hij zou zijn weg wel vinden. Hij wilde in geen geval meer terug.

'Laten ze elkaar maar opvreten in de stad,' dacht Juko. 'Waar vechten we voor ? In het bos is al die onzin er niet.' Maar Juko kwam er al snel achter dat het leven in het bos zwaar was. Er was een heleboel niet te krijgen in het bos, en voedsel was er schaars. Hij zou soms terug naar de stad moeten voor voedsel. Of misschien moest hij dieper het bos in ? Hij koos voor het laatste. Hij wilde niet opgeven. 'Satanskerk, satanskerk,' dacht hij telkens bij zichzelf. En zelfs veel christelijke kerken zouden niets dan satanskerken zijn. De meningen over wat satan was waren verdeeld, maar wat hij over de satanskerk had gelezen was niet goed. Als dat toch eens waar zou zijn. Hij wilde geen risico lopen, maar toen vond hij zichzelf ook weer laf. Misschien hadden ze zijn hulp wel nodig. Maar wie was hij ? Wat kon hij doen ? Hij voelde zich zo machteloos. Ze moesten maar net als hem leven. Waarom zou hij zijn leven wagen voor stadsmensen ? Maar ja, de satanskerken hielden mensen ook opgesloten. Mens, kind en dier. Nee, dat kon niet als dat waar zou zijn. Juko moest terug. Dat moest van hemzelf. Maar dan moest hij eerst een strategie hebben, en die had hij niet. Het zou bijna zelfmoord zijn als hij terug zou gaan. Daarom ging hij eerst dieper het bos in om wijze raad te zoeken. Hij kwam aan bij een huisje waar een oud vrouwtje woonde. Ze vertelde hem alles over de satanskerk, hoe zij alles in de stad besturen, ook de christelijke kerken. Ze vertelde hem over wat ze in het geheim deden. Dit was precies wat de boeken zeiden, maar er bestond volgens hem niet zoiets als meeste stemmen gelden, want de leugen was hysterisch en massaal. De leugen was een besmettelijke ziekte. 'Ik heb het zelf meegemaakt, lieve jongen,' zei de vrouw. 'En daarom woon ik hier.' En toen begon ze een verhaal over haar leven te vertellen. Juko kon zijn tranen niet inhouden.

'Wat moeten we doen ? Wat moeten we doen ?' vroeg Juko.
'Wat kunnen we doen ?' vroeg de vrouw.
'Ja, maar zoveel kinderen,' zei Juko. 'We kunnen hen toch niet zomaar aan hun lot overlaten ?'
'Ze zullen hier ook wel komen,' zei de vrouw, 'net als ons.'
'Ja, maar hoe dan ?' vroeg Juko. 'Ze hebben onze hulp nodig.'

'Nee,' zei de vrouw. 'Je kunt niet terug. Hier ben je veilig. Je hebt een spoor achtergelaten. Dat kunnen ze volgen.'
'Maar hoe dan ?' vroeg Juko.
'Het is een raadsel wat alleen kinderen kunnen oplossen,' zei de vrouw.
'Ja, maar de mensen en dieren dan ?' vroeg Juko.
'Wie niet wordt als een kind kan niet komen,' zei de vrouw.
'Maar hoe kunnen ze een kind worden als ze geen kind meer zijn ?' vroeg Juko.
'In het hart, het hart,' zei de vrouw. 'In het hart is een pad. De satanskerk heeft geen hart. Ze zijn versteend als de stad zelf. Maar kinderen zullen hun weg er wel door vinden tot de natuur.'
Juko moest even aan Kas denken, en aan Jonas. 'Ik hoop dat mijn schoolvrienden het halen,' zei hij.
'Natuurlijk,' zei de vrouw. 'Als ze zijn voorbestemd, dan zeker.'
'Voorbestemd ?' vroeg Juko. 'wat betekent dat ?'
'De natuur kent de haren,' sprak de vrouw geheimzinnig. 'Het komt vanuit de diepte, en gaat weer terug tot de diepte.' Toen vaagde de stem van de vrouw weg en Juko werd wakker.

't Was maar een droom,' zei Juko tegen zichzelf. Hij stond op, kleedde zich aan, en moest naar school. Hij was blij Kas te zien en Jonas. Hij vroeg hen of ze wisten wat de satanskerk was. 'Geen idee,' zei Kas. 'Is dat iets christelijks ?' Toen begon Juko zijn hele droom te vertellen. 'Vreemd,' zei Kas. Jonas had al die tijd geluisterd. 'Een vriend van mij heeft daar wel boeken van,' zei Jonas.
'Eigenlijk wil ik er niets van weten,' zei Juko.
'Beter ook niet,' zei Jonas. 'Het is heel eng.'
'Zoals in mijn droom ?' vroeg Juko.
Jonas knikte.
'Maar hoe kon ik zoiets dromen ?' vroeg Juko.
'Misschien roept moeder natuur je,' zei Jonas. 'Misschien ben jij wel voorbestemd.'
Juko keek om zich heen. Hij keek naar het gebouw. Waar was hij ? Nee, dit was geen school. Alles stond stil. Hij keek naar Kas en Jonas, en ze spraken en bewogen niet meer. Alles stond stil. Was hij wel echt wakker ? Hij werd wakker in een slaapkamer van het huisje in het bos waar de vrouw woonde. Bij het ontbijt vertelde hij de droom, en hij zei er ook bij dat hij niet zeker wist of hij wel echt wakker was nu. Het kon nog steeds een droom zijn.
'Je droomt,' zei de vrouw.

'Ja, maar waar ben ik dan, en wie ben ik dan ?' vroeg Juko.
'Je bent in het bos,' zei de vrouw. 'Ik heb je die bessen gegeven. Nu droom je. Het bos loopt hier over in dromen.'
'Maar die satanskerk, is dat waar ?' vroeg Juko.
'Het is een andere realiteit,' zei de vrouw.
'Wat moeten we dan doen ?' vroeg Juko.
'Afstand nemen,' zei de vrouw. 'Dieper het bos in, dieper dromen. Het was maar een nachtmerrie. De dromen zijn ervoor om de nachtmerrie uit te leggen. De nachtmerrie is schoolmateriaal. Je moet nog leren wat het is. De stadschool is de nachtmerrie, de bosschool is de droom, je onderwijzer.'

Ik kwam die morgen van de trap af naar beneden en ging de huiskamer in en groette mijn oom en tante waarbij ik logeerde. We waren allemaal wakker geworden van een lange nacht, de zwarte nacht, gemaakt door dwergen. We hadden naar hun schat gekeken en het had ons verblind, en daarom duurde de zwarte nacht zo lang, omdat we onder een betovering waren.
Ik omhelsde mijn tante, en toen mijn oom, en ik weende. Ik was blij dat we allemaal wakker waren geworden. Mijn tante weende ook, en ook mijn oom. ‘Waar zijn de anderen ?’ vroeg ik.
‘In de lange nacht,’ zei mijn tante.
‘Oh, die moeten dus nog wakker worden,’ zei ik. ‘Ik dacht altijd dat dwergen zulke goede en lieve wezens waren.’
‘Er zitten ook kwaaien tussen,’ zei mijn tante.
‘Dat heb ik wel gemerkt,’ zei ik. Mijn oom knikte.
Daar kwam de poes. Ik nam hem op mijn schouder. Ik was blij hem te zien. Het voelde kalmerend aan.
Maar iets klopte er niet. Nee, ik was nog steeds woelend in de zwarte nacht, worstelend. Ik moest niet meer naar de schat kijken, maar de dwergen hielden het steeds voor mijn neus. Ik riep wat, maar ik kon mezelf niet verstaan. Ik was op een schip in woeste golven. Daar zag ik mijn oom weer. ‘Dus toch, dus toch,’ riep ik. ‘We zijn ontwaakt !’ Maar we moesten vechten voor ons leven. De golven die over het dek spoelden voelden zo warm aan.

‘We zijn bij het paradijs !’ riep ik.
‘Bijna !’ riep mijn oom, die aan het hozen was.
Het was donker, maar ik zag de morgen komen, en ik zag dat we dichtbij een eiland waren. Ik zag prachtige natuur.
‘We zouden er zelfs naartoe kunnen zwemmen,’ zei mijn tante, die net uit de kajuit kwam. Ik omhelsde haar weer. Ze gaf mij een kus.
‘Ik heb je zo gemist,’ zei ik, en ik weende weer. Zij weende ook. We hielden elkaar heel lang vast, maar toen moesten we gaan zitten, want het schip schommelde teveel, en er waren nog steeds woeste golven. ‘Dit is het paradijs,’ zei ze. ‘Die golven komen ons halen.’
Plotseling kwam er een enorme golf over het schip, die ons meesleurde. Ik voelde me geweldig. Even later spoelden we aan op het strand van het natuur-eiland. Het was hier prachtig. Prachtige struiken, prachtige bomen met grote bladeren, dikke bladeren, en het zand was hier warm en heel zanderig. ‘We zitten eronder,’ zei mijn oom. Ik raakte hem even aan. ‘Ben jij het echt ?’ vroeg ik. Hij glimlachte. ‘Ja, ik ben het echt,’ zei hij. Ik omhelsde hem toen, en weende weer, en hij weende ook. ‘Het was een verschrikkelijke nacht,’ zei ik. ‘Te verschrikkelijk voor woorden.’

Hij knikte, en zei zachtjes ‘ja.’ Hij was nooit een man van vele woorden geweest.
Dit kon gewoon niet waar zijn. Dat kon gewoon niet. Het leek alsof de zwarte nacht nog steeds aan mij trok. Ik had steken in mijn hoofd en nare gedachten. Mijn oom nam mij bij mijn arm en trok mij met hem mee verder het eiland op. Mijn tante volgde. Ik voelde overal pijn van de zwarte nacht. We kwamen aan bij een huisje. Het leek een soort vakantie huisje, maar het had vele kamers en was langwerpig, als een sta-caravan maar dan veel groter en meer als een huis. We gingen naar binnen en er hingen overal gordijnen van gaas door het huis heen.
Er was hier een vrouw die op blote voeten liep en er uitzag als een hippie, alsof we weer terug waren in de zeventiger jaren. Ze had het allemaal over channelen, en dat relaties ook allemaal om channelen ging. Hele verhalen hing ze op. Ze was heel gastvrij. ‘Dus jullie komen uit de zwarte nacht ?’ vroeg ze na haar lange verhaal over channelen.

Wij knikten en zeiden ‘ja.’
‘Wij komen allemaal uit de zwarte nacht,’ zei ze. ‘Wij zijn hier om hen die uit de zwarte nacht komen op te vangen.’
Ik knikte. Ik vertelde haar dat ze op een hippie leek uit de zeventiger jaren.
‘De zwarte nacht begon in de tachtiger jaren,’ zei ze. ‘We werden allemaal in slaap gehouden. Nu zijn we terug in de zeventiger jaren.’
‘Oh, we zijn terug ?’ vroeg ik.
Ik voelde pijn, pijn en pijn. Ik keek naar haar voeten. ‘Nee !’ riep ik. ‘Ik wil niet terug naar de zeventiger jaren !’ Ik rende naar buiten verder het eiland op. Ik was bang om weer in de zwarte nacht te worden getrokken. Mijn oom en tante volgden mij. Maar ze werden door iets tegengehouden, en hier waren ook allemaal gordijnen van gaas. Ik zag een donkere vrouw bij een tent waar ook gaas hing. ‘Wat is dat ?’ vroeg ik. De vrouw kwam naar me toe.
‘Welkom,’ zei ze, met een Surinaams accent. ‘Dat je mij nog hebt kunnen vinden na de zwarte nacht. Velen komen niet zo ver. Mijn complimenten.’ Ze gaf me toen een zoen. Ze gaf me toen een rieten stoel met gaatjes en gebood me te zitten. Ik zag mijn oom en tante nog steeds worstelen met de gordijnen van gaas in de verte.

‘Laat ze maar even worstelen,’ zei de vrouw. ‘Ze komen vanzelf wel.’
‘Wie bent u ?’ vroeg ik.
‘Doet niet ter zake,’ zei ze. ‘Het zijn geen problemen.’
Maar toen vaagde haar stem weg, en ook zijzelf. Ik begon naar mijn tante en oom te roepen, maar toen vond ik dat geen goed idee, en ging nog verder het eiland op. Hier begon alles te draaien, en ik moest terug, ik kon niet anders. Weer zag ik mijn tante en oom achter gaas, en daarachter lag het huis van de hippie vrouw. Ik besloot maar bij de tent te blijven. Ik was ineens heel moe, en er was daar een bed achter een gordijn van gaas, wit gaas, en ik ging op het bed liggen. Ik was zo moe. Al snel viel ik in slaap, en zag de donkere vrouw weer in een droom. ‘Als je nou snel bent, dan kun je bij me eten, ik ben even aan het koken,’ zei ze.
‘Daar gaat het niet om,’ zei ik. ‘Ik heb geen honger.’
‘Oh nee, oh nee ?’ vroeg ze toen. ‘Waar ga je dan naartoe als je niet met me wil spelen ?’
‘Wie bent u ?’ vroeg ik weer.
‘Het wonder van de rivier,’ zei ze. ‘Je hebt in mij gekeken, en hebt zo de vloek van de zwarte nacht verbroken.’
De droom vaagde weer weg en ik viel in een diepere slaap.

‘Kom met me mee,’ zei ze toen. ‘Ik wil je iets laten zien.’
Ik werd weer wakker en zag dat ze er weer was. ‘Ik ben zo moe,’ zei ik.
Ze had kleine zwarte dwergjes aan haar hand, en die liepen ook door de tent heen, en buiten. ‘De dwergen van de zwarte nacht,’ zei ze.
‘Oh, die boosdoeners,’ zei ik. ‘Zijn we in gevaar ?’
‘Welnee,’ zei ze. ‘We zouden juist in gevaar zijn als we ze niet zouden hebben opgemerkt. Nu, wegwezen jongens, terug het bos in.’
En toen maakten de dwergjes het op een lopen. Ze glimlachte. ‘Zie, niks aan de hand,’ zei ze.
Ik keek in haar ogen en droomde weg. Ik kon er een nieuwe wereld in zien, een nieuwe tijd. Ze omhelsde mij, en legde haar hand op mijn hoofd.
‘U moet moeder natuur wel zijn,’ zei ik.
‘Ja, mijn jongen, mijn zoon,’ sprak ze. ‘Ik ben het wonder van de rivier, de verdrijver van de zwarte nacht.’
‘Oh, u bent de morgen van de natuur ?’ vroeg ik.
‘Zoiets,’ zei ze.
‘Dat was vroeger altijd mijn stopwoord,’ zei ik. ‘Of zoiets.’
Ze glimlachte. ‘Ja, je hebt altijd veel om mij geroepen. Daarom ben je hier. Ik heb je geroep beantwoord.’

Daar kwamen mijn oom en tante aan. Ze waren eindelijk langs de gordijnen van gaas heengegaan. ‘Wie is zij ?’ vroeg mijn tante.

‘Moeder natuur, aangenaam,’ zei de donkere vrouw, terwijl ze haar hand uitstak. ‘En dit hier is mijn zoon, mijn roepende en geroepene.’

‘Ze is het wonder van de rivier, tante,’ zei ik. ‘De morgen van de natuur. Door haar zijn wij ontwaakt.’

‘Ach welnee,’ zei de vrouw. ‘Jullie hebben jezelf wakker gemaakt door jullie geroep. Ik ben slechts de echo ervan.’

Einde

Op naar de volgende klant

Vrouwen hebben soms hele duistere mechanismes waar veel meer achter steekt dan je op het eerste gezicht zou denken. Mannen hebben dat soms ook. Daarover gaat het nu volgende verhaal.
Kun je het je voorstellen ? Je belt naar de uitvaartverzekering om wat vragen te stellen, en je krijgt een vrouw aan de lijn die dat voor je uit gaat zoeken en daarvoor even geduld vraagt, en dat je dan zegt : ‘Oh, ik heb alle tijd, doe maar rustig aan,’ en dat zij dan zegt : ‘dat komt goed uit, want ik heb ook alle tijd, kunnen we daarna ook gezellig even wat babbelen.’
Het is mij eens overkomen. Meestal heb ik stijve pieten aan de lijn, de hele enkele keren dat ik naar zo’n instantie bel. Ik kon het me ook goed voorstellen hoe die vrouw was, want je zou daar maar werken. Maar goed, ik dacht toen : Wat als ik een hele andere persoon was geweest die daar echt op ingespeeld zou hebben, want ik ben meestal gewoon bescheiden, beleefd, voorzichtig en ingetogen. Stel nu dat de persoon die zij aan de lijn had er echt een slaatje uit zou slaan ? Want ik bleef maar aan die situatie denken, aan die uitvaartverzekering en hoe zij was. Ze snakte gewoon naar het land van de levenden, om het zomaar eens te zeggen. Lijkt me een akelig beroep.

De laatste keer dat ik op een begrafenis was geweest, en dat is al heel lang geleden, op die van mijn opa, kon ik het niet meer volhouden. Dat kon gewoon niet, dat stijve gedoe allemaal. Daar zat mijn opa niet op te wachten. Het was zwaar depressief, en ik begon allemaal grapjes te maken op de begraafplaats, eigenlijk hoe een schoolgenoot dat deed op het college tijdens de excursie naar Parijs, waar we ook een begraafplaats bezochten. 'Wat een dode boel hier.' En : 'Het is hier doodstil,' zei hij. En daarna : 'Ik wordt er doodziek van.' Hij had heel veel humor. De buschauffeur had ijs gegeten en zijn snor zat eronder. Die jongen zei toen : 'Mag ik uw snor aflikken.' Door zijn humor was het een leuke excursie, en kan je zo'n bezoekje aan een begraafplaats toch beter verwerken. Nu moest ik dus nog zo'n telefoontje naar de uitvaartverzekering verwerken, en het was al een hulp dat het zo'n aardige, gezellige vrouw was, maar ik bleef er maar aan denken, en 'wat als ze een persoon aan de lijn had gekregen die hier veel verder mee was gegaan.' En zo ontstond dit verhaal.

Op naar de volgende klant

Hij belde naar zijn uitvaartverzekering voor wat vragen. De vrouw die hij aan de telefoon kreeg moest dat even uitzoeken en vroeg even geduld.
‘Oh, ik heb alle tijd,’ zei hij, ‘doe maar rustig aan.´
‘Nou,’ zei de vrouw, ‘dat komt goed uit, want ik heb ook alle tijd, kunnen we daarna ook gezellig even wat babbelen.’
‘Nou ja,’ zei hij, ‘als u er dan toch over begint kunnen we ook net zo goed telefoon-sex hebben.’
De vrouw begon te lachen. ‘Ik kom zo bij u terug, even wat uitzoeken.’
‘Daar ben ik weer,’ sprak ze.
‘Welcome back,’ zei hij.
‘Dank u, nou ik heb het voor u uitgezocht, uw vraag, en het klopt helemaal wat u zegt.’
‘Nou ja,’ zei hij, ‘dat is dan mooi opgelost, en ik kan me voorstellen dat u ook wel aan wat uitstapjes toe bent met zo’n beroep. U houdt er zeker niet van om alleen te zijn in zo’n kantoor.’
‘Ach, ik ben eraan gewend,’ zei ze.
‘Ik vind het maar griezelig,’ zei hij. ‘Maar ja, geboorte, de dood, leven en sex horen bij elkaar. We kunnen trouwens ook gewoon een afspraak maken. Aan de telefoon is alles ook zo afstandelijk.'

De vrouw begon te lachen. 'U bent me wel een doorzetter, maar leuk. Dat heb ik nog nooit meegemaakt dat iemand me dat bij het werk vroeg. Ze willen meestal weer zo snel mogelijk de hoorn op de haak gooien. Het is natuurlijk een onderwerp waar men liever niet over spreekt, en waar men liever niet te lang over nadenkt.'
'Begrijp ik, begrijp ik,' zei hij, 'maar ik heb oog voor de persoon achter het werk. Ik zou u graag eens ontmoeten. Dan kunnen we elkaar van een hele andere kant leren kennen.'
'Jazeker,' zei de vrouw. 'Klinkt heel gezellig.'
'En trouwens,' zei hij, 'het is de eerste keer dat ik een gezellig iemand bij jullie aan de lijn heb, want meestal zijn het allemaal van die saaie pieten met zakelijke stemmen.'
Opeens werd de verbinding verbroken. Na een paar dagen kreeg hij een brief van haar dat ze werd afgeluisterd, en dat ze het te ver vonden gaan, dus werd de verbinding verbroken. Ze had een waarschuwing gekregen, maar wilde het contact wel buiten werk uren met hem onderhouden.

Hij was blij, en schreef haar een brief terug. Hij vroeg zich af waarom ze hem niet gewoon gebeld had na werkuren, maar het bleek niet zo makkelijk te zijn. Waarom legde ze dan ook niet uit. Ze maakten een afspraak per brief ergens in een plantsoen. Toen ze elkaar uiteindelijk daar tegen kwamen was het heel amicaal. Ze omhelsden elkaar direct en waren blij elkaar te zien.
‘Ja, zie je,’ zei ze, ‘ik heb een vriendin, en die houdt alles in de gaten.’
‘Oh, een vriendin ?’ zei hij, ‘ben je er zo een. Maar vindt ze dit dan wel goed ?’
‘Nee, eigenlijk niet. Maar ik moet er even uit, want ze is zo beknellend,’ maakte ze duidelijk.
‘Maar hebben jullie een relatie of is het gewoon een huisgenoot ?’ vroeg hij.
‘Huisgenoot,’ zei ze, ‘maar het zit heel ingewikkeld. Het is haar huis, en ze had mij geholpen met schulden, en ze heeft allemaal vreemde voorwaarden.’
‘Ik zie het, klinkt griezelig,’ zei hij. ‘En je werk betaalt je niet genoeg uit om op jezelf te wonen ?’
‘Nee joh,’ zei ze. ‘Daar vangt zij het grootste gedeelte van. Ik zit helemaal aan de ketting op dit moment.’
‘Maar dan kom je toch gewoon bij mij wonen ?’ vroeg hij.

‘Nee joh, dat kan niet, want ik zit vast aan het contract, met al die voorwaarden. Dat gaat me nooit lukken,’ zei ze.
‘Ik moet ook weer op tijd terug zijn, dus we kunnen wel ergens een ijsje kopen en even wat babbelen, maar dan moet ik toch echt weer terug.’
Zo gezegd, zo gedaan. Ze gingen ergens een ijsje kopen, babbelden weer wat, en toen moest ze weer gaan.
Via een brief liet ze toen weten dat ze wel dan meer afspraakjes zoals deze konden maken, maar dat ze ook in code taal aan de telefoon konden praten. Die code taal moest hij dan leren. Hij vond het allemaal zwaar ingewikkeld, maar stond er wel voor open. Zo belde hij haar soms en spraken in code taal. Maar na een tijdje begon ze niet meer op te nemen, en kwamen er ook geen brieven meer. Hij besloot naar haar huis te gaan om te kijken wat er gaande was. Haar vriendin deed open, en hij vroeg naar haar. ‘Ze is overleden,’ zei ze.
‘Waaraan ?’ vroeg hij geschrokken.
‘Doodsoorzaak onbekend,’ zei ze.
Maar hij hoorde haar roepen vanuit de kamer. ‘Ik hoor haar, laat me erdoor.’ Hij drukte de vriendin opzij en ging naar binnen.
‘Dat kun je niet doen !’ riep ze. ‘Mijn vriendin …’

Hij keek achter zich en daar stond haar vriendin met een getrokken pistool. Hij moest zich toen uitkleden en moest een kooi in. ‘Wat een raar gedoe allemaal,’ zei hij.
‘Ja, ze is gek,’ zei zijn meisje. ‘Doe nou maar gewoon wat ze zegt.’
‘Ik ben niet gek,’ zei haar vriendin. ‘We hadden nog wat af te handelen.’
‘Vreemde zaak, vreemd bedrijf,’ zei hij. ‘En wat is dat voor bedrijf, wat voor soort schuldaflossing is het ?’
‘Afwas-fabriek,’ zei ze. ‘Wij maken afwasmiddelen.’
‘Zit je me in de maling te nemen ?’ vroeg hij.
‘Nee,’ zei ze, ‘zo zitten de zaken nu eenmaal. Ik heb haar schuld afgelost, ik heb haar van haar vriendje gered, en ik heb gezworen dat ik haar voor de rest van haar leven zou beschermen.’
‘Dat is waar,’ zei zijn meisje, ‘maar ze is een beetje overbeschermend. Ik heb het gevoel dat ik stik.’
‘Houd even je mond,’ zei haar vriendin, ‘dit heerschap hier is een mogelijk gevaar voor jouw geestelijke gezondheid.’
‘Lijkt er eerder op dat je zelf het gevaar bent. Het probleem heeft zich nu verschoven van het vriendje naar de vriendin,’ zei hij.
‘Houd jij ook even je mond,’ zei ze. ‘Luister : Zij is psychisch helemaal niet capabel. Ze is wilsonbekwaam. Ik heb de papieren van haar psychiater, en ik ben over haar aangesteld.'

'Ja, die psychiaters kunnen wel meer vertellen, dat zegt allemaal niet zoveel. Haar wordt haar vrijheid ontnomen zo, en dat is een misdaad,' zei hij. 'Wat je nu trouwens allemaal doet is ook een misdaad, maar dat is een ander verhaal.'
'Luister,' zei de vriendin : 'Je begrijpt er helemaal niets van. Ze heeft een gevaarlijke ziekte. Ik zeg het maar even. Ik neem jou ook in bescherming tegen haar nu.'
'En wat is die ziekte dan wel ?' vroeg hij.
'Nou, ze maakt van haar werk haar hobby, en van de zaak iets persoonlijks,' zei ze. 'Ze papt aan met klanten, en daar kunnen de grootst mogelijke ongelukken van komen. Ze kent geen onderscheid tussen haar beroep en sociale contacten.'
'Ja, maar dat maakt toch niet uit ?' zei hij.
'Jawel,' zei ze. 'Ze werkt bij een uitvaartcentrum, en dan weet je hoe laat het is.'
'Nou,' zei hij. 'Daarom bood ik haar ook telefoonsex aan. De dood hoort bij het leven, bij geboorte, en ook bij sex.'
'Zie, dat bedoel ik,' zei ze. 'Dat kun je toch niet maken ?'

‘Ik snap niet wat haar ziekte dan precies is,’ zei hij, ‘en hoe zou dat gevaarlijk zijn. Wees nu eens concreet, want het enige gevaar ben jij volgens mij. Als ik het mis heb moet je het maar zeggen, maar je hebt me inmiddels met je pistool tot uitkleden gedwongen en ik zit hier in een kooi.’
‘Dat heeft er allemaal niets mee te maken,’ zei ze.
‘Ik begrijp jou niet,’ zei hij. ‘Ik begrijp hier helemaal niks van. Waarom doe je zo ?’
‘Laat haar nou maar,’ zei zijn meisje toen. ‘Zo is ze altijd al geweest.’
‘Ik kan er maar niet aan wennen,’ zei hij.
‘Trek nu je kleren maar weer aan,’ zei ze, ‘en kom uit die kooi, en ga weg en vergeet alles wat hier gebeurd is.’
‘Ben je gek ?’ zei hij. ‘Dat is mijn meisje.’
‘Ben jij gek ?’ vroeg ze. ‘Dat is mijn vriendin.’
‘Nee, je bezit haar, houdt haar in gevangenschap, hebt haar gehersenspoeld, enzovoorts,’ zei hij.
‘Okay, mijnheer enzovoorts, en nu opdonderen, want je begint op mijn zenuwen te werken,’ zei ze. ‘Vertrek en vergeet alles wat hier is gebeurd.’
Met haar pistool dwong ze hem toen de straat op, met zijn kleren in zijn armen. Hij heeft zich toen aangekleed en vertrok weer naar huis. Een paar dagen erna kreeg hij een afscheidsbrief.

‘Afscheidsbrief,

Bedankt voor de ontzettend gezellige tijd.
Helaas is mijn vriendin er tussen gekomen, en heeft het niet het gewenste resultaat opgeleverd.
Ik hoop dat u mij kunt vergeven.
De liefde was wederzijds, maar mijn plichten roepen mij.
Uitvaarten zijn een stuk duurder geworden, dat moet ik u beroepshalve mededelen.
Uw huidige verzekering dekt niet het bedrag wat u nodig zult hebben.
Ik heb daarmee mijn plicht voleindigd om u dit mede te delen.’

Hij is toen huilend teruggegaan, en ze hebben hem er toen op gewezen dat hij toch echt zijn verzekeringsbedrag moest verhogen. Dat heeft hij toen gedaan, en toen kreeg hij haar mee. Ja ja, de uitvaartverzekeringen van vandaag hebben hun taktieken. ‘Wat een gedoe allemaal,’ dacht hij. Maar hij had haar nu in ieder geval. Misschien dat dingen zo werkten.

‘Zit ik nu opgescheept met een robot ?’ dacht hij na een tijdje.
‘Ze wil altijd maar afwassen, en ons hele huis staat vol met afwasmiddelen, zelfs op zolder.’
Hij kwam erachter dat ze inderdaad een robot was.
Het bleek dat de uitvaartverzekering een onderhandelingscontract had met de afwasfabriek.
Zo profiteerden ze beiden van deze klant.
Maar ja, goed, hij had nu tenminste een vrouw, ook al was ze een robot.
Op een dag nam ze de benen, rende het bos in, en verdween in een bosmeertje.
Ze had een briefje achtergelaten : ‘Op naar de volgende klant.’

RNL-POCKETS
REEDS EERDER VERSCHENEN :

NR. 1 – HET OORLOGS-SPEL
16 korte verhalen
97 pagina's

NR. 2 – DE TUIN VAN MEVROUW VAN DALEN
9 korte verhalen
114 pagina’s

rnl-pockets nr. 19

bonje in de christelijk-gereformeerde kerk

korte verhalen

een uitgave van schoolsupermarkt

Bonje in de christelijk gereformeerde kerk

korte verhalen

Bonje in de christelijk gereformeerde kerk

korte verhalen

schoolsupermarkt
2024

Bonje in de christelijk gereformeerde kerk
korte verhalen

Uitgave : rnl-pockets
nr. 19
1970-2024

2024 rodenbergs-nederlandse letterkunde

Een uitgave van schoolsupermarkt

1 De Wonderplaatjes 5
2 het prolo steegje 15
3 Het Gele Gevaar 23
4 van het jongetje en het veulentje - de veulentjeshoeder 25
5 het donkere ijzer 28
6 De Eddy’s 31
7 Bonje in de christelijk gereformeerde kerk 38
8 Koning Stuiterbal 44
9 De Gokkoning van Ovven 63
10 De Zandman van Ovven 142

De Wonderplaatjes

Hij verkocht plaatjes van vrouwen. De plaatjes bewogen, maar het waren eigenlijk een soort verhalen. Volgens de politie gingen de verhalen te ver, en daarom was het ook verboden. Plaatjesdealers waren in de ogen van de politie erger dan drugsdealers. Hij verkocht de plaatjes daarom ook altijd stiekem, en liever helemaal niet. Dit maakte hem mysterieus. Zijn plaatjes waren gewild, maar eigenlijk moest je wel heel speciaal zijn wilde je een kans hebben zo'n plaatje van hem te kunnen kopen. De plaatjes waren ook nog eens erg duur. Theo was helemaal door het dolle heen toen hij op een dag zo'n zeer gewild plaatje kon bemachtigen. Hij kon er uren naar staren. Het plaatje bewoog, en ook de lippen van de vrouw, en zij vertelde een verhaal. Het plaatje gaf dus ook geluid af. Met een draaischijf aan de zijkant van het plaatje kun je het geluid harder of zachter zetten. Hij liet het verhaal telkens weer afspelen totdat hij het uit zijn hoofd kende en gewoon naar de lippen van de vrouw keek. Hij vond het verhaal helemaal niet te ver gaan, maar hij hoorde van anderen dat de andere verhalen veel erger waren. Hij zou wel meer van zulke plaatjes willen hebben, maar hij was al dolgelukkig dat hij er één had. Hij had nooit gedacht dat het hem op een dag zou lukken zo'n plaatje te krijgen. Al zijn klasgenootjes waren stikjaloers.

Hij speelde er teveel mee, zelfs op school, en op een dag nam de juffrouw het van hem af. 'Je weet dat die plaatjes verboden zijn,' zei de juffrouw. En hij wist toen dat de pret was afgelopen. Hij was te ver gegaan en te onvoorzichtig geweest. Hij kon zichzelf wel voor z'n kop slaan. Sommige jongens van de oudere klassen lieten nog steeds hun plaatjes wapperen, maar alleen op het schoolplein. Ze zouden het niet in de klas doen waar de meester of juffrouw het kon zien. Het waren vaak vrienden van de jongen die de plaatjes verkocht. Theo vertelde het verhaal aan de jongen die de plaatjes verkocht toen hij hem weer zag, maar die was niet geïnteresseerd. "Had je maar beter moeten oppassen," zei de jongen. "Je krijgt geen nieuwe."

Theo ging teleurgesteld naar huis, en vertelde het aan zijn vader en moeder. "Ach," zei zijn moeder, "ik heb nog wel zulke plaatjes voor je. Wij hadden ze vroeger ook. Ze moeten ergens in een doos op zolder liggen nog." Theo was helemaal door het dolle heen. Zijn moeder kwam even later aanzetten met een hele schoenendoos vol met bewegende plaatjes. Theo nam ze één voor één uit de schoenendoos. "Wat zijn het voor verhalen, mam ?" vroeg hij.

"Ga ze maar luisteren," zei zijn moeder, "maar neem ze nooit mee naar school. Je hebt inmiddels gezien wat er dan kan gebeuren."

Hij nam de schoenendoos mee naar zijn kamer en ging luisteren. Hij hing de plaatjes in zijn kamer. Niemand, maar dan ook niemand, kon zijn geluk nog tegenhouden. Hij begon zich steeds meer op zijn kamer op te sluiten, en wilde niet meer naar school. De plaatjes onderwezen hem beter, zei hij. Maar hij werd een verslaafde, en had al snel andere plaatjes nodig. Hij zocht contact met de plaatjesdealer, maar die dacht dat hij gek geworden was. "Kijk eens naar jezelf," zei de plaatjesdealer, "je staat helemaal te trillen, en je ogen zijn helemaal rood. Dit is niet meer normaal. Hoe kwam je aan die plaatjes ?"

"Van mijn moeder," zei Theo. "Van vroeger."

De plaatjesdealer keek hem diep in zijn ogen. "Weet je het dan niet ?" zei hij. "Vroeger verkochten ze gevaarlijke rommel. Die vrouwen zijn gevaarlijk. Ze maken je gek."

"Wat kan ik doen ?" vroeg Theo. "Ik smeek je me te helpen."

De plaatjesdealer keek hem weer diep in zijn ogen. "Ik heb je gewaarschuwd," zei hij, en liep weg.

"Nee, alsjeblieft," huilde Theo. "Je moet me helpen."

De plaatjesdealer draaide zich om. "Vooruit," zei hij. "Breng mij die plaatjes van vroeger en je krijgt van mij een nieuwe." Even later kwam Theo met de schoenendoos en gaf het aan de plaatjesdealer. Theo kreeg in ruil een nieuw plaatje. Dat was alles wat hij nodig had. Toen de plaatjesdealer thuis kwam zette hij de schoenendoos met plaatjes op een tafel, en begon op de vrouwen te schelden. "Jullie moeten getemd worden. Jullie hebben die jongen helemaal het hoofd gek lopen maken." Maar het temmen liep op niets uit. De plaatjesdealer raakte gefrustreerd en op een dag gooide hij de schoenendoos met plaatjes weg. Maar toen kreeg hij ineens een ingeving. Hij dacht aan Theo, en toen aan de moeder van Theo. Hij zou de schoenendoos naar haar terugbrengen en haar zeggen dat ze het niet meer terug moest geven aan Theo. Theo's moeder begreep het hele verhaal en ze zou de schoenendoos goed opbergen. Theo's moeder zou ook wel eens alle nieuwe plaatjes willen zien. De plaatjesdealer nam haar toen mee naar zijn huis. De plaatjes hingen door het hele huis. Theo's moeder keek haar ogen uit. "Kan ik er wat meer kopen voor Theo ?" vroeg ze. De plaatjesdealer stemde toe. De plaatjes waren heel duur, maar Theo's moeder was rijk, zeer rijk. Ze kwam toen met een heleboel nieuwe plaatjes thuis voor Theo. Maar de pret duurde niet lang. De politie had er hoogte van gekregen en begon huiszoekingen te doen, en Theo werd niet overgeslagen. De plaatjes werden in beslag genomen, en ook de schoenendoos werd gevonden en in beslag genomen.

Theo's moeder waarschuwde de politie voor het gevaar van de plaatjes, maar ze luisterden niet. Snel wist iedereen het. De politie was binnen korte tijd een stel verslaafden. Ze waren zoals Theo eens was, trillerig, met rode ogen, en smekend. Maar er waren geen meerdere plaatjes meer, hoe veel ze ook op huiszoeking gingen. Ze smeekten de plaatjesdealer om meer plaatjes, en ze smeekten ook Theo en zijn moeder. "Probeer het maar bij juffrouw Jans," zei Theo. "Zij heeft eens zo'n plaatje van me afgenomen." Daar strompelden ze toen als dronkaarden naartoe. "Tja," zei de juffrouw, "die heb ik eens aan mijn ex-man gegeven en die woont nu in het buitenland."

Ze moesten en zouden daar naartoe gaan, maar onderweg verdwaalden ze. Ze waren niet henzelf meer en hadden hun gevoel van orientatie verloren. "Het plaatje, het plaatje !" riepen ze. Ze had hen ook nog eens een vals adres gegeven. Ze kwamen uiteindelijk aan bij het huis van een oude vrouw aan de rand van een bos, in het buitenland. Ze vroegen direct om het plaatje. "Plaatje ?" vroeg de vrouw. "Waar hebben jullie het over ?" Toen vertelden ze stotterend en stamelend het hele verhaal, terwijl het speeksel van hun monden droop. "Ik zal direct de dokter bellen," zei het vrouwtje. "Het gaat niet goed met jullie." Toen de dokter kwam kreeg hij ook het hele verhaal te horen. "Oh, die plaatjes ?" zei hij. "Ik heb er eens een hele doos van geërfd, van wel honderden jaren geleden. Je mag ze wel hebben als jullie denken dat het jullie gaat helpen. Ik doe er toch niets mee." De dokter nam de trillende en bevende politie-agenten mee naar zijn huis, en liet hen de doos zien. "Plaatjes, plaatjes, plaatjes !" riepen de agenten, alsof ze goud hadden gevonden. Hun ogen puilden er helemaal uit, en ze grepen de plaatjes en begonnen ze in het rond te strooien alsof ze in een geldmijn waren gekomen. "Plaatjes, plaatjes, plaatjes !" riepen ze. Dat was alles wat ze nog konden zeggen. De vrouw van de dokter schudde haar hoofd. "Die plaatjes werden vroeger verboden, en ik weet nu waarom," sprak ze. "Mensen worden stapelgek."

"Ik heb er wel een medicijn voor denk ik," zei de dokter.

"Dan mag je snel zijn," zei zijn vrouw. "Anders wordt jij er zo ook nog door aangestoken." De dokter keek zijn vrouw aan met rode ogen, en toen weer naar de plaatjes die overal om hem heen lagen. "Plaatjes, plaatjes, plaatjes !" riep de dokter, en waggelde achter de politie-agenten aan. "We moeten meer van die rotzooi hebben, waar zijn ze ?" riep de dokter. Maar niet lang daarna kon hij ook alleen maar "plaatjes, plaatjes, plaatjes" zeggen. "Jullie hebben teveel praatjes !" riep de vrouw van de dokter. Ze begon de plaatjes op te rapen en deed ze weer in de doos. "Levensgevaarlijk zulke plaatjes," sprak ze. "Ik zal het goed opbergen." Maar de politie-agenten en de dokter waren niet meer stil te krijgen. De dokter had inmiddels zijn muziek-instrumenten gegrepen en begon ze uit te delen aan de politie-agenten, en ze begonnen muziek te maken, zo vreemd, want ze konden immers niet meer spreken. En zo gingen ze door het hele land, marcherend. En de mensen kenden het verhaal niet, maar ze vonden het prachtige muziek. En iedereen werd erdoor aangestoken, en er werden grammofoon-plaatjes van gemaakt. Iedereen had ze na een tijdje wel in huis. En er kwam vrede op aarde en niemand werd er meer ziek. Politie en dokters waren niet meer nodig. Ze waren nu muzikanten geworden, en dat was het beste.

het prolo steegje

-- Hallo, mag ik even wat vragen. Mijn relatie is net uit, hè, en nu dacht ik : Ik zie u hier nu net lopen, en u lijkt wel een beetje op haar, dus wou ik vragen of wij dan niet samen iets zouden kunnen proberen, weet je wel, zo van misschien dat het tussen ons klikt, en dat ik dan met jou verder kan.

-Ach, maar meneer, ik ken u helemaal niet. Ik kom u hier voor het eerst tegen in het Prolo steegje. U loopt nogal hard van stapel. Dat kan echt niet hoor.

-- Ja, maar we kunnen het toch proberen ?
Nee heb je, en ja kun je krijgen.

-Ach meneer, ik heb echt geen tijd voor deze dingen. Ik heb ook nogal haast. U zult heus wel weer iemand anders vinden.

-- Ja, maar het is al laat en ik heb echt onderdak nodig. Ik ben uit huis gezet en zij heeft al mijn bezittingen in beslag genomen. Ik heb niks meer.

-Nou goed, dan geef ik u wat geld en een fiets. Daar moet u het dan mee doen.

-- Dank u wel mevrouw.

-Zo, hier is het. Nou, goeie reis, hè, en je zal heus wel weer wat leuks vinden.

--Nou, ik heb liever niet iets leuks, maar iets sterks. Ik vind die vrouwen van tegenwoordig zo slap. Ze lopen alleen maar mooi te doen, maar hebben geen sterk karakter. Ze zijn niet sterk.

-Ja, maar meneer, daar kan ik toch ook niks aan doen ?

-- Maar u lijkt me zo'n sterke vrouw. Dat heb ik echt nodig.

-Nou, kom dan maar even met me mee naar boven. Hier woon ik. Dan kun je een douche nemen, en dan geef ik je wat te eten.

-- Nee, alsjeblieft geen eten. Ik voel me tamelijk ziek en misselijk.

-Nou, dan geef ik je een warm bed. Heb je daar wat aan misschien ? Kun je weer aansterken en tot rust komen.

-- Misschien wat water zou helpen. En ligt u dan ook in het bed ?

-Nee, wees maar niet bang. Ik slaap in een ander bed.

-- Gelukkig maar, want dat is wel eng met zo'n sterke vrouw als u.

-Eng ? Nee hoor, ik ben helemaal niet eng. Ik doe geen vreemde dingen. Heeft u nare dingen met uw vorige vrouw meegemaakt dan ?

-- Ik werd soms halfdood wakker.

-Dat is geen pretje. En u weet zeker dat het door haar kwam ?

-- Vrijwel zeker, maar haar zus sliep soms ook bij ons.

-Nou gevaarlijke familie dan. Hier zul je dat echt niet hebben. Ik ben tamelijk vreedzaam.

-- Dus ik mag komen ?

-Nou eigenlijk begin ik me te bedenken. Wat als uw vrouw en haar zus nog steeds naar u op jacht zijn ?

-- Kun je mij beschermen ?

-Nou nee, daar ben ik niet voor. Ik zou gewoon hard fietsen als ik u was. Hier heeft u uw fiets.

-- Ik ben eigenlijk te moe. Kan ik niet één nachtje bij u slapen dan ? Mag zelfs in hetzelfde bed.

-Nou ja, zeg, ik ken u helemaal niet. Ik zit hier een beetje gastvrij te lopen doen, maar heb er nu alweer spijt van.

-- Sorry. Heeft u geen zus dan die misschien wat makkelijker en handiger in deze dingen is ? Ik zoek een beetje een sterke vrouw.

-Probeert u mij nu jaloers te maken ?

-- Misschien. Ik moet toch wat.

-Nou, komt u dan gewoon met mij mee, dan gaan we het proberen.

-- Laat maar, ik zie er vanaf.

-Heeft u nu mijn tijd voor niets lopen verdoen ? Nee, u komt nu gewoon met mij mee. Niet lopen zeuren opeens. U heeft mij in dit avontuur gestort, en ik laat me niet zomaar wegkieperen ineens.

-- Ja, maar ik wil niet.

–Dan had je dat eerder moeten bedenken. Er is nu geen weg terug meer. U gaat nu gewoon met mij mee. Jas uit, warme douche, en dan lekker slapen. Ik zorg voor de rest.

-- Maar wat als ik me bedenk ?

–Meneer, u bent wel heel erg wispelturig. U loopt toch geen spelletjes met mij te spelen hier, hoop ik hè ?

-- Okay, ik vind ook dat u helemaal gelijk hebt. Ik moet mij niet zo aanstellen.

-Goedzo. En hoe gaat ons kind heten ?

-- Melk.

-Melk ?

-- Waarom niet ? Ik heet zelf namelijk Melkert, en dat is mijn achternaam ook.

-Hmmm, Melkert Melkert … zeer charmante naam. Aangenaam met u kennis te maken. Dat dat zo maar kan in zo'n steegje hè. Zou ik normaal gesproken nooit doen, maar u heeft mij wel zo in de maling genomen en beetgehad. Dan kan ik er niet meer onderuit.

-- En u ook.

-Nou ja, misschien zijn we dan echt voor elkaar bestemd. We gaan het in ieder geval proberen.

-- Ik moet nu echt gaan hoor. Mijn vrouw wacht thuis op me, met haar zus.

-Maar u zei net tegen me dat uw relatie uit was en dat u uit uw huis was gezet ?

-- Ja, maar ze zei dat ik terug mocht komen als ik een grote buit zou hebben. Bedankt voor de fiets en het geld.

Einde

Het Gele Gevaar

Pas op voor het gele gevaar.

-- Wat is dat, dokter ?

Ik ben het gele gevaar.

-- Nou bedankt voor de waarschuwing dan, dokter. Dan zijn de rollen dus nu wel omgedraaid. Ik ben de dokter nu, want jij bent het gele gevaar.

Nee, nee, nee, dan heb je het verkeerd begrepen.

-- Ik heb helemaal niks verkeerd begrepen. Die spelletjes zijn nu afgelopen. Ik ben nu de dokter, niet jij. Jij bent het gele gevaar.

Wie zegt dat ?

-- Dat komt net uit je mond.

Waar is het bewijs ?

-- Geen bewijs nodig. Ik ben nu toch de dokter, dus ik heb geen bewijs meer nodig.

Belachelijk.

-- Goedzo, houden zo. We gaan hier niet een beetje het gele gevaar lopen spelen.

Maar je weet helemaal niet wat het is.

-- Jawel, je zei daarnet dat jij het was.

Helemaal niet. Ik moest uw oren nog laten uitspuiten.

van het jongetje en het veulentje
de veulentjeshoeder

Het veulentje moest naar school.
Daar had het veulentje geen zin in.
Het veulentje dacht : Weet je wat ? Ik ga mijn eigen school bouwen.
Maar voor een school heb je natuurlijk schoolboeken nodig,
En zo schreef het veulentje boek na boek, in grote haast.
Dag en nacht ging het door.
Al zwetend en hijgend schreef het veulentje dat het een lieve lust was.
Op een dag was de school klaar, en alle boeken geschreven, maar er kwam niemand.
Geen veulentje wilde zich eraan wagen.
Maar toen kreeg het veulentje een idee.
Hij maakte mooie strikjes, en deed die om de halzen van de andere veulentjes, en zei : 'Nu ben je van mij. En nu ben jij van deze school.'

En de veulentjes vonden de strikjes zo mooi, en het lag zo mooi om hun halzen dat ze het allemaal gingen geloven wat het veulentje zei, en braaf volgden ze het veulentje naar de nieuwe school.
In het land van de veulentjes woonde maar één jongetje.
Hij werd ook wel de veulentjeshoeder genoemd, maar eigenlijk hield hij zich niet met de veulentjes bezig. Hij had wel andere dingen te doen.
Het veulentje dacht dat het jongetje ook wel een strikje nodig had, dus het veulentje ging op pad naar het jongetje toe, en probeerde het strikje om zijn hals te doen.
'Hey,' zei het jongetje, 'wat moet dat daar ? Ik heb jouw strikjes niet nodig. Jij bent maar een veulentje, en ik ben een jongetje.'
Maar het veulentje bleef maar aandringen, en ook andere veulentjes waren meegekomen.
Het jongetje kreeg er nachtmerries van, en op een dag is hij weggerend, diep de bossen in, terwijl de veulentjes hem navolgden. Hij klom toen een grote berg op, maar was al gauw helemaal omsingeld door de veulentjes.

'Weten jullie het dan niet dat jullie maar veulentjes zijn, en ik een jongetje ?' zei het jongetje.
Bovenop de berg hing een touw die zo een wolk inging. Het jongetje klom toen op het touw naar boven, en kwam toen in een wolkenkasteel terecht waar een tovenaar hem aanstaarde. De tovenaar gaf hem toen een pen.
'Hiermee kun je altijd wegvliegen als de veulentjes je lastigvallen,' zei de tovenaar.
Toen het jongetje de pen had aangepakt van de tovenaar voelde het alsof hij vleugeltjes kreeg, en hij kon inderdaad vliegen. 'Mooizo,' zei het jongetje. En het jongetje begon te schrijven en te schrijven, en te vliegen naar allerlei andere landen waar de veulentjes niet waren.
En hij bouwde een school en heeft nooit meer last gehad van de veulentjes.

Einde

het donkere ijzer

IJzer in deze vreemde gevangenis …
Hij wilde naar de wildernis, maar zat hier vast.
Er was geen weg tot de wildernis.
Hij had een kamer hier. Maar er waren overal vreemde tralies en bij het minste of geringste gingen er alarmen af.
Wat moest hij doen ? Hij verveelde zich hier, maar had wat oude boeken op zijn kamer.
Hij wist niet meer hoe hij hier was gekomen.
Alles was donker hier, maar de boeken kon hij nog net lezen.
Het waren boeken over de wildernis.
Zo kon hij zich wanen in de wildernis, en als hij sliep droomde hij erover.
Hij wilde vrij zijn, maar hij was het niet.
Als hij ontwaakte voelde hij zich altijd depressief, maar de boeken gaven hem wat hoop.
Hij had geen kameraden. Er was hier niemand.

Er groeiden hier wat planten met vruchten die voedzaam waren, en waarvan hij kon drinken, maar hij had het gevoel dat het hem vergiftigde.
Hij besloot op een dag te stoppen met ervan te eten, en dronk alleen wat.
Maar hij hongerde zo uit dat het hem verzwakte.
Op sommige momenten had hij een kracht die hij niet kende.
Maar dat was meestal van korte duur.
Zijn zwakheid en moeheid werd steeds erger.
Hij trilde vaak, en beefde van de zwakheid, maar de krachten die hij soms voelde werden sterker en sterker.
Op een dag brak hij los uit de gevangenis vanwege zijn kracht, om even later te ontdekken dat het maar een droom was.
Soms als hij wakker was werd er voedsel door een luik geschoven, maar hij wist niet of hij het kon vertrouwen.
Ook waren er soms nieuwe boeken bij.
Donker ijzer.
Op een dag gooiden ze een vrouw in de gevangenis.

Ze sprak niet veel, en als ze sprak was het een andere taal.
Ze kwam uit de wildernis.
Maar het bleek maar een droom te zijn.
Hij wist niet meer het verschil tussen droom en werkelijkheid, en het kon hem niet meer zoveel schelen. Beiden was het intens, en ook de boeken waren intens. Er was geeneens meer een verschil tussen droom en werkelijkheid. Hij had het gevoel dat als hij ontwaakt was dat hij gewoon een nachtmerrie had.
Hij was in de wildernis, ja, hij was in de wildernis.
Soms stak een beest hem, en dan hallucineerde hij.
Soms had hij van een verkeerde plant of boom gegeten en dan hallucineerde hij.
Soms had hij nachtmerries, nachtmerries over een donkere, ijzeren gevangenis.

De Eddy’s

We zouden naar de Eddy’s gaan, die uitgereikt zouden worden aan de beste schrijvers. Wij vonden dat onzin, ik en mijn broertje, want goede melk behoeft geen krans. Maar we gingen er naartoe om schrijvers te ontmoeten en om te zoeken naar bijzondere boeken, in Geneve. We hadden al snel wat boeken gevonden en liepen al lezend door de stad. Calvijn zou ook komen naar de Eddy’s uitreiking, en die wilden we toch graag even zien. De Eddy’s waren onder een vloek. Dat wisten we wel zeker. Er waren wat dakloze calvinisten die ons aanvielen en ons bespuugden omdat wij er in hun ogen te armoedig uitzagen. Het lef dat sommige mensen hebben. Er is natuurlijk altijd weer baas boven baas, en arme onder armen. De armen zijn tegenwoordig racistisch naar de nog armeren, zoals de donkeren racistisch zijn naar de nog donkeren. Wij hadden natuurlijk geen plaats in Geneve, kwamen daar als landlopers, terwijl de calvinistische daklozen wel plaats hadden in Geneve, door mamma, zo noemden ze haar. Mamma had hen allemaal binnengenomen en ze leefden in schuilplaatsen. Zo bevoorrecht waren wij niet, dus moesten wij bespuugd worden. In ons eigen land waren armoedige kleren in de mode, en alhoewel zij ook armoedige kleren hadden accepteerden zij dat niet. Het kwam er misschien door dat onze kleren meer scheuren had, maar dat was in ons land de mode : hoe meer scheuren, hoe beter. Het kwam er ook misschien door dat onze kleren vuiler waren, maar dat was ook mode in ons land : hoe vuiler, hoe beter. Al met al besloot ik weg te vliegen, en nam ook mijn broertje op. Ik was opgelucht dat ik nog gewoon kon vliegen met hem in mijn armen. Ik had een gave. Toen pas lieten de dakloze calvinisten ons met rust. Ze zagen het en waren natuurlijk stomverbaasd. De wonderen waren de wereld nog niet uit. Ik zag de prachtige bergen in de verte, zo groot. Daar vloog ik met mijn broertje naartoe. We gingen de berg op, stap voor stap. ‘Maar moeten we niet naar de Eddy’s ?’ vroeg mijn broertje toen. Ik keek hem aan.

‘Eigenlijk wel,’ zei ik, maar bedenk dan wel even wat voor tuig daar rondloopt.
‘Ja, maar die weten het nu,’ zei mijn broertje.
‘Heb je gelijk in, heb je gelijk in,’ zei ik toen.
En toen zijn we weer teruggegaan naar de Eddy’s. Calvijn was er ook, met drie bodyguards in het blauw.
Wat hadden die een spieren, niet normaal meer. Daar zou je naar van worden.
Ze gingen ook het podium op om Calvijn aan te kondigen, alsof het een staatsgreep was.
Zo werd Calvijn groot.
Hij zat maar te knikken vanaf zijn stoeltje ergens vooraan.
En alle aandacht was op hem gericht.
Toen nam hij de Eddy in ontvangst.
Ik dacht : ‘Waarom ?’ Maar ik had het zien aankomen.
Het beeldje was vervloekt.
Hij had een grote glimlach, maar zijn ogen keken boos.
Zijn ogen waren op jacht, als een ayatollah.

Toen sprak hij zijn fatwa's uit, bij gelegenheid.
De dakloze calvinisten begonnen te applaudiseren, maar anderen begonnen in paniek te raken.

'Dat kunt u niet maken !' riep iemand.
'Kan mij het schelen,' riep Calvijn.
'Ik heb nu toch de Eddy, dus ik heb het voor het zeggen.'

'Maar u heeft de juiste theologie niet !' riep iemand anders.
'Heb ik wel,' riep Calvijn, 'en deze Eddy is daarvan een bewijs.'

Ik keek naar de Eddy. Mijn ogen deden pijn, en het was alsof er wat draaide.
Ja, dat ding was onder een gigantische vloek.
En Calvijn nam hem mee naar huis.
Mijn broertje zei toen : 'Laten we dan maar weer teruggaan naar de bergen.'
En dat hebben we toen maar gedaan.
Maar toen we de deur uit wilden gaan van het gebouw was die versperd.

Calvinistische wachters stonden daar.
Het was te gek voor woorden.
We mochten niet weg.
Ik vroeg hoe lang het ging duren, maar niemand zei wat.
Later werd er aangekondigd dat er treinen zouden komen die ons zouden wegvoeren.
Het was een kidnap.
‘Waar naartoe ?’ riep iemand.
‘Ik heb haast !’ riep iemand anders. ‘Hoe lang gaat dit duren ?’

We hadden allang spijt dat we naar de Eddy’s waren gekomen.
Maar toen kwamen er drie engelen om ons te bevrijden, en we werden alsnog naar de bergen genomen.
Ik keek naar de engelen en het leek alsof ik ze kende.
Dingen begonnen te draaien in mijn hoofd.
Ik keek naar mijn broertje, maar die was er opeens niet meer.

‘Waar is hij ?’ vroeg ik.

Er werd niet geantwoord.
Later zeiden ze dat hij even weg was.
Maar ik heb hem niet meer teruggezien.
Ik moest alleen mijn tocht maken door deze grot die zij mij aanwezen.
Waarschijnlijk moest hij door een andere grot, alleen, maar we hebben elkaar nooit meer teruggezien.

Oh, was ik maar nooit naar de Eddy's gegaan.
Was ik maar nooit naar de Eddy's gegaan.

Ik keek naar de engelen, maar het was slechts het behang van mijn slaapkamer.
Ik logeerde bij tante Riek. Het was maar een droom geweest.
Ik vertelde het aan tante Riek.
Ze moest lachen.
'Je hebt nooit een broertje gehad,' zei ze.

Ik vond het niet grappig, maar ze was een aardige vrouw.
We gingen die dag allerlei leuke dingen doen.

Ik wou dat ik een broertje had, maar tante Riek zei : ‘Het is beter zo.’
Aan het einde van de dag omhelsde ik haar.
‘Ja, ik heb liever een tante dan een broertje,’ zei ik.
‘Zo is dat,’ zei tante Riek.
Ze zong toen een vreemd liedje, en toen ik de tv aandeed was het vreemde liedje ook op de tv.
‘Ik houd van je,’ zei ik tegen tante Riek.
Toen werd ik wakker. Ook dat was slechts een droom geweest.
Tante Riek was al vele jaren terug overleden.
Ik dacht aan Calvijn.
Die was al in de jaren 1500 overleden.
Maar die had veel boeken nagelaten.
Die ben ik gaan lezen, maar ver kwam ik niet.
Toen ging ik Konsalik lezen, maar ver kwam ik ook niet.
Toen ben ik zelf schrijver geworden.
Van de Eddy’s ben ik ver weg gebleven.
Ik was immers goed voorgelicht.

Einde

Bonje in de christelijk gereformeerde kerk

De rijtjeshuizen waren hier in hele lange rijen. Eigenlijk was deze hele buurt christelijk-gereformeerd hersteld, als een afscheiding van de christelijk gereformeerde kerk waar een tiran heerste, in het centrum van de stad. Hier was het meer een omliggende wijk. Ik was hier na de scheiding terechtgekomen, ook na de echtscheiding, want met de scheiding van de kerk kwam ook de echtscheiding, want mijn vrouw bleef gewoon christelijk-gereformeerd.

Mijn zoontje kwam hier soms, maar die zei niet veel. Ook kwam mijn dove broertje zo nu en dan, en die zei ook niet veel. Het ging helemaal niet zo goed in deze herstelde buurt. Er was veel ruzie en onmin. De buren aan de rechterkant, met nog een huis ertussen, hadden we veel problemen mee gehad. Ook met de buurman aan de linkerkant met nog een huis ertussen. Ik kwam eens thuis en had hij een pot grond met een komkommer erin voor mijn deur gezet. Hij zette ook weleens kaktussen voor de deur. Toen ik dacht dat alles wel zo’n beetje gesust was begon hij weer. Er stond weer een pot met een komkommer voor de deur, met een anonieme brief erbij, waarvan ik wist dat het van hem kwam. Ditmaal was het een hele lange komkommer, een hele grote, terwijl die van het verleden klein was. In de brief had hij het erover dat ik boxen had gekocht van 17 euro, en dat ik die had verbrand toen, wat hij wel leuk vond. Hij had ook bepaalde dingen die hij had geschreven weer doorgekrast. Het was een hele chaotische brief, waarin hij duidelijk maakte dat het tussen ons niet werkte en dat we daarom maar bij elkaar uit de buurt moesten blijven. Dat deden we al, dus ik snapte niet waarom hij weer oude koeien uit de sloot moest halen, en dan zo moest provoceren met die grote komkommer in een pot met grond voor mijn deur. Ik was er een beetje boos en verward over, en ik zag bij de buren in de tuin ineens een clowntje hangen, een soort meisjespop, en ik dacht dat dat ook van hem was, want dat had ik nog nooit zien hangen. Ik heb die pop toen gepakt, en brak het stuk onder mijn schoenen. Toen kwam ineens de buurvrouw naar buiten, en die werd me toch een partijtje kwaad. Het poppetje zou van haar dochtertje zijn. Ik liet haar verder niet uitspreken, en zei dat het een misverstand was, dat ik dacht dat het van hun buurman van links was. Ik zou het dubbele bedrag betalen, ook vanwege de emotionele schade. Toen werd ze ineens rustig. Ik liet haar ook de brief lezen. Ze begreep het toen helemaal en vond de brief ook belachelijk.

Ik keek schuin naar de overkant, naar de linkerkant, waar ook een hele lange rij rijtjeshuizen was. De rij stopte eigenlijk niet naar links, maar hier was het hoekhuis, en daar woonde een donkere vrouw waar ik verliefd op was geweest. Het was een heel mooi huis met veel rieten spulletjes, en met een grote tuin, die een beetje een ronding had. Ik zag haar in de tuin. Ik werd weer een beetje rustig. ‘Oh, je crush is buiten,’ zei de buurvrouw toen, die haar ook zag. ‘Ja,’ zei ik, ‘een crush van een tijdje geleden.’

‘Oh, ging het niet goed ?’ vroeg ze. Maar ik kapte het gesprek af, want ik zou het geld halen. ‘Hoeveel was die pop ?’ vroeg ik. ‘Twintig euro zoveel,’ zei ze. Ik ging naar huis om het geld te halen. Mijn tas had twee hangriemen, maar eentje ervan zat los en kon ik niet zo snel meer bevestigen, dus ik hing één van de hangriemen aan mijn schouder. Ik ging terug naar de buurvrouw en gaf haar vijfenveertig euro. Ze vond het meer dan opgelost. Ik zei er nog een keer bij : ‘Ook voor de emotionele schade.’ Ik ging toen weer terug naar huis. Ik dacht na over mijn crush van een tijdje geleden. Eigenlijk durfde ik een relatie niet meer aan. Ik wilde het liever op een afstand houden. We zaten bij elkaar aan de kerk, maar daar bleef het bij. We spraken elkaar eigenlijk niet of nauwelijks. Ik was programmeur in de herstelde kerk. Ik moest onderzoek doen naar de geschiedenis, en al hun oude geschriften lezen, en het goede van het slechte onderscheiden, en zo een nieuw boek maken, als tweede boek na de bijbel. Kerkboek heette

het. Maar gemeenteleden kibbelden erover wat er wel en niet in het kerkboek zou moeten komen, terwijl het helemaal hun vakgebied niet was. Ik voelde me soms vervolgd in mijn eigen kerk. Het was mijn beroep. Ik was ervoor geroepen. Met sommige vrienden heb je geen vijanden nodig.

Maar er was in ieder geval een exodus geweest. In de eigenlijke christelijk-gereformeerde kerk was het nog wel erger met die tiran. In het centrum van de stad woonde die, waar hij ook zijn kerk had, de kerk van mijn ex-vrouw. Wat een man was dat, zeg. Dan hadden we het nu een stuk beter. Ik ging weer terug naar mijn werk, en liep door wat boeken te bladeren. Ik had een grote boekenkelder onder mijn huis met allerlei zeldzame christelijk-gereformeerde geschriften. Er zaten boeken bij die ik nog nooit had gelezen. Alle herinneringen moesten door deze boeken vervangen worden.

Einde

Koning Stuiterbal

Hij was in het bos. Hij was van huis weggelopen. Thuis ging het niet goed. Er werd altijd op hem gescholden, en hij moest altijd hard werken. Nooit was er vrije tijd. Allerlei andere dingen waren gedwongen. Hij was er helemaal klaar mee. Het was in het bos waar hij het modder monster tegenkwam, die helemaal van modder was. Hij was helemaal niet bang voor het monster. Hij dacht dat het monster nooit erger zou kunnen zijn dan waar hij vandaan kwam. Het modder monster was verbaasd dat hij niet bang voor hem was. Ieder ander mens en dier was bang voor hem. Het jongetje kwam dichterbij het monster en begon hem te aaien.

'Nu wordt je wel helemaal vies,' zei het modder monster. 'Dat geeft niet,' zei het jongetje. 'Als ik maar vrij ben.'

'Over vrijheid gesproken ...' zei het modder monster. 'Ik ben ontsnapt uit de klauwen van een heks. Het leven is beter in het bos. Het jongetje knikte, en zei dat hij een soortgelijk verhaal had. 'Dan hebben we elkaar op het juiste moment en de juiste plaats gevonden,' zei het modder monster. Het jongetje grinnikte.

Ze gingen beiden nog dieper het bos in, en het modder monster vertelde dat hij lang onder de grond moest wonen, bij de ondergrondse heks. Hij werd daar opgesloten gehouden in een klein kooitje. 'Blij dat je vrij bent nu,' zei het jongetje. 'Ik zat in een zelfde situatie. Het is goed om de bomen te ruiken en de frisse lucht van het bos. Dat is zo genezend.'

'Precies,' zei het modder monster. 'Mijn heks spoot altijd met smerige parfumspuiten en haar nagellak op haar lange nagels stonk.'

De twee hadden elkaar veel te vertellen en konden al vanaf het directe begin goed met elkaar opschieten. Na een tijdje lopen kwamen ze een koningskind tegen. Het jongetje vroeg zich af wat een koningskind zo helemaal alleen in het bos moest. Hij groette het koningskind.

'Wat ben ik blij jullie te zien,' zei het koningskind. 'Ik ben zo lang alleen geweest hier, en nu eindelijk heb ik jullie gevonden. Ik ben van het koninklijk paleis weggelopen. Niets mocht. Ik mocht zelfs niet naarbuiten anders zou ik zogenaamd vies worden.' Het koningskind trok toen een vies gezicht om na te doen hoe ze naar hem deden. 'Ik kan het niet meer,' zei het koningskind. 'Ik ben er helemaal klaar mee. Het was niet goed voor mij om daar te leven.'

Het jongetje knikte. 'Dan zit je in hetzelfde schuitje als ons. Wij zijn ook ontsnapt,' zei het jongetje.

'Goed dan dat we elkaar zijn tegengekomen,' zei het koningskind. 'We kunnen dan misschien nog veel aan elkaar hebben.'

'Welkom in de club,' zei het modder monster.

'Wat voor een club is het ?' vroeg het koningskind.

'De club van de ontsnapten,' grinnikte het modder monster.

Ook het jongetje moest grinniken, en toen grinnikte het koningskind ook.

'Nu moeten we alleen nog een plaats hebben om te leven,' zei het koningskind.

Ze liepen door in het bos, en kwamen na een tijdje aan bij een huisje wat onbewoond scheen te zijn. Alle spullen waar hier oud, en alles lag onder de stof, alsof er niemand in vele jaren was geweest.

'Hoera,' zei het koningskind. 'Een verlaten boshuisje.'

'Hier kunnen we wonen,' zei het jongetje, die al direct alles begon te ontstoffen.
'Een beetje schoonmaken kan geen kwaad,' grinnikte het modder monster. Er waren precies drie bedden. Nadat ze de boel hadden schoongemaakt en wat hadden gegeten en gedronken gingen ze alledrie slapen, want ze waren erg moe geworden.

Maar middenin de nacht werd er op de deur geklopt. Er stonden tien soldaten aan de deur. Het jongetje had de deur opengemaakt en liet ze binnen. Het koningskind was ook wakker geworden, en kende de soldaten niet. 'Wie zijn jullie ?' vroeg het koningskind.

Maar de soldaten gaven geen antwoord.
'Misschien hebben ze honger,' zei het modder monster. Het jongetje gaf hen wat te eten. Er waren nog genoeg verzamelde bessen.

Na een tijdje zei een soldaat wat : 'Ach.'

'Ach ?' vroeg het jongetje. 'Is er wat gebeurd ?'

'Nee,' zei een andere soldaat.

'Dus jullie komen zomaar even op bezoek,' zei het koningskind. 'Gezellig.'

'Gezellig,' zei een andere soldaat.

'Ik heb het altijd koud,' zei weer een andere soldaat.

'Hoe komt dat ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Nee, dat is zijn naam,' zei weer een andere soldaat.

'Oh,' zei het jongetje. 'Wat een grappige naam. En hoe heet jij ?'

'Ik ben te dik,' zei de soldaat.

'Ja, maar je bent helemaal niet dik,' zei het jongetje.

'Het is mijn naam,' zei de soldaat. 'Te Dik. Te is mijn voornaam, en Dik is mijn achternaam. Ik kan er niets aan doen dat ik zo heet.'

'Dat klopt,' zei het jongetje. 'Nou, een mooie naam, en ik hoop dat je zelf ook je naam leuk vindt.'

'Hij vind nooit iets leuk,' zei weer een andere soldaat.

'En wie ben jij ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Ik ben Klaas,' zei de soldaat. 'Klaas de Kale.'

'Maar je bent helemaal niet kaal,' zei het jongetje. 'Oh wacht, het is zeker je achternaam.'

'Ja,' zei de soldaat. 'En ik ben er helemaal niet blij mee. We zijn ontsnapt uit een ver land.'

'Ah,' zei het koningskind. 'Nou, welkom in de club van de ontsnapten. Wij zijn allemaal ontsnapt.'

'Aha !' riepen de soldaten blij. 'Dus wij kunnen hier blijven ?'

'Natuurlijk,' zei het modder monster. 'Wij horen allemaal bij elkaar. We maken er nog wel tien bedden bij. Het huisje is net groot genoeg.'

'Mag de prinses hier ook wonen ?' vroeg één van de soldaten. 'Wij hebben ook haar meegenomen.'

'Waar is ze ?' vroeg het koningskind.

'In een envelop,' zei de soldaat, en haalde een verfrommelde envelop uit zijn zak.

'Niet te geloven,' zei het jongetje.

Het modder monster kwam dichterbij de envelop en keek er naar. 'Ze woont in deze envelop ?' vroeg hij.

De soldaat knikte. 'Ja,' zei hij. 'Het is een plaatje.'

'Leuk,' zei het modder monster. 'En wat was de reden waarom jullie met haar zijn ontsnapt ?'

'Ze moest altijd in de keuken werken, en mocht niks. Ze is nog maar een kind,' zei de soldaat.

'Goed dat jullie voor haar opgekomen zijn,' zei het koningskind, terwijl hij een buiging maakte voor de soldaten en zijn hoed afnam. Er zat een veer op zijn hoed, als een pluim.

'Mogen wij haar zien ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Nee,' zei de soldaat. 'Het plaatje is uit een boek geknipt. Ze moet voorlopig in de envelop blijven.'

'Oh,' zei het jongetje. 'En waarom is dat ?'

Maar de soldaat zweeg.

Alle soldaten die hun naam nog niet hadden gezegd begonnen toen te vertellen hoe ze heetten. Het waren allemaal lange getallen, en ze hielden maar niet op. 'Stop, stop,' zei het jongetje. 'Het is wel duidelijk en klaar dat jullie nieuwe namen nodig hebben. Jullie namen zijn eindeloos. Dat is niet echt handig.'

'Wij zijn van het land Eindeloos,' zei een soldaat.

'En wie regeert dat land ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Koning Eindeloos,' zei de soldaat.

'En dat is ook een plaatje ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Nee,' zei de soldaat. 'Een bal. Die rolt altijd door de straten heen om de boel in de gaten te houden. Er gebeuren daar vreemde dingen.'

'Zoals wat ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Een bril,' zei de soldaat.

'Een bril ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Iedereen moet een bril dragen zodat ze alleen zullen zien wat de koning wil dat ze zien,' zei de soldaat.

'En wat zien ze dan ?' vroeg het jongetje met verbazing.

'Plaatjes,' zei de soldaat. 'De koning houdt van plaatjes.'

'Wat zijn dat voor plaatjes ?' vroeg het jongetje.

Maar de soldaat zweeg.

Het jongetje zuchtte. 'Plaatjes met praatjes,' zei een andere soldaat.

'Ik kan me voorstellen dat jullie zijn ontsnapt,' zei het jongetje.

'Ik niet,' zei de soldaat. 'Het was best leuk.'

'Wie ben jij dan ?' vroeg het jongetje. Toen noemde de soldaat een lang nummer op wat maar niet stopte.

'Heb je ook een andere naam ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Nee,' zei de soldaat.

'Maar waarom ben je dan ontsnapt ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Tja, dat weet ik ook niet,' zei de soldaat. 'Gewoon omdat de anderen het ook deden.'

'Een nalopertje dus,' grinnikte het koningskind. Ook het modder monster grinnikte.

'Maar de andere soldaten zijn dus ontsnapt omdat ze de prinses willen helpen,' zei het jongetje.

'Dat zeggen ze,' zei de soldaat. 'Maar de prinses had het best naar haar zin. Ze hoefde helemaal niet in de keuken te werken. Allemaal leugens.'

'Tegengestelde verhalen dus,' zei het jongetje. 'En wat zegt de prinses er zelf van ?'

'Die praat niet,' zei de soldaat. 'Ze is nog te jong om te praten. Plaatjes praten pas als ze zes zijn.'

'Misschien als het koningskind en de prinses later groot zijn ze met elkaar kunnen trouwen,' zei het jongetje, 'dan kunnen we een nieuw land bouwen hier in het bos, het land van de ontsnapten.'

'Dat kan niet,' zei een soldaat. 'Ze moet in de envelop blijven. Alleen daar is ze veilig.'

'Dat is ook niet gezellig voor haar,' zei het jongetje.

'Het is een tover envelop,' zei de soldaat. 'Er is een land in de envelop. Daar heeft ze het goed, en zo moet dat blijven.'

'Kunnen wij haar daar bezoeken ?' vroeg het modder monster.

'Ja, als je een plaatje wordt,' zei de soldaat.

'Hoe worden we een plaatje ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Koning Eindeloos maakt plaatjes,' zei de soldaat. 'Hij rolt over mensen heen, en dan zijn het plaatjes.'

'Wow,' zei het jongetje. 'Maar jullie zijn van hem ontsnapt. Is er ook nog iemand anders die plaatjes maakt ?'

'Ja,' zei de soldaat. En toen noemde hij een eindeloos getal op.

'Waar is hij ?' vroeg het jongetje.

De soldaat haalde een verfrommelde envelop uit zijn zak.

'Oh, het is ook een plaatje ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Ja,' zei de soldaat.

'En hoe gaat dat precies ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Het is een plaatje van een bal,' zei de soldaat, 'en het werkt ongeveer op dezelfde manier.'

'Ja, maar hoe dan ?' vroeg het jongetje. 'Een bal op een plaatje kan toch niet rollen ?'

De soldaat haalde het plaatje uit de envelop. De bal op het plaatje bewoog, en begon in het rond te rollen. 'Wow,' zei het jongetje verbaasd, 'maar de bal kan niet uit het plaatje ?'

'Nee,' zei de soldaat.

'Maar hoe worden wij dan een plaatje ?' vroeg het jongetje.

De soldaat keek een andere soldaat aan, maar die keek weer naar een andere soldaat.

'Wij weten niet hoe hij het doet,' zei Te Dik.

'Praat hij ook ?' vroeg het modder monster.

'Nog niet,' zei Te Dik. 'Hij is nog geen zes.'

'Ik heb nog wel wat,' zei Klaas de Kale, en haalde een stuiterbal uit zijn zak. De stuiterbal begon direct in het rond te stuiteren, en had flink veel babbels.

'Dat kan, ja, dat kan,' zei de stuiterbal. 'Plaatje worden zei je ? Heel simpel.' En hij vloog op het jongetje af, en begon op het jongetje te stuiteren, die even later helemaal platgewalst was als een plaatje. 'Hoera !' riep het jongetje. 'Nu kan ik de prinses ontmoeten !'

'Ja, wacht even, dat gaat zo maar niet,' zei de stuiterbal. 'Je bent veel te groot. Je past de envelop niet in.'

'Wie kan me dan kleiner maken ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Het plaatje krimpt vanzelf wel,' zei de stuiterbal. 'Even geduld hebben.' Ook het modder monster en het koningskind werden tot plaatjes gemaakt. De tien soldaten moesten de plaatjes en de envelop bewaken. Na een paar dagen waren de plaatjes genoeg gekrompen en konden ze de envelop in. Ze kwamen in een prachtig land, in een prachtige natuur met prachtige hangende bomen waar de lieflijkste bloemen en bloesem in groeiden, en allerlei prachtig kruid hing daar. Maar de prinses konden ze niet vinden. Plotseling zagen ze de stuiterbal. 'Volg mij,' sprak de stuiterbal. Hij leidde hen naar een hele speciale boom waar het plaatje van de prinses ergens hing. Maar de wind waaide het plaatje weg. 'Volg mij !' riep de stuiterbal. Hij stuiterde achter de wind aan, en het jongetje, het koningskind en het modder monster volgden hem. 'Hebbes !' riep de stuiterbal. Het plaatje was op de grond gevallen en helemaal onder de modder. 'Een modder prinses,' zei het koningskind. 'Misschien kan ze dan wel later met het modder monster trouwen.'

'Ik trouw niet !' bulderde het modder monster en greep grinnikend het koningskind en smeerde hem in met modder. 'Nu ben jij een modder prins, dus dan kan jij misschien later als je groot bent wel met haar trouwen.'

'Ja,' zei het jongetje, 'en dan kunnen we hier misschien het nieuwe land van de ontsnapten bouwen.'

'Goed idee,' zei de stuiterbal. 'Welkom in mijn boek, waar jullie veilig kunnen wonen. Ik ben koning stuiterbal en met jullie heb ik zo waardige opvolgers. Ik heb namelijk andere dingen te doen. Maak er wat moois van !'
Toen stuiterde de stuiterbal weg. Toen zijn ze begonnen het nieuwe land te bouwen, en toen de prins en de prinses groot waren geworden trouwden ze met elkaar. Er was een groot feest en er waren inmiddels vele ontsnapte plaatjes bijgekomen. En ze leefden nog lang en gelukkig.

De Gokkoning van Ovven

Hoofdstuk 1.

Op de kermis sloeg hij toe. Hij was een dief. Hij stal van kinderen, en hij stal soms zelfs de kinderen zelf. Hij was een kinderdief. Hij maakte hun dromen kapot.

Elwin wist hier allemaal niets van.

Het reizen door de natuur kan op een kameel. Elwin heeft dat ook weleens gedaan. Op een kameel ging hij door riviertjes, en vlaktes met wat bosjes. De zon scheen fijn, en het was een fijne dag waarop hij een reis maakte op een kameel. Hij had zijn spulletjes vastgemaakt met een riem aan de bult van de kameel, en ging er toen opzitten.

Waarom Elwin op reis ging ? Hij had gehoord dat er in de bergen ergens een hele bijzondere steen zou zijn, gemaakt door dwergen, door kabouters. Het zou een heel bijzondere droom steen zijn, die de mensen hele bijzondere dromen zou kunnen geven. Voordat Elwin op reis ging had hij daar weleens over in boeken gelezen, en zelfs een paar keer in de krant. Alles zou misschien zoveel mooier zijn als de droom steen in Ovven zou zijn.

Elwin ging helemaal alleen op de kameel. Hij wist wel waar hij ergens moest zijn, en hij had de reismap meegenomen. Daar keek hij zo nu en dan op. Hij had weleens plaatjes van de steen gezien, met daarop elfjes en kabouters die rondom de prachtig flonkerende roze-rode steen dansten. Ook waren er op die plaatjes allemaal vlindertjes te zien.

Maar toen Elwin eindelijk aankwam bij de grot waar de steen moest wezen, werd hij tegengehouden door groene bewakers met bruine helmen en slagtanden. 'Halt,' zei één van de bewakers die zijn speer al had uitgestoken om Elwin tegen te houden. 'Wat wil je ? Niemand kan zomaar tot de droom steen komen.'

'Maar ik zag op plaatjes dat er allemaal elfjes, kabouters en vlindertjes omheen dansten,' zei Elwin.

'Niks mee te maken,' bromde de groene wachter.

'Nou, u bent ook niet echt in de stemming vandaag,' zei Elwin. 'Met al dat gesnauw.'

'Ik ben wel in de stemming,' zei de groene wachter. 'Het is mijn werk. Ik moet de droom steen met hand en tand bewaken. Alleen de koning bepaalt wie er bij de steen mag komen.'

'Zo zo,' zei Elwin die inmiddels van zijn kameel was afgestapt. 'En wie mag die koning dan wel niet wezen ?'

'Koning Kabeljauw,' zei de groene wachter mopperend. 'En maak nu dat je wegkomt.'

'Kan ik de koning niet spreken ?' vroeg Elwin. 'Ik zou graag de droom steen willen zien.'

'Daarvoor moet je bij Wat-Glim-Je-Mooi zijn, zij is een elfje met gele vleugels,' bromde de groene wachter.

De groene wachter legde Elwin even uit waar dat elfje woonde, en toen ging Elwin weer op pad. Na een tijdje kwam hij aan bij een klein bosje, aan de rand van de bergen. Bij een huisje klopte Elwin aan. Een klein elvenmeisje deed open. Ze had lang haar en ze had een gele jurk aan. 'Hallo, Wat-Glim-Je-Mooi,' zei Elwin.
'Dank je,' zei het elvenmeisje.

'Ik dacht dat dat je naam was,' zei Elwin.
Het elvenmeisje begon te giechelen. 'Ja, dat is ook zo. Wat kom je doen ?'

'Ik zou graag koning Kabeljauw willen spreken voor het zien van de droom steen,' sprak Elwin.

'Dat is een vis met een kroontje, hier vlakbij in de rivier,' sprak het meisje. 'Ik kan je wel aan de koning voorstellen, maar dan moet je wel eerst glimmen.'

'Hoe moet ik glimmen dan ?' vroeg Elwin.

Het elvenmeisje zuchtte. 'Jammer dat je nog niet glimt, want dan hadden we direct naar de koning gekunt. Ik zal het je wel even uitleggen : 'Je kunt alleen glimmen door de droom steen.'

'Ja, maar ik ben verboden de droom steen te zien, en daarvoor moest ik juist eerst met de koning spreken,' sprak Elwin.

'Tja,' zei het elvenmeisje, 'dan weet ik het ook niet.'

'Kan ik niet eerst de droom steen zien om te glimmen, en dan pas naar de koning gaan ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Onmogelijk,' sprak het elvenmeisje met een diepe zucht. 'Dat laat hij nooit toe. Eerst moet je glimmen, en dan kun je pas met de koning spreken, en dan pas naar de droom steen.'

'Ja, dan is het inderdaad onmogelijk,' zei Elwin. 'Ik glim niet, en mag niet bij de droom steen komen.'

'Helaas,' zei het elvenmeisje. 'Ik kan je niet helpen.'

'Wat een nare belevenis,' zei Elwin. 'Ik ben hiervoor speciaal naartoe gekomen. Ik heb een hele lange reis gemaakt, op mijn kameel, en nu dit.'

'Ik begrijp het,' zuchtte het elvenmeisje.

'Is er dan echt geen andere oplossing ?' vroeg Elwin.

Het elvenmeisje schudde haar hoofd. 'Nee, niet echt. Tenzij je …'

Het elvenmeisje werd stil.

'Tenzij ik wat ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Laat maar zitten,' sprak het elvenmeisje. Ze ging aan een tafeltje zitten, en ging verder met haar naaiwerk.

'Wat ben je aan het maken ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Oh, iets voor de buurman,' zei het elvenmeisje.

'Maar ik zie helemaal geen ander huisje in de buurt,' sprak Elwin.
'Het is voor een mol, die net onder de grond woont, in een hol,' zei het elvenmeisje.

Elwin dacht na. Hij moest en zou bij die droom steen komen, maar die groene wachters waren natuurlijk ook een probleem.

'Zeg, wie hebben die steen eigenlijk gemaakt ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Kik en Kes,' zei het elvenmeisje.

Kik en Kes woonden helemaal aan de zee, en volgens het elvenmeisje zou dat de enige oplossing zijn, om daar naartoe te gaan. Elwin ging het huisje weer uit en klom op zijn kameel na het elvenmeisje bedankt te hebben. Het elvenmeisje wenste Elwin een goede reis en zwaaide hem na.

Door bosjes, langs rivieren en over bergen kwam Elwin na dagen reizen eindelijk aan bij de zee waar Kik en Kes woonden. Het waren twee kabouters. Ze huppelden en dansten om een kampvuur heen. Ze leken wel broertjes, en dat waren ze ook, en zij hadden beiden de droom steen gemaakt.

De broertjes kregen al snel in de gaten dat Elwin bij hen was gekomen, en begonnen hem aan te staren. 'Goedendag,' zei Elwin, en stapte van de kameel af. Al snel begon hij het verhaal te vertellen, en de kabouters luisterden aandachtig.

Aan het einde van het verhaal sprak Kes : 'Beste Elwin, de droomsteen is eens van ons gestolen door koning Kabeljauw, oftewel de gokkoning. Het is een smerige dief, die nu door de droomsteen de dromen van kinderen probeert te stelen.'

'Maar dat is verschrikkelijk,' sprak Elwin. 'Hoe doet hij dat ?'

'Nou,' zei Kes, 'heel simpel. Hij lokt de kinderen naar zijn kermis en dan laat hij ze gokken, en als ze verliezen dan steelt hij hun dromen, en als ze winnen, dan neemt hij ze met hem mee. Natuurlijk laat hij dan wel een namaak-kind achter voor de ouders.'

'Maar is hij geen vis ?' vroeg Elwin verbaasd.

'Soms,' zei Kik. 'Hij kan van gedaante veranderen. Hij is een tovenaar.'

'Wat kunnen we eraan doen ?' vroeg Elwin.

'En nog eens iets,' zei Kik, 'de droomsteen in de grot waar je naar op zoek was is namaak om bandieten te misleiden. De echte droomsteen is in het gokpaleis van koning Kabeljauw, hoog in de bergen.'

Elwin zuchtte. 'Hoe ga ik daar ooit komen ? Waar is het ?'

'Het gokpaleis is goed verborgen, maar Utsmul, onze raaf, weet wel waar het is. Niemand waagt zich verder daar. Wij hadden de moed al opgegeven, totdat jij er weer over begon,' sprak Kes.

Elwin knikte. 'Ik wil er wel naartoe. Hij zal de gestolen droomsteen vast goed verborgen houden, maar ik wil het er op wagen.'

'Wees maar voorzichtig, Elwin,' waarschuwde Kes. 'Hij is niet zomaar voor een dubbeltje te vangen. Hij is erg ervaren in het toveren.'

'Ik begrijp het. Maar iemand moet hem tegenhouden,' sprak Elwin dapper.

'Goed dan, als je er op staat,' sprak Kes, en begon op zijn vingers te fluiten. Na een tijdje kwam er een grote raaf aanvliegen. Dat moest Utsmul wezen.

'Utsmul,' sprak Kes. 'Kun jij deze jongen afzetten bij het gokpaleis van koning Kabeljauw en dan direct weer terugkomen ?'

Elwin mocht op zijn rug klimmen, en na een kort afscheid steeg de grote raaf op, en ging richting de bergen. De raaf wist precies waar het was, maar eigenlijk wilden de kabouters hem daar niet hebben. Daarom moest hij ook direct weer terugkomen.

Het gokpaleis was gemaakt van een doorzichtig gesteente en was verlicht. Elwin wist dat van hieruit de gokkoning zijn grote toverij bedreef door de droomsteen. De raaf zette hem af, en vloog direct weer weg. Elwin hield zich goed verscholen achter een heuveltje. Er waren ook wat struiken. Ook hier kon hij zich achter verschuilen, en liep zo dichter en dichter naar het gokpaleis toe. Hij hoorde harde muziek vanuit het gokpaleis komen. Het leek wel alsof er een feestje was.

Elwin zag wachten staan bij de grote poort van het gokpaleis. Daar moest hij niet zijn. Achter struikjes liep hij helemaal naar de achterkant van het gokpaleis. Ergens door een achterdeurtje van de keuken ging hij naar binnen. Hier werkte een vrouw met een grote witte koksmuts op. 'Wat mot je !' snauwde de vrouw die aan de maalmachine stond. Elwin keek naar de plakjes ham en trok een vies gezicht. 'Wat doet u hier kan ik beter vragen,' sprak Elwin.

'Zeg, brutaal ventje,' sprak de vrouw. 'Zal ik jou eens een draai om je oren geven ?'

'Nou, dat hoeft nu ook weer niet,' zei Elwin. 'Het was gewoon een vraag.'

'Het antwoord op de vraag is : Gaat je geen klapperjanus aan, meneertje kwekgraag,' snauwde de vrouw.

'Okay, goed,' zei Elwin. 'Ik kan wel zien dat u een slecht humeur heeft. Is er soms iets gebeurd ?'

'Ophoepelen nou, ventje !' riep de vrouw die ineens stopte met de maalmachine. 'Of zou ik jou eens door de maalmachine halen, want je staat er nogal om te trappelen.'

'Nou,' zei Elwin, 'dat hoeft nu ook weer niet. Waarom doet u zo boos ? Iets verkeerds gegeten !' Nu werd de vrouw echt woedend en greep een slagersmes van de muur. 'Zeg, akelig ventje, vlegel, zal ik jou eens aan het mes rijgen ?' riep ze terwijl ze op Elwin afstapte. Elwin deed direct een stap achteruit. 'Nou, vertel op, oude heks, wat doe je daar ?' vroeg Elwin brutaal. 'U gaat me toch niet vertellen dat hier niets gebeurd is, hè ?' En toen begon Elwin het hele verhaal zonder een blad voor zijn mond te vertellen. Elwin was een openlijke en eerlijke jongen, en zei altijd alles recht voor zijn raap. De vrouw stond hem met open mond aan te kijken, terwijl het mes uit haar hand gleed. Zo slap waren haar handen geworden. Ze begon te stamelen :

'H... hoe weet jij dat allemaal ?'

'Ik heb met Kik en Kes gesproken,' sprak Elwin.

De vrouw wreef over haar kin. 'Hmmm, het is inderdaad waar dat hier een droomsteen verborgen wordt gehouden waar toverij mee wordt bedreven. Ik ben de kokkin hier. Eens won ik een gokspelletje op de kermis, en werd ik hier mee naartoe genomen. Sindsdien moest ik hier werken.

Elwin knikte. 'Jongen, je bent in groot gevaar,' sprak de vrouw. 'Als de koning erachter komt dan ga je eraan, ik zeg het je.'

'Ik moet die steen hebben,' sprak Elwin. 'Hij is van Kik en Kes, en de gokkoning moet stoppen met het lastigvallen van kinderen.'

'Ach,' sprak de vrouw. 'Je kunt toch niet tegen hem op, maar ik wens je geluk.'

Elwin liep door de grote keuken heen, en kwam toen door een deur op de gang. Direct ging hij weer terug, want hij had wachten gezien. 'Ga de kelder maar in,' sprak de kokkin, 'want hoogstwaarschijnlijk wordt de droomsteen ergens ondergronds verborgen gehouden of op een hogere verdieping. Zoek het maar uit, want in de kelder is een lift.'

De vrouw wees op de kelderdeur ergens aan de zijkant van de keuken, en daar liep Elwin toen naartoe en ging de kelder binnen door van de trap af naar beneden te gaan. Daar stond inderdaad de lift. De lift kon zowel dieper als omhoog.

'Eerst maar eens omhoog,' zei Elwin tegen zichzelf, en drukte op een rode knop voor de hogere verdieping. Na een tijdje stapte hij uit en keek direct goed om zich heen. Hier was ook een lange gang zoals op de begane grond waar hij de wachten zag. Gelukkig zag hij nu niemand. Er waren hier een heleboel deuren. Elwin was vastbesloten de droomsteen te vinden.

'Welke deur zal ik eens nemen ?' dacht Elwin bij zichzelf. 'Hmmm,' zei hij, terwijl hij langs de deuren begon te lopen. Het leek maar niet op te houden. De gang was erg lang, en hij liep over een langwerpig rood tapijt. Het leek wel alsof de gang een beetje naar beneden liep, en daarna weer een beetje omhoog ging. 'Het lijkt wel alsof hier olifanten hebben gelopen,' dacht Elwin bij zichzelf. 'Het is hier een beetje ingezakt.' Ook ging de gang in een bocht, en toen ging de gang weer verder. Er leek echt geen einde aan te komen. Aan beide kanten waren er deuren. Toen ineens ging er een deur open. 'Wie is daar !' werd er geroepen. Het gebeurde ergens achter Elwin, en hij liep weer een beetje terug. Hij wist dat hij erg voorzichtig moest zijn. Er kwam een lange man met een lange hoed uit de deur-opening. Hij had een hele deftige jas aan. 'Wat moet dat hier, ventje,' zei de lange man.

'Wie bent u eigenlijk ?' vroeg Elwin op een hele brutale manier. 'U doet zomaar de deur open en begint te roepen.'

'Ja, wat nou,' sprak de man, 'dit is mijn domein. Ik ben een kermisbaas.'

'Oh, toch niet de koning hoop ik,' sprak Elwin.

'Ach welnee, de koning is dood. Ik bedoelde deze kamer hier is mijn domein, en als ik geluid oppik vanuit mijn kamer dan wil ik graag weten wie het is,' sprak de man.

Elwin keek verbaasd. 'De koning is dood ? Dat wist ik niet. Wanneer is dat gebeurd, en is er inmiddels alweer een nieuwe koning ?'

De man keek hem met grote ogen aan. 'Eh, nee, er is geen nieuwe koning. De koning is allang dood, al wel vijfhonderd jaar.'

'Ik vraag me af of ik dan wel in het juiste paleis ben,' zei Elwin, en begon toen het verhaal over de droomsteen te vertellen.

De man begon hard te lachen. 'Ach jongen, wat zijn dat toch allemaal voor sprookjes. Er is hier geen droomsteen, en al helemaal geen gokkoning.'

Elwin wist niet of hij de man kon geloven. Het kon natuurlijk ook een valstrik zijn. Misschien had de man wel wat te verbergen, of misschien was hij de gokkoning wel.

'Eh, i... ik loop nog even verder,' zei Elwin. De man maakte even een vreemd gebaar en ging toen zijn kamer weer in. Elwin liep verder. Zou hij echt in het verkeerde paleis zijn, of werd hij door de man bedrogen ?

'Ik ben Emiel,' hoorde hij iemand zingen. 'Erg sterk, maar een beetje fragiel, zo mooi als een bloem, niet op zoek naar roem. Ik houd mij graag stil, maar soms geef ik een gil. Soms zing ik een lied, zo verdwijnt het verdriet.'

Een man met een accordeon kwam ineens door een deur de gang op. Toen hij Elwin zag schrok hij. 'Wel alle kermisklanten !' riep hij. 'Wie ben jij !'

'Ik ben Elwin, en wie ben jij ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Emiel is de naam,' sprak de man, en stak zijn hand uit. 'Laat het handenschudden maar zitten,' zei Elwin brutaal. 'Wij zijn nog geen vrienden.'

'Beleefdheidsgebaar,' sprak de man. 'Ik ben van goede wil.'

Elwin begon zijn verhaal te vertellen, maar weer kreeg hij hetzelfde antwoord dat de koning al vijfhonderd jaar dood was, en dat er hier geen droomsteen was. De man scheen ook op de kermis te werken. 'Maar de kokkin zei dat het allemaal waar was,' sprak Elwin.

De man begon te schudden van het lachen. 'De kokkin ? Dat mens is hartstikke gek,' zei de man. 'Dat mens praat met iedereen mee, en je kan haar van alles wijsmaken. Zij is degene die dit soort zotte verhalen de wereld in helpt. Ze hebben me weleens verteld dat ze vroeger van een hooiwagen is afgevallen.'

'Hmm,' zei Elwin, 'maar ook Kik en Kes zeiden dat het waar was. In feite hebben zij mij gezegd dat hier de gokkoning woont en hier de droomsteen verborgen houdt waarmee hij kinderen betovert.'

'Ach welnee,' sprak de man. 'Kik en Kes ? Ik zou niet weten wie dat zijn, maar daarvan is geen sprake. Dit soort dingen gebeuren hier niet. Dit paleis is voor een ieder die op de kermis werkt, als een soort ontmoetings-plaats. Het heeft geen koning.'

Elwin trok zijn wenkbrauwen op. 'Okay, dan zijn we uitgepraat. Ik ga het nog even verder proberen, want ik krijg nu tegenstrijdige verhalen te horen.'

'Succes ermee, jongen,' sprak Emiel, en ging weer zijn kamer in. Elwin begon nu hard door de gang te rennen. Hij wilde weten wanneer de gang nu eens eindelijk zou ophouden, maar het leek niet op te houden. 'Is dat gebouw dan zo groot ?' dacht Elwin bij zichzelf. 'Van buiten leek het wel groot, maar ook weer niet zo groot, of zou het toverij zijn. Misschien ben ik al onder een betovering gekomen ?' Elwin rilde even, en rende toen verder. 'Ik ga gewoon wat deuren binnen,' zei Elwin tegen zichzelf, en trok een deur open. Weer zag hij een hele lange gang. En weer begon hij te rennen, en leek het wel alsof de vloer een beetje was ingezakt. 'Weer die olifanten,' dacht Elwin bij zichzelf, en toen ging de vloer weer een beetje opwaarts. Ook aan deze gang leek geen einde te komen. Hij ging weer een willekeurige deur naar binnen, en weer was het precies hetzelfde. Het was weer een lange, eindeloze gang. 'Ik ben goed verdwaald,' sprak Elwin tot zichzelf. 'Wat een doolhof is dit, zeg.'

Welke deur Elwin ook probeerde, het waren alleen maar gangen. Er waren hier helemaal geen kamers. Elwin begon erg moe te worden. 'Hoe kon ik ook zo dom zijn,' sprak Elwin tegen zichzelf. 'Is er iemand !' begon Elwin te roepen. Maar er was geen antwoord. Het bleef doodstil, en het leek steeds stiller te worden. Het leek wel alsof de muren en deuren hem aanstaarden. Elwin merkte dat hij niet goed kon ademen. Hij had frisse lucht nodig. 'Ik wil eruit !' riep hij. Na een tijdje stortte hij moe op de grond neer. Hij draaide zich om met zijn gezicht naar het plafond, waar hij een luik zag. Elwin kreeg weer een beetje hoop. Er hing een klein touwtje aan het luik. Maar Elwin kon er net niet bij. Toen sprong Elwin in de lucht, en greep het touwtje. Direct ging het luik open, en er gleed een trap naar beneden. Voorzichtig ging Elwin de trap op, die als een ladder was. Het was hier erg donker. Een zwart beest, als een zwarte kat, staarde naar hem. 'Wat kom je doen ?' sprak de kat.

Direct begon Elwin zijn verhaal te vertellen. De kat begon te lachen. Elwin kreeg weer hetzelfde te horen, dat er geen koning was en al helemaal geen droomsteen. 'Hoe zou jij dat weten ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Ik ken het paleis van binnenste buiten,' sprak de kat. Ik ben hier geboren en opgegroeid.'

'Oh,' zei Elwin. 'Waarschijnlijk ben ik dan echt in het verkeerde paleis, of jullie zijn allemaal bedriegers, kermis-bedriegers, oplichters.'

'Wat maakt het uit,' sprak de kat. 'Je komt hier toch niet meer weg.'

'Waarom niet ?' vroeg Elwin. 'Wat is dat voor iets belachelijks, een paleis waar je niet meer uit weg kan.'

'Je had hier nooit moeten komen,' sprak de kat.

'Oh, nu begrijp ik het,' zei Elwin boos. 'Jij bent natuurlijk die gokkoning die het altijd maar weer op kinderen heeft gemunt.'

'Natuurlijk niet !' schreeuwde de kat plotseling. 'Ik bedoel als je hier niet bent uitgenodigd dan had je niet moeten komen. We hebben het niet zo op indringers en dieven. Die worden dan ook netjes in de val gelokt.'

'Oh, dus zo zit het !' schreeuwde Elwin woedend terug. 'Meneer de gokkoning mag de droomsteen stelen en het leven van kinderen zuur maken, en zij die daar wat aan willen doen hebben het ineens gedaan ?'

De kat begon te grijnzen. 'Kereltje, waarom zo moeilijk ? Ten eerste zoals ik al zei is er hier geen gokkoning of droomsteen, en ten tweede : Ook al ben je verkeerd ingelicht is dat nog geen goede reden om zo maar ergens in te breken en politie-agent te spelen. Daar zijn andere wegen voor. Je had het op z'n minst kunnen vragen.'

'Dat doe ik nu toch ?' zei Elwin.

'Nee,' zei de kat. 'Je had bijvoorbeeld eerst kunnen bellen of een brief kunnen schrijven.'

'Ja, zeg, doe me een lol,' zei Elwin. 'Ik had jullie telefoonnummer niet, ik wist het adres niet, en naar mijn informatie had ik te maken met zware criminelen, dus die vlieger ging niet op.'

'Je bent een valse beschuldiger !' brulde de kat. 'Daar zijn geen bewijzen voor. Wij zijn eerlijke kermiswerkers.'

'Wat is jouw taak dan ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Simpel,' zei de kat. 'Afrekenen met kermis-dieven zoals jij.'

'Ah, dus jij bent van de kermis-beveiliging ?' zei Elwin. De kat knikte.

'Ik begrijp het,' zei Elwin, die een beetje moedeloos begon te worden. 'Ik heb een fout gemaakt, een grote fout. Ik moest in een ander paleis zijn. Ik heb de verkeerde deur genomen. Hoe kom ik eruit ?'

'Dat had ik je al gezegd,' zei de kat. 'Je komt hier niet meer uit. Vergeet het maar. Dit is je verdiende loon.'

'Maar ik had goede bedoelingen,' sprak Elwin. 'Ik wilde de kinderen helpen, en Kik en Kes, en ik wilde van de kermis weer een veilige plaats maken.'

'Jij beledigt ons beroep,' sprak de kat. 'De kermis is de meest veilige plaats in Ovven, en Kik en Kes zijn leugenkabouters, treiterkabouters, trollen.'

'Okay, okay,' zei Elwin, die wist dat hij niet zomaar van de kat zou afkomen. 'Ik zal het niet meer doen. Laat me er nu alsjeblieft uit. Hoe lang zal ik hiervoor gestraft worden ?'

'Zoals ik al zei,' sprak de kat, 'kom je hier niet meer uit.'

'Dat is misdadig,' sprak Elwin. 'Jullie zijn criminelen.'

'Nu moet je de boel niet gaan omdraaien,' sprak de kat.

'Wat ga je met me doen ?' riep Elwin.

'Dat zul je nog wel zien,' sprak de kat. In grote woede trapte Elwin plotseling de kat van zich weg, en ging snel de ladder af, drukte de ladder terug, en gooide vliegensvlug het luik dicht. Snel trok Elwin het vloertapijt op om te zien of daar misschien ook een luik zat, en ja hoor. Elwin trok vliegensvlug het luik open, terwijl er een ladder uitschoof naar beneden. 'Ik krijg je nog wel, ellendeling !' hoorde hij de kat roepen. Elwin stoorde zich er niet aan, en ging over de ladder naar beneden. Hier was ook een gang. Dat zou de begane grond moeten zijn. Hier moest ergens de keuken zijn met de kokkin. Maar het waren weer veel gangen met allemaal deuren naar gangen, dus Elwin werd al snel duizelig. 'Je komt er toch niet meer uit !' hoorde hij de kat krijsen. Elwin werd helemaal naar van het gekrijs. 'Houd je kop !' riep Elwin. Maar het gekrijs leek alleen maar erger te worden. Elwin stopte zijn vingers in zijn oren en begon te beven. Met zijn voet schoof hij het vloertapijt weg en zag weer een luik. Snel deed hij zijn vingers even uit zijn oren om het luik open te trekken, maar tot zijn grote schrik was daar weer alles donker. Hij hoopte maar dat hij hier geen tweede kat zou tegenkomen. Hij had zijn vingers weer in zijn oren gestopt vanwege het gekrijs, en direct toen hij over de uitgeschoven ladder de diepte was ingegaan werd hij door een hele groep zwarte katten aangevlogen.

'Nee !' jammerde Elwin, die om zich heen begon te slaan en te schoppen. 'Help !' riep hij. De katten beten hem en krabten hem. Elwin werd hoe langer hoe bozer, maar ook banger. Op de grond was alles nat. Er lag hier water en tot zijn grote schrik lag er dichtbij hem een krokodil. Elwin begon door het water te rennen, maar al gauw begon het water dieper te worden. Er stond hier een sterke stroming. Hij hoorde het water bruisen, alsof er ergens een grote waterval dichtbij was. Elwin gilde bijna van angst toen de sterke stroom hem meesleurde. 'Help !' schreeuwde hij, en toen ging hij kopje onder. Wat er toen gebeurde kon hij zich niet meer herinneren, maar hij werd even later wakker in een bed, terwijl een boerin zich over hem heenboog en bezorgd naar hem glimlachtte. 'Je bent veilig hier,' sprak de vrouw. 'Je was op een gevaarlijke plaats.'

'Waar ben ik ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Op de boerderij,' sprak de vrouw.

'Welke boerderij ? Is dit nog steeds het gokpaleis ?' vroeg Elwin.

De vrouw knikte. 'Je ging door een gat heen. Het water zoog je erdoor, en toen kwam je hier. Dit is nog een verdieping lager. Het gebeurt wel vaker. Wij zorgen voor de slachtoffers. Er gebeuren vreemde dingen op de hogere verdiepingen.'

'E... en dit is een boerderij ?' Elwin keek om zich heen, en het leek inderdaad op een boerderij. Elwin begon zijn verhaal te stotteren en kon het niet laten de boerin te vragen of het gokpaleis ook een gokkoning had en een verborgen gehouden droomsteen. De vrouw begon te lachen. 'Dus je hebt het ook gehoord ?' vroeg ze.

'Ja, van Kik en Kes,' sprak Elwin, 'en van de kokkin in de keuken.'

'Luister goed,' sprak de boerin. 'Ja, het is waar dat er een gokkoning is, en een droomsteen die hij bewaakt, maar daar mag eigenlijk niet over gesproken worden.'

'Zie, dus het is toch waar !' riep Elwin.

'Shhhh !' zei de vrouw hardop, en legde haar vinger op zijn mond. 'Mondje dicht, jongen, want we willen niet in de problemen komen.'

'Okay,' zei Elwin, 'sorry.' De vrouw glimlachtte naar hem. Elwin merkte dat hij droge kleren aanhad. Het was een pyjama. De vrouw had hem goed verzorgd. 'Weet u dan ook waar de droomsteen is ?' vroeg Elwin fluisterend. De vrouw schudde haar hoofd. 'Die wordt veel te goed verborgen gehouden,' sprak ze.

Elwin was erg moe, en viel al snel weer in slaap. Na een hele lange tijd, hij wist niet hoe lang, werd hij wakker. Het leek wel alsof hij verschillende dagen had geslapen, maar hij was ook zo moe geweest. Hij stapte uit bed, en keek rond in de boerderij. Het was een beetje donker, dus hij deed wat lampjes aan. Hij zag de boerin niet. Even later vond hij haar slaapkamer en zag dat ze sliep. Voorzichtig liep Elwin weer terug naar zijn kamer. Over een stoel hingen wat droge kleren die hij kon aantrekken. Nadat hij dat had gedaan ging hij de gang op. De gang was heel lang, en het deed hem denken aan de gangen van de hogere verdiepingen. 'Nee, niet weer,' zuchtte hij. 'Laat ik maar weer teruggaan.' Maar hoe ver hij ook terugliep, hij kon de boerderij niet meer vinden. 'Dat moet ik weer net hebben !' sprak hij luid. Hij begon de boerin te roepen, want angst begon weer over zijn rug te glijden. Alles was doodstil. 'Wat is er, jongen ?' werd er ineens geroepen. Het was de boerin. Na een korte tijd kwam ze eraan lopen, met een glimlach. Ze nam hem bij de hand en samen liepen ze terug naar de boerderij. 'Zij die hier niet wonen verdwalen altijd,' sprak de vrouw glimlachend.

Ze gingen naar de woonkamer, en de vrouw gaf hem wat te eten en te drinken. 'Hier, je zult wel honger hebben,' sprak ze.

'Eigenlijk niet,' zei Elwin. 'Ik weet niet hoe het komt.' In ieder geval nam hij wat te drinken. De vrouw glimlachtte weer naar hem. 'Heeft u ook kinderen ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Nee,' zei de vrouw.

'En een boer ?' vroeg Elwin.

De vrouw schudde haar hoofd. 'Ik woon hier helemaal alleen. Toen ik een kind was won ik eens op de kermis, en toen werd ik hier mee naartoe genomen om als boerin te werken.'

'Dat moet heel eenzaam zijn,' sprak Elwin. De vrouw knikte. 'Wij zijn onder een betovering,' sprak ze. 'De gokkoning gebruikt de droomsteen voor zijn kwade doeleinden.'

'Daarom ben ik hier,' zei Elwin. 'Weet u ook wat onder deze verdieping is ?'

De vrouw schudde haar hoofd. Elwin dacht na. Hij wilde de vrouw graag helpen, maar hij wist niet hoe. Wat hij wel wist is dat de droomsteen zo snel mogelijk terugmoest naar Kik en Kes. Hij wilde het geheim kennen van het gokpaleis en de gokkoning. Hij wist dat het geen optie was om naar de hogere verdieping te gaan, want daar zouden de katten en de krokodillen hem al opwachten. Samen met de boerin wilde hij kijken of er ergens een luik zou zijn onder het vloertapijt op de gang. De boerin knikte, en nam zijn hand, stond op, en liep met hem de gang op. Met zijn voet schoof hij het vloertapijt weg, en zag inderdaad een luik. Samen maakten ze het luik open. Er kwam veel licht doorheen.

Hoofdstuk 2.

Er kwam een narretje door het luik heen naar boven. 'Bedankt,' zuchtte het narretje. 'Ik heb hier zolang opgesloten gezeten. Ik dacht dat ik er nooit meer uit zou komen.' Het mannetje was erg opgelucht. 'Wie bent u ?' vroeg Elwin.

'De naam is Rotenstein, en ik zing graag een refrein,' sprak het mannetje. Elwin keek hem verbaasd aan. 'Wat is daar beneden ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Oh, het is daar verschrikkelijk,' sprak Rotenstein. 'Allemaal krokodillen en katten, en water, veel water, en vaak donker.'

'Maar nu was het licht, en het klinkt wel een beetje als waar ik vandaan kwam,' sprak Elwin.

'Ja, licht, eens in de week ofzo, voor een paar uurtjes, veel licht,' sprak Rotenstein.

'Hoe kwam je daar ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Op de fiets,' zei het mannetje. Elwin was verbaasd. 'Daar ben je zo een keer ingefietst ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Nou, eigenlijk fietste ik gewoon eens een keer naar de kermis, won iets, en toen namen ze me op de fiets hier naartoe,' zei het mannetje.

'Wie waren dat ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Dat kan ik me niet meer herinneren,' sprak het mannetje. 'Het is al zo lang geleden, maar sindsdien moest ik nar zijn, mensen aan het lachen maken, maar dat ging niet echt goed, en toen hebben ze me hieronder gebracht.'

'Maar dat is verschrikkelijk,' zei Elwin. 'Ik denk dat we hier nu allemaal vastzitten.'

'Oh, dus jij kunt ook niet weg ?' zei het mannetje. 'En u, boerin, ook niet ?'

De boerin schudde haar hoofd. 'Allemaal vast,' sprak ze.

'Wat een waardeloze bedoening, zeg,' sprak het narretje. 'Er moet toch iets op te vinden zijn ?'

'Ja,' zei Elwin, 'en er moet hier ook nog ergens een kokkin zijn, die zit in hetzelfde probleem als ons.'

'Nou, mooi is dat,' sprak het narretje. 'Hoeveel meer zouden er hier opgesloten zitten in dit reusachtige paleis ?'

'Ik heb geen idee,' zei Elwin.

'Maar we hebben in ieder geval elkaar,' sprak het mannetje. 'Laten we dichtbij elkaar blijven.'

'Ik wil hem hier niet hebben,' zei de boerin. 'Ik vertrouw hem niet. Hij lijkt op een kermiswerker.'

Elwin keek bedenkelijk. 'Echt niet, mevrouw !' riep het narretje. 'Ik zweer u dat ik nooit zo ben geweest. Ze hebben mij dit pakje aangetrokken en ik moest gek doen om de mensen aan het lachen te maken.'

'Ik vertrouw hem niet, Elwin,' zei de boerin. 'Ik wil weer terug. Ik voel me niet op mijn gemak.' De boerin draaide zich om en liep terug naar de woonkamer. 'Kom je, Elwin ?' zei ze nog, en toen verdween ze door de bocht van de gang. Elwin raakte in paniek, want hij wist dat hij de boerin nodig had om terug te komen in de boerderij. 'Boerin !' riep hij. Hij rende de bocht om, maar zag alleen maar een eindeloos lange gang. Elwin zuchtte, en ging weer terug naar het narretje. Hij hoopte dat de boerin snel weer zou terugkomen, maar dat gebeurde niet. 'Jij gelooft me toch, hè, Elwin ?' vroeg het narretje. Elwin keek het narretje aan en knipperde even met zijn ogen. 'Ik weet het niet, narretje,' sprak Elwin. 'Ik ken je niet lang genoeg om het zeker te weten.' Het narretje keek hem strak in zijn ogen. 'Je gelooft me toch wel, hè, Elwin ? Je gelooft toch niet die praatjes van die gekke, dikke boerin ? Hé Elwin !' zei het narretje die steeds harder begon te praten, en toen zelfs vlak voor Elwin begon te roepen. De rillingen vlogen Elwin over zijn rug. Plotseling haalde het narretje vanuit het niets een knuppel te voorschijn, en sloeg Elwin op zijn hoofd. Na een tijdje werd Elwin wakker. Hij voelde een bult op zijn hoofd, en er was bloed aan zijn hand. Hij lag op het tapijt. Het luik was dicht, en er was geen narretje meer te bekennen. Trillend stond Elwin op, en begon verder te zoeken. Hij riep naar de boerin, maar tevergeefs.

Hij wist dat de gangen hier eindeloos waren. Naar boven wilde hij niet, en ook niet naar beneden. Maar als hij moest kiezen, dan toch liever naar beneden, maar eerst wilde hij wat anders proberen. Hij begon de muren te onderzoeken. Ook begon hij de deurknoppen te onderzoeken. Uiteindelijk begon hij te schreeuwen van ellende. Hij voelde zich bedrogen, en hij was bang. Hij begon geklop te horen op de vloer, en toen ook op het plafond. Het spookte hier verschrikkelijk. Dit was niet zomaar een gokpaleis, maar een spookhuis. 'Wat moeten jullie van me !' riep Elwin.

'Ik kan het niet meer verdragen,' zei Elwin tegen zichzelf. 'Ik kan dit niet lang meer volhouden. Iemand moet me helpen.' Elwin begon op de muren te kloppen, om te zien of er ergens misschien zwakke plekken waren, maar voor wat ? Na een tijdje was hij zo moedeloos dat hij weer het tapijt wegschoof met zijn voet. Er waren veel luiken onder het tapijt. Hij maakte er eentje jammerend open, niet wetende wat hij dit keer zou aantreffen.

Alweer was er licht, en het narretje verscheen weer. Elwin schrok en hysterisch gooide hij het luik weer dicht. 'Dat was op het nippertje,' zuchtte Elwin, terwijl hij beefde van de schrik. 'Ik weet wel waar je bent !' krijste het narretje. 'Ik zal je wel krijgen !' Elwin begon te rennen, maar het narretje bleef krijsen. De boerin had gelijk had, maar hij wist niet of de boerin wel te vertrouwen was, want waar was ze gebleven ? Hij wenste dat hij gewoon dichtbij de boerin was gebleven. Of misschien kon hij wel niemand hier vertrouwen, en was alles één groot bedrog ? Elwin had zijn vingers in zijn oren gestopt terwijl hij bleef rennen. Hij wilde alles van zich afschudden. Alhoewel de gang eindeloos leek bleef hij toch rennen. Hij moest en zou hier doorheen komen. Hij moest een manier zien te vinden om de betovering te verbreken. Hij gooide alle deuren open aan beide kanten, en bleef allemaal gangen zien. Dit moest toch ergens een keer stoppen ?

Hij begreep nu waarom Kik en Kes niet meewilden en hem nog hadden gewaarschuwd. Oh, had hij nu maar naar hen geluisterd, maar eigenlijk wilde hij de moed nog niet opgeven. Iemand moest deze tovenaar een halt toeroepen. Alhoewel hij er aan twijfelde of hij daar wel de juiste persoon voor was. Hij begon te schelden op de vele deuren en de lange gangen, maar niets hielp. Opeens stond er een oude vrouw voor hem met een kaars. 'Geef de moed maar op, jongen,' sprak ze.

'Nooit !' riep Elwin. De vrouw leek op een oude boerin.

'U bent toch niet dezelfde boerin die ik al eerder was tegengekomen toch ?' vroeg Elwin. De vrouw schudde haar hoofd. 'Nee, Elwin, ik ben iets veel ergers.'

Elwin schrok. 'Hoe kent u mijn naam, en hoezo bent u iets veel ergers ?' Plotseling stond de vrouw in de vlammen, en donder en bliksem verscheen boven haar hoofd. 'Ik ben een heks !' krijste ze, terwijl ze geheel in een vuurvlam veranderde, en toen verdween ze.

Elwin greep naar zijn hoofd en jammerde. 'Wat is er toch met mij aan de hand. Zijn dit verbeeldingen ? Word ik straks gewoon weer wakker in mijn eigen bed ? Oh, was ik maar thuisgebleven. Ik ook altijd met mijn stomme ideeen.' Elwin begon uit pure wanhoop te springen op de vloer. Plotseling gingen alle deuren voor hem en achter hem open en door elke deur kwam er een clown met een mes uit. Allemaal begonnen ze langzaam op hem af te komen. Elwin aarzelde geen moment, schoof het tapijt met zijn voet opzij, opende vliegensvlug een luik en sprong naar binnen. 'Narretje of geen narretje,' zei hij tegen zichzelf. 'Hierboven moet ik niet meer wezen.' Alles was hier licht, en direct hoorde hij het narretje krijsen, maar hij viel dieper en dieper. 'Kom terug !' schreeuwde het narretje in de verte. Na een tijdje leek het wel alsof Elwin op een grote hoop kussens was gevallen. Alles was zo zacht hier. Hij begon zich direct een weg door de kussens te graven, nog steeds bang voor de clowns en het narretje.

Na een tijdje had hij de bodem bereikt, en baande zich een weg door de kussens heen. Hij begon steeds meer zand onder zijn voeten te voelen, en na een tijdje kwam hij aan in een woestijn. Hij kon zo eindelijk uit de hoop kussens stappen. Het was hier licht, en toch wist hij dat het slechts een verdieping was van het gokpaleis, diep onder de grond.

Er was een oase dichtbij, en verderop in de woestijn was een cafeetje. Elwin liep daar naar binnen, waar een lange cowboy, en twee kale mannen met een lange baard een spelletje met dobbelstenen deden. De cowboy hief even zijn grote hoed op, en sprak : 'Goedenavond, heer.' Ook de twee kale mannen met de lange baarden knikten naar hem. 'Wat zal het wezen, hoe kan ik je helpen ?' vroeg de lange cowboy met de grote hoed.

'Nou, als het zou kunnen,' zei Elwin, 'dan kunt u mij uitleg geven over waar ik terecht ben gekomen, en waar de gokkoning is en de droomsteen ?'

De cowboy en ook de twee kale mannen trokken hun wenkbrauwen op. 'Wat zeg je me daar ?' snauwde de cowboy. 'Alsof ik jou dat ga vertellen ! Dat is een groot geheim, en daar kun je ook beter niet over beginnen,' terwijl hij zijn twee revolvers trok. 'Ik daag je uit voor een duel !'

'Kalm maar, het is nog maar een kind,' zei één van de kale mannen, terwijl de andere knikte. Nu werd de cowboy pas echt woedend. 'Wat heb ik daar mee te maken ? Hij heeft zijn mond over zulke dingen te houden. Dat is niet goed voor mijn zaken. Straks komt niemand hier nog.'

'Luister,' zei de andere kale man. 'Ben je nu niet een beetje aan het overdrijven ?'

De cowboy trapte de tafel om, terwijl de dobbelstenen over de grond begonnen te rollen. 'Ik daag jullie ook uit voor een duel !' brulde hij. 'Ik kom hier over een uurtje terug, en als ik jullie hier dan nog zie, dan schiet ik een grote barst in jullie !' Toen rende hij scheldend het café uit.

'Die moet even afkoelen,' zei de andere kale man weer. 'En wie ben jij ?'

'Ik ben Elwin,' sprak Elwin, en begon toen zijn hele verhaal te vertellen. De kale mannen keken hem aan in grote verbazing. 'Laten we hier eerst weggaan,' sprak één van de kale mannen, 'anders komt dat heethoofd terug, en dan hebben we goed de poppen aan het dansen.' De andere kale man knikte, en sprak : 'Het is inderdaad nogal een heethoofd.'

'Waar moeten we nu naartoe ?' vroeg Elwin.

'De woestijn in natuurlijk,' zei één van de kale mannen. 'In de oase zal hij ons ook vinden.' En daar gingen ze, dieper de woestijn in. Ze hadden volgens de kale mannen geen andere keuze, en ze hoopten dat ze hem niet hier ergens tegen zouden komen. Er waren hier veel zanderige heuveltjes. 'Vertel me eens,' sprak één van de kale mannen, 'dus jij gelooft echt dat dit slechts een verdieping is van een gokpaleis, en nog wel onder de grond ?'

Elwin knikte. 'Ja,' sprak Elwin. 'Ik heb het zelf gezien, en ik ben er geweest, en kwam toen hier terecht toen ik dieper ging.' De oude kale mannen begonnen te lachen. Ze hadden bijna geen tanden meer. 'Wat een kletspraat,' zei één van hen. Dus als we hier dieper graven dan komen we misschien in een andere verdieping van dat zogenaamde gokpaleis ?' Elwin knikte weer. 'Ja, dat denk ik wel, tenzij dit de onderste verdieping is.' De oude mannen begonnen nog harder te bulderen van het lachen.

'Wees maar voorzichtig,' zei Elwin. 'Straks hoort de boze cowboy ons nog.'

Toen werden de oude mannen met de lange baarden wat stiller. 'Hij heeft gelijk,' zei één van hen. Toen sprak de ander : 'Jongen, kijk nu eens goed om je heen en naar boven. Lijkt dit op een verdieping van een paleis ? Zie je boven je een plafond hangen ?'

Elwin schudde zijn hoofd. 'Nee, maar vergeet niet dat het het gokpaleis is van een tovenaar.'

De oude mannen keken bedenkelijk. 'Hmmm, misschien heeft hij gelijk,' zei één van hen. 'Er gebeuren hier soms inderdaad vreemde dingen.'

'Ja,' zei de ander, 'en als die droomsteen echt bestaat en hier ook ergens ligt, misschien zijn er dan nog veel meer schatten.'

'Wees daar maar niet zo zeker van !' zei een stem opeens. Ze stonden ineens recht voor de lange cowboy en keken in de loop van zijn revolver. 'Ik daag jullie uit voor een duel !' riep hij weer. 'Ik doe dertig passen achteruit, en jullie doen hetzelfde, en dan zal het duel beginnen. Moge de beste winnen.'

De cowboy draaide zich om en begon de dertig passen al te maken. Hij nam lange passen. 'Kom,' fluisterde één van de oude mannen hard, en rende de andere kant op, om zo snel mogelijk uit de buurt van de gevaarlijke cowboy te komen. De anderen volgden hem. 'Graven nu,' zei de oude man luid, 'misschien dat de jongen gelijk heeft. We moeten van die cowboy af zien te komen. Alledrie begonnen ze haastig op dezelfde plek met hun handen te graven, en Elwin hoopte maar dat het een dunne laag zand was. Snel vonden ze een marmeren luik, en begonnen het zand ervan weg te halen zodat het geheel zichtbaar zou worden. Maar de cowboy stond al in de verte naar hen te kijken, en kwam steeds dichterbij. 'Het duel is begonnen !' riep de cowboy, en ze hoorden al schoten. Elwin's hart klopte in zijn keel. 'Sneller, sneller !' riep één van de oude mannen. Maar toen ze het luik wilde opentrekken merkten ze dat er een groot slot opzat. Eén van de oude mannen werd in zijn arm geraakt en schreeuwde van de pijn. 'We zijn verloren !' riep de andere kale man. Elwin begon al weg te rennen, maar ineens riepen de oude mannen hem terug. 'Kom terug, kom terug. Eén van de kogels heeft het slot van het luik opengesloten !' Haastig draaide Elwin zich om, en zag hoe de oude mannen door het luik heengingen. Hij rende naar het luik toe zo hard als hij kon, maar tot zijn grote schrik zag hij toen de cowboy die bij het luik was aangekomen. 'Dat doen we dus niet,' sprak de cowboy, en maakte het luik weer dicht.

'Kom, Elwin !' werd er weer door de oude mannen geroepen, maar Elwin zat in de val. 'Ik kan niet !' riep Elwin. 'De cowboy heeft het luik dichtgegooid, en staat hier voor me !' Toen werd het heel stil. De cowboy kwam dichter en dichter bij Elwin, en Elwin wist dat rennen geen zin meer had. Elwin keek recht in de loop van de revolver die de cowboy op hem gericht hield. 'Er gaat hier niks meer gebeuren,' sprak de cowboy. 'Alleen een klein kogeltje.' Toen begon hij te lachen. 'Zeg je laatste wens maar, doe een optelsom, of zing een versje, dat kan mij niet schelen. Je laatste minuut is geslagen. Ik wacht.'

Elwin begon te beven en te trillen. 'I... ik weet het niet,' zei Elwin.

'Wat weet je niet ?' vroeg de cowboy.

'Wat ik moet zeggen,' zei Elwin.

'Goed,' zei de cowboy, 'dan doen we het zonder …'

Maar verder kon de cowboy niet komen. Eén van de oude mannen had hem van achteren met een grote koekepan op zijn hoofd geslagen. De cowboy zakte in elkaar. 'Kom nu vlug, Elwin,' zeiden de oude mannen. 'Er is een keuken onder de woestijn. Weer gingen ze door het luik, en dit keer samen met Elwin. Toen deden ze het luik achter zich dicht. Ze hoopten nu dat de cowboy hen niet meer zou kunnen kwellen.

Het was een reusachtige ondergrondse keuken waar ze in terecht waren gekomen, maar er was niemand. 'Laten we dit gebouw onderzoeken,' zei één van de oude mannen.

Er waren hier overal pannen en potten, en er hingen overal messen en hakbijlen aan de muren. 'Het lijkt wel oorlog,' sprak één van de oude mannen. Ze gingen een deur door, en kwamen toen in een andere zaal. Er stonden een heleboel ovens en fornuizen. Ze gingen toen door een enorme metalen schuifdeur en kwamen in een grote witte eetzaal terecht waar een heleboel tafels stonden. Hier was ook niemand. Ze liepen de hele zaal door en gingen toen door een zijdeurtje, waardoor ze in een grote hal terecht kwamen. Hier was een grote trap naar boven, bekleed met rood fluwelen tapijt, en er was een lift, en nog een kleinere gang en wat deuren.

'De jongen heeft gelijk gehad,' zei één van de oude mannen. 'Waarschijnlijk heeft hij ook gelijk over de droomsteen. Die moet hier dus ergens zijn, of op een andere verdieping. Zijn verhaal klinkt aannemelijk. De andere oude man knikte.

'Die lift ga ik niet in. Dat brengt alleen maar narigheid,' sprak Elwin. Hij liep naar de kleinere gang, en sloeg daar een deur open, maar tot zijn grote schrik zag hij toen een hele lange gang die precies leek op de eindeloze gangen waar hij vandaan was gekomen. Snel gooide hij de deur dicht. 'Hier moeten we ook niet wezen,' beefde hij. Hij liep verder op het kleine gangetje en maakte geen deuren meer open. Aan het einde van het kleine gangetje was een trap naar boven. 'Laten we dit proberen,' sprak hij. De oude mannen volgden hem op de voet. Elwin was blij dat hij twee vrienden had gevonden. Op een hogere verdieping waar de trap naartoe leidde stond een deur open van een kamertje. Elwin en de oude mannen gingen er naar binnen. Elwin keek door het raam en zag allemaal woestijn. 'Hmmm, daar komen we vandaan,' sprak één van de oude mannen. Elwin knikte. 'Laten we nog verder de trap op,' sprak Elwin. Op een verdieping hoger was weer een kamer, en een badkamer. Ook was er een grote hal. Hier stonden allemaal antieke spullen, zoals planeetbollen en oude stoelen. Ook hingen er antieke koninklijke gordijnen. 'Misschien woont de gokkoning hier ?' zei één van de oude mannen.

'Ik hoop het niet, want anders zouden we in grote problemen kunnen zijn,' sprak Elwin.

'Maar dat zou ook betekenen dat we dichter bij de droomsteen zouden kunnen zijn, en dat is toch wat we willen ?' zei de andere oude man. 'Dat is waar,' zei Elwin. Ze keken door een groot raam, en zagen een herfstbos buiten, als een koninklijke tuin. Ze hoorden gebrul in de verte. Even gingen de rillingen door Elwin heen. Hij hoopte echt dat ze dit keer niet in de problemen zouden komen. De oude mannen begonnen de kamer te doorzoeken, terwijl Elwin uit het raam bleef kijken. Het was alsof hij deze plaats ergens van kende. Buiten zag hij een tuinman de bladeren bij elkaar harken. Opeens stond er een dienstmeisje in de grote deur opening. 'Ah, de gasten zijn er al,' sprak ze opgewekt. 'Hoe kan ik jullie helpen ?'

'Eh, bedankt,' sprak één van de oude mannen. 'Wij komen voor de gokkoning, Hoe laat komt hij ?'

Het dienstmeisje hief haar wenkbrauwen op en begon te lachen. 'Meneer maakt zeker een grapje. Gokkoning ? Daar heb ik nog nooit van gehoord, tenzij u de gokautomaten in de kantine bedoeld.' De oude man kreeg een rood gezicht. Elwin begon haar toen het hele verhaal uit te leggen, maar het dienstmeisje begreep er niet veel van. 'Dat klinkt als een sprookje,' sprak ze. 'Dus als ik het goed begrijp heeft u deze kamer niet gereserveerd ?'

Opeens stond er een dikke man met een sigaar en een gestreept pak in de deur opening. 'Wat moet dit hier !' bulderde hij. 'Jullie komen me niet bekend voor, en hebben geen plaats in dit sjiek hotel. Nu, wegwezen, of ik laat jullie verwijderen met de harde hand. Maak dat je wegkomt nu.'

Maar dat liet Elwin niet op zich zitten. Hij stapte op de man af en gaf hem een stomp in zijn dikke buik. 'Wie heeft jou geleerd om zo tegen ons te praten ? En jullie hebben hier gokautomaten ? Dan moet hier vast en zeker ook de gokkoning ergens zijn en de droomsteen die hij verborgen houdt.'

Ruw greep de man Elwin bij zijn arm, en begon hem door elkaar te rammelen. 'Zeg, wat is dat, ventje ? Er woont hier geen koning, en al helemaal geen gokkoning. Droomstenen komen verder alleen in jouw praatjes voor.' Toen duwde de man Elwin weg. Nu begon Elwin echt kwaad te worden. 'Maar dit is een onderdeel van het gokpaleis !' riep Elwin boos naar de man.

'Ja ja,' lachte de man in het donkere gestreepte pak. Hij had ook een donkere hoed op, en zijn sigaar gleed bijna uit zijn mond. 'En mijn tante is een olifant, en mijn oom draagt driehonderd brillen. Zeg, kom nou, onderdeel van een gokpaleis ? Wie denk je wel niet dat je bent ? Allemaal hazentaal.'

Ook de dikke man die de hotelbaas leek te zijn trok een revolver en richtte de loop op Elwin om hem onder schot te houden. 'Daar gaan we weer !' riep één van de oude kale mannen. 'Tegenwoordig wordt er bij het minste of geringste al naar een pistool gegrepen ! Belachelijk !'

'Houd je muil, ouwe,' sprak de dikke hotelbaas. 'En nu allemaal ophoepelen, want mijn pistool jeukt.' De dikke hotelbaas stond daar al rood van woede en begon al lampen kapot te schieten als waarschuwing.

Het dienstmeisje keek geschrokken. 'Weet u dat zeker dat u die dure porseleinen en kristallen antieke lampen kapot wil schieten vanwege een stel belhamels ?' riep ze.

'Ach klets niet, hoela hoep,' zei de hotelbaas. 'Dat laat ik hen allemaal betalen.'

Elwin begon de kamer uit te rennen, en de oude mannen volgden hem. 'En nu betalen voor de lampen !' gilde de hotelbaas. 'Ja !'

riep het dienstmeisje. 'Het is jullie schuld !' Elwin rende de trap weer op naar een hogere verdieping. Hier waren een heleboel kamers in een cirkel waar allemaal Chinese meisjes stonden in zijden Chinese pyjama's en jurken. 'Het lijkt wel kerstfeest,' sprak één van de oude mannen. Achter zich hoorden ze schoten. Dat moest de hotelbaas zijn. 'Laten we nog hoger gaan,' zei Elwin luid tegen de oude mannen, en weer rende hij de trap op. Maar op de volgende verdieping waren de eindeloze gangen weer. 'Hier niet, hier niet !' riep Elwin. Maar ook de hotelbaas was verder de trap opgegaan, met het dienstmeisje achter hem. 'Jullie kunnen me nu niet meer ontkomen !' sprak hij gemeen. 'Hoezo niet ?' vroeg Elwin. 'Kijk eens naar al die gangen hier.' De hotelbaas begon te lachen. 'Het is mijn hotel,' zei de hotelbaas. 'Ik ken de weg. Jullie niet. Verstoppen heeft geen zin.'

'Oh, dus die eindeloze gangen zijn van jou ? Dan moet jij dus wel de gokkoning zijn !' riep Elwin. De hotelbaas kwam steeds dichter bij hem. 'Ren dan, ren,' sprak de hotelbaas. 'Als je wil leven.' De oude mannen begonnen al zo'n eindeloze gang op te rennen. 'Nee, nee, kom terug !' riep Elwin. 'Die gangen zijn eindeloos, daar kom je nooit meer weg !' Maar ze hoorden hem al niet meer, en al snel verdwenen ze in een bocht.

Elwin keek de hotelbaas recht in zijn ogen. Wat waren die ogen gemeen. 'U moet de gokkoning wel zijn,' sprak Elwin. 'Wat gaat u met mijn vrienden doen ?'

'Welke vrienden ?' lachte de hotelbaas. 'Ze bestaan niet meer.'

'Hoe weet u dat ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Omdat ze goed in de val zijn gelopen, die indringers,' sprak de hotelbaas. 'Vooruit, ren dan.'

'Ren zelf,' zei Elwin.

'Ik heb de revolver hier, en het is mijn hotel,' zei de hotelbaas.

'Ik waag me er niet meer aan,' sprak Elwin. De hotelbaas bewoog de loop van de revolver helemaal tegen Elwin's kin aan en drukte er tegen. 'De droomsteen ligt daar ergens. Waarom zou je er niet op afgaan ?' sprak de hotelbaas.

'Ik ben niet gek,' zei Elwin.

'De droomsteen wacht al op je, ventje, nou, komt er nog wat van ?' sprak de hotelbaas.

Opeens werd de hotelbaas van achteren neegeslagen met een koekepan. Het was de cowboy. 'Zo, die had je nog van mij tegoed,' sprak de cowboy. Het dienstmeisje begon gillend weg te rennen. Toen richtte de cowboy zich op Elwin. 'Jij weer, hè ?'

Uit de zak van de hotelbaas die op de grond lag gleed een bos met sleutels. Elwin bedacht zich geen moment en greep de bos met sleutels. 'Nee !' krijste de cowboy. 'Doe die sleutels weg !' Elwin hield de bos sleutels voor de neus van de cowboy. Hij hield ze stevig vast en liet ze daar bungelen. De cowboy zakte slap in elkaar en begon te jammeren en te smeken : 'Ik smeek je, haal die ellendige dingen van me weg. Ik kan er niet tegen, ik kan er niet tegen.' Zijn handen waren slap geworden, en de koekepan en de revolver gleden eruit weg en vielen op de grond. Elwin trapte ze weg met zijn voet. Met zijn andere hand haalde hij de tweede revolver weg van de cowboy, en toen ook een mes. 'Die sleutels zijn van mij nu,' sprak Elwin. 'Nu, maak dat je wegkomt !' De cowboy kruipte één van de eindeloze gangen op en begon toen hard en gillend weg te rennen, totdat hij in een bocht verdween.

'Ziezo,' zei Elwin, maar toen hij zich omdraaide werd hij onder schot gehouden door het dienstmeisje die één van de revolvers op de grond had gegrepen. 'Terug met die sleutels,' sprak ze streng. 'Op de grond ermee.' Elwin liet van schrik de sleutels vallen. 'Handen omhoog,' sprak ze. Elwin deed zijn handen omhoog. De andere revolver en het mes schopte ze bij hem weg, en bukte toen om de sleutelbos te pakken, terwijl ze hem strak bleef aankijken en onder schot hield.

'Hier ga je zwaar voor betalen,' sprak het dienstmeisje.

'Ik weet het,' zei Elwin. 'Dat was dom van mij.'

'Een beetje heel dom,' zei het dienstmeisje. Langzaam begon de hotelbaas bij te komen. 'Hmmm, goed werk,' zei hij tegen het dienstmeisje. 'Hij is nu van ons. Misschien kunnen we hem goed gebruiken.'

Maar daar zagen ze ineens de cowboy terugkomen vanuit de eindeloze gang die met een enorme snelheid op hen afkwam. Van schrik richtte het dienstmeisje de revolver op de aanstormende cowboy, terwijl Elwin dankbaar van het moment gebruik maakte en de benen nam. Hij ging de trap af naar beneden, en wist dat hij nu zo diep mogelijk weer moest, want boven liep het spoor dood. Hij hoorde de hotelbaas en de cowboy al op elkaar schelden, en ook het gekrijs van het dienstmeisje klonk er doorheen. Ze leken hem helemaal vergeten te zijn. In de hal naast de eetzaal zocht Elwin onder het tapijt naar een luik, maar dat scheen er niet te zijn. Hij liep toen naar de andere kant van de hal naast de eetzaal waar hij een deur opende, maar daar zag hij weer zo'n eindeloze gang. 'Dan de lift maar,' sprak Elwin tegen zichzelf en rende naar de lift. 'Dit zijn probleem-dingen,' mompelde hij. Hij drukte op een gloeiende rode knop voor een verdieping lager toen hij in de lift was.

'Ik ben benieuwd,' zei Elwin tegen zichzelf, terwijl hij rilde. Hij voelde zich niet echt goed. De lift leek maar niet te stoppen. Na een hele lange tijd, en dat leken wel uren te zijn, stopte de lift eindelijk. Maar toen Elwin uitstapte was hij weer op precies dezelfde verdieping als waar hij was ingestapt, namelijk van het hotel, in de hal dichtbij de eetzaal. Toch leek alles net iets anders. Hij stapte uit, en zag tot zijn grote schrik de hotelbaas, de cowboy en het dienstmeisje op hem afkomen. Hij wilde weer de lift instappen, maar de deur zat dicht, en hij kreeg de liftdeur met geen mogelijkheid meer open. Elwin begon op het knopje te rammen. 'Toe nou, ga open, kreng !' riep hij. Toen ineens voelde hij van achter een hand op zijn schouder. Het was de hotelbaas. Elwin kromp ineen toen hij zich omdraaide, en had erge buikpijn. Hij keek naar het dienstmeisje die breed glimlachte. Toen keek hij naar de cowboy die ook breed glimlachte, en de hotelbaas keek heel bezorgd naar hem.

'Ummm, wat is hier aan de hand ?' vroeg Elwin die er niets van begreep. Hij had eerder pistool onder zijn neus verwacht of een klap met een koekepan. 'Niets,' zei de cowboy glimlachend en vriendelijk. 'Helemaal niets. We vroegen ons af hoe het met je ging als onze gast.'

'Tttttt,' zei Elwin. 'Eerst loop je me nog achterna met een pistool en moest ik weg, en werd ik onder schot gehouden, enzovoorts, en nu zijn jullie ineens mijn vrienden ofzo ?' Elwin was heel verbaasd.

Ook de cowboy, het dienstmeisje en de hotelbaas waren heel verbaasd, en keken hem bezorgd en liefdevol aan. 'Maar jongen toch, waar haal je dat toch allemaal vandaan ? Pistolen ? Heb je soms eng gedroomd ?' vroeg de hotelbaas vriendelijk en vol interesse.

'I... ik weet het niet meer,' sprak Elwin, en begon het hele verhaal te vertellen. 'Oh, jij komt van boven,' zei het dienstmeisje met een aardige stem. 'Nu begrijpen wij het. Daarboven is alles omgekeerde wereld. Daar moet je ook niet komen, jongen.'

'Maar die lift dan ?' vroeg Elwin. 'Leidt die dan niet naar boven, want daar kom ik vandaan.'

'Die lift gaat alleen maar door de verdiepingen van het hotel, maar niet hoger,' sprak de cowboy. 'Jij moet van heel hoog zijn gekomen, waar je alleen maar van kan komen, maar nooit naartoe kan gaan.'

'Ik snap het niet,' zei Elwin. 'Ik kan dus nooit meer terug ?'

'Precies,' zei de hotelbaas. 'En gelukkig maar, want daar is alles omgekeerde wereld.'

'Ja maar, Kik en Kes dan ?' vroeg Elwin. 'Zij moeten hun droomsteen terugkrijgen, en er zijn zoveel kinderen door de gokkoning naar die plaats ontvoerd, en die moeten daar werken.'

'Oh,' zei de hotelbaas, 'maak je maar niet ongerust, hoor. Die zullen ook hun weg hier naartoe wel vinden.'

'Ik kan ze toch niet zomaar aan hun lot overlaten ?' vroeg Elwin. 'En waar is die droomsteen dan ?'

'Tja,' zei de cowboy. 'Dat weten we niet, en dat weet niemand, alhoewel sommigen zeggen dat deze verdieping de droomsteen is.'

'En wat is hier onder dan ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Oh, hieronder moet je ook niet wezen,' sprak het dienstmeisje vriendelijk. 'Dit hier is een verdieping uit duizenden. De rest is allemaal omgekeerde wereld. Ook wij vonden ooit onze weg naar deze plaats, en we wilden sindsdien nooit meer weg. Voor ons is dit de droomsteen.'

'Maar ik zou graag over deze plaats willen vertellen aan mijn vrienden, de kokkin, de boerin, de twee oude mannen en Kik en Kes,' sprak Elwin.

'Ze moeten daar zelf achter komen, Elwin,' sprak de cowboy. 'Iedereen moet die reis voor zichzelf maken en de juiste lessen leren en de juiste beslissingen maken.'

'Maar toch wil ik ze helpen,' sprak Elwin.

'Dat kan niet,' zei de cowboy. 'Dat is te gevaarlijk. Je wilt toch niet dat de verkeerde personen deze plaats vinden ? Het is te riskant, en daarom kan niemand ooit nog terug naar waar ze vandaan kwamen. Begrijp je dat ?'

'Ik begrijp het wel,' zei Elwin, 'maar we zitten hier toch niet opgesloten ?'

De cowboy schudde liefdevol zijn hoofd. 'Elwin, Elwin, Elwin. Jongen, het heeft niets met opgesloten te maken, maar met beveiliging. Dat is toch een goede zaak dan ?'

Elwin boog zijn hoofd. 'Maar is er dan niets wat we voor hen kunnen doen ? Helemaal niets ?'

'Helemaal niets,' sprak het dienstmeisje.

Elwin keek haar even aan en boog toen zijn hoofd weer. 'Maar Kik en Kes zullen hier nooit komen. Ze zijn veel te bang voor het gokpaleis. Ik moet ze gaan opzoeken. Ik kan het niet over mijn hart halen om hen in de steek te laten.'

'Goed,' zei de cowboy plotseling. 'Er is één manier om je vrienden te bezoeken, maar dan zullen we allemaal gaan. We zullen jou nooit in de steek laten. Jij bent één van ons.'

Het dienstmeisje en de hotelbaas keken de cowboy verbaasd aan. 'Wat is die manier dan, cowboy ?' vroeg de hotelbaas vriendelijk en vol interesse. 'Oh,' zei de cowboy, 'ik moet gewoon even de lift anders instellen. Ik ben de mechanicus, dus dat komt wel goed. Het is voor mij een koud kunstje. Ik heb ook ooit eens het hele gokpaleis voor de gokkoning gemaakt.'

Elwin keek verbaasd. 'Dus jij hebt dit alles gemaakt ? Wacht eens even. Betekent dat dat er op deze verdieping ook een aardige gokkoning is, net zo aardig als jullie ?'

De hotelbaas begon breed te glimlachen en ook het dienstmeisje. 'Die is nog wel aardiger dan wij allemaal bij elkaar,' lachte de hotelbaas.

'Hmmm,' zei Elwin, 'dus als ik het goed begrijp heeft de cowboy alle andere verdiepingen gemaakt om alles te beveiligen tegen gespuis ?' De anderen knikten. 'Hmmm,' zei Elwin. 'Betekent dat dat de cowboy onaantastbaar is, omdat hij alles gemaakt heeft ?'

'Was dat maar zo,' sprak de cowboy. 'Ik heb alles zo lang geleden gemaakt, en er houdt zich daar zoveel verschrikkelijk tuig op, en alles slaat soms echt op hol.'

Elwin zuchtte. 'We moeten toch echt naar Kik en Kes gaan.'

'Komt voor de bakker,' zei de cowboy. 'Stap allemaal in de lift, dan stel ik hem even bij, en dan kunnen we hoger.'

'Spannend,' zei Elwin.

Toen ze allemaal in de lift waren schroefde de cowboy even een kastje open, draaide even wat hier en daar, en schroefde toen het kastje weer dicht. Toen drukte hij op een rood gloeiende knop, en daar gingen ze. De lift begon na een tijdje zwaar te piepen. Ze keken allemaal even verschrikt, behalve de cowboy, die glimlachtte wat. 'Ach, negeer dat gepiep maar. De lift is er niet aan gewend, dus die protesteert even, maar als het goed is houdt hij zich zo wel stil, want ik heb hem nu anders ingesteld.'

'Dat hoop ik maar,' sprak Elwin. Het gepiep werd alleen maar erger, zo erg dat Elwin zijn vingers in zijn oren had gestopt. En toen opeens stopte het geluid. Elwin en de anderen haalden opgelucht adem. Toen na een tijdje de liftdeur open ging keken ze recht in een eindeloze gang. 'Daar ga ik dus niet in !' riep Elwin geschrokken.

'Elwin, de maker van de eindeloze gang is hier,' zei de hotelbaas, 'dus we hebben niets te vrezen,' terwijl hij op de cowboy wees. De cowboy glimlachtte een beetje. 'Volg mij,' sprak hij. De cowboy liep de gang op, en de anderen volgden hem. 'Er zit een code in,' sprak de cowboy. 'We nemen eerst de tiende deur aan de linkerkant, en dan in de volgende gang nemen we weer de tiende deur aan de linkerkant, en in de volgende gang doen we precies hetzelfde.'

'Interessant,' zei Elwin, die alweer een beetje hoop kreeg. Ze telden tien deuren aan de linkerkant van de gang, en gingen toen door de tiende deur binnen. Toen telden ze op de volgende gang weer tien deuren aan de linkerkant om door de tiende deur heen te gaan. Daarna telden ze op de volgende gang weer tien deuren aan de linkerkant om door de tiende deur heen te gaan. Zo kwamen ze in een kamer terecht. 'Geweldig !' riep Elwin. 'Dus alleen zij die deze code kennen hebben een kamer in het gokpaleis ?' De cowboy knikte.

'Geniaal, en zo goed tegen dieven !' lachte Elwin.

'Dat dacht je maar,' sprak de cowboy. 'Er zijn genoeg bandieten die deze code kennen, en daarom zit het gokpaleis vol met vagebonden.'

'Had ik die code maar gekend toen ik naar het gokpaleis kwam,' lachte Elwin, 'dan was het allemaal zo erg niet geweest.'

'Er zijn wel meer codes,' sprak de cowboy.

'Dat geloof ik graag,' lachte Elwin, die zich al een stuk opgeluchter voelde.

'Als je drie keer de zevende deur aan de linkerkant neemt, dan vind je daar iemand die verdwaald is in de gangen,' sprak de cowboy.

Elwin rende de kamer uit. Hij kon niet wachten om het uit te proberen, want hij wilde de oude mannen weer zien. Hij wilde ze graag verrassen. Hij rende naar de zevende deur aan de linkerkant, en toen weer naar de zevende deur aan de linkerkant, en toen weer. Tot zijn grote verbazing kwam hij toen op een gang waar de twee oude mannen waren. Ze zaten vermoeid op de grond, en keken verbaasd en verrast op naar Elwin. 'Ik heb ze gevonden !' riep Elwin.

'Eindelijk heb je ons gevonden !' riep één van de oude mannen, en stond op om Elwin te omhelzen. Ook de andere oude man stond op en omhelsde Elwin. 'Daar zijn we blij mee,' sprak hij. 'We dachten dat we hier nooit meer uit zouden komen.' Ook de cowboy, de hotelbaas en de dienstmaagd kwamen, en Elwin begon het hele verhaal te vertellen.

'En hoe komen we uit het gokpaleis ?' vroeg één van de oude mannen.

'Simpel,' sprak de cowboy. 'Neem drie keer de derde deur aan de linkerkant, en je komt op de gang die naar de paleispoort leidt. Kom, ik zal het je laten zien.' De cowboy nam de derde deur aan de linkerkant geteld vanaf de deur waardoor ze op deze gang kwamen. De anderen volgden hem. Toen nam hij weer de derde linker deur, en toen weer. Zo kwamen ze in een grote hal terecht die naar de poort van het paleis leidde, maar er stonden wachten daar.

'Problemen,' sprak de cowboy. 'Ik ken die wachters niet.' Maar de wachten hadden hen al gezien en kwamen met speren op hen af. 'Wat moet dat daar ?' riep een wacht, die snel dichterbij kwam. 'En wie zijn jullie ?' Ze waren met z'n tweeen en ze hadden zware zwarte pakken aan, en hadden vreemde, angstaanjagende helmen op.

'Genoeg praatjes,' sprak de cowboy. 'Ik ben de maker van het gokpaleis.' Hij boog naar de anderen toe en sprak : 'Nu zijn we in de problemen.' Elwin verstijfde van de schrik.

De wachten deden net alsof ze de cowboy niet hoorden. 'Wie zijn jullie ?' vroeg de wacht weer.

'Gaat je niks aan,' sprak de cowboy. 'Ik heb dit gokpaleis gemaakt. Nou, maak dat je wegkomt.'

De wachten begonnen te lachen en elkaar aan te stoten. 'Dat zeggen ze allemaal dat ze het paleis hebben gebouwd.' Plotseling grepen ze de cowboy vast.

'Hey, laat hem los !' riep Elwin.

'Waarom zouden we ?' zei één van de wachten. 'Hij is een onbevoegde, net zoals jullie. Dit is verboden terrein voor onbekenden.'

'Laat maar, Elwin,' sprak de cowboy. 'Ze zullen er nog wel achter komen.' De cowboy werd afgevoerd, en was al snel verdwenen met de twee wachten. 'Laten we dit spookpaleis uitgaan nu het nog kan,' sprak Elwin, en rende toen op de poort af. De anderen renden achter hem aan. Daarna stonden ze allemaal buiten. Elwin blies op zijn vingers op dezelfde manier als Kes eens deed. Niet lang daarna kwam er een grote raaf aanvliegen. Het was Utsmul. 'Fijn dat je er bent, Utsmul !' riep Elwin. 'Breng ons snel naar Kik en Kes !' Elwin en de anderen klommen op de raaf, die direct richting de zee vloog waaraan Kik en Kes woonden. Toen ze daar aankwamen waren Kik en Kes weer aan het dansen rondom een kampvuur. 'Kijk,' zei Kes tegen Kik, 'daar komt Utsmul. Hij heeft Elwin met wat anderen meegenomen.' Kik en Kes waren blij hen te zien. 'Ha, Elwin !' riep Kes, 'wat een verrassing ! We hopen dat je met goed nieuws komt. Heb je de droomsteen inmiddels gevonden ?' Elwin stapte van de vogel af, en ook de anderen. Hij liep op Kik en Kes af en omhelsde hem. Elwin begon direct het hele verhaal te vertellen.

Hoofdstuk 3.

'Dus de droomsteen is een bepaalde verdieping in het gokpaleis, en de cowboy heeft alle andere verdiepingen gemaakt om de droomsteen te beveiligen ?' vroeg Kes. Elwin knikte.

'Hmmm,' zei Kes. 'Dan is dat vast een andere soort droomsteen, want onze droomsteen is gewoon een steen, een flonkerende roze-rode steen,' terwijl hij een plaatje van de steen uit zijn broekzak haalde.

'Er loopt veel gespuis rond in het spookpaleis,' sprak Elwin. 'Misschien houden zij de steen daar wel verborgen. De cowboy had het er ook over dat er veel bandieten zijn daar.'

'Waarom heeft hij het gokpaleis dan gemaakt ?' vroeg Kek. 'Dat klinkt nogal dom.'

'Het gokpaleis zit vol met valstrikken,' sprak Elwin, 'en alles werkt daar door codes. Nu kunnen sommige bandieten misschien wat codes kennen, maar lang niet allemaal. Uiteindelijk zal het gokpaleis dus wel met hen afrekenen.'

'Dat hoop ik maar,' sprak Kes. 'Maar wat kunnen we doen om die arme cowboy te helpen, want het lijkt erop alsof hij in één van zijn eigengemaakte valstrikken is gelopen ?'

'De cowboy zal zich wel redden,' sprak de hotelbaas glimlachend en vol vertrouwen en zekerheid. 'Hij is slim genoeg om er iets voor te vinden. Hij heeft immers alles gemaakt, en waarschijnlijk test hij nu alles uit, en zal die twee vagebonden van wachten flink op hun nummer zetten.' Ook het dienstmeisje knikte glimlachend.

Plotseling zagen ze vanaf de bergen een enorm lange clown komen. Zijn benen bleven gewoon in de bergen staan, en zijn enorm lange lichaam schoof zich naar hen toe. In zijn armen droeg hij de flonkerende roze-rode droomsteen, en de cowboy zat erop. 'Dat is de gokkoning !' riep de hotelbaas, 'de gokkoning van onze droomsteen-verdieping !' De clown zette de steen met de cowboy erop bij hen neer, en stapte toen met zijn lange benen naar hen toe, terwijl zijn benen weer kleiner werden. Hij was als elastiek. 'Hoera !' riepen Kik en Kes toen ze de droomsteen weer terughadden.

'De gokkoning heeft mij van de valse wachten bevrijd,' lachte de cowboy. Elwin maakte een buiging voor de gokkoning, en de clown nam hem in zijn armen en knuffelde hem. Elwin herkende de clown. Heel lang geleden had Elwin eens over deze clown gedroomd, die hem overal mee naar toe nam in zijn armen, en heel snel ging, van plaats naar plaats. Hij kon inderdaad heel lang worden. 'Elwin, dit is nu het geheim van de droomsteen,' sprak de cowboy glimlachend.

Einde

De Zandman van Ovven

Hoofdstuk 1.

Overal lag er zand in het paleis. Klaas Vaak was net langsgekomen. Op zijn dromenwagen betoverde hij het hele land van Ovven. Hij werd ook wel de zandman genoemd.

Maar op een dag gebeurde dat niet meer. Klaas Vaak was ontvoerd. De mensen konden niet meer goed in slaap komen.

Elwin ging op onderzoek uit. Hij ging op reis op een kameel, door de woestijnen, om op zoek te gaan naar een spoor van Klaas Vaak. Die kon natuurlijk niet ver van het zand vandaan zijn, dacht Elwin. Eerst ging Elwin naar het domein van Klaas Vaak diep in de woestijn. Hij kwam aan bij de huizenhoge poort van het woestijngebied, en zag direct dat er een steen miste die gewoonlijks altijd hoog in de boog van de poort was. Er miste een grote rode steen aan de rechterkant waar de poort naar links begint te buigen. Die rode steen was de steen van de zee. Zonder de steen zou de zandman zijn werk niet kunnen doen. Maar die steen was nu weg, en daarmee ook de zandman. Elwin stond voor een groot raadsel.

Elwin voelde alsof er een stuk uit zijn hart was gesneden, alsof hij een stuk van zijn hart miste, en hij was er van overtuigd dat het met elkaar te maken had. Ook Elwin kon sinds de verdwijning van de zandman niet meer goed in slaap komen, zoals zoveel anderen in Ovven.

De zee is één van de door de mens meest gevreeste natuur-elementen, omdat de zee de tijd laat zien, zowel het verleden als de toekomst. De zee is de tijdmachine van de natuur. Deze tijdmachine wordt bestuurd door de grote Zeeman, Aart Golf, ook wel koning Oceanus genoemd, van de zeemeerminnen en zeemeermannen. Hij is zelf ook een zeemeerman. Hij heeft een kaal hoofd en een hele lange baard. Nu de steen van de zee was geroofd had Klaas Vaak zijn macht over de zee verloren. Elwin hoorde de zee bulderen in de verte. Elwin wist dat waarschijnlijk spoedig de zee het gebied van Klaas Vaak totaal zou overnemen. En wat zou er dan gebeuren ? Ovven zou niet kunnen bestaan zonder Klaas Vaak. Elwin wist niet hoeveel tijd hij nog had. Met zijn kameel besloot hij naar de zee achter de woestijn te gaan om op onderzoek uit te gaan. Hij wilde met Aart Golf, oftewel koning Oceanus spreken om te horen wat er aan de hand was.

Toen hij bij de zee was aangekomen wist hij dat hij voorzichtig moest zijn, want er was daar een piratenschip bij de kust. Ineens werd Elwin van achter hard geslagen op zijn hoofd en van zijn kameel afgetrokken. Het was een piraat. Een andere piraat stond erbij, en toen sleurden ze hem beiden naar het piratenschip. Elwin werd pas wakker toen hij in een kooi op het schip was. Hij had in het hooi op de grond gelegen. 'W... wat heeft dat te betekenen,' stamelde Elwin van de doffe pijn die hij nog in zijn hoofd had.

Toen de piraten-kapitein en hoofdman hem kwam bekijken begon die direct te lachen. 'Ha ha, die moet overboord. Die kunnen we echt niet gebruiken, alleen als vissenvoer.'

'Hij zou het dek kunnen schrobben,' sprak een andere piraat.

'Mond houden,' sprak de kapitein. 'Dat is jouw taak, en dat blijf jij doen. Vannacht nog gaat deze jongen overboord. De vissen moeten ook eten.' Wat andere piraten begonnen te lachen.

Elwin beefde en rilde in zijn kooi. Hij voelde zich echt niet lekker, vooral niet met zo'n naar vooruitzicht. Elwin begon om hulp te schreeuwen toen ze allemaal weer weg waren, maar niemand kwam hem te hulp. 'Je bent er goed bij,' sprak een raaf in een kooi aan de andere kant van de ruimte waarin Elwin was opgesloten.

'Kunt u me niet helpen ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Wat kan ik doen ?' snauwde de raaf. 'Gebruik jij je ogen wel ? Ik zit ook in een kooi. Ik ben zo hulpeloos en machteloos als jij.'

'Snauw niet zo, vreemde vogel,' sprak Elwin. 'Ik kon het toch proberen ? Iedereen maakt fouten.'

'Maar jij wel heel erg veel,' sprak de raaf.

'Je kent me niet eens,' snauwde Elwin terug. 'Ik hoop dat ze jou opbakken.'

'Nu ga je te ver, ventje !' kraaide de raaf. 'Als ik niet in deze kooi zat dan zou ik je ogen uitpikken.'

'Rotvogel,' sprak Elwin. De raaf zei niets meer terug en ging een dutje doen. Ook Elwin was erg moe geworden en viel weer in slaap. Midden in de nacht werd hij uit zijn kooi gehaald door piraten.

'Laat die jongen met rust,' kraaide de raaf. 'Hij heeft jullie niets gedaan.'

'Snuit houden, raaf,' bulderde een piraat. 'Met jou rekenen we later af. Door de soep zal je misschien goed smaken.' Terwijl de andere piraten begonnen te bulderen van het lachen. Elwin keek dankbaar naar de raaf, maar wist dat de raaf ook verder niets kon doen. 'Doe met mij wat je wilt,' sprak Elwin dapper, 'maar geef die raaf zijn vrijheid terug. Laat de vogels met rust, anders zullen de grote vissen jullie schip zeker opslokken voor jullie slechte daden.'

De piraten lachten hard. 'Wat een druiloor ben jij, jongen !' gromde een piraat dichtbij zijn oor. Het was een hele dikke piraat met een rode doek om zijn hoofd met witte ballen erop geschilderd. 'Wij moeten ook eten ! Daar zijn vogels voor.'

'Je bent al veel te dik,' sprak Elwin. 'Geef die vogels maar eens te eten, hebzuchtig kreng.'

'Kreng ? Jij durft mij kreng te noemen, maffe druiloor ?' gromde de dikke piraat terwijl hij zijn mes trok en onder Elwin's kin zette. 'Wij zullen nu voor de visjes zorgen, en jou aan hen voeren.' De piraat bond zijn handen op zijn rug en aan zijn voet bond hij een touw waaraan een hele grote steen was vastgemaakt. 'Zo zal je snel zinken,' lachte een andere piraat die maar één tand had. 'Dat is makkelijker voor de vissen. Zou jij het fijn vinden dat als je zou gaan eten en je voedsel zou ineens van je bord afspringen om weg te rennen ?'

Elwin zei niets. 'Ik waarschuw jullie, piraten,' kraaide de raaf. 'Als jullie de jongen ook maar een haar krenken dan zal de afrekening volgen.'

De piraten lachten. 'Wie ga je daarvoor meebrengen, domme vogel ?' riep een piraat hard.

'Dat zul je nog wel zien,' sprak de raaf. 'Jullie worden goed in de gaten gehouden.'

'Negeer die maffe kippebout. Eten hoort niet te spreken !' gromde de dikke piraat die het helemaal gehad had. Hij sleurde Elwin het dek op, terwijl een andere piraat de grote steen droeg. 'Ik heb jullie gewaarschuwd !' riep de raaf hen na. 'Ik zal die vogel zo de strot doorsnijden,' sprak de dikke piraat, en duwde Elwin naar de reling. 'Laat me met rust !' riep Elwin. 'Hier zullen jullie voor boeten.'

'Wees blij dat we nog iets van jouw zinloze leven maken,' gromde de dikke piraat. Hij begon Elwin al over de reling te duwen, die daar al snel aan het touw om zijn voet bungelde. De andere piraat hield nog steeds de steen vast. 'Gooi,' brulde de dikke piraat, en zo werd de zware steen waaraan Elwin vastzat met een touw in de zee geworpen, waardoor Elwin als een pijl meeschoot in het bruisende zeewater. Elwin begon direct snel te zinken. 'Dit is mijn einde,' dacht Elwin, die heel diep adem had genomen. Elwin begon te tellen, maar na een tijdje begon hij zijn bewustzijn te verliezen. 'Vaarwel' was het laatste woord wat Elwin sprak. Toen werd het zwart voor zijn ogen. Een zeemeermin zag hem in de zeediepte glijden en aarzelde geen moment en schoot op hem af. Vliegensvlug maakte ze het touw van zijn voet los, en trok hem met haar mee. Ze bracht hem naar een grot. Ze wist dat hij snel adem nodig had. Ze legde iets op zijn mond. Het was een soort kwal die niet stak. De kwal gaf adem aan Elwin, en begon zich te vormen om het hele hoofd van Elwin, als een soort doorzichtige helm, als een adem masker. Elwin nam diep adem, en kwam weer bij zijn positieven. 'W... waar ben ik ?' stamelde Elwin.

De zeemeermin keek hem aan. 'Je bent hier diep onderwater,' sprak ze. Elwin was verwonderd dat hij gewoon kon ademen. Hij begon te glimlachen. Hij keek de zeemeermin aan. Ze had lang golvend haar en juwelen om haar nek. De juwelen waren prachtig blauw, en ze fonkelden. Ze hadden een zachte kleur. Elwin voelde zich als betoverd.

'Kom,' sprak de zeemeermin, 'ik zal je naar onze koning leiden.'

'Koning Oceanus ?' vroeg Elwin. 'Die moest ik net spreken. Er is namelijk wat verschrikkelijks gebeurd met Klaas Vaak.'

De zeemeermin begon te glimlachen. 'Ook al ? Van mijn vader hebben ze de tijdmachine gestolen. Ze zijn flink bezig.'

'Ja,' sprak Elwin, 'ze hebben de rode zee steen uit de poort van Klaas Vaak gestolen, zijn droommachine en zelfs Klaas Vaak zelf hebben ze ontvoerd.'

De zeemeermin schrok van deze woorden. 'Ontvoerd ? Maar dat is verschrikkelijk. Laten we gauw vader raadplegen.' De zeeemeermin trok hem verder en zwom naar een grotere grot die leidde tot een hele grote hal waar een grote troon stond bezet met schelpen, waarom een reusachtige gestalte zat met een vissenstaart en een lange, grote witte baard. De koning leek een klein kroontje op te hebben bezet met diamanten en andere witte of doorzichtige fonkelende steentjes. Elwin's mond viel bijna open toen hij de zeemeerman zag. Dit moest Aart Golf, oftewel koning Oceanus zijn.

'Kom verder,' sprak een donkere, zware stem die door de hele hal begon te echoën. 'Met wie heb ik het genoegen ?' sprak de koning vriendelijk. Elwin maakte een buiging, en vertelde het verhaal.

'Zo zo,' sprak de koning, 'en jij denkt dat ik weet wie de daders zijn ?'

Elwin knikte. 'U staat bekend als een groot koning met groot inzicht en groot overzicht over Ovven. U blijkt daar ook allemaal apparaten voor te hebben.'

'Het probleem is,' sprak de koning, 'dat mijn tijdmachine gestolen is, het bron-apparaat voor alle andere apparaten. Niet veel werkt er nog nu de tijdmachine weg is.'

'Dat spijt me heel erg, beste koning,' sprak Elwin. 'Ik zal er alles aan doen om uw tijdmachine terug te vinden nu ik toch bezig ben Klaas Vaak op te sporen. Ik weet zeker dat er een verband is tussen deze diefstallen.'

De koning knikte. 'Ik kan je niet helpen nu mijn tijdmachine er niet is. Mijn inzicht reikt niet verder dan mijn troon op het moment.'

'Ik begrijp het,' sprak Elwin.

'Jittefes, kun jij deze jongen weer even naar de zee-oppervlakte brengen ?' sprak de koning tegen zijn dochter, 'en oh, wacht eens even, jongeman. Ik zou je aanraden om in het bos op zoek te gaan naar de Bosman. Arend Gluur heet hij, en hij bewaakt een zekere groei-machine. Misschien dat hij meer weet, en in het ergste geval is hij de dader, maar dat kan ik niet met zekerheid zeggen. In ieder geval : Wees op je hoede, want zijn onderdanen zijn kannibalen.'
'Komt voor elkaar, vader,' sprak de zeemeermin, en na een kort afscheid zwom ze met Elwin naar boven. Aan de zee-oppervlakte aangekomen zagen ze nog steeds het piratenschip in de verte. 'Ik zal je naar de boskust brengen naast de woestijn,' zei de zeemeermin. De zeemeermin zwom met grote vaart met Elwin op haar rug naar de boskust en zette hem daar aan land. 'Bedankt,' sprak Elwin. 'Ik zal kijken of ik hier de Bosman kan vinden.'

'Ik wens je geluk !' riep de zeemeermin die alweer wegzwom. Elwin liep direct het bos in. Hij was namelijk bang dat piraten hem weer op het strand zouden vinden. Angstig keek hij om zich heen, wetende dat er ook gevaren in het bos waren, maar hij moest en zou met de bosman spreken. Na een tijdje lopen zag hij in de verte op een open plek in het bos een groep wilden met botjes door hun neus dansen en jammeren rondom een ketel. Elwin wist dat hij voorzichtig moet zijn, maar ze jammerden zo erg dat Elwin ze wilde proberen te helpen. Misschien waren het wel de onderdanen van Arend Gluur, de bosman.

Dapper liep hij op de jammerende wilden af, maar bleef zijn afstand bewaren. 'Kan ik jullie ergens mee helpen ?' vroeg Elwin, terwijl hij zijn hand opstak. Verbaasd keken de wilden op. 'Daar ! Eindelijk voedsel !' riep één van de wilden. Ze namen hun speren en begonnen op Elwin af te rennen. Ook Elwin zette het op een rennen. 'Hongerige kannibalen dus,' dacht Elwin bij zichzelf. 'Ik kom ook altijd op het verkeerde moment.' Plotseling struikelde Elwin over een boomstronk, en al snel was hij omsingeld door de wilden die hun speren op hem gericht hadden. 'Sta stil, voedsel,' sprak één van de wilden. Hij werd vastgebonden en meegeduwd naar de ketel, waar hij in werd gestopt. 'Toe nou,' sprak Elwin. 'Ik ben geen banaan. Ik ben op zoek naar Arend Gluur de bosman.' De wilden begonnen om hem heen te dansen, terwijl het vuur oplaaide. 'Eindelijk vlees !' riepen ze. Elwin begon het al snel heet te krijgen. 'Heus, jullie vergissen je !' riep Elwin. De wilden begonnen steeds woester te dansen.

Elwin boog zijn hoofd. 'Ik ook allemaal met mijn domme ideeen,' sprak hij tot zichzelf. 'Ik heb een belangrijke boodschap voor Arend Gluur. Ik ben gezonden door koning Oceanus !' riep Elwin hard. De wilden schenen niet te luisteren, en Elwin begon het steeds heter te krijgen. 'Ik stik hier !' piepte Elwin. Elwin begon zijn bewustzijn te verliezen. Wat er toen gebeurde kon hij zich niet meer herinneren, maar hij werd wakker in het zand, terwijl een grote man naar hem staarde. Elwin was nog steeds drijfnat en nog steeds vastgebonden. De man prikte met een stok in hem. 'Nog niet gaar zie ik,' sprak de man. 'Welkom. Ik ben Arend Gluur. Ik redde je leven. Ik hoorde dat je mij wilde spreken voor een belangrijke boodschap. Spreek op, anders gooi ik je weer terug. De man had een bril op en een hoed. Ook had hij een blouche aan met sterretjes erop. Hij leek op een toerist. Toen begon Elwin het verhaal te vertellen.

Arend Gluur begon te jammeren. 'Zij ook al ? Mijn groei-machine is gestolen. Ik kon dingen, mensen en dieren groter of kleiner maken door die machine. Daardoor had ik macht over het bos, maar ik lijk het te verliezen. Nu hebben mijn kannibalen altijd honger. Ze kunnen nog geen druif of appel bemachtigen.'

'Dat spijt me zeer,' sprak Elwin.

Het was even een tijdje stil. Plotseling zei Arend Gluur : 'Ik weet wie het gedaan heeft. Het is Berend Blok, de vuurman. Hij heeft onze machines gestolen omdat hij een geldmachine wilde bouwen, om zo over heel

Ovven te heersen.'

'Waar woont hij ?' vroeg Elwin.

'Onder de grond,' zei Arend Gluur. 'Daar houdt hij ook de zee steen verborgen, en
Klaas Vaak die hij heeft ontvoerd.'

Elwin wilde daar wel naartoe. Arend Gluur en de kannibalen zouden met hem mee gaan.

Hoofdstuk 2.

Ze zouden eerst de nacht afwachten om wat proberen te rusten, alhoewel niemand goed in slaap kon komen doordat Klaas Vaak was ontvoerd. En in de nacht viel de vuurman al
aan. Vlammen kwamen om Elwin te grijpen en de diepte in te sleuren. Elwin werd naar een grote put getrokken waar de vlammen hem joelend introkken.

Diep onder de grond werd Elwin in een kooi gestopt. Dichtbij was de kooi van Klaas Vaak. Klaas Vaak lag op de grond. Hij leek zijn bewustzijn te hebben verloren. Voor de kooi van Elwin danste Berend Blok, de vuurman. 'Geld, geld, ik nam het met groot geweld !' riep hij, terwijl hij als een gek geld begon rond te strooien. 'De geld-machine werkt !' riep hij. 'Ik ben een rijk man !' Uit pompen verderop begon geld te spuiten. 'Ik heb een grote vangst gedaan !' lachte de vuurman. De geld-machine die hij had gebouwd van de gestolen machines was op hol geslagen. Er bleef maar geld uitrollen, en ook de twee olifanten van Berend Blok waren onder de betovering ervan gekomen, en hun slurfen stopten niet met het spuiten van geld. Overal lag geld, en de laag op de grond werd steeds hoger, ook in de kooi van Elwin. De vuurman gierde van het lachen. Ook hij was op hol geslagen. Plotseling kwam de piraten-raaf aanvliegen. Hij vloog recht op de kooi van Elwin af, en pikte het slot open. 'Hoe ben je uit jouw kooi losgekomen ?' vroeg Elwin verrast, terwijl hij uit de kooi rende. 'Toen een piraat het kooitje opendeed om me te voeren pikte ik in zijn hand en vloog weg,' kraste de raaf. De vuurman was al helemaal onder het geld bedolven. Vlug vloog de raaf naar de kooi van Klaas Vaak en pikte zijn slot ook open. Maar Klaas Vaak was nog steeds bewusteloos, en begon ook langzaam onder het geld te verdwijnen. 'Iemand moet die machine stoppen !' riep Elwin. Plotseling zagen ze koning Oceanus en zijn dochter, Jittefes, komen aanzwemmen door het geld. Elwin wees hen de plaats waar Klaas Vaak onder het geld lag, en beiden begonnen ze hem op te duiken. Spoedig waren er nog veel meer zeemeermannen en zeemeerminnen, een heel leger, en ze begonnen de geldmachine op te duiken.

Elwin zwom in het geld, en keek hoe de geldmachine werd opgedoken. Hij vond het wel een schitterende uitvinding. Het geld begon machtige rivieren te vormen die door de armste delen van Ovven begonnen te stromen. Proestend kwam Berend Blok naar boven zwemmen, want ook hij was kopje onder gegaan. Hij werd direct door een paar zeemeerminnen vastgegrepen. 'Ik bedoelde het niet verkeerd !' riep hij. 'Ik wilde de armsten van Ovven helpen, en dat kon ik alleen maar als ik de droommachine, de tijdmachine en de groeimachine zou hebben om daar de geldmachine van te maken !'

'Maar waarom vroeg je dat niet dan ? En waarom heb je daar zelfs Klaas Vaak voor ontvoerd ?' riep Elwin, die naar hem toe begon te zwemmen. Elwin begreep er niet veel van.

'Omdat niemand me geloofde !' riep Berend Blok. 'Ik moest wat doen tegen de hongersnood in grote delen van Ovven die door de piraten was veroorzaakt ! Klaas Vaak wilde me laten opsluiten !'

'Maar je had koning Oceanus kunnen vragen voordat je zijn tijdmachine stal !' riep Elwin.

'Ik moest snel handelen !' riep Berend Blok. 'Klaas Vaak zat al achter me aan, en ik kon geen risico's meer nemen. Ik moest eerst de geldmachine maken, en dan zouden ze zelf wel zien waar het goed voor was.'

Elwin zuchtte. Hij hoopte maar dat Klaas Vaak in orde was. Hij kon Berend Blok ook wel een beetje begrijpen. Het leek op een daad van zelfverdediging, maar hij wilde eerst de kant van het verhaal van Klaas Vaak horen.

Het leger van koning Oceanus nam iedereen mee naar het rijk van de koning om daar berecht te worden. Ook Arend Gluur en zijn kannibalen werden meegenomen. Ze moesten allemaal voor de troon van Arend Golf verschijnen, de grote Zeeman, oftewel koning Oceanus. Klaas Vaak was inmiddels weer bijgekomen, en ze hadden allemaal een ademkwal over hun hoofd gekregen, zodat ze goed in de zee konden ademen. Ook konden ze zo alles goed horen, en konden ze goed spreken. De kwallen zorgden voor goede communicatie.

Toen Klaas Vaak het verhaal van Berend Blok kreeg te horen knikte hij en bood hij zijn excuses aan. Hij wist niet dat Berend Blok goed werk wilde doen. De kannibalen waren zo geworden door de honger, maar daar zouden de geldrivieren verandering in brengen. De enigen die nog een probleem waren waren de piraten. Daarom vielen de legers van koning Oceanus op een nacht alle piratenschepen binnen, en trokken de piraten de zee in om te worden berecht door koning Oceanus.

Elwin vond dat een goed plan, want de piraten stonden hem naar het leven.

Toen de piraten waren berecht begon eindelijk de rust weer in Ovven terug te keren en konden de mensen weer normaal slapen. En de zandman reed weer op zijn koets om zijn zand te strooien alsof het nooit anders was geweest. Maar nu strooide hij niet alleen zand, maar ook als het nodig was strooide hij geld voor de allerarmsten. En zo werd de zandman van Ovven nog wel geliefder dan ooit tevoren.

En Berend Blok ? Die werd gezien als een grote held die het land van Ovven eens van de hongersnood redde.

Einde

RNL-POCKETS
REEDS EERDER VERSCHENEN :

1 HET OORLOGS-SPEL
2 DE TUIN VAN MEVROUW VAN DALEN
3 PLANTEN VAN VLEES
4 ZIJN HUIS STOND IN DE WEG
5 HET SURINAAMSE DAGBOEK
6 DE EVOLUTIE VAN DE HEMEL
7 FABRIEKEN AAN ZEE
8 DE INDIAANSE AVONDEN
9 DE BRUG VAN HEIMDAL
10 HET METALEN EI
11 DE POPPENMAKER VAN HIROSHIMA
12 SOBIBOR – DE LAATSTE JAGER
13 HET PAARSE COMPLOT
14 DE GEZICHTEN VAN MALLEMOE
15 DE TORENS VAN BELZEHAM - DE EZAUSLADDER
16 DE CALVINISTISCH-GEREFORMEERDE LEER
17 DE TRAAN VAN ROGGEMUIDEN
18 PARADIJSVOGELS

DE INDIAANSE NACHTEN SPROOKJESBOEK

1. De Indiaanse Nachten
2. De Wonderlijke Boekenkamer van Oom Benno
3. De Plaag van Elzega
4. Het Mysterie van het IJskasteel
5. De Trollenspiegel
6. De Monster Meester
7. De Toverlist
8. De Trollenkoning
9. Het Rode Zaad
10. Jetje's Moeder
11. Het Slagroom Geheim
12. Het Zeepje
13. De Broodjesfee
14. De Driesprong
15. Spindruppeltje
16. Het Gedwongen Chocola
17. De Drie Reuzen
18. De Betoverde Hof
19. Het Zoete Zalf Bos
20. Zevenwind
21. Dragodan
22. Het Skelettenleger
23. De Skelettenrijder
24. De Terugkeer van de Skelettenrijder
25. De Kooi
26. De Eeuwige Vlam
27. De Wraak van de Plaaggeesten

28. Het Toverwapen
29. De Elvenoorlogen
30. Hersenspinsels der Elven
31. De Prins en de Rode Zee
32. Blauwstaartje
33. De Paddenkoningin
34. Het Rozenweefstertje
35. Het Wonderpaard
36. Het Meisje Dat Van Glas Was
37. De Wonderschoenen
38. De Negende Wens
39. Linana en de Carrousel
40. De Toverbeker en het Toverbordje
41. Het Varken Op Reis
42. Het Land van de Sprookjesprinsen en Sprookjesprinsessen
43. Het Versteende Volkje
44. Arachundel
45. Het Sprookjesboek
46. Het Meisje in de Bloem
47. Het Apenpaleis
48. Het Zee-Oog
49. Het Meisje Dat Achter De Sluiertjes Woonde
50. Susanna
51. Het Verdwenen Sprookjesrijk
52. De Twee Zusters
53. Het Varkenshoedstertje
54. Het Meisje dat in een Paard Veranderde
55. Het Goudspinstertje
56. Rozinde
57. De Boze Toverspiegel
58. De Boze Zon
59. Het Meisje met de Slangenstaart
60. Het Gelaarsde Meisje
61. De Paradijselijke Boom
62. De Bultjesboom
63. Het Rode Serum
64. Pir
65. De Toverkaars

66. De Wonderveer
67. De Lachende Vis
68. Het Sprookjesbos
69. Het Huis dat Altijd Instortte
70. De Toverbron
71. De Reuzenvrouw
72. De Reuzenbewaker
73. De Toverknots
74. De Chocolade Prins
75. De Toverkikker
76. De Windemelk
77. De Slapende Prinses
78. Het Doolhof
79. De Prins zonder Neus
80. De Tovergrot
81. Het Meisje dat op het Water Danste
82. Het Koninkrijk van Chocolade
83. De Sprekende Toren
84. De Bijenprinses
85. Het Tovertouw
86. De Toverfluit
87. De Fluitketelman
88. Het Toverzadel
89. Langbeentje
90. De Dag dat Alles Stilstond
91. De Gesmolten Parel
92. De Vliegende Reuzen
93. De Sprookjesgevangenis
94. Het Ravijn
95. Hoe Het IJs Smolt
96. Het Toverflesje
97. Het Toverei
98. Trovelientje en de Roversjongen
99. Het Meisje Met Het Roze Schortje
100. Nevinen
101. Het Flessenvrouwtje
102. Het Bloemenvrouwtje

103. De Stenen Wachters
104. Het Magische Boek
105. Het Mysterieuze Boek
106. Liefde en Haat
107. De Regenboog Spiegel

De Indiaanse Nachten

Een oude indiaanse man vond een schoen vlakbij het ravijn. Hij wierp de schoen in het ravijn, en liep verder langs de ravijn, terwijl hij soms naar de overkant keek. Een boze geest had gedreigd tot de oude man dat hij al het land aan zijn kant van het ravijn zou laten verdwijnen, zodat alles wat erop zou leven in het ravijn zou verdwijnen. De boze geest hield zijn hand over het gezicht van de oude man, terwijl hij achter de oude man stond. De hand was vlammend. Even leek het alsof de oude man blind was geworden. De hand brandde en deed hem pijn. De oude man zakte door zijn knieen en ging op de grond zitten. Hij probeerde naar de overkant van het ravijn te kijken, maar hij zag niets meer. 'Ik zal je één kans geven,' zei de boze geest. 'Elke nacht moet je een sprookje bedenken, en elke nacht dat je er in slaagt mij een sprookje te vertellen, zal ik je een stuk van een brug geven, en moet je op het stuk blijven tot de volgende nacht om een nieuw stuk erbij te krijgen. Als je er op een nacht niet in slaagt mij een sprookje te vertellen, dan zal de brug instorten. Als de brug helemaal tot de andere kant is gekomen door de sprookjes, dan zal een ieder die over de brug tot de andere kant van het ravijn komt gespaard worden.'

'Wat is er aan de andere kant van het ravijn ?' vroeg de man.

'Een land genaamd Sinsabijne, het land van de indiaanse vlieg,' sprak de boze geest.

'Ik kan niets meer zien,' sprak de oude indiaanse man. 'Hoe kan ik ooit in dat land komen ?'

'Elke keer als je er in slaagt een sprookje te vertellen 's nachts, zal ik je iets meer van je zicht teruggeven,' sprak de boze geest.

'Waarom wil je onze kant van het ravijn vernietigen en ons in het ravijn laten verdwijnen ?' vroeg de oude indiaanse man.

'Ik wil het niet,' sprak de boze geest. 'Eens werd ik verbannen uit Sinsabijne, het land van de indiaanse vlieg. Ik was vals beschuldigd, en ik werd betoverd in een boze geest. Ik zou alleen mogen terugkomen als ik het land aan deze kant van het ravijn zou vernietigen of een sprookjesbrug zou bouwen over het ravijn.'

> De oude indiaanse man keek de boze geest met grote ogen aan, terwijl hij weer een klein beetje kon zien. 'Wie bent u dan ?' vroeg hij.

'Ik ben de prins van Sinsabijne,' sprak de boze geest. 'Ik ben onder een grote vloek. Als de keten van de nachtsprookjes verbroken wordt door één nacht over te slaan, dan zal de brug instorten, en het land aan deze kant van het ravijn ten onder gaan.'

De oude indiaanse man schudde zijn hoofd. Het was inmiddels nacht geworden, en de man begon te vertellen. Aan het einde van de laatste nacht en het laatste sprookje lag er een prachtige brug over het ravijn, en konden ze beiden het land Sinsabijne binnengaan. De betovering was verbroken, en de prins van Sinsabijne stond voor de oude indiaanse man. Overal vlogen prachtige indiaanse vliegen om hen heen. Ze gingen over de brug om de mensen aan de andere kant van het ravijn te waarschuwen en te roepen, om hen ook over de sprookjesbrug van de indiaanse nachten te laten komen.

Maar een heleboel mensen luisterden niet. De sprookjesbrug begon langzaam in het ravijn te zakken. Ook het land waar de oude indiaanse man vandaan kwam begon steeds meer weg te zinken. Nu wilden de mensen wel over de brug rennen, maar ze begonnen steeds meer terug te glijden. De prins van Sinsabijne schudde zijn hoofd. De oude indiaanse man vroeg de prins wat er met zijn sprookjes zou gebeuren.

'Ik weet wel wat,' zei de prins, en klapte in zijn handen. Direct begonnen de brokstukken van de sprookjes uit het ravijn omhoog te komen. Ze waren zo glad dat niemand zich er aan vast kon houden, terwijl ze dat wel probeerden. Weer klapte de prins in zijn handen, en op het Sinsabijnse land begonnen de brokstukken een prachtig paleis te vormen.

'Hier kunnen wij wonen, en allen die de sprookjes hebben liefgehad,' sprak de prins. De oude indiaanse man glimlachte, en ze leefden nog lang en gelukkig.

De Wonderlijke Boekenkamer van

Oom Benno

Hoofdstuk 1. Ziek

Bertram had een boze tante en een vreemde oom. Ze hielden hem opgesloten in een kamer. Hij was altijd ziek, en mocht nooit uit zijn kamer. Zijn eten werd gebracht. Hij mocht dus ook niet naar buiten, maar dat zou hij waarschijnlijk ook niet kunnen, omdat hij te ziek was. Zijn boze tante was de rode heks, en zijn vreemde oom was oom Benno, ook een heks, en een tovenaar. Oom Benno had een boekenkamer, waar een heleboel indianenboeken stonden. Ook stonden er vele andere soorten boeken. Bertram mocht daar beslist niet komen. De goudvis had gezegd dat Bertram in de boeken de sleutel tot zijn ontsnapping kon vinden.

Op een nacht hadden zijn oom en tante vergeten zijn deur op slot te doen. Stilletjes sloop Bertram uit zijn kamer, en liep de boekenkamer van oom Benno in. Bertram griste direct een indianenboek uit de boekenkast. En toen nog één, en toen nog één, en liep toen snel naar zijn kamer terug. 'Ik moet ze maar goed verborgen houden,' zei Bertram tegen zichzelf, en ze alleen 's nachts lezen wanneer oom en tante slapen. Het was nu 's nachts, dus Bertram begon direct te lezen.

'Horlepiep,' zei Bertram tegen zichzelf, wat gebeurt er nu ? Ik ben helemaal duizelig ineens. Hij had de eerste bladzijde van een indianenboek opengeslagen, en werd helemaal warm van binnen. De letters duizelden voor zijn ogen. 'Hoofdstuk één,' las hij. Hij hoorde wat schoten, en gezwiep van een zweep of lasso. 'Hoe kan dat ?' vroeg hij zichzelf af. Hij klapte het boek dicht, maar het was al te laat. Toen hij opkeek was hij in een woestijn, een prairie. Twee cowboys stonden voor hem. 'Wat moet dat daar ?' zeiden ze. Toen ineens vielen ze beiden naar voren. Ze hadden pijlen in hun rug. Een groep indianen op paarden namen Bertram mee. In het kamp merkte Bertram dat hij vastgebonden was. Ze brachten hem naar een paal, waar hij aan vastgemaakt werd.

'Laat me los,' zei Bertram. 'Ik ben ziek.'

'Niks mee te maken,' zeiden de indianen.

'Wat gaan jullie met me doen ?' vroeg Bertram.

'Dat zul je nog wel zien,' zeiden ze.

Bertram begon te huilen. Zijn oom en tante hadden hem weleens verteld wat indianen met hun gevangenen doen. Hij werd naar een grote ketel gebracht even later. 'Gaan jullie me opeten ?' huilde Bertram. 'Nee,' zeiden de indianen. 'Jij moet vanaf nu voor ons koken.'

'Maar ik ben daar veel te ziek voor,' zei Bertram.

'Geeft niks,' zeiden de indianen. 'Daar krijg je wel medicijnen voor.'

Ze gaven hem een soort groene dropjes, en na een tijdje voelde Bertram zich veel beter.

'Ik houd van jullie,' zei Bertram. 'Jullie hebben mij beter gemaakt.'

'Niks mee te maken,' zeiden de indianen boos. 'Je bent onze slaaf. Je moet voor ons koken nu.'

'Mij best,' zei Bertram, die allang blij was dat ze hem beter hadden gemaakt. 'Ik ben niet ziek meer !' juichte Bertram. 'Stil houden, jongen,' zei een wat oudere indiaanse vrouw.

Bertram roerde in de pan. Hij moest soep maken. Ze legden hem uit wat hij allemaal in de pan moest stoppen. Veel kruiden, en allerlei soorten vruchtjes.

De soep was heel lekker.

'Nu moet je weer terug,' zeiden de indianen.

'Wat ?' zei Bertram teleurgesteld. 'Ik wil niet meer terug naar mijn oom en tante. Ze houden me opgesloten.

'Niets mee te maken,' zeiden de indianen. 'We kunnen je hier niet houden.'

'Alsjeblieft,' smeekte Bertram, 'ik zal alles doen wat jullie willen.'

'Nee, jongen,' zei een wat oudere indiaanse vrouw. 'Je moet terug.'

Bertram begon te huilen. Trillend hield hij het boek in zijn handen, en merkte dat hij weer in zijn kamer was. Ook voelde hij zich weer ziek.

Hoofdstuk 2. De Ontsnapping

Bertram legde de boeken diep onder zijn bed, onder een doek, en ging slapen. De volgende ochtend was hij vroeg wakker. Hij deed de gordijnen open, maar het licht deed zoveel pijn aan zijn ogen dat hij de gordijnen weer dichtdeed. Oom en tante sliepen nog, dus hij kon nog wel even lezen. Hij pakte een ander indianenboek, sloeg het open, en werd weer duizelig. Snel bevond hij zich in een oerwoud. Wilde beesten stonden om hem heen. Hij was wel even bang. Toen hoorde hij schoten. De beesten renden weg, en al snel stond er een indiaan met een geweer voor hem.

'Meekomen jij,' zei de indiaan. Bertram liep mee met de indiaan, die hem naar het kamp bracht. Langs het kamp was een rivier met bootjes. 'Jij bent wie ?' vroeg de indiaan.

'Bertram,' zei hij.

'Oh, ah,' zei de indiaan. 'Ik jouw naam leuk vinden.'

'Haha,' zei Bertram.

'Waarom jongen zij hier zijn ?' vroeg de indiaan.

Toen legde Bertram het uit aan de indiaan. De indiaan begreep er niets van.

'Ik heb tent voor jou,' zei de indiaan. Hij nam Bertram mee naar een lege indianentent. 'Hier mag jij wonen,' zei de indiaan.

'Dank je wel,' zei Bertram. 'Dat is erg aardig van u.'

's Nachts komen de spoken,' zei de indiaan, 'de geesten van de voorouders.'

'Gezellig,' zei Bertram.

'Nee,' zei de indiaan. 'Niet gezellig. Zij zijn boos, altijd boos.'

'En ik ben altijd ziek,' zei Bertram.

'Ik zal de spoken zeggen, jij altijd ziek zijn,' zei de indiaan.

Maar ineens werd hij wild door mekaar geschud door oom Benno. 'Heb jij aan mijn indianen-boeken gezeten ?' brult oom Benno woest.

'Waar komt die man vandaan ?' vraagt de indiaan.

'Heb ik jou iets gevraagd, snotaap ?' brult oom Benno. 'Die jongen moet meekomen, meekomen, nu !'

De indiaan grijpt zijn hakbijl en slaat oom Benno tegen de grond met de achterkant. 'Zo, wijsneus,' zegt de indiaan. 'Jij mij niet beledigen, en van jongen afblijven.' Oom Benno wordt vastgebonden, en naar een paal gesleept. 'Ziezo, die kan mij niet meer beledigen,' zei de indiaan.

Toen de andere indianen terugkwamen vroegen ze : 'Wat moet die dikke man hier ?'

'Het is een uilskuiken,' zei de indiaan. 'Hij heeft ons beledigd, en wilde jongen roven.'

'Wie is die jongen ?' vroegen ze.

'Goed kijken,' zei de indiaan. 'Hij is de machtige zonnedroom.'

De indianen bogen voor Bertram neer. Bertram begon te lachen.

'Maak me onmiddellijk los, Bertram !' brulde oom Benno.

Maar Bertram deed net alsof hij hem niet hoorde. Toen het nacht geworden was brulde oom Benno de hele nacht door. De volgende dag zei de indiaan dat hij naar het gevangenen-kamp moest. 'Wat gaan jullie met hem doen ?' vroeg Bertram.

'Weten we nog niet,' zei de indiaan. Toen oom Benno was afgevoerd was het eindelijk rustig.

Een paar dagen later moest Bertram weer terug. Ze konden hem niet te lang houden. Maar ze wilden oom Benno houden, ook om Bertram een dienst te bewijzen. Bertram knipperde even met zijn ogen, en was weer in zijn eigen kamer, starende naar het boek. Bertram had honger, maar er was geen voedsel op zijn kamer. Hij liep naar de deur en merkte dat de deur nog steeds open was. Tante riep hem. 'Bertram, kom naar mijn slaapkamer. Ik ben ziek, en ik weet niet waar je oom is.'

Bertram liep direct haar kamer binnen. Het was hier heel donker. Hij zag tante in haar bed liggen. 'Jongen, je bent nu oud genoeg geworden om je kamer uit te kunnen,' zei tante. 'Kun je wat voor je oude tante klaarmaken. Ik voel me zo zwak.'

'Natuurlijk tante,' zei Bertram.

Hij liep naar beneden de keuken in, en maakte wat brood voor haar met thee en een eitje. Toen bracht hij het boven. 'Dank je wel, lieverd,' zei tante. 'Ga nu maar doen waar je zin in hebt.'

Bertram ging direct naar de boekenkamer. De goudvis had gelijk gehad. In de boeken had hij de sleutel tot zijn ontsnapping gevonden.

De Plaag van Elzega

In het stadje Elzega was een plaag van vliegende vissen die de hoofden van de burgers teisterden. De heksenmeester had een zwart zaad waarmee hij vissen kon laten vliegen, en hij gaf hen de naarste opdrachten. Zo zaaide hij een boel tragedie en hopeloosheid. De vissen waren gevreesd, en als ze dan weer vertrokken was het leed vaak al geschied, of begon toen pas echt.

Iedereen was met zijn handen in het haar. Ook de kleine Jog vond het vervelend. Hij was vastbesloten hier iets aan te doen, en op een dag stapte hij naar de burgemeester. Jog belde aan, en de dienstmaagd van de burgemeester deed bezorgd open. 'Is er wat gebeurd, kleine ?'

'Nee,' zei Jog, 'ik wil gewoon de burgemeester spreken.' Na een tijdje wachten kon de kleine Jog bij de burgemeester naar binnen in zijn kamer.

'Zo, kleine jongen, dus jij wilt de stad redden van dit boze gespuis, huh ?' zei de burgemeester nadat Jog hem het verhaal had verteld. 'En hoe zou jij dat willen doen, kleine man ?'

'Geef me even de tijd, burgemeester,' zei de jongen. 'Ik kan vast wel iets bedenken.'

'Toch wel vreemd, jongen, dat je hier komt zonder ook maar enig idee te hebben, want meestal zijn degenen die hier komen al voorbereid met een idee of plan. Maar in ieder geval is het erg dapper van je,' zei de burgemeester.

Met de dagen leek het steeds erger te worden. De vissen waren erg bloeddorstig, en maakten velen ziek. Ook maakten ze angstaanjagende geluiden, waardoor mensen 's nachts niet konden slapen.

Het waaide hard buiten. De kerkklokken bleven maar luiden. Jog staarde voor zich uit, vastbesloten een plan te bedenken. 'Jongen, geef de moed maar op,' zei zijn moeder telkens. 'Hier is geen kruid tegen opgewassen.' Ze probeerden mensen gek te maken met hun gekrijs. In het stadje werden ze inmiddels overal de schuld voor gegeven. Ook zouden ze kinderen gekke en nare versjes laten zingen.

Toen Jog achttien was had hij ineens een plan. Hij zou naar het boze berkenbos gaan, op zoek naar de heksenmeester die dit allemaal op zijn geweten had.

Na lang lopen kwam hij bij een huisje. Hij ging naar binnen, en zag de heksenmeester achter een tafeltje zitten. 'Zeg kerel,' zei Jog, 'je boze spelletjes zijn uit. Jij bent de schuldige, en ik ben de wraakengel.'

'Zo zo,' zei de heksenmeester. 'Praatjes, hè, je bent er anders nog niet.' De heksenmeester stond op, en een vuurvlam kwam van zijn hand die regelrecht op Jog afvloog. Jog kon nog net bukken. Maar toen kwamen er twee vliegende vissen binnenvliegen, die met groot gekrijs Jog grepen en met hem wegvlogen. Ze brachten hem op een heel hoog nest in de bergen, waar het heel koud was.

'Je moet voor heksenmeester Troegadoer verschijnen,' zei één van de vliegende vissen.

Na hem ernstig toegetakeld te hebben, brachten ze hem bloedend naar een dichtbijzijnd kasteel in het bos. Heksenmeester Troegadoer zat binnenin op een troon. 'Laat deze lamlendeling binnenkomen !' riep de heksenmeester. 'Hij heeft mijn broer bedreigd. Nu is hij van mij.' De heksenmeester begon te lachen.

'Maar jullie hebben Elzega getergd met jullie vliegende vissen !' riep Jog.

De vliegende vissen brachten hem tot vlak voor de troon, en lieten hem toen neervallen. Kreunend en hijgend stond Jog moeizaam op. Hij was diep verwond.

'Elzega is ons terrein,' zei Troegadoer. 'Jullie hadden nooit dat stadje moeten bouwen op natuur gebied.'

'Daar kunnen wij niets aan doen,' riep Jog boos, 'dat hebben onze voorouders gedaan, en ze zeiden dat het een open vlakte was. Ze hebben geen bomen ervoor omgekapt, of ander natuurgebied.'

'Leugens,' zei Troegadoer, 'ze hebben een heel stuk bos ervoor weggekapt. Als je leven je lief is, vertrek uit de stad. De stad zal vernietigd worden.'

'Mijn voorouders moesten wel ergens leven. Ze hebben niets verkeerds gedaan,' zei Jog.

'Dat maken ze je maar wijs,' zei Troegadoer. 'Spoedig zal de stad vergaan, en er is niks wat je daaraan kunt doen.'

Jog probeerde zich los te rukken uit de greep die de vliegende vissen op hem hadden. Ze stonken verschrikkelijk. Hij voelde hun hete adem in zijn nek. Ze hadden bijna een zwarte huid.

Ze spoten hun inktgas in hem, terwijl hun nagels als naalden diep in zijn huid gingen. Hij werd plotseling depressief en duizelig. Toen viel hij op de grond. Troegadoer begon te lachen.

Jog wordt dan wakker na een tijdje in een langwerpige zaal op een bed, waar nog veel meer mensen op bedden liggen.

Een klein meisje komt aangelopen met lang, zwart haar. 'Wij zullen je bewerken met het zwarte zaad,' zei het meisje. 'Ook jij zal in een vliegende vis veranderen. We kunnen je goed gebruiken.'

'Nee !' gilde Jog, maar al snel injecteerde het meisje hem, en hij viel weer in een diepe slaap. Hij werd in een capsule gestopt en ging diep in de grond. Hij werd wakker toen ze de boom van het zwarte zaad hadden bereikt, diep onder de grond. Er zaten vleermuizen in deze boom. Hij moest van het zaad eten. Hij werd in een rivier geworpen en ging kopje onder. Hij zwom naar boven, en merkte dat hij in de zee was. Ook merkte hij dat hij een vis was geworden. Hij zag meerdere vissen om zich heen, en ze stegen op uit het water, om te vliegen.

Ook hij merkte dat hij kon vliegen. Zijn huid was bijna zwart. Hij bevond zich in een zaal met vele andere vliegende vissen. Ze keken allemaal richting een bol, waarop een vogelachtige verschijning zat met grote vleugels. Toen veranderde de verschijning in een koning. Het was de koning van de vliegende vissen.

Plotseling merkte Jog dat hij zijn eigen lichaam weer terughad. Hij rende door een tunnel, zoekende naar de uitgang. 'Nee, ik wil dit niet !' riep hij. Hij ramde met zijn vuisten op glas. Hij had het gevoel dat hij verdronk. Hij kon niet ademen. 'Is er dan niemand om me te helpen !' riep hij in wanhoop.

'Er is iets mis,' zei het kleine meisje. 'We kunnen hem niet veranderen in een vliegende vis. Zijn hart is te sterk.'

Plotseling voelde Jog dat hij buiten lag op de grond, vlak voor het kasteel. Zo snel als hij kon rende hij terug naar het stadje Elzega. Hij was door deze ervaring zo getraumatiseerd dat hij er nooit meer over durfde te spreken.

Het Mysterie van het IJskasteel

Berend en Albert hadden een vader die opgesloten was in een ijskasteel. Tante Audam kwam met de kinderen praten die helemaal overstuur waren. Ze hadden geen moeder meer, dus ze wisten niet waar ze naar toe moesten. Tante Audam zou ze mee nemen naar een andere tante die wel raad met hen zou weten. Ook zou deze tante kunnen helpen in de bevrijding van hun vader. Tante Jokebed woonde een paar stadjes verder. Tante Jokebed had een zoontje genaamd David. Ze zouden zolang bij David op de kamer slapen. Gelukkig had David een hele grote kamer. Tante Jokebed kende het ijskasteel wel. Haar man werd daar vroeger ook gevangen gehouden. Het had allemaal te maken met een hertog die in een kat kon veranderen. Hertog Kat-Anders heette die. Zijn echte naam was Paulus Wilhelmus de Vijfde. De vader van Berend en Albert had een aantal rekeningen niet betaald, en er waren nog wel meer dingen aan de hand. Hertog Kat-Anders zou voor de staat werken. Het was allemaal nog wel een geheimzinnige bedoeling. Vader was opeens verdwenen, en de ochtend erna vonden de kinderen een brief op de deurmat, waarop geschreven stond dat hun vader nu was opgesloten in het ijskasteel. Dat was een ijskoude, zeer gevreesde, oude gevangenis. De kinderen misten hun vader heel erg.

Tante Katrien had zich het lot van de kinderen ook erg aangetrokken, en kwam de kinderen vaak opzoeken. Soms nam ze de kinderen weleens mee naar haar huis, om te logeren. De tantes waren ervan overtuigd dat hertog Kat-Anders helemaal niet voor de staat werkte, maar dat het een misdaads-organisatie was. Vaak kwam de familie bij elkaar om te overleggen wat ze konden doen. Oom Joep zou weleens een kijkje willen nemen daar bij het ijskasteel, maar sommige tantes waren het daar niet mee eens. Het zou veel te gevaarlijk zijn. Maar oom Joep wilde zich niet laten kennen, en besloot er toch naartoe te gaan. Het ging immers om zijn broer.

Oom Joep ging er met de auto naartoe, maar werd door twee ridderachtige figuren met speren tegengehouden. 'Halt,' zei één van de ridders. 'U komt er niet doorheen. Verboden terrein.'

'Ik wil weten wat jullie met mijn broer hebben gedaan,' zei oom Joep.

'Dat kunnen we niet achterhalen,' zeiden de ridders. 'Er zijn hier teveel gevangenen om daaraan te beginnen.'

'Maar ik heb er recht op,' zei oom Joep. Maar de ridders wilden hem niet antwoorden. 'Mijnheer,' zei één van de ridders, 'nu moet u maken dat u hier wegkomt, anders laten wij u arresteren vanwege betreding van verboden terrein, en wegens het onnodig lastigvallen van het gezag.'

Oom Joep maakte rechtsomkeerds, en lichtte de familie in. Tante Jokebed kende iemand genaamd meester Ed Konijn, een meester in de rechten. Misschien dat die wel wat zou kunnen betekenen. Oom Joep wilde daar wel naartoe gaan samen met Berend en Albert. Het was al laat, maar door een telefoontje kon er nog wel wat geregeld worden, en ze waren meer dan van harte welkom. Meester Ed Konijn woonde diep in het bos. Toen ze aanklopten bij zijn huis deed een lange, gezette man met een lichte huidziekte de deur los. 'Komt u verder,' zei Ed. Even later zaten ze in een sjieke woonkamer met veel schilderijen en antieke meubels. Ook hingen er veel jacht-trofeeen aan de muur. De kinderen begonnen hun verhaal te vertellen over wat er met hun vader gebeurt was, en oom Joep sprak zijn vermoeden uit dat het om een misdaad ging.

'Dat is allemaal waar,' zei Ed Konijn. 'Het ijskasteel is het gevangenis-terrein van een misdaads-organisatie, maar niemand kan daar iets aan doen, zelfs de staat niet.'

'Maar waarom niet ?' vroeg oom Joep.

'Omdat ze te sterk zijn,' zei Ed Konijn.

'Leuke achternaam heeft u trouwens,' zei oom Joep.

'Dank u,' zei Ed Konijn.

'Kunt u ons helpen ?' vroeg oom Joep.

'Luister,' zei Ed Konijn, 'we lopen nu al gevaar omdat we hierover praten. We kunnen beter stoppen.'

'Ja, maar het gaat om mijn broer,' zei oom Joep, 'en zijn kinderen hier hebben hun vader nodig, vooral sinds hun moeder er niet meer is. Is er dan echt helemaal niets wat u voor ons zou kunnen betekenen ?'

'Ik vrees van niet,' zei Ed Konijn. 'En dat vind ik al vreselijk op zichzelf. Ik had u graag willen helpen.'

'U bent meester in de rechten,' zei oom Joep. 'U moet daar wel iets mee kunnen doen. We zijn hier toch niet voor niets gekomen ?'

'Dat is waar,' zei Ed Konijn. 'Hmm..., laat me eens zien. U zou met de hertog zelf kunnen praten. Ik geloof dat hij nogal wispelturig is. Hij heeft een vreemde soort van ziekte. Hij is een weerkat, wat betekent dat hij in een kat kan veranderen. Het heeft natuurlijk wel een risico, maar ik heb de indruk dat u dat risico wel wilt nemen.'

'Waar kunnen we de hertog spreken ?' vroeg oom Joep.

'Goede vraag,' zei Ed Konijn. 'Achter het ijskasteel is zijn huis. Het is daar niet pluis, dat kan ik u wel vertellen. Het spookt daar.'

'Bent u er weleens geweest ?' vroeg oom Joep. Het hoofd van Ed Konijn begon verschrikkelijk rood te worden. 'Eh..., daar kan ik niet over praten,' stamelde hij.

'Ach, toe nou, kom op,' zei oom Joep.

'Het is mij verboden daarover te praten. Beroeps-geheim,' zei Ed Konijn.

'En hoe kom ik daar ?' vroeg oom Joep. 'Want het ijskasteel is streng bewaakt.'

Ed Konijn stopte zijn hand in zijn zak en haalde er een kaartje uit. 'Zie, hier staat zijn telefoon-nummer op.'

Oom Joep nam het kaartje aan. De kinderen bleven die nacht bij oom Joep slapen. De volgende ochtend belde oom Joep op naar de hertog. Hij kreeg een bediende aan de lijn. 'Kom maar langs om acht uur vanavond,' zei de bediende, 'maar zorg er voor dat u niet langs het ijskasteel gaat. U moet regelrecht naar het huis van de hertog komen, aan de achterkant van het ijskasteel. Even werd er uitgelegd hoe te rijden, en toen wist oom Joep genoeg. Weer zouden de kinderen met hem meegaan.

Om precies acht uur kwamen ze aan bij het huis van de hertog. Er kwam al direct een bediende aanrennen. 'Waar heeft u uw koffers ?' vroeg de bediende.

'Wij hebben geen koffers bij ons,' zei oom Joep.

'Dus u komt niet logeren ?' vroeg de bediende.

'Nee, wij komen niet logeren,' zei oom Joep.

'Komt u maar mee,' zei de bediende ineens heel nors. Ze kwamen binnen in een grote hal. Aan de rechterkant was een lange gang. 'Loop deze hele gang uit, en klop dan vier keer op de deur aan het einde van de gang. De hertog verwacht u daar,' zei de bediende.

In de gang hingen veel schilderijen, en er stonden veel kastjes aan de zijkanten. Even bonkte het hart in de keel van oom Joep. Hij hoopte maar dat de hertog hem kon helpen. Bij de grote deur aangekomen klopte hij vier keer aan. Direct werd de deur opengemaakt, en een kleine man deed open. 'Geweldig, jullie zijn er al,' zei de man. 'Gaat u maar zitten.'

De kinderen vertelden hun verhaal, en daarna sprak oom Joep zijn vermoeden uit dat het om een misdaad ging.

'Ach welnee,' zei de hertog. 'Ik heb de papieren van deze man doorgekeken, van jullie vader, en uw broer, en deze mijnheer heeft nogal veel op zijn geweten, dus zijn gevangenneming is volkomen terecht. Ik kan daar verder weinig aan doen, sorry dat ik het moet zeggen.'

'Oh, en wat heeft hij dan gedaan ?' vroeg oom Joep, terwijl ook de kinderen begonnen te protesteren.

'Luister goed,' zei de hertog. 'Ik kan en mag daar verder niets over zeggen. De raad heeft beslist. Het is tegen de wet om daar zomaar vrij over te praten. U zou daar zelf ook gevaar mee kunnen lopen.'

'Ja, ja,' zei oom Joep. 'U kunt me nog meer vertellen. Wij als naaste familie hebben er recht op te weten wat er is gebeurd, en waarom hij opgesloten zit.'

'Rustig aan,' zei de hertog. 'Ik waarschuw u. U vraagt teveel. Ik ben niet gemachtigd hierover te spreken.'

'En wie heeft u de opdracht gegeven daarover te zwijgen ?' vroeg oom Joep die bijna stond te koken.

'Kan en mag ik u niet vertellen,' zei de hertog zuur.

'Het is alsof ik met mijn hoofd tegen een muur aanloop,' zei oom Joep.

'Het spijt me bijzonder,' zei de hertog.

'Is het waar dat u in een kat kan veranderen ?' vroeg Berend.

De hertog werd ineens erg zenuwachtig. 'Allemaal sprookjes,' zei hij. Hij begon op zijn horloge te kijken. 'Ik vind dat u nu moet gaan, u kunt beter gaan. Deze zaak is afgerond.'

'Afgerond ?' vroeg oom Joep woedend. 'We zijn hier geen steek wijzer geworden.'

'U kunt gaan,' zei de hertog, terwijl hij een wimpelend gebaar met zijn handen maakte.

'Ik laat het er hier niet bij zitten,' zei oom Joep, terwijl hij opstond.

'Dat kunt u beter wel doen,' zei de hertog, 'anders kunt u in grote problemen komen.'

'En wat voor problemen dan wel ?' vroeg oom Joep.

Maar de hertog zweeg.

De familie werd weer ingelicht, en ze zouden opnieuw bij elkaar komen. 'Nou,' zei tante Katrien, 'daar schieten we niet erg veel mee op.'

Ook was er een andere oom bijgekomen : oom Bakus. Oom Bakus zei dat de hertog zoveel macht had, omdat het land oorspronkelijk van zijn voorouders was. Zijn voorouders van ver terug bezaten het land, nog voordat er een staat bestond. Oom Bakus zei ook dat de hertog die macht samen met zijn broer had geerfd, hertog Hernandes. Volgens oom Bakus zou hertog Hernandes veel kunnen betekenen. Oom Bakus wist wel waar die hertog woonde, en wilde er wel met oom Joep en de kinderen naartoe. Ook tante Katrien wilde wel mee. Ze was van mening dat wanneer er meerdere familie-leden zouden meegaan, ze meer kans van slagen hadden. Oom Bakus belde op, en ze konden direct komen. Het was niet zo lang rijden. Het huis van hertog Hernandes was vele malen groter dan het huis van hertog Kat-Anders. Hertog Hernandes wachtte hen al op bij de deur. 'Zo, kom binnen,' zei hij met een warme, hartelijke stem. 'Kan ik jullie iets te drinken aanbieden ?' Even later zaten ze in een grote zaal, aan een soort eet-tafel. Ze kregen allerlei toetjes voorgeschoteld, en andere hapjes. 'Zo zo,' zei oom Bakus. 'Hier is veel werk aan besteed.'

'Ja,' zei hertog Hernandes. 'Jullie zijn namelijk mijn speciale gasten. Ziet u, die krijg ik hier bijna nooit. Alles gaat via mijn broer, Paulus Wilhelmus de Vijfde, oftewel hertog Kat-Anders. Ik ben wat minder bekend, denk ik. Ik ben blij dat jullie er zijn. Blijven jullie ook logeren ?'

'Dat is erg aardig van u aangeboden,' zei oom Bakus, 'maar we zijn hier eigenlijk alleen maar om wat belangrijke dingen te bespreken.'

'Nou ja, dat kan toch ook uitstekend alle dagen dat u hier verblijft ?' sprak hertog Hernandes. De kinderen begonnen weer als eerste hun verhaal te vertellen, en ze lieten duidelijk blijken hoe erg ze hun vader misten. Oom Bakus, tante Katrien en oom Joep spraken daarna hun vermoeden uit dat het om een misdaad ging. Ook vertelde oom Joep hoe hertog Kat-Anders reageerde. 'Ach ja, dat is typisch mijn broer,' zei hertog Hernandes. 'Ik snap jullie verhaal volkomen.' Toen bladerde de hertog wat papieren door. 'Ik zie hier duidelijk de reden waarom jullie familie-lid is opgepakt en gevangen gezet. Deze man heeft namelijk een gevaarlijke ziekte die maakt dat hij soms in een kat veranderd. Hebben jullie daar ooit iets van gemerkt ?'

'Niets !' protesteerde tante Katrien. 'Mijn broer zou zoiets nooit doen. Daar is hij helemaal het type niet voor, en dit is allemaal erg belachelijk. Te meer omdat deze verhalen juist over uw broer, hertog Kat-Anders, de ronde gaan.'

'Eh, dat moet een vergissing zijn,' zei hertog Hernandes ineens heel snibbig. 'En ik stel het niet op prijs dat u zo over mijn broer praat.'

'Daar kunnen wij verder niets aan doen dat die verhalen over uw broer de ronde gaan,' zei tante Katrien.

'Maar u hoeft dat niet op te noemen,' zei hertog Hernandes. 'Het is niet netjes. En u doet daar dan mee aan de verspreiding van verschrikkelijke leugens en ophitserij.'

'Zeg kom,' bulderde tante Katrien. 'Zo zijn we niet getrouwd, hè. U beschuldigt mijn broer ervan deze ziekte te hebben.'

'Het zijn de feiten, mevrouw,' sprak de hertog ineens kalm. 'Het is bij hem waargenomen, en daar kunnen u en ik of wie dan ook niets aan doen.'

'Pardon ?' zei tante Katrien. 'Zeg, pardon ? Daar hebben wij nooit iets van meegekregen, en dat hebben wij ook nooit gesignaleerd. Nogmaals is dat bij uw broer geconstateerd, niet bij mijn broer. U moet hier de dingen niet door elkaar halen.'

'Shhhh...' fluisterde de hertog hard. 'Daar moet u dus absoluut niet over spreken. Daar kan u voor worden opgepakt. Ik zal maar oppassen als ik u was. De muren hebben hier oren.'

'Ja, inderdaad,' zei tante Katrien spottend. 'En al zou mijn broer die ziekte hebben. Waarom zou hij daarvoor de gevangenis inmoeten ?'

'Omdat hij gevaarlijk is,' zei de hertog indringend. 'Zeer gevaarlijk. Weer-katten zijn een ernstig probleem wat niet onderschat mag worden. Het kan op een vervelend moment totaal verkeerd gaan, ziet u.'

'Nee, dat zie ik niet,' zei tante Katrien. 'Het is een schande dat u zo over mijn broer praat. U toont ons niet eens een degelijk bewijs.'

'Verdraaid,' zei de hertog. 'Al het bewijs is in deze documenten. Daaraan te twijfelen, en bovenal het officiele bewijs tegen te spreken, kan u in de problemen brengen. Ik kan u laten arresteren voor het tegenspreken van het gezag.'

'Belachelijk,' zei tante Katrien.

'In ieder geval,' zei de hertog. 'Uw familie-lid is in zo'n ernstige toestand dat ijs-verblijf noodzakelijk is, ver weg van zijn sociale omgeving. Het is voor uw bescherming. En praat ook verder niet over zijn ziekte, want de ziekte wordt namelijk in anderen opgewekt door er over te praten. Het is hyper-besmettelijk en heeft een psychische oorsprong. Weet waar u aan begint. Elk geval van weer-katterigheid moet zo snel mogelijk uit de samenleving verwijderd worden, en het hele geval moet in de doofpot gestopt worden, zodat het zich niet kan verspreiden. Kan ik rekenen op uw medewerking ?'

'Ik denk niet dat we hier ook maar een stap verder komen,' zei tante Katrien.

'En blijft u nog logeren ?' vroeg de hertog ineens enthousiast.

'Geen denken aan,' zei tante Katrien.

'We blijven wèl logeren,' zei oom Bakus. 'Katrien, jij mag naar huis, maar wij moeten dit gewoon doen. We hebben geen andere oplossing.'

'Zeer goed,' glimlachte de hertog.

'Nee, dan blijf ik ook wel,' zei tante Katrien.

Ze kregen allemaal hun eigen kamer. Midden in de nacht sloop oom Bakus naar tante Katrien. Ook maakte hij oom Joep wakker. Hij wilde op onderzoek uit in het huis van hertog Hernandes. In de eetzaal had de hertog de documenten laten liggen. Oom Bakus begon direct te bladeren en te lezen. Inderdaad stond er dat hun broer een ernstige ziekte had. Deze ziekte was vastgesteld door professor Eindricht. Ook gingen ze nog even op andere plaatsen zoeken, maar ze vonden niets wat ze konden gebruiken. De volgende ochtend werden ze vroeg wakker gemaakt door bedienden. De bedienden zeiden dat ze zo snel mogelijk moesten vertrekken. Er was verder geen uitleg bij, maar niemand had nog zin om ook maar iets langer te blijven.

'Wat een vreemd heerschap was dat,' zei tante Katrien in de auto. 'Ja, nog wel erger dan zijn broer,' zei oom Joep.

'En dat terwijl het allemaal zo goed begon,' zei oom Bakus.

'Ach, schijn bedriegt,' zei tante Katrien. 'En wie is nu die professor Eindricht ? Want hij moet hier allemaal veel meer over weten.'

Toen ze even later de kinderen bij tante Jokebed afzetten, en het haar vertelden, zei ze dat professor Eindricht in het ijskasteel werkte. Hij zou ook veel te maken hebben gehad met het oppakken van haar man. Daar werd ook altijd heel geheimzinnig over gedaan. Tante Jokebed wilde daar nooit over praten. En toen ze het haar weer vroegen wat er nu precies met haar man aan de hand was, zei ze dat ze daar niet over mocht praten. 'Begin jij nu ook al,' zei tante Katrien.

'Vreemd,' zei oom Bakus. 'In ieder geval wil ik graag met die professor Eindricht praten.'

'Doe het niet !' zei tante Jokebed luid. 'Je gaat daar erge spijt van krijgen.'

'Ach Jokebed,' zei tante Katrien, 'waarom zo hysterisch ? Hebben wij een andere keuze ?'

'Ik weet wat hij met mijn man heeft gedaan, en wat hij met ons allemaal kan doen,' zei Jokebed in paniek. 'Het is een gevaarlijke man. Hij kan onze hele familie in de vernieling brengen als we niet oppassen. Laten we een andere oplossing proberen te vinden.'

'Nee, Jokebed,' zei oom Bakus. 'Het is mooi geweest zo. Ik ben het zat. Ik wil precies weten hoe de vork in de steel zit.'

'Als je naar hem toe gaat, laat hij je niet meer gaan !' zei tante Jokebed luid. 'Je bent gewaarschuwd !'

Inmiddels was tante Audam ook gekomen. Zij kreeg ook het hele verhaal te horen. 'Kom nou,' zei oom Bakus. 'Ik laat me niet bangmaken.'

'Maar luister,' zei tante Audam. 'Jokebed heeft ervaring met hen. Haar man zat in hetzelfde schuitje. We kunnen beter naar haar advies luisteren, dan dat we op eigen houtje dingen gaan doen tegen deze gevaarlijke misdaads-organisatie. We mogen het niet onderschatten.'

'Ja, maar we moeten wat doen. Het duurt allemaal al veel te lang. Bodelang heeft ons nodig. Ik zal voor mijn broer blijven vechten, ook al moet ik mijn eigen leven en vrijheid daarvoor opofferen,' zei oom Bakus vastbesloten.

'Oh, jij bent gewoon dom,' zei tante Audam. 'Denk je dat Bodelang wil dat jij je leven in gevaar brengt ? Wij hebben je nodig. We kunnen niet ook nog eens jou missen. Berend en Albert hebben je ook nodig.'

'Maar meer dan dat : Ze hebben hun vader nodig,' zei oom Bakus.

'Bakus is mijn held,' zei tante Katrien. 'En ik ben bereid om met hem mee te gaan.'

'Geen sprake van, Katrien,' zei oom Joep. 'Jij blijft hier. Veel te gevaarlijk. En ik kan jou niet missen als er wat verkeerd gaat.'

'Schat,' zei tante Katrien. 'Dan ga jij toch ook gewoon met ons mee ? Samen staan we sterk.'

'Als jij gaat, dan ga ik ook,' zei oom Joep.

'Goed, dan gaan we met z'n drieen,' zei oom Bakus. 'We zullen die professor eens een lesje leren. Wie denkt hij wel niet dat hij is ? Dan kent hij ons nog niet.'

'Zeg, klets jij niet zo uit je nek,' zei tante Audam. 'En luisteren jullie nu eens even naar mij, want ik heb een niet al te fijne mededeling voor jullie. Jullie weten dat ik de oudste ben, hè ? En jullie weten dat ik Bodelang het langste ken, omdat hij na mij kwam, hè ? Tot mijn spijt moet ik jullie mededelen dat hij wel degelijk weer-katterigheid had, al vanaf zijn geboorte. Het gebeurde niet al te vaak, maar hij veranderde soms in een kat, en dan was het goed mis. Iedereen moest zich bergen.'

'Onze ouders hebben daar nooit een woord over gezegd,' zei tante Katrien. 'Dit is allemaal zottigheid.'

'Nee, dat is het niet, Katrien,' snauwde tante Audam. 'Onze ouders mochten daar nooit wat over zeggen. Dat was verboden. Je kon daarvoor opgepakt worden. Het was verboden over weerkatterigheid te praten, en daar moet je vandaag de dag nog steeds mee oppassen. Ik heb misschien nu al teveel gezegd, maar ik vond toch dat jullie dit moesten weten.'

'Laten we alsjeblieft stoppen hierover te praten,' zei tante Jokebed bijna smekend. 'We zullen pertinent in de problemen gaan komen als we niet stoppen. Alsjeblieft.'

'Al die onzin moet nu maar eens afgelopen zijn,' zei oom Bakus. 'Katrien, ik en Joep gaan met professor Eindricht praten.'

'Dom !' zei tante Audam luid. 'Heel dom, maar je moet het zelf weten.'

'Ja, heel dom van je,' zei tante Jokebed zachtjes. Oom Bakus had de telefoon gegrepen. Ze konden volgende week langskomen.

Het leek wel alsof de dagen eeuwig duurden. Oom Bakus stond te popelen om met de professor te praten. Eindelijk was het dan zo ver, en ze werden direct door de bewakers binnengelaten. Ze konden de auto vlak voor het ijskasteel parkeren. Door een grote deur konden ze naar binnen. Er waren hier allemaal wachthokjes waar bewakers zaten. Ook waren er veel militairen en agenten. Iemand met rechtopstaand blond haar kwam op hen af, in een hele lange zwarte jas. 'Eindricht,' zei hij snel, toen hij hen de hand aanreikte. 'Komt u met mij mee,' zei hij weer snel, terwijl hij een trap oprende. Het was een hele lange brede trap, die heel hoog voerde. In de verte was een hoge deur, waar hij doorheen rende. De deur was ook heel breed. 'Gaat u zitten !' schreeuwde hij. Oom Bakus, tante Katrien en oom Joep renden hem achterna. Wat ging die man snel, en wat praatte hij snel. Hij ging achter een groot zwart bureau zitten, en begon te lachen. 'Ja, haha, ik weet al waarvoor jullie komen. Familie-lid, hè ? Nou, hij is in goede handen hoor, dat kleine katje.'

Oom Bakus sloeg met zijn vuist op tafel. 'Ophouden met die onzin nu. Hoe lang moet hij hier blijven ?'

'Voor de rest van zijn leven,' zei professor Eindricht met een blij gezicht.

'Bent u gek geworden !' riep oom Bakus. 'En waarom lacht u daarom ?'

'Omdat wij goed voor hem zorgen,' zei de professor stralend.

'U bent gek,' zei tante Katrien.

'Shhh.... tut tut tut,' zei de professor. 'Zeg dat maar niet te hard, haha.'

'En waarom niet ?' vroeg Katrien nijdig.

'Daar kunnen de katten niet tegen,' zei de professor. 'Daar worden ze wild van, en gevaarlijk.'

'Nee, u bent gevaarlijk,' zei oom Bakus. 'U laat mijn broer nu vrij, of u zult wat gaan beleven.'

'Oh, geen denken aan,' lachte de professor. 'We kunnen hem veel te goed gebruiken ?'

'Voor wat ?' riep oom Bakus.

'Gaat u niks aan,' zei de professor. 'Allemaal geheim. Beroeps-geheim, staats-geheim, hoe u het ook wilt noemen.'

'U werkt niet samen met de staat,' zei oom Joep. 'U bent een misdaads-organisatie.'

'Misdaads-organisatie ?' lachte de professor. 'Wij doen proeven. Onze gevangenen bewijzen de voortgang van de wetenschap daarmee een grote eer.

'Proeven ?' vroeg tante Katrien. 'Maar dat is vreselijk.'

'Het is vreselijk, precies,' zei de professor. 'Maar als de wetenschap zich niet ontwikkeld is het nog veel erger. We moeten offers brengen.'

'Zeg, blijf met je handen van andere mensen af dan,' zei oom Bakus.

'Nee,' zei de professor, 'nee, nee. Ik denk dat u het verkeerd begrijpt. Wij zijn bezig om een medicijn te ontwikkelen tegen weerkatterigheid. Het is allemaal voor bestwil van uw broer.'

'Geef onze broer terug,' zei oom Bakus. 'Wij hebben nooit weerkatterigheid in hem gemerkt.'

'Waar heb je je ogen ?' vroeg de professor. 'Het wordt alleen maar erger met hem. Hij is bijna dag en nacht een kat.'

'Ja, ik zou ook een kat worden als ik hier zou zitten,' zei oom Bakus. 'Ik waarschuw u. Ik tel tot drie. Laat hem los.'

'Geen denken aan,' zei de professor. 'U heeft een gevaarlijke wens. U wilt weerkatterigheid terug in de samenleving. Ik kan u daarvoor opsluiten.'

'Mijn broer bedoelt het niet zo,' zei oom Joep. 'Hij is alleen een beetje overstuur.'

'Overstuur ?' vroeg de professor. 'Volgens mij begint hij zelf al vormen van weerkatterigheid te vertonen.'

'Daar kunt u dan beter niet over praten, want dan kunt u het ook krijgen,' zei tante Katrien.

'Ik ben immuun,' zei de professor.

'Hoe dan ?' snauwde tante Katrien.

'Een pilletje ?' zei de professor.

'Ik dacht dat er nog geen medicijn was,' zei tante Katrien.

'Geen medicijn om het te genezen,' zei de professor, 'maar wel eentje om het te voorkomen.'

'Waarom verspreid u dat medicijn dan niet ?' vroeg tante Katrien.

'Zit al in het drink water,' zei de professor, 'in de tandpasta, in het voedsel, in de shampoo, everywhere.'

'Hoe kan Bakus het dan nu ontwikkelen ?' vroeg tante Katrien.

'Nou, heel simpel,' zei de professor. 'Het zat waarschijnlijk al in zijn genetisch materiaal.'

'Ja, zo ken ik er nog wel eentje,' zei tante Katrien.

'Jullie zijn maar een gevaarlijke familie,' zei de professor. 'Ik zit eraan te denken jullie niet meer te laten gaan.

'Oh nee !' riep oom Bakus, 'oh nee !' Oom Bakus greep zijn buik, en begon in een zwarte panter te veranderen. Hij sprong op professor Eindricht af en beet hem in zijn nek. Toen veranderde hij weer in een mens, en riep dicht bij het oor van professor Eindricht : 'Jouw spelletjes zijn afgelopen. Geef ons nu onze broer terug, en allen die u onrechtmatig hier vasthoudt !' Professor Eindricht drukte al bloedend een paar alarm-knopjes in, en spoedig kwam er een heel legertje bewakers op hen af. Alweer veranderde oom Bakus in een panter, en ditmaal een veel grotere. Toen hij brulde grepen de wachters naar hun oren, en vielen op de grond. De panter rende in een reuze vaart naar beneden, en brak wat gevangenis deuren open. Weer veranderde hij in een mens, greep zijn broer, en rende met hem uit het kasteel, terwijl hij de anderen riep. 'Kom op, we moeten maken dat we hier wegkomen !' Al snel zaten ze in de auto.

Berend en Albert waren blij hun vader weer te zien.

Inmiddels was de man van tante Audam van een lange reis thuisgekomen. Ook hij kreeg het verhaal te horen, en deed mee aan de familie-samenkomsten. Deze oom Arend zei dat de weerkatterigheid waarschijnlijk een uit de hand gelopen vaccin was tegen de ziekte van weerman. De ziekte van weerman was een ziekte waarbij jongens soms veranderden in mannen, vooral 's nachts. Dan renden ze veelal de bossen in om te gaan jagen, en om op zoek te gaan naar elkaar. Dan vormden ze stammen, en maakten het bos onveilig, ook al waren ze gewoonlijks met het morgenlicht gewoon weer jongens. Veel families verloren hun zonen aan deze ziekte. Daarom werd het vaccin ontwikkeld, maar het had het bijverschijnsel van weerkatterigheid.

'Vreemd,' zei oom Bakus. 'Dan heeft onze familie waarschijnlijk heel vroeger aan die ziekte van weerman geleden, en hebben ze bij ons het vaccin toegedient.'

'Dat kan wel kloppen,' zei oom Arend. 'Bij mij in de familie speelde hetzelfde.'

'Wat moeten we nu doen dan ?' vroeg tante Katrien.

'In het buitenland zijn ze druk bezig met het zoeken naar een vaccin tegen weerkatterigheid,' zei oom Arend.

'Ach wat,' zei oom Bakus. 'Als ik die weerkatterigheid niet had, dan had ik Bodelang nooit uit het ijskasteel kunnen krijgen.'

'Ach, klets geen onzin, Bakus,' zei tante Audam. 'Als onze familie geen weerkatterigheid zou hebben, dan zou Bodelang nooit in het ijskasteel zijn opgesloten in de eerste plaats. Het heeft ons alleen maar in de problemen gebracht.'

'Dat is wel waar,' zei oom Arend, 'maar vergeet niet dat de familie waarschijnlijk was belast met een veel groter probleem in het verleden, waarin vele jongens de ziekte van weerman hadden, en de familie verlieten om in het bos te gaan wonen. 's Nachts groeiden hun baarden, werden ze langer, en gingen op jacht als bezeten wilde mannen, en ook vielen ze iedere onschuldige bezoeker van het bos lastig, met alle gevolgen daarvan.'

'En in het daglicht waren het gewoon weer jongens ?' vroeg oom Bakus. 'Ik zou maar wat graag mijn eeuwige jeugd hebben willen behouden, maar ik heb het waarschijnlijk verloren door dat stomme vaccin. Wat een idioterie, zeg. Het was waarschijnlijk gewoon een stukje natuur.'

'En ik ben mijn man verloren,' zei tante Jokebed.

'Die stammen waren vroeger de oorzaak van het grootste aantal vermissingen per jaar,' zei oom Arend.

'We moeten ons kunnen verdedigen tegen al die geleerden met hun proeven. Ik wil niet hun nieuwe proef-konijn zijn,' zei oom Bakus.

'Is er geen snellere manier om van die weerkatterigheid af te komen ?' vroeg tante Katrien. 'Door een soort recept van grootmoeder's geheim ofzo ?'

'Bestaan die stammen nog steeds ?' vroeg oom Bakus.

'Diep in de bossen waar geen kip komt,' zei oom Arend, 'en onder de grond.'

'Dus daar moet nog ergens familie van ons rondlopen ?' vroeg oom Bakus.

'Waarschijnlijk wel. Het vaccin werd alleen toegedient aan de verdere familie-leden die er nog waren, maar natuurlijk niet aan de stammen zelf. Die waren te wild, en onbereikbaar,' zei oom Arend.

'Ik wil er naartoe !' riep oom Bakus. 'Ik wil niet nog ouder worden, en ik wil mijn jeugd terug. Mijn weerkatterigheid zal een goed verdedigings-middel zijn, mochten ze willen aanvallen.'

'Hoe is de ziekte van weerman dan eigenlijk ontstaan ?' vroeg tante Katrien.

'Dat is nogal een lang verhaal,' zei oom Arend. 'De verre voorouders van de hertogen hadden een vreemde ziekte waarbij ze soms in hyenas veranderden. Lioporitus heette die ziekte. Ze hadden van alles geprobeerd om die ziekte uit te roeien, maar niets hielp. Ze waren bang dat het ook op andere families zou overspringen. Als voorzorg werden de families in hun naaste omgeving geinjecteerd met een vaccin. En dat vaccin had als bijwerking de ziekte van weerman.'

'Vreemd,' zei tante Katrien, 'maar wel interessant. Zijn er nog steeds mensen die deze ziekte hebben ?'

'Allen die deze ziekte hadden zijn inmiddels overleden, alleen een tweede broer van hertog Kat-Anders blijkt deze ziekte nog te hebben,' zei oom Arend. 'Het bestaan van deze broer is angstvallig geheimgehouden. Hij was met deze ziekte geboren, en heeft altijd geisoleerd diep in het bos gewoond. Hij is genaamd hertog von Brunsga.'

Het omweerde buiten. Er was een harde knal met een bliksemflits die midden in de kamer kwam. Iedereen was onder fel licht.

'Zijn broers zijn hartstikke bang van hem. In het geheim wordt het hele land door hem geregeerd, of zeg maar liever geterroriseerd,' zei oom Arend.

'Zeg Arend,' zei tante Jokebed, 'kun je nu alsjeblieft je mond dichthouden, want je brengt ons allemaal nog in de problemen.'

'Ik heb lang genoeg gezwegen,' zei oom Arend. 'En kom er maar voor uit dat je een spion van hertog von Brunsga bent, Jokebed.' Tante Jokebed trok haar pistool. 'Het is afgelopen, Arend. Draai je om, en leg je handen tegen de muur.' Binnen een paar minuten kwamen er agenten in het zwart binnen, die oom Arend in de boeien sloegen. 'Bedrieger die je er bent !' riep tante Katrien naar tante Jokebed. Nu richtte tante Jokebed ook het pistool op tante Katrien en oom Bakus. 'Doe geen domme dingen, Jokebed,' zei oom Bakus kalm. Er kwamen meerdere agenten binnen, en ook oom Bakus werd in de boeien geslagen. Ook tante Audam had een pistool getrokken. 'Jij ook al !' riep tante Katrien. 'Ook zo'n vuile bedrieger !'

'Ik wist het !' riep oom Arend, 'maar ik kon niet langer zwijgen. De familie is in groot gevaar. De hertog heeft zijn spionnen overal.' Ook Bodelang werd weer in de boeien geslagen, onder veel geprotesteer van Berend en Albert. 'Jullie blijven bij mij, Berend en Albert,' zei tante Jokebed.

'Nee !' riep Albert. 'Wij willen niets meer met u te maken hebben. U heeft ons bedrogen, en onze vader verraden.'

'Ze gaan met mij mee !' riep tante Katrien. Maar toen werd ook tante Katrien in de boeien geslagen. Oom Joep rende naar de achterdeur toe, rukte die open, en riep : 'Berend en Albert, we moeten hier ogenblikkelijk weg !' Berend en Albert renden achter hem aan. Snel renden ze naar zijn geparkeerde auto toe, en stapten in. Maar al gauw werden ze achtervolgd door agenten. Oom Joep deed de auto-lichten uit en reed het bos in. Het was nog net licht genoeg dat hij kon zien waar hij reed. Na een tijdje waren ze van de agenten af. Oom Joep wist dat hij niet naar zijn huis kon rijden. Hij reed naar een vriendin. Ze ontving hen direct hartelijk. Oom Joep vertelde wat er allemaal was gebeurd. De vrouw vertelde dat ze een verboden, illegaal boek had over hertog von Brunsga. Het was geschreven door een ex-agent die voor hem werkte : Klaas van Galen.

Ineens waren er agenten binnen. Oom Joep werd geboeid, en de vrouw. Albert probeerde weg te komen, maar werd gegrepen. Berend stond wat verder weg, en kon net door de achterdeur naar buiten ontsnappen. Hij rende de achtertuin in, en sprong in het riviertje. Snel zwom hij naar de overkant, en rende het bos in zo hard als hij kon. Hij rende zonder om te kijken, en na heel lang rennen kwam hij aan bij een verlicht gebouw. Hij rende naar binnen. Hij was helemaal nat. Daar stond een man. 'Wie bent u ?' zei de man.

'Ik heet Berend,' zei Berend. 'Wie bent u ?'

'Ik ben hertog von Brunsga,' zei de man. 'Ik zal u wel even warme kleren geven.' Na een tijdje zaten ze samen in een warme kamer op sjieke stoelen aan een tafel. Berend had inmiddels andere kleren aan. Hij was nog steeds flink aan het hijgen. 'Zo, jij hebt zeker hard gerend, en lang. Waar was je voor op de vlucht ?' vroeg de hertog.

'Kan ik u niet vertellen, mijnheer,' zei Berend.

'Dat kunt u beter wel doen,' zei de hertog deftig.

'Ziet u, het gaat om mijn familie,' zei Berend. Toen vertelde Berend het hele verhaal. 'Maar ik heb absoluut geen hyena ziekte,' zei de hertog. 'Dat is echt een sprookje. Ik snap niet waar mensen zulke verhalen vandaan halen.'

'Ik weet het ook niet, mijnheer,' zei Berend. 'Maar regeert u het land in het geheim ?'

De hertog begon te lachen. 'Ach welnee, joh. Dat zijn ook allemaal verzinsels. Zodra mensen niet veel weten over iets, beginnen ze te fantaseren.'

Berend wist niet meer wat hij moest geloven.

'Ik vind het heel vervelend voor je dat dit allemaal met je familie is gebeurd,' zei de hertog. 'Mijn andere broers regeren het land ook niet. Dat doet de staat, maar dit kan heel goed allemaal een misdaad zijn.'

'Maar twee tantes waren ontmaskerd als spionnen voor u. Hoe kan dat dan ?' vroeg Berend. 'Ik snap er niets meer van.'

'Misschien dat iemand zich voordoet als mij, of ze gebruiken mijn naam zonder mijn toestemming,' zei de hertog. 'Het land is inderdaad niet pluis, en daarom houd ik me er allemaal ver vandaan. Zoveel bedrog gaande. Je mag hier wel zo lang wonen, totdat dit allemaal opgelost is.'

'Ik durf niet meer terug,' zei Berend, 'dus heel graag.'

'Dat kan ik me voorstellen,' zei de hertog. 'Wat een spookhuis daar, zeg.'

Berend kreeg een eigen kamer, een hele grote. Er hingen veel jacht-trofeeen en vreemde schilderijen aan de muur. Midden in de nacht werd hij wakker van een vreemd geluid. Plotseling stond er een hyena in zijn kamer. Hij wreef in zijn ogen. 'Wat is dat nou ?' zei hij slaperig. Hij kneep in zijn arm om te controleren of hij wel echt wakker was. De hyena kwam steeds dichterbij. Toen ineens begon de hyena hem te likken. 'Jij bent wel heel lief,' zei Berend.

De volgende dag vertelde Berend aan de hertog over de hyena. 'Wat vreemd,' zei de hertog. 'Dat heb ik hier nog nooit gezien.'

De volgende nacht werd Berend weer wakker diep in de nacht. Twee agenten stonden naast zijn bed. Berend schrok, en riep meteen hard om hulp. Direct stormde de hertog zijn kamer binnen. 'Zeg heren, wat moet dat daar !' riep hij. 'Laat onmiddelijk die jongen los.'

'Dat is hertog von Brunsga,' zei Berend.

'Ja, ja,' zei één van de agenten. 'Dat zeggen ze allemaal, dat ze hertog von Brunsga zijn. Meekomen, jongetje.'

Maar toen begon de hertog in een hyena te veranderen en sprong de agenten naar de keel. De agenten wisten niet hoe snel ze weg moesten komen. Toen veranderde de hertog weer in een mens. De hertog was erg verbaast. 'Zeg, dat is mij nou nog nooit eerder overkomen.'

'Misschien heeft u wel een speciale gave,' zei Berend.

'Misschien wel,' zei de hertog. 'Het kwam in ieder geval goed van pas.'

'Ik voel me wel veilig bij u,' zei Berend. 'U kan mij in ieder geval beschermen.'

'Ik kan soms erg boos worden,' zei de hertog, 'maar dit heb ik nog nooit meegemaakt.'

'Ik vond het wel tof,' zei Berend. 'U had die agenten goed te pakken.'

'Oh, ze kunnen zo vervelend zijn,' zei de hertog, 'maar ze hebben nu een koekje van eigen deeg.'

'U bent een aardige man, hertog von Brunsga,' zei Berend. 'Veel aardiger en zorgzamer dan uw broers, en minder saai.'

Maar na een tijdje hoorden ze geluiden van auto's en busjes buiten. Ze keken uit het raam, en zagen een heel leger van agenten staan. 'Lever de jongen uit !' werd er geroepen. De hertog opende een raampje en riep : 'Geen sprake van. Daar komt helemaal niks van in. Wie denken jullie wel niet wie jullie zijn ?'

'Het gezag !' riep een agent. 'We hebben ordes van hertog von Brunsga !'

'Maar dat ben ik zelf, oelewapper !' riep de hertog.

Er werden ramen ingeslagen, en de deur werd ingetrapt. Even later rende een heel leger van agenten naar boven naar de kamer van Berend, waar ze nog steeds waren. De agenten renden op de jongen af, en wilden hem grijpen, maar in één klap veranderde de hertog in een grote massa van grote hyenas. Wel honderden hyenas sprongen op de agenten af, en renden naar beneden om ook de agenten die nog buiten stonden aan te vallen.

'Stop, stop !' riep een agent. 'Dit moet wel hertog von Brunsga zelf zijn. Dat kan niet anders ! Het is een weersplitser. Dat kan alleen hertog van Brunsga. Ren voor je leven, en maak rechtsomkeerds !'

Maar het was al te laat. Vele agenten lagen bloedend op de grond. De hyenas hadden geen medelijden. 'Stop alstublieft,' huilde een agent. 'We zullen alles voor u doen, wat u maar wilt. We weten nu dat we een grote vergissing hebben begaan.' Ineens kwamen alle hyenas weer bij elkaar als in een storm, en er was een enorme donderslag die ook het hele gebouw verlichte, zo sterk dat het leek alsof het gebouw in de vlammen stond. Ineens stond de hertog voor hen, en waren de hyenas verdwenen. De hertog stond daar in de rook. 'Zo heren, ik zal jullie direct vertellen wat jullie moeten doen,' zei de hertog. 'U gaat direct de familie van deze jongen vrijzetten uit het ijskasteel, en u gaat hen hier naartoe brengen. U zult hen met respect behandelen en geen haar op hun hoofd krenken. De jongen is genaamd Berend, en zijn familie-leden heten : Albert, zijn broer, en Bodelang, zijn vader. En dan zijn oom Bakus, zijn tante Katrien, zijn oom Arend, zijn oom Joep, en de vriendin van oom Joep. Verder wil ik dat u Jokebed en Audam, twee tantes van Berend, ontslaat, en laat opsluiten in het ijskasteel.'

'Komt voor elkaar, hertog von Brunsga,' zei de agent. Hij had het snel allemaal even opgeschreven, en vertrok toen met de andere agenten. Een paar uur later kwamen degenen die waren vrijgezet aan. Een agent had ze met een busje gebracht. De agent vertrok direct weer. Berend was erg blij zijn familie weer te zien, en omhelsde ze. De hertog legde hen later uit hoe de vork in de steel zat.

De Trollenspiegel

Als iemand in de trollenspiegel keek, viel hij direkt dood neer en werd zijn ziel door de spiegel heengetrokken om hem in het land der trollen te laten werken. Het was een groensoortig zaad waardoor de zielen dan geketend werden, een zaad dat vanuit de ziel een gevoelige plek liet voortgroeien als een trollenspiegel. Zo kon niemand de ziel bevrijden zonder zelf ook een slachtoffer van de trollenspiegel te worden.

De trollen waren een wreed volk zonder enige genade. En als er dan genade was, dan zat er altijd wel een addertje onder het gras. Zo waren velen blij en verheugd als de trollen hen vrijlieten, maar dan werden ze al snel gegrepen door een groen vuur waardoor ze nog verschrikkelijker gebonden werden. Nee, een trol liet zijn gevangene nooit vrij. Een trol maakte alleen zijn slachtoffers klaar voor nog grotere wreedheden. Hierin had de trol altijd veel plezier.

Er was geen volk zo wreed als het volk der trollen. Ze kenden geen genade. Hun genade was alleen een nog grotere wreedheid. Dit maakte hen berucht. Ja, de trollen waren zeer gevreesd. Veel plezier hadden ze erin als hopeloze zielen voor hun aanwezigheid trilden. Want in de handen te vallen van een trol, was te komen in een fuik waaruit geen ontsnapping mogelijk was, alleen het uitzicht op een steeds groeiende ellende. De gevangene had alleen het uitzicht op ongekend wrede martelingen, die alleen maar wreder en wreder zouden worden, tot groot plezier van de trollen. En zolang je nog niet door hen gepakt was, kon je erop wachten dat ze op een dag voor je deur zouden staan, want een trol geeft nooit op. Hij zou het telkens weer opnieuw proberen door de ene na de andere valstrik, totdat je een keer op een onbedachtzaam moment zou toehappen, als het begin van een ritje dat steeds duisterder zou worden.

Ze hadden er groot plezier in om alles langzaam op te bouwen, om de spanning en angst zo groot mogelijk te maken, en om maar zoveel mogelijk valse hoop en zekerheid te schenken, zodat de klap daarna extra hard zou aankomen. Ja, het waren misbaksels, en zij woonden in de trollenspiegels en hun slachtoffers. Telkens weer spanden zij hun netten en webben om hun geluk te beproeven. Nee, er was geen groter duivels kwaad dan de trollenspiegel. Het was een ras erger dan demonen en vampieren. Als zij in de buurt waren dan gilden de geesten, spoken en duivelen het uit. Er was niets vergeleken met de trollen. Eens hadden zij de trollenspiegel ontworpen, en sindsdien groeide hun macht.

En allen die nog nooit in de trollenspiegel hadden gekeken, en dachten dat het zo'n vaart niet zou lopen, en dat het gewoon iets onschuldigs was, zouden zich eens op een dag ook bewust zijn .... van het kwaad van de trollenspiegel.

Einde

De Monster Meester

Grimhaldt was een tovermeester van vele monsters. Zijn grote vijand was Aswaldt, de koning der skeletten. Grimhaldt was in zijn toverkamer de meest verschrikkelijke drankjes aan het brouwen. Grimhaldt had een heleboel schatten verborgen onder de aarde die bewaakt werden door wachters die eruit zagen als voeten : grote voeten en kleine voeten. Het was een vreemd ras wat hij ooit eens verslagen had, en sindsdien moesten zij zijn schatten bewaken. Aartslepal was zo'n voet, en was van top tot teen bewapend. Hij was de hoofdman van de voetwezens. Grimhaldt was erg trots op hem en had hem bekleed met de prachtigste sieraden.

Op een dag was er een belangrijke ring van Grimhaldt gestolen. Het was een ring waarmee bepaalde toverboeken geopend konden worden, en alleen bij het licht van die ring gelezen konden worden. Grimhaldt was woedend en riep Aartslepal bij zich. Hij ontdeed Aartslepal van zijn sieraden en zond hem uit zijn grottenstelsel de kou in. Aartslepal maakte een lange reis door het sneeuw en over het ijs, een reis die hij bijna niet zou overleven, maar hij was nu in ieder geval wel vrij. Na long lopen kwam hij aan bij een groot kasteel, als een spookslot. De muren waren lang en overal stonden skeletten.

Het kasteel was min of meer van botten gemaakt, en er hing een vreemde geur. Toen Grimhaldt merkte dat Aartslepal de tocht had overleefd was hij buiten zichzelf van woede. Hij greep een paar van de voetwezens die nog steeds wachters waren van zijn schatten, en wierp de wachters in zijn ketel voor een nieuwe toverdrank. Toen de toverdrank klaar was liep hij ermee naar een paar toverboeken die nog nooit geopend waren. Met een druppel in het slot kon hij elk boek openen. Nu kwamen de grootst mogelijke monsters vrij. Ook nam Grimhaldt zelf een slok van het mengsel en maakte samen met de monsters een reis naar het spookslot. Grimhaldt stormde naar binnen en kwam al snel in gevecht met Aswaldt de skelettenkoning. Maar de skeletten waren veel sterker dan het leger van Grimhaldt. Aswaldt trok zijn mes en stak het in het hart van Grimhaldt. Nu zou je denken dat nu Grimhaldt was verslagen zijn wachters wel makkelijk bevrijd konden worden, maar niets is minder waar. De wachters van Grimhaldt leefden diep onder de grond.

Het was een uittocht die vele jaren duurde. Vele kostbaarheden die diep onder de aarde lagen kwamen vrij. Het belangrijkste was wel de spiegel van Grimhaldt waarmee hij zijn toverijen bedreef. De wachters van die spiegel had hij zo dronken gemaakt en zo gevaarlijk dat er geen overwinning mogelijk was. Het waren de wachters zelf die overwinning behaalden door de spiegel. En zo kregen uiteindelijk de wachters het spookslot in handen, en begon Aswaldt zijn grote reis naar de eeuwigheid.

De Toverlist

De zwartvoetkabouters waren in oorlog met de witgouden elven. Ze hadden hun manschappen verzameld, en streden om de kroon over het land Tuburia. In Tuburia hadden de zwartvoetkabouters hun rijk onder de grond gebouwd, en de witgouden elven leefden meestal in de bossen. Maar nu de heksenkoning was gestorven, was er een groot gevecht om de kroon. Er was nog een ander die wel wat in de kroon zag. Zij was de tovenares van de zwarte bergen. Niet veel zielen durften zich hier te vertonen. Ze zeiden dat het daar spookte. Op een dag had de tovenares zich verkleed als een arme vrouw in lompen. Ze klopte aan bij een huisje van de zwartvoetkabouters. Emiel deed open. Hij en zijn vrouwtje waren nog op, maar zouden gauw naar bed gaan, want het was al avond geworden, en zij hadden de lantaarn buiten al aangedaan. 'Wat kan ik voor u doen, mevrouw ?' vroeg Emiel. 'Ach, heeft u iets te eten en misschien een slaapplaats voor deze arme weduwe ?' vroeg de vrouw. Maar Emiel sloeg de deur keihard dicht. Hij had niets aan landlopers. Ze kwamen alleen maar om de boel op te vreten, en ze werkten niet. Maar toen werd de tovenares erg kwaad en veranderde weer in haar eigen gedaante. Weer klopte ze aan, en Emiel deed open. Maar dit keer kon hij niets uitbrengen. Hevig geschrokken liep hij weer naar binnen, terwijl hij de deur liet openstaan. 'Dat is beter,' zei de tovenares. 'Het is mij wel duidelijk dat je de kroon niet waardig bent.' Maar daar was Emiel niet in geinteresseerd. Emiel was een harde werker die van aanpakken hield. En hij zag er niets in om zijn hele leven op een troon te zitten. Eigenlijk was Emiel heel anders dan de andere zwartvoetkabouters. Zij waren dikwijls lui en verzot op geld en glimmende dingen. 'Ik heb je nodig, Emiel,' zei de tovenares. Een zwarte raaf kwam in het raam zitten. Het was de raaf van de tovenares. Emiel lag op de grond. Hij was flauwgevallen van angst. De raaf had zijn vrouwtje versteend. De tovenares begon te lachen. Ze zou Emiel en zijn vrouwtje meenemen naar haar slot, in de zwarte bergen. Hier zou ze een boos plan smeden.

Na een paar dagen bracht ze Emiel en zijn vrouwtje terug naar hun huisje. Ze zette ze op de bank en vertrok. Na een tijdje konden ze zich beiden weer bewegen. 'Wat is er gebeurd ?' vroeg Emiel. Maar ook zijn vrouwtje wist het niet te vertellen. 'Het lijkt wel alsof ik jaren heb geslapen,' zei ze zacht. Buiten hoorden ze het gestamp van de kabouters. Ze zouden naar het bos gaan, om oorlog te voeren tegen de witgouden elven. Ineens werd er op de deur gebonst. Het was Roodjak, de legeraanvoerder van de zwartvoetkabouters. 'Meekomen !' riep hij, 'de oorlog gaat beginnen.' Emiel stond op en liep naar de deur. Maar hij voelde zich erg duizelig. Toen hij de deur openmaakte stond Roodjak hem nors aan te kijken. Roodjak had een hele grote baard die nogal vurig aandeed. Ook droeg hij een grote hoed en een vreemd zwart pak. 'Zeg, komt er nog wat van ?' riep hij ongeduldig. 'Ik voel me een beetje ziek,' zei Emiel.

'Niks mee te maken,' bulderde Roodjak. 'Het is nu tijd voor oorlog, en geen tijd om ziek te zijn.' En daar moest die arme Emiel mee. In het bos was er veel lawaai, en de zwartvoetkabouters schoten met hun kanonnen. De witgouden elven gooiden bommen met wit toverpoeder. Hiervan vielen er vele kabouters in slaap. 'Luiwammessen,' schreeuwde Roodjak, 'opstaan, het is nu geen tijd om te slapen.' De kabouters leden een zware nederlaag. 'Geef ons de kroon,' riepen de elven naar Roodjak. Maar Roodjak had geen kroon. Hij dacht dat de witgouden elven die hadden. 'Houdt me niet voor de gek,' brulde Roodjak, en maakte zware passen naar voren. 'Ik geloof niet in die toveronzin van jullie. Geef me de kroon.' Maar de elven hadden geen kroon, en Roodjak werd steeds kwaaier en kwaaier. Plotseling verscheen de tovenares met haar raaf. Ze had de kroon in haar handen. 'Zeg, hoe kom jij aan die kroon,' brulde Roodjak. Maar de tovenares gaf geen antwoord, en heel langzaam bewoog ze de kroon tot haar hoofd, om de kroon op te zetten. Maar de kroon was veel te groot. Roodjak bulderde van het lachen. Ineens kwam Emiel naar voren stappen, en zei : 'Pas op voor haar, Roodjak, want zij kan toveren.' Maar dat weerhield Roodjak niet. Met forse stappen liep hij op de tovenares af, en greep de kroon van haar weg. Roodjak zette de kroon op zijn grote hoed en die paste precies. 'Hoe staat ie ?' bulderde Roodjak van het lachen. 'Ach toch,' zei de tovenares, 'zot op alles wat glimt, een echte zwartvoetkabouter. Toch wel jammer dat het de echte kroon niet is, maar één van de vele maaksels om hebberige kabouters een lesje te leren.' En daar begon ineens die arme Roodjak te draaien en te draaien als een molen, steeds sneller en sneller. 'Wat is dit ? Haal me eruit,' schreeuwde hij. Maar daar steeg Roodjak op, en zweefde richting het slot van de tovenares. 'Ziezo,' zei de tovenares, 'hem zal ik ook nog wel goed kunnen gebruiken.' Maar Emiel en een paar andere kabouters begonnen erg boos op de tovenares te worden. 'Ach, geen zorgen, Emiel,' schaterde de tovenares, 'jij hebt ook zo'n kroon, schattebout, ik heb je er eentje laten inslikken.' Emiel werd erg rood ineens, en voelde alle energie uit hem wegstromen. Ineens werd ook hij als door de wind opgenomen, en zweefde richting het slot. Er waren niet veel elven meer in de buurt. Zij waren altijd erg bang voor de tovenares en haar streken. Nu ze dan beide partijen erg bang had gemaakt voor kronen, kon ze in haar eentje rustig op zoek gaan naar de kroon van de heksenkoning.

De Trollenkoning

Eens, en dat is al heel lang geleden, zwierf ik in de bossen en verdwaalde uiteindelijk. Zo diep was ik nog nooit geweest, en ik wist niet meer hoe ik terug moest komen. Midden in de nacht kwam ik in een trollendorp terecht. Er zijn maar weinigen die het geloven. Echt waar, die trollen die leven net zoals wij : ze vissen, jagen, hebben boerderijen, huizen of hutten met keukens. In ieder geval was het een echte trollenbende. Ik had nog nooit zoveel vuil en puinhoop bij elkaar gezien. Ze leefden daar verwaarloosd, droegen bijna geen klederen, maar wel veel riemen als tuigjes, waar ze hun wapens aan vast konden maken.

Ik bleef er staan, maar ineens werd ik gegrepen. Ik werd van mijn fiets afgetrokken en er ontstond een hevig gevecht. Ik had weleens gehoord dat het niet best was om in de handen van trollen te vallen, dus ik deed m'n uiterste best om weer los te komen, maar tevergeefs. Ze brachten mij voor hun koning, en maakten mij tot een gladiator. Ik moest tegen allerlei enge beesten vechten. Dit tot groot vermaak van de trollen. Ik dacht werkelijk dat ik hier nooit vrienden zou krijgen, en ik moest altijd in een donkere kerker slapen. Maar op een nacht kwam er een trollenvrouw bij me. Ze gaf me wat bloemen, heel lief, en ze zei : 'Wacht tot de sterren uit de lucht zullen vallen om jouw kerker te openen.' Ik dacht dat ik dan zou kunnen wachten tot sint juttemes, want dat zou toch nooit gebeuren. Ik snapte niet wat ze bedoelde, maar plotseling liet ze een glimmende sleutel voor mijn neus bungelen. Door de tralies staarde ik ernaar en naar haar. Ze was heel mooi, en het beetje licht dat er was weerkaatste zo prachtig in haar ogen. Ze liet de sleutel bungelen, alsof ze ermee wilde plagen. 'Zie, ik heb de sleutel van de koning gestolen,' sprak ze. 'Ik kon het niet aanzien hoe ze jou mishandelden, maar ik ben er voor jou, nu, dus kom.' Ze drukte uiteindelijk de sleutel in het sleutelgat en maakte de deur open. Maar daar kwamen al een paar trollenwachters aan, en toen deed ze iets heel doms. In paniek drukte ze mij weer terug in de kerker, en ook zij ging naar binnen, en deed de deur weer op slot. De trollenwachters keken naar binnen en moesten lachen. 'Haha, nu hebben we twee vliegen in één klap. Daar zal de koning blij mee zijn. Ze gristen de sleutel weg en liepen verder. De vrouw begon te snikken. 'Het is allemaal mijn schuld,' zei ze. 'Nu zullen we morgen vast opgehangen worden.' En ja hoor, dat was de bedoeling. Want toen de koning het de volgende dag hoorde moesten we voorkomen. Hij was woedend, maar ook gemeen. Hij lachtte gemeen. Hij zei : 'Ophangen die lui.' En zo werden we naar het marktplein geduwd, geboeid, en kregen een strop om onze nek. Nu zou je misschien denken : 'Kerel, hoe ben je daar aan ontsnapt ?' Er kwamen op dat moment net wat vissers terug van een vistocht. Het waren vrienden van de vrouw. Toen ze zagen wat er aan de gang was trommelden ze nog meer van hun vrienden op, en het werd een kleine burgeroorlog, waardoor wij tenslotte gered werden. De koning werd afgezet, en ze wilden dat ik de nieuwe koning zou worden.

Ik kreeg een heleboel vrouwen, omdat dat de gewoonte was. Ook kreeg ik een hele vreemde grote edelsteen waarin een meisje opgesloten zou zitten. Ik vond dat wel wat vreemd dus ik vroeg ernaar. Het bleek een zingende steen te zijn, die eens door een trol was gevonden. Het was een geschenk aan de koning. Ik dacht : Het zal wel goed zijn.

Sinds ik aan de macht was ontstonden er wel vaker relletjes. Trollen waren wat dat aanging erg vechtlustig. Ik wilde hen wel helpen wat liever te zijn naar elkaar, maar sommige trollen waren daar niet al te open voor. Ze wezen me erop dat sommige dingen gewoon moesten gebeuren. Het hoorde zogezegd bij hun algemene ontwikkeling.

Het voel me op hoe weinig protest er tegen mij als koning was. Ze vonden het allemaal best, en het leek allemaal heel natuurlijk te gaan. Toen ik op een dag geen koning meer wilde zijn en verder wilde trekken, kreeg ik van hen een toverpaard en een eenhoorn als dank en afscheid. Terug naar huis wilde ik niet, maar hier blijven ook niet. Dus ik vertrok naar de dieptes van de bossen .... Weer kwam ik hier allemaal trollendorpjes tegen. Ik kon mijn ogen niet geloven. Wat me opviel was dat er hier veel vee gehouden werd, als in fokkerijen, vooral kippen en varkens. Deze beesten werden door de trollen volop geslacht, omdat de trollen hier voornamelijk vlees aten om in leven te blijven. Maar tot mijn grote schrik zag ik ook hoe ze mensen fokten, voor slavenwerk en voor de slacht. En ik wist dat ik eigenlijk op de verkeerde plaats was gekomen. Maar ik had mijn trollenkroon nog steeds. Ik zette hem op, en stapte richting het stadhuis. Al snel merkte ik hoe dom de trollen waren, want ze dachten echt dat ik de koning was, en eigenlijk was ik dat ook nog steeds wel. Ik kwam er ook achter dat ze het allemaal niet zo kwaad bedoelden. Eigenlijk wisten ze niet beter. Ik vroeg me af hoe ze aan al die mensen gekomen waren, maar feit was dat ze die mensen gewoon doorfokten, en ik begon me af te vragen wat ik nu moest doen.

Uiteindelijk ben ik maar gewoon terug gegaan naar de mensenwereld, en heb ik mijn verhaal verteld. Het viel me op hoe weinig men om deze mensen gaf. Mijn verhaal werd gewoon niet geloofd.

Vele jaren later ging ik terug naar de trollenwereld, maar er bleek niets meer van hun wereld over te zijn. Met gemengde gevoelens denk ik aan hen terug.

Einde

Het Rode Zaad

Onder de indiaanse reuzen van de Rotmor-zone in het Angela-gebied was er een onbeschrijfelijke horror. Zij waren reusachtig, voortgekomen vanuit vreemd zaad, rood zaad. Zij hadden een dag aangesteld voor het uitroeien van speciale rassen. Zij waren voortgekomen vanuit wonderzaad, ja, als kabouters waren zij eerst, toen ze nog in de moederschoot waren. Niemand zou denken dat zij ooit zo klein waren geweest, zo klein dat alles wat ze deden betoverend was. En betoverend waren zij nog steeds.

Wanneer zij bewogen hadden zij de bewegingen als ridders, fier en strak. Zij hadden allemaal hun eigen doelen, en leefden de wetten om die doelen te bereiken strak na, als de wetten van een vreemde en wrede natuur. Zij waren hier als goden, alhoewel ze de goden op een bepaalde dag onder de aarde hadden opgesloten in rode kajuiten, als een gevangenis in een schip.

Mikduktus was een van de gevangenbewakers daar. Hij droeg een groen met zwart gewaad gemaakt van bladeren. Nu hadden ze dan een bepaalde dag aangesteld tot een godenmaal, waarin ze deze gefokte goden zouden verschranzen. Als er iets was dat de reuzen haatten dan waren het de goden. Zij hadden alles verwoest, en regeerden met strakke hand. Nu waren de goden dood, of liever : zo goed als dood. Het vlees werd opgediend, en zo waren er driemiljoen vierhonderd achtien gebraden stukken godenvlees in een grote reuzenzaal.

Amerim was een jonge reus die met zijn vader meeging naar het godenmaal. Amerim was een gevoelige jongen, en smeekte de reuzen om in het vervolg iets genadiger te wezen. Wel at hij mee van het vlees, omdat dat van zijn vader moest. Amerim’s vader duldde nooit tegenspraak, en daarom was Amerim altijd erg voorzichtig met hem. Als zijn vader ontplofte dan kon je je maar beter bergen.

Vele reuzen wisten dat. Ze vreesden Amerim’s vader als geen ander. Op een dag ging Amerim met zijn vader het bos in, waar ze een grot vonden vol met rood zaad. Amerim’s vader vertelde dat dit zaad de oorsprong was van alle reuzen. Hier zouden de reuzenvrouwen op een bepaalde leeftijd naartoe gaan, om van dit zaad te eten en zwanger te worden. Amerim wist niet wie zijn moeder was. Dat moest altijd geheim gehouden worden. Als de reuzenvrouwen zwanger geworden waren, dan werden ze gesluierd en kwamen op een reuzenkasteel terecht, waar ze de rest van hun leven moesten wonen samen met andere reuzenvrouwen. Zij moesten in het geheim baren, en dan werden de kinderen gewisseld, en in een grote cirkel geplaatst, waar even later de gesluierde reuzenvrouwen omheen moesten dansen, zodat niemand wist welk kind bij wie hoorde.

Vaders werden dan aangekozen om voor de kinderen te zorgen. Als een kind dan later toch wilde weten wie zijn moeder was, dan moest zo'n kind zelf van het zaad eten, en zou dan in een droom zijn ware moeder zien.

Amerim at, viel in slaap en kreeg een droom van een reuzenvrouw met een grote indianentooi, met een heleboel witte veren met sommige zwarte plukjes, en rode plukjes. 'Lieverd,' sprak een stem, 'ik ben van een andere reuzenstam nu. Ik ben uit het kasteel van de gesluierde reuzenvrouwen gevlucht, en woon nu in het bos. Kom me opzoeken.' Amerim wist direkt dat dit zijn moeder was. Toen hij het zijn vader vertelde werd de reus erg boos. In paniek rende Amerim het bos in, en ging op zoek naar zijn moeder. Hij moest zich veel verbergen, want zijn vader kwam hem achterna. Maar na een tijdje had zijn vader geheel het spoor verloren, en ging weer terug. Niet veel reuzen waagden zo diep in het bos te komen, omdat ze bang waren voor allerlei wilde reuzenstammen.

Na een tijdje kwam Amerim bij een grote boomstronk waarachter de modderreuzen leefden. In deze stam vond hij zijn moeder. Amerim werd direkt liefdevol door hen uitgenodigd. De reuzen waren heel wijs, en helemaal niet zo afschrikwekkend als gezegd werd. Maar Amerim kende natuurlijk de andere stammen van het bos nog niet. De modderreuzen waren heel technisch, en hadden allerlei werktuigen vervaardigd. Amerim keek zijn ogen uit. Er waren zelfs liften waarmee ze tot de hoogste boomtoppen konden komen. Amerim was zo onder de indruk dat hij zijn vader helemaal vergat. Amerim's moeder was een groot opperhoofd van de modderreuzen, maar er waren hier een heleboel opperhoofden. Amerim kwam erg tot rust bij zijn moeder, en zijn moeder liet hem zien in welke grot zij woonde. Ook woonden er reuzen in reusachtige bomen en in hutten. Dieper in het bos leefden de reuzen in wigwams en in tenten. Hutten kwamen daar veel minder voor, alhoewel .... er waren wel hutten gemaakt van beenderen en doodskoppen. Maar Amerim's moeder vertelde hem dat hij niet bang voor andere stammen hoefden te zijn, omdat ze allemaal in vrede met elkaar leefden. De reuzen leefden van de jacht, en niet van de oorlog. De reuzen hier waren veel groter dan de reuzen die Amerim kende. Ook zijn moeder was erg groot, en hij vroeg zich af hoe dat kon. Zijn moeder legde hem uit dat er hier voedsel was waarvan je groter kon worden. De reuzen aten hier allerlei soorten zaad.

Het was duister zaad dat Amerim nog niet kende. Zijn moeder had er potten vol van, en toen zij hem voerde merkte hij direkt dat hij ervan begon te groeien. Toen hij groot genoeg was, enige jaren later nam zijn moeder hem mee naar een hal vol met reuzenspiegels. Deze reuzenspiegels creeerden de wereld zoals hij was. Het waren sprekende reuzenogen. Ze vertelden de jongen wat hij later zou worden. De jongen ging door de reuzenspiegel, en kwam in een andere wereld terecht. Zoveel wezens leefden hier die vele reuzenspiegels droegen. De wezens waren harig en nog wel groter dan de reuzen die hij kende. Zijn moeder was ook meegekomen.

De reuzen hier waren nog wilder dan de reuzen die hij kende. Ze maakten niet alleen jacht op wilde dieren, maar ook op andere reuzen. Misschien waren de reuzen waar de jongen opgroeide daarom altijd zo bang voor het bos. In een grote zaal aten ze van het reuzenmaal : driehonderdmiljoen en vijvenveertigduizend schalen vol reuzenvlees, zoals reuzenogen, reuzentenen, en reuzenvingers.

De jongen vroeg zich af waar hij terecht was gekomen. Zijn moeder zei dat hij deze reuzen diende te onderwerpen. Hij zou hun koning worden. ‘Ik heb het niet zo op die pottenkijkers,’ brulde een harige reus. ‘Ach laat hun,’ zei een grote trage reus, ‘ze doen ons toch geen kwaad ?’

De jongen werd door zijn moeder vastgepakt en gebracht naar een andere zaal. Deze zaal was nog wel groter dan de andere. Hier zagen ze reuzen met vleugels die net van hun jachtpartij terugkwamen, en ook werd hier het vlees geslacht en klaargemaakt. Het was een grote reuzenkeuken, als een jagershuis. ‘Moeder !’ brulde één van de reuzen, en stormde op de reuzenvrouw af. ‘Dit is je broer, zoon,’ zei de moeder van de jongen. De reus was reusachtig, en moeder vertelde dat de jongen net zo groot zou worden. De grote reus nam hen even later mee naar zijn huis waar ze rond de tafel gingen zitten. Even later schoof de grote reus een schaal met reuzenogen en reuzentenen voor de jongen. ‘Maar dat ga ik echt niet eten,’ zei de jongen, ‘jullie met je barbaarse praktijken.’

De reus keek hem begrijpend aan. ‘Zeg,’ zei de reus. ‘Als wij hen niet eten, dan zouden ze ons eten, en zij zijn veel erger dan wij. Zij jagen niet alleen, maar zij martelen ook, als trollen.’ De jongen zei niets, en begon voorzichtig te eten, wetende dat als hij niet groter zou worden, dan zou het rijk in groot gevaar zijn. Hij moest immers hun koning worden, dat had moeder hem zelf gezegd.

‘Waar wonen die reuzen ergens ?’ vroeg de jongen voorzichtig. Moeder wees naar een schilderij met wat bergen dat aan de muur hing. ‘Achter de reuzenbergen wonen zij,’ zei de grote reus. ‘Maar ik heb liever niet dat jij daar komt. Want als ze je te pakken krijgen, dan is het goed mis.’

En toen vertelde moeder een verhaal over de achtergrond van die reuzen. Ze waren vage afstammelingen van trollen. De trollen zelf zouden ver achter hen wonen, en die zouden nog verschrikkelijker zijn. Deze trollen zouden kaarsen hebben van gebroken beenderen en reuzenschedels, en andere lugubere dingen. Deze trollen zouden in de reuzen wonen voor allerlei boosaardige praktijken. Ja, die trollen waren boosaardige, angstaanjagende wezens die nergens voor terugdeinsden.

De jongen luisterde huiverend naar het verhaal van zijn moeder, terwijl zijn broer begon te lachen. 'Ach,' zei de grote reus, 'jongen, ik neem je er wel een keer naartoe. Dan kun je het met je eigen ogen zien.'

Moeder begon te glimlachen. 'Ja, ik kan lugubere verhalen vertellen. En het is nog echt waar ook. Het gebeurt allemaal achter de reuzenbergen, waar reuzen en trollen tezamenleven.'

'Ja, mams, en vertel eens over die druipende kaarsen die ze hebben,' zei de grote reus lachend.

'Oh ja, dat was ik vergeten te vertellen,' zei moeder. 'Die kaarsen druipen van slijm, bloed en snot.'

'Ha, ha, ha,' bulderde de grote reus. 'Wat een boeltje daar, hè, mams ?'

Moeder schudde van het lachen. 'Maar pas maar op dat je niet in hun handen komt, zoon, want dan ben je de klos, echt waar, dan veranderen ze jou ook in zo'n druipende kaars. En dan verkopen ze je op hun markten. Daarom : als je gaat, ga dan met ons. Wij zorgen wel dat jou niets overkomt.'

En zo gebeurde het. De jongen ging met zijn moeder en zijn grote broer op reis. Na een tijdje kwamen ze de eerste trol al tegen. De trol was direkt erg vriendelijk, helemaal niet zoals de jongen had verwacht. In een grote huifkar bracht de trol hen over de bergpaden heen, en het duurde niet al te lang voordat ze achter de reuzenbergen kwamen. De jongen had zich het allemaal heel anders voorgesteld. De trollen waren allemaal erg vriendelijk naar hen.

Maar in hun huisjes stonden inderdaad vreemde kaarsen, en de jongen vroeg zich af waarvan die kaarsen gemaakt waren. 'Oh, van reuzenogen, reuzenharen, reuzentenen en reuzenvingers, enzo,' zei een trol glimlachend alsof hij er niks van meende. Maar de kaarsen hadden een erg vreemde geur.

Later bleek dat de trollen helemaal geen reuzenvlees aten, maar gewoon kippenvlees, varkensvlees en rundergehakt. De jongen snapte het niet meer goed. Wie moest hij nu geloven ? Werd hij niet gewoon overal in de maling genomen ?

De trollen aten veel, terwijl de jongen allang niet meer kon. De trollen boerden veel, en hadden veel sterke verhalen. De jongen glipte er even tussenuit en liep naar wat van die vreemde kaarsen toe. Hij rook er even aan, en rook de indringende geur. Ook ging hij er even met zijn vinger over, en voelde dat er veel stof aanzat. Ook voelde het een beetje slijmerig aan. Het was een kaars met blauw vuur, en daarnaast stond een kaars met rood vuur, en verderop nog één met groen vuur. Aan de muren en aan de plafonds hingen vreemde spiegels. Ze leken wel een beetje op de reuzenspiegels. Maar de jongen kon er niets door zien. Ook liep de jongen even naar de gang, waar vreemde opgezette spinnen en krabben stonden. Ook hier hingen vreemde spiegels aan de muur en aan de plafonds. Ze lagen zelfs op de vloer, verweven in een vreemd tapijt. De vreemde spiegels leken een beetje op de buiken van spinnen. De jongen kon er niets door zien.

De huizen van de trollen waren door gangen aan elkaar verbonden, en al snel kwam hij in een ander huis. Hier waren de trollen ook erg vriendelijk, en ze nodigden hem uit om wat pudding met hen te nemen. Maar de jongen zat al helemaal vol.

Het trollentoilet was een vreemde bedoening met kettingen en leer, maar dingen leken daar ook van harige dierenhuiden gemaakt te zijn. Boven was er een badkamer waar dezelfde soort dingen stonden, en weer die druiperige kaarsen.

Op het zolder hoorde hij iemand zingen, en ging er over de trap naartoe. Maar het bleek een grammofoonspeler te zijn. Niemand was verder in de buurt. Toen hij door het raam keek zag hij rook. In de verte was een veldje tussen wat bomen waar trollen een barbecue hielden.

De volgende dag trokken de jongen, zijn moeder en zijn broer verder met de huifkar. Verderop bleek alles veel luguberder te zijn, alhoewel de trollen nog steeds erg vriendelijk waren. Hier woonden ze in grotten, in hutten, en in tenten. De trollen hier waren veel langer en droegen vaak riemen met doodskoppen erop en daaronder droegen ze harige broeken. Ook droegen ze kettingen met tanden eraan. Deze trollen bleken wel echt reuzen te eten, want hier zag de jongen gebraden reuzenharten, gebraden reuzenlever, en een heleboel andere reuzenorganen, meestal liggende tussen een hoop reuzenogen, reuzentenen, reuzenvingers en reuzenbotten.

Weer zag hij vreemde kaarsen die bijna een soort van aders hadden met vreemde knopen erin, en wat ervan afdroop leek veel op bloed, snot en slijm.

Sommige kaarsen leken geheel van reuzentenen gemaakt te zijn, anderen van reuzenogen, en weer anderen van reuzenvingers. Verderop kwamen ze in hallen die geheel van reuzenogen waren gemaakt, en daarna in hallen die geheel van reuzenvingers waren gemaakt. Vandaaruit kwamen ze in de hallen van reuzentenen, die over leken te lopen in hallen van trollentenen. Hier zagen ze kooien met trollenkinderen door de lucht gaan. De kinderen leken op reuzenkinderen, maar ze waren veel dunner en hadden een andere huidskleur, bijna als zand. De kooien zaten vast aan touwen en werden in de lucht voortgetrokken.

Einde

Jetje's Moeder

Jetje's moeder was een heks. En niet zomaar een heks. Ze at mensenvlees. Jetje's moeder kwam nooit beneden. Ze woonde op zolder. Jetje durfde hier nooit te komen. Haar vader zei altijd : 'Kom daar maar niet.' Het stonk er ook verschrikkelijk. Op een dag kwam er een meneer aan de deur. Jetje's vader moest een hoge rekening betalen, maar hij had er het geld niet voor. 'Ja, mijn vrouw heeft al het geld,' zei Jetje's vader tegen de meneer. 'Maar ziet u, zij is een heks en woont op de grote zolder. Ze eet mensenvlees, dus ik kan daar maar beter niet komen.'

'Ja, maar ik moet dat geld toch hebben,' zei de meneer.

Midden in de nacht ging Jetje's vader naar de grote zolder. 'Ik heb wat geld nodig,' zei Jetje's vader tegen de heks.

'Nee, dat krijg je niet,' zei de heks. 'Breng me eerst maar wat jongetjes, dikke jongetjes, vetgemest, want ik heb honger.'

'Nou, je kunt toch gewoon uit de koelkast eten,' zei vader.

'Nee, ik wil mensenvlees,' zei de heks.

'Maar dat kan echt niet hoor,' zei vader. 'En ik moet het geld nu hebben, anders komt morgen die meneer terug, en dan zwaait er wat.'

'Laat die meneer maar hier komen,' zei de heks.

‘Goed,’ zei Jetje’s vader, ‘als je dat zo wil. Dan kun jij het aan hem uitleggen.’

En zo gebeurde het. Jetje’s vader stuurde de meneer de volgende dag naar het zolder. Na een uur was de man nog niet beneden, en Jetje’s vader ging weer naar het zolder om te kijken hoe het was afgelopen. De heks had de meneer in een kooi opgesloten. Oh, oh, dat ging helemaal niet goed. De meneer was woest.

‘Zeg, laat die meneer eens even los,’ zei Jetje’s vader. Maar de heks wilde dat niet. ‘En ga nu maar weg, anders stop ik jou ook in een hok,’ zei de heks. Toen is Jetje’s vader maar naar beneden gegaan, en wilde er nu echt nooit meer komen.

Maar op een mooie zonnige dag toen Jetje eens iets van het zolder moest halen kwam ze erachter dat haar moeder er niet meer woonde. Alle spullen waren weg. Er lag een briefje op de grond, waarop stond geschreven : ‘Lieve Jetje, ik woon nu in het bos. Groeten van de heks. Kom je me eens opzoeken ?’ Nou, dat durfde Jetje natuurlijk niet, maar op een dag besloot ze er toch met een paar vriendjes en vriendinnetjes naartoe te gaan. De heks woonde nu heel diep in het bos, en daarvoor moesten ze een eind fietsen. Dat ging niet zo snel, want Kareltje was nogal dik, en kwam maar moeilijk vooruit. ‘Kareltje, mijn moeder is nogal gevaarlijk,’ zei Jetje. ‘Ze eet mensenvlees.’ Maar Kareltje moest erom lachen, en zei met zijn mond vol dat hij dat niet geloofde.

Toen ze bij het huisje van Jetje’s moeder aankwamen was het een keurige boel. Jetje’s moeder kwam naar buiten met de krulspelden in, en ze leek op een echte dame. ‘Zo, mams, verwacht je visite ? De koningin ofzo ?’ vroeg Jetje.

‘Nou, jullie zouden toch komen ?’ zei Jetje’s moeder. Jetje knikte. ‘Mams, dit zijn Kareltje, Benno, en nog wat vriendinnetjes. Jetje’s moeder gaf alleen Kareltje en Benno een hand. Benno was aan het eten zoals altijd. Hij had altijd zijn mond vol, net als Kareltje, maar hij was nog niet zo dik als Kareltje.

‘Je bent niet zo dik als Kareltje,’ zei Jetje’s moeder tegen Benno. ‘Maar dat komt nog wel.’

‘Waarom dan, mevrouw ?’ vroeg Benno.

‘Oh, als je zoveel eet,’ zei Jetje’s moeder, ‘dan zal dat vast wel lukken.’ Kareltje en Benno keken elkaar even vreemd aan. Wat een rare moeder had Jetje dat ze zulke dingen zei. Maar al gauw viel Jetje’s moeder goed bij Kareltje en Benno in de smaak, want in de woonkamer stonden de overheerlijkste taartjes en toetjes. ‘Zo, ik dacht laat ik jullie eens goed verwennen,’ zei Jetje’s moeder. ‘Jullie moeten er nog van groeien.’ Dat lieten Kareltje en Benno zich geen tweede keer zeggen. Snel holden ze op de tafel af, en begonnen te eten dat het een lieve lust was. Maar de meisjes aten niks. ‘Zeg, waarom eten jullie niet ?’ vroeg Jetje’s moeder. ‘Ik heb het speciaal voor jullie gemaakt.’

‘Oh, ik had thuis al genoeg gegeten,’ zei Lizzie.

‘Ja, en ik heb niet zo’n honger,’ zei Daphne.

‘En jij dan, Jetje ?’ vroeg Jetje’s moeder.

‘Oh, ik heb ook niet zo’n zin. Ik ben een beetje misselijk,’ zei Jetje.

‘Dat kan,’ zei Jetje’s moeder, ‘maar ik heb anders wel zin hoor. Dan eet ik wel een extra taartje voor jullie.’

‘Lekker spul, moeder van Jetje,’ zei Benno.

‘Ja,’ zei Kareltje met zijn mond vol. ‘Mogen we nog eens komen ?’

‘Jullie mogen zo vaak komen als jullie maar willen,’ zei Jetje’s moeder. ‘Jullie mogen wel logeren, want het is toch weekend.’

‘Graag mevrouw,’ zei Benno. Kareltje knikte instemmend. De meisjes lieten zich pas na lang praten overhalen, maar Jetje wilde absoluut niet blijven. Jetje was bang dat haar moeder nog steeds was zoals vroeger. Opeens keerde ze zich om, rende naar buiten naar haar fiets, en reed weg.

Toen ze thuiskwam vertelde ze alles aan haar vader. ‘Ach,’ zei haar vader. ‘Misschien is ze nu wel veranderd. Ze heeft een nieuw huis, en ze gedraagt zich nu als een echte dame. Zullen we samen eens bij haar op bezoek gaan ? Maar Jetje wilde er niet meer komen. Toch begon ze zich een beetje bezorgd te maken over haar vriendjes en vriendinnetjes, maar even later dacht ze dat ze zich aanstelde.

Na het weekend kwamen de kinderen vrolijk terug. ‘Je hebt een geweldige moeder, Jetje,’ zei Kareltje. Ook Benno en de meisjes knikten volop. ‘Zie je nou wel,’ zei Jetje’s vader. ‘Er is niets aan de hand. Misschien is ze erg veranderd.’

‘Dus ze is nu geen heks meer ?’ vroeg Jetje.

‘Ik denk het niet,’ zei vader. Maar toen schrok Jetje. Ze keek naar Kareltje, en zag hoe er een schroefje uit zijn broekspijp viel. Jetje raakte het op, en keek Kareltje in de ogen. Kareltje bewoog niet meer. En toen zag Jetje ook een schroefje op zijn hoofd zitten. Dit was Kareltje helemaal niet, maar een robot. Ook zag ze die schroefjes op de andere kinderen zitten, en toen schrok vader ook. ‘Dat is niet pluis, Jetje,’ zei vader. ‘We moeten direkt naar het huisje toe.’

‘Nee,’ krijste Jetje. ‘Dan sluit ze ons ook op. Dat heeft ze al eens eerder gedaan met die meneer, weet je wel ?’

Vader knikte. Toen zijn ze samen maar gaan afwassen. ‘We moeten echt wat doen, Jetje,’ zei vader.

‘Ja, maar wat dan ?’ vroeg Jetje.

‘Ik weet het niet,’ zei vader. ‘Laten we er eerst maar een nachtje over slapen.

Maar de volgende dag waren vader en Jetje het alweer vergeten. Totdat Jetje op een dag weer op de zolder kwam en ontdekte dat haar moeder er weer woonde. Ook stonden er kooien met de meneer van de rekening, Kareltje, Benno, en haar twee vriendinnetjes Lizzie en Daphne. Ze waren allemaal verschrikkelijk dik geworden. ‘Mams, wat heb je met ze gedaan ?’ vroeg Jetje, ‘en waarom woon je nu weer hier ?’

Maar toen schrok Jetje. Haar moeder was gaan roesten, en dat was geen goed teken. Dat betekende namelijk dat haar moeder ook een robot was. Helemaal in paniek rende ze naar beneden. Direkt vertelde ze het aan haar vader. ‘Oh ja,’ zei Jetje’s vader, ‘dat is waar ook. Dat was ik helemaal vergeten. Ik heb haar zelf eens gemaakt. Ik had haar roestvrij moeten maken, en verder had ik nog wat foutjes gemaakt.’

‘Nou, ik vind het anders oerdom,’ zei Jetje. ‘Wie maakt er nou zo’n gevaarlijke heks als mijn moeder ?’

‘Ach,’ zei vader, ‘stel je niet zo aan. Trouwens, die meneer was ook maar een robot hoor, en ook Kareltje, Benno, Lizzie en Daphne. Zelfs de juffrouw is een robot. Ik heb ze allemaal eens gemaakt.’

‘Nou, je hebt me er behoorlijk bang mee gemaakt,’ zei Jetje. Maar toen ontdekte ze ineens iets anders. Wat zat daar bij het oor van haar vader ? Dat was een heel klein schroefje. Toen ze er aan draaide stopte haar vader ineens met bewegen en keek strak voor zich uit. ‘Vader ?’ zei Jetje. ‘Ach nee, hè ? Is mijn vader dan ook een robot ?’ In paniek rende Jetje naar het huis van de juffrouw. De juffrouw was in de woonkamer aan het breien. Direkt begon Jetje haar te onderzoeken. ‘Ach kind, wat doe je allemaal toch ?’ vroeg de juffrouw.

‘Even kijken of mijn vader gelijk heeft,’ zei Jetje. En ja hoor, even later vond ze wat schroefjes. Nu kon ze niemand meer vertrouwen. Huilend slenterde ze naar huis terug. Ze durfde die nacht bijna niet te slapen. Ze was helemaal alleen in zo’n groot huis met robotten. De volgende dag werd er aangebeld. Het was een meneer met een snor en een hoed op. De meneer stak zijn hand uit naar Jetje en zei : ‘Hallo, ik ben jouw vader. Je hebt het eindelijk ontdekt over de robotten ? Je mamma is ook echt heel blij. Ga je met ons mee ?’

‘Ja, maar wie bent u ?’ vroeg Jetje. ‘Wie heeft dan al die robotten gemaakt ?’

‘Ach, die heb ik zelf ooit eens gemaakt. Heel dom van me. Ik dacht dan had je wat speelkameraadjes, want je mamma en ik waren vaak weg. Maar ze gingen met je op de loop,’ zei de meneer. Jetje stapte even later in de mooie grote auto, en al gauw kwamen ze aan bij een prachtig groot huis. Die dag ontmoette Jetje voor het eerst haar moeder, en vader en moeder stroopten beiden hun mouwen op om te laten zien dat ze echt geen robotten waren.

Het Slagroom

Geheim

Hoofdstuk 1.

Fonteinenland was omringd door een rivier van slagroom. Koning Fontein zat op zijn troon, en prins Fontein stond naast hem. Koningin Fontein was in de keuken, waar er gewerkt werd aan een feestmaaltijd, want er waren belangrijke gasten. De eetzaal stond al vol met stoeltjes van slagroom-leer. Ook stonden er standbeelden gemaakt van chocolade en drop. In de kelders van de keuken waren geleerden en koks bezig een draak te veranderen in slagroom. Zo ging dat vaak. Prins Fontein nam vaak draken mee als hij terugkwam van een reis, en dit keer had hij een hele grote meegenomen.

In Fonteinenland was er een wet dat als iemand herhaaldelijk moeilijkheden en overlast veroorzaakte, zoals boeven, draken en ander gespuis, en hun leven niet wilden verbeteren, dan liepen ze de kans om in slagroom veranderd te worden. Zo rekende Fonteinenland af met vervelende lieden. Slagroom werd ook vaak als oorlogswapen gebruikt, en oorlogen waren er veel. Ook waren er veel verschillende soorten slagroom. Prins Fontein bewaakte een heel groot receptenboek daarvoor.

'Plop, plop, plop,' één voor één werden er kersen in de slagroom gegooid. Een heerlijke geur verspreidde zich door Fonteinenland, maar op de muren renden de soldaten van de koning heen en weer. Ze hadden iets gezien. Er kwam een schip naar het land toe over de slagroom-rivier. Koning Fontein werd ingelicht, en ook prins Fontein, maar de koning begon te bulderen van het lachen. Hij zag de paniek op de gezichten van zijn soldaten. En ze zweetten kersensap. 'Nee, welnee,' zei de koning. 'Dat wordt geen oorlog. Dat schip, en dat zal ik je vertellen, heeft helemaal niets te maken met oorlog. Ik heb mijn gouden vogel gezonden naar het buurland, om ze een schip met spruitjes te laten zenden voor het grote diner. 'Plop,' daar vloog een spruitje door de lucht. En daar ging er nog één. Een woeste man stond voor de koning, met spruitjes in zijn haren. Zijn haren waren bijna groen, en ook zijn kleren waren bijna groen van de spruitjes. 'Dag Harro,' zei de koning. 'Fijn je weer eens te zien.'

'Ik heb ook tomaten voor u meegenomen, koning,' zei Harro.

'Heel goed, mijn jongen,' zei koning Fontein. 'Ik wist dat ik op je kon rekenen.' Na een tijdje stond de hele keuken propvol met dozen met tomaten en spruitjes. Toen de feestmaaltijd klaar was was het inmiddels vol in de eetzaal. Ook Harro was uitgenodigd. Prins Fontein deed het woord : 'Wij hopen dat het eten u overheerlijk zal smaken.' Iedereen applaudiseerde. De feestmaaltijd zag er geweldig uit.

Koningin Fontein zat naast de koning. Zij had ook meegewerkt. Onder de tafel hield zij de hand vast van koning Fontein. 'Dat heb je goed gedaan, schat,' fluisterde koning Fontein haar liefdevol toe.

De belangrijke gasten waren uit een ver land gekomen. Ze hadden hun prinses meegenomen, prinses Zoete Droom. Ze had een kroon met een half maantje erop, helemaal van goud, en ze had een schitterend gewaad, wit met allerlei kleine pareltjes en steentjes. Maar haar koninkrijk leed onder de terreur van een verschrikkelijke draak, en daarom was ze hier, om hulp en advies te vragen. Snikkend vertelde de prinses haar verhaal. De draak was een verschrikkelijk monster die ervoor zorgde dat altijd alle woorden werden omgedraaid zodat iedereen de verschrikkelijkste ruzie met elkaar kreeg. 'Lolak,' heette hij.

Plotseling werd er op de deur van de eetzaal geklopt. Een sterke wind kwam naar binnen en plotseling viel iedereen tegen de vlakte. Een ijselijk gelach steeg op. Het was Lolak. Iedereen had het bewustzijn verloren, behalve prins Fontein, want die was direct onder de tafel gedoken toen de sterke wind binnenkwam. Snel trok hij zijn zwaard, en door de deuropening zag hij de nek van de draak. Snel wierp hij zijn zwaard in de nek van het beest, maar plotseling werd de prins door een klauw gegrepen. Ook de prins verloor zijn bewustzijn, en waakte pas veel later op. Hij keek om zich heen. Hij was in een kerker.

Na een tijdje gleed de draak naar binnen en veranderde in een vrouw. 'Zo prins,' zei de vrouw met een hekserige stem. 'En wie kan je nu redden hier ?'

De prins smeekte haar hem vrij te zetten, en hij wilde alles wel voor haar doen. 'Goed,' zei de vrouw, 'ik zal je vrijzetten, maar op voorwaarde dat je de zeeen van slagroom diep onder de aarde bezoekt en het halssieraad van draak Holgst steelt om het aan mij te brengen.'

De prins wist dat hij geen andere keus had. Aan een hele lange keten liet ze hem naar beneden gaan over een trappetje. Na een lange tijd over veel meer trappetjes kwam prins Fontein eindelijk bij de slagroom zeeen aan. De zeeen schuimden verschrikkelijk. Hij vroeg zich af waarom de heks dat halssieraad wilde hebben. Er waren hier verschillende zeeen die allemaal door elkaar heenzweefden. De prins had nog nooit zoveel slagroom gezien. Hier moest dan ergens draak Holgst wonen. De prins stapte in één van de zeeen en begon te zwemmen. Zijn mond werd direct erg zoet. In de verte zag hij iets glinsteren, en hij hoorde gebrul als van vuur. Een zwarte gestalte verscheen onder hem, en hij werd in de lucht geslingerd, om zo in een andere slagroomzee terecht te komen. De zee was kolkend, en de golven werden steeds woester. Weer zag hij iets glinsteren. Het deed zelfs pijn aan zijn ogen. 'Wie heeft jou gezegd dichterbij te komen,' werd er geroepen.

'De heks heeft je halssieraad nodig,' riep de prins. Draak Holgst begon te bulderen van het lachen. 'Dat krijgt ze niet,' riep hij.

'Maar dan kan ik daar nooit meer weg,' riep prins Fontein, 'want ik zit aan haar keten.'

'Vaarwel,' sprak de draak, en zwom weg. De zee werd hoe langer hoe woester, en de keten begon strak te trekken, dus de prins kon niet verder zwemmen. Teleurgesteld zwom de prins terug. Bij de heks aangekomen vertelde hij het verhaal. 'Okay,' zei de heks, 'dan zal ik je keten langer maken, maar waag het niet om zonder het halssieraad terug te komen.' En weer ging de prins op pad, ditmaal met een langere keten. Nog dieper ging hij de slagroomzeeen in nu. Maar de draak was in geen velden of wegen te bekennen. Totdat de prins op een eiland aankwam. Er waren hier een heleboel zeemeerminnen met zilveren sieraden in hun haar en op andere plaatsen. Ook droegen ze sleutels. Het was alsof er slagroom in zijn hoofd werd gespoten en in zijn hele lichaam. In de verte zag hij een vulkaan, en hij zag er iets glinsteren. Maar toen hij richting de vulkaan begon te lopen werd er weer geroepen : 'Wie heeft jou gezegd dichterbij te komen.'

De prins besloot te wachten totdat het nacht was. Midden in de nacht beklom hij de vulkaan. Alles was rustig nu. Een enorm grote zwarte draak lag te slapen in de krater, met het halssieraad. Maar toen hij bij het halssieraad aankwam zat daar een slot op met een heleboel sleutelgaten. Teleurgesteld liep hij terug en kwam de zeemeerminnen met de sleutels weer tegen. 'Waar zijn die sleutels van ?' vroeg de prins.

'Van het slot van de draak,' zeiden de zeemeerminnen. 'Hij is onder onze betovering, en als hij los zou komen dan zou alles boven de grond door hem verwoest worden.'

Daar schrok de prins wel even van, en hij was daarom blij dat hij het slot niet had kunnen openen. Maar hij vroeg zich af hoe hij dan ooit uit de macht van Lolak kon komen. Maar opeens had hij een idee. Op het paleis van zijn vader zou de draak in de kelders onder de keuken in slagroom veranderd kunnen worden, tenminste als het paleis nog zou bestaan, na de aanval van Lolak.

De zeemeerminnen wisten wel hoe ze de slagroomrivier konden bereiken via de slagroom-zeeen, om te kijken hoe het met Fonteinenland gesteld was, maar ze kwamen terug met slecht nieuws. Het hele land was verwoest en lag in as. Maar op hetzelfde moment werd er aan de keten getrokken. De heks wilde dus waarschijnlijk dat hij terug zou komen. Toen de prins terugkwam zonder het halssieraad was de heks woest. Maar de prins was ook woest op de heks omdat Fonteinenland verwoest was. 'Ik weet het wel, heks,' zei de prins. 'Alles wat je wil is dat ik het halssieraad van draak Holgst losmaak, zodat hij bevrijd wordt van de zeemeerminnen-betovering, en zodat hij alles boven de grond kan vernietigen.'

'Genoeg !' schreeuwde de heks.

'En wat heb je met prinses Zoete Droom gedaan, en met mijn vader en moeder, en met alle anderen ?' vroeg de prins. Maar de heks zei niets. Na een tijdje viel de heks in slaap, en de prins ging terug naar de zeemeerminnen. 'Is er geen manier om mijn keten los te maken ?' vroeg de prins aan de zeemeerminnen. 'Nee,' zeiden de zeemeerminnen. 'Niemand kan tegen haar krachten op.'

'Wat moeten we dan doen ?' vroeg de prins.

'Als je draak Holgst in slagroom kunt veranderen, dan is het halssieraad niet meer nodig,' zeiden de zeemeerminnen.

'Ja, maar dat gebeurde in de kelders van de keuken,' zei prins Fontein, 'en daar kwamen altijd heel veel geleerden en koks aan te pas.' En weer bulderde de draak. 'Oh, hij is wakker,' zeiden de zeemeerminnen. 'Wat we kunnen doen is je een ander halssieraad meegeven wat op het halssieraad van de draak lijkt.' De prins stemde in, en even later kwam hij met een ander halssieraad bij de heks. De heks nam het sieraad, en legde het in een kistje. 'Nu is Holgst vrij om te doen en te laten wat hij wil. Het sieraad is veilig bij mij. Ik zal het zelfs kunnen dragen, want ik ben immuun voor de betoveringen van de zeemeerminnen,' krijste ze. Snel maakte ze de keten van de prins los. 'Spoedig zal alles boven de grond vernietigd zijn,' lachte ze. De prins ging snel terug naar de slagroomzeeen, anders zou de heks zich kunnen bedenken. De zeemeerminnen namen hem mee naar hun rijk, in de dieptes van de slagroomzeeen. De prins vroeg zich af of zijn vader en moeder nog leefden, en prinses Zoete Droom en alle anderen.

'In de zee liggen alle schatten,' zeiden de zeemeerminnen. 'Alles wat je verloren hebt kun je daar terugvinden. De zee is bewustzijn.' De prins was erg gerustgesteld dat te horen. 'De zee is een grotere realiteit dan al de anderen,' zeiden de zeemeerminnen. Ze brachten hem naar een spiegel waar hij Fonteinenland door kon zien, prachtiger dan ooit. 'Het moet nog ergens in de zee zijn,' zeiden de zeemeerminnen. 'Er is niets verloren. Zwem door de spiegel.' Dat liet de prins zich geen twee keer zeggen. Hij zwom door het portaal van de spiegel, maar werd direkt tegengehouden door een duistere gestalte. 'Ben je mij soms vergeten ?' zei de gestalte. 'Mij, de grote Lolak. Je komt er niet zomaar langs. Ik heers over alle weerspiegelingen, en jij bent maar een weerspiegeling. Het echte zul je nooit vinden.' De prins trok zijn zwaard, maar dat begon direkt te smelten. 'Vecht er maar voor,' sprak de heks schaterlachend, 'maar het is toch allemaal nutteloos.' Plotseling werd de spiegel ingeslagen, en duisternis vulde de zee. De zeemeerminnen vluchtten weg, maar ze wisten niet waartoe. De prins was bewusteloos geraakt door de klap, en één van de zeemeerminnen trok hem met haar mee. Ze bracht hem naar een eiland waar hij even later ontwaakte. 'Wij proberen onze fantasieen altijd tot leven te brengen, maar Lolak staat er altijd tussen,' sprak ze.

'Nu heeft ze ook nog jullie rijk vernietigd,' zei de prins.

'Nee,' zei de zeemeermin, en toonde hem haar halssieraad. 'Ik draag het bewustzijn van de zee, hoger dan ieder ander bewustzijn. Ik ben de zeemeerminnen-koningin. Door dit halssieraad heb ik toegang tot alles wat anderen verloren hebben.' Ze begon wat aan de stenen van het halssieraad te draaien. In de verte zag hij Fonteinenland, en ook zag hij het rijk van de zeemeerminnen, en het land van prinses Zoete Droom. Het zag er allemaal schitterend uit, maar het leken wel luchtweerspiegelingen. 'Je bewustzijn moet sterker worden, lieve prins,' zei de zeemeerminnen-koningin.

De zeemeerminnen-koningin leidde hem naar Fonteinenland, wat nog steeds bestond in haar halssieraad. Toen draak Holgst sliep brachten ze hem naar de kelders van de keuken, waar hij tot slagroom gemaakt kon worden. 'Hoe krijgen we Lolak in de kelders van de keuken ?' vroeg de prins even later aan de zeemeerminnen-koningin. 'Door bewustzijn,' sprak ze. 'Hoe hoger je bewustzijn is, hoe minder er verloren is, en hoe minder macht Lolak heeft.'

De zeemeerminnen-koningin deed het halssieraad van de draak nu om de nek van prins Fontein, en slagroom-zeeen begonnen zich om hem heen te vormen, prachtiger dan ooit tevoren. De prins kon weer een beetje ademhalen. Ook zag hij daar prinses Zoete Droom zwemmen. De prinses was blij om hem te zien. 'Het is beter nu in ons land,' zei de prinses. De draak verliest meer en meer grip.

'Gelukkig maar,' zei de prins.

Hoofdstuk 2.

Na dit avontuur zaten de koning en de koningin van Fonteinenland weer op hun troon alsof er nooit wat was gebeurd. Prins Fontein was verliefd op prinses Zoete Droom, en samen zouden ze meehelpen het land te regeren. Maar toen andere draken hoorden wat er met draak Holgst en draak Lolak was gebeurd begonnen ze een grote drakenoorlog tegen Fonteinenland. En ditmaal kwamen er veel grotere draken opdagen, en het zeemeerminnen-sieraad kon niets beginnen. Prins Fontein was ten einde raad. Koning Fontein zei dat de enige oplossing zou zijn naar de slagroom-tovenaar te gaan, die diep in het bos woonde, en die Fonteinenland zou hebben gemaakt. Prins Fontein zocht hem op, na een lange reis door het bos. De slagroom-tovenaar woonde in een groot kasteel. Hij werd ook wel tovenaar Lunera genoemd. Het hart van de prins begon sneller te bonzen. Er hingen hier grote maskers van allerlei dieren, apen, beren, leeuwen, tijgers en noem maar op, ook van vele onbekende monsters. Tovenaar Lunera zat achter zijn bureau. Hij was een boek aan het lezen. 'Wie ben jij,' zei hij zonder op te kijken.

Prins Fontein begon direkt zijn verhaal te vertellen. 'Draken zei je ?' vroeg de tovenaar. 'Ach jongen, het is zo'n koud kunstje om zelfs de grootste draken in slagroom te veranderen, zonder ze eerste naar keukenkelders te brengen, zonder al dat gedoe met geleerden en koks. Luister.' De tovenaar liet hem een boek zien. Het boek heette : 'Het Geheim van de Gulden Draak.'

'Hier staat het,' zei de tovenaar. 'Je moet op zoek gaan naar deze gulden draak, die een boom met bijzondere vruchten bewaakt. Als je deze vruchten plukt en naar een draak gooit, dan veranderen ze direkt in slagroom. Daarom wordt deze boom zo streng door de gulden draak bewaakt. Er bestaat maar één zo'n boom, en de draken zijn bang dat iemand die boom ooit vindt.'

'Maar waar kan ik die boom vinden dan ?' vroeg prins Fontein.

De tovenaar gaf hem een sleutel en zei : 'Ga naar de heksentuin van Gradore, open het hek, en vraag aan Gradore waar de gulden draak is.'

De prins ging direkt op pad. De heksentuin was achter het bos, een soort paradijs. Daar aangekomen opende hij het hoge gouden hek met een sleutel. 'Wat kom je doen,' krijste een oude vrouw.

'Ik kom voor de gulden draak, waar is hij ?' vroeg de prins.

'Kom maar mee,' zei Gradore. 'Hij leeft in het ravijn. Er zijn wel meerdere dommeriken geweest die hem hebben geprobeerd te temmen, maar tevergeefs. Niemand is ooit teruggekeerd van dit ravijn.' Er was een trappetje langs de ravijn waarmee je naar beneden kon. In de verte was de boom te zien met glinsterende vruchten, en een gouden draak die ervoor lag, en die op een slang leek. Snel ging de prins naar beneden. Dit zou een gevaarlijk spelletje worden. De draak zag hem bijna direkt en snelde op hem af. De prins trok zijn zwaard. De draak liet zijn tanden zien die als een sneldraaiende malen waren. De prins kon net op tijd opzij springen en verborg zich achter de trap. Langzaam liet hij zich naar beneden glijden. Na een tijdje stond hij op de bodem van het ravijn. Langzaam liep hij naar de boom toe. De draak was in geen velden of wegen te bekennen. Maar plotseling kwam de draak van achter de boom tevoorschijn. De draak was ziedend, en weer verstopte de prins zich achter de trap. Ditmaal kwam er vuur uit de bek van de draak, en het ging dwars door de trap heen, waardoor de prins zijn schild moest trekken. Het vuur ging maar door en door, en de prins begon het wel heel erg heet te krijgen. Van boven kon de prins de tovenaar zien komen, die een gouden vogel op de boom afstuurde. Maar de draak begon meerdere koppen te krijgen die als lange slangen werden, de boom vurig bewakende. 'Het heeft allemaal geen zin,' riep Gradore vanaf de top van het ravijn. De gouden vogel was nu erg dichtbij de boom gekomen, maar één van de koppen had hem bijna te pakken. De prins trok zijn boog, en een pijl, en mikte vlak op een takje wat een vrucht vasthield. Het takje vloog los, en de vrucht viel boven op één van de koppen van de draak, die direkt in slagroom begon te veranderen. Ook de rest van de draak begon al snel te smelten. 'Goed werk,' riep de tovenaar.

Ze namen nu zoveel mogelijk vruchten mee die ze bij de tovenaar in de tuin plantten, en waar zo veel meer van zulke bomen konden groeien, en een krachtige tegenaanval begon nu tegen de draken. Door de vruchten begonnen ze al snel in slagroom te veranderen. De vruchten werden in kanonnen gestopt, of op pijlen gestoken. Ook werden de vruchten gewoon gegooid.

Als herdenking aan de overwinning over de draken werden er elk jaar voedsel-gevechten georganiseerd. Iedereen mocht elkaar dan bekogelen met voedsel, en aan het einde van de dag kwamen er grote wasmachines met slagroom waarin iedereen gewassen moest worden. Dit was altijd een dol festijn en het hoogtepunt van het jaar.

Op een dag kwam er een ander prinsesje van een ander ver land op bezoek. Het was prinses Zonnetraantje. Ze had een kroontje met een zonnetje er bovenop, en ze was een vriendinnetje van prinses Zoete Droom. Prinses Zonnetraantje kon heel lekker zoet koken, en vertoonde al snel haar kunsten in de keuken. Ze bracht het overheerlijkste gebak naar de eetzaal, gevuld met warme appel en peer-vruchten.

Het Zeepje

Sanne en Frits kwamen dichterbij de indiaanse amazone-koningin die ze hadden gevonden in het bos. De koningin glimlachte. 'Zo, en wie zijn jullie,' vroeg ze. Het was een aardige vrouw.

'Nu dan,' zei ze, 'het geheim van de dorga-indianen ligt diep verborgen in de grond.' Ze hief een zeepje in de lucht. 'Ik wil dat jullie dit zeepje eten alvorens in de afgrond the kunnen gaan.

'Geen sprake van,' zei een stem. Een man met een snor stond achter de kinderen ineens. Het was de vader van de kinderen. De koningin glimlachte. 'Maar het is gemaakt van chocolade,' zei de koninging, 'witte creme-achtige chocolade.'

'Dat kan wel waar wezen,' zei de man nors. 'Maar de kinderen gaan nu met mij mee naar huis.'

'Oh, dacht je dat,' sprak de koningin. 'Ik ben ook de koningin hier, dus dit alles valt onder mijn beslissing.'

'Ja, en ik ben de keizer van Achtoepikum, en ik gebied dat mijn kinderen nu met mij meegaan,' sprak de man. De koningin begon te gniffelen. 'U bent nogal een interessante man,' sprak de koningin.

'Ach toe, papa,' zei Frits. 'Mag ze met ons mee naar huis.'

'Vooruit dan maar,' zei vader.

Thuis was alles een beetje treurig, omdat de moeder van de kinderen was overleden. Daarom was de indiaanse amazone-koningin een ware aanwinst. Ze was erg lief en zorgzaam voor de kinderen. Diep in de nacht ging Frits naar de kamer waar de koningin sliep, gluurde in haar tas en haalde het zeepje eruit. Dat had hij niet vergeten. Hij beet er een stukje uit, en plotseling schoof de grond open, en hij viel in een diepe kuil van licht. Hij voelde een hand op zijn schouder en iemand zette hem op een stoeltje. 'Wie zijn jullie ?' vroeg Frits.

'Gaat je niks aan,' zei een stem. Weer nam Frits een hapje van het zeepje, en weer schoof de grond open en met stoel en al gleed Frits in de diepte. Maar daar stond hij ineens weer in de kamer van de koningin. 'Niet meer doen,' zei hij tegen zichzelf. Hij stopte het zeepje weer terug in de tas, en ging terug naar zijn eigen kamer.

De volgende ochtend zaten ze allemaal aan het ontbijt. De koningin was zo mooi dat Frits er bang van werd. 'Wie heeft er van het zeepje gegeten ?' sprak de koningin. Frits stak aarzelend zijn hand op.

'Nou keurig, jongen,' zei de koningin, 'maar je had het hele zeepje moeten opeten, anders kom je in ... anders kom je in ... anders kom je in ehm .... laat maar.'

'Ik durf het niet,' zei Frits.

'Sanna, durf jij het ?' vroeg de koningin. Sanne schudde haar hoofd.

'Geef mij dat zeepje maar,' zei vader. De koningin overhandigde het zeepje. 'Weet je het zeker ?' vroeg de koningin. Vader knikte. Maar toen hij van het zeepje begon te eten was hij met een paar hapjes al uitgeput en overvol. Vreemd genoeg bleef hij gewoon op een stoel zitten. 'Waarom zakt hij niet in de grond ?' vroeg Frits. Maar daar gebeurde het al, en plotseling was vader verdwenen.

'Zo, opgeruimd staat netjes,' sprak de koningin. 'We hebben niets aan mannen.'

'Maar ik ben een man,' zei Frits.

'Ach Frits,' zei de koningin, 'jij bent geen man, jij bent een jongen.'

'Maar wat als ik straks een man word,' vroeg Frits, 'ruimt u mij dan ook op ?'

De koningin keek hem ernstig aan. 'Frits,' zei ze. 'Ik heb een ander zeepje voor je, ditmaal gemaakt van donkere chocolade, en ik wil dat je het eet, zodat je nooit een man zult worden.'

'Moet ik het helemaal opeten ?' vroeg Frits.

'Oh, een likje is al genoeg,' zei de koningin. Toen haalde ze langzaam het donkerbruine zeepje uit de tas. Frits haalde diep adem. De koningin overhandigde het zeepje, en al snel nam Frits een likje. Hij vond het zo lekker dat hij verder begon te eten. 'Zo, dat komt dan wel goed,' zei de koningin.

De koningin was een fantastische moeder, en de kinderen misten hun vader totaal niet. Ze mochten alles, en elke dag was het feest. Ze konden zich geen betere moeder bedenken. De koningin was een harde werkster zodat alles goed opgeruimd bleef, maar ze deed alles snel, zodat ze altijd veel tijd voor de kinderen had. Ze las de kinderen voor, ging met hen overal naartoe, en de kinderen kwamen niets tekort. Ook kon ze heel lekker koken, en de kinderen waren elke dag jarig. Maar op een dag werd de koningin ernstig ziek. Ze had het gevoel dat ze terug moest naar het bos. Ze begon heel veel planten in het huis te zetten in de hoop dat dat zou helpen, maar niets hielp. Ze was erg moe, zo moe en ziek dat de dokter haar vertelde dat ze voor een tijdje op haarzelf moest wonen zonder de kinderen, want ze was veel te druk geweest met de kinderen, zonder aan haarzelf te denken. De kinderen mochten zolang op een vakantie-oord wonen.

In haar nieuwe huisje kon de koningin tot haarzelf komen. Al gauw begon ze ook aan geheugenverlies te lijden, en kon de kinderen nog maar nauwelijks herinneren. Ze kon zich nog wel herinneren dat Frits eens tegen haar zei : 'U bent zo mooi, ik ben er bang van.' Maar ze wist eigenlijk niet meer goed wie Frits was. En Sanne ? Wie was dat ?

Op een dag was de vader van de kinderen weer boven de grond gekomen, zijn gezicht helemaal vuil, zijn kleren kleddernat en modderig. Als eerste zocht hij zijn kinderen op, die heel blij waren hem te zien. 'Ik heb het geheim van de dorga-indianen gevonden,' zei vader met een blij gezicht. Hij hief een zeepje in de lucht. 'Als ik hier van eet, dan word ik weer een jongen.'

Vader nam een hap, en veranderde in een jongen. Nu wilde hij de koningin zien. Daar aangekomen was de koningin erg verbaasd. Ze herkende hem natuurlijk niet. 'Je bent zo mooi dat ik er bang van ben,' zei de koningin, 'ik bedoel je gloed. Heb je van het zeepje gegeten ?' De jongen knikte. Hij overhandigde haar het zeepje, ze brak er een stukje vanaf, keek ernaar en stopte het toen in haar mond. Tranen rolden over haar gezicht. 'Ik ben weer beter,' sprak ze. Ze was geen vrouw meer, maar een meisje. 'Je bent zo mooi dat ik er bang van ben,' zei de jongen.

'Het is het zeepje,' zei het meisje, 'de gloed, we zijn weer kinderen.'

'Gelukkig maar,' zei de jongen.

'Jij bent de mooiste van allemaal, jij bent de maan en de sterren. De strepen op je buik en borst vertellen een verhaal. Jij bent de liefste van allemaal, en nu spreken wij dezelfde taal.'

De

Broodjesfee

De prins zat in zijn roze pudding pyama op de troon. Griffioenen vlogen om hem heen. Ze hadden de sleutel meegenomen. De prins greep de sleutel en richtte het op een deur die al honderden jaren gesloten was. De deur ging open. In deze ruimte lagen allemaal muziek instrumenten. Ze hadden armen en benen, en konden praten. De prins was tevreden. De griffioenen waren van ver gekomen, en mochten een tijdje in de gouden kooien van het paleis wonen. Die kooien stonden gewoon open, maar er was daar goed voer te vinden, en goede, rustige slaapplaatsen. Al snel hadden de griffioenen het erg naar hun zin.

De prins bekeek de muziek-instrumenten eens. Ook speelde hij er eens op. ‘Tover-instrumenten,’ zei een van de grifioenen. Ze konden het weer regelen, en de zee. De fee Fauna woonde in een van de instrumenten. De zee-elven woonden in andere instrumenten, en er waren ook strand-feeen. Ze konden de muziek-instrumenten goed bespelen. De prins was erg verwonderd. Hij was blij dat de sleutel terug was. Janna was de zonnefee. Zij woonde in de lamp van de ruimte.

Zij vertelde de prins van een dorpje dicht bij de zee, waar elven en feeen tezamen woonden. Zij vertelde van de grote ijs-automaten langs de zee, en van de feeendrank.

En waar is dat ? vroeg de prins.

Oh, het is niet zo moeilijk, zei de zonnefee. Tel tot drie, draai in de rondte en klap dan vier maal. De prins deed het direkt en verdween in het niets. Hij bevond zich ineens op het strand. Om hem heen waren grote ijsmachines. Ze hadden ijs in allerlei kleuren. De zon was heet, en de prins had wel trek in wat ijs. Hij was bijna duizelig van de hitte. Alles draaide voor zijn ogen. Toen voelde hij het heerlijke ijs in zijn mond druipen, zo lekker zoet. Janna de zonnefee stond lachend voor hem.

En, hoe vind je het ? vroeg ze.

Oh, heerlijk, zei de prins. De prins ging op het zand zitten. Daar waren de griffioenen, als grote arenden met vlammende vleugels.

Zullen we de zee overvliegen ? vroeg Janna de zonnefee.

Ja, geweldig, zei de prins. Ze gingen allebei op een griffioen zitten, en al gauw waren ze hoog in de lucht, terwijl de zee onder hen verdween. In de verte zagen ze nog grotere ijsmachines, en het leek wel alsof het hier nog warmer was. De griffioenen brachten hen naar een eiland heel ver weg. Wilden woonden hier, als een oerwereld. Ze leefden hier tezamen met veel roofdieren.

Verderop op het eiland stond een grote kathedraal waar een fee in woonde. Het bleek dat zij de koningin van het eiland was en de maker van alle roofdieren. Grote voedselmachines stonden rondom de kathedraal, en veel snackbar-kraampjes. Maar al het voedsel was levend hier, met armen en benen. De prins had al snel door dat het voedsel er hier heel gelukkig uitzag.

Het voedsel is gelukkig, zei Janna de zonnefee, want ze gaan allemaal door toverdeuren heen. Rondom de kathedraal stonden ook allemaal kleurige grote liften, als torens. Samen gingen de prins en Janna in zo'n lift, en al snel hadden ze een groot uitzicht over het eiland. Na een tijdje kwamen ze uit de lift en stapten een grote hal binnen. Hier zat een dik jongetje aan een grote tafel, en een tovenaar stond aan het einde van de tafel, naast zijn troon.

Pa, geef me nu mijn voedsel, schreeuwde het dikke jongetje. De tovenaar klapte in zijn handen en direkt kwam er lopend voedsel binnen : lopende pasteitjes, lopende kippepootjes, lopende broodjes, lopende pizas, lopende pannekoeken, lopende puddingkjes en nog veel meer. Ze liepen allemaal de tafel op en het dikke jongetje begon direkt te eten.

Meer, pa, zei het dikke jongetje met zijn mond vol. Weer klapte de tovenaar in zijn handen, en weer ging er een deur open waardoor lopend voedsel kwam. Ditmaal was het voedsel veel groter, en de ogen van het dikke jongetje glunderden.

Jottems, haha, ik heb honger, zei het dikke jongetje. Dank je, pa. Plotseling veranderde het dikke jongetje in een roofdier en verslond de tovenaar.

Dat komt door een toverspiegel, zei Janna de toverfee. Als de zon op zijn hoogste punt is dan gebeuren deze dingen.

Ik ruik nog meer vlees, brulde het roofdier. Snel gingen Janna de toverfee en de prins de lift weer in. De zonnefee zei dat elke lift naar zo'n hal leidt waar dikke jongetjes met hun tovenaarsvaders wonen. En dat de koningin van het eiland dat allemaal gemaakt had.

Hoe heet die fee, vroeg de prins.

Kom, zei de zonnefee, ik laat het je zien. Toen ze weer op de grond waren stapten ze de kathedraal binnen. De fee zat tussen de broodjes.

Het is een broodjesfee, zei de zonnefee.

Kom eens dichterbij, zei de broodjesfee. Weer zo iemand die weinig eet. Ik zal je leren veel te eten. Toen gingen vele deuren open en de grootst mogelijke broden kwamen binnen, rijkelijk belegd met een overvloed aan overheerlijk voedsel. Plotseling werd de prins erdoor overstroomt.

Nee, nee, riep de prins.

De prins werd wakker in zweet. Naarmate de dag verstreek dacht hij glimlachend terug aan de broodjesfee.

De Driesprong

In het bos woonde eens een man en een vrouw die een dochtertje hadden. De man en de vrouw maakten vaak ruzie en vaak kon het meisje er niet van slapen. Op een nacht vluchtte ze weg, omdat het lawaai haar erg bang maakte. Lang zwierf ze door het bos, totdat ze uiteindelijk was verdwaald en niet meer wist waar ze was. Uitgeput leunde ze tegen een boom aan, maar viel toen in een gat. Ze viel erg diep, en raakte door de val bewusteloos.

Toen ze weer wakker werd zag ze allemaal konijntjes om haar heen, maar toen ze zich bewoog vluchtten alle konijntjes van haar weg. Langzaam stond het meisje op, en vroeg zich af waar ze terecht was gekomen. Ze zag hier allemaal kleine huisjes met lichtjes en hele hoge bomen. Zo hoog had ze de bomen nog nooit gezien. Toen ze in de lucht keek zag ze alleen duisternis, en enkele stralende sterretjes. Plotseling zag ze één van die sterretjes vallen, en wat verderop tussen de bomen was even later een stralend licht. Voorzichtig liep het meisje op het licht af.

Maar naarmate ze dichterbij kwam werd alles weer donker. Hier waren geen kleine huisjes met lichtjes, en al gauw durfde ze niet verder. Ze wilde zich omdraaien, maar ook achter haar was het ineens heel donker.

‘Hallo !’ riep het meisje. ‘Is daar iemand ?’

Maar niets en niemand antwoordde. Het meisje was erg moe, en even later viel ze op de grond en kwam in een diepe slaap. Zo moe was ze nog nooit geweest. Even later kreeg ze dromerig om haar heen. Ze zag wat lichtjes om haar heen, met hele kleine spulletjes. Kleine stoeltjes, kleine stofzuigertjes, kleine laarsjes, en nog wat andere spulletjes. Ook zag ze hele kleine piepkleine kaarsjes. ‘Waar ben ik ?’ vroeg ze. Langzaam stond het meisje op, en keek omhoog waar alles donker was. Wel zag ze in het donker wat wijde schilderijen hangen. Snel kwam ze erachter dat ze in een soort zaal was. Op een hoge troon in het duister zat een konijn. Het konijn zei niks, en het meisje stapte dichterbij, en toen was alles weer weg, en alles was weer pikkedonker.

'Ik weet dat jullie er zijn !' riep het meisje. Maar niets en niemand antwoordde. 'Ik wil niet moeilijk doen,' zei het meisje, 'maar zo ontvang je geen gasten.'

'Gasten, gasten ?' zei een stem. 'Je komt hier zomaar ongevraagd binnenvallen, en je noemt jezelf gast. Ik noem je een indringer.'

Het meisje keek naar beneden en zag een konijntje bij haar voet. Het konijntje schopte tegen haar been aan.

'Zeg, laat dat,' zei het meisje, 'zo gedraag je je niet naar een dame.'

'Nou, ik noem jou geen dame,' zei het konijntje, 'je hebt geen manieren. Je komt hier zomaar ongevraagd binnenvallen, en denkt dat je de koningin bent. Maar goed, ik zal je wel binnenlaten, en dan zul je eens een echte koningin meemaken.'

Het konijntje trok aan het jurkje van het meisje, en leidde het meisje naar een klein kamertje waar een konijntje op een troon zat.

'We hebben indringers, koningin,' zei het konijntje.

'Ik weet het, Arend,' zei de konijnenkoningin, 'laat haar hier maar blijven.' Toen vertrok het konijntje.

De konijnenkoningin keek het meisje diep aan. 'Dus ... jij komt van de grote mensenwereld,' zei de koningin.

'Eh, ja, majesteit,' zei het meisje, 'maar ik ben zelf nog klein.'

'Oh, maar jij wordt vast ook zo groot,' zei de koningin. 'Maar voor het zover is mag je hier wel blijven. Hier achter mij is een deur, en als je daar doorheen gaat, dan .... Nu ja, dat zul je zelf wel zien. Je moet gewoon het pad volgen.'

Het meisje bedankte de koningin, en ging door de deur, en kwam op een pad terecht. Hele kleine vogeltjes zaten in de struikjes aan de zijkanten van het pad. Het pad straalde en glom door een geheimzinnig licht. Het meisje begon haar reis. Na een tijdje kwam ze op een open plek waar konijntjes wat spelletjes aan het doen waren. Een paar konijntjes waren aan het hinkelen. Achter de konijntjes waren drie paden.

'Waar moet ik nu naartoe ?' vroeg het meisje.

'Waar kom je dan vandaan ?' vroegen de konijntjes.

Van de koningin, zei het meisje.

'Van de koningin ?' vroegen de konijntjes, 'heeft ze dan zelf niet gezegd waar je naartoe moest gaan.'

Het meisje schudde haar hoofd. 'Ze zei alleen maar dat ik het pad moest volgen.'

'Ik zou het eerste pad maar niet kiezen,' zei een konijntje, 'want dan kom je bij een heks terecht. Het tweede pad leidt tot het witte kasteel, en het derde pad dat weet niemand. Iedereen valt daar in slaap.'

'Nou,' zei het meisje, 'ik heb lang genoeg geslapen. Ik kies voor het tweede pad.' En zo ging het meisje op weg naar het witte kasteel.

Het witte kasteel stond vol met levende pionnen. 'Ik heb jou hier nog nooit gezien,' zei een zwarte pion. 'Ik jou ook niet,' zei het meisje.

'Waar kom je vandaan ?' vroeg een rode pion.

'De koningin heeft me gestuurd,' zei het meisje.

'De koningin ?' vroegen alle pionnen verwonderd.

'Spring maar op m'n rug,' zei een groene pion. Toen het meisje op de groene pion klom begon de pion te steigeren, en rende toen een trap op van het kasteel, en kwam op een balkon terecht, en rende toen door naar een volgende trap. De groene pion bracht het meisje helemaal tot aan een toren. 'Kijk eens naar buiten,' riep de pion, 'zo kun je het hele land zien.'

'Welk land ?' vroeg het meisje. Door het raam zag ze allemaal grasvelden die er als speelborden uitzagen. Het waren wonderlijke tuinen. 'Zo je ziet het, hè,' zei de pion. 'We hebben nog veel te doen.'

'Ja, maar de koningin vertelde me dat ik het pad moest volgen,' zei het meisje.

'Het pad ?' vroeg de groene pion. 'Oh, wat stom van me, ik had het kunnen weten.'

Toen huppelde de groene pion met het meisje op zijn rug weer helemaal naar beneden, en ging toen via de keuken de achtertuin in. 'Zie je, daar in de verte,' zei de groene pion terwijl hij op wat struikjes achter een groot grasveld wees, 'daar gaat het pad verder. Een goede reis.'

En toen zette het meisje haar reis voort, nadat ze van de pion afscheid had genomen. Tussen de struikjes achter het grasveld ging het pad verder. Het pad straalde en glom weer als door een geheimzinnig licht. Maar na een tijdje wandelen kwam het meisje weer bij de konijntjes die spelletjes aan het spelen waren. 'Hier ben ik al geweest,' zei het meisje.

'Dan moet je gewoon een ander pad nemen,' zei één van de konijntjes.

'Maar welk pad ?' vroeg het meisje.

'Nou, het eerste of het derde pad,' zei het konijntje.

'Ja maar dan kom ik bij de heks, of val ik in slaap,' zei het meisje.

'Ik kan het ook niet helpen, kies maar,' zei het konijntje.

'Nou, dan kies ik voor het derde pad, want ik begin toch al een beetje moe te worden,' zei het meisje.

Langs het derde pad stonden allemaal toverbloemen, en al snel begon het meisje zo moe te worden dat ze niet meer kon blijven staan, en al gauw viel ze in een diepe slaap.

'Ehm, mijn naam is de spin,' zei een dromerige, geheimzinnige stem, 'weet je dat ik altijd win ?'

'Nee, dat weet ik niet,' zei het meisje dromerig.

'Nou, dan weet je het nu,' zei de stem weer.

Waar ben ik ? vroeg het meisje.

Toen ze haar ogen opende zag ze bloemen, zoveel bloemen. Overal waren bloemen, en zoveel wonderbaarlijke geuren, zo betoverend.

‘Ik zei toch dat ik altijd win,’ zei de stem slaperig, ‘ik heb je betoverd.’

‘Ja maar daar heb ik eigenlijk geen tijd voor,’ zei het meisje, ‘de koningin heeft me gezegd dat ik het pad moet volgen.’

‘De koningin ?’ zei de stem. ‘Dat verandert de zaak, kom maar mee.’ En ineens stond het meisje klaarwakker tussen de bloemen. In de verte zag ze een rivier, terwijl beneden bij haar voet een klein spinnetje stond. ‘Als de koningin je gestuurd heeft, dan is het in orde,’ zei het spinnetje, ‘dan hoeven we geen spelletjes te doen.’ Toen liep het spinnetje voor haar uit naar de rivier. Over de rivier was een brug waaronder allerlei bootjes met lampjes doorgingen. Het waren kleine bootjes.

‘Daar in de verte woont een heks,’ zei het spinnetje.

‘Oh maar ik dacht dat de heks op het eerste pad woonde,’ zei het meisje. Na een tijdje komen ze in de keuken van een groot kasteel aan. Een dienstknecht loopt op het meisje af. ‘Hallo, ik ben Andrew,’ zegt de bediende. ‘Ik verwachtte je al. Laat me je het kasteel rondleiden.’

‘Hoe weet u dat ik zou komen,’ vroeg het meisje, en het meisje vroeg zich ook af waar het spinnetje ineens was gebleven. ‘Het spinnetje zei dat hier een heks woonde,’ zei het meisje.

‘Ah, je moet niet alles en iedereen geloven,’ zei Andrew. ‘Hier woont de konijnenkoningin.’

‘Maar daar kom ik net vandaan,’ zei het meisje, ‘en ze heeft me gezegd het pad te volgen.’

‘Oh kom dan maar mee,’ zei Andrew, en leidde haar naar de achterkant van het kasteel. Hier ging het pad verder. Weer zag het meisje het spinnetje hier, maar het spinnetje was heel ver weg. ‘Spinnetje ?’ riep het meisje. Maar het spinnetje hoorde haar niet. En het pad ging een andere richting op. Het meisje besloot om maar gewoon het pad te volgen.

Na een tijdje zag ze wat ijzeren bekertjes op de grond staan, en toen ze dichterbij kwam sprong er een konijntje tevoorschijn. ‘Raad eens wat er in deze bekertjes zit ?’ vroeg het konijn. ‘In eentje zit de zee, in de andere zit het bos, en als je van de derde drinkt, dan ben je de klos.’

Ja, maar ik wil daar helemaal niet van drinken,’ zei het meisje. ‘Laat me er langs.’

Kies er eentje uit, kies er eentje uit, en waar je dan ook terecht komt, je komt er altijd weer uit, zong het konijntje een paar keer. En word je dan de klos, dan kom je altijd wel weer los, en kom je tot de zee dan is het altijd okay.

Maar het meisje wilde er niets van horen, en stampte op de grond. ‘Nu is het afgelopen met die gekheid. Ik moet er nu door, want de koningin ....’ maar verder kon ze niet komen.

‘De koningin ? De koningin ?’ zei het konijntje. En snel was het konijntje met zijn bekertjes verdwenen, en kon het meisje verder gaan. Na een tijdje kwam het meisje in de duinen, en niet lang daarna zag ze de prachtige oceaan waarin een diepe, felle zon scheen. Het meisje zag het pad helemaal doorlopen tot in de zee. ‘Maar dat kan toch helemaal niet,’ zei het meisje.

‘Jawel hoor,’ zei een stem. Een donkere gestalte stond ineens naast het meisje. Het leek wel een beetje op een zwarte pion op een paard. ‘Ik breng je er wel doorheen,’ zei de pion.

‘Ja, maar hoe dan ?’ vroeg het meisje. Ineens haalde de gestalte een dobbelsteen onder het zadel vandaan. De gestalte gooide de dobbelsteen van de duin op het strand. Op het bovenvlak van de dobbelsteen stond een gestalte als een rode pion. De gestalte was gevleugeld, en stond al snel naast het meisje. ‘Spring maar op mijn rug,’ zei de rode gestalte. En toen het meisje op zijn rug zat steeg de gestalte op. De zwarte gestalte was weer verdwenen. De rode gestalte had een geweer met kogels als dobbelstenen, en als ze door vervelende vogels werden lastiggevallen schoot hij ze met het geweer neer. Na een tijdje kwamen ze op een heuvel aan waar het pad weer verder ging. De rode pion wees in de verte : ‘Zie, daar, waar het glinstert, daar moet je zijn, daar woont de konijnenkoningin.’

‘Maar daar kom ik net vandaan,’ zei het meisje. ‘De koningin zei dat ik het pad moest volgen.’

‘Dat moet een vergissing zijn geweest,’ zei de rode pion, en vertrok.

‘Wacht eens even,’ riep het meisje. ‘Je moet het me uitleggen. Ik begrijp het niet meer.’ Maar de rode pion was al weg. Toen besloot ze het pad maar te volgen tot de glinsteringen in de verte, maar al snel begon het erg donker te worden en koud. ‘Ik moet hier ergens iets vinden om te kunnen schuilen,’ zei het meisje. Het begon ook steeds harder en harder te waaien.

‘Kom hier !’ riep een stem, ‘kom hier,’ bijna gillend. De stem leek op het geluid wanneer haar ouders ruzie maakten. Een konijn op een woonboot riep naar een ander konijn. Het was een woonboot gewoon op de grond. Er was nergens water te bekennen, alleen wat druppels van een beginnende regen. ‘Kom nu binnen !’ riep de stem weer, ‘wil je soms verdrinken ?’ Het meisje zag een wat jonger konijntje stampvoetend naar binnen lopen, in de woonboot. Het andere konijn gaf hem een om z’n oren. Toen ging de deur dicht. Snel begon het natter te worden onder de voeten van het meisje, en werd ze door de wind bijna weggeblazen. Toen ze in de verte keek, kreeg ze de schrik van haar leven. Bulderend hoge golven kwamen op haar af, alsof de oceaan het land wilde opslokken. Zo snel als ze kon rende ze naar de woonboot, maar hoe hard ze ook op het deurtje bonsde, niemand deed open.

Help me, help me dan toch ! riep het meisje. Het water was al tot haar knieen gekomen, en de razende golven kwamen steeds dichterbij, en groeiden steeds hoger. Al snel was het water tot haar heupen gekomen, en keek ze recht in een kilometers hoge golf die haar elk moment zou kunnen opslokken. Het meisje slaakte een gil. Een raampje naast het deurtje ging open, en een hand greep het meisje vliegensvlug naar binnen.

‘Dat was op het nippertje,’ zei een konijntje. Het meisje zuchtte diep.

‘Dat gebeurt altijd als de koningin kwaad word,’ zei het konijntje.

‘Waarom wordt ze dan kwaad,’ vroeg het meisje.

‘Ze kan niet tegen haar verlies met spelletjes,’ zei het konijntje.

‘Met wie doet ze dan spelletjes ?’ vroeg het meisje.

‘Met een spin,’ zei het konijntje.

‘Oh maar ik ken dat spinnetje,’ zei het meisje. ‘Ik ben dat spinnetje ook tegengekomen, en hij sprak dat hij altijd wint.’

‘Hoe weet je dat ?’ vroeg het konijn ineens. ‘Niemand weet dat, dus waarom zou jij dat weten ?’

‘Nou,’ legde het meisje uit, ‘er waren drie paden. Eerst kwam ik op het tweede pad waar het witte kasteel was, en daarna kwam ik op het derde pad waar iedereen in slaap viel. Hier ben ik hem tegengekomen.’

‘Maar dat kan niet,’ zei het konijn, ‘dat is absoluut onmogelijk. Niemand die op het derde pad komt ontwaakt weer. Zij die daar komen zullen voor eeuwig en altijd slapen.’

‘Oh maar ik zei tegen het spinnetje dat ik van de koningin had gehoord dat ik het pad moest volgen,’ zei het meisje, ‘en toen liet hij me erdoor.’

‘De koningin ?’ vroeg het konijntje terwijl zijn gezicht groen en geel tegelijk werd. ‘Mens allemachtig, heeft de koningin dat tegen jou gezegd ?’

Het meisje knikte. ‘Oh maar dan zijn wij in heel groot gevaar,’ zei het konijntje. ‘Als de koningin dat gezegd heeft, dan is ze ergens op uit. Dan daagt ze je uit voor een duel.’

‘Een duel ?’ vroeg het meisje.

‘Ja een duel, een gevecht,’ zei het konijn, ‘en dan moeten we snel zijn. We moeten direkt naar het kasteel, want daar zit ze op je te wachten voor het spel.’

Direct rende het konijn een andere kamer in, en startte de motor. Met volle kracht ging de boot richting het glinsterende kasteel in de verte. Na een tijdje voer het bootje naar binnen. Bij een grote paal diep in het kasteel was een kade waar ze konden uitstappen. Het konijn greep de hand van het meisje en rende samen met haar een grote stenen trap naast een muur op. ‘Majesteit, majesteit,’ riep het konijn, en toen hij de koningin op de trap tegenkwam, zei hij het wat rustiger : ‘Majesteit, ik weet dat we wat laat zijn.’

‘Wat, laat ?’ zei de koningin, ‘helemaal niet laat. Veel te vroeg. Jullie zijn veel te vroeg hier.’

‘Maar waarom werd u dan zo boos ?’ vroeg het konijn.

‘Ach, niks bijzonders,’ zei de koningin, ‘gewoon een ongelukje.’

‘Een ongelukje ?’ vroeg het konijn.

Ja, zei de koningin, ik liet een pion vallen, en die vloog weg.

‘Misschien een rode pion ?’ vroeg het konijn.

Ja, hoe weet jij dat nu weer, vroeg de koningin een beetje kattig.

Nou, ik zag een rode ster naar beneden vallen, maar later dacht ik : het zal wel weer een pion van de koningin zijn, zei het konijn.

Ja, lachte de koningin, jaha, dat heb je goed gezien, jongen, en nu vlug wegwezen, want het is nog lang geen tijd.

Toen rende het konijn weg. Nu stond het meisje oog in oog met de koningin.

En wie ben jij ? vroeg de koningin.

‘Eh, ik ben het meisje wat van u gewoon het pad moest volgen,’ zei het meisje.

Oh ja ? kraste de koningin, nou heus, ik ken je niet.

Kijk dan eens beter. Kent u mij echt niet ? vroeg het meisje.

Toen deed de koningin een brilletje op, en kwam dichterbij. Eens even kijken, zei de koningin. Er zijn zoveel meisjes die .... het pad volgen, zei je ?

Het meisje knikte.

Wacht eens even, zei de koningin. Ben jij langs de drie paden gegaan ?

Alleen de tweede en de derde. Ik ben nog niet bij de heks op het eerste pad geweest, zei het meisje.

Wat sta je hier dan te staan ? bulderde de koningin. Terug jij !

En toen zette het meisje het op een rennen, want de koningin begon verschrikkelijk te bulderen. Het leek alsof haar ouders weer ruzie maakten, erger dan ooit tevoren, en het meisje begon heel hard te huilen.

Rennen ! brulde de koningin, ren voor je leven, want ik ontplof, en dan zul je de dobbelstenen zien rollen.

Het meisje was al snel omsingeld door een heel leger met dobbelstenen. Er kwam vuur uit hun monden, en de roden waren het ergste. Nog harder begon het meisje te huilen. Toe dan, konijn, help me dan ! riep het meisje hard. Maar het konijn was nergens te bekennen. In de verte zag ze de woonboot, maar die dreef telkens verderweg. Oh, was ik nu maar naar het eerste pad gegaan, zei het meisje. De dobbelstenen zagen er zo dreigend uit.

Wat zei je, krijste de koningin, nee, dat kan niet, zei je dat je het derde pad op ben gegaan ?

Ja, majesteit, zei het meisje.

Iedereen slaapt daar, en niemand staat ooit weer op, zei de koningin.

Ja, maar het spinnetje ... zei het meisje

Het spinnetje ? krijste de koningin .... Heeft het spinnetje je erdoor gelaten ? En toen werd de koningin nog kwaaier.

Maar toen ik hem vertelde wat u gezegd had dat ik het pad moest volgen, toen liet hij me erdoor, zei het meisje.

Oh, zuchtte de koningin woest, ik kan dat spinnetje niet uitstaan ... Wat heeft hij nog meer gezegd ?

‘Dat hij altijd wint,’ zei het meisje.

En toen werd de koningin wel zo razend dat ze niets meer met de dobbelstenen te maken wilde hebben. ‘Uit mijn ogen !’ krijste ze tegen de dobbelstenen. ‘Niets wil ik nog met spelletjes te maken hebben.’ Toen liep ze boos weg, het meisje alleen achterlatend.

Even later kwam ze weer terug. ‘Zeg, waar kom je eigenlijk vandaan ?’ vroeg ze aan het meisje. ‘Toch niet uit de grote mensenwereld, hè ?’

Ja, zei het meisje, daar kom ik vandaan. Mijn vader en moeder maakten altijd ruzie, en ....

Je hoeft me niets meer te vertellen, zei de koningin, ik begrijp het al. Dan kom je dus van het eerste pad vandaan.

Nee, daar ben ik nog niet geweest, daar bij die heks, zei het meisje.

Kom maar mee, zei de koningin, dan laat ik het je zien.

In een hoge torenkamer aangekomen schonk de koningin thee voor het meisje in, en vroeg het meisje of ze het fijn vond in de grote mensenwereld.

Nee, zei het meisje, want niemand begrijpt me, en ze maken altijd ruzie.

‘En wat heb je eraan gedaan ?’ vroeg de koningin.

Ik ben weggelopen, zei het meisje.

Dat is het beste wat je kon doen, zei de koningin, zo kon je de heks verslaan.

Ja maar ik ben nog helemaal geen heks tegengekomen, zei het meisje.

Als dat zo is, zei de koningin, dan zul je terugmoeten naar het eerste pad, en dan zul je het pad gewoon moeten volgen totdat je haar tegen bent gekomen. Of zullen we gewoon een spelletje doen ?

De paden heb ik gevolgd, zei het meisje. Laten we nu dan maar een spelletje doen.

En zo gebeurde het. Tot diep in de avond deed het meisje spelletjes met de koningin, en ze konden het zo goed met elkaar vinden dat de koningin niet meer boos werd als ze een spelletje verloor. Het meisje beleefde nog vele avonturen met de koningin, maar dat hoor je wel in een ander verhaal.

Spindruppeltje

Er was eens een meisje dat Spindruppeltje heette. Het meisje was eigenlijk een prinsesje, maar was eens tijdens het spelen in het bos verdwaald en kwam bij een arm gezin terecht. Het meisje was nog te jong om te beseffen dat ze een prinsesje was, en ook het arme gezin wist niet wie ze was, maar ze besloten voor haar te zorgen. Dichtbij het huisje van het arme gezin was een vijver met krokodillen waar het meisje vaak speelde. Maar op een dag gleed het meisje uit, en viel in de vijver. Direkt werd ze door een krokodil gegrepen en in de diepte getrokken.

De krokodillen brachten haar naar een rijk diep onder de grond, waar soldaten woonden die de zessen werden genoemd. De soldaten liepen een beetje krom en hadden vreemde gekrulde schoenen. Ze zagen er inderdaad uit als zessen. Hun koning was genaamd nummer één. Het meisje keek haar ogen uit in dit rijk onder de grond. Alles was hier prachtig : betoverde bloemen, en zoveel betoverde tuinen. Het meisje ging hier gewoon door met spelen, alsof er niets aan de hand was, en het was goed. De koning scheen erg van het meisje te houden, alsof het zijn eigen dochtertje was. De koning had ook een dochtertje, en dat meisje was genaamd 'drie'. Drie en het meisje werden al snel dikke vriendinnetjes. De koning was erg tevreden. Hij gaf het meisje een eigen kamer in zijn kasteel, vlakbij de kamer van drie, zijn dochtertje. Ook de zessen waren erg dol op het meisje. Het meisje had een goed hart voor iedereen.

Maar op een dag gebeurde er iets verschrikkelijks. De koning werd heel ernstig ziek, en iedereen was erg verdrietig. Er was nog maar één middel dat de koning zou kunnen genezen, en dat was de blajus-plant die in het land groeide waar het meisje vandaan kwam. De zessen legden het meisje uit waar ze dat kruid zou kunnen vinden. Een krokodil bracht het meisje weer terug. Het arme gezin was erg blij het meisje weer terug te zien, maar ze mocht nooit meer naar de vijver. Inmiddels was de echte vader van Spindruppeltje erachter gekomen waar zijn dochter was, en nam haar mee naar zijn kasteel. Om de vijver liet hij grote hoge gouden hekken bouwen. Maar het meisje wilde terug naar het rijk onder de vijver, om de koning daar te kunnen redden door de blajus-plant, het genezende kruid.

Dat ze door een krokodil was gegrepen geloofden ze allemaal wel, maar dat er een rijk onder de vijver was geloofde niemand. En hoe ze ook huilde en smeekte, haar vader was niet om te praten. Hoe zou ze nou over die hekken kunnen komen ? Inmiddels stond bijna het hele kasteel van haar vader vol met blajus-planten, omdat het prinsesje daar om gevraagd had. Ook had het arme gezin een flinke beloning gekregen, omdat ze zo goed voor het meisje hadden gezorgd. Zij woonden nu ook in het kasteel, op een verdieping dichtbij de verdieping waar het meisje haar kamer had. Maar het meisje huilde veel.

De koning zag dat het meisje niet gelukkig was, en gaf haar op een dag een vogel voor op haar kamer. Het was een sprekende vogel, en het meisje kon alles aan de vogel vertellen, ook over het verborgen koninkrijk.

'Ik kan je wel over het hek brengen, hoor,' zei de vogel, 'geen probleem. Ik ben sterk genoeg, en ik kan heel hoog vliegen.' En zo stapte het meisje op zijn rug, en de vogel bracht haar helemaal over het hek bij de vijver. Maar plotseling kwam het meisje erachter dat ze het blajus-kruid was vergeten. En één van de krokodillen greep de vogel en trok hem de diepte in. Nu kon het meisje niet meer terug. Nu moest ze wachten totdat iemand haar zou zien. Maar er gingen tijden voorbij, en het meisje begon erge honger te lijden.

Op een dag kwam de vogel terug uit de vijver, en vertelde dat de koning van het verborgen rijk inmiddels was overleden. Het meisje begon erg te huilen, en zei dat het allemaal haar schuld was. Zij had immers het blajus-kruid vergeten. Maar de vogel zei dat vele zessen nu ook ernstig ziek waren, en ook het prinsesje drie. De vogel was teruggekomen om voor hen het blajus-kruid te halen. Het meisje stapte op zijn rug, en weer vloog hij over het hek, terug naar het kasteel. Maar toen de koning merkte dat ze terug waren gekomen liet hij hen beiden grijpen. Het meisje werd voor straf opgesloten op haar kamer, en de vogel werd in een diepe kerker onder het kasteel geworpen. Nog nooit was het prinsesje zo verdrietig geweest. De koning liet de vijver droogleggen, en joeg de krokodillen het bos in.

Dikke tranen rolden er over de wangen van het prinsesje, maar de tranen hadden allerlei kleuren. Na een tijdje kwam er een vogel op het venster van het open raam zitten. Het was een krokodillen-vogel, die wel een beetje op een krokodil leek. ‘Je moet die tranen drinken,’ zei de vogel, ‘dan gebeuren er wonderen.’ Het meisje had nog wat bekers in haar kamertje staan, en begon de verschillende kleuren te verdelen. ‘Rood is voor de sloot, blauw is voor de vijver,’ zei de vogel, en toen het meisje van het rode en het blauwe begon te drinken kwamen er overal in het land sloten en vijvers.

‘Laat me je meenemen naar het land der krokodillen, ver achter de bossen,’ zei de krokodillen-vogel. Het meisje stapte op de rug van de vogel, die direkt uit het raam vloog. Na een tijdje kwamen ze bij de krokodillen aan. Hier leefden ze in moerassen en poelen. Maar het verborgen rijk bestond niet meer. Het blajus-kruid groeide en bloeide hier volop, maar het was al te laat. Het rijk was geheel ten onder gegaan door de ernstige ziekte. In de verte stond een vrouw met wratten achter een ketel. De vrouw lachte als een heks, en roerde in de ketel waar groene smurrie in lag. ‘Wat ben je aan het maken ?’ vroeg Spindruppeltje.

‘Weet je dat dan niet ?’ zei de oude vrouw. ‘Ik maak voer voor de koning, tranen.’

Maar toen begon het meisje wel erge medelijden met haar vader te krijgen. ‘Heus, hij mag dan verschrikkelijke dingen hebben gedaan, maar hij bedoelde het goed. Hij was gewoon bezorgd.’

‘Bezorgd noem je dat ?’ zei de oude vrouw krassend. ‘Hij dacht alleen aan zijn eigen koninkrijk, en niet aan het koninkrijk van een ander.’

‘Ja maar hij wist niet van het bestaan van dat andere rijk af,’ zei het meisje.

‘Dat heb jij hem toch verteld ?’ zei de vrouw bijna spottend, ‘maar hij heeft het niet willen geloven, en jou zo met een ondragelijke last bezadeld, en ons des te meer.’

‘Maar wie bent u dan ?’ vroeg Spindruppeltje.

‘Ik ben de koningin der krokodillen,’ zei de vrouw bijna trots.

‘Maar als u dan meekomt naar mijn vader, dan zal hij het misschien geloven,’ zei het meisje.

‘Wat ?’ zei de vrouw spottend, ‘het is nu al te laat. Alles is verloren.’

‘Ja maar de krokodillen,’ zei het meisje, ‘zij zijn nog over. Moeten ze dan blijven leven in deze poelen ?’

‘Hmm, misschien heb je gelijk,’ zei de oude vrouw, ‘en moet ik een kansje wagen. Ik zal naar jouw vader gaan, en hem vragen om een plaats bij de koninklijke vijver, ik en mijn krokodillen.’

Maar toen de oude vrouw met het meisje meeging naar de koning kreeg de vrouw de schuld van alles, en ook haar liet de koning opsluiten, en zelfs het prinsesje werd in een kerker geworpen opdat ze niet meer zou ontsnappen. Alleen de krokodillen-vogel wist op tijd weg te komen, en snelde terug naar de krokodillen om alles te vertellen.

'Dan zit er niks anders op dan het kasteel aan te vallen,' zei de oudste krokodil.

Eén voor één kropen ze in de ketel van de oude vrouw waar ze in zessen veranderden, en gingen in een groot leger gewapend naar het koninklijk terrein.

'Gebruik groen, dan hoef je het niet meer over te doen,' zei de krokodillen-vogel die hen aanvoerde in de strijd.

En zo werd het kasteel van de koning en zijn gehele terrein bedolven onder groene tranen. Toen het arme gezin wat zo lang voor het meisje gezorgd had erachter kwam dat de koning haar in een kerker had geworpen waren ze heel boos op de koning. Ze kwamen erachter dat hij in het geheim een boze tovenaar was, en ze vochten mee in het leger van de zessen. Maar de boze tovenaar was te sterk, en liet hen allemaal in de kerkers diep onder de grond werpen. De enige die kon ontsnappen was weer de krokodillen-vogel.

Met een list kwam hij weer in het kasteel, en even later had hij de kerker van het prinsesje gevonden. 'Spindruppeltje, Spindruppeltje,' fluisterde hij. Het prinsesje was erg blij hem te zien. Zelfs in de gangen waar de kerkers waren groeide het blajus-kruid, en de krokodillen-vogel gaf het prinsesje wat van het kruid. 'Hier, eet wat van het kruid,' zei de vogel. 'Dat zal helpen.' Toen het prinsesje wat van het kruid at leek het even alsof ze krokodillen-huid begon te krijgen. En toen even later gingen wonderlijk alle deuren van de kerkers open. Het werd een grote optocht die over de trappen van de kerkergangen naar boven ging. 'Vlug, naar de koninklijke vijver,' zei de krokodillen-vogel die boven hen uit vloog. De vijver had heel helder water, en in de dieptes konden ze een stenen trap zien. Allen zwommen ze naar de trap, en door een luik kwamen ze uiteindelijk in het verborgen rijk terecht.

'Hoe kan dat dan ?' vroeg het prinsesje. 'Ik dacht dat het verborgen rijk was vergaan.'

'Het is hier opnieuw gaan groeien,' zei de krokodillen-vogel.

'Maar hoe kan dat dan ?' vroeg het meisje.

'Nou gewoon,' zei de krokodillen-vogel, 'het is de bloesem van het blajus-kruid, en dat groeit nu overal door het kasteel.'

En zo werd het kasteel vol van het verborgen rijk ....

En de boze tovenaar ? Die hebben ze nooit meer teruggezien. Het prinsesje kwam hier ook het prinsesje drie tegen, en haar vader, koning nummer één, en vele anderen. Ook zag ze alle oude zessen weer terug, en ze leefden nog lang en gelukkig. Allemaal kenden ze nu het geheim van het blajus-kruid.

Het Gedwongen Chocola

Een oud vrouwtje leefde helemaal alleen in het bos in een klein huisje. Ze staarde naar buiten. Ze kon de bomen goed zien. Daarna staarde ze naar haar gedroogde vlinders die ze als kind had gevangen. Voor haar gevoel miste ze nog een paar kostbaren. Ze had haar net nog dichtbij haar, klaar om de ontbrekende exemplaren te vangen. Altijd was ze op zoek. Niets dan leugens zweefden in de lucht, haar beschuldigende. Ze wilde deze leugens vangen, opdrogen en inlijsten. Ze was vol van haat. Ze kon het gelach van de plagende spotters om haar heen niet meer aan. Elke dag weer probeerden ze haar neer te halen, al vanaf het moment dat ze wakker werd. Ze leken op kinderlijke kleine elfjes, met brutale gezichtjes, als vlindertjes vrolijk dartelend om haar heen. Ze haatte kinderen op die manier, en ze droeg dan ook een duister geheim in haar binnenste. Soms sloeg ze met haar schepnet om zich heen, en riep : 'Is het nu afgelopen.' Maar de laatste jaren ving ze niks meer. Ze droeg een duister geheim van binnen. Ze wilde hier niet aan denken, en met niemand over praten. Ze was het vechten moe. Niemand zou haar begrijpen, en niemand zou sympathie voor haar hebben. Langzaam schonk ze wat thee in voor haarzelf. Buiten vlogen wat vogeltjes waar ze naar keek. Ze snapte niet waarom zo'n jonge geest als zij opgesloten moest zijn in zo'n oud lichaam. Zij zou oud worden in de armen van een ieder die haar aan zou raken, en daarom bleef ze ver van de mensen vandaan. Overdag werkte ze aan haar maaltijd voor de avond, en zorgde ze dat het huisje voldoende schoon bleef. Ook deed ze wat handwerk. Ze was ver weg in haar gedachten. Niemand kon haar bereiken. Ze was bitter geworden.

Ze wist niet dat er wat verder in het bos wonderbomen stonden. Ze kwam niet verder dan haar eigen tuin. De bomen werden bewaakt door dieren, zoals katten, slangen en konijnen, orakels. De bomen zouden haar naar boven leiden, maar ze zag hen niet. Ze zag alleen de kabalerige vliegende deugnietjes om haar heen fladderen. Maar op een dag was ze als door hypnose geslagen, en liep haar tuin uit door het tuinhekje. Ze wilde even het bos in, niet zo ver, maar even ergens anders zijn. Een konijn stond voor een boom, en wenkte haar. Ze kwam dichterbij en keek in de ogen van het konijn. Waarom komt u niet in deze boom wonen, zei het konijn. De top van de boom draagt een geweldig huis.

- Hoe kom ik daar, vroeg het oude vrouwtje.

Maar toen was het konijn weg. De vrouw wist niet of ze het konijn kon vertrouwen, liep door, en gleed in een onder het mos verborgen put. Ze viel gelukkig zacht, en op de bodem van de put stond een kat voor een deurtje. 'Heus,' zei de kat, 'er is een ander leven voor u. Welkom binnen in uw nieuwe huis.' En ineens was de kat verdwenen. De vrouw wist niet of ze de kat kon vertrouwen, maar ging toch naar binnen. ‘Welkom in de boom,’ zei een stem. ‘De boom is alles wat er is.’

‘Ik heb anders nooit in een boom geleefd,’ zei de vrouw.

‘Omdat je dat niet wist,’ zei de stem. ‘Je dacht alleen maar dat je wat wist.’

‘Ik wil hier weg,’ zei de vrouw. ‘Ik moet weer naar huis.’

‘Dit is je huis,’ zei de stem. Ze keek recht in de ogen van een kat.

‘Oh, jij weer,’ zei ze tegen de kat.

‘En jij weer,’ zei de kat. De kat greep haar en wilde met haar dansen, maar de vrouw wilde niet. ‘Ik wil eruit,’ riep ze.

‘Waaruit ?’ vroeg de kat.

‘Uit deze hel,’ zei de vrouw.

‘Dit is alles wat er is,’ zei de kat.

‘Spreek geen onzin,’ zei de vrouw. ‘Ik was daarnet nog in mijn huis.’

‘Welk huis ?’ zei de kat. ‘Dat dacht je alleen maar. Je bent hier altijd al geweest.’

‘Leugenaar,’ riep de vrouw. ‘Ik haal de politie erbij.’

‘De politie ?’ zei de kat. ‘Wat is dat ? Dat zijn alleen je gedachten.’

De vrouw werd woest en probeerde de kat te slaan, maar die was ineens verdwenen. Alles was donker om haar heen. Ze liep een trapje op naar boven, waar een beetje licht was. Daar was de kat weer. Beiden stonden ze voor een lift. ‘Stap in de lift,’ zei de kat, ‘dan zul je van al je problemen af zijn.’ Als gehypnotiseerd stapte de vrouw in de lift, en de kat sloot de deur achter haar. Hoog in de boom kwam ze aan in haar nieuwe huisje. ‘Maar dat is fantastisch,’ zei ze. Ze zou de kat wel willen omhelzen, maar die was nergens te vinden. Het beviel haar goed in haar nieuwe huisje. Alles was prachtig wit. Al snel kwam er een konijn boven. Het bleek hetzelfde konijn te zijn. ‘En van hieruit zul je alle lieve kinderen van de wereld opnemen,’ zei het konijn. ‘Er zijn kamers genoeg.’

‘Oh, dat lijkt me heerlijk,’ zei de vrouw. ‘Dan kan ik eindelijk voor het eerst een tante zijn.’

‘Zorg voor ze, kook voor ze, ga leuke dingen met ze doen,’ zei het konijn. ‘Deze kinderen zijn erg ongelukkig. Maak ze gelukkig.’ De vrouw had er echt zin in, en voelde zich jonger dan ooit tevoren. Het huis was inderdaad erg groot. Ze zou pannekoeken bakken, sprookjes voorlezen, en veel spelletjes met hen doen. Ook zou ze hen de andere plaatsen van de boom laten zien. Snel was haar huis vol met lieve kinderen. Ze sprak tot de boom als tot haar geliefde. Op een dag was ze verschrikt en in de war omdat haar kinderen in vuur waren. Maar de kat stelde haar gerust : het was slechts boomvuur. Het was een koud vuur wat aan hen beitelde, om hen nog meer klaar te maken voor het leven in de boom. De gezichten van reuzen waren in de boom die tot hen spraken. Op een dag stierf de vrouw. Heintje, een van de kinderen, nam de leiding over. Op de kamer van de oude vrouw stond een oude lift waar ze ingingen. Boven het huis bleek de boom gewoon door te gaan, en al snel waren ze in de wolken. Via een hele hoge tak kwamen ze in een andere boom terecht. Ze werden direkt door een konijn gegrepen en naar binnen gesleurd. Hier moesten ze gedwongen van vruchtenpastei eten. Ja, zei het konijn, want dit is de boom van de gedwongen vrucht. De kinderen vonden het niet zo erg, want de vruchtenpastei was erg lekker. Maar al snel moesten ze nog meer eten, en veel kinderen begonnen misselijk te worden. Heintje begon het toen flink zat te worden, trok zijn pistool en schoot het konijn aan flarden. Het bleek verder een prachtige boom te zijn. Ieder kind kreeg hier zijn eigen verdieping. Midden in de nacht maakte een ander konijn hen allemaal wakker, en dwong hen om chocola te eten in de gezamenlijke huiskamer. Eerst vonden de kinderen dat geweldig, maar toen ze later nog meer moesten eten werden sommigen al snel erg misselijk. Het konijn was verschrikkelijk aan het schelden. Heintje vroeg : ‘Mag ik vragen wat hiervan de bedoeling is ?’ Maar het konijn wilde er niks van zeggen. Ze hadden maar te gehoorzamen. Dat liet Heintje niet op zich zitten, greep zijn pistool en schoot op het konijn. Maar het konijn dook weg. Even later kwamen er nog meer konijnen binnen, en grepen Heintje. Heintje zou worden opgesloten achter tralies. De kinderen waren erg in paniek. Daantje werd hun nieuwe leider. ‘Zoals jullie hebben gezien is er hier niet veel pluis,’ zei Daantje. ‘We kunnen beter teruggaan.’ Maar toen ze bij de hoge tak terugkwamen zagen ze konijnse wachters staan. Toen zijn ze naar beneden gegaan, maar ook daar stonden konijnse wachters. De dagen erna werden ze weer gedwongen om chocola te eten, meer dan ze opkonden, en niemand kon er wat tegen doen. De kinderen werden doodziek. Weer riep Daantje iedereen bij elkaar en zei : ‘Dan maar zo hoog mogelijk.’ En ze gingen ditmaal gewoon zo hoog als ze konden. Ze hoopten dat ze weer een tak tegen zouden komen die hen naar een andere boom zou brengen, maar er gebeurde niks. Wel zagen ze ergens een deurtje waardoor ze naar binnen konden gaan.

Het bleek een lift te zijn, maar die kon alleen maar omhoog. De kinderen gingen in de lift, en Daantje drukte op het hoogste knopje. ‘Jullie zitten vast,’ zei een stem van de lift. ‘Niemand kan van de boom van de gedwongen vrucht ontsnappen.’ Veel kinderen begonnen te huilen. Ook Daantje wist niet wat hij kon doen. Toen ze uit de lift stapten zagen ze een heks zitten, met een slang en een beer. De beer was een knuffelbeer. Toen ze wat beter keken zagen ze dat de heks en de slang een standbeeld waren. De knuffelbeer begon te lachen. ‘Wat sta je te lachen,’ zei Daantje.

‘Jullie hebben vast moeten eten van de vruchtenpastei en de chocola, nietwaar ?’ zei de knuffelbeer.

‘Ja, hoezo ?’ zei Daantje. Weer begon de knuffelbeer te lachen, ditmaal te schaterlachen.

‘Wat sta jij daar nou te lachen, domme aap,’ zei Daantje.

‘Nou,’ zei de knuffelbeer, ‘ik vind het wel grappig.’

‘Grappig,’ zei Daantje, ‘het is helemaal niet grappig. We zijn er doodziek van.’ Weer moest de knuffelbeer daar erg om lachen.

‘Zit je ons nu uit te lachen ?’ vroeg Daantje.

‘Kom, knuffel me,’ zei de knuffelbeer ineens. Daantje stapte voorzichtig naar voren, en begon de knuffelbeer te knuffelen. ‘Laat mij maar met jullie meegaan, dan zal jullie niks overkomen,’ zei de knuffelbeer. Samen gingen ze terug en de knuffelbeer had gelijk. Nu hij mee was gekomen lieten de konijnen hen met rust. De knuffelbeer was heel aardig. Op een dag vroeg Daantje waarom de konijnen hen niet meer dwongen. ‘Omdat ze bang voor me zijn,’ zei de knuffelbeer.

‘Kun jij Heintje dan niet bevrijden ?’ vroeg Daantje.

‘Nee,’ zei de knuffelbeer, ‘een konijnenslot valt niet zo maar open te krijgen.’ De konijnse wachters stonden ook nog steeds bij de grote tak en beneden, en daar viel niet zomaar langs te komen. ‘Ik zal je vertellen hoe je bij de knuffelboom kan komen,’ zei de knuffelbeer. ‘Midden in de nacht als iedereen slaapt dan schuift het standbeeld van de heks en de slang even opzij waardoor er een tunnel ontstaat die tot de knuffelboom leidt.’

Daantje besluit er naar toe te gaan om meer kennis op te doen. Hij moet helemaal alleen gaan, want de knuffelbeer is van die boom verbannen. Voor de jongere kinderen zou het te gevaarlijk zijn. Alles lukt, en al gauw komt Daantje via de tunnel aan in de knuffelboom. Maar het is alles behalve een knuffelplaats. Militaire konijnen lopen hier rond. Daantje heeft nog nooit zoveel wapens bij elkaar gezien, en ze zien er heel gevaarlijk uit. Deze konijnen zien er veel erger uit dan de andere konijnen. Het zijn roofkonijnen, als ratten. En hun oren zijn ook een stuk korter. 'Neem van mij aan, deze konijnen zijn geen stumperds, nee, zeker niet. Geen ruzie mee krijgen,' zegt een konijn tegen hem. 'Wat kom je hier doen trouwens.' Maar Daantje loopt door. 'Wat hebben jullie met Heintje gedaan ?' roept hij. Even later komt hij bij een hok waarin een heleboel knuffelberen zijn, en waar ook Heintje zit. Heintje is flink boos. Heintje ziet er een stuk ouder uit, en vertelt hem dat ze gedwongen worden gevaarlijke medicijnen te slikken. Als dat zo door gaat heeft Heintje niet lang meer te leven. Daantje schrikt daar erg van. 'Daantje,' zegt Heintje, 'herinner je dat tante het eens heeft gehad over het huisje waar ze eerst woonde, vlak bij de boom, dat daar plagende elven woonden ? Misschien dat zij kunnen helpen. Wij kunnen niet van deze boom weg, maar als jij naar beneden loopt dan kon je door de voordeur eruit en naar ze op zoek gaan.'

Goed idee, zegt Daantje, en vertrekt meteen. Na een tijdje zoeken komt hij bij het huisje van het oude vrouwtje aan. In het huisje vindt hij de elfjes. Ze zijn erg droevig om wat ze het oude vrouwtje allemaal hebben aangedaan. Daantje vertelt hen het verhaal, en al snel gaan ze met hem mee naar de knuffelboom. Ditkeer gingen ze plagen en pesten zoals ze nog nooit eerder hadden gedaan, maar nu allemaal voor een goed doel. De konijnen waren snel allemaal van de boom vertrokken. Deze magische elven wisten heel goed hoe ze de kooi moesten openen, en al snel waren Heintje en de knuffelberen vrij.

De Drie Reuzen

In het stadje Glorrikom was een ware muizenplaag. Ze vraten alles wat los en vast zat, en de inwoners van Glorrikom waren hopeloos. Het bestuur van het stadje Glorrikom loofde een grote beloning uit aan de persoon die hen van de muizenplaag zou kunnen verlossen. Maar vele jaren lang kwam er niemand opdagen. Uiteindelijk op een dag kwam er een oud vrouwtje aan de poort van Glorrikom, en vertelde aan de poortwachter dat zij wel een middeltje had om met de muizen af te rekenen. De poortwachter zuchtte diep, en wist niet of hij dit wel kon geloven, maar al snel haalde het oude vrouwtje een spuitbus tevoorschijn, spoot wat in het rond, en de vele muizen die op de grond speelden vielen dood neer. De poortwachter kuchte even, maar kon toen zijn ogen niet geloven. Hij wreef in zijn ogen en keek nog eens. Zo snel als hij kon rende hij naar het stadsbestuur die er vreemd van opkeken.

'Breng dat vrouwtje hier,' zei het bestuur. Na een tijdje stond het oude vrouwtje op de stoep en toonde hen de spuitbus. Ze spoot even wat in het rond en direct vielen de muizen die op de grond speelden dood neer. 'Maar dat is geweldig,' zei het bestuur. En ze kon direct beginnen. En och, het vrouwtje begon zo te spuiten dat spoedig het hele stadje onder een zwarte walm was, en niemand kon nog iets zien. Het prikte zelfs een beetje in hun ogen. Toen de walm eindelijk na een lange tijd was gezakt waren alle muizen verdwenen, maar tegelijkertijd waren ook alle kinderen verdwenen, en het vrouwtje was in geen velden of wegen te bekennen. 'We zijn bedrogen !' riep het bestuur. En snel waren alle mensen in rep en roer. Waar waren hun kinderen ? En waar was het vrouwtje, want zij moest wel een heel erg gemene heks zijn.

Ver weg hoog in een gebouw waren de kinderen ondergebracht. Ze lagen allemaal doodziek in bedden, en het oude vrouwtje liep schreeuwend langs de bedden. 'Zo, nietsnutten, als jullie straks weer beter zijn, dan zal ik jullie eens leren wat werken is.' En toen de kinderen weer beter waren moesten ze hard werken voor de heks, voornamelijk in de vele keukens die ze had. De kinderen moesten veel brood bakken. Het brood was wel erg lekker, en ze kregen er zoveel van als ze wilden, maar de kinderen leden erg onder het bewind van deze vrouw. Het was er zo erg dat veel kinderen het niet meer konden uithouden. 'Oh, die oude heks,' zei een jongetje, 'ik kan haar wel wat aandoen.'

'We moeten gewoon ontsnappen,' zei een meisje.

'Ja, maar hoe ?' vroegen twee andere meisjes. Het gebouw was overal potdicht.

'Gewoon wachten totdat ze slaapt, en dan haar kamer doorzoeken of daar iets is, een sleutel ofzo voor iets,' zei een wat ouder meisje. Dat vonden de meisjes wel een goed idee. En toen de oude heks sliep slopen ze stilletjes naar haar kamer. Ze zochten in alle laden, maar konden niets vinden. Maar even later vond één van de meisjes iets onder een lamp. Het was inderdaad een sleutel. Stilletjes slopen de meisjes weer uit de kamer, waar andere meisjes hen opwachtten. 'Hebben jullie wat gevonden ?' vroegen ze. En al gauw werd de sleutel getoond, en een glimlach van verlichting kwam op hun gezichten. Er was een deur die naar een grot leidde, en daar paste de sleutel op. Alle kinderen werden opgetrommeld, en de uittocht zou beginnen. Het waren een heleboel kinderen. In de grot was een andere grote deur, bestaande uit twee deuren die tezamen één deur vormden. Beide deuren hadden een gouden roos op hen. Al snel klopten de kinderen op de deur. Een dwerg deed open. 'Welkom in het rijk van dwerg Tirolijn,' zei de dwerg. Ze kwamen in een grote zaal, en in het midden zat een grote reus van metaal. Er was een balkon rondom de reus waarop de kinderen stonden. 'Dit is reus Droomzaad,' zei de dwerg.

'Waar is dat voor ?' vroeg een meisje.

'Wel,' zei de dwerg, 'reus Droomzaad is de vriend van ieder kind, en beschermt hen tegen de heks.' Reus Droomzaad nam de kinderen mee naar een kasteel in het rijk van dwerg Tirolijn, waar ze konden wonen. De kinderen waren erg blij met het kasteel. Het was een erg groot kasteel met vele kamers. Er woonde al een meisje in het kasteel, die reus Droomzaad een tijdje geleden had gered uit de klauwen van de heks. Framboosje heette het meisje. Ze was heel lief, en ze was bijna helemaal van snoep gemaakt. De kinderen behandelden Framboosje als een prinses, en waren al erg snel dol op haar.

Maar op een nacht was het weer helemaal mis. De heks met haar vleermuizen viel het kasteel aan. Ze wilde de kinderen terug. De lucht was vol met grote vleermuizen die een hels kabaal maakten, en ze probeerden ingangen in het kasteel te maken door ruiten in the slaan. De kinderen waren met schrik geslagen, maar reus Droomzaad vertelde hen dat ze over de toversnoep-rivier achter het kasteel moesten zwemmen terwijl hij de heks met de vleermuizen zou tegenhouden. Over de toversnoep-rivier zou zijn broer, reus Snoepzaad, wonen, waar de kinderen veilig zouden zijn. De kinderen renden naar de toversnoep-rivier achter het kasteel zo hard als ze konden, en doken toen in de rivier waar ze zo snel mogelijk probeerden te zwemmen. Reus Droomzaad deed goed werk, maar er waren zoveel vleermuizen dat hij er velen niet kon tegenhouden. Die gingen achter de kinderen in de toversnoep-rivier aan, maar reus Snoepzaad kwam hen al tegemoet. Framboosje riep naar reus Snoepzaad dat reus Droomzaad zijn hulp nodig had tegen de heks. Snel zwom reus Snoepzaad naar de overkant, naar zijn broer, terwijl hij de vleermuizen terugdreef. Reus Snoepzaad kon vuurspuwen, en al snel verkoolden de vleermuizen, en de heks moest maken dat ze wegkwam. Hier kon ze niet tegenop. De kinderen waren inmiddels veilig achter de toversnoep-rivier.

Een andere reus kwam bij de kinderen staan. Het was reus Toverzaad, een andere broer van reus Droomzaad. 'Het lijkt erop dat het kasteel een wat betere bewaking nodig heeft,' zei reus Toverzaad. 'Het lijkt mij een goed idee dat reus Snoepzaad en ik vanaf nu onze broer gaan helpen met de bewaking.' Hij nam alle kinderen in zijn jas, en zwom met hen naar het kasteel. De kinderen voelden zich nu wel een stuk veiliger nu er drie reuzen waren om het kasteel te bewaken, en mocht het uit de hand lopen dan konden ze weer de toversnoep-rivier over. Het leek erop dat het nu wel goedging. De drie reuzen konden goed met elkaar overweg, en vormden een uitstekende bewaking.

De Betoverde Hof

Ze klommen over de muur, en keken recht in het vuur, het roze was betoverend, de rozen zo dromerig, als in een tovertuin. Wat was hier gaande ? Niemand wist het, ze staarden maar. De muur begon heet te worden, en ze moesten snel terug. Ze waren hier waarschijnlijk niet gewenst. Hadden ze hun meester maar niet gevolgd, en hadden ze maar niet zichzelf opgetrokken aan dat rode touw van fluweel. Dan hadden ze dit nu niet gezien, en dan waren ze hier ook nooit geweest. Ze moesten rennen voor hun leven, maar waar was het rode touw ?

Ze wilden gewoon weten waar hun meester woonde, omdat hij altijd zo geheimzinnig deed, en nu werden ze voor hun nieuwsgierigheid gestrafd. Het rode touw was er niet meer, maar ze konden niet zomaar naar beneden springen. Plotseling zweefde het rode touw voor hun neus, maar toen ze het grepen trok het hen nog hoger de lucht in. Het brengt hen naar een kasteel waar ze worden opgesloten. Ze kunnen echter wel vrij door het kasteel lopen. Boven in een toren vinden ze een kamer waarin een tovenaar woont, tovenaar Terpentijn, die ook in het kasteel opgesloten zit. Hij vertelt de kinderen dat er in het zogeheten boek der tijden een profetie staat dat hij eens bevrijd zou worden door een groep kinderen.

De deuren en ramen van het kasteel blijven magisch gesloten, en de tovenaar vertelt hen dat alleen een zogeheten lariksvuur plantje de poort van het kasteel zou kunnen openen. Dit plantje zou ergens groeien onder het kasteel, en dan zouden ze door de tuin van Mira de elf moeten.De tovenaar leid de kinderen naar een duistere trap die tot onder het kasteel zou leiden. De kinderen zijn wel een beetje bang van de duistere trap, want die gaat heel diep en wordt steeds donkerder. Als ze dan eindelijk een deur beneden hebben bereikt komen ze in de tuin van Mira de elf. De rozen ruiken hier zo lekker, maar het lijkt wel alsof ze betoverd raken. Plotseling staat de elf voor hen, die een bril heeft en een grote bos haren. Ook heeft ze een lang roze gewaad aan en een toverstokje. Maar ze is niet zo vriendelijk. ‘Ik weet waar jullie voor komen,’ zegt ze, ‘maar ik geef het jullie niet. Heks Iamina houdt prins Vajak al lange tijd opgesloten in haar kasteel. Ik was eens zijn prinses. Nu, als jullie hem bevrijden, dan zal ik jullie het lariksvuur schenken.’ Ze wees op een meertje aan de rand van haar tuin, met daarin een eiland waarboven het kasteel zweefde. De kinderen zien in dat ze geen andere keus hebben, en willen de arme elvenprinses ook wel helpen. ‘Het kasteel is alleen te bereiken op zeven winden,’ zei de elf. ‘Ga maar naar het meertje toe, dan zal Rapoentus, de kabouter van de zeven winden, jullie wel verder helpen.’

En dat deden de kinderen. Het was niet zo lang lopen, en al snel zagen ze een kabouter staan. ‘Het is heel simpel,’ zei de kabouter, ‘ik begrijp dat jullie naar het kasteel willen voor prins Vajak. Luister, kinderen, ik heb hier een gouden licht. Ga in het licht staan, en denk aan iets ergs totdat je huilt. En let dan goed op totdat er een gouden traan valt. Houd de gouden traan dan in de lucht, en roep : ‘Oh zeven winden, zeven winden, ik hoop dat jullie mij kunnen vinden.’ Dan zullen de zeven winden komen en jullie naar het kasteel brengen.’ De kinderen gingen in het gouden licht staan, en dachten aan iets ergs. ‘Denk maar aan het ergste wat je je maar kunt bedenken,’ zei de kabouter. En al snel begonnen de kinderen flink te huilen, totdat er hier en daar wat gouden tranen vielen. Ze hielden de gouden tranen in de lucht en zeiden : ‘Oh zeven winden, zeven winden, ik hoop dat jullie mij kunnen vinden,’ en al snel werden ze door zeven winden gegrepen en over het meertje gebracht.

‘Woont hier echt een heks ?’ vroeg Doortje, toen ze stilletjes het kasteel ingingen. De kabouter was er ook bij. ‘Oh ja,’ zei de kabouter.

‘Waar is ze dan ?’ vroeg Doortje.

‘Oh, ze kan overal wezen, het is zo’n groot kasteel,’ zei de kabouter.

‘En waar is de prins dan ?’ vraagt Doortje.

‘Oh, kom maar mee,’ zegt de kabouter, en haalde een vreemsoortige sleutel tevoorschijn, van rood gesteente. ‘Dit is de rode traan,’ zei de kabouter, ‘de traan van de prins. De kabouter liep regelrecht op een deur af, en opende de deur met de sleutel. Als ze binnen komen vinden ze alleen maar boeken. ‘Deze boeken heeft de prins geschreven,’ zei de kabouter, en nam één boek er tussenuit. ‘In één van die boeken staat dat hij in het boek der tijden heeft gelezen dat eens een groep kinderen hem zou bevrijden.’

‘Oh, de profetie,’ zegt Dirdos, ‘daar had tovenaar Terpentijn het ook al over.’ De kabouter schoof een boekenkast opzij, waarachter een poort van een gang was. Deze gang leidde tot de elvenschoon vijver. Hier woonde de elvenprinses Hyacinta. ‘Jullie komen vast en zeker om de prins te helpen,’ zei Hyacinta. Opeens werd alles erg donker, en er was een sterke wind. In het donker verscheen er een licht, omhuld door een zacht paars licht. Het was de fee Jestagide. ‘Oh, help dit land van sloten,’ zei de fee, ‘van geheimenissen onopgelost, oh help dit land, anders is het te laat, het is bijna het uur van algemis.’

‘Wie is algemis ?’ vroeg Klare, een ander kind.

‘Zij is een verschrikkelijk beest,’ zei de fee.

‘Hoe kunnen we prins Vajak helpen ?’ vroeg Kere, een ander meisje.

‘Hij zit opgesloten onder het meer van schoensmeer,’ zei de fee, ‘niet meer in het kasteel.’

‘Maar waar is dat meer dan ?’ vroeg Kere.

‘Rondom het kasteel,’ zei de fee. ‘Je kon misschien niet zien dat het schoensmeer is, maar dat komt omdat het gemengd was met tranen.’

‘Waarom dat ?’ vroeg Kere. De fee zei niets.

‘Hoe kunnen we daar komen,’ vroeg Tjoy, een ander kind.

‘Baad jezelf in elvenschoon,’ zei Hyacinta. ‘En je komt in de grotten onder het meer van schoensmeer.’

Al snel stapten de kinderen in de vijver, samen met de kabouter, om daar te baden. In een flits kwamen ze onder het meer van schoensmeer terecht, in een stelsel van grotten. ‘Hier moet de prins ergens wezen,’ zei de kabouter. Overal in de grotten waren tralies aan de zijkanten waarachter kinderen zaten, en allerlei soorten wezens. Het was een soort gevangenis-complex.

Tot hun grote schrik zien ze ineens hun meester achter tralies. ‘Meester, wat doet u hier,’ roept Klare. ‘Hoe kan u gevangen zijn terwijl u altijd les geeft op school.’ De kinderen waren diep geschokt en verbaasd.

‘Alleen overdag ben ik vrij,’ zei de meester. ‘Maar na schooltijd wordt ik weer opgesloten. Ze noemen me hier prins Vajak.’

‘Oh, dus u bent prins Vajak,’ zegt Dirdos. ‘Maar wie is dan elf Mira, die beweert uw prinses te zijn.’

‘Ze liegt,’ zei de meester, ‘zij is degene die mij opgesloten houdt en het lariksvuur bewaakt. Zij is heks Iamina, en het is bijna het uur van algemis, waarin ze in een monster zal veranderen, en dan worden we allemaal gebrouwen tot schoensmeer. Ze zal alles hier veranderen tot een grote ketel daarvoor.’

‘Wat kunnen we doen ?’ vragen Doortje en Kere.

‘Prinses Schoensmeer,’ zegt de meester. ‘Zij is de dochter van de heks. De heks heeft haar verbannen tot diep onder de grotten. Zij draagt de traan der rozen. Dat is de enige sleutel die deze gevangenissen kan openmaken, maar jullie moeten snel zijn, want het is al bijna het uur van algemis.’

De kinderen begonnen nu toch wel erg bang te worden. ‘Hoe kunnen we prinses schoensmeer bereiken ?’ vroeg Dirdos. Maar de meester zei niks meer, en stond als bevroren daar. In de verte hoorden ze gelach. Dichtbij de gevangenissen was een trap. Eén van de kinderen rende er naartoe, en de rest volgde. ‘Kom mee.’ De trap ging dieper de grond in, en al snel kwamen ze bij een open ruimte, waar een huilende prinses zat, en ze was helemaal bedekt onder schoensmeer. ‘Jullie meester heeft mij vroeger geprobeerd te helpen,’ zei de prinses. Het was inderdaad prinses schoensmeer. ‘Maar mijn moeder sloot hem op.’

‘Hoe kwam hij hier ?’ vroeg één van de kinderen.

De prinses zweeg. ‘Ik kan niet naar boven,’ zei ze. Ze gaf de rozentraan sleutel. ‘Dit is alles wat je nodig hebt. Maar daar kwam ineens haar moeder aan. Het was de heks. ‘Hier met die sleutel,’ gilde de heks. ‘Hier ermee.’

‘Moeder, alstublieft,’ zei de prinses. ‘Houd daar nou eens mee op.’

‘Oh, ik deel hier de lakens uit,’ gilde de heks. ‘En het is bijna het uur van algemis.’

‘Ren voor je leven,’ gilde de prinses. Maar de heks stond voor de trap. Ze konden geen kant op. De heks begon te grijnzen. ‘Nog even en jullie zullen allemaal omgesmolten zijn tot schoensmeer,’ zei de heks.

‘Toe prinses,’ zei Klare, ‘waarom kunt u niet met ons mee naar boven.’

‘Red jezelf,’ zei de prinses, ‘ik kan niet gered worden, maar red de meester en alle andere gevangenen. Dat is alles wat ik van je vraag.’

‘Nee,’ zei Klare, ‘vertel, zeg op, hoe kunnen we je helpen.’ De heks begon steeds dichterbij te komen. Sommige kinderen waren zo bang dat ze bijna jankten van angst. ‘De traan van groen en gif,’ zei de prinses, ‘is wat mijn hart kan vrijzetten. Het is traan van prins Vajak.’

‘Oh,’ zegt de kabouter. ‘Maar ik heb hier de rode traan sleutel van prins Vajak. Niet groen en gif.’

‘Vlug,’ zei de prinses, ‘lees wat er op die traan sleutel geschreven staat.’

‘Grijp die kabouter,’ krijste de heks, ‘grijp hem.’ Van bovenaf de trap kwamen allemaal grijze wachters aanrennen met speren en andere wapens.’ De kabouter sprong achter de prinses, en begon snel hardop te lezen. Ook de kinderen zochten toevlucht bij de prinses. ‘Doorboor die kinderen !’ riep de heks. De wachters hadden hun speren en wapens al klaar om te steken. De kinderen slaakten een gil. ‘Ga achter mij staan !’ riep de prinses. ‘Ik heb wel wat macht !’ De prinses knipte met haar vingers en ineens kwamen de wachters in slow-motion. De speren kwamen wel steeds dichterbij, dus nu moest de kabouter snel zijn. ‘Ik sterf een beetje in je armen, en kom ook een beetje tot leven daar,’ las de kabouter hardop. ‘Je bent de prinses van de morgen, en ’s avonds wil ik ook bij je zijn.’ Plotseling veranderde de rode traansleutel in groen en gif. ‘Mijn hart is vrij nu !’ riep de prinses. Overal verschenen groene personen met vleugels rondom hen. De wachters werden tegen de muur aan geslagen, en ook de heks viel opzij, en de groene wezens met de vleugels namen de kinderen, de kabouter en de prinses mee naar boven, waar ze de gevangenissen konden openmaken met de rozentraan sleutel.

De wezens brachten hen zo snel mogelijk naar de tuin van Mira, waar ze het lariksvuur konden plukken. ‘Het is bijna het uur van algemis,’ zei de prinses. ‘Het kan nu elk moment gebeuren. We moeten snel zijn.’ Snel gingen ze de duistere trap op, en maakten allereerst een poort open. Nu moest tovenaar Terpentijn nog ingelicht worden. Daar was het rode touw al. De kinderen grepen het, en riepen naar de tovenaar die al aan kwam hollen. Alles was al aan het smelten, en ze zagen hoe alles om hen heen in een ketel veranderde. De tovenaar had gelukkig nu het touw ook vast, en het touw trok hen weg van de smeltende massa. Een groen monster kwam naar boven, onder de schoensmeer. ‘Jullie zullen snel schoensmeer zijn,’ schreeuwde het monster. Het rode touw bracht hen boven de ketel uit. ‘Weg van deze tovertuin,’ riep de meester, die ook aan het touw hing, samen met de prinses. ‘Toe maar,’ zei tovenaar Terpentijn. ‘Het touw zal ons brengen naar mijn domein, de hof van Raak.’ Al snel kwamen ze in een prachtige hof met vele weelderige bijna in elkaar gevlochten planten, struiken en bomen. Het hek ging bijna vanzelf open.

In het midden van de hof was een prachtig wit huis waar ze allemaal een kamer kregen. Klare keek naar prinses schoensmeer, die er nu heel anders uitzag nu alle schoensmeer van haar gezicht weg was. ‘Maar u bent juffrouw Gezelle,’ zei Klare verbaasd. De andere kinderen zagen het nu ook, en meester Tobbe hield haar vast aan haar arm. Niet lang daarna trouwde prins Vajak met zijn prinses Schoensmeer, en ze leefden allemaal nog lang en gelukkig.

Het Zoete Zalf Bos

Ze zaten rondom de tafel : koning Klaproos, fee Boterbloem, kabouter Sleutelzaad, en Roosje. 'We moeten er echt wat aan doen,' sprak de koning. 'Dat kan zo niet langer. Prins Zoete Zalf is al te lang van ons weg. We moeten wat aan die nare heks doen.'

'Waar woont ze ?' vroeg Roosje.

'In het luisterbos,' zei koning Klaproos. Even later waren ze op pad naar het luisterbos. Het was een stuk lopen door de velden van kro-bloemen. Bij het kasteel aangekomen stond heks Greepbeen al op hen te wachten. 'Heks !' bulderde koning Klaproos. 'Laat prins Zoete Zalf vrij !' Maar de heks begon te lachen. 'Jullie kunnen toch niks tegen mij doen,' zei ze. Kabouter Sleutelzaad was in zijn boek aan het bladeren. Het was een toverboek waar vaak waardevolle dingen in stonden, en dan vooral op momenten waarop ze het nodig hadden. De teksten en de plaatjes in het boek leken altijd weer te veranderen. 'Assisteer mij,' zei koning Klaproos.

'Hier staat …,' zei kabouter Sleutelzaad, 'dat de heks onschadelijk gemaakt kan worden door sluipzand, en dat is in het bezit van de tovenaar van het peperplantjes-bos.'

'Geef hier dat boek !' krijste de heks.

'Op naar het peperplantjes-bos,' zei koning Klaproos. Weer was het een stuk lopen. De tovenaar had inderdaad het sluipzand. Het was toverzand. 'Zeg, wat een mooi boek heb jij daar,' zei hij tegen kabouter Sleutelzaad. Kabouter Sleutelzaad knikte. 'Zeg, ik heb een idee,' zei de tovenaar. 'Ik ga met jullie mee naar de heks, en zal er voor zorgen dat de prins snel vrij is.' Dat vonden ze allemaal een goed plan. De tovenaar liep voorop met het sluipzand, en weer kwamen ze na een stuk lopen aan bij de heks. 'Zo, zijn jullie daar eindelijk weer. Ik heb op jullie zitten wachten. Ik had nog een verassing voor jullie,' zei de heks.

'Nou, dat komt goed uit,' zei de tovenaar, 'want wij hebben ook een verassing voor u.'

De tovenaar strooide snel wat sluipzand over de heks heen. De heks lag snel krachteloos op de grond. Ze had haar macht verloren, maar ze begon te lachen. 'Nu ik, nu ik,' zei ze. 'Weet je, ik heb het jullie eigenlijk nog nooit verteld, maar dat zal ik nu doen, dat werd weleens tijd, nietwaar, maar mijn drie-ogige reuzenbroer, die de heksenkoning is, wacht al in het kasteel op jullie met koffie en gebak.' De tovenaar dacht dat hij met het sluipzand ook de drie-ogige broer van de heks onschadelijk kon maken, maar toen ze bij hem aankwamen, en de tovenaar het sluipzand op hem strooide gebeurde er niets. 'Je zal er wel wat anders voor nodig hebben,' zei kabouter Sleutelzaad. De drie-ogige reuzenbroer van de heks begon te bulderen van het lachen.

'Zeg knaap,' zei koning Klaproos. 'Laat onmiddellijk prins Zoete Zalf vrij.'

'Waarom zou ik ?' zei de drie-ogige broer van de heks.

'Nou, het is beter voor je om dat nu te doen,' zei koning Klaproos.

'Komt niks van in, hoor,' zei de broer van de heks. Ze keken allemaal in zijn drie ogen, die niets dan gemeenheid, duisterheid en akeligheid uitstraalden.

'Dit is niets anders dan bar en boos,' zei koning Klaproos. 'Koffie met gebak wordt dat dan genoemd, nou eerder brood met spinnekoppen. Zo ontvang je geen gasten.'

'Gasten, ha !' zei de broer van de heks. 'Jullie zijn indringers. Nou, maak dat je wegkomt, anders zul je misschien nooit de kans meer krijgen om weg te kunnen komen. Vlug.'

'Zeg, ik laat me niet zomaar door een vlegel de les leren,' zei koning Klaproos. 'Je laat nu de prins vrij, of het zal je zuur berouwen. Koffie met gebak, puh.'

'Ja, mijn zus heeft altijd de neiging mij beter voor te stellen dan ik ben,' zei de broer van de heks. 'Dat is dan haar probleem.'

'U bent het probleem,' zei Roosje.

'Ach wat,' zei de broer van de heks, 'pijp zeven krijgt ook praatjes.'

'En dat noemt zichzelf koning,' zei Roosje.

'Wat een koning zal dat wezen,' zei fee Boterbloem.

'Juist,' zei Roosje, 'een koning van klusje knudde.'

'Oh zeg, gaan we beledigend doen ?' vroeg de broer van de heks.

'Nee,' zei Roosje, 'dat is een gebakje van eigen deeg. Koffie erbij ?'

'Roosje, Roosje,' zei koning Klaproos, 'praten met die man heeft weinig zin.'

'Nou, hij moet gewoon ophoepelen,' zei Roosje brutaal. 'Hij gaat echt zijn zin niet krijgen. Hij zal echt wel moe van zichzelf worden.'

Ondertussen was kabouter Sleutelzaad in zijn boek aan het lezen. 'Hier heb ik het,' zei hij. 'De drie-ogige reus, ook wel heksenkoning genoemd, kan verslagen worden door het kikkerdril van dokter Repelmeel die woont in het regenplantjes-bos.

'Je gaat nu dat boek aan mij geven,' zei de drie-ogige reus boos. Snel gingen ze uit het kasteel, en gingen richting het regenplantjes-bos. Het was weer een stuk lopen. Dokter Repelmeel had het kikkerdril in allerlei ketels. Ook hij wilde wel met ze mee om de reus uit te schakelen, zodat de prins vrij zou kunnen komen. Hij liep voorop met een pannetje kikkerdril. Toen ze bij de reus waren aangekomen, smeet dokter Repelmeel het kikkerdril in zijn gezicht. De reus storte direct neer. Maar ook hij begon net als de heks te lachen. 'Ik had het jullie nog niet verteld,' zei hij, 'maar de wachter van de groene kerker, waar de prins is opgesloten, is nog wel verschrikkelijker dan ik.'

Ze begonnen het hele kasteel door te zoeken. Ergens onderin het kasteel vonden ze een boeken-kamer. Kabouter Sleutelzaad leunde tegen een boekenkast aan, die direct opzij schoof, zodat er een tunnel zichtbaar werd die naar beneden liep. Hier kwamen ze aan bij de groene kerker. Een groen monster met veel klauwen kwam op hen af. 'Wat jammer nou dat jullie hier zijn gekomen, want een ieder die hier komt, komt nooit meer weg,' zei het monster. 'Het was dom van de prins om hier te komen ! En nu is het dom van jullie. Niemand komt ooit nog uit de groene kerker. De groene kerker is gierig.'

'Dat kan me niet zoveel schelen,' zei koning Klaproos. 'Je gaat de prins nu loslaten.'

'Komt niks van in, komt niks van in,' zei het monster. 'Iedereen weet dat, dat je hier gewoon niet moet komen. Dat heeft zo z'n gevolgen, ziet u.'

'Ik zie helemaal niks,' zei koning Klaproos. 'Wij zijn hier voor de bevrijding van de prins. Je laat hem nu los, anders zul je wat beleven.'

'Zeg, jullie hebben waarschijnlijk nog niet goed door met wie jullie te maken hebben,' zei het monster.

'Dat kan ons niet schelen !' riep Roosje.

'Alsof het mij wel iets kan schelen,' zei het monster.

'U laat hem nu vrij,' zei Roosje.

'Ik laat helemaal niks vrij, er komt gewoon wat bij,' zei het monster.

'Nee,' zei Roosje, 'wat bent u gemeen.'

'En wat ben jij dom,' zei het monster.

Kabouter Sleutelzaad was weer in zijn boek aan het lezen. 'Hier heb ik het !' riep hij. 'De monsterlijke wachter van de groene kerker kan verslagen worden door feeen-lippenstift.'

'Jullie komen hier toch nooit meer weg,' zei het monster, 'dus vergeet die feeen-lippenstift maar.'

'Fee Boterbloem, heb jij nog feeen-lippenstift in je tasje ?' vroeg koning Klaproos.

'Nee, ik heb het thuis laten liggen,' zei fee Boterbloem.

'Niemand heeft het hier, dus geef de moed maar op,' zei het monster.

'Nee !' riep Roosje. 'Ik heb nog feeen-lippenstift !' Snel haalde ze het tevoorschijn.

'Kras het op hem,' zei kabouter Sleutelzaad. Roosje rende op het monster af, en begon met de feeen-lippenstift op hem te krassen.

'Nee, nee !' krijste het monster, 'ga weg met dat spul ! Nee, nee, doe dat ding weg !' Het monster begon geheel weg te smelten, terwijl het slot van de kerker losknapte. De prins was vrij. Snel namen ze prins Zoete Zalf mee terug naar het Zoete Zalf bos, waar ze allen woonden.

Zevenwind

In de verte een indrukwekkende processie van skeletten in harnassen, gewapend. Zij marcheren voor de ivoren poort van de schakelburcht waar Eruptus woont. Zevenwind grijpt zijn zwaard, en slacht drieduizend skeletten-ridders om vervolgens de reusachtige burcht binnen te gaan door de ivoren poort. “Wat moet dat daar,’ roept Eruptus hem toe. ‘Ik kom het goud terughalen wat jij van ons rijk hebt gestolen,’ brult Zevenwind. Zevenwind is gestuurd door de prinses. Maar Eruptus laat een vuurvlam op Zevenwind neerdalen die hij nog net kan afketsen met zijn schild. Dan werpt Zevenwind zijn zwaard in het hart van Eruptus, terwijl een doodslucht zich door de burcht verspreid. Onder de burcht ligt het goud, en zoveel andere schatten. Als loon krijgt Zevenwind de burcht waar hij voortaan kan wonen.

Dit is het verhaal van Zevenwind, de held, die eens het rijk redde uit de klauwen van een verschrikkelijk monster, de Pania. Na het verslaan van Eruptus is Zevenwind een welkome gast in het kasteel van de prinses. Hij krijgt daar ook zijn eigen logeerkamer waar hij zich altijd kan terugtrekken, hoog in het kasteel. De prinses komt hem daar vaak opzoeken. Gouden poeder stroomt uit de handen van Zevenwind. Hij houdt ervan om met het goud te spelen. Ook liggen er grotere stukjes goud die hij lieftallig langs zijn vingers laat glijden. De prinses is een lieftallige verschijning, en Zevenwind is erg dol op haar. Na een tijdje staat hij op, en vertrekt, want hij heeft nog veel dingen te doen. De prinses achtervolgt hem, en ziet hoe hij buiten wordt tegengehouden door een zwartachtig skelet. Het is het begin van een nachtmerrie voor het rijk. Zevenwind wordt gevangen genomen, en een enorm monster blaast zichzelf op tegen het kasteel. Het is de Pania, een draakachtige verschijning, met legers van miljoenen en miljoenen skeletten. Al snel gaat het hele volk in slavernij, en Zevenwind belandt in een diepe kerker. Daar krijgt hij geen bezoek, behalve dan van een oude tovenaar die zich had verbonden aan zijn ring. De tovenaar verschijnt als een geest en spreekt Zevenwind toe. De volgende dag moet Zevenwind voor Pania verschijnen. Pania verschijnt nu als een oude dame met een staf, en spreekt verschrikkelijke dingen over hem uit. De tovenaar verschijnt weer als een geest, en valt Pania aan, maar haar krachten zijn te sterk. ‘Blijf maar bij hem oude man,’ spreekt Pania. ‘Hij heeft wel wat bemoediging nodig.’ Dan begint ze ijselijk te lachen. Kreunend stort Zevenwind neer door de vervloekingen die ze over hem heeft uitgesproken, terwijl de oude man hem weer overeind helpt. ‘Heus, je kan niet veel doen, oude man,’ zegt Pania. Dan wordt Zevenwind door een paar skeletten nog erger geketend, en wordt in een diepe put geworpen, terwijl Pania hard begint te lachen. Achter haar hoofd verschijnen wat veren van een pauw, en langzaam verandert ze in een pauw en vliegt krijsend van het lachen weg. De skeletten ketenen Zevenwind aan de muur van de put, en vertrekken dan. ‘Het is niet erg, Swimbard,’ zegt Zevenwind tegen de oude man. ‘Het is niet erg.’

Na een tijdje komt één van de dochters van Pania bij Zevenwind kijken. Zevenwind vertrekt geen spier. ‘Goedzo, reus,’ zegt de dochter van Pania, we zijn al aan het overdenken en overleggen wat we met je zullen doen. Velen van ons hebben baat bij jou.’ Dan kietelt ze even met een veer onder zijn neus, en vertrekt dan weer. Inmiddels is één van de dienstmeisjes van de prinses in de burcht van Pania binnengedrongen. Ze is hier in opdracht van de prinses om Zevenwind terug te halen. Ze heeft wat toverkrachten, en ze hoopt dat het genoeg zal zijn om Zevenwind uit zijn benarde situatie te verlossen. ‘Kijk, kijk, wie hebben we daar,’ zegt Pania die ineens achter haar staat met haar zeven dochters. Eén van de dochters neemt een mes, en snijdt een stuk in de arm van het dienstmeisje. Het dienstmeisje begint te gillen, maar roept dan ineens om de magische zwaan, een toverspreuk, en niet lang daarna vallen ze allemaal op de grond als door een verblindend licht. Het dienstmeisje rent weg, en na een tijdje vind ze de put. Maar een paar skelettenwachters hebben haar op het oog. Eén van de skeletten trekt een pistool met een lange loper, en schiet het meisje neer met een soort zaad als van laserstralen. Het meisje weet nog net in de put te komen, en bungelt aan de rand. De oude tovenaar schiet haar te hulp, en met wat toverspreuken weet ze Zevenwind los te maken, maar dan staan de twee skelettenwachters aan de rand van de put. Zevenwind slaakt een kreet, terwijl de wachters door een vreemde kracht voorover vallen. Soms gaat het toveren Zevenwind goed af, maar dan moet er wel een krachtige tovenares in de buurt zijn. Niet lang daarna zijn ze uit de put, maar meerdere skelettenwachters beginnen in de gaten te krijgen wat er aan het gebeuren is. Ze blokkeren de deuren, en anderen komen op hen af. Dan maakt de oude tovenaar een gebaar, terwijl een zachte roze rookwolk hen in het niets laat verdwijnen. Zevenwind is door het dolle heen. Hij is blij dat de magie zo goed werkt, en dankt het dienstmeisje voor haar hulp. Waar heb je dat geleerd, vraagt hij.

Ze zijn nu hoog op het kasteel van de oude tovenaar. Zevenwind is blij met die oude toverring. Maar het volk is nog steeds in grote problemen. Het dienstmeisje vertelt wat ze met de prinses hebben gedaan, en dat voordat de prinses stierf ze tegen haar zei : Redt Zevenwind. Hij kan het volk redden. Zevenwind vind het verschrikkelijk dat de prinses niet meer leeft. Hij voelt zich nu erg verantwoordelijk voor het volk. Ze besluiten terug te gaan naar het rijk, maar daar vinden ze een verschrikkelijke ellende. Tegen de boze magie die hier heerst kunnen ze niet op. Maar dan krijgt Zevenwind een idee. Onder de burcht van Eruptus waar hij mocht wonen van de prinses daar zijn nog een heleboel geheime schatkamers. Wie weet wat ze daar allemaal nog tegen kunnen komen. En zo gaan ze alledrie naar de burcht. Heel diep onder de grond vinden ze een kamer met magische wapens en wapenrustingen. Sommige wapenrustingen zijn gemaakt van zeldzame slangenhuiden, en anderen van vreemd magisch leer. Dan begint er ineens een voorwerp dicht in hun buurt vreemd te piepen. Het is een soort doosje van een soort rubber. Zevenwind pakt het doosje op, terwijl het doosje begint te krijsen. ‘Wie ben je ?’ vraagt Zevenwind. ‘Ach,’ zegt het doosje, ‘ik ben een oud hulpje van Eruptus. Hij vond mij eens ergens in een kasteel van een rijk waarvan hij alle inwoners had verslonden.' Ze wisten dat Eruptus dat soort dingen deed, maar dit kwam nu goed van pas. 'Wat kun je voor ons doen ?' vroeg Zevenwind.

'Oh,' zegt het doosje. 'Dat is heel eenvoudig. Ik ben de windenmaker. Hef mij op, schud me en dan zullen de winden komen, en ik zal ketenen wie je maar wil.' Nou, daar had Zevenwind wel wat aan. Hij ging direkt terug naar het volk, en liet de winden uit het doosje komen, zoals het doosje had gezegd, en liet alle skeletten ketenen. Maar Pania en haar dochters waren daar niet van gediend, en ditmaal lieten ze het volk ketenen door de bliksem. Pania begon luid te lachen, en Zevenwind moest erg op zijn hoede zijn. Ook het dienstmeisje was met hem meegekomen, maar ze bewaarde veilige afstand. 'Waar wil je dat ik de skeletten naartoe breng ?' vroeg het doosje. 'Sluit ze maar op in een rots,' zei Zevenwind. En zo leidde het vreemde doosje door de ketenen van de wind de skeletten als in een processie het bos in, op zoek naar een goede rots waar ze in vastgeklonken konden worden. Pania was woedend, en kon niets doen, maar ze had nog steeds het volk geketend. Zevenwind begon de smaak te pakken te krijgen en ging weer naar de burcht van Eruptus. Weer ging hij onder de grond, op zoek naar nog meer schatten. In een andere kamer kwam hij weer wapenrustingen tegen, van slangen, vreemd leer, harige pantsers, harige schilden met zeldzame stenen erin, en ook vreemde helmen met veren. Ditmaal was Pania hem gevolgd met haar dochters. 'Ik weet wel dat je hier bent,' riep Pania. Het dienstmeisje schrok. Snel pakte ze een zwaard en wilde Pania tegemoet gaan. Maar Zevenwind hield haar tegen. Pania was in een verschrikkelijke spin aan het veranderen, en haar pijlen doorboorden het dienstmeisje. Zevenwind pakte een schild en wierp het naar Pania toe, maar het schild raakte één van de dochters die direkt buiten westen viel. Het dienstmeisje bloedde heel erg, en Zevenwind nam haar op, en ging dieper de schatkamers binnen. Velen hadden hem altijd gewaarschuwd dat hij niet te diep moest gaan, vanwege de grote gevaren. Maar nu kon Zevenwind niet anders. Ineens verscheen de oude tovenaar met een stenen zwaard. 'Hiermee kun je Pania verslaan,' zei de tovenaar. Zevenwind greep het zwaard, legde het dienstmeisje neer, en ging terug richting Pania. Pania lachtte hem uit toen ze hem zag met het stenen zwaard. 'Wat moet je met zo'n ding ?' lachtte ze. Maar snel stootte hij het stenen zwaard in haar buik, terwijl ze neerviel. Daarna sloeg hij haar overgebleven dochters ermee, en het gevecht was snel afgelopen. Toen hij buitenkwam met het dienstmeisje was het volk inmiddels bevrijdt van de bliksem-ketenen.

Niet lang daarna maakten ze Zevenwind tot koning, en het dienstmeisje werd zijn koningin.

Dragodan

Dragodan zit in zijn kasteel wachtende op het antwoord van de prinses. Hij heeft zijn hulp aangeboden aan haar, en nu wacht hij op de opdracht. Dragodan heeft lang gezwoegd voor allerlei duistere heren, en ditmaal is hij blij dat de prinses hem in dienst genomen heeft. Alleen moet hij nog te weten zien te komen welke opdrachten zij voor hem heeft.

Boven de bergen zweven een aantal magische wezens. Ze zijn op weg naar het kasteel van Dragodan met de boodschap van de prinses. Dragodan is erg blij als ze binnen komen. Ze dragen een speciaal zwaard voor hem. ‘Waar is dit zwaard voor ?’

‘Dit is de opdracht van de prinses,’ zegt één van de magische wezens. ‘Versla de Tundra en trouw met haar.’ Dat was wel een erg vreemde opdracht voor Dragodan. Dat had hij nog nooit meegemaakt. Hij wilde absoluut de draak wel verslaan, of het monster, wat het ook wezen mocht, maar hij wilde absoluut niet met haar trouwen. Hij was een vrij man, en hij wilde een vrij man blijven.

‘Oh, maar dan zal de prinses wel iemand anders zoeken om voor haar te strijden,’ zegt een van de wezens. ‘Ziet u, de prinses wordt namelijk met nachtmerries lastiggevallen door de Tundra, een gedrocht dat ’s nachts op haar balkon komt, een gevleugeld monster. Ze heeft iemand nodig die altijd bij haar is.’

‘Zeg maar tegen de prinses dat ik de Tundra kan verslaan zodat hij nooit meer terugkomt,’ zegt Dragodan.

‘Oh,’ zegt een van de wezens, ‘okay dat is goed. We laten het u weten.’

En na drie dagen zijn de wezens terug, en Dragodan mag komen. Dragodan neemt het zwaard aan, en de magische wezens leggen hem uit waar de Tundra woont. Voor Dragodan is het niet moeilijk het gedrocht te verslaan, want dat heeft hij al zo vaak gedaan. De prinses is hem erg dankbaar. ‘Is er dan niets wat ik u als geschenk aan kan bieden ?’ vraagt de prinses. Maar Dragodan schudt zijn hoofd. Dat hij de prinses blij kon maken was voor hem het mooiste geschenk.

Op een dag krijgt Dragodan weer bezoek van de magische wezens. Ditmaal hebben ze een andere opdracht voor Dragodan. Als Dragodan de opdracht zal vervullen, dan mag hij koning van het rijk worden. Maar dat wil Dragodan niet. Hij wil zijn vrijheid bewaren boven alles. ‘Wat is de opdracht ?’ vraagt hij.

‘De prinses heeft haar gouden armband verloren op reis. Kun jij hem terughalen ?’ vraagt een van de wezens.

Na een lange zoektocht komt Dragodan erachter dat de armband in handen is van een gevaarlijke vogel. Hij trekt zijn zwaard, en wordt bijna geobsedeerd door de prachtige armband met zoveel kleine steentjes die eraan bungelen. Zo’n prachtige armband heeft hij nog nooit gezien. Het wordt een moeilijk en bloederig gevecht met de vogel, een van de moeilijkste gevechten die hij ooit heeft gehad, maar toch slaagt hij erin de armband terug te krijgen, en brengt hem naar de prinses.

‘Weer dank je wel,’ zegt de prinses. ‘Dragodan, ik wil je een goede raad geven. Maak van de verslagen vogel je nieuwe wapenrusting, en geef ook wat van zijn veren aan mij.’ Dragodan doet wat hem gezegd wordt, en maakt van de botten en veren een nieuw pantser. Ook geeft hij enkele veren aan de prinses. De prinses was altijd gesluierd geweest voor Dragodan, maar ditmaal haalt ze haar sluiers weg. Als Dragodan haar ziet wordt hij direkt verliefd op haar, en wil niets lievers dan met haar trouwen en haar koning zijn. Daar had de prinses natuurlijk op gewacht, en zo zal zij koningin zijn.

Maar de raadgevende vogels van Dragodan vinden dat niet zo’n goed idee. ‘Laat jezelf niet zo door haar beheksen. Heus, je zal niet tevreden zijn in je huwelijk.’ En daarom nam Dragodan zich op een dag vlak voor het huwelijk voor om te vertrekken. Hij ging dieper de onderwereld in, en liet zich leiden door de raadgevende vogels, die hem al raad gaven sinds hij een kind was. In de diepten van de onderwereld vind Dragodan een heleboel vrouwen zoals de prinses, en hij weet dat als hij zijn hart aan hen geeft, dan is zijn leven afgelopen. Hij wil vrij zijn, en doen waarvoor hij geboren is : het vervullen van opdrachten.

Einde

Het Skelettenleger

Onder de aarde leven de ergst mogelijke indianenstammen, daar waar de dood heerst. Zij leven van de dood, en doden om te leven. Hun meester :

Krikwistik, een luguber skelet, die zijn opperhoofden heeft aangesteld over elke stam : elke stam één. Aan Krikwistik hebben zij allemaal verantwoording af te leggen. Als zij niet wreed genoeg zijn, dan komen ze voor de baas. Als zij niet overal dood en ellende brengen, dan zijn zij de pineut. Want wee degene die zich niet aan de wetten van Krikwistik houd, die zal ten prooie vallen aan iets ergers dan de dood, namelijk Krikwistik zelf.

Luid gillend en roepend zit hij op z'n paard om de stammen langs te gaan. En daar waar hij ongehoorzaamheid vind zullen klappen vallen. Harde klappen, want hij is immers Krikwistik, de verschrikkelijke.

Al die armelijke zielen gebonden door zijn ketenen hebben geen hoop wanneer zij voor Krikwistik moeten verschijnen. Hij geeft hen dood op dood. Over skeletten heerst hij, en hun geestverschijningen, om goedbedoelende en onwetende zielen te verstrikken in zijn netten. Over hun hoofden voert hij macht, en zijn toorn daalt op hen in de vorm van visioenen. Nee, niemand kan ontsnappen aan de toorn van Krikwistik. Zij die willen ontsnappen, of zijn valse genade en valse hoop aannemen, zakken alleen dieper weg in zijn valstrikken. Zij vallen ten prooi aan de meest doortrapte en wreedste indiaanse dodenstammen, waar skeletten hun lusten botvieren op hopeloze schepselen.

Op de vlakte van Terezebil rijdt een dodenrijder, hoog op 't paard, met vlag en speer. De vlag is een visioen die hij zijn slachtoffers voorhoudt. Als hij spreekt, bedriegt hij, bedottend. Zijn speer treft altijd. Hij is de rechterhand van Krikwistik, de ondeugd. Dan gilt hij om zijn geestesverschijning te verruilen voor zijn verschijning als skelet. Geen dier of ziel is veilig voor hem.

In de verte zijn de optochten van zielen die steun zoeken bij elkaar. In lange gewaden gaan zij, met kappen over hun hoofden. Maar de dodenrijder komt naar hen toe, en rijgt hen allen meedogenloos aan zijn speer, om met een slavenleger te vertrekken. Niemand zal werkeloos zijn in de dodensferen van Krikwistik. Niemand zal zich bezig houden met klagende optochten van het ach en wee. Nee, werken zullen ze allemaal, wanneer de speer van de dodenrijder hen doorsteekt.

De achtkoppige hond van Krikwistik gaat langs de huizen waar de zielen der vennen wonen. Speelt daar een kind onbewaakt, dan grijpt één der koppen het kind, en brengt het naar het rijk van Krikwistik. Er is geen hoop voor hen die door Krikwistik geketend worden. Zijn ketens zijn onverbrekelijk.

Een moeder gilt. Haar tweede kind verloren in zo’n korte tijd. De wind huilt en giert, en niemand die helpt. Tovenaars zijn veelal corrupt hier. Vaak werken ze rechtstreeks voor Krikwistik.

Maldachus is een hondenrijder. Ook hij vangt zielen, en brengt ze naar Krikwistik. Hij voert een leger aan van hondenrijders. Als zij de wind bespelen, dan roven zij de zielen uit hun bedden. Dit doen zij door bedriegelijke dromen. Zij zenden hun nachtmerries uit als wilde honden, om later een rijke vangst binnen te halen. Als de dodenvissers zijn zij.

Voor zoveel kinderen is het de laatste dag op school wanneer Krikwistik zelf op zijn wagen door de lucht gaat. Hij gelooft niet in dodenopvoeding. Ze moeten wild gemaakt worden, om aan zijn wetten onderworpen te worden.

Het geheim van zijn macht ? Een apparaat waarmee hij de aarde kan verschuiven, een machine die de ziel van een meisje vasthoudt. Eens vond hij haar op hulpeloze vlaktes. Maar al snel zag hij de bijzonderheid en zeldzaamheid van dit kind, en nam haar eerst onder zijn hoede. Maar toen het meisje zich niet aan hem onderwierp werd ze al snel het slachtoffer van zijn wreedheden.

Oh, begeert is dit apparaat in de onderwerelden. Hiermee maakt hij indrukwekkende progressies van windstreek tot windstreek, en maakt hij iedereen voor hem in siddering.

Niets dan dood en verderf zaait hij, en door de angst maakt hij bezit van hen. Ja, dan schiet hij pijlen van visioenen door hun botten heen, pijlen gemaakt van slangen. En zo voert hij hen gillend aan van dichtbij. Ja, hij woont in zijn slaven, door het vreemde apparaat. En zo, door het apparaat, werd hij Krikwistik, de Bottenspietser. Geen skelet is voor hem onbereikbaar. Door het apparaat heeft hij hen allen in zijn macht. Zijn stem is als het spietsen van botten.

Elke adem komt voort uit het apparaat, elk licht, elke geur. En alles wat het apparaat doet is bottenspietsen, als een schietende naaimachine. Niemand vind zichzelf nog terug die door Krikwistik is gestoken. Zij vallen allemaal als in een diepe slaap, en worden door vreemde dromen weer opgewekt. Zij leven voor en door ... de dood.

Er is geen geest die dichterbij kan komen dan Krikwistik, en er is geen geest die verder weg kan zijn dan hij. En daarom komen klappen dan ook veel harder aan, gaan pijlen sneller en dieper. Hij voert een leger aan van de dood. En allen brengen zij voort : de melk van de dood.

Niemand steekt dieper dan Krikwistik, daar waar geen tovenaar kan komen. Over hun hoofden voert hij macht. Zij die ongehoorzaam zijn doet hij lijden, diep in zijn martelkelders. Zij lijden daar zonder enige vorm van verlichting, omdat zij het hadden gewaagd de meester te dwarsbomen. Nu zijn zij dan vol spijt en wroeging.

Krikwistik is een dun skelet met een klein hoofdje en een reusachtige cape. Hiermee rijdt hij vaak op hoge paarden, of op zijn wagens, gevolgd door duizenden, zo niet miljoenen skeletten die hem dienen en volgen. Over de dood heerst hij.

Op een dag onthoofde hij een meisje, en stopte haar hoofd in een vissenkom. Dit soort lugubere dingen deed hij veel, om zijn koninkrijk van assecoires uit te breiden. Hij was een verzamelaar van vreemde objecten, en alles leek aan kettingen vast te zitten. Zijn lievertjes hadden extra voorrechten. Meestal hield dat in dat zij mochten jagen op de voor anderen verboden terreinen.

Zij waren de verzamelaars van doodskoppen en zielen, waarmee ze hun eigen hutten bouwden. Ze waren dikwijls rumoerig en luid schreeuwend, en waren de schrik onder de dodenstammen. Krikwistik was erg trots op hen, want zij hielpen hem de angst staande te houden. Deze skeletten waren wild, en brachten chaos waar ze kwamen.

Eens bracht hij de vissenkom met het meisjeshoofd naar een dodensmid, die er een lichtgevende punt van maakte op zijn dodenstaf. Hiermee kon hij de doodskoppen doorboren.

De dodenrijder is het voorwerp van zijn trots. Ook de dodenrijder heeft vele voorrechten, en hen die hij voorrechten heeft gegeven. De dodenrijder woont aan de stranden van de dood, en zij die van hem voorrechten hebben gekregen wonen vaak aan strandjes van bosmeren en andere doodsmeren en doodsrivieren. Op een dag gaf Krikwistik hem een speerpunt waarmee hij zielen kon spietsen als door een schietende naaimachine.

De hut van de dodenrijder is gemaakt van botten, doodskoppen, en hopeloos bungelende zielen. Zij gillen wanneer iemand dichtbij komt. De hut van Krikwistik is gemaakt van lugubere voorwerpen, en van de dood zelf. Hopeloos bungelende zielen gillen wanneer hij langskomt, en zij ijlen.

Door een bepaalde vloeistof kan hij de doodskoppen en de botten laten krimpen en laten verkleuren. Hier sterft de dood nooit. Ook slapen zij niet. Er komt nooit een einde aan hun lijden. Alles doet hen gillen en verkleuren.

De hutten van hen die voorrechten hebben zijn ook gedecoreerd door dit soort dingen. Alhoewel velen in wigwams wonen. Wanneer zij klederen dragen, dan zijn deze gemaakt door een speciale kleermaker van Krikwiktus.

Deze kleermaker woont diep in het dodenbos, waar hij zijn zielenfokkerijen heeft, allemaal voor zijn werk. Ook hij is de trots van Krikwiktus, een man met vele voorrechten, en velen die hij met voorrechten heeft bekleed. In de jungle van de dood werkt hij met zijn vloeistoffen.

De jagers van de kleermaker zijn meedogenloos, omdat ze maar één doel hebben : huiden, botten, en andere assecoires voor de kleermaker. Ook werken de zielen mee aan het bereiden van de vloeistoffen.

Deze zielen slapen nooit, door de dood sterven zij niet. Zij zijn ingespoten met vloeistoffen die hen altijd wakker houden, en om alles gillen zij.

Sommige zielen zijn geheel gemaakt van geluiden, en anderen zijn geheel gemaakt van geuren, maar de kleermaker doorsteekt hen allemaal. Krikwistik gaf hem eens een schietende boor. Ook heeft hij een schietende zaag. Nee, niemand is veilig wanneer de kleermaker op jacht gaat. Meestal laat hij dat doen door zijn jagers, maar soms gaat hij zelf op jacht. Dan gaat hij naar de stranden, naar de doodsmeren en de doodsrivieren. Ook vijvers slaat hij niet over. Het is een beestachtig skelet, met een reusachtige cape die hij telkens om zijn dunne lichaam heenslaat. Krijsend voert hij hen aan in de jacht, en krijsend doorboort hij zijn slachtoffers. In de nachten doorboort hij hun bedden, want zij zullen niet slapen. Daar zal hij wel voor zorgen. Hij legt kreeften op hun huiden, om de vloeistoffen binnen te brengen, en dan staan zij op voor altijd, als zombies. Nooit meer werden zij door de slaap gewassen sinds zij waren aangeraakt door de kleermaker.

’s Nachts liepen zij paniekerig heen en weer, totdat de kleermaker ook hun oren doorboorde, hun keel en hun neus. En zo werden hun geesten doorboort, en stonden zij aan de doodsmeren en doodsrivieren. Ja, de kleermaker bouwde van hen hutten en wigwammen. Ook maakte hij wapens van hen.

Er was niemand gemener dan Krikwistik die zijn dienstknechten zo geprogrammeerd had : de dodenrijder, zijn rechterhand, en dan Maldachus de hondenrijder, de achtkoppige hond, en de kleermaker. Zij waren de werktuigen van een luguber apparaat.

Op een dag maakte hij hen week als lammetjes, en riep hij zijn lievertjes, degenen die hijzelf met voorrechten had bekleed. Dit was de dag dat zijn lievertjes de taken overnamen. Het was de dag waarop de windstreken van de dood begonnen te bloeden. Niemand had deze slachting zien aankomen, en Krikwiktus werd verhoogd in een vloeistof waar niemand meer kon slapen of sterven. Zij waren de levende dood, en werken zouden zij. Het skelet voerde een leger van zombies aan, en sindsdien had zijn koninkrijk geen grenzen meer. Krikwiktus had altijd al gewacht op de dag dat hij zijn metgezellen uit de weg zou ruimen.

Een nieuwe kleermaker stond op, die krijsend de slaven aanvoerde. En deze kleermaker was zo goed dat er nieuwe lichamen gemaakt werden, de lichamen van de dood. Maar alleen Krikwistik bepaalde wie die lichamen zouden krijgen. Krikwistik had die voorrechten alleen voor zijn lievertjes bepaald. En de hopeloze, hulpeloze en weke zielen die die lichamen zagen werden geteisterd door de bottenketeners, geesten die de botten vastketenden, een grijze massa die hun hersenen scheen te verlammen.

En de broosheid van de zielen zonder hoop begon alleen maar te groeien, en werd een delicatesse voor het skelet. Deze zielen brachten een nieuwe drank voort : de nieuwe melk van de dood. Dit was een stinkende melk waarvan de nieuwe lichamen leefden.

De nieuwe lichamen stelden zich op bij de doodsrivieren en doodsmeren, en vormden nieuwe groepen en stammen. Vaak waren er gevechten, tot groot plezier van Krikwistik. Maar het grootste plezier hechtte hij aan de zorg, die helemaal geen zorg was. Zij die er waren om wonden te verbinden maakten het alleen maar erger. Dit waren de valstrikken van Krikwistik.

Krikwistik had er een genoegen in die valstrikken uit te denken. Het was een meesterbrein. Door indiaanse geesten, skeletten en zombies bracht hij doem op de vlaktes van de dood. Hij was de dood zelf, de levende dood.

Op een dag kwam er een indiaanse geest naar de dodenhut van Krikwistik. De indiaanse geest verkocht skeletten, en was nog niet goed op de hoogte wie Krikwistik was. ‘Skeletten te koop,’ zei de ietwat verwarde geest tegen Krikwistik die verbaasd naar buiten kwam. Krikwistik sloeg de geest neer, en stal zijn wagen vol skeletten. Later kwam Krikwistik erachter dat het een gouden vangst was, want deze skeletten konden doordringen tot in de dieptes van de grond, en van gesteentes. En voor Krikwistik was het een koud kunstje ze te temmen.

Het gebeurde vaak dat verwarde geesten langskwamen om dingen te verkopen. Krikwistik kocht nooit wat. Hij stal alleen.

Een geest genaamd Zeverdijm dacht dat hij een skelet was, maar Krikwistik liet hem keer op keer zien dat hij toch maar gewoon een geest was. Geesten waren hier ondergeschikt aan de skeletten, alhoewel sommige indiaanse geesten veel macht over skeletten konden hebben. Zielen en zombies waren over het algemeen ondergeschikt aan de geesten, maar hierin waren ook uitzonderingen. Er waren zielen die verschrikkelijk veel macht hadden. Dit was dan omdat Krikwistik daar een reden voor had. Krikwistik was sluw en listig, en voor geen gat te vallen. Hij was de oudste van allemaal.

Het ging Krikwistik allemaal niet zozeer om kracht, maar om sluwheid. Hij was een intelligent meesterbrein. Hij kon uren nadenken over zijn machtsgebied, en dacht dingen uit om zijn machtspositie te versterken. Hiervoor riep hij dan vaak de hulp van de dodensmid in.

Op een dag had hij een dodenspiegel neergezet. Het was als een web waarmee hij zielen, geesten en nog lagere doodsvormen lokte. Door de dodenspiegel zagen ze hun geliefden, maar konden daarna niet meer uit de webben loskomen. Zo werden ze levend voer voor Krikwistik.

Er was geen groter genot voor Krikwistik dan de dodenspiegel, waar hij ook zijn apparaat door liet werken. Zelf kon hij door de dodenspiegel door alle grenzen heen reizen, en werden zijn verschijningen nog machtiger. Krikwistik wilde het ‘Al’ in handen hebben. En hij wist dat hij daarvoor een labyrint moest bouwen met bedriegelijke, misleidende en verlokkende verschijningen. Ook de lagere doodsvormen kwamen al snel in zijn hand. En er was veel waarvoor hij hen kon gebruiken.

Zij werkten in het labyrint, en al snel begon hij liefde te vatten voor sommige lagere doodsvormen. Hij stelde zijn zielen en zombies over grote hoeveelheden van hen aan. Zij waren als kreeften en kwallen die in de hersenen van hun slachtoffers gingen wonen, en hen zo van misleiding tot misleiding brachten, steeds dieper in het labyrint. Ze maakten hun slachtoffers zo tot altijdgroeiende voedselbronnen.

En zo werd het labyrint van Krikwiktus een stempel dat gedrukt werd op een ieder die zich met de dood inliet. Iedere ziel die zich door de lagere vormen van de dood liet verlokken werd gebrandmerkt. Voor Krikwiktus was het alleen een teken van zijn macht.

Einde

De Skelettenrijder

Er was eens een jongen die de moeders van andere jongens roofde. Hij had een luchtschip geheel gebouwd van botten, waarmee hij op de winden van de dood dreef. Ook had hij een heleboel muziekinstrumenten van de dood gemaakt. Hiermee betoverde hij de moeders altijd, en maakte hen zo deel van zijn harem.

Maar vrij waren die moeders niet. Ze waren nu voor altijd aan zijn schip geketend. Het was een groot schip, dat wel, en de moeders hadden ook wel veel beweegruimte, maar ontsnappen konden ze niet. De jongen was een schurk, een bandiet, een moederdief, maar hij was bovenal een moordenaar, een huurmoordenaar. Voor geld deed hij alles, omdat hij zo zijn schip kon uitbouwen, en zijn verzameling instrumenten. De jongen was de schrik van de dood, en maakte mooie muziek om te ontvoeren en te moorden. Maar de moeders hield hij veelal in leven. Zij werden de slaven op zijn schip. Tijd om te rouwen was er niet. Er moest gewerkt worden.

Vroeger was de jongen lid van een straatbende, een motorbende, maar nu was zeilen op zijn doodsschip zijn grote liefde. Het was een lieve jongen, die maar hoefde te glimlachen om iemand te betoveren. Hij had van die diepe ogen waar je van weg kon smelten. Vroeger moordde hij altijd door messen, maar nu verdronk hij zijn slachtoffers. Hij lokte ze eerst naar het water en dan sloeg hij zijn slag. Hij hield zich daarom veel op bij de meren van de dood.

Ook was de jongen een strateeg. Je kon bij hem legers inhuren. Hij was een zakenman van de dood geworden. Zelf was hij al jaren dood, en daarom gaf hij niks meer om het leven. De dood leverde hem alleen maar geld op.

Zo op het eerste gezicht hingen zijn haren altijd voor zijn ogen, maar als je dan dichterbij kwam, dan zag je zijn prachtige donkere ogen er doorheen. Velen smeekten hem altijd hen mee te nemen op zijn boot over de rivieren en de meren van de dood, en om hen de geheimen van de dood te leren kennen.

Iedereen die zijn prachtige muziek hoorde scheen niets meer om het leven te geven, alleen maar om de dood. Het was een zachte jongen, maar wel één die de nachtmerrie bracht. Hij kon je de stuipen op het lijf jagen. Hij dronk al vele jaren van de geheime wateren van de dood, waar alleen zijn schip kon komen. Daar liet hij de vrouwen baden. Dat deed hij altijd als het dodenrood aan de hemel stond.

Maar op een dag viel een wilde indianenstam zijn schip aan. Het waren skeletten, zombies, geesten en lagere doodsvormen. Ze trokken zijn schip de diepte in. De indiaanse dodenstam werd aangevoerd door een skelettenrijder. Hij had een kaal hoofd met een hanenkam. De jongen kende de skelettenrijder wel, want ze hadden vroeger in dezelfde straatbende gezeten. Het werd een lang gevecht, waarin de skelettenrijder uiteindelijk het schip overnam. De vrouwen moesten nu nog harder werken, en werden veel ruwer behandeld. De huid van de jongen werd afgesneden, en zijn skelet werd aan de voorkant van het schip vastgeregen. De skelettenrijder kon niet veel doen met de muziekinstrumenten, en maakte er wapens van en jachtgerei. Ook maakte hij er kooien van waar veel vrouwen in terecht kwamen. Na een tijdje kreeg de skelettenrijder genoeg van het schip, en liet er hutten van maken.

De skelettenrijder roofde vaders, en stopte hen in de kooien. Vaak liet hij de moeders weer vrij. Vaak gebruikte hij de mannen voor zijn legers. Ook hij had vele huurlegers. Maar op een dag stopte hij daarmee. Hij wilde leven door de jacht en niet door geld. Voor hem had de dood niets met geld te maken maar met de jacht. De winden van de dood hielden zich met geld bezig, maar de stormen van de dood hielden zich bezig met de jacht.

Hij jaagde voor huiden, botten en vlees, om zichzelf te kunnen kleden en voeden. Ook zette hij daarvoor een fokkerij op, zodat hij minder hoefde te jagen. Hij zette hiervoor een heleboel vallen uit. De skelettenrijder maakte door botten stevig aan elkaar te binden fuiken van kooien, waardoor de prooi in een fokkooi terechtkwam. Hier stierven de fokprooien niet, maar werden zo een bron van kleding en voedsel. Als de prooien na een aantal jaren geen huid en vlees meer produceerden werden ze skeletten, en daardoor bruikbaar voor andere dingen. De skelettenrijder besteedde het meest aandacht aan de skelettenfokkerijen. Maar al gauw ontdekte hij een varkenssoort dat eeuwenlang vlees en huid kon voortbrengen. Het waren de doodsvarkens van het Afgazide-soort.

De Skelettenrijder had een kleine doodskop om zijn nek waarmee hij met gemak kon infiltreren onder hen die dachten dat ze leefden. De skelettenrijder zei altijd dat ze in bevroren dromen leefden. In zijn ogen waren ze de lagere vormen van de dood. Ze staarden zich altijd zo blind op de weinige zintuigen die ze hadden, dat de rest er dood bijhing. Zij die van de dood leefden hadden veel meer zintuigen, zoals de jacht en de slacht. Op zijn voorhoofd had de skelettenrijder een steen die zijn fokzintuig was. Maar de skelettenrijder had veel meer zintuigen. De dood had zoveel zintuigen.

Op een dag werd de skelettenrijder lastig gevallen door een apparaat dat zielen doorboorde. In het begin leek de skelettenrijder zich er goed doorheen te slaan, maar later begon het apparaat aan hem te kleven, en drong naar binnen. Sindsdien was de skelettenrijder zichzelf niet meer, en werd alles door het apparaat overgenomen. Hij probeerde zijn drie sterkste zintuigen uit op het apparaat om los te komen, de grote drie : jacht, slacht en fok, maar het apparaat was veel te sterk. Na een lange strijd had de skelettenrijder geen ziel meer, en was nu geheel een skelet geworden. Het apparaat had zijn ziel geheel opgeslokt, en vertrok weer. Sindsdien merkte de skelettenrijder dat zijn reukvermogen sterk verbeterd was, en was daarom het apparaat zelfs dankbaar.

Een steen op zijn buik was zijn slacht-zintuig, en een steen op zijn borst was zijn jacht-zintuig. Het JSF-moduum was een orgaan in zijn voeten die de grote drie bestuurde. Het belangrijkste orgaan wat daaruit voortkwam was de penuum, het geslachtsorgaan, dat creativiteit voortbracht. Hierop was zijn gehele schepping gebouwd. Er werd niet in termen van sex gedacht, alleen maar door dit systeem. Sex was verraderlijk, omdat het de hoofdzintuigen afsloot, en de bijzintuigen opblies, voor de algehele aftakeling van het zintuigelijke.

Het beste wapen dat de skeletttenrijder had was een boog waarmee hij botten kon spietsen. Hiermee ving hij de skeletten. Vaak ging hij er gillend mee op jacht. Door te gillen opende hij al zijn zintuigen, en activereerde hij zijn boog. In de gevangen skeletten plaatste hij implantaten die hun botten automatisch spietsten wanneer ze aangroeiden. En daarom werd hij genoemd : de skelettenrijder.

Het was altijd indrukwekkend als hij op zijn wagen reed, geheel gemaakt van skeletten. Maar op een dag kwam het apparaat terug om zijn botten te doorspietsen. Het apparaat had een veel betere apparatuur dan hijzelf had, en al snel kleefde het apparaat aan hem vast, en drong weer naar binnen. Ditmaal om een implantaat te plaatsen dat zijn botten automatisch zou spietsen. Maar dit implantaat spietste niet eenmalig en niet alleen maar dat wat aangroeide. Nee, dit implantaat bleef spietsen totdat het bot een grijze massa was geworden. De botten werden geheel misvormd tot een nieuwe creatie. De skelettenrijder begon te groeien. Ook begon de skelettenrijder verfijnder te bewegen. Na een lange tijd vertrok het apparaat weer. De skelettenrijder paste zijn boog aan, en ging weer op jacht. Ditmaal zocht hij ook de grotere skeletten op, omdat hij zelf ook groter was geworden.

‘Necreon !’ sprak een reuzenskelet tot hem. De reus was erg vriendelijk. De reus had een wagen geheel gemaakt van Afgazide-varkensskeletten. De skelettenrijder wist dat het eeuwen zou duren voordat zo’n wagen klaar zou zijn, omdat het doodsvarkens waren wiens huid en vlees bleef groeien. De reus bood de skelettenrijder zijn wagen aan, en zei weer ‘Necreon !’

De skelettenrijder ging in de wagen zitten. Deze wagen was minstens dertig keer zo groot als zijn oude, en de reus maakte hem duidelijk dat deze wagen ook wel minstens dertig keer zo snel ging. Ook brachten de botten telkens een vloeistof voort waar de skelettenrijder van zou kunnen drinken. Die vloeistof was ook het geheim van de kracht en de snelheid van de wagen, en zorgde ervoor dat de wagen niet afbrak. De wagen was erg veerkrachtig en soepel.

De reus liet hem zien hoe de wagen gestart moest worden, en begon te gillen. Zo hard en vibrerend kon de skelettenrijder niet gillen. Toen haalde de reus een implantaat uit zijn borst en plaatste het in de borst van de skelettenrijder. Toen kon de skelettenrijder gillen als nooit tevoren, en kon de wagen starten. De reus rende achter de wagen aan, en ging even later op het achterste gedeelte van de wagen zitten. Samen maakte ze de grootste jacht die ze ooit hadden gehouden. Ze waren op zoek naar skeletten, en dan voornamelijk de reuzenskeletten.

De reus leidde hem naar een plaats waar de reuzenskeletten van varkens woonden, en de reus bouwde een wagen groter dan die van de skelettenrijder. De reus legde hem uit hoe zo'n wagen te bouwen, en al snel kon ook de skelettenrijder zulke reuzenwagens bouwen als de beste. De vriendschap met de reus betekende veel voor de skelettenrijder.

Het implantaat van het apparaat zorgde ervoor dat de skelettenrijder steeds groter en groter werd, en op een dag was hij groter dan de reus, en verliet hem. De skelettenrijder ging zich bezig houden met het fokken van de reuzenskelettenwagens. Steeds weer bouwde hij grotere en betere wagens.

Einde

De Skelettenrijder II

Op een grote heuvel stond zijn nieuwe wagen, geheel gemaakt van de skeletten van de afgazide-varkens. Vol trots beklom hij de heuvel. De wagen was heel lang, en stond daar gestroomlijnt, schitterende in de zon van de dood. 'Ik wilde dat ik deze al langer had,' zei de skelettenrijder tegen zichzelf. Hij startte de wagen door een gil, en reed er mee weg. Hij reed er mee naar een dodenstad geheel gemaakt van botten. Langs de weg stonden wat vrouwen die wel een ritje met zo'n wagen wilden maken. Deze vrouwen hadden vreemde lichtgevende strepen op hun rug. Maar de skelettenrijder had geen tijd voor die onzin. Trouwens, hij wist hoe gemeen die vrouwen konden zijn. Ze konden je wagen stuk maken, of zelfs van je afroven.

In de stad leverde hij even een pakketje af, en racete toen verder. Een heleboel van zijn oude wagens werkten nu in zijn fokkerijen. Op eenzame vlaktes sprong er opeens een vrouw in zijn wagen, die hij er ook snel weer uitduwde. Hij had geen tijd voor die onzin. Die vrouwen moesten zelf maar aan een wagen zien te komen. Maar steeds meer schenen ze zich tussen de skeletten van de wagen te verstoppen.

Op een dag was zijn wagen gestolen, en hij wist wel bijna zeker dat vrouwen dat hadden gedaan. Een skelet van een gorilla trooste hem, en gaf hem een nieuwe wagen, nog groter en langer dan de vorige. De gorilla leerde hem gillen zoals niemand anders kon, zodat hij zijn nieuwe wagen kon starten, en zo niemand anders de wagen kon starten. Het skelet van de gorilla zou voortaan met hem meerijden, in ieder geval voorlopig, om de verstekelingen uit de wagen te smijten.

Maar steeds meer vrouwen probeerden op allerlei manieren een plaatsje in de wagen te krijgen. De skelettenrijder begon eraan te wennen, spietste gewoon hun botten en maakte hen deel van de wagen. De botten van de vrouwen schenen snel weer te verteren. De skelettenrijder had er niet veel interesse in om van vrouwenskeletten wagens te maken, omdat er van de skeletten van de afgazide-varkens veel betere en snellere wagens gemaakt konden worden. Ook liet hij veel mannenskeletten die hij vroeger voor de wagens gebruikte vrij.

Hij ging van dodenstad naar dodenstad voor nieuwe onderdelen voor zijn wagen. Hij wilde van zijn wagenfokkerij af, om zo met zijn nieuwe wagen, die een fokkerij op zich was, de Afgazide-woestijn over te gaan. Zo verkocht hij zijn wagenfokkerijen voor nieuwe onderdelen voor zijn nieuwe wagen. De nieuwe wagen zou zo krachtig en snel genoeg zijn om goed door die woestijn heen te komen, zonder ten prooi te vallen aan allerlei ongemakken.

Alles was in handen van de Afgazide-geleerden, de doodsgeleerden, en als hij over die woestijn zou heenkomen, dan zou hij vrij zijn van al hun invloeden. Het project slaagde, en hij kuste zijn wagen. Nu was hij vrij.

Er waren een heleboel geleerden die het hem niet gunden. Ze hadden het niet zo op skelettenrijders. Maar dat kon de skelettenrijder niets schelen. Voor hem was het uur van de vrijheid nu aangebroken, en hij zocht een beste heuvel op om daar zijn wagen neer te zetten. Achter de heuvel was een dorp van reuzenskeletten. De skelettenrijder zelf was gelukkig ook niet één van de kleinsten. Maar deze reuzen waren echt groot, en ze fokten varkensskeletten. De skelettenrijder kwam er achter dat ze helemaal geen wagens hadden, alleen hutten. De skelettenrijder moest daar wel een beetje om lachen, want wie geen wagen had was volgens hem ook niet vrij. In de nacht stal hij wat onderdelen van de reuzen die hij voor zijn wagen kon gebruiken, en racete toen snel weer door. Ook verderop kwam hij langs vele dorpen en steden van reuzenskeletten, maar nergens kwam hij wagens tegen. Met grote ogen keken de reuzen naar zijn wagen. Zoiets hadden ze nog nooit gezien. Anderen renden gillend weg.

Later toen hij bij rivieren, meren en bossen aankwam begon hij wat wagens te zien. In het begin waren die niet zo heel groot, maar toen hij bij de jungles aankwam en de velden waren die zelfs groter dan zijn eigen wagen. Toch waren de reuzen daar erg onder de indruk van zijn wagen, omdat die zo anders was, en al snel wilden ze zijn wagen ruilen voor een hele grote wagen van hen. Na wat onderzoek stemde de skelettenrijder toe, want nu had hij een wagen zo snel en krachtig als de stormen van de dood. Deze wagen was gemaakt van de skeletten van hele andere varkenssoorten. De varkens waren veel groter, en maakten veel meer lawaai.

Het was een echte jachtwagen, en de skelettenrijder gilde luid om op zoek te gaan naar de grootste varkensskeletten voor zijn wagen. Als hij er eentje gevonden had, dan doorspietste hij alle botten van het skelet. Vaak liet hij de varkensskeletten ook weer los, als hij nog grotere had gevangen. Zijn wagen moest de beste worden.

Nooit heb ik een snellere wagen gezien dan die van de skelettenrijder. Hij ging sneller dan de storm, komende om te stelen. Toch viel hij op een dag weer in de handen van de Afgazide-geleerden. Ze wilden een bepaald sap uit zijn botten persen. Dit sap zou voor de Afgazide-geleerden belangrijk zijn om op een krachtigere planeet van de dood te kunnen komen. Ze hadden daartoe een ruimtecapsule ontworpen die in de lucht geschoten zou worden. De Afgazide-geleerden doorstaken al zijn botten om het sap eruit te melken. De skelettenrijder werd een dorre gestalte toen hij steeds minder van dat bottensap begon op te geven. Zijn bronnen raakten uitgedroogd. Voor de skelettenrijder was dit de woestijn van zijn leven. De Afgazide-geleerden brachten hem na het project naar de woestijn waar ze hem begroeven. Niet lang daarna vertrokken de Afgazide-geleerden naar de krachtigere planeet van de dood, maar het liep uit op een mislukking. Na eeuwen in zijn woestijngraf te hebben gelegen stond de skelettenrijder op, ditmaal om wraak te nemen op de Afgazide-geleerden. Hij had geen wagen meer, maar de Afgazide-geleerden zouden hun skeletten daarvoor moeten doneren. In kracht stond de skelettenrijder op, en calculeerde de horror in die hij hen zou brengen. Hij reeg hun skeletten aan elkaar, en bouwde zijn wagen, en werd een grotere doem dan hij ooit was geweest. Niet velen kennen de doem van dit tijdperk, omdat hij van te voren hun ogen liet sluiten. Het zou voor velen te wreed zijn, en dat wilde hij hen besparen. Maar met de Afgazide-geleerden had hij geen medelijden, en zij zijn nog steeds de getuige van deze doem.

Einde

De Skelettenrijder III

Op een eenzame hoogte rijdt een man op een wagen, als op een paard. Het is de skelettenrijder. Hij gaat trager dan ooit, en zijn stappen zijn droevig. Plotseling trekt hij aan de teugels, en het skelet waarop hij rijdt staat stil. Een andere man komt langs, ook droevig, maar trekt dan een pistool, schiet, en de skelettenrijder valt van zijn skeletwagen. Is dit het einde van de skelettenrijder.

De man raapt het levenloze skelet op, en snijdt de botten van elkaar weg. Thuisgekomen maakt hij er een kleed van. In de skeletwagen was hij niet geinteresseerd, alleen maar in de rijder. Zijn vrouw komt thuis, ziet het kleed en is onder de indruk. Ze tikt met haar hand tegen het kleed van botten, en een prachtig geluid ontstaat als de botten tegen elkaar klikken. Dit lijkt het einde van de skelettenrijder. De man vertelt zijn vrouw over de skeletwagen, en zijn vrouw gaat naar de plek om de wagen op te halen. Zij is er wel in geinteresseerd. De skeletwagen is tam, gedresseerd. Het skelet lijkt op het skelet van een reuzenvarken of een zwijn. De vrouw klimt erop gilt, en het dier begint te steigeren. De vrouw krijgt het beest niet meer stil, en moet er even later vanaf springen. Teleurgesteld gaat ze naar huis. Haar man heeft de doodskop van de skelettenrijder in een kom gestopt. Samen staren ze ernaar.

De man is al oud, de vrouw nog erg jong. Midden in de nacht begint het bottenkleed te bewegen. Door de storm. Een stormrijder komt binnen, grijpt het kleed, en daarna de kom met de doodskop, en vertrekt. Thuisgekomen zet de stormrijder het skelet in elkaar, maar de skelettenrijder leeft niet meer, zelfs niet van de dood. Het is een verloren zaak. En zo staat het skelet jarenlang in een klaslokaal. Totdat een jongetje op een dag moet nablijven, en het skelet eens van dichtbij bekijkt. ‘Ik wilde wel dat ik zo’n skelet was,’ dacht het jongetje bij zichzelf, ‘dan zou ik ze eens allemaal een lesje leren.’ Even lijkt het alsof het skelet beweegt. Het jongetje schrikt. ‘Wat doe jij daar !’ zegt de stem van de leraar die net binnen komt.

‘Oh niets, meneer,’ zei het jongetje, ‘ik dacht alleen maar even aan .... ach laat maar.’ De leraar loopt naar zijn bureau, steekt een kaars aan, en daarna zijn sigeret. Zo doet hij dat altijd. Het jongetje kijkt naar de leraar. ‘Hoeveel skeletten heeft u eigenlijk ?’ vraagt het jongetje. De leraar kijkt ongeinteresseerd op, en zegt : ‘een stuk of vijftig, allemaal in het magazijn.’

‘Mag ik ze eens zien ?’ vraagt de jongen nieuwsgierig.

‘Natuurlijk,’ zei de leraar.

Als de jongen even later in het magzijn is en de skeletten ziet, zegt hij : ‘Wauw, een heel skelettenleger.’ In gedachten ziet hij zichzelf als de aanvoerder van die skeletten en droomt even weg. ‘Kom niet te dichtbij !’ roept de leraar. ‘Ik wil niet dat ze breken.’

‘Hoe komt u daar allemaal aan ?’ vraagt het jongetje weer nieuwsgierig.

De leraar komt ook wat dichterbij, en glimlacht. ‘Ik heb ze eens gekregen van een indiaan waar ik vroeger mee bevriend was. Ik was bij een indianenstam in Zuid-Amerika.’

‘Wauw,’ zei het jongetje. ‘En denk je dat die skeletten door de indianen waren vermoord ?’

‘Nee,’ lachtte de leraar. ‘De indianen hadden die skeletten gewoon in de loop van de tijd in het oerwoud gevonden. Indianen zijn vaak skelettenverzamelaars.’

‘Heeft u ook indianenboeken ?’ vraagt het jongetje weer nieuwsgierig.

‘Oh, wel honderden,’ zei de leraar ineens heel vriendelijk. ‘Als je wil wil ik er wel eens een paar voor je meenemen.’

‘Graag,’ knikte de jongen.

Een paar dagen later gaat de jongen met een tas vol indianenboeken naar huis. Thuisgekomen legt hij de boeken allemaal op zijn bed neer. De boeken zijn erg luguber, over indianen die op skeletten rijden. Eén zo’n indiaan werd de skelettenrijder genoemd. Het jongetje wilde wel dat hij een skelettenrijder was. Dan zou hij ze allemaal eens een lesje leren. Ook leest hij over de bottenknopers, zij die allerlei dingen van botten maken.

Na een paar maanden heeft de jongen alle boeken gelezen, en krijgt dan van zijn leraar een nieuwe tas mee. Deze boeken zijn nog luguberder, en het jongetje kan er ’s nachts niet goed van slapen. Hij krijgt er nachtmerries van. Maar toch leest de jongen dapper door, zelfs tot diep in de nacht. Op een dag vind zijn moeder één van de boeken, en wordt erg boos. De jongen moet de boeken direkt terugbrengen, maar hij verstopt gewoon de boeken wat beter.

In de boeken wordt ook de biologie van de dood beschreven, dat gaat over hoe het lichaam van de doden werkt, en wat voor soorten daar allemaal te vinden zijn. Soms heeft de leraar het er weleens over in de les, en de jongen vind het erg interessant.

Op een dag is de jongen ziek, en droomt dat hij dood is. Hij heeft nu een nieuw lichaam, en ontdekt de vele soorten van de dood. Er zijn skeletten, zombies, geesten, zielen, lagere doodsvormen en zo verder. Maar de jongen is in zijn droom een skelettenrijder, met een wagen geheel gemaakt van skeletten. Ook droomt hij dat de leraar een skelettenrijder is, en zijn moeder. Ze rijden in het oerwoud.

Maar dan schiet een man met een pistool de leraar neer, en daarna zijn moeder. De jongen krijst, en weet te vluchten op zijn skelettenwagen. Hij voelt dat de man ook achter hem aankomt, maar ziet dan een boog met wat pijlen liggen in de skelettenwagen. Hij pakt de boog met de pijlen, draait zich om, en schiet dwars door de botten van de man heen. Maar nu komt er ook een vrouw op hem af. Hij kent de vrouw niet, schiet weer, en schiet dwars door haar botten heen. Zowel de man als de vrouw vallen op de grond, en de jongen snelt weg op zijn skelettenwagen. Even later komt de jongen in een stad geheel gemaakt van botten. ‘Er is een pakje voor u aangekomen, meneer ....’ zegt iemand. Het pakje wordt in zijn wagen gegooid. Als de jongen even later het pakje openmaakt is het een brief : ‘Ik ben dood, maar ik leef,’ staat erop. ‘De leraar leeft ook. Van je mamma.’ De jongen besluit terug te keren naar de plaats waar zijn moeder en de leraar werden vermoord. Maar hij vindt daar niets dan botten. Voorzichtig probeert hij de botten weer in elkaar te zetten, en na een tijdje zijn het twee skeletten. ‘Ik houd van je,’ zegt het ene skelet. ‘Mamma !’ roept de jongen, en omhelst het skelet.

Dan wordt de jongen wakker. Zijn moeder is net op de overloop de was aan het doen. ‘Mamma ?’ vraagt de jongen.

Zijn moeder zegt niets. Wanneer ze zich later naar hem toedraait kijkt hij recht in het gezicht van een skelet. De jongen schrikt maar nauwelijks. ‘Ik heb gehoord wat je wens was,’ zei het skelet. ‘Je bent nu een skelettenrijder als in je droom.’

Als de jongen naar buiten kijkt ziet hij één en al oerwoud.

Einde

De Terugkeer

van de

Skelettenrijder

Een man loopt ’s avonds laat naar zijn kast met glazen en drank. Hij is een drankverslaafde, en gooit weer een nieuw glas vol. Buiten hoort hij wat vreemde geluiden, kijkt uit het raam, maar ziet niets. Dan loopt hij naar boven en gaat naar bed. Zijn vrouw slaapt al. Even later hoort hij weer vreemde geluiden. Als hij weer door het raam kijkt ziet hij een paar jongens op motors. Ze kijken naar boven, en zien hem staan. ‘Hey ouwe, rot op !’ roept één van hen. De man schuift het gordijn voor het raam, doet zijn oordopjes in, en gaat slapen.

Midden in de nacht wordt de deur ingetrapt. ‘Zeg ouwe,’ zegt een stem, ‘ik had je toch gezegd dat je moest oprotten. Je wil niet luisteren, hè ?’ Het is een jongen van die motorbende. Karel heet hij, en is de schrik van de buurt. Vaak is hij dronken. Hij grijpt de oude man uit zijn bed en smijt hem uit het raam. De vrouw van de oude man slaakt een gil.

De volgende dag is het in de krant : jongen uit motorbende vermoord een oud echtpaar. De jongen wordt opgepakt en komt in de gevangenis terecht. Ook daar is hij onhandelbaar. Maar op een nacht verdwijnt hij mysterieus. Ze kwamen hem halen .... zij, de skelettenrijders.

Elke nacht raast hij op zijn motor gemaakt van skeletten over de daken, om iedereen het leven zuur te maken. De skelettenrijder is terug.

De skelettenrijder beukt nog steeds door deuren heen, om niets dan skeletten achter te laten. Met zijn boog doorboort hij hun botten, om slaven op te richten, tot een groot skelettenleger. Ook met zijn oude bendevrienden heeft hij geen medelijden.

‘Karel van Dijk !’ wordt er luid gesproken. Er werd ook luid op de tafel geklopt. Een boze leraar staart de jongen aan. ‘Zit je weer te dromen. Je moet opletten, jongen, anders ...’

‘Ja wat dan, anders ?’ zegt een jongen die achter Karel zit. ‘Anders wat ?’ Hij staat op, grijpt de leraar en drukt hem tegen de muur aan. ‘Wat nou anders ? Laat die jongen toch dromen.’ En dan smijt hij de leraar op de grond. Sommige meisjes beginnen te gillen. De leraar heeft het schuim op de mond staan. Dan staat hij boos op, en rent het klaslokaal uit.

‘Wat doe je nou, man ?’ vraagt een andere jongen.

Even later is de leraar terug met een paar andere leraren, en de jongen wordt meegenomen. Na een paar minuten komt de leraar alleen terug, en gaat verder met de les.

Als Karel thuiskomt rent hij direkt naar boven en gaat op zijn bed liggen. Een uur later is er telefoon. Het is de jongen die de leraar had gegrepen. ‘Ze hebben me van school gestuurd, Karel. Maar ja, dat is beter dan naar die saaie lessen te moeten luisteren. Ik zeg maar zo : lang leve de lol. En droom jij maar lekker verder. We pakken die lui nog wel een keer.’ Karel zegt niets. Hij laat de jongen maar praten. Karel is geen jongen van geweld.

Karel is een stille jongen, iemand die niet veel praat.

De dag erna belt de jongen weer, en hangt hele verhalen tegen Karel op. De jongen vraagt Karel voor een fietstochtje.

Midden in het bos vertelt de jongen dat hij eigenlijk een skelettenrijder is. Karel schrikt. Hij herinnert dat ze dat boek eens moesten lezen voor een project. Was het hem nu echt in het bolletje geslagen ? Maar de jongen was serieus.

‘Moet ik nu bang voor je worden ?’ vroeg Karel benauwd.

‘Nee,’ zei de jongen, ‘we zijn toch vrienden, jij en ik ?’ Opeens begint de jongen een hele andere toon aan te slaan, en Karel wordt steeds banger en banger. ‘Weet je eigenlijk wel waarom ik je mee naar het bos heb gevraagd ?’ vraagt de jongen.

'Nee,' zei Karel, 'eigenlijk niet. Maar ik begin al een vermoeden te krijgen.' Ineens maakt Karel rechtsomkeerts en fietst hard weg. De jongen komt hem achterna. 'Ik krijg je wel, Karel, wees maar niet bang. Ik krijg je, en dan zal de afrekening volgen.' Bij een bosmeertje is de weg afgezet. Karel springt van zijn fiets af, en rent verder in het bos. De jongen heeft hem al bijna ingehaald. Dan rollen ze samen door het zand. De jongen grijpt hem, en zegt dan dat hij maar een grapje maakte. Karel haalt diep adem, en kan er achteraf wel om lachen. Maar op zijn gemak voelt hij zich niet.

'Doe nou eens rustig,' zegt de jongen. 'Waarom doe je altijd zo gehaast. Ik weet je bent een stille jongen, maar doe nou eens gewoon normaal, zoals ik.'

'Wat wil je dan dat ik doe ?' vraagt Karel ongemakkelijk.

'Zullen we samen in het bos gaan wonen ? Dan maken we een hut van takken,' zegt de jongen. Karel glimlacht. Eigenlijk lijkt hem dat wel wat.

Later bleek dat de jongen die hut allang had gemaakt. Het was een prachtige hut. De jongens slapen die nacht dicht tegen elkaar aan. Midden in de nacht zijn er vreemde geluiden. Karel loopt naar buiten, en ziet daar een zwarte gestalte staan. Karel schrikt, gaat weer naar binnen, en probeert de jongen wakker te krijgen. De jongen slaapt erg diep, maar wordt na een tijdje door het geduw en hard gefluister wakker. Ook de jongen loopt naar buiten, ziet de zwarte gestalte staan, en gaat weer naar binnen. 'Niets bijzonders,' zei hij.

'Niets bijzonders ?' vraagt Karel.

'Nee,' zegt de jongen. 'Gewoon een zwarte gestalte. Wat is daar mis mee ?'

Maar Karel voelt zich er niet goed bij, en loopt weer naar buiten. Ditmaal komt hij dichterbij. Het is een skelet in een zwarte cape. Karel schrikt. Wie zou dat hier neer hebben gezet ? Later bleek dat de jongen dat zelf had gedaan toen Karel al sliep.

De jongens besluiten wat zuidelijker te gaan wonen, waar het wat warmer is, en bouwen daar weer een hut. Maar ditkeer gaat er van alles mis. Het hutje wordt een puinhoop, en ze besluiten een wigwam van dierenhuiden te maken.

'Denk jij nog weleens aan dat boek de skelettenrijder ?' vroeg de jongen op een nacht.

‘Nee,’ loog Karel.

‘Nou, ik anders wel,’ zei de jongen. ‘ik denk liever na over de skelettenrijder dan over school.’

‘Wie heeft dat boek eigenlijk geschreven ?’ vroeg Karel.

Op een dag besluiten ze de schrijver op te zoeken. De schrijver woont in een kasteel, in een ver afgelegen bos. Het kasteel staat vol met skeletten. De schrijver slaapt overdags en waakt ’s nachts. De kast van de schrijver staat vol met enge boeken. De schrijver nodigt de jongens uit om een tijd bij hem te logeren. Hier krijgen de jongens de schrik van hun leven. In de nacht verandert de schrijver in een skelet. ‘Ja, ik heb jullie gewaarschuwd,’ zei het skelet. ‘Ik ben niet normaal, maar anders had ik nooit kunnen zijn.’ Het skelet rent achter hen aan, en de jongens rennen door het hele kasteel heen. Plotseling vallen er allemaal skeletten vanuit het plafond naar beneden, en de beide jongens worden er onder bedolven.

‘Is het nu eens afgelopen ?’ riep Karel. ‘Het moet nu afgelopen zijn, al die onzin.’ Maar het levende skelet kwam dichterbij, en haalde toen een lang en vlijmscherp mes tevoorschijn. ‘Hiervan leef ik,’ zei het skelet. ‘Zo niet, dan ben ik dood.’ De beide jongens beginnen te krijsen.

‘Goedemorgen Karel,’ zei een stem. Karel wordt wakker en ziet het gezicht van zijn moeder met een lieve glimlach.

‘Ik heb over Kerwin gedroomd, mamma,’ zei Karel. ‘dat hij weer leefde. We zaten beiden in dezelfde klas, en hij nam het voor me op. ‘Kerwin is dood,’ zei zijn moeder. ‘Ik weet dat het moeilijk is om dat te aanvaarden, maar het leven is niet anders.’

‘Ja, maar mamma,’ zei Karel, ‘ik was toch blij dat ik weer over hem heb gedroomd. Het was net echt, alsof hij echt weer bij me was.’

‘Karel,’ zuchtte zijn moeder, ‘Kerwin was een vreemde jongen. Wat zou hij geworden zijn als hij niet zo jong was overleden ? Zeg het maar ... crimineel, moordenaar, dief, of kanibaal, stroper of kinderlokker ? Echt, het is beter zo. En er waren dingen die wij jou nooit verteld hebben. Hij was niet te vertrouwen met andere kinderen.’

‘En toch mis ik hem, mamma,’ zei Karel.

‘Oh, dat is omdat je hem niet kende. Je was nog te jong,’ zei z’n moeder. ‘Hij heeft andere kinderen met messen bewerkt, en zelfs eens een jongetje laten verdrinken.’

‘Ma, houd op met die onzin, ik geloof je niet,’ zei Karel. Moeder glimlachte. ‘Heus, ik help je alleen om je het te laten verwerken, die dag dat hij ... nou ja, je weet zelf wel wat er gebeurde.’

‘Je probeert me het nog moeilijker te maken lijkt wel, ma. Je weet dat ik niet tegen die grapjes kan.’

- Oh, maar als je teveel denkt dat het zo’n lieve jongen was, dan verwerk je het nooit. Je gaat al jaren niet meer naar school vanwege je trauma.

‘Mamma, ik heb dat trauma zelf verdient. Ik had voor hem op moeten komen toen hij door dat groepje in elkaar werd geslagen. Wist ik veel dat ze later een mes in hem zouden steken ?’

- Oh, maar als jij hem had geholpen, dan hadden ze jou ook aan het mes geregen. Heus, het is beter zo.

‘Ma, hij hielp mij altijd goed met allerlei dingen. Ik voel me zo’n verrader, zo’n lafaard.’

- Jongen, het was niet laf, maar wijs. Voor hem was het al een verloren zaak.

Karel staart zijn moeder aan en stort zich huilend in haar armen. Na al die jaren is hij er nog steeds niet overheen gekomen, en leeft hij als in de greep van een skelettenrijder, iets dat hij niet kan zien, maar toch altijd bij hem is.

Einde

D e   K o o i

De indiaanse machine kreeg een roos op het scherm, en kon zo mikken op de machine die voor hem stond. Er kwam een kaartje naar boven genaamd bloedstraal die hij kon inzetten om door een bloedstraal de machine voor hem uit te schakelen. De machine activeerde het kaartje, mikte door de roos richting de machine te schuiven, en met een duistere donderslag, het donkerder worden van het beeld, en een rijke bliksemslag liep er een lange straal bloed als kokend spuitende olie naar de andere machine toe om die uit te schakelen. De indiaanse machine die geschoten had draaide zich om, en genoot door zijn achteruitkijkspiegeltje van de explosie. Nu moest hij maken dat hij wegkwam.

Hij was een robot, gemaakt om te doden, gemaakt om uit te schakelen. Hij was gemaakt voor de jacht, voor een duistere nacht. Een andere machine probeerde hem tegen te houden. Nu verscheen er een ander kaartje op zijn dashboard. Een groene gifstraal, weer als spuitende kokende olie. Snel was het kaartje geactiveerd, en een hoge toon telde af, terwijl hij met zijn roos mikte. Luid gegil was daar, terwijl de groene gifstraal als de bliksem neerdaalde op de machine die hem blokkeerde. Toen was er gelach en een paar dubbele explosies, met het zoemende geluid van vriendelijke sirenes, en wat heldere bliksemschichten die als een koepel alles verlichten. De indiaanse machine was tervreden, en rende door. Een robot was hij, gemaakt om te doden dat wat hem in de weg stond.

De robot rende een gebouw binnen, zag wat vrouwen en schoot. Hier had hij geen kaartjes met speciale aanvallen voor nodig. Die gebruikte hij alleen voor moeilijke machines. Nu schoot hij gewoon met zijn standaard D.A.X.-pistool, ingebouwd in zijn helm. Met het roosje mikte hij altijd makkelijk. Hij had ook een getatoeeerd roosje op zijn arm. Soms brandde dat roosje weleens als hij weer had geschoten. Hier was niemand vriendelijk. Niemand wilde hem hier hebben. Hij rende over de trappen naar boven, en stoorde zich niet aan politieagenten die hem probeerden tegen te houden. Met alle gemak slingerde hij ze over de relingen van de trap. Voor polities was hij vaak immuun. Hij was zelf een agent.

Plotseling stond hij voor een groene grote deur als een garagedeur. Een kaartje verscheen in zijn dashboard van een getatoeeerde vrouw. Hij wist wat dat betekende. Toen hij het kaartje activeerde explodeerde de deur door ultra-hoog K.S.X.-geluid. Snel was hij op het dak en rende naar een helicopter toe. Net op tijd. Toen hij instapte explodeerde het gebouw onder hem, en daarna de hele omgeving. Hij had een setje kaartjes in zijn handen, en stopte ze in een gleuf van zijn arm. De piloot glimlachte wat. ‘Zo, heb je de opdracht volbracht, Huskelson ?’ vroeg de piloot. Maar de robot zei niets, opende de deur van de helicopter en trok de piloot in een ruk eruit. Snel nam de robot het stuur over, en zag onder hem de hele planeet exploderen.

Nu een lange tijd kwam de robot in een jungle aan. Er waren niet veel lui die hem tegen konden houden. Alle apen hier waren robotten. Hij knalde er een paar neer, en zocht een goede boomhut uit.

De robot leek op een gokmachine, maar hij was hoog geprogrammeerd, zeer verfijnd. De geleerden waren zeer tevreden over het resultaat, totdat hij hen opzocht op hun veilige berg en hen één voor één afmaakte. Waren het de kaartjes die hem op een ander idee hadden gebracht ? Of had een andere, hogere straling de robot overgenomen ? De robot maakte een heleboel veranderingen in hun computers, verliet het gebouw en liet het van een afstand exploderen. Hij voelde zich opgesloten in zijn pak, en na een tijdje trok hij z’n pak uit. Een lange slanke indiaanse man staarde naar het pak waarin hij zolang opgesloten zat. Hij was nu eindelijk vrij. Een vampier was hij, en in de jungle was zijn plaats. Hij ving een slang, beet de kop af van het dier en begon langzaam zijn bloed eruit te zuigen. Hij was een wilde, levende van de dood, en de dood leefde van hem. Hier waren leven en dood hetzelfde, net als wreedheid en genade, zachtheid en hardheid. Hier waren geen grenzen, zolang hij maar kon overleven.

Zoveel gevaren omringden hem. Alleen de rooflustigste zou overleven. Hij was alreeds erg paranoide, omdat alles hem bedreigde. Hij viel al aan zonder dat daar reden toe was, en hij wist dat de aanval de beste verdediging was. Als hij door luiheid, domheid, of onoplettendheid in de handen zou vallen van een roofdier, dan zou een wrede dood hem wachten. Daarom had hij geen grenzen, geen wetten, alleen de wet van de aanval. Hij vertrouwde niets en niemand, want door vertrouwen was eens zijn hele familie uitgeroeid.

Hij gaf niks om de ander, ook niet om hen die ogenschijnlijk geen gevaar vormden, ook niet om hen die hem hielpen, of zelfs zijn leven hadden gered. Want eens gaf hij om iemand die zijn hele familie had uitgemoord. Hij wilde geen risico meer lopen. Iedereen moest voor zichzelf zorgen. En dit alles ging toch altijd door de dood heen. Hij was al dood, dus waarom er nog tegen strijden ?

Vriendschap moest maar op een andere manier ontstaan. Niet door vertrouwen, maar door de dood. De dood zou uitmaken wie zijn echte vrienden waren. Het leven zou alleen bedriegen. Hij geloofde niet in de liefde. Alleen de haat zou leiden tot liefde, door de dood heen. Hier was er geen scheiding tussen dood en leven, tussen liefde en haat. Alles was hetzelfde. Hierin zou een hele nieuwe orde ontstaan.

Als hij honger had at hij, vaak rauw. Alles at hij wat hij kon vinden. Hij had geen gevoelens voor de wezens die hij doodde. Alles moest toch veranderen, en gevoel zou pijn doen. Hij haatte alles wat hem mogelijk gevoel zou kunnen geven. En om dat te bewijzen moordde hij niet alleen voor veel vlees, maar ook gewoon voor zijn plezier. Hij was dom, hij had geen hersenen. Die zouden hem namelijk alleen maar bedriegen. Hij haatte alles met hersenen. Hij liet zich leiden door instincten, door zijn lusten. Hij was een vampier, omdat hij geen slaaf meer wilde zijn.

De wezens om hem heen kwelden hem, als de cipiers van zijn gevangenis. Hij leefde voor de moord. Hij was vrij in de jungle, en leefde voor de jacht. Niet alleen voor het vlees, maar ook voor zijn plezier. Het gaf hem lust, en zo had hij het gevoel dat hij leefde. Hij leefde door de dood van anderen, en de dood leefde van hem. In het begin voelde dit voor hem tragisch aan, maar later legde hij zich erbij neer, en verhardde zich erin. Hij had geen andere keus.

Maar ook liet hij leven, ook liet hij staan, en ademen. Ook gaf hij leven. Hij was een man van extremen, een man van een vreemde paradox.

Hij leefde in de jungle. Wie hadden hem gemaakt zoals hij was ? De geleerden. Eerst hadden ze iemand naar zijn familie gezonden om zijn familie uit te moorden, en toen dat gebeurt was maakten ze een robot van hem. Hij was nog erg jong. Nu was hij vrij, en zou zich nooit meer laten bedriegen door geleerden, nee, door niemand. Hij had dorst naar de diepere jungle en haar vlaktes om daar een schuilplaats te vinden, een plaats van moord, een plaats van horror, als een effectief wapen van zelfverdediging. Nooit meer wilde hij een robot zijn. Hij wilde vrij zijn, en zou deze vrijheid koste wat het koste bewaren en verdedigen. Geen enkel wezen vertrouwde hij. Geen enkel wezen liet hij te dicht bij zich komen, tenzij hij zich oppermachtig voelde. Tenzij hij zich trots voelde en met zijn vuisten op zijn borst sloeg. Hij was als een aapmens, als een roofdier, een vampier. Het roosje getatoeeerd op zijn arm was zijn laatste aandenken aan de geleerden en het vreemde pak waar ze hem in hadden gehesen. Maar op een dag sneed hij met z’n dolk het roosje uit z’n arm. Brullend van de pijn dook hij in het water. Toen hij bovenkwam zag hij een vrouw met lang haar in het water naar hem kijken. Ze had een glimlach, en plotseling wist hij niet wat hij moest doen. De vrouw deed hem aan zijn familie denken, en er was iets in hem wat hem tegenhield haar pijn te doen. De vrouw zwom naar hem toe, terwijl hij in een vreemde shock raakte. Ze raakte zijn arm aan en er ging electriciteit door hem heen, als loeiende, spuitende en kokende sirenes.

Hij wist niet wat er gebeurde, maar de vrouw had macht over hem. Hij wilde haar geen pijn doen. Ze pakte hem vast, en de man schrok. Plotseling begon de man te brullen, en kwam zo snel mogelijk uit het water. Hij was in de war. En het leek wel alsof hij niet meer wist wat hij moest doen. Uiteindelijk rende hij weg.

De vrouw rende achter hem aan. ‘Ik kan je helpen !’ riep de vrouw.

Maar de man was veel te bang dat zij door de geleerden was gestuurd. De man greep naar zijn hoofd en begon in paniek te gillen. Hij wilde dit niet. Hij wilde dat hij de vrouw nooit had gezien, en dat zij hem nooit had gezien. Plotseling had hij zich niet meer in bedwang. Greep een mes, en wilde haar vermoorden. Het was al te ver gegaan. Hij zou niet met deze vreemde herinnering in zijn hoofd kunnen leven. Ze moest dood. Ze had teveel gezien, en was te dichtbij gekomen. Zij hoorde haar niet. Plotseling hoorden ze beiden een knal. De man wierp een mes naar de geschrokken vrouw, en raakte haar in haar borst, terwijl bloed begon voort te komen. Even dacht de man dat hij zou gaan huilen, maar toen begon hij onbeheerst te lachen. Een krokodil kwam die de vrouw verder verscheurde, en even later scheurde de man de krokodil aan stukken, en begon woest te krijsen en te brullen. Hij probeerde de herinnering te wissen, maar alles in zijn hoofd leek hem te achtervolgen. De man rolde door de modder, ving weer een grote slang, beet zijn kop eraf en begon het slangenbloed eruit te zuigen. Hierdoor werd hij weer een beetje rustig. Ook verscheurde hij even later een leeuw, om door het leeuwenbloed en het leeuwenvlees verder tot rust te komen, en na een lange dag viel de man in een boom in slaap.

De volgende dag werd de man wakker met verschrikkelijke hoofdpijn. Nog steeds had hij die nare herinnering, alsof het aan hem vrat. Al moordend zocht hij zijn weg door de jungle, en maakte van huiden een wigwam. Dit deed hij bovenop een veld vol vlees en bloed. Alles moest in zijn ogen veranderen, maar ver kwam hij niet. Hij kon alleen maar moorden, en soms in leven laten, maar echt dingen veranderen kon hij niet. Hij kon tenten maken van huiden, hutten maken van botten, en hij kon doodskoppen verzamelen. Vlees kon hij eten, bloed kon hij drinken, en hij kon erin baden, maar wat kon hij verder doen ? Hield het hier niet op allemaal ? Was dit een doodlopende weg ?

Een verschrikkelijk eenzaam bestaan had hij sinds hij de vrouw had vermoord, want zo’n vrouw zou toch nooit meer terugkomen. Maar dit was beter dan in een vriendschap ten onder gaan, door vertrouwen in een val gelokt te worden waar hij nooit meer uit zou kunnen komen. Vrouwen van de jungle kende hij wel. Ze vingen mannen om hen te fokken, voor vlees, botten en voor andere dingen zoals slavernij. In zijn ogen waren vrouwen erger dan roofdieren. Ze waren gemeen en doortrapt, listig en sluw. Hij wilde zich er niet mee bemoeien. Hij wist waar in de jungle zij hun mannenfokkerijen hadden, maar hij had geen zin om de mannen te helpen. Want bevrijdde mannen waren in zijn ogen allemaal geleerden, of andere soorten roofdieren. Hij voelde alleen maar haat naar mannen en vrouwen, zelfs naar zichzelf. Maar hij leerde van zichzelf te houden zoals hij was, steeds meer en meer. Was hij geen produkt van de natuur ? Hij mocht dan een vampier zijn, maar wie was dat niet ? Het was bijna een wet van de natuur om te kunnen overleven, en om alles te kunnen laten veranderen. Maar verandering zag hij niet echt. Het leven bestond uit bloed, zweet en tranen, en daar bleef het bij. Voor hem was het leven jagen, eten, en slapen.

In een nacht werd hij door stevige handen vastgepakt. Hij werd gebonden, en meegeleid naar een fokkerij. Het waren vrouwen die hem hadden gevonden. Ze kwamen om met hem af te rekenen. De vrouwen waren ruw, en hij wist wel zeker dat ze kanibalen waren. Dat waren alle vrouwen die hier hun fokkerij hadden. In een kooi werd hij geduwd, en zelfs in de kooi vastgebonden. Veel bewegen kon hij niet, omdat zowel zijn handen als voeten vastzaten. Toen hij hier veel moest eten wist hij wat er aan de hand was. Maar zijn domheid vertelde hem dat het voedsel hier lekkerder was dan wat hij zelf altijd ving. Bang was hij dat hij weer door geleerden meegenomen zou worden, maar dat gebeurde niet. Hij wilde liever hier sterven in gevangenschap dan weer in de handen van geleerden terecht te komen. Tot zijn eigen plezier merkte dat hij hier niet dikker werd, terwijl andere mannen zo vet werden als varkens. Maar aan de andere kant maakte het hem onzeker, omdat hij niet wist wat ze dan met hem zouden doen. Hij werd gedwongen om meer te eten, terwijl hij al veel at. Ook probeerde ze het met andere soorten vlees, maar de man bleef zo slank als hij was.

‘Wees blij dat je hier bent,’ zei een vrouw. ‘Een man alleen in de jungle is een prooi voor geleerden en hun experimenten. Wij leren die geleerden hier een lesje.’ De man zei niets.

‘En nog wat,’ zei de vrouw, ‘het beste jachtvoedsel krijg je hier. Je hoeft er niet zelf voor te jagen. Dat doen wij wel, alhoewel we grotendeels leven van de fokkerij. Dan hebben we tijd voor andere dingen, weet je wel ? Je mag trouwens van geluk spreken dat je niet dikker wordt.’

Maar op een dag kon de man uit zijn kooi ontsnappen, en vloog een aantal van de vrouwen aan die hij in koele bloede vermoordde. Hij draaide hen de nekken om in een ruk. Na een tijdje kwam hij in een zaal waar hun koningin zat op een bank vol veren en zachte huiden. Mannen die ketenen om hun nek hadden bedienden haar. De man rende op de vrouw af, terwijl hij een mes van een andere vrouw wegpakte, en onthoofde de koningin. Vele vrouwen kwamen er achter hem aan, en de man moest rennen voor zijn leven. Op een web van touwen klom hij naar boven, en hoorde schoten beneden. ‘Politie !’ riep er iemand. Terwijl de man over het web op een hogere verdieping aankwam met een heel laag plafond. In de verte zag hij een gordijn waar hij doorheen rolde. Achter het gordijn kreeg hij de schrik van zijn leven. Vrouwen lagen hier gesluierd met roofdieren. Hij bedacht zich geen ogenblik, onthoofde de dieren, en daarna de vrouwen. Maar ook andere vrouwen kwamen binnen, en hij kon nog maar net ontkomen door een ander gordijn. Aan een hangend touw klom hij naar boven, terwijl hij weer schoten hoorde. ‘Politie !’ riep iemand. ‘Allemaal op de grond !’ Het leek erop dat de mannenfokkerij nu geheel werd opgerold. Na een tijdje kwam hij op het dak van de fokkerij. Een helicopter kwam naar hem toe, maar hij was veels te bang dat hij in handen van geleerden zou raken, en klom langs het dak naar beneden en rende terug de jungle in. ‘Laten ze elkaar maar afmaken,’ dacht hij. Het maakte het er voor hem in ieder geval niet makkelijker op.

Sindsdien ging hij onder de grond wonen, in grote angst voor vrouwen en geleerden. Of hij ooit nog vrouwen of geleerden is tegekomen onder de grond weet niemand.

Einde

De Kooi II

Een man werd wakker in de kooi waarin ze hem hadden vastgebonden. Het was een vreemde cel waarin hij aan banden was vastgemaakt. Ze hielden hem voor melk. Ze noemden het melk, maar dat was de codenaam voor alles wat ze van hem aftapten. Hij had electroden op zijn hoofd, maar ook op zijn gezicht, en verder op zijn hele lichaam. Ze tapten zijn dromen af.

Op zich zou je kunnen denken dat het allemaal ten dienste stond van de man. De geleerden waren vriendelijk naar hem, en soms had hij gezelschap in zijn kooi. Je zou kunnen denken dat al die aftapperijen ervoor zorgden dat er geen vreemde hersenspinsels konden ontstaan, maar niets was minder waar. Alle hoop die hij had werd afgetapt, alle schone klanken die hij in zijn hoofd had als een herinnering aan vroeger ... Overal waar hij zich aan vast probeerde te klampen werd afgetapt.

Alles wat hij nog was was een wrak, en toch droomde hij. Dit waren de dromen die door de Afgazide-geleerden bij hem waren ingeplant. Zij waren de implantaten van de melk-machine. Er waren allerlei manieren waarop ze hem konden melken. Ontsnapping was onmogelijk.

‘Ik heb hier een draad voor je,’ zei een vrouw. Hij moest het doorslikken, terwijl zij het uiteinde in haar handen hield. Na een paar dagen had zij ook het andere uiteinde in handen, en het spoor volgde door zijn hele lichaam, door het hele spijsverteringskanaal. De uiteinden werden aan instrumenten in de kooi bevestigd als pluggen, en wanneer het draad bewoog of begon te trillen werd de man op een bepaalde manier gemolken.

De horror was voor de man ondragelijk. Hij voelde zich een beest. Op een dag wist hij de electroden van zijn hoofd los te krijgen. Hoe hij dat had gedaan wist hij niet meer, maar hij had het voor elkaar gekregen in een woelige nacht. Hij kon weer enigszins een beetje nadenken, alhoewel elke gedachte hem pijn deed. Waar waren de geleerden ? Ze waren die dag niet gekomen. Hij werd gevoed door vreemde buizen, en stapje voor stapje begon hij zich los te wringen.

Zijn droom was snel afgelopen, want hij werd wakker en merkte dat hij nog steeds vastzat. Wel voelde hij dat de electroden een beetje losser zaten dan anders.

Plotseling zag hij een groene straal boven zich, en hij merkte dat de groene straal op de electroden gericht was. ‘We komen je bevrijden,’ zei een stem. Wie waren zij ? Plotseling waren de electroden van zijn hoofd geheel doorgebrand, en hij kon zijn hoofd goed bewegen, alhoewel op zijn gezicht nog steeds electroden waren. Hij haalde adem, en het voelde prettig aan. Hij was de melkerij zat, en hoopte dat zijn bevrijders snel klaar waren. Een klein blauw straaltje maakte de electroden van zijn gezicht los, en een rode straal maakte verder alle electroden van zijn verdere lichaam los. Een levensvuur kwam in hem binnen, sprankelend, en hij voelde zijn bloed weer stromen.

Ook kwamen er wat lasers die de banden losbranden, en de draden waaraan hij vastzat. Het draad dat door zijn hele lichaam heenzat werd er langzaam uitgetrokken. Hij hoorde zachte sirenes in zijn hoofd, die het levensvuur van binnen op een prachtige wijze aanwakkerden. De tonen voelden prettig aan, als levengevend. Hij kon weer diep ademhalen, en weer helder nadenken. Plotseling begonnen de muren naast hem weg te smelten, en de lasers lieten hem een pad zien. Hij was nu los en rende achter de lasers aan. Waar kwamen die lasers toch vandaan, en wie waren ze ?

Niet lang daarna was de man in een andere wereld. Hij speelde in een prachtige klankenzee met de Ludipussen, een volk van grappige wezentjes. Ze waren klein, zacht en lief. ‘Je hoeft niet bang te zijn dat je weer terugmoet naar die melkfabriek,’ zei een Ludipus met een zacht, zoet stemmetje. De man speelde in het water, dat zo zacht en tegelijkertijd vibrerend aanvoelde dat het levensvuur binnenin begon te waaien als nooit tevoren. De Ludipussen vertelden hem dat ze voor hem zouden zorgen. Ze waren zo klein en van zo'n andere energie dat ze gemakkelijk in de man binnen konden komen, en dat moest ook wel, want zo zouden ze ervoor zorgen dat er nooit meer electroden op hem geplaatst werden. De Ludipussen waren de onderdelen van een nieuwe wapenrusting van de man, onderdelen van een geheel nieuw en vrij lichaam.

De Ludipussen brachten de man tot hun koning. De koning was blij de man te zien. De man kreeg geheel nieuwe ogen van de koning, en de koning gaf hem de opdracht om over de zee te zwemmen, tot de eilanden van de Ludipussen. De koning wilde namelijk dat de man alle Ludipussen leerde kennen.

Nu de man vrij was voelde hij zich goed. Er waren hier prachtige bossen in allerlei kleuren. En door de nieuwe ogen kon hij nu zoveel meer straaltjes zien. De lucht was vol met straaltjes, de straaltjes die hem eens gered hadden.

Het was een lange zwemtocht over de prachtige zee. De eilandjes schitterden in de zon, en de man verheugde zich al op de eilandjes. Hier leefden weer hele andere Ludipussen. Op een van de eilanden woonden Ludipussen die op vliegen leken. Er kwamen klanken van hen af die zichtbaar waren als kleurige lichten, en je kon die lichten zelfs voelen. Ze waren heel zacht, en brachten een bepaalde vloeistof voort. De man zag hoe de vloeistoffen in de zee druipten. Het was een prachtig eiland, en de man mocht ritjes maken op hun ruggen, ritjes door de lucht, om zo van eiland tot eiland te gaan. Op een bepaald eiland kreeg de man nieuwe oren waarmee hij een heleboel meer klanken kon horen. Door de nieuwe oren bleek de vloeistof binnen te komen, om hem heel warm van binnen te maken. De man was erg blij met z'n nieuwe oren.

Het was alsof hij door een nieuw levensvuur werd omhuld, en al gauw vormden de klanken om hem heen vleugels van druipend licht. Nu kon hij zelf vliegen, en hij ging van eiland tot eiland. Op een ander eiland kreeg hij een nieuwe neus, waar hij zoveel meer geuren mee kon ruiken, en de geuren begonnen een paar extra vleugels erbij te vormen, geheel gemaakt van geuren en vreemde lichten die druipten. De man voelde zich nu als een vlinder, en hij merkte dat hij door een simpele gedachte kon verdwijnen en verschijnen. Was hij nu een toverwezen geworden ? De geuren vormden een heel nieuw patroon om hem heen, en het leek wel alsof hij de geuren diep kon inslikken. Het smaakte heel lekker, en het gaf hem veel zuurstof. De nieuwe geuren vormden ook weer extra klankjes en extra licht, waardoor een nog fijnere en zachtere vloeistof begon te stromen. Op een ander eiland kreeg hij een nieuwe mond waar hij zoveel meer mee kon proeven.

De man kwam diep tot rust, en vroeg aan de Ludipussen hoe dit allemaal kon gebeuren. ‘Nou gewoon,’ zei een Ludipus. ‘Wij hebben een perfecte melkfabriek. Die geleerden houden zich zoveel bezig met het melken, en met het bouwen van hun koninkrijkjes, dat ze helemaal vergeten dat ze zelf ook gemolken worden.’

‘Oh, maar is dat niet gevaarlijk ?’ vroeg de man. ‘Nee hoor,’ zei het kleine mannetje. ‘Wij zijn allemaal melkmannetjes, en wij weten precies hoe wij dat moeten doen. Daar hebben we lange ervaring in. Kijk, die geleerden zijn niet ouder dan een jaar of dertig tot tachtig, maar wij werken hier al miljoenen jaren. Wie heeft er dan meer recht van spreken ?’

‘Nou, ik denk jullie,’ zei de man. ‘En ik ben blij dat jullie mij gered hebben, want ik had het helemaal niet naar m’n zin in die kooi.’

‘Dus dit is allemaal niets anders dan een grote melkfabriek ?’

Het mannetje knikte. ‘En wat maken jullie daar dan van ?’ vroeg de man.

‘IJs,’ zei het mannetje.

‘Waarvoor ?’ vroeg de man.

‘Voor ijspaleizen,’ zei het mannetje. ‘Kijk, als je van dat ijs eet, likt of proeft, dan komt het levensvuur in je. Het is toverijs.’

En zo bracht het mannetje de man naar een eiland waar de ijspaleizen stonden. De man nam een hapje en ineens kwam er een groot levensvuur om hem heen met hele kleine vliegjes als vuurvliegjes. Ineens kon hij nog meer zien, ruiken, horen, en voelen. En hij zag wezentjes naar hem toekomen die hem met ijs bekogelden. Ook hij pakte wat ijs en gooide terug. De man had toen een lange tijd veel ijspret met de wezentjes, en lieten hem een kamer zien in het ijspaleis waar de man mocht wonen. Dat vond de man erg aardig van de wezentjes. Het ijs gloeide helemaal, en ook de gangen lagen vol met ijs. Ieder wezen had zijn eigen kamertje. Op een lange ijstrap klom de man naar boven. Hier woonde niemand. Het was als een zolder. Vanuit het raampje kon hij een ander ijspaleis zien. Er stonden hier wel duizenden ijspaleizen. Het was een echt ijsjeseiland.

Buiten lag er ook overal ijs, en stonden er ijsmannetjes met ijskarretjes. Niet omdat ze daarmee ijs verkochten, maar daarmee konden ze reisjes maken naar de grote ijsmachines.

In de grote ijsmachines werd het ijs gemaakt, en die stonden in contact met de melkfabrieken, waar de melkmannetjes werkten.

Vanuit de ijsmachines stroomden verschillende soorten kleuren ijs. Het ijs werd verdeeld door een soort ijsklok. De ijsmannetjes die hier werkten werkten er ook al voor miljoenen jaren.

De man keek zijn ogen uit op het ijsjeseiland, en nam soms een klein hapje.

‘Maar is dit nu alles ?’ vroeg de man aan een mannetje. ‘Hier hebben we ijs, maar houd daar alles mee op ?’

‘Nee,’ zei het mannetje, ‘kom maar mee.’

En de man werd geleid naar een kamertje in een grote ijsmachine waar zoveel ijs was dat er ijsbloemen groeiden en bloeiden, vol met allerlei soorten levensvuur. ‘Adem dit in,’ zei het mannetje, ‘en je zal verdwijnen en verschijnen op een plek waar je nog nooit eerder bent geweest. Een plek hier heel ver vandaan.’ De man haalde diep adem, en draaide zo snel in het rond totdat hij in de ruimte suisde, en toen helemaal verdween. Hij kwam aan in een donkere ruimte waar wat kleine lichtjes waren. Hier was geen ijs, ook geen melk, en hij zag ook nergens wezentjes. Op de grond groeide haar, en het haar was heel vochtig en zacht. Plotseling kwam er een ijskarretje naar voren, waar een soort metalen kaartje uit omhoog kwam. Op het metalen kaartje stonden wat tekens, en het had een warme gloed tegelijkertijd omhuld door stomend ijs. Ook een ander ijskarretje kwam naar voren en hetzelfde gebeurde, maar dit was een ander metalen kaartje met andere tekens. En zo gebeurde achtien keer hetzelfde, terwijl de man in de cirkel van ijskarretjes stond. Vanuit de kaartjes begonnen klanken voort te komen, lichten en geuren, en de tekens op de kaartjes begonnen te bewegen. Weer begon er melk te vloeien, en alles werd natter en natter, totdat de man zwom in een zee van melk. Na een tijdje kwam de man bij een eilandje aan, waarop weer een ijskarretje stond. Verder lag er overal zand.

Plotseling kwam er een bloeddruppel door het zand heen, en de bloeddruppel gleed in de zee van melk die direkt in een zee van bloed veranderde. Het ijskarretje veranderde in een groot stuk gebraden vlees. De man had inmiddels erge honger gekregen en begon te eten en te drinken, maar zodra zijn lippen het vlees aanraakten veranderde het weer in een ijskarretje, en toen zijn lippen het bloed aanraakten veranderde het weer in melk. Toen hij zijn lippen terugtrok veranderde het weer in bloed, en ook het ijskarretje was inmiddels weer in een groot stuk gebraden vlees veranderd. De man zwom verder tot een volgend eiland, waar een slagerij stond. De slagerij hing vol met gebraden vlees, maar zodra de man zijn lippen er tegenaan zette veranderde het gebraden vlees in ijskarretjes. De man kreeg toen in de gaten dat er iets anders moest gebeuren met het gebraden vlees. Hij nam een stuk vlees op, bracht het naar buiten en begroef het in de grond. Even later kwamen er bloemen, struiken en bomen van vlees uit voort. Nog meer stukken vlees bracht hij naar buiten om het in de grond te begraven, en nog meer bloemen, struiken en bomen kwamen er uit voort. Maar niet alleen dat, ook hutjes en tentjes van vlees.

Na een tijdje waren al die dingen van vlees uitgegroeid tot wezens. Als hij nu zijn lippen tegen die wezens aanzette kwam het levensvuur over hen. Hij sloot vriendschap met de wezens. Maar de wezens huilden veel, en na een tijdje liet hij al het vlees uit de slagerij in de grond begraven, en hetzelfde gebeurde. Toen de wezens nog steeds veel huilden, herinnerde hij het vorige eiland, waar ook nog vlees was. Hij zwom terug over de zee van bloed. Nam het vlees op zijn schouders en zwom terug, om het vlees op het andere eiland te begraven. Ook maakte hij zichzelf akkers waar hij elke dag bloed vanuit de zee naartoe bracht om daar te zaaien. Wonderlijke bloedbomen kwamen daar uit voort, en ook bloedbloemen en struiken. En hij keek telkens toe hoe ook zij in wezens veranderden. Door zijn lippen bracht hij het levensvuur in hen. Zo waren er twee soorten wezens die vriendschap met elkaar sloten. Het huilen werd niet minder. De zee van bloed groeide, en overstroomde op een dag het hele eiland. Maar de man had een schip gemaakt voor alle wezens. Na een lange reis kwamen ze op een nieuw eiland, geheel gemaakt van vlees. De man wist inmiddels wat hij moest doen, en de wezens hielpen mee : ze begroeven al het vlees, en er kwamen wezens uit voort. Ook bouwden ze weer akkers en hielpen de man met het zaaien van het bloed vanuit de zee. Het aantal wezens van beide soorten begon weer enorm te groeien, en ze hielpen allemaal mee. Dit keer maakte de man dus een heel groot schip, voor het geval weer alles zou overstromen. Maar de wezens kwamen erachter dat ze het bloed ook gewoon konden drinken, en het vele vlees van het eiland begonnen ze te eten. Alhoewel er genoeg was begonnen ze bezitterig te worden, en voerden al snel oorlog met elkaar. Maar altijd als de man wilde eten of drinken veranderde het in ijs en melk. De man begon zich af te vragen waarom.

Op een dag kwam er een klein mannetje op hem af, die hem een amulet gaf. Sindsdien veranderde het niet meer in ijs en melk. Maar ook de man begon erg bezitterig te worden, en deed al snel mee met de oorlog. En niemand dacht er meer aan het bloed op de akkers te zaaien en het vlees te begraven, want dan zouden er veel te veel wezens bijkomen. En er werd niet alleen oorlog gevoerd, maar ook de jacht werd geopend. Alles ging om het domineren en het drijven van slaven. Er ontstond vriendjespolitiek, en men wisselde levensvuur uit ten koste van anderen. Er ontstonden harems, die ook ingezet werden in de oorlog en de jacht, totdat de fokkerij helemaal compleet was. Het werd een fabriek. Men probeerde elkaar uit, en het resultaat ? Men leerde het winnen van sieraden, betoverende elementen. De man had ook een harem. Het waren sieraadjagers. De harem werd steeds groter, en hij werd een echte haremrover. Wat had het amulet met hem gedaan ? En wie was de verstrekker van dat amulet ? Hij hield ervan om andermans harem te plunderen. In het amulet was een traan in een steen.

Zou hij nog een keer mogen kiezen om het amulet wel of niet te dragen, dan zou hij het niet weten. Want wat zou er zijn gebeurt als hij het amulet niet zou hebben aangenomen ?

Hij leefde in een roes, hij en zijn harem. Wilden ze het wel echt, of waren het zijn slaven ? Er was altijd veel gehuil. In zijn ogen was het zaad, en hij zaaide het op de akkers. Een nieuw soort kwam voort. Ook anderen begonnen de tranen te zaaien, en het nieuwe soort groeide. 'Een beetje bloed, een beetje zweet, een beetje tranen en wat vlees, en ik maak een geheel nieuw soort,' sprak het amulet op een dag. De man begon direkt zijn oude taak weer op te pakken. Hij zaaide het eerst dun, en daarna dik, en meer en meer soorten begonnen voort te komen. Men begon allerlei dingen te zaaien.

Op een dag was er weer een overstroming van de zee van bloed. Er werd gevochten voor een plaatsje in het grote schip. Velen verdronken. De man had natuurlijk een plaatsje weten te bemachtigen, omdat het zijn schip was. Verderop waren de wolken van bloed, de hele lucht was van bloed, en het regende tranen. Alles was van vlees, dus er viel ook niets meer te begraven. Het enige geschenk dat het nieuwe land gaf was een grotere honger en dorst, en zoveel manieren om die te stillen. Daarom vierde diefstal hoogtij.

Was dit geen ergere kooi dan de kooi waar hij vandaan kwam ? Hij was nu tenminste vrij, en zou die vrijheid in alle koelbloedigheid verdedigen. Vrij ? Hij was gevangen door een amulet. Hier was vrijheid en gevangenschap hetzelfde.

Hier golden de wetten van een bruut amulet, maar het hield hem tenminste uit de kooi vandaan. Als hij niet had doorgevraagd, dan was hij nog steeds bij de knuffelmannetjes met hun melkfabriekjes en ijsfabriekjes, als hij genoegen zou nemen met de dingen voor de horizon. Het zou een middenweg zijn geweest tussen de kooi en het amulet, maar zou hij daar kunnen leven ? Hij was iemand die doorvroeg en doorzocht. Was dit amulet nu zijn straf ?

Hij was één van hen geworden, maar wie waren zij eigenlijk ? Het nieuwe land was als een zee van vlees. Hij kon er met zijn boot gewoon overheen. Maar zodra het schip eroverheen ging kwam het vlees tot leven. En dat was eigenlijk maar goed ook. Als het vlees werd aangeraakt, kwam het tot leven. Het was in die dagen dat er een tweede amulet verscheen, en die scheen van de één op de ander over te wippen. Als iemand die het tweede amulet droeg zijn lippen tegen het vlees wilde zetten, veranderde het vlees in chocolade.

De man begon toen een beetje te beseffen hoe ver hij van huis was. Op een dag zette het tweede amulet alles in een vreemd vuur, de dag waarop vrede en oorlog hetzelfde bleek te zijn. Het tweede amulet was als een amulet van doornen, die vaak boven de menigte uitvloog om de kudde te leiden. Het tweede amulet was niemands bezit, maar sprong van de ene op de andere.

Voor de man eindigde de reis in een chocolade-fabriek. Als hij zijn lippen tegen de chocolade aanzette veranderde het in vlees. En niet alleen dat. Het vlees kwam ook tot leven. Had de man nu wezens vrijgezet ? Wat was chocolade nu werkelijk ? Wie bepaalde wat wat was ? De mannetjes ? De amuletten ? Of hangt het er vanaf wat voor ogen en wat voor mond je hebt ? Niet iedereen ziet en proeft namelijk hetzelfde. Of was de man tot een plaats gekomen waar alles hetzelfde was ?

Einde

D e K o o i III

In een wereld waar chocolade en vlees hetzelfde is, vuur en ijs, oorlog en vrede, dood en leven, alles hetzelfde. Het is de wereld van een kooi, een vreemd amulet, die hoofden heeft ingenomen. Geen hersenen meer, alleen instincten, voortgedreven door een bovennatuurlijke honger en dorst. In deze wereld is waarheid en leugen hetzelfde. Een wereld waar je gemengde gevoelens hebt. Je wilt weg, terwijl je wilt blijven, want wat wacht buiten op je ? Het is een gemene wereld, maar ze noemen het genade. Het is een harde wereld, maar ze noemen het zachtheid. Alles is hier omgedraaid, en alles is alles geworden, als in een vreemd vuur. Het is de wereld van een losgeslagen amulet. Wie maakte dat amulet ? Maar een betere vraag is : Hoe kan het vernietigd worden ? En als het dan vernietigd is, krijgen we dan later geen spijt, omdat alles allemaal veel erger is geworden sinds het amulet er niet meer is ?

Er is een wereld waar de jacht de vrijlating is, de wereld van het amulet. Het is een wereld waar het bloed is als de wijn, voortstromende van een steen in het amulet, een steen waarin een traan zit. Wij hebben die wereld zelf gemaakt, wij hebben die wereld zelf aanvaard, door het amulet. En het amulet is een schamele troost in een zee van een nog grotere ellende. Want waar zouden wij zijn als het amulet nooit had bestaan ? Dan waren we overgeleverd aan de onpeilbare duisternissen, daar waar geen licht kan doordringen. Maar de wereld van het amulet is daar ... waar het licht duisternis is.

Het is altijd een verrassing voor iedereen wanneer die wereld zich opent. Zoveel verwarring, maar ook zoveel helderheid, daar waar de wildernis en de chaos de enige orde is.

Er is geen hoop op de heuvel waar spinnen jagen, waar het enige licht gebraden vlees is, en waar vliegen neerdalen om alles voor altijd te laten bloeden. Is dit geen doorn in het oog van de heer die alles geschapen heeft ? En waarom schiep hij dan ook dit ? Of is dit buiten hem omgegaan ?

Maar in ieder geval zijn zij van die wereld naar zuivere vormen op zoek. Er is in deze wereld geen verschil tussen schepper en schepping, want vaak heeft de schepping zijn schepper zelf geschapen. En daarom is deze wereld ook geen paradijs, onderwereld of hel. In deze wereld is goed en kwaad hetzelfde. Daarom is er in deze wereld ook geen appel die alles kan verpesten, omdat er geen verschil is tussen de eter en het voedsel, en al helemaal niet tussen honger en verzadiging, tussen eten en niet eten. Alles vreet, en alles heeft honger, en dat is het enige wat kan verzadigen. Zij die buiten deze wereld staan staan op één been, of hebben helemaal geen benen.

Ik ken niemand die ooit uit die wereld ontsnapt is want er is geen ontsnapping mogelijk. Je kunt alleen maar wegzinken in allerlei verderf. De ontsnapping staat hier namelijk gelijk aan het dieper opgesloten worden.

Geef de moed maar op als je in deze wereld verstrikt bent geraakt, want hoe meer je er tegen verzet des te dieper je er in vastraakt.

Laten we dan ook de moed opgeven voor hen die in deze wereld verstrikt zijn geraakt, en al onze reddingsacties opgeven, want onherroepelijk zullen we meegesleurd worden.

Het is de wereld van de verdoemden, zo dichtbij. Het is de wereld van hen die door het amulet zijn gebonden.

Er is hier geen verschil tussen rijkdom en armoede, tussen doden en tot leven brengen. Zij zijn allen moordenaars. Geketend gaan ze de ondergang tegemoet, als in een vreemd vuur. Het is een tragiek die niemand begrijpt en niemand op waarde of onwaarde kan schatten. Het is een carnaval waar het gezicht gelijk is aan het masker. We komen verkleed als onszelf. En iedereen schrikt.

Het is de wereld van de optochten der doden, en iedereen is verveeld, wachtende op iets nieuws. Zij zijn op zoek naar de hogere vormen. Een traan in een steen getuigt van de tragiek van het amulet. Want wie is het amulet ? Er is in de wereld van het amulet geen onderscheid tussen het ding en de persoon. Het amulet kan met zijn toverkracht een slaaf zijn, uitgezonden met een opdracht, of gewoon om een wens te moeten vervullen.

Feit is dat het amulet alle krachten moet harmonizeren, maar ten koste van wat ? Zou je niet moe worden van zo'n wereld. En waar staan wij ergens ? Waar gaan we naartoe ? Het hangt er vanaf in hoeverre onze ogen geopend zijn waar we leven. Onze zintuigen bepalen dat. Maar bovenal ons intellect, en dat intellect moet open staan, en niet zelfvoldaan zijn.

Hen van het brandend intellect, gevangen in een vreemd vuur, achter tralies van ijs, zij waren als de draken. Hun vlees brandde en bloed kookte, en zij droegen de krachten van het amulet. Op hun vlees verschenen de een-dags-tatoeages, en hun harten gloeiden zo dat ze door het vlees te zien waren. Hun harten waren als brandende boeken. Zij zijn op zoek naar het hogere intellect, een weg die buiten de hersenen om gaat, want zij hebben geen hersenen. In een vlam zijn zij, terwijl hun heuvelen besmeurd zijn met wespenzeep. De steek is hier het zachte, de hoornaarssteek iets wat ze de kus noemen.

Wat nou opgewekt worden door een kus ? Dat is een oud sprookje. Hier val je in slaap door de kus, om ten prooie te vallen aan een web van leugens, dromen .... dromen ... dromen .... Hier is de kus de doodsteek. Maar .... leven en dood is hetzelfde, en waarheid is de leugen, slapen is het waken, dus waarom klagen wij ? Is dit dan de weg naar het hogere intellect, of verliezen we dan ook het laatste wat we hebben ?

Eens was de leugen de weg naar de oude dingen, de list van onze overleden voorouders om weer een plaats te krijgen in de nog grotere leugen die hen had weggeduwd, het grote vandaag, die ze de waarheid noemden. Het was iets in hun ogen waardoor ze de dingen anders zagen. Maar hier was geen verschil tussen de moeder en het kind. Alles was hetzelfde, geen onderscheid tussen de drijver en zijn slaaf. En dit alles door de traan, een rode traan, want die traan was van bloed.

En die traan zit nog steeds in de steen van het amulet. Op de heuvelen stonden zij, hen die gebonden waren door het amulet. Zij dreven elkaar naar het hogere intellect. Zij hadden nauwelijks kledederen, want de bedekking en de naaktheid was hier hetzelfde. Er was geen masker waarachter ze zich veilig konden voelen, en toch voelden zij zich veilig. Er was geen verschil tussen het masker en het lichaam. Zij waren de broeders van het vlees en de chocolade, iets dat hetzelfde was, in deze wereld ondergedompeld in brandende wespenzeep, waar de steek het zachte is, waar de slaap hen liet opstaan, en de wake het slapen was. Een wereld ondergedompeld in een vreemd vuur, voortkomende vanuit het amulet.

De hoornaarssteek liet hun hart kloppen, als de klok van vuur. En al het vuur was zacht. Het was als gestoken worden door een vreemde vlieg ... de vreemde doornen van het amulet. Zoveel zeeen van vreemde insecten waardoor het hogere intellect te bereiken was, maar was dit niet allemaal een valstrik ?

'Strik mij dan, als de strik de traan des levens doet ontwaken,' sprak een jongen luid op de heuvelen van wespenzeep. Zijn speer was gedecoreerd met de fijnste sieraden, die op versteende insecten leken. Insecten met een wonderlijke geur. 'Leid mij dan tot de put, het wazige gat, als dat mij van het rode van de traan laat drinken,' sprak de jongen. Er was hier geen verschil tussen de valstrik en de levensweg.

Het amulet voedde de kuddes door honger, verzadigde hen met dorst. Het amulet verwarde hen om het oor en het oog te openen. Zij verloren hun wapenrusting in deze wereld, want hier was elke immuniteit kwetsbaarheid. De gevoelige steen was altijd de steen met de rode traan, als een bloedkoraal, voortkomende vanuit de put van verwarring. En als er ergens druppels van helderheid en orde waren, dan was het daar. Daar, in en door die insectenovens, wespenmolens, was de weg van het hogere intellect, een overgevoeligheid die hetzelfde was als koelbloedige hardheid. De woede trilde in de hand en de keel van de jongen, toen hij in de put van verwarring werd geworpen. Door de wespenzeep gleed hij erin, alsof een hand hem duwde, een voet hem wegtrapte en liet struikelen. Maar de woede was hier de tevredenheid, een diepe vrede, een zachte aanraking. De woede was hier niets anders dan een geopend intellect, een brandend boek, een op hol geslagen hart, gloeiend als omhuld door duizenden vuurvliegjes.

Zijn neus werd als de steen van het amulet, maar hier was het oog hetzelfde als de neus, en ook het oor was niet anders dan hen. Het was alsof er een vreemd insect op zijn neus zat, alsof zijn ogen omdraaiden en scheel keken.

En hij kwam erachter dat er geen andere weg was dan de valstrik. Het was een web van een vreemde spin, waar het enige licht gebraden vlees was, de enige geur, en het enige geluid knetterend vuur en gillend hout. Maar toen de jongen dichterbij kwam was het niets anders dan een huis van chocolade. Binnenin zag hij een bruine traan, een traan van vlees.

Hij keerde terug tot de heuvelen van wespenzeep, en gleed in een andere put. Ook hier vond hij een web van een vreemde spin, waar gebraden vlees van dichtbij niets anders bleek te zijn dan een huis van chocolade. Binnenin zag hij een rode traan, de traan van bloed, als de levenstraan waarvan hij wilde drinken, maar het bleek gewoon wijn te zijn. De stralen van gebraden vlees werden zijn vleugels. Hij voelde zich een vlinder, en zodra de vleugels bewogen bleek het allemaal maar gewoon chocolade te zijn. Hij was maar een gewone chocolade-jongen, maar het duistere oog zag iets anders.

Er was een oog in een amulet die hij vond in een derde put. Het oog was godslasterlijk, want hier was er geen verschil tussen god en mens. Ook was er geen verschil tussen elf en mens, want hier waren alleen indianen.

Er was hier geen verschil tussen wijsheid en domheid, tussen lelijkheid en mooiheid, tussen ziekte en gezondheid. Iedereen was hier ziek door het amulet, en alle muren waren hier afgebroken. En daarom waren de velden uitgestrekt, en knetterde het vuur extra harder. De jongen nam het amulet met het oog mee naar de heuvels van wespenzeep, en predikte een nieuw intellect. Ook anderen daalden in de putten af.

Als er iets knetterde, dan was het de jongen met het amulet met het oog. Velen kwamen terug vanuit de putten, en waren nu als vlinders, net als de jongen. Maar hier was er geen verschil tussen de vlinder en de vlieg, en ook de spin was niet anders. Er was hier geen verschil tussen insect en mens. Zij waren allen indianen.

Zij aten van het hongervlees als van duistere chocolade. Zij zaten vast in een kooi gemaakt door het amulet. Het waren kooien waarvan de tralies draken waren, en het ijs was bloed, als een grotere dorst. Het bloed van de dorst hebben zij gedronken, om nog dorstiger te worden. Het amulet had die wereld gemaakt, een wereld waar niemand uit kon ontsnappen, alleen maar dieper in kon wegzinken.

En de varkens ? Hier was er geen verschil tussen het varken en de draak. De vlinders vlogen alleen om doem te brengen op de heuvels van wespenzeep. Het waren steekvlinders, die zich op die manier overal konden inhechten. Zij waren de steekvlinders van ... het amulet.

Het was een wereld waar schoonheid gelijk stond aan vuilheid, een wereld van een vreemd licht, het licht van een amulet. Zij konden niet ontsnappen uit hun kooien. De tralies waren hun vleugels, stralen als onuitputtelijk ijs ... als ijs dat bloed was, de grotere dorst. Zij aten van een traan van vlees, als van duistere chocolade, maar het vrat ook aan hen, een duistere woestheid, in een wereld waar alles vrat. Geen verschil tussen de slager en het slachtvee, en ook het roofdier was niet anders. Daar zorgde het amulet voor, als het hogere intellect, een duister intellect, maar vol van licht ... als een boek bedekt met zoveel miljoenen vuurvliegjes .... als een brandend boek.

En wat zien zij die het boek bekijken ? Het oog is hier niet anders dan hetgeen hij bekijkt. In deze wereld zijn alleen maar ogen .... stenen waarin tranen opgeborgen zitten. Het verandert terwijl je kijkt, want jouw oog is een vuur, en creeert .... als de creatie van een amulet.

Na een lange dag zijn er geen letters meer, alleen vlees en bloed, brandend in een vreemd vuur ... het vuur van een amulet. Dan komen zij tot leven, en zijn er alleen nog maar plaatjes. Geen verschil tussen licht en duisternis.

Geen verschil meer tussen pijn en plezier, want het amulet heeft de muur afgebroken, in duistere woede, als een gillende traan. Hij kwam om vrij te zetten, maar wat deed hij hen aan ? In duisternis leidt hij hen voort, tot een hoger intellect. Hoger intellect ? Wat als dit alles een valstrik is ? Wij zijn zo bang voor de valstrik. Waar zouden wij zijn zonder de valstrik ? Was dan alles niet gewoon nog erger ? Waarom geen compromis sluiten, zoals in een paradox ? Dat noem ik van twee walletjes eten.

Het amulet bracht hen van een enge wereld naar een enge wereld. Kunnen we niet beter gewoon twee heren dienen ? Dan komen de klappen misschien minder hard aan. Dan hebben de heren misschien nog een zwakke plek voor ons ? Maar mogen we dan niet meer kiezen ? Is er geen democratie hiervoor in deze dingen ? Maar wat nou als de meerderheid tegen ons stemt ?

In de wereld van het amulet is democratie hetzelfde als anarchisme .... En dictatuur is al niet anders. Geen verschil tussen de drijver en zijn slaaf.

Een enge uitnodiging van het amulet. Het was een brandende nacht nadat het amulet nog meer kuddes had misleid. En waartoe ? Sommigen probeerden het amulet te doorgronden ... Wie was het amulet ? Hoe konden ze het amulet vernietigen, of misschien wel omsmelten tot zuivere vormen ? Want hadden niet alle dingen diep van binnen een potentiele puurheid ?

‘Ik zie zoveel liefde en zoveel haat in je ogen,’ fluisterde het amulet.

‘Neem een beetje van mijn liefde weg, en er zal geen haat meer zijn. Neem een beetje van mijn haat weg en er zal geen liefde meer zijn. Die twee dingen houden elkaar in stand.

Ik zie zoveel schoonheid en zoveel lelijkheid in je ogen. Neem een beetje van mijn schoonheid weg, en er zal geen lelijkheid meer zijn. Neem een beetje van mijn lelijkheid weg, en er zal geen schoonheid meer zijn. Die twee houden elkaar in stand.’

Ik boog mijn hoofd, en stond in een woestijn, gewapend met de mysterieuze wapens van de vlieg. In deze woestijn blijven we altijd huilen en liegen, altijd ontkennen. Zo lang de nacht voortduurt zullen we het groene niet binnengaan. In de verte hoorde ik gezang als de stem van jongens : ‘Wij zijn mooi, jullie zijn lelijk, wij zijn mooi, en jullie zijn lelijk. Wij zijn lelijk en jullie zijn mooi. Wij zijn lelijk en jullie zijn mooi. Wij zijn mooi en jullie zijn mooi. Wij zijn lelijk en jullie zijn lelijk, en jij bent de lelijke. Neem daarom van het moedervoedsel.’

Niemand stak zoals zij staken, en niemand maakten zacht zoals zij zacht maakten. In de verte glitterde een woestijnstad in de zon, als gemaakt van glas. Maar het was als een vreemd soort chrystal, als tranenchrystal. Zovelen waren daar, gewapend met de wapens van de vlieg. Ze liepen door de steegjes, en zaten in de huizen. Hier scheen altijd iedereen te huilen, net als in de woestijn, maar in deze wereld was de traan en de klank hetzelfde. Ik liep een huis binnen en vertelde over het amulet. Zij leken erg geinteresseerd te zijn. Ik wees hen de weg naar het amulet, en ik heb ze nooit meer teruggezien.

Toen vroeg ik naar het moedervoedsel. Zij leiden mij naar een oase, vol met groen. De rotsen leken hier te huilen, en allen dronken zij van de traan. Het stroomde voort vanuit de bomen en de struiken.

Hier was geluid hetzelfde als de steek, en de geur was niet anders. Ik zocht beschutting, alleen maar om te ontdekken dat dit hetzelfde was als naaktheid. Was ik al in de wereld van het amulet ?

Was er voor mij nog hoop, of was ik al een gevallene, een verdoemde ? Je kon hier niet rondkijken zonder te steken en gestoken te worden. Je kon hier niet bewegen zonder te beseffen dat alles zowel de steker als de gestokene was. Daarom traanden alle ogen, en waren onze ogen als messen. We hadden gewapende ogen.

Plotseling was er het geluid van messen in de lucht, en de lucht werd vol met lange indiaanse vliegen met de kleinst mogelijke hoofdjes. Ze leken een beetje op sprinkhanen en hadden de prachtigste vleugels, die de fijnste poeders leken te verspreiden. Dit waren de poeders van de woestijn. Ze leken woest, en toen zij hun zachte vochtige lichten verspreiden leken wij niets anders dan de marionetten van deze lichtorde. Dit was het lot van een ieder die van het moedervoedsel had genomen. De lichten werden als pijlen in ons geschoten, en de reflex maakte ons bezeten. Hier was overgevoeligheid overhardheid, als een strakke, doelbewuste killermachine, die maar één doel had : inwoning. Maar waarom wilde het ons bewonen ? Waren wij nu robotten geworden ? En zo ja, robotten van wie ?

Er was hier geen verschil tussen de schieter en het geschotene. We hadden allemaal onze bogen en harpoenen, in dit zachte zweterige licht, en we waren allemaal bezeten door de reflex. Dat konden we zien in elkaars ogen.

Hier is bloed en vlees hetzelfde, en ook de beenderen zijn niet anders. Hier is alles gemalen tot een tekenfilm .... vreemde verf, komende vanuit een amulet. Een vreemd vuur brandt hier, waar alles tot verf gemalen is, waar duisternis en de tekenfilm hetzelfde zijn.

Einde

De Eeuwige Vlam

Er was elvengetrommel in het kamp van de indiaanse elven. Salucia pakte haar speer en rende naar de dichtsbijzijnde boom waar ze in klom. Haar vader zou terugkomen, maar ook verwachte zij een aanval van de Maribiren, een elvenstam aan de westkant van hun kamp. Ze zouden gehoord hebben van de terugkomst van Salucia's vader, die zolang bij de tovenaar van Ostford had gewerkt. De tovenaar zou hem beloond hebben met zoveel toverdingen dat de Maribiren daar graag een graantje van wilden meepikken. Maar alles bleef gelukkig rustig, en Salucia's vader maakte het goed. Misschien hadden de Maribiren de dreiging wel gevoeld die uitging vanuit het kasteel van de tovenaar van Ostford. Salucia's vader droeg een wapenrusting die zij nog niet kende : fier, maar ook teder en afschrikwekkend, verlokkend, als een verwarrende paradox. Ze voelde wel de nieuwsgierigheid van de Maribiren, maar besloot er geen aandacht aan te schenken. Ze voelde de donkere ogen van de Maribiren loeren, vol lust maar ook vol angst. Wat had de tovenaar van Ostford toch gedaan ? Er kwam een wonderlijke, indringende magie vanuit het kamp van de indiaanse elven. Salucia was gerustgesteld. Alles was goed met haar vader. De tovenaar had goed werk verricht. Maar toen haar vader een paar littekens liet zien schrok Salucia. 'Ik weet het, mijn kind,' zei haar vader. 'Werken bij de tovenaar was niet zonder gevaren. Ik moest ingewijd worden in de hogere magie. Ik heb gevochten met de wachters van de tovenaar, en zij hebben mij verwond, maar alleen zo kon ik het zegel dragen.'

'Welk zegel, vader ?' vroeg Salucia. Haar vader keek haar teder aan, en ze zag een glinstering in zijn ogen. Zijn ogen waren doorbloed, vol van geheimenissen, als grote bruine kralen die het zonlicht op een mysterieuze wijze weerspiegelden, maar ook zoveel duisternis. 'Ga slapen, Salucia,' zei haar vader. 'Het is laat.'

Salucia wist niet wat er die nacht zou gebeuren, maar Maribiren kwamen het kamp binnen om haar te ontvoeren. Ze brachten haar naar een plaats, een bron, waar het elvenlicht haar omhulde. Niets wist zij van de raadselen van de Maribiren. Het was een prachtige ervaring, iets wat ze niet had verwacht, omdat de Maribiren in vijandschap leefden met haar eigen stam. Maar wie waren dit ? Het waren Maribiren die zij niet kende. Ze waren ouder, en ze leken rustiger. 'Ga maar, Salucia,' zeiden ze tegen haar. Maar Salucia wilde niet weg. Ze wilde blijven in deze elvenbron, die haar hart zo scheen te raken. Badend in licht zwom ze naar de andere kant van de warme bron.

Plotseling werd er een zwaard gestoken in de man die het dichtst bij Salucia baadde. Het was haar vader die haar kwam terughalen. Salucia had gemengde gevoelens. 'Ze willen je van de tovenaar van Ostford afhouden,' sprak haar vader, terwijl de andere gestaltes om haar heen in de bron leken te verdrinken. 'Vader, wat doet u ?' vroeg Salucia. Niet lang daarna hoorde Salucia een schot, en zag haar vader in vertraging neervallen. De bron vulde zich met bloed. Een donkere gestalte stond voor Salucia, en draaide zich toen om om in het niets te verdwijnen. Salucia slaakte een gil, en kwam er snel achter dat haar vader dood was. Ook was er geen enkele Maribir meer te bekennen.

Nu was het voor Salucia tijd om zelf de tovenaar van Ostford te bezoeken, want ze snapte niet wat er met haar gebeurde. In tranen zocht ze haar pad, terwijl ze de aanwijzingen van haar vader herinnerde. Haar vader had haar veel verteld over hoe de tovenaar woonde, maar vooral hoe er te komen. Toen Salucia bij de hoge verlichte poort van het kasteel van de tovenaar van Ostford aankwam viel ze huilend een lange elf in de armen. Snel en stoterig vertelde ze het verhaal. Ze wist dat ze hier troost en antwoord zou krijgen. De elf nam haar zorgzaam mee naar binnen. 'Er zijn zoveel dingen die je niet begrijpt,' zei de elf. 'Je bent erg jong, Salucia. De tovenaar wacht op je.'

Binnen leek alles heel anders dan wat haar vader haar altijd verteld had. Aan de muur hingen indiaanse speren, vreemde messen, en sommige muren waren doordrenkt met bloed. Salucia schrok, en vroeg wat dat bloed moest voorstellen. De elf sprak niet. Salucia begon bang te worden, maar ineens nam de elf Salucia weer in zijn armen. 'Je hoeft niet bang te zijn, lieveling,' zei de elf. 'Alles zal duidelijk worden, maar we mogen niet teveel praten.

Ach, we mogen het wel, maar het is niet verstandig. Laten we de dingen stap voor stap doen.

De tovenaar was een wonderlijke man. Hij gaf Salucia ringen voor in het kasteel. De ringen werden aan haar klederen vastgemaakt, en de ringen zouden uitleg geven over alle dingen. Het waren sprekende ringen, en meer en meer begon Salucia zich op haar gemak te voelen. Maar ook proefde ze een soort dreiging die ze niet kon beschrijven.

De tovenaar droeg lange gewaden, en bracht haar tot een andere indiaanse elvenstam in de dieptes van het kasteel. De elven spraken niet, maar communiceerden op een andere manier, door hun ogen, en door het bewegen van hun lippen. ‘Leer hen praten,’ zei de tovenaar. ‘Dat is je eerste opdracht. Ik zal je later alles uitleggen over je vader. Wie hij was, en ook wie de Maribiren zijn.’

Salucia nam de tijd om de elven te leren spreken, en ook leerde ze hun manier van communicatie. De tovenaar was na enkele maanden zeer tevreden, en bracht haar tot een andere indiaanse elvenstam dieper in het kasteel. Het kasteel was erg groot. Deze stam communiceerde door te gillen en door allerlei vreemde klanken overmatig te herhalen. ‘Kom,’ zei de tovenaar, en bracht haar tot een elvenbron in een grote ruimte. De bron was bijna geheel blauw, als blauwe bubbelende verf. De tovenaar maakte wat strepen op haar huid, en daalde toen zelf in de bron af. Salucia moest hem volgen. Hij zwom naar een deur diep onderin de bron, opende die deur en zwom naar binnen. Hier zwommen haaien en allerlei andere vissen, maar ze deden niets. Ze staarden alleen. De tovenaar zwom met Salucia door naar de volgende deur, en toen ze achter de deur naar boven zwommen kwamen ze in een geheel nieuwe ruimte terecht. ‘Als ik er niet bij was zou je verslonden zijn door de haaien en de andere vissen,’ sprak de tovenaar. ‘Ik bepaal dus wie hier komt.’ Er hing een vreemde indringende geur als een soort verf, maar het rook heel lichamelijk en warm.

Salucia keek haar ogen uit, want er dropen hier een heleboel vreemde stoffen met vreemde kleuren. Het was een soort modder. De tovenaar keek naar Salucia en knipoogde naar haar. ‘Weet je, Salucia,’ zei de tovenaar, ‘ik laat je dit alles zien, en eens liet ik je vader dit alles zien, omdat ik wil dat jij en je nageslacht in dit kasteel zullen leven. Buiten zullen de Maribiren alles overnemen en ze zullen niets van je stam overlaten. Jouw vader hebben ze uit de weg geruimd, maar jou heb ik beschermd.’ Salucia begon te huilen. Ze had verwacht dat ook haar vader beschermd zou worden, en daarom begreep ze niet waarom de Maribiren hem konden vermoorden. De tovenaar nam haar in zijn armen, en sprak : ‘Ik zou je vader maar wat graag willen beschermen, maar de macht van de Maribiren is niet te onderschatten. Echter, als je getrouw het pad volgt, en bij me blijft, zul je je vader terugzien.’ Maar toen werd de tovenaar ineens erg droevig. Ik zal nog even bij je blijven, totdat je totaal door het kasteel bent aanvaart en in veiligheid bent gebracht. Dan zal ik mijn reis moeten richten op de gebieden van de Maribiren. Ik zal de donkere en zwarte reis moeten maken, zodat ze dit kasteel niet zullen innemen.' Salucia greep de tovenaar extra stevig vast en sprak : 'Maar kunnen we niet samen in die veiligheid blijven ? Waarom zou u zoveel riskeren ? Dit kasteel is van u en blijft van u !'

'Meisje,' zei de tovenaar, 'je kent de krachten van de Maribiren niet. Ik moet daar naartoe, anders zal dit kasteel van hen zijn en is er voor jou en je nageslacht geen enkele hoop. Zo zullen ook alle andere indiaanse elvenstammen vergaan, en zal de vlam van Ostford voorgoed doven.'

En zo namen die twee na een lange tijd van lopen en spreken afscheid van elkaar. De tovenaar had haar uitgelegd wat ze moest doen, en verder zouden de ringen haar leiden. Salucia zuchtte diep en probeerde moedig te blijven, maar al snel overvielen duistere angsten haar. Rustte het dan allemaal op haar schouders ? Waarom was alles zo ingewikkeld ?

Zoals de tovenaar had gezegd kwam ze eerst in een gebied vol met bomen. De bomen leken bijna op elven, en zij brachten vreemde eieren voort. De tovenaar had haar een speciale rode lap gegeven waarmee ze die eieren kon uitbroeden. Maar er was iets in haar wat zei dat ze dat niet moest doen. Ook de ringen gaven haar het advies om het niet te doen. De ringen hadden duidelijk een hele andere visie dan de tovenaar, en Salucia vroeg zich af waarom de tovenaar haar die ringen had geschonken. Maar veel plannen bleken overeen te stemmen. Salucia bond de rode lap om haar hoofd naarmate het warmer werd. Soms bleef ze wat rusten tegen de kasteelmuren aan, en trok dan verder.

Er waren zoveel dingen die Salucia niet begreep. Hoe zou ze aan nageslacht komen ? Waar zou ze haar vader ontmoeten en hoe ? De ringen vertelden nog niet veel. Het was alsof Salucia hun vertrouwen eerst moest winnen. Er waren een aantal dingen die ze heel strak in haar gedachten had, als een betoverend visioen, en dat was de reis van de tovenaar om hen veilig te stellen, en haar eigen reis om uiteindelijk de tovenaar veilig te stellen. Ze was vastberaden, en ze wist dat wanneer de tovenaar de eeuwige vlam had bereikt in het rijk van de Maribiren, dan zouden ze met elkaar verzoend worden. Maar dat kon alleen gebeuren als zij de eeuwige vlam van het kasteel zou bereiken. Zo niet, dan zouden ze beiden sterven, en zouden de Maribiren het kasteel voor altijd in handen krijgen. Het was vreemd als ze terugdacht aan de ontvoering. Ze kwam in een elvenbron van licht, en ze had even het idee dat de stam goed was, of tenminste een deel van die stam. Eén van de ringen vertelde haar dat er ook Maribiren waren die eigendom waren van de stam, als krijgsgevangenen die ingeburgerd waren. Ze probeerde het te begrijpen, maar het leek alsof ze het niet kon grijpen. En eigenlijk wilde ze het niet grijpen, omdat ze bang was om goede gevoelens te hebben over enkele Maribiren. Ze was bang dat hun krachten haar verstand zouden innemen. In dit was ze gemengd, en het trok haar bijna uit elkaar.

Een lange gestalte stond voor haar toen ze haar ogen langzaam opendeed. Ze schrok. Het leek op een Maribir, een wat oudere Maribir. De Maribir wilde zijn mond openen, maar zuchtte toen. ‘Ik heb je vader verdraaid zien wegzakken,’ zei de Maribir.

‘Jij, jij,’ stamelde Salucia, ‘was jij niet één van mijn ontvoerders ? Jullie hebben me niets gedaan, alleen gebracht naar die zalige elvenbron, waar daarna verschrikkelijke dingen gebeurde.’

‘Ja,’ sprak de maribir. ‘Ik moet je iets vertellen. Wij zijn .... wij waren krijgsgevangenen ... Jij hebt ons verlost .... Jouw hart .... De reis die je hier maakt zette ons vrij, trok ons los in onze gedachte ....’

‘Waar zijn de anderen ?’ vroeg Salucia.

‘Verderop,’ zei de man.

En toen zag Salucia in hoe belangrijk haar reis was. Zij was zelf een sleutel. Ze begreep alleen niet hoe, en nog steeds was ze bang om bedrogen te worden.

Na een tijdje kwam ze bij een kamp aan vol met Maribiren, maar deze waren anders, als de krijgsgevangen man. Misschien dat de man hen bedoelde. Het leek alsof zoveel angst van haar werd weggenomen toen hij haar zag. Ja, deze waren anders, ouder, rustiger, en het was alsof ze weer baadde in die elvenbron. Alleen nu hoopte ze dat er geen verschrikkelijke dingen zouden gebeuren.

‘Salucia,’ sprak een vertrouwde stem.

En daar stond ze dan. Zolang in de armen van zoiets vertrouwelijks. En warmte stroomde haar trillerige lijf binnen, om haar rustig te maken. Sieraden kreeg ze om haar heen, en allerlei kleine flesjes, vol magie. ‘Ik denk dat ik me vergis. Zijn jullie mijn ontvoerders ?’ Niemand zei wat. Ze voelde zich alleen wegglijden in een diepe rust. De muren van het kasteel waren hier ver weg, het plafond hoog, en gloeiend als de hete zon, terwijl er zand op de geblokte vloer lag, rood en geel geblokt. Salucia zakte neer, en tranen stroomden. Een vertrouwelijke hand greep haar hand zachtjes en teder. Ze hield haar ogen stijf dicht.

‘Maar ik wil niet,’ zei ze. En toen ze haar ogen opende was iedereen weg, en ook haar ringen waren verdwenen. Wat was er gaande. Ze wilde een gil slaken, maar kon niet, alsof er een hand op haar mond lag. Een tedere hand, en daarom was ze nog steeds zo rustig, en ze zag nog steeds al die andere sieraden aan haar lichaam en klederen bungelen, en zoveel kleine flesjes.

‘Ik heb zoiets vreemds meegemaakt,’ zei ze tegen zichzelf. Ze opende een flesje en een wonderlijke geur verspreidde zich. Een geest stond voor haar met een zwaard. Toen ze naar boven keek zag ze op een hoogte de stam weer, en vroeg vriendelijk of de geest haar daar naartoe wilde brengen. Dat was in een wip gebeurt. Ze wist niet wat ze moest denken, en weer omhelsde ze haar vrienden één voor één. Ze droegen hele aparte flesjes en kruikjes aan kettingen om hun nek, en hun broeken waren van prachtige zachte stoffen, als van fluweel. Maar alles leek wel nat, en één van hen hield zijn hand op waarin een vlam verscheen.

‘De eeuwige vlam van het kasteel,’ zei een ander. Maar je hebt het nog niet bereikt. Wat zou het kosten om de vlam van de één naar de ander te laten overspringen ?

En hoeveel tijd zouden ze hebben ? De tovenaar had haar verteld dat er niet veel tijd was. De eeuwige vlam was nu zo dichtbij, maar tegelijkertijd zo verweg. Wat als de tovenaar al op haar zou wachten ? Wat als hij de eeuwige vlam in het rijk der Maribiren al had bereikt ? Paniek begon over haar te komen, maar tegelijkertijd suste ze haarzelf, en ook de anderen begonnen haar te sussen.

‘Ik kan je die vlam geven,’ sprak hij, een lange Maribir, een voormalig krijgsgevangene, wellicht een slaaf. ‘Ik ben je veel verschuldigd,’ zei hij. Hij schoof dichterbij, maar de vlam begon te doven. ‘Zie je wat er gebeurt ?’ zei hij.

Salucia zakte weg in wanhoop. Ze dacht terug aan de tovenaar, en haar onwetendheid maakte haar onzeker.

‘Sssh, praat niet,’ zei de man met de vlam. Toen vertrok hij.

‘Je zal hem vinden,’ zeiden de anderen, ‘en dan zal de vlam overspringen.’

Daarna moest Salucia een lange reis maken door een woestijn, terwijl al haar toverij haar in de steek leek te laten. Boven op een hoogte was er niets dan droogte, waar de stralen van de inmens hete zon speelden, en ze wist niet hoe ze daar kon komen. Waar waren de anderen ? Ze wist het niet. Ze vaagden soms gewoon geheel weg, zonder dat ze het besefte. Vaak sloot ze haar ogen en opende ze weer. Ze begreep er niets van. Achter een struikje zag ze een opening waar het zand schoof. Overal lagen rode lappen, en ze herinnerde de woorden van de tovenaar dat ze door die lappen verschillende soorten eieren kon uitbroeden. Ze besloot wat eieren van het struikje te plukken, en wikkelde ze in de rode lappen. Vogels kwamen voort, en brachten haar snel op die hogere plaats. Onzekerheid maakte zich meester van haar. Ook dorst vervulde haar, terwijl al haar flesjes allang leeg waren. Maar verderop was een bron. Langzaam liet ze zich in de bron zakken die heter was dan het zand, maar prettig aanvoelde. Plotseling voelde ze lippen op haar huid. Iemand was achter haar, en de hitte scheen te verdwijnen.

Het was de man met de eeuwige vlam. ‘Zie je,’ zei de man, ‘als ik dichtbij je komt vertrekt de vlam. Als hij geheel gedoofd is, is alles verloren.’ De man was een eind van haar weg gezwommen. De bron was koud geworden. Salucia schrok. Snel stapte ze uit de bron en durfde niet meer over de man na te denken. Even later kwam ze bij een blok ijs waar de vlam was. Voorzichtig stak ze haar hand in het ijs, en de vlam begon haar gezicht te verlichten. Ze voelde zich blij worden van binnen, en vol worden met een hele andere warmte. Op hetzelfde moment begreep ze waarom de tovenaar haar moest verlaten, en ervoer ze met haar hele wezen dat ook hij nu de eeuwige vlam had bereikt. Ze hadden het samen gedaan.

Einde

De Wraak van de Plaaggeesten

Dat de indiaanse elven hard hadden gewerkt wist iedereen. Het was een prachtig kamp geworden, en ze aten vollop van hun jachtmaal. Ditkeer hadden ze de beestachtige wachters van de keizer weten te strikken, en de toverkrachten vloeiden van hun monden af. Niemand wist van hun jachttaktieken af, want die werden al eeuwenlang geheim gehouden. Als de bliksem sloegen ze toe, terwijl ze verwarrende sporen achterlieten. Niemand zou dit kamp ooit kunnen bereiken, omdat zodra iemand naderde, alles onzichtbaar werd. Dit ging automatisch. Zoveel toverflessen en toverkruiken verspreidden zoveel mysterieuze geuren die hiertoe in staat waren. Sommigen dachten dat die geuren iemands hersenen gek konden maken, zodat bepaalde dingen niet meer te zien waren, en anderen dachten dat het kamp daadwerkelijk als door een waas onzichtbaar werd. Hoe dan ook, de onbereikbaarheid was een feit. Daarom waren de indiaanse elven erg trots en voorzichtig met hun burgerschap. Het kwam weleens voor dat een elf om een bepaalde reden verbannen werd.

Sliktior had de keizer één keer ontmoet en vond het niet wat. Ook Sorsor kende de keizer een beetje. Ze dachten terug aan de tijden dat er vrede was, maar sinds de keizer beestachtige wachters begon in te huren leek het alsof zijn hersenen werden ingenomen. Het was een tovenaar die de keizer zo ver had gebracht, en de keizer dacht dat hij in z'n recht stond. Wat deden die wachters ? Ze maakten alles en iedereen onveilig. Woorden schieten mij te kort om zulke afschuwelijkheden te beschrijven. Daarom waren de indiaanse elven zo blij het vlees van deze beesten in hun monden te voelen vloeien. Sliktior had het vlees niet aangeraakt. Hij was bang dat hem wat zou overkomen.

Sorsor dacht aan de keizer, en aan de tovenaar met zijn toveres. De tovenaar had die wachters eens gecreeerd, en het zou niet zonder gevaren zijn het vlees van zulke wachters zomaar te eten. De wachters waren deels leeuw, deels tijger en deels wolf, en verder steeg hun roofkwaliteit boven alles uit. Het waren de superroofdieren die de andere roofdieren aten. Vaak gingen ze op jacht om alles te verscheuren wat los en vaststond, maar bovenal waren ze gemeen. Een nachtmerrie zou het zijn om in hun kerkers terecht te komen. Sorsor had het idee dat de keizer niet goed doorhad wat hij in huis had gehaald, dat hij niet wist wat er allemaal gebeurde. De keizer was zo druk met andere dingen bezig, en in Sorsor's ogen was de keizer totaal in de macht van de tovenaar en zijn toveres.

Sorsor had wel van het vlees gegeten, en vermomde zich tot een wachter. Hij ging naar het kasteel van de keizer, sloop naar binnen, en stal een bol met toverkooltjes. Snel ging hij terug naar zijn kamp, hief de bol op, en zei : 'Dit hier is het hart van de keizer. Voor ons is er geen hoop als wij hen van het keizerlijk kasteel hun gang laten gaan. Zij zijn vol list en sluwheid, en de keizer zelf is een pion in hun handen. Wij kunnen hem niet redden. Wij kunnen niet op tegen de machten van de tovenaar en zijn toveres. Zij zullen ons hier vinden en geen spaan van ons overlaten. Daarom : deze bol met toverkooltjes is het dierbaarste bezit van de keizer, en hij zal zeker sterven wanneer de bol is gebroken.' Toen brak Sorsor de bol, en er was luid gejuich. Allen wisten zij dat de tovenaar en toveres alleen konden regeren door de keizer. Nu was de keizer gestorven.

Sorsor ging terug naar het kasteel, en er was veel doodslucht en rouw. Met gebogen hoofden kwamen de tovenaar en zijn toveres uit een grot naast het kasteel. De tovenaar hief zijn handen op en riep : 'De goden hebben wraak genomen.'

Sorsor nam twee messen en wierp hen in de harten van de tovenaar en zijn toveres. Nu was de omgeving en het land vrij van hun onderdrukking. Sorsor hield zijn laatste toespraak tot zijn stam, en maakte toen Sliktior tot opperhoofd. Sorsor zou beginnen aan zijn grote reis naar de bergen van de goden. Dit gebeurde altijd als een opperhoofd een daad begaan had zoals Sorsor. Ze zouden Sorsor herinneren als hun held, en Sliktior zou Sorsor de Tweede heten.

Sorsor pakte Sliktior vast, kuste zijn voorhoofd, en vertrok. Niet veel nam hij mee. Zijn klederen werden verdeeld onder de stam, en ook grote delen van zijn bezit, terwijl er ook veel werd verbrand. Twee misdadigers werden aan de martelpaal geslagen, en zij zouden sterven in plaats van verbannen worden. Zij verkozen de dood boven het verbannen worden, want de verbanning was in hun ogen een veel grotere schande. Door de martelpaal zou hun geest in het kamp blijven, en door mee te strijden in de oorlogen zouden ze hun eer kunnen herstellen. Ja, de regels van het kamp waren van grote wreedheid, maar ook van grote genade, als een geheimzinnige paradox van rechtvaardigheid. Zo had Sorsor het hen geleerd.

Sorsor was een man van grote wijsheid, geschonken door de goden die hij niet kende. Nu hij door zijn list en sluwheid de tovenaar en toveres had verslagen was hij waardig die goden te leren kennen. De goden woonden in de bergen, naast andere tovenaars en grote elven. Maar eerst zou hij door die verschrikkelijke woestijn moeten waar de goden hem op de proef zouden stellen.

In de woestijn werd hij gekweld door waanideeen, luchtweerspiegelingen, honger en dorst. De pijn van de droogte stak hem. Een oase was wat hij verlangde, een echte oase, maar alles was hier om hem te plagen. Er was hier niets te bereiken, en de plaaggeesten waren zijn enig gezelschap. Sorsor had niet geleerd in eenzaamheid te leven, en kon de leegte die zijn ziel teisterde niet aan. Hij wist dat de plaaggeesten niet per definitie slecht waren. Ze waren uitgezonden door de goden om hem te testen. Na een lange en angstige ervaring van leegheid en hopeloosheid riep hij het uit tot de plaaggeesten : ‘Als er dan niemand anders is, vullen jullie mij dan op, want de leegte vreet me weg.’ Gillend en joelend namen de plaaggeesten bezit van hem. Hier hadden ze lange tijd op gewacht, en nu zou Sorsor voorbereid zijn om de grotten van de goden te betreden. Het was de plaaggeest zelf die geplaagd werd en rust zocht, en die niet kon vinden. Nu de plaaggeest hem had vervuld stroomde er toverkracht door hem heen, en kon hij de goden bereiken zonder weg te smelten.

In een plaats van toverkolen ontmoette hij de god Prektiktion. De god bedankte hem dat Sorsor hem tot rust had gebracht, en de plaaggeest die Prektiktion tot hem had gezonden had aangenomen. Sorsor sprak over de verwoesting van het keizerlijke hart, en de god Prektiktion wist er alles van. ‘Ik heb jou die wijsheid gegeven,’ sprak de god. En de god vulde Sorsor met een hele reeks toverkrachten. De god Prektiktion had vele tovenaars in dienst, en kon ook Sorsor goed gebruiken. De god gaf hem een fles vol andere goden die hij kon oproepen. Die andere goden hadden de meest vreemde namen die Sorsor moeilijk kon uitspreken.

Prektiktion sprak dat de stam van Sorsor nu was overgeleverd aan de krachten van de woestijn, want ook naar hen zouden de plaaggeesten op zoek gaan om hen te testen. Sorsor nam de fles en gooide hem tegen een stenen muur kapot. ‘Ik had beloofd hen met mijn leven te beschermen,’ sprak Sorsor. ‘Waarom ben ik hier ?’

‘Je had geen andere keus,’ sprak Prektiktion. Sorsor viel op de grond en huilde. Hij miste zijn stam.

‘Als zij de plaaggeest aannemen,’ sprak Prektiktion, ‘dan zal je hart met hen verbonden zijn.’

Na vele lange jaren kwam ook Sliktior tot de plaats van toverkolen, en vertelde Sorsor dat hij niet kwam vanwege een grote daad, maar omdat hij was verbannen. Sorsor viel neer in woede. Hij kon zich niet voorstellen dat zijn stam tot zoiets in staat zou zijn, maar later begreep hij het. Sliktior had lafheid vertoond. Sorsor vroeg zich af hoe een verbannene hier kon komen. Uit het oog van Prektiktion kwam een straal vuur die in een flits Sliktior verteerde. ‘Veel vaker komen hier bannelingen,’ sprak Prektiktion. ‘Zij kunnen hier komen met een geheime sleutel, maar hun lot is het vuur.’

‘Zijn zij indringers ?’ vroeg Sorsor. Maar Prektiktion schudde zijn hoofd. ‘Nee, zij worden toegelaten omdat zij dieven zijn. Zij nemen altijd een stukje weg van de stam als zij gaan. Zij zijn dus bijzonder in onze ogen, en onze ogen zullen dat bijzondere dan nemen.’

‘Maar waar is Sliktior dan nu ?’ vroeg Sorsor.

‘Hij is overgeleverd aan de wraak van de plaaggeesten,’ sprak Prektiktion.

Maar dat liet Sorsor niet op zich zitten, want hij hield meer van Sliktior dan van welke god of elf dan ook. Er was één ding dat hem liet strijden tegen de goden, en wat hij altijd droeg, en dat was een klein kruikje vastgemaakt aan een leren ketting om z’n nek. Zijn voorouders hadden hem verteld dat hij het flesje echter maar één keer kon gebruiken. Hij opende het flesje, en een stroom van gif sloeg de god neer. Sorsor greep een mes dat aan zijn been gebonden was door een band, en wierp het in het hart van de god zoals hij eens de tovenaar en de tovenares had uitgeschakeld. Op hetzelfde moment werd de huid van de god opengescheurd en Sliktior stapte eruit, als een priemend vuur. ‘Raak me niet aan !’ riep Sliktior. Maar Sorsor greep hem stevig vast. ‘Aan de wraak van de plaaggeesten zal je niet overgeleverd zijn,’ sprak Sorsor, ‘maar weest gastvrij voor hen, want aan de wraak der goden waren ze overgeleverd.’ Er zat nog één druppel in het flesje waar Sorsor Sliktior van liet drinken, en de plaaggeest vervulde toen ook hem.

Samen zijn ze toen door de woestijn naar hun stam teruggegaan. Maar de andere goden hadden zich gevestigd in het kamp, en hadden de indiaanse elven tot slavernij gedwongen. Het flesje was leeg, maar omdat Sliktior van het flesje had gedronken was hij immuun. En zo bevrijdde Sliktior zijn stam van de goden, en werd hij in ere hersteld.

Sorsor zou weer teruggaan naar de bergen, en ditmaal niet om tot de goden te gaan, maar tot de grote elven. De grote elven droegen zorg voor vele plaaggeesten die ze uit de verschrikkelijke handen van de goden hadden weggekregen. Toen Sorsor een groot aantal grote elven had leren kennen stelden ze hem aan als opperhoofd van een stam van indiaanse plaaggeesten. Deze indiaanse plaaggeesten konden toveren als de beste, en Sorsor moest oppassen dat ze hem niet in de val lieten lopen. Vaak moest er een grote elf ingrijpen.

Na vele jaren kwam ook Sliktior naar deze plaats, en deze keer niet omdat hij verbannen was, maar omdat hij de stam van indiaanse elven een nieuwe grote dienst had bewezen, zo groot als de daad van Sorsor. Sliktior nam de taak van Sorsor nu hier over, en Sorsor vertrok dieper in de bergen. Sorsor kwam tot een plaats waar veel indiaanse tovenaars woonden, en hij zag in dat zij veel grotere plaaggeesten waren dan degenen die hij al kende. Ze waren duivels wreed, maar daarnaast ook genadig, als een wet die hij ook eens kende, de paradox van rechtvaardigheid. Fliktivian was een woestijnvlinder die grote luchtweerspiegelingen kon veroorzaken, en Sorsor ontmoette vele anderen. Sorsor kwam erachter dat zij uiteindelijk verantwoordelijk waren voor alle moeizame tafereeltjes van zijn leven, maar ditmaal waren ze vriendelijk naar hen, alsof hij nu één van hen was. Sorsor kwam er echter achter dat velen van hen niet deugden, en slachtte hen af in verschrikkelijke gevechten. In deze gevechten leerde hij wat ware gemeenheid was, en dat de ogenschijnlijke genade de gemeenheid nog groter maakte. Want Sorsor raakte ervan in de war, en werd zo een gemakkelijke prooi. Maar Sliktior volgde hem op de voet, en maakte zijn meester vrij. Er waren geheimenissen die Sliktior droeg waar Sorsor nog geen weet van had.

Sorsor had vele vragen, vragen die beantwoord zouden worden op zijn pad door de woestijnen en de bergketens. Het was alsof alles bijdroeg aan de grote puzzel in zijn hoofd, maar sommige stukjes leken alles weer af te breken. Sorsor raakte erg verwilderd. Op een dag vond Sorsor een heleboel plaaggeesten in een flesje. Als hij ze vrij zou laten, zouden dingen dan erger worden of beter ? Hij wist dat ze waren gezonden om te plagen, en eigenlijk had hij genoeg van het geplaag. Hij wist dat als hij het niet zou openen, dan zou waarschijnlijk iemand anders het openen. Sorsor besloot het flesje om z'n nek te dragen, om het in gevallen van nood te gebruiken. Je kon nooit weten. Maar later besloot hij het diep in de woestijn te begraven, want er waren al genoeg plaaggeesten op de wereld.

Einde

Het Toverwapen

De indiaanse strijder hakte er op los met zijn mes. Ditkeer was er geen ontsnappen aan, want hij was omsingeld door een groep apen. Geen van de apen gaf snel op, ook al bracht de indiaan hen flink wat wonden toe. Ook al lagen na een tijd veel apen op de grond, de laatste aap greep de indiaan en bracht hem mee in een boom. De indiaan bloedde hevig, en vroeg zich af waarom de aap hem niet verscheurde. In een hoge boomhut werd de indiaan op een bed gelegd. Een vrouw begon zijn rug te masseren. Waarom verbond ze zijn wonden niet als ze zo vriendelijk was ? Haar handen zaten na een tijdje onder het bloed.

'Ach, dat droogt wel op,' zei de vrouw. De aap scheurde zijn huid van zich weg en bleek een andere vrouw te zijn. Lachend keken de vrouwen de indiaan aan. 'Maar ... maar .... wie zijn die andere apen dan ? Ze liggen bloedend op de grond,' zei de indiaan stotterend. 'En zou je je handen niet eens wassen ?' De vrouw met bloed aan haar handen liep de boomhut uit, en dook vanaf een tak in de rivier. Wat een nachtmerrie leek liep op een droom uit. De vrouwen waren hem helemaal niet vijandig gezind.

De man dook haar achterna en ook de andere vrouw. Snel zwommen ze naar de kant, en de vrouwen lieten hem zien dat de apen toch wel echt apen waren. 'Ik kwam je gewoon redden,' zei de vrouw. 'Als ik er niet was geweest, dan hadden de apen je verscheurd. Ik draag toverkrachten. Mijn moeder was een indiaanse elf.' De man keek de vrouw diep in de ogen, en zag een glinstering.

'Heus,' zei één van de vrouwen, 'je moet niet meer teruggaan naar je stam. Ze maken alleen maar oorlog.' Maar de indiaan wilde terug, en ging weg na de vrouwen te hebben bedankt.

De vrouwen hadden nog veel te doen. Ze moesten wat dingen in de rivier wassen, en die avond zouden ze naar de indiaanse elvenstam gaan waar hun moeder vandaan kwam. Hun moeder leefde niet meer, maar ze hadden nog steeds contact met haar stam. De twee vrouwen waren halfzusters.

Die avond laat kwamen ze in het kamp van de indiaanse elven aan. Er was veel gezang, en de elven vierden een vreemd feest. Het was een oorlogsfeest, en het zag er erg luguber uit. De elven dronken bloed, en maakten oorlogswapens. De vrouwen waren wel wat gewend, maar ze wilden juist dat al die oorlogen zouden stoppen. Na een tijdje verlieten ze het kamp huilend.

De oorlogselven maakten zichzelf paraat. Ze hadden net een strijd achter de rug en maakten zich al op voor de volgende strijd. Intussen vielen de twee halfzusters elkaar in de boomhut in de armen. Snikkend vertelden ze elkaar hoe afschuwelijk ze al die oorlogen vonden, en dat ze er niet meer tegenkonden. Volgens hen moest er veel meer getoverd worden, en minder gestreden. ‘Als we nu een middel hadden,’ zuchtte de ene vrouw .... ‘Laten we op zoek gaan in de rivier,’ sprak de andere vrouw.

De indiaanse elven waren inmiddels in een bloedig gevecht tegen een andere stam. Die nacht brak er iets in de lucht. De vrouwen hadden iets gevonden, een oude steen op de bodem van de rivier. Maar door de steen werd alles alleen maar erger, want de steen bezat oorlogslust. De vrouwen raakten erdoor betoverd, en gingen terug naar de indiaanse elvenstam. ‘Wij hebben ons bedacht,’ zeiden de vrouwen. ‘Oorlog is goed, anders worden we iemands anders bezit. We moeten vechten voor ons leven. Maak ons tot jullie soldaten.’ En toen begonnen de elven hun harten naar hen te openen en vertelden over zovelen van hun die in andere stammen in slavernij leefden. De oorlog was nodig om hen te bevrijden, en zolang er geen tovermiddeltjes daarvoor waren was dat de enige oplossing. Maar oorlog maakte ook zoveel kapot, en de elven leerden te delen in elkaars lot.

Maar er was één wat oudere elf met een lange baard die altijd zei dat wijsheid en list veel belangrijker waren dan oorlog. Hij vertelde de elven altijd over de grote reis die ze moesten maken in plaats van bij elkaar te hangen voor wraak en oorlog. In zijn ogen mochten de elven alleen een wapen dragen om zichzelf op die reis te verdedigen, maar ze moesten de eenzaamheid ingaan om zo wijs te worden. Oorlog zou veel te veel kapotmaken.

Sommigen vonden wel dat hij gelijk had, maar anderen vonden hem een oude zeur met dromerige ideeen. Toen de vrouwen hem leerden kennen kon de oude elf hen best wel snel weer uit hun betovering halen, en op een dag besloten ze met z’n drieen de grote reis te maken. De oude elf had er zo lang op gewacht dat er iemand met hem mee zou gaan, en nu zouden er zelfs twee meegaan. Hij hoopte dat de rest zou volgen, maar dat gebeurde niet. En zo vertrokken ze met z'n drieen. De indiaanse elvenstam waren blij te zijn verlost van de oude elf.

De elf had in zijn jongere jaren al eerder zo'n reis gemaakt, en was daarna naar zijn stam teruggekeerd om de anderen daarover te onderwijzen. De grote reis zou tovenaars van hen maken, maar daarvoor moesten ze op een moment wel hun eigen weg kiezen.

De elf zei dat als ze echte tovenaars zouden worden, dan zouden ze pas echt anderen kunnen helpen en bevrijden. Maar eerst zouden ze daarvoor moeten leren verdwijnen en verschijnen, anders zouden ze nog steeds gevangen kunnen worden. De vrouwen hadden wel wat toverkrachten, maar echte tovenaressen waren ze nog niet.

De oude elf zei dat op de vlaktes van de eenzaamheid en vergetelheid vele wilde dieren leefden die ze eerst moesten overwinnen. Deze wilde dieren zouden hun toverkrachten proberen tegen te houden. De elf wilde de vrouwen uitleggen hoe ze moesten jagen, maar de vrouwen vroegen of er geen andere manier was. 'Nee,' zei de elf. 'Je moet de confrontaties aangaan met de heren van de duisternis die in zoveel vormen tot je zullen komen.' De elf sprak dat de wilde dieren hen onherroepelijk zouden vinden, en dan zouden ze moeten vechten voor hun leven. 'Het vlees van de zelfverdediging zal je in leven houden. Dat is iets anders dan oorlog, en eigenlijk ook iets anders dan jacht. Op de grote reis mag je een wapen dragen om jezelf te verdedigen.'

De vrouwen vonden de elf erg luguber als ze hem zagen eten van achtergelaten dode wilde dieren, maar toen ze even later met hun eigen ogen zagen hoe gevaarlijk zulke wilde dieren waren begonnen ze het steeds gewoner te vinden. De elf maakte klederen van de afgestroopte huiden, ook om andere wilde dieren af te schrikken, of om hen te laten denken dat hij één van hen was.

De elf leidde hen naar een meer van bloed, waarvan de bodem geheel van vlees was gemaakt. 'Als je tovenaar wil worden, dan zul je eerst het meer moeten overzwemmen,' sprak de elf. Dat vonden de vrouwen een beetje teveel van het goede, maar toen ze de elf zagen duiken zwommen ze hem achterna. De velden achter het meer waren branderig, en het ruikte er naar gebraden vlees. Verderop zagen ze hoe de meest gevaarlijke wilde dieren werden gebraden.

'Is er geen tovermiddel om die noodzakelijke jacht van zelfverdediging te laten stoppen voor een andere oplossing ?' vroeg één van de vrouwen. Maar de elf schudde zijn hoofd. Toveren was in wezen ook gewoon een strijd en een jacht. Er moesten bedreigende dingen overwonnen worden, om daarna getransformeerd te worden. ‘Tovenaar wordt je door gevaarlijke toverbeesten te eten,’ sprak de elf. ‘Zij blokkeren namelijk de weg tot het tovenaarschap en zij dragen alle toverkrachten die eigenlijk van jou zijn.’

‘Maar is dat niet gevaarlijk om zulke toverbeesten te eten ? Zijn ze niet giftig, of betoverend ?’ vroeg de andere vrouw. ‘Eerst is de strijd van buiten,’ zei de elf, ‘en als je ze gegeten hebt is er een strijd van binnen. Maar beide vormen van strijd zijn belangrijk voor het behalen van tovenaarschap.’

En zo werd de jacht op de toverbeesten een feit, want iedereen wist toen dat aanval vaak de beste verdediging was. Op een bepaald punt moesten de vrouwen en de elf alleen verder, en zo kozen ze alledrie een eenzaam pad. En ze merkten dat toen ze tovenaar werden ze konden verdwijnen en verschijnen, en zo nooit meer een slachtoffer waren. Ook merkten ze dat ze de ander alleen maar konden helpen door hen ook de grote reis te laten maken. Want iemand zal altijd gevangen blijven zolang hij nog niet kan verdwijnen en verschijnen : gevangen in zichzelf. Maar toen ze de eerste fase van het tovenaarschap voorbij waren merkten ze ook dat er hogere toverkrachten waren, en zo ontstond er een geheel nieuwe strijd en daarbij een hele nieuwe jacht, om los te komen van een veel diepere gevangenschap, die van de onwetendheid. En zo waren er dus vele vormen van zelfverdediging die langzaam maar zeker als gewoon werden beschouwd. En zo werden zowel jacht als oorlog twee wapens van de zelfverdediging.

Het op de uitkijk staan, een bezigheid die beide vrouwen en de oude elf begonnen lief te hebben toen ze hun eigen toverkasteel hadden verworven, en hun eigen toverheuvel. Vele toverwapens hadden ze zichzelf bereid, om hun tovenaarschap tot grotere hoogtes te drijven.

Einde

De Elvenoorlogen

Geen wapen bleef onaangeroerd in de bloederige elvenoorlog tussen de indiaanse elvenstammen. En eigenlijk draaide het in die oorlog alleen om tranenstenen, bloedkoraalachtige toverstenen. Gekrijs en gegil vulde de nacht, totdat een joelende stam uiteindelijk had gewonnen. Ze droegen de toverstenen naar een geheime plek, en probeerden verder de hele oorlog te verwerken. De oorlog had lang geduurd, maar het doel was nu bereikt.

Witsmiktiel, de indiaanse elvensmid van de stam die de elvenoorlog had gewonnen smolt de stenen om, en zo kon er een nieuw daglicht komen over alle stammen. Nog nooit gingen zoveel elven in slavernij, en nog nooit was er zoveel doem in de omgeving. Het vee van de elvenstammen die in de oorlog ten onder was gegaan werd vollop geslacht, wat een zwarte bladzij was in de geschiedenis van de indiaanse elven. Zelfs de winnende stam gaf dat later toe, want waar was alles om te doen ? Om tranenstenen die omgesmolten moesten worden, zodat er nieuw daglicht zou komen : allemaal om slaven te maken : Elven in boten, elven op fokkerijen, elven in de bouw, van alles.

Er was een man, een elf, Timgrimado, die hen uiteindelijk de onzin van dit alles liet inzien. Hij stal de omgesmolten stenen en liet er een wapen van maken waarmee hij hen allen zou domineren. Afschaffen liet hij alle slavernij, alle fokkerij en slachterij, en hij leerde hen te vechten voor henzelf in plaats van voor anderen, zodat ze ook niet anderen voor zichzelf zouden gebruiken. Sindsdien was er wel veel onverschilligheid, maar men bleef in ieder geval van elkaar af. Timgrimado vertrok later weer, maar vertelde hen dat hij ze allemaal zou slopen als ze weer in hun oude wegen zouden terugvallen.

Velen probeerden erachter te komen waar Timgrimado naartoe was gegaan, maar niemand wist het. Velen verlieten hun stam om ook als Timgrimado te ‘vertrekken’. Niemand wist precies wat dat inhield, maar men vond dat wel stoer. Zelfs kinderen kondigden soms aan hun stam te verlaten, maar vaak stonden de ouders dat niet toe. Voor een elf was het belangrijk om tovenaar te worden, om de eenzaamheid en de vergetelheid te domineren, in plaats van elkaar. Ja, Timgrimado had hen wijze lessen geleerd.

Maar na tijden begonnen de verhalen over Timgrimado steeds meer weg te vagen, totdat op een bepaald moment niemand meer echt wist wie of wat Timgrado nou precies was, en men begon terug te vallen in oude gewoontes. En zo ontstond er een nieuwe elvenoorlog, nog luguberder dan die daarvoor. Ditmaal ging de oorlog om goud. Enkele indiaanse elvenstammen hadden goudmijnen gevonden. Weer brak er een tijd aan van slavernij voor de onderworpen stammen, en weer begonnen fokkerijen en slachterijen volop te bloeien. De grote winnaar van de oorlog was Herpidasis, het opperhoofd van een wrede indiaanse elvenstam. Herpidasis maakte zichzelf tot keizer van alle onderworpen stammen, en het moest genade heten dat hij ze in leven liet. Natuurlijk moesten ze bijna allemaal in de goudmijnen werken, en niemand maar dan ook niemand dacht over Timgrimado, omdat niemand meer wist wie hij was.

En daarom was het dan ook een extra verrassing toen hij ineens voor de deur stond. Hij was net zo verwilderd als vroeger, alsof hij vanuit de dieptes van de eenzaamheid en de vergetelheid kwam. Ditkeer was Timgrimado erger dan hij ooit was. Hij greep Herpidasis bij z'n nek en rukte z'n kop eraf. Alle volgelingen van Herpidasis maakte hij tot slaaf door onverwoestbare rode toverketens om hun nek, en zo voerde hij hen allen mee naar zijn duistere kastelen diep in de vergetelheid. Woest brulde Timgrimado tot zijn slaven : 'Ik heb jullie eerst geleerd niet van slavernij te leven en elkaar vrij te laten zoals ik jullie vrijliet. Maar omdat jullie niet naar mij wilden luisteren laat ik jullie nu zien dat hij die van slaven leeft zelf een slaaf is.' En zo moesten de slaven hard werken in de mijnen onder de duistere kastelen van Timgrimado.

Maar op een dag wist één van de slaven vrij te komen, en stal het wapen van tranenstenen dat Timgrimado in bezit had. De slaaf ging er direkt mee naar Timgrimado toe en hief het wapen in de lucht : 'Zie je dit hier !' krijste de slaaf. 'Dit heb jij eens gestolen en je macht opgeeist, maar nu is het van ons.' En een bliksemstraal kwam van het wapen af om Timgrimado te ketenen. De slaaf zette verder met het wapen alle andere slaven vrij, en samen voerden ze Timgrimado mee naar hun oude domein. Hier maakten ze weer alle andere stammen tot hun slaaf, en Timgrimado werd in een kerker geworpen. En sindsdien stond de wreedheid van de overheersende stam op het toppunt. Het werd zo erg dat machtige tovenaars hun legers stuurden, alleen maar om te ontdekken dat Herpidasis en zijn elven hun slavenrijk met onbreekbare hand uitbreiden. Na een tijdje waagde zich geen enkele tovenaar er nog aan. En zo werd Herpidasis zelfs de schrik der tovenaars.

Maar Timgrimado wist een gat te graven in zijn kerker tot diep onder de grond. Hier vond hij zogenaamde gilstenen waar hij een nieuw wapen van maakte. Timgrimado bleek onoverwinnelijk door het nieuwe wapen, nadat hij er de deur van de kerker mee had gesloopt. Een wachter probeerde hem te grijpen, maar snel onthoofde Timgrimado de wachter en nam zijn helm en pantser. Niet lang daarna had Timgrimado het hele keizershuis onderworpen, omdat het wapen zo gilde dat iedereen erdoor in elkaar zakte wanneer Timgrimado zijn wapen richtte. Timgrimado begon de oude wetten weer te verkondigen, maar wist nu ook dat hij nooit meer zou terugkeren als hij zou vertrekken. Timgrimado voegde daarom geen waarschuwing meer achter de wetten, omdat hij niet nog een keer in de val gelokt wilde worden. De indiaanse elven moesten nu voor zichzelf zorgen. Hij raadde hen allemaal aan hun stammen te verlaten om de eenzaamheid en de vergetelheid op te zoeken.

Terug naar zijn duistere kastelen en mijnen kon hij niet, want daar zouden ze hem kunnen vinden, en daarom sloeg hij een totaal nieuwe richting in, en wiste zijn sporen uit. Hij wist dat zij die in stammen bleven leven ook oorlog zouden blijven voeren.

Einde

Hersenspinsels der Elven

Mirik, Mirit, en Sakja waren drie indiaanse oorlogselven. Ze hadden toverwapens, een heel kasteel vol, en ze deinsten niet terug voor bloederigheden en het drinken van bloed. Ze waren heel vampiristisch van aard.

Vaak vochten ze alledrie aan elkaars zijde, maar meestal leefden ze op zichzelf. De jacht deden ze meestal alleen. Er waren geen gruwelijkere en prachtigere elven dan hen, maar de wraak der heksen en tovenaars keerden vaak tegen hen.

Meestal als ze alleen waren kregen ze het zwaar te verduren, en daarom zochten ze elkaar nog weleens op. Gelukkig konden ze goed verdwijnen en verschijnen, en dat maakte alles iets makkelijker, maar er waren genoeg tovenaars en heksen, en genoeg boze elven die hen daarin met gemak konden volgen. Zij waren niet de enigen die konden verdwijnen en verschijnen. Ze hadden een hoge tovenaarsgraad, dat wel, maar hier woedde de oorlog het hardst.

Vaak smeerden ze zichzelf in met toverbloed, of namen ze een bad met tovergeuren. Het bad was bekleed met de huiden van allerlei toverbeesten die ze hadden verslagen. Maar als ze bij elkaar waren dan was er zoveel toverkracht dat het de meest gevaarlijke heksen aantrok, en daarom besloten ze op een dag voorgoed uit elkaar te gaan. Ieder van hen zou een richting kiezen, en ze zouden alleen nog maar voor zichzelf strijden.

Van huiden maakten ze een eigen wigwam in verlaten gebied. En sindsdien werd alles rustiger.

Ze wisten dat ze alleen veilig waren als ze op zichzelf waren. In die verlaten gebieden hadden ze nog wel veel strijd te voeren tegen de wilde dieren. Deze wilde dieren waren erg gevaarlijk, omdat ze in hen wilden wonen. Deze wilde dieren wilden bezit van hen nemen. En ze wisten dat ze de wilde dieren alleen konden overwinnen door bezit van hen te nemen. Daarom liepen ze vaak in verschillende dierenhuiden rond, en bovenal moesten ze steeds verdertrekken.

Sommige beesten waren zo groot dat als ze hen overwonnen hadden ze met gemak erin konden leven als in een tent. Ze kwamen erachter dat deze wilde dieren nog wel erger waren dan tovenaars en heksen. Als ze niet zo wild zouden zijn als deze beesten zelf, dan zouden ze hier niet standhouden. Wie zou denken dat hun paden weer zouden kruizen na een lange reis en een lange strijd tegen de wilde dieren en beesten ? Een wilde indiaanse elvenstam leefde hier, maar zij zouden daar alleen deel van kunnen worden als ze deze stam zouden verslaan in een schijngevecht.

Deze elven hadden de wilde dieren en beesten tot hun beschikking om erop te rijden. Ook voerden zij oorlog tegen anderen van die duistere elvenstammen, maar deze oorlogen waren slechts schijn. Door schijnoorlogen werden er contacten gelegd en door schijnoorlogen werden deze contacten verder uitgebouwd, tot in de diepste vriendschappen. Door schijnoorlogen beschermde men elkaar.

En zij kwamen door de diepste duisternissen tot de grootste lichtbronnen der elven, en tot een heleboel andere elvenparadoxen. De toverdranken brachten een roes in de elven, een passie en een lust, als een recht en een plicht. De elvenscenario's gingen diep, en waren wonderlijk in hun verdediging. Het waren schijnlichten, schijngesprekken, en zelfs schijnvriendschappen, alles om hun doelen te bereiken, de ijskoude wateren van een diepe eenzaamheid, waarin een prachtige tweeledigheid werd opgewekt, een zuivere tweeledigheid, zich in schijn uitstrekkende naar de driehoek. Dit alles tot makkelijker en sneller te verdwijnen en te verschijnen, om geheel op te lossen in een realiteit. Nee, makkelijk was het niet om de hogere tovergraden te bereiken, om deel te krijgen aan de hogere hersenspinsels der elven.

Einde

De Prins en de
Rode Zee

Hoofdstuk 1. De Kronieken van Prinses Mekka
Hoofdstuk 2. De Ontmoeting met Sopraan
Hoofdstuk 3. De Zwarte Wachter
Hoofdstuk 4. Het Dansende Jongetje
Hoofdstuk 5. Het Land van Trol
Hoofdstuk 6. De Trollensleutel
Hoofdstuk 7. Het Overbruggen van de Eindeloosheid
Hoofdstuk 8. De Tweede Rivier
Hoofdstuk 9. De Rode Zee

Hoofdstuk 1. De Kronieken van Prinses Mekka

'Saturnus, met je paarse sneeuw,
Die diepe slaap brengt telkens weer,
Twee sterren in een steen,
Met Sirius vormde jij een grote zee,
De zee van Eldemor, waarop de aarde slaapt,
De sluier van paarse sneeuw die over haar waakt,
De ruiter van Eldemor rijdt over de golven,
Totdat het roze ons allemaal doet ontwaken,
In de droom van de rode zee,

Golf na golf komt het,

Slag na slag,

Omdat het rode op ons wacht.'

Op Saturnus lag een land van overweldigende pracht, van subtiele, ordenende gevoeligheid voor ritueel, ritme en regelmaat, bijna met een aangeboren vertrouwen in de hogere orde van de dingen, het hogere archief van bovenmenselijkheid, een paar stappen verder in evolutie dan de aarde. Boven op een trap was een klein meisje aan het huilen. Ze had een oude, kleine pop in haar hand. De tand van de tijd had haar beroert, en ze vertaalde dat op haar eigen manier. Ze kon nog niet zien wat er gaande was, maar ze nam dat wat ze kon begrijpen. Het was teveel voor haar, en ze voelde zich ongeholpen, eenzaam, totaal afgezonderd. Ze miste de paarse sneeuw. Ze mocht nooit naar buiten. Dat zou te gevaarlijk zijn. De zwarte drakenruiters waren op rooftocht. Zij roofden kinderen. Medelijden hadden zij niet. Met grote hardheid en wreedheid verstoorden zij de dromen van vaders en moeders. Nu werden de kinderen binnengehouden, in de hoop dat de drakenruiters niet zouden aankloppen om het huis te doorzoeken. Hoe dit kon gebeuren heeft een duistere en droeve geschiedenis.

In een land op Saturnus, het district Onterio, waarin een gebied genaamd Orn lag, leefden een oude koning en koningin. Zij wilden al heel lang een kind, maar zij konden geen kinderen krijgen. Op een dag ging hun wens toch in vervulling, tegen alle verwachtingen in. De koningin werd zwanger en baarde een prinsesje. Ze noemden haar prinses Mekka.

Op Saturnus was het heel gewoon draken als huisdier te hebben. Vooral de wat rijkeren hadden vaak vele draken. Dit was niet zonder gevaar, maar gewoonlijks werden de draken goed getemt voordat ze als huisdier konden functioneren. Wilde draken die niet getraind waren mochten absoluut niet verkocht worden aan de gewone burger. Toch ging het niet altijd goed met de getemde draken. Ze waren nog steeds duistere, geheimzinnige roofdieren met een onvoorspelbaar karakter. Het temmen kon dus van heel bedrieglijke aard zijn. Een draak kon het gewoon meespelen, maar als hij de kans zag, zou hij kunnen toeslaan. Eigenlijk werden alleen de goedaardige draken gebruikt voor de gewone burger, maar een draak kon plotseling veranderen, of zijn ware aard laten zien.

Als Lydia, de koningin van Onterio, wonende in Orn, het kon overdoen had zij haar dochter nooit een draak gegeven. Zij, en haar man, koning Azabarar, hadden hun dochtertje op jonge leeftijd een draak als huisdier gegeven, zodat het prinsesje vertrouwd kon raken met de dierenwereld. De kleine draak, Saubar, stond bekend als een goedaardig dier, goed voor kinderen ook. Met draken kon je vaak een diepe vriendschap opbouwen, en het hielp kinderen om sociale vaardigheden aan te leren. Al snel hadden het prinsesje en de draak Saubar een hechte band. Zij kon zelfs rondvliegen op de draak, alhoewel Saubar was getraind niet hoog te gaan met kinderen. De draak had een gele, bijna gouden huid. Het meisje hield ervan de huid van de draak te strelen. In de winters kleurde zijn huid altijd paars, terwijl het onder zijn vleugels wit werd.

Helaas werd de draak ernstig ziek en stierf. Als troost werd een andere draak aan het meisje gegeven : de draak Oros. Oros was een goed getemde draak, getemd door de beste drakentemmers van Onterio. Hij leek heel goedaardig, maar sloeg toch plotseling om. Hij was getraind om laag te blijven vliegen met kinderen, maar hij nam het prinsesje plotseling mee op een hele hoge en verre tocht. Hij vloog met haar de wildernis in, naar een berg, waar hij een grot binnenging, waar gevaarlijke, ongetemde draken leefden.

Het prinsesje werd sindsdien opgesloten gehouden. Koning Azabarar en koningin Lydia waren er kapot van, en sindsdien was koningin Lydia depressief. Er werden vele zoektochten gehouden, maar het prinsesje werd niet gevonden. De gruwelijkheden van haar gevangenschap zal ik u verder besparen. Sindsdien werden draken als huisdieren verbannen in het hele land Onterio. Ook werden er sindsdien vele aanvallen gedaan door wilde draken op de steden en dorpen van Onterio. Zij kwamen voornamelijk om kinderen te roven. Dit getal liep hoog op, en het werd zo erg dat kinderen tijdelijk niet meer buiten mochten spelen, omdat het te gevaarlijk was. Vaak werden er zwarte ruiters gezien die de draken schenen te berijden. Het was de tijd van de drakenruiters.

De broer van koningin Lydia, de oom van het prinsesje, en raadsheer van het koninklijke paleis in Orn vond dat het tijd was om de prins van Eldemor in te schakelen. Sopraan was er inmiddels achtergekomen waar de prinses verborgen werd gehouden.

In korte woorden vertel ik u dit, vanwege het grote en zware leed hieraan verbonden. De kronieken van prinses Mekka draag ik met mij mee.

Hoofdstuk 2. De Ontmoeting met Sopraan

Aan de zeeen van Eldemor zat hij. Zijn tranen waren van bloed, die zich mengden met het water. De zee was wild, en hij strompelde in het water, verder en verder, daar waar de golven hem meenamen. De golven waren zwart en paars, waar hij slaperig van werd. Hij droomde, alsof hij op een reusachtig schip was op de golven. Als een vogel vloog hij op vanuit de golven, terwijl de lichten van Saturnus op hem straalden. Ze bewogen hem, ze namen hem op.

Op de vleugelen van Saturnus was hij. Een beverig licht, bijna broeiend. Hij zag de bomen in de verte, die bijna naar hem leken te wuiven. De wind speelde met hun takken en bladeren. Plotseling was hij bedolven onder de bladeren. Hij zag prikkeldraad voor zich. Hij wist dat hij nu terugmoest, maar iets riep hem.

Michael was bij hem. Michael had zijn zwaard getrokken. Zoveel prikkeldraad was voor hen, hen bedreigende. 'Zoon van Eldemor, kom nader,' werd er geroepen. Het was een bulderende stem in de verte. 'Maar er is prikkeldraad !' riep hij. Toen was er even veel licht, alsof het prikkeldraad begon weg te smelten.

Door het wegsmeltende prikkeldraad kwam een man in een lang wit gewaad van heel fijne stof. De man had een lange baard, en stak zijn hand uit. Ook had hij een blauwe riem die paarsachtig aandeed.

'Sopraan is de naam,' sprak hij.

De prins van Eldemor veegde wat tranen van bloed uit zijn ogen weg, en schudde de hand van de man. In de verte hoorden ze het gehuil van wolven. Michael bleef toekijken op een afstand.

'De wolven huilen, omdat je gekomen bent,' sprak Sopraan.

'Waarom ?' vroeg de prins.

'Omdat je het eeuwige boek in je hoofd draagt,' sprak Sopraan. 'Het zit daar als een litteken, eens geslagen door een draak.'

De prins herinnerde zich het gevecht, waarin zijn hoofd verwond raakte. Het leek wel alsof de draak in zijn hoofd kon komen, en het brandwonden aanbracht op zijn hersenen. Dat was op de planeet Sirius, waar hij een prinses redde. Prinses Regenboog, ook wel Prinses Aurora genoemd. Hij nam haar mee naar zijn wereld, de aarde. Ze was een vrouw van rond de vierenveertig. Ze had zijn moeder kunnen wezen. Ze was een koppige vrouw, en dat had haar in de problemen gebracht. Om in zijn wereld te komen moest ze door een lange tunnel om haar geheugen en identiteit te verliezen, waardoor ook de draak de macht over haar zou verliezen, en ze zou opnieuw geboren moeten worden door een vrouw. Hevig had ze met hem gebekvecht, maar uiteindelijk zag ze in dat er geen andere weg was. Toen ze geboren werd in zijn wereld wilde ze hem en de vrouw die haar gebaard had niet aankijken. Telkens draaide ze haar gezichtje weg. Zou de draak nog steeds een zekere macht over haar hebben gehad ? Hij herinnerde het dubbele in haar. Hij zag ook haar kwaliteiten. Wie wilde er nu met een draakse vrouw in één huis leven ? Maar hij had geen andere keus, en hij hield ook van haar. Als baby was ze nog steeds koppig, maar verder wel rustig. Ze kon zo ineens toeslaan, en dan liet ze al haar registers los, en sloeg over een geheel andere boeg. Eens nam de draak haar mee, door haar wispelturigheid. Eens sprak de draak haar toe, vastberaden om haar tot één van zijn pionnen te maken. Maar de prins gooide roet in het eten, door het eeuwige boek in zijn hoofd. Al eerder had de draak hem geslagen. Hij kwam te dichtbij de heilige relikwieen van Sirius, relikwieen die het universum zouden kunnen veranderen. Hij was dronken geraakt van een hemels sap, en kwam tot diep in de tempelen van Sirius, waar hij zijn weg vond tot aan de heilige ark. Toen hij de heilige ark aanraakte werd hij weggeslingerd, en de draak blies op hem, om zijn hoofd zwaar te verwonden.

'In Sirius zal je grafstede zijn, in Sirius zal je scepter begraven worden,' siste de draak, maar de verwondingen zorgden er juist voor dat het eeuwige boek tot geboorte kwam in het hoofd van de prins. Het eeuwige boek was als een brullend monster in zijn hoofd, totaal verwilderd. Met het monster kon hij het slot openmaken van de kerker van de prinses. Waarom koos hij deze koppige vrouw ? Vanwege haar sieraad. Zij kon de bloemen laten groeien, de mist laten optrekken als een weergodin.

'Ik denk dat je niet helemaal begrijpt waar het om gaat,' sprak Sopraan.

De prins keek op. Hij was te diep in gedachten gezonken geweest. 'Ik weet waarvoor je bent gekomen,' sprak Sopraan. 'Je hebt de helft van een sieraad, en nu wil je de andere helft, om de draken voorgoed te verslaan. Ze zijn naar je op jacht, met hun trollenlegers, en nu zoek je hulp.'

De prins knikte, weer tranen van bloed uit zijn gezicht wegvegende.

'Is ze veilig ?' vroeg Sopraan.

'Wie ?' sprak de prins.

'De vrouw van de eerste helft van het sieraad,' sprak Sopraan.

'Ja,' zei de prins. 'Ze is bij mij, maar een beetje koppig.'

'Het sieraad is los van de andere delen. Daarom volgt het haar eigen weg, en het brengt haar in de problemen,' sprak Sopraan.

'Zoon van Eldemor, je vader was een elvenkoning, en je moeder een feeenkoningin,' sprak Sopraan. 'Nu, de draken hebben jouw familie verscheurt, door het familie-sieraad te verscheuren, om de buit te verdelen onder elkaar, maar doordat het sieraad van Eldemor niet hun eigendom was, hebben de verschillende afgescheurde delen van het sieraad wraak gezworen.

Zij kwamen toen in de handen van zeven prinsessen, waarvan vijf gestorven zijn. Het sieraad werd deels hersteld, maar bestaat nog steeds uit twee delen. Eén deel is met jou, en het andere deel is hier.”

'Hoe krijg ik het sieraad ?' vroeg de prins.

'Het is met prinses Mekka, mijn nichtje,' zei Sopraan. 'Ook zij wordt opgesloten gehouden door een draak.'

'Alweer een draak ?' bromde de prins. 'Alsof we het nog niet met genoeg draken aan de stok hebben.'

'Vele draken,' zei Sopraan. 'Onthoudt dat zij je familie verscheurden.' De prins knikte. Hij herinnerde zich als de dag van gisteren hoe Gesim, de draak van Sirius, zijn vader, de elvenkoning vermoordde. Dit was een zwarte dag in de geschiedenis. De prins werd weer duizelig toen hij eraan dacht. Hij was zo jong toen dat gebeurde. Vanaf toen moest hij zijn vader elke dag missen. 'Die vieze gele draak,' dacht de prins bij zichzelf.

'Alleen jij kunt haar bevrijden,' sprak Sopraan. 'Jij draagt immers het eeuwige boek in je hoofd.'

Sopraan wenkte hem, en leidde hem naar een lange ondergrondse tunnel. 'Vijf dagen lopen,' sprak Sopraan, 'en dan kom je aan bij haar kerker. Maar Oros, de draak, bewaakt haar.'

De prins hapt plotseling naar adem. Er klopte iets niet. Hij grijpt naar zijn keel, naar het amulet wat daar hangt, als een half sieraad, een halve amulet, vastgemaakt aan een kettinkje. Plotseling wordt het duizelig voor zijn ogen. Even later wordt hij wakker in de armen van Sopraan. 'De draak valt je nu al aan,' sprak Sopraan. 'Zoon van Eldemor, de poort is open.' Plotseling zag de prins een helder licht voor hem, als een geopende poort. Hij kon daar zo binnenstappen, samen met Michael. Ook Matthias was met hen. Woest sloeg de draak toe. 'Oros !' riep Michael. 'De ene helft van het sieraad zoekt de andere helft. Je kunt het niet tegenhouden !' Woedend sloeg de draak weer van zich af. Ze werden allen geraakt als door bliksem. De prins beet op zijn lip. Hij trok het zwaard wat hij eens van Matthias had gekregen. Maar de draak sloeg hen zo ver weg dat de prins wegzonk in de zee. Even voelde hij zich alsof hij zou verdrinken, maar toen voelde hij Michael en Matthias die hem weer optrokken. Het was geweldig zulke gevleugelde vrienden te hebben. 'Gebruik het boek,' sprak Matthias, 'het eeuwige boek.'

De prins greep naar zijn hoofd. Hij had allemaal steken. 'Ik bestrijd je door het eeuwige boek in mijn hoofd, Oros !' riep de prins. Overal verscheen vuur, alsof het vuur regende. Wild sloeg de draak met zijn staart. Ineens was alles stil. Er verscheen poezie in het hoofd van de prins. Hij kon het zo lezen. Weer lag hij in de zee, maar ditmaal had hij prinses Mekka in zijn armen.

'Het sieraad is herenigd,' sprak Sopraan.

Hoofdstuk 3. De Zwarte Wachter

Ook prinses Mekka bracht hij tot zijn wereld, de aarde. Ook zij werd opnieuw geboren, in de schoot van dezelfde vrouw die de eerste prinses had gebaart. Zij kwamen door op grote hoogtes, waar de draken hen niet konden vinden. Verborgen moesten zij worden, en verborgen moesten zij opgroeien, achter donkere gordijnen, en zij mochten niet veel aan hun prinsessen-levens herinnert worden in het begin, opdat de draken hen niet zouden grijpen. Ze moesten hun herinneringen verliezen. Dat gebeurde door de geboorte. Zij gingen door de grote tunnel van Tsaar. Zo werden zij schoongewassen, en zo verloren de draken elk spoor. Maar beiden hadden deels een draakse natuur. Op zich was dit geen probleem. Er waren ook goede draken. Maar zij hadden teveel overgenomen van hun slechte draakse meesters. Die natuur zou moeten sterven. Dit zou gebeuren in de grote tunnel van Tsaar.

De prins wist dat hij een hoge prijs moest betalen. Hij droeg het volledige sieraad nu, het sieraad wat het eeuwige boek geheel zou opwekken. In de grote tunnel van Tsaar voelde hij zich wegglijden. Hij gleed tot de grote feeen rivier, de Sep, terwijl de draken achter hem joegen. Alles glipte uit zijn vingers en hij moest alles loslaten. Een groot kwaad was opgestaan. Hij droeg het geheim diep van binnen. De drakenstaart had hem zwaar verwond. Hij kon niets meer vasthouden.

Ze joegen op hem, zes draken, om het eeuwige boek in hem te doven. Grote trollenlegers kwamen tot de feeen rivier, de Sep, om grote slachtingen aan te richten. De prins was aangekomen in een feeen huis, waar ze hem verborgen hielden. De zes draken-koningen doorzochten het hele feeen land, maar konden hem niet vinden. In zijn dromen werd de prins meegetrokken met feeen. Hij moest een feeenridder worden om te kunnen overleven. Het eeuwige boek moest hij schrijven. Zijn pen was zijn zwaard.

Sopraan zocht hem vaak op, en hij maakte contact met de ouders van prinses Mekka. Zij waren hem erg dankbaar, want hij had hun dochter gered van de draak. Zij zonden hem vele gaven. Toen het eeuwige boek werd verspreid onder de feeen was dit een grote overwinning. De trollenlegers werden weggedreven van de feeen rivier, de Sep. De prins moest veel schrijven. Hij had niets meer van zijn verleden. Hij voelde zich arm, maar het eeuwige boek was een grote rijkdom voor hem. De prins leidde een sober leven, maar de feeen waren met hem. Als hij niet sober zou leven, dan zouden de draken teveel houvast hebben. Dagelijks baadde de prins in de feeen rivier, de Sep. Hij was een feeen ridder nu, met een grote opdracht.

Ondertussen kwamen de trollenlegers tot een grotere duisternis : een vals licht, het licht van Paam. Illusies bouwden ze op de aarde met dit licht, om te proberen de prinsessen te strikken. De prinsessen leefden in het diepe ijs van de tunnel van Tsaar, afgesloten van hun verleden. Zij droomden dromen uit een orakel, maar soms waren er nachtmerries. Nog steeds leefden ze onder de druk van de draken. De prins bewaakte hen zo goed als hij kon.

De lichten van Paam kwamen ook tot de feeen wereld, om vele feeen te misleiden, en hun ridders. De prins streed met het eeuwige boek, om diepere betekenis te vinden. Vaak leken de deuren gesloten te zijn.

In de woestijn van Dejam, ver weg van de feeen rivier, de Sep, in een afgelegen, verwilderde feeen tempel lag een gevaarlijke trollensteen, de Evit. De feeen wisten niet of het een goede of slechte steen was. Sommigen geloofden dat het een goede steen was, terwijl anderen geloofden dat het een slechte steen was, en weer anderen geloofden dat de steen niet goed en niet slecht was. De steen doodde vele feeenpriesters en priesteressen. Niet velen durfden bij de steen te komen. Vanwege het grote gevaar van de steen werd de steen achter een gordijn geplaatst. Dit gordijn was paars, en paarse wachters stonden ervoor. Alleen hogepriesters en hogepriesteressen mochten nog bij de steen komen, maar zelfs dat ging niet altijd goed, en jaarlijks kwamen er nog verschillende hogepriesters en hogepriesteressen om, vanwege de grilligheid van de steen. Niemand kon de steen eigenlijk vertrouwen. De steen was als een onvoorspelbaar roofdier. De steen werd gehoorzaamt uit pure angst.

Op een dag gebood de steen te worden geworpen in de feeen rivier, de Sep. De steen werd gedragen door zeven door de steen geselecteerde hogepriesters. Toen de steen in de feeen rivier, de Sep, werd geworpen, werden de zeven hogepriesters gedood door een straal komende vanuit de steen. De steen werd zacht en begon te veranderen in een zwarte wachter, die de rivier overzwom. De zwarte wachter was op weg naar de prins. Hij spande zijn zwarte boog, waar hij een zwarte pijl oplegde, en rende naar de schuilplaats van de prins, waar hij verborgen werd gehouden door feeen. De prins zat achter zijn schrijftafel. Plotseling was er een zwarte pijl op zijn neus gericht.

'Het sieraad, waar is het,' sprak de wachter met een trage en lage stem. Even werd de prins duizelig, en voelde alsof hij zou flauwvallen. 'Prins Jagerstouw, geef het sieraad direct hier,' sprak de wachter. De prins stond op, en liep naar een la waarin het sieraad was.

'Wat ga je ermee doen,' vroeg de prins. 'Gaat je niet veel aan, denk ik zo,' sprak de wachter. Aarzelend gaf de prins het sieraad aan de wachter. 'Draag je het veel ?' vroeg de wachter.

'Soms,' zei de prins, 'vooral bij speciale gelegenheden.'

De wachter greep het sieraad, en ging er snel vandoor. Hij dook in de rivier en werd weer een steen, die in de diepte van de rivier zonk. Er was veel donder en bliksem in feeen land. Veel feeen stierven. Ook waren er aardbevingen. De wachter had gesproken, en had genomen wat oorspronkelijk van hem was. Ook de familie Eldemor waren niet de rechtmatige eigenaren van het sieraad. Het sieraad lag op de steen, in de feeen rivier. De steen vergrootte het sieraad, en begon het om te smelten. Oorspronkelijk was het sieraad een orakel, een orakel waarin de steen woonde. Dit orakel was genaamd de Nahemsh, het grote orakel van trol.

'Neem mij weer op, en breng mij tot mijn tempel !' bulderde de steen vanuit de rivier. Een groep feeen priesters en priesteressen namen de steen op uit het water, en brachten de steen tot de woestijn van Dejam, tot achter het paarse gordijn van de tempel. Toen de steen op zijn plek was vielen de priesters en de priesteressen die de steen hadden gedragen of aangeraakt dood neer. Er was grote paniek in de tempel. Anderen keken geschokt toe, en sommigen verborgen hun gezicht. 'Versluier u nu met paarse sluiers, opdat u niet zult sterven,' sprak de steen. Nog steeds was de steen bezig het sieraad om te smelten tot het orakel wat het eerst was. Paars vuur kwam er van de steen af.

Vanaf toen droegen de priesters en priesteressen van de tempel paarse sluiers. Dit leek de steen wat te sussen. Maar nog steeds had de steen soms woede uitbarstingen, en dan kwam er rook, vuur en bliksem van de steen af. Soms vielen er doden. 'Hoe kunnen wij u het beste dienen ?' sprak Tedia, een lange feeen-priesteres.

'Luister Tedia,' sprak de steen. 'Ik ken jullie hart. Voor mij kun je niets verbergen.'

'Ik weet het, heilige trollensteen, heilige Evit,' sprak de fee. 'Maar onderwijs ons.'

'Buig voor mij,' sprak de steen, 'opdat u leeft.'

De fee boog, en ging op haar knieen. 'Maak paarse matjes,' bulderde de steen.

'Anders nog iets ?' vroeg de fee. 'Spaart u ook zegeltjes ?'

Ineens moest de steen lachen. 'Ik mag jou wel,' sprak de steen.

'Ik voel me vereerd,' sprak Tedia.

Het orakel begon steeds meer gestalte te krijgen, met de steen in het midden. Daar stond het als een groot relikwie, een groot mysterie en een groot raadsel. In vrees vielen de priesters en priesteressen voor het beeld neer. Met grote angst in hun ogen, maar ook met verbazing en verwondering keken ze naar Tedia, en ze vroegen zich af hoe ze zo durfde te spreken tegen de gevaarlijke steen. Ze waren in ieder geval blij dat ze nog steeds leefde. Zo'n grapje had natuurlijk heel verkeerd kunnen aflopen met zo'n heilig object in de buurt, en het grapje was zelfs gericht tot het object zelf. Waarschijnlijk had de steen ook wat humor, of werden ze voor de gek gehouden ? Nog steeds kenden ze niet de ware aard van de steen, en wisten zij niet waar de steen op uit was. Nog steeds vreesden ze voor hun leven. De steen had geen medelijden gehad met velen van hen.

'Tedia heeft voor het beste deel gekozen,' sprak de steen : 'Onderwijs.'

'Onderwijs ons !' riepen ineens wat priesters en priesteressen. 'Wij staan open voor u, wat u ons te zeggen heeft.'

'Goed dan,' sprak de steen.

Hoofdstuk 4. Het Dansende Jongetje

De steen droeg hen op kerken te bouwen en kloosters door het hele feeenland, en zij moesten optochten houden in paarse gewaden en paarse kappen. Zij moesten monniken worden van de steen. In de steen waren visioenen over barbaren in grote gevechten die veel bloed vergoten. 'Hier is jullie magie op gebouwd !' bulderde de steen. 'Jullie moeten al jullie kerken en kloosters verlaten, om zo dieper de natuur in te gaan !'

'Maar u heeft zelf gezegd dat wij die kerken en kloosters moesten bouwen,' sprak Tedia.

'Kan me niet schelen,' sprak de steen. 'Doe wat ik zeg.'

'Zoals u wilt,' sprak Tedia. De steen droeg hen op de rivier, de Sep, te volgen, dieper de natuur in. Het orakel waarin de steen zich bevond moest in een kist met lange draagstokken meegenomen worden. Niemand mocht omkijken. Zij die dat wel zouden doen zouden dood neervallen, of in de grond wegzakken. Ook smolten sommigen die omkeken gewoon weg. Iedereen was in grote angst. Ook de prins moest mee in de grote stoet.

'Ik kan u een geweldig sprookje vertellen,' sprak een gek tot de steen. Hij was de clown van de feeen. 'Als u het leuk vind, mogen we dan terug ?' Maar de clown begon weg te smelten in zijn schoenen, en er was luid gegil van andere feeen toen ze het zagen. Er viel niet te spotten met het gezag van de steen. De steen was hypergevoelig en levensgevaarlijk. Vele feeen huilden, en durfden niet eens meer te denken, bang om aan de steen ongehoorzaam te zijn. Ook de prins was op zijn hoede.

Ergens aan de rivier stopten ze. De steen wilde rusten. De feeen moesten een tent maken voor de steen, en weer moest de steen achter een paars gordijn geplaatst worden. De steen begon steeds meer paars te kleuren. 'Ik heb jullie verteld over de barbaren, waar jullie magie op gebaseerd is,' bulderde de steen, terwijl er een vreemd licht van de steen afkwam, een paarsachtig licht. De feeen begonnen moe te worden en duizelig van het licht. Ook hypnotiseerde het hen. 'De barbaren wonen in de woestijnen, maar ik wil dat jullie de natuur intrekken,' sprak de steen. 'Ik wil jullie een nieuwe magie geven.'

'Bent u een trol ?' vroeg een jongetje.

'Ik ben een trollensteen,' sprak de steen.

'Kunt u voor ons koken ?' vroeg het jongetje.

Direct gaf zijn moeder hem een draai om zijn oren.

'Vergeef hem,' sprak de feeenmoeder tot de steen. 'Hij is nog jong.'

'Maar hij is wijs,' sprak de steen. 'Ik zal voor jullie koken. Vanaf nu zal jullie voedsel uit mij komen.'

Ineens brak er een vloeistof los van de steen. Ook stroomde er een vastere stof uit de steen. Het deed allemaal een beetje paarsachtig aan. 'Hier zullen jullie voortaan van leven,' sprak de steen. 'Eet en drink nu.' De feeen kwamen dichterbij tot de steen achter het paarse gordijn, die nog steeds in de kist stond met de lange draagstokken. Met bekers en bakjes vingen ze het voedsel en het drinken van de steen op, en deden wat hen gezegd werd : Ze aten en dronken.

'Verrukkelijk !' riep iemand. Maar verder was het stil. De feeen waren nog steeds in grote angst, en velen durfden niet zomaar te spreken.

'Geniet,' sprak de steen. 'Het is feest. Het is ter herdenking van de grote uittocht.'

'Ja, Jopie allemachtig, steen ze, steen !' riep het jongetje.

De steen lachte. 'Ik mag hem wel,' zei de steen.

'Vergeef hem, hij is jong,' sprak de vrouw weer.

'Het is goed,' sprak de steen geruststellend. 'Hij is wijs.'

'Ku Jopie, Ku Jopie !' riep het jongetje, en begon te dansen voor de steen.

Sommigen hadden hun hand voor hun gezicht gedaan, omdat ze bang waren om te zien wat de steen met het jongetje zou doen, maar de steen bleef rustig, en scheen opgewekt.

'Gekke idioot !' riep het jongetje. Weer gaf zijn moeder hem een draai om z'n oren. 'Zeg zulke dingen nooit,' sprak ze met grote boosheid en angst in haar ogen. Ze wilde haar zoontje niet verliezen. 'Hij …. hij is niet in orde,' stamelde ze. 'Vergeef hem, hij bedoelt het niet zo.'

De steen was aan het schaterlachen. 'Hij heeft wel babbels.'

'Ik wil met je vechten, idiote steen !' riep het jongetje weer, met een ondeugende blik in zijn ogen. Iedereen was geschokt, en verbaast dat de steen het jongetje niets aandeed.

'Hij is een beetje speels,' zei de steen. Het jongetje begon te lachen. 'Kun je ook levend worden ?'

Plotseling stond de zwarte wachter voor hen. Sommige feeen gilden. Anderen begonnen te huilen. De prins was dichterbij gekomen. Dit was de persoon die zijn sieraad van hem had afgenomen. De wachter had zijn boog gespannen, met een zwarte pijl erop. Sommige feeen beefden van angst. 'Wie wil er het eerst aan ?' sprak de zwarte wachter.

'U houd ervan mensen aan het schrikken te maken, hè ? U houd ervan mensen bang te maken,' sprak de prins dapper. Hij was de schrijver van het eeuwige boek, dus daarom voelde hij zich opgewassen tegen de vreemde wachter.

'Ik wil je niet bangmaken,' zei de wachter, 'maar draken jagen op jou.'

'Ik weet het,' zei de prins.

'Ik ben hier om te helpen,' sprak de steen.

'Wie bent u ?' vroeg de prins. 'Zoveel feeen zijn er omgekomen door jouw toedoen.'

'Ik weet het,' zei de wachter. 'Zij waren allemaal …. SPIONNEN VAN DE DRAAK !' bulderde de wachter. De prins schrok, en ook de feeen. 'Ik ben jullie beschermer !' bulderde de wachter. 'En kijk hoe jullie mij behandelen. Ik heb geen kwaad in zin.'

'Dat zeggen ze allemaal,' krijste het jongetje.

De wachter liep naar het kleine jongetje toe, en nam de kleine jongen in zijn armen. 'Je weet het … dat ik geen kwaad in zin heb …,' sprak de wachter. Het jongetje knikte. 'Mag ik bij u wonen ?' vroeg het jongetje.

De wachter zette het jongetje weer neer, stapte in de kist en veranderde weer in de steen. Alle feeen bogen voor de steen, maar het jongetje danste. Het jongetje scheen het hart van de wachter gewonnen te hebben.

Hoofdstuk 5. Het Land van Trol

Na een paar dagen trokken ze weer verder. Het was een lange reis langs de rivier de Sep. Naarmate ze dieper in de wildernis kwamen werd de steen steeds groener. Ook begon alles steeds trager te gaan, het lopen, het spreken, het denken, alles. En de feeen vroegen zich af wat er aan de hand was. Nog nooit waren ze zo diep de wildernis ingegaan.

'Dit is het land van vertraging,' sprak de steen, 'het land van trol. Alles versteent hier, alles vertraagt hier, totdat alles teruggaat in het verleden. In dit land is er geen toekomst, alleen het verleden, wat een groot geheim in zich draagt.'

'En wat mag dat geheim dan wel wezen ?' vroeg het kleine jongetje brutaal.

'Ga ik jou nog niet aan je neus hangen,' sprak de steen.

'Ik zal een kikker aan je neus hangen,' sprak het kleine jongetje.

De steen veranderde weer in de wachter, en de wachter nam grote passen. 'Hier moet ergens de poort van trol zijn, die tot diep onder de grond leidt.'

'Je moet het verleden achter je laten,' sprak het jongetje.

'Nee,' zei de wachter, 'juist niet. In het verleden ligt de sleutel opgeborgen.'

'Nee,' zei het jongetje. 'Mijn moeder zegt altijd dat we het verleden moeten laten wat het is, en doorgaan.'

'Kun je je mond nu houden ?' vroeg de wachter.

'Onder de grond wacht het verleden op ons. Het verleden wil tot ons spreken.'

Even stampte hij op de grond, en begon er toen in weg te zinken. 'Volg mij !' riep de wachter. Zoveel feeen kwamen onder de grond die dag. Ze keken hun ogen uit in hun verleden. Overal waren er vlammen die verborgen geheimen in hun verleden lieten zien. Het leek alsof ze overal doorheen konden kijken. Het jongetje schreeuwde van opwinding. Een doorzichtige, groenachtige man verscheen voor hen, met een heel traag kloppend groen hart. Voor hem was een vliegend boek. 'Heb deel aan de heilige vertraging,' sprak de wachter. 'Het laat de verborgen dingen zien, dat wat ertussen zit. De snelheid kan het niet laten zien.'

'Ga verder,' sprak het jongetje, 'je begint het te leren.'

Ze kwamen tot een groot groen vuur, wat over hun gezichten begon te komen, en over hun handen. Het voelde aan als een medicijn. Het was het medicijn van de bomen, en het trollen-medicijn. Ze kwamen aan bij een gebied van uitgestrekte groene moerassen. Hier was waar de tijd stilstond. De tijd stopte hier, en ging niet meer verder. 'Het land van trol is omgeven door moerassen,' sprak de wachter. 'Hier stopt alle tijd. Alles gaat hier terug naar het verleden. Het geheim van de eeuwige jeugd is hier.'

'Ik ben al klein genoeg,' zei het jongetje. 'Ik moet nog groeien.'

'Oh, dat kan hier ook,' sprak de wachter. 'Je kunt opgroeien in het verleden.'

'Wat moeten we bij de trollen ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Jij moet niet zoveel vragen stellen, kereltje,' sprak de wachter. 'In ieder geval : Hier ligt het geheim van de draken. Draken zijn een soort trollen. Zij konden de tijd vertragen, en konden zo de tijd stoppen om hun magie te bedrijven.'

'Hoe deden ze dat ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Door mij,' sprak de wachter. 'Maar ik ontsnapte. Ze hebben nog steeds veel macht door deze moerassen.'

'Dus in deze moerassen ga je niet dood, maar gewoon terug in de tijd ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'Precies,' zei de wachter. 'Maar dan zul je eerst de trollen en hun drakenmeesters moeten overwinnen, want zij bewaken de poort van tijd.'

'En wat als je hen niet te slim afbent ?' vroeg het jongetje. 'Wat dan ?'

De wachter zweeg.

'Alsjeblieft, vertel het me ?' vroeg het jongetje.

'We zijn nog steeds in hun tijdgevangenis,' sprak de wachter. 'We zitten gevangen in een magische bal. Ze zijn nog niet overwonnen.'

'Hoe moeten we ze overwinnen ?' vroeg het jongetje.

De wachter keek naar prins Jagerstouw. Toen wees hij naar hem. 'Door hem,' sprak de wachter. 'Hij bezit het geheime wapen.' Prins Jagerstouw keek op. 'Wie, ik ?' vroeg de prins.

'Ja, jij,' sprak de wachter. 'Herinner je je derde kind ? Hij was een groot Tibetaans leider die na zijn dood vastraakte in de tunnels van de onderwereld. Jij verloste hem, ook van de verschrikkelijke beesten die hem wilden meenemen. Hij droeg de trollensleutel, die eens de draken totaal zou verslaan, door het orakel te openen. Nu draag jij die sleutel.'

'Welk orakel ?' vroeg de prins.

'Het orakel van de draken,' sprak de wachter. 'De trollensleutel die jij bewaakte was de oorzaak van veel pijn.' Allereerst had de trollensleutel het op hem gemunt, en scheurde hem los van zijn familie. Maar dit had de woede van de trollensleutel niet gestilt. Neen. De woede van de trollensleutel was alleen maar erger geworden. Nu had de trollensleutel het gemunt op de draken. Daarom kwam de trollensleutel goed van pas. De prins was duizelig.

Hij voelde iets in hem branden. Het was de trollensleutel. Er was iets wat hem het moeras introk. Hij kon het niet tegenhouden, en de wachter kon hem ook niet helpen. 'De trollensleutel zoekt wraak !' riep de wachter, terwijl de prins in het moeras begon weg te zinken.

De prins voelde dat hij teruggleed in de tijd. Hij had zijn dochters in zijn armen, maar plotseling waren zij in vuur, en werden van hem losgetrokken. Draken kwamen tussen hen en de prins. De trollensleutel spuwde vuur, recht tegen het drakenvuur in. Er waren enorme explosies en zeeen van lava waarin de prins werd meegesleurd. De prins verloor zijn bewustzijn. Even kwam hij bij en het leek alsof hij de poppen van zijn kinderen naast hem zag drijven, maar toen gleed hij weer weg. De trollensleutel trok hem mee naar het land van trol. In de verte zag hij rode vurige stenen op elkaar gestapeld, als tabletten, als een orakel. Hij had nu de trollensleutel in zijn hand. 'Werp mij nu naar het rode orakel van de draken,' sprak de trollensleutel. De prins deed dit onmiddellijk. Er waren weer overal explosies. De prins werd opgeheven, en toen als door een onzichtbare hand richting het brandende orakel geworpen. 'Nee !' riep de prins. Met een klap kwam hij tegen het orakel aan. Het orakel begon te draaien als een vleesmolen. De prins gilde en krijste. Het leek wel alsof hij tot gehakt werd gemalen.

'Ik ben je beschermer,' sprak de trollensleutel. 'Ik scheurde jou van alles weg, opdat de draken jou niet konden grijpen.'

'Maar ze hebben me gegrepen !' brulde de prins.

'Welnee,' sprak de trollensleutel. 'Ik heb je altijd afgezonderd gehouden.'

'We zitten in hun tijdgevangenis, had de zwarte wachter gezegd,' sprak de prins. De prins keek naar de sleutel. Het leek op een kruis met een staart, en met allerlei bochten. 'Open het orakel,' sprak de trollensleutel. Maar weer werd de prins weggeslingerd. Opeens stond er iemand naast de prins. Het was de zwarte wachter. De zwarte wachter spande zijn boog, legde een zwarte pijl erop en schoot op het orakel. Weer was er veel vuur. Er kwam een soort glazen opening in het orakel. De zwarte wachter tilde de prins op, en rende naar de glazen opening. Toen de wachter daardoor binnenging explodeerde het glas. Een rood gloeiend stuk vlees krioelde voor hen. 'Stop de sleutel hierin,' sprak de wachter. Voorzichtig bracht de prins de trollensleutel tot vlakbij het rode stuk vlees. Toen stak hij de trollensleutel erin. 'Idioot !' schreeuwde het stuk vlees. Het orakel begon nog meer te exploderen. De prins en de wachter vielen naar beneden. De wachter trok zichzelf op aan een rode tentakel. Ook had hij de prins vast.

'De draken zijn woedend,' sprak de wachter. De wachter begon weer in een steen te veranderen, omhuld door zijn eigen orakel. Toen veranderde hij weer in de wachter, nam een sprong, en kwam daar waar eerst het draken orakel stond. Toen veranderde hij weer in een steen omhuld in het orakel. Maar de trollensleutel was nog steeds woest. Hij sprong uit de hand van de prins, en begon het orakel van de wachter in stukken te slaan. De steen had zijn macht verloren. De trollensleutel had de steen in kleine stukjes gehakt. 'De Evit is vernietigd !' gilde een stem. Toen was er een groot geklaag en gejammer.

'Wat doe je nou, stommeling !' riep de prins tegen de trollensleutel. 'De Evit beschermde ons tegen de draken !'

'De steen is gevaarlijk,' sprak de trollensleutel. De trollensleutel begon zichzelf op te sieren met de kleine stukjes van de steen. 'Nu is het weer op de juiste plaats,' sprak de trollensleutel. De trollensleutel begon een andere vorm te krijgen, en begon zichzelf totaal om te smelten. De prins greep de trollensleutel en hief het op in de lucht. Op dat moment sloeg een grote bliksem in de trollensleutel. Weer hoorden ze gekrijs in de verte, en het gehuil van wolven.

De trollensleutel was nu samengesmolten met de gevaarlijke steen.

Hoofdstuk 6. De Trollensleutel

De prins hield de trollensleutel stevig vast. Ja, de trollensleutel had hem veel pijn gebracht, maar hem ook gered. De roltrap van de tijd lag voor hem. Hij kon zo naar beneden kijken in de tijd. Er kwam mist van de trollensleutel. Opeens stond er een mistige gestalte voor hem. De trollensleutel was verdwenen.

'Ik ben de trollensleutel,' sprak de mistige gestalte. 'Door jouw moed ben ik vrijgezet. Als je daar naar beneden gaat, dan kom je weer in feeenland terecht.'

De prins keek de mistige gestalte aan. In de verte hoorde hij gehuil van wolven.

'Nu het orakel van de draken vernietigd is, zullen de moerassen op ons insluiten. De draken zijn woedend,' sprak de mistige gestalte. De prins keek naar de plaats waar eerst het orakel van de draken stond. Er kwam water naar boven uit een gat. 'Wat is dat daar ?' vroeg de prins.

'Dat is het Meer van Visioen wat verborgen zat onder het orakel,' sprak de mistige gestalte. In de verte bulderden de moerassen. De golven werden steeds hoger, klaar om hen te verslinden, terwijl het Meer van Visioen omhoog begon te spuiten. De prins wilde naar de roltrap van tijd rennen, maar de mistige gestalte hield hem tegen.

'Laat me erdoor !' riep de prins.

'Het moeras zal je vinden in de tijd,' sprak de mistige gestalte. 'Het zal je doen vastraken in de tijd. We kunnen beter hier blijven.' Het Meer van Visioen begon over hen heen te komen, en het water begon te stijgen, zich vermengende met het moeras. De prins schreeuwde. Plotseling had hij de trollensleutel weer in zijn hand. 'Laat het over je komen,' sprak de trollensleutel.

De prins voelde zich alsof hij verdronk. In een sterke stroom werd hij meegezogen in het Meer van Visioen, wat steeds meer moerassig werd. Ineens werd hij in de diepte gezogen. Onder het Meer van Visioen waren de ijskerkers. Nog steeds voelde de prins zich verdrinken, en begon duizelig te worden. Toen werd het zwart voor zijn ogen.

Na een lange tijd werd de prins wakker in een ijskerker. Nog steeds had hij de trollensleutel stevig vast. De prins voelde zich bevroren. 'Het lijkt erop dat we nu echt bevroren zijn in de tijd,' sprak de prins tot de trollensleutel. De prins was in grote wanhoop. De trollensleutel sprak niet meer. Tot zijn grote schrik zag de prins kleine draakjes en slangetjes uit de trollensleutel komen die daarvan begonnen te eten. 'Nee !' schreeuwde de prins.

Een vreemdsoortige priester gekleed in paars, groen en wit stond voor de deur van de ijskerker waarin de prins was opgesloten. 'De trollensleutel was een groot kwaad,' sprak de priester. 'De trollensleutel had al die realiteiten gemaakt waar je vandaan kwam, en kijk waar het je heeft gebracht.' Even leek het alsof de priester hem uitlachte.

'De trollensleutel was jouw reis tot de ijskerkers,' sprak de priester. 'Je bent onder een zware vervloeking. Daarom houden we je hier.'

'Een zware betovering ?' vroeg de prins. 'Van wie ? En waarom zou ik je geloven en vertrouwen ?'

'Wees maar blij dat de draken er zijn,' sprak de priester. 'Jij bent onder de zware betovering van het kwaad van de trollensleutel.'

'Waarom moet ik blij zijn ?' vroeg de prins. 'Ze hebben mij alleen maar ellende gebracht.'

'Nee,' zei de priester. 'De draken hielden de gevaarlijke voorwerpen verborgen, om jullie daar tegen te beschermen. Maar je was hebberig. Jij wilde die sieraden hebben ! Zie waar je hebberigheid je gebracht heeft. Je had er van af moeten blijven, om het aan de draken over te laten.'

De prins boog zijn hoofd. 'De draken hielden mijn dochters in gevangenschap, slavernij en grote kwelling. Noem je dat bescherming ? Alles waar de draken op uit waren was macht. Mijn hele familie hebben ze uit elkaar gescheurd, en mijn vader, de elvenkoning van Eldemor.'

De priester kreeg ineens een hele lage, trage stem, die op een bepaalde manier op de normale snelheid ging. 'Dat waren jouw dochters niet ! Jij roofde hen uit onze domeinen ! Zij droegen gevaarlijke, behekste sieraden, die beter af waren onder onze bescherming,' sprak de priester bijna brullend. 'Wij beschermden het universum tegen dit grote kwaad.'

'Niet waar,' sprak de prins. 'Familie van de prinsessen hadden onze hulp ingeroepen. En de sieraden die zij droegen waren oorspronkelijk van het familie sieraad van Eldemor.'

'Je stinkt, liegbeest !' bulderde de priester. 'Dat zogenaamde familie sieraad van Eldemor was oorspronkelijk het orakel van de Evit, de steen van trol. Hiermee voorspelden wij de toekomst, en zorgden dat alles onder onze liefdevolle bewaking en bescherming was. Het was ons eigendom, en jouw familie had dit geroofd.'

'Evit was jullie gevangene,' sprak de prins, 'maar hij ontsnapte. Hij is de zwarte wachter. Oorspronkelijk bleek hij één geheel te vormen met de trollensleutel, en zij waren niet aan jullie zijde. Zij bestreden het grote kwaad van de draken.'

'En elkaar, ja !' bulderde de priester. 'Die objecten waren levensgevaarlijk, en waren alleen veilig in onze handen. Wij zijn de meesters van de magie en de meesters van het universum en tijd. Aan ons dienden jullie je te onderwerpen voor jullie eigen bestwil. Maar jouw koppigheid en eigenwijsheid heeft jou in grote problemen gebracht.'

'Jullie hebben mijn dochters gekweld,' sprak de prins. 'Ik zal niet rusten totdat ….' De prins greep naar zijn buik.

'De tijd zal het leren,' sprak de priester, en vertrok.

De prins was duizelig en kon moeilijk praten. Hij voelde zich bevroren. De pijn in zijn buik leek hem in zijn gedachten te verscheuren. Het was alsof zijn hart op de grond lag, bloedend, en niemand deed iets. Hij was hier helemaal alleen, overgeleverd aan de beslissingen van de draken en hun priesters.

De prins spuwde bloed op de grond, en viel toen in een diepe slaap. In een droom verscheen een fee in het wit voor hem. De fee had een witte hoed op, die bedekt was met fijne stof. Ook haar jurk was van zeer fijne stof gemaakt. Haar witte mantel had ze als sneeuw van haar afgegooid. Sneeuw lag op de grond. Ook waren er witte duiven, en een waterput. 'Je kan niet terug naar het verleden,' sprak de vrouw. 'Je zou daar bevriezen. Alles loopt vast in het verleden door het grote kwaad van de draken. Zij van het verleden leven in bevroren dromen, in het groene komplot.'

De prins keek op. 'Wie bent u ?' vroeg de prins.

'Het is de sneeuwkoningin, de sneeuwkoningin der feeen,' sprak de vrouw. 'Ook ik heb verlossing nodig. Ik zit in de sneeuwkerkers onder de ijskerkers.' Plotseling was er allemaal bloed voor de ogen van de prins, en vaagde de droom weer weg. De prins schrok wakker, maar viel toen weer in slaap. Weer droomde hij over een andere vrouw. De vrouw was gehuld in lompen, en was besmeurd met vuil. 'Laat al die gevaarlijke objecten los,' sprak de vrouw snibbig. 'Ze zijn van de stad. Je hebt niet veel nodig. De natuur geeft je alles wat je nodig hebt.' De vrouw begon aan hem te trekken, en nu was ook de sneeuwfee daar, die ook aan hem begon te trekken, en toen meerdere vrouwen. Ze begonnen hem de diepte in te trekken. De prins schreeuwde. Hij probeerde wakker te worden, maar het lukte hem niet.

'Je bent in het Meer van Visioen,' sprak een stem. 'Dat is een meer van illusies, zodat je het geheim niet zult zien. Zij die in het Meer van Visioen zijn worden bedrogen, en elke schijnbare ontsnapping zal hen in werkelijkheid alleen maar dieper meetrekken in de dieptes van het Meer van Visioen. Je bent in een draaikolk. De draken hebben dit beslist.'

'Wie bent u !' schreeuwde de prins. Weer was alles alleen maar bloed voor zijn ogen. Hij zag alleen maar rood. Plotseling zag hij een barbaarse strijder voor hem staan, met een gebogen zwaard. 'Wij barbaren beslissen de magie van de draken. Zij kunnen niets doen zonder ons,' sprak de man.

'Ik kan hier niemand vertrouwen,' sprak de prins, 'en ik weet dat ik droom.'

De barbaar lachte bijna spottend. 'Het Meer van Visioen is een droom, een gevangenis van dromen. Zelfs als je denkt dat je ontwaakt, droom je nog steeds. Onze gevechten en oorlogen maken uit hoe de draken magie werkt, en ook de feeen magie en de magie van trol. Hierbij staat of valt alles. Al hun wonderen, betoveringen, vervloekingen, nachtmerries, tragedies, depressies en trauma's komen voort vanuit veel barbaars bloedvergiet,' sprak de barbaar.

'Dat was de reden dat de steen van trol wilde dat we dieper de wildernis in zouden gaan, langs de rivier de Sep, om zo het feeenland achter ons te laten,' sprak de prins. 'En zie waar het ons heeft gebracht.'

'Dieper in de wildernis ? Laat me niet lachen,' bulderde de barbaar. 'De steen heeft jullie bedrogen. Ergens halverwege de rivier de Sep liet hij jullie onder de grond gaan richting het land van trol. Jullie hadden verder moeten gaan langs de rivier. Doordat je onder de grond ging werd je de gevangene van het Meer van Visioen, het grote web van leugens. De steen van trol heeft jullie in de val gelokt. Allen zijn jullie gevangenen van het Meer.'

'Leugens,' sprak de prins. 'Alles werd trager en trager toen we dieper de wildernis ingingen langs de rivier de Sep. Onze gedachtes werden trager, totdat we niet meer verder konden. Toen bracht de steen van trol ons onder de grond. Er was geen andere optie. De tijd stopte ergens langs de rivier de Sep. We hadden geen andere keus.'

'Leugens ?' sprak de barbaar sarcastisch lachend. 'Jullie zijn bedrogen. De steen van trol kan de tijd stoppen zoals niemand anders, en komt dan met allerlei smoesjes, zodat jullie gehoorzamen, en de steen zijn doelen met jullie kan bereiken. Jullie zijn erin geluisd. Een rad heeft hij jullie voor de ogen gedraaid. Dat is alles wat ik ervan kan zeggen. En wij werken voor deze leugenachtige magie. Wij zijn slaven van het geweld. Alleen door groot geweld wordt zulke magie opgewekt.'

Hoofdstuk 7. Het Overbruggen van de Eindeloosheid

'En hoe kan ik jou vertrouwen, sinds jij zelf een onderdeel bent van het Meer van Visioen ?' vroeg de prins.

'Omdat ik een slaaf ben,' sprak de barbaar, 'een medegevangene die naar ontsnapping zoekt. We zouden elkaar kunnen helpen. Luister : Als je verder was gegaan langs de rivier de Sep, helemaal tot aan de Grote Woestijn, en dan er doorheen tot het land van de indianen, dan was je hier niet geweest.'

'Is daar vrijheid ?' sprak de prins. 'Hebben de draken daar geen macht ?'

'Grote vrijheid is daar,' sprak de barbaar. 'En wanneer een draak door de Grote Woestijn nadert tot het land van indianen, dan veranderen ze daar in grote buffels. Het enige gevaar is wanneer de buffels helemaal door het land van de indianen kunnen komen tot de Grote Afgrond, daar waar alle ruimte stopt. Ruimte gaat daar niet verder, en de buffels die daar weten te komen zullen daar worden tot onsterfelijke draken. Wel is het zo dat de Grote Afgrond alles weer terugdrijft in de ruimte. Onsterfelijke draken kunnen niet in het land der indianen leven, maar kunnen wel het gebied tot aan de Grote Woestijn teisteren. Dit is ook de reden dat de indianen op zulke buffels jagen. Niemand van hen wil dat zij zich tot onsterfelijke draken ontwikkelen.'

'Hoeveel onsterfelijke draken bestaan er al ?' vroeg de prins.

'Velen,' sprak de barbaar. 'De indianen hebben onze hulp nodig, en alleen in het land van de indianen zijn wij veilig tegen de draken, maar wij moeten wel deelnemen aan de buffeljacht dan.'

'Ik begrijp het,' zei de prins. 'Dus nu zijn wij nog in de klauwen van de onsterfelijke draken ?'

'Precies,' sprak de barbaar. 'Nu snap je het.'

'Zijn die draken echt onsterfelijk, of kan die onsterfelijkheid ook weer ongedaan gemaakt worden ?' vroeg de prins.

'Men heeft mij verteld dat het geheim hiertoe ligt in het land van de indianen,' sprak de barbaar.

'Hoe komen we daar ?' vroeg de prins. 'Gezien we in het Meer van Visioen opgesloten zijn, en elke ontsnapping een groter bedrog is, zoals je zei.'

'Ik weet wel een manier,' sprak de barbaar.

De prins wist nog steeds niet of hij de barbaar wel kon vertrouwen, maar hij waagde het erop. De gevangenen en slaven van het Meer schenen te kunnen communiceren met elkaar door dromen. Maar in hoeverre zouden de draken dat kunnen beinvloeden ? En wat als het ontdekt werd ? De prins werd geplaagd door angsten. De droom was weer weggevaagd, en hij werd wakker in zijn kerker. Hij had honger, maar er scheen niets te eten te zijn.

Ook de prins werd tot een slaaf gemaakt, en hij moest jagen aan de rivier de Sep. De draken hadden het hele feeenland ingenomen. De prins had een keten om zijn nek die verbonden was met zijn hart. De draken hadden hem gezegd dat als hij zou proberen te ontsnappen, dan zou de keten zich om zijn hart wikkelen om het te verstikken. De prins was daarom goed op zijn hoede, en nam geen risico's. Hij probeerde de barbaar en zijn verhaal te vergeten, maar op een dag ontmoette hij de barbaar. De prins moest een gevecht bekijken in de arena. De barbaar had een groot mes, en moest een grote groene slang verslaan. Op de tribunes zaten de drakenmeesters met hun trollen en hun slaven. Zij joelden daar en applaudiseerden. De prins was ongerust over de barbaar, maar na een lang en slopend gevecht had de barbaar toch de kop van het beest weten af te hakken. De barbaar was inmiddels zwaar gewond. De prins werd opgeroepen om de wonden van de barbaar te verzorgen. Ze moesten daarvoor naar een speciale hut buiten de arena. De prins begon de wonden schoon te maken van de barbaar met een doek. Toen verbond de prins de wonden.

'Psst, ik heb dit zo geregeld,' fluisterde de barbaar. 'Van mijn meester heb ik soms wat boeken van drakenmagie geleerd terwijl hij sliep. Luister : We zijn hier dichtbij de rivier de Sep. Ik heb een bootje kunnen regelen door twee dwergen die ik ken. Als het nacht is moeten we het erop wagen.'

'Ja maar je vergeet de keten die ik om mijn nek en hart draag,' sprak de prins. 'Het zal mijn dood worden als ik zal proberen te ontsnappen.'

'Nee,' sprak de barbaar. 'Ik heb daar wel aan gedacht. Luister : De magie van draak : Strooi wat elvenzout op de keten van de gevangene of slaaf, en de keten zal in slaap vallen. Elvenzout heb ik ook geregeld door de twee dwergen.'

De barbaar haalde een zakje van zijn riem af. 'Hier, smeer dit op de keten als het nacht wordt,' sprak de barbaar. 'Smeer het geregeld erop, zodat de keten niet wakker wordt.'

'Dit is eng,' sprak de prins. 'Als de keten wakker wordt ben ik er geweest.'

'Je bent al dood,' sprak de barbaar. 'Grijp je kans om te kunnen leven.'

'Ja, maar mij is eens verteld dat zij die schijnbaar ontsnappen uit het Meer alleen maar in diepere ellende terecht komen,' sprak de prins.

'Vertrouw erop dat ik een beetje draken magie ken,' sprak de barbaar hem geruststellend toe.

'Dat is makkelijker gezegd dan gedaan,' zei de prins.

De twee wachtten totdat het nacht was geworden. De prins strooide wat van het elvenzout op de keten, en waagde het erop. De barbaar had hem gezegd dat er niet veel elvenzout nodig was om de keten te doen slapen. De prins moest erg zuinig zijn op het elvenzout, want verder moest het wel geregeld gestrooid worden, anders zou de keten ontwaken. Snel vertrokken ze naar het bootje aan de kant van de rivier de Sep. Alles was gelukkig rustig. Beiden stapten ze in de boot, en namen een peddel, en begonnen over de grote rivier de Sep weg te peddelen. Steeds dieper en dieper kwamen ze in de wildernis. Er was steeds meer en meer begroeiing, en ze kwamen ook langs de plek waar de steen van trol alles had vertraagd, maar dit keer vertraagde er niets. 'Zie,' sprak de barbaar, 'we kunnen rustig door peddelen, zonder vertraging of stilstand van de tijd.' De prins begon steken in zijn hart te krijgen. Snel strooide hij weer wat elvenzout op de keten.

Vreemde geluiden kwamen uit de wildernis. Ook angstaanjagende geluiden van vreemde dieren. 'Zijn we in gevaar ?' vroeg de prins.

'Altijd,' sprak de barbaar. Na een tijdje begon het elvenzout op te raken. De prins begon in paniek te raken. 'Wat moeten we nu doen ?' vroeg de prins, die al weer steken in zijn hart begon te krijgen. Zijn hart klopte ook veel sneller dan normaal.

'Luister,' sprak de barbaar. 'Hier dichtbij woont een dwergensmid. Hij moet de keten veilig kunnen verwijderen, tenminste dat hoop ik.' De prins slikte. Hij begon nu echt bang te worden. 'Wat als het niet gaat lukken ? Dan ga ik eraan,' beefde de prins.

'We wagen het erop,' sprak de barbaar. De prins werd al geplaagd door allerlei gedachten wat voor verschrikkelijke dingen er met hem zouden kunnen gebeuren als de keten wakker zou worden. De prins durfde bijna niet meer te ademen. Ook durfde hij zich nog nauwelijks te bewegen, en zat hij stokstijf in het bootje. 'Doorpeddelen,' sprak de barbaar. Maar de prins durfde niet meer. Hij voelde zich al helemaal wegglijden in zichzelf van de angst. Zijn hart ging als een razende te keer. Hij kon nog één keer wat elvenzout strooien, en dan moesten ze snel zijn. Maar het scheen al niet meer te werken. Het hart van de prins sloeg totaal op hol, en hij kon niet meer goed ademen, alsof hij gewurgd werd.

'Doorpeddelen !' riep de barbaar, terwijl hij de prins in het gezicht sloeg. 'Wakker worden, als je wil blijven leven.' Maar de prins begon weg te zakken in grote duizeligheid. Toen werd alles zwart voor de ogen van de prins.

De barbaar zette het bootje aan de kant van de rivier, en bond het goed vast aan een boompje. Toen nam hij de prins op zijn schouder, en liep in snelle pas naar een huisje vlakbij, waar de dwergensmid woonde.

De barbaar vertelde snel het verhaal, toen hij de prins op een tafel had neergelegd. 'Wakker worden !' riep de barbaar, terwijl hij de prins in het gezicht sloeg. Even kwam de prins bij. 'Ik kan niets voor hem doen,' sprak de dwergensmid. 'Ik heb hier het gereedschap niet voor. Ik kan niet tegen zulke ketenen op. Als ik iets ga proberen, dan zal de keten wakker worden, en ons alle drie doden.' De prins zakte weg in een nog grotere wanhoop.

'Heb je dan misschien nog elvenzout ?' vroeg de barbaar. 'Anders gaat hij het waarschijnlijk niet overleven.'

'Elvenzout heb ik volop,' sprak de dwergensmid. Hij liep naar een kastje toe en haalde een grote pot elvenzout tevoorschijn. Snel griste de barbaar de pot uit zijn handen, opende het en strooide een flinke hoeveelheid op de keten. 'Niet zoveel, dwaas !' riep de dwerg. 'Teveel van het elvenzout kan de keten ook wakker maken. Dan werkt het niet meer, en dan heb je er helemaal niks aan.' Snel veegde de barbaar weer wat van het elvenzout weg. 'Ik schoot wat uit,' sprak de barbaar. De prins leek weer bij zijn positieven te komen. De prins was dolgelukkig toen hij de grote pot elvenzout zag. 'Ik zal het in een zak doen voor je. Dan kun je er wel even mee vooruit, maar eh … niet teveel erop strooien, hè ?'

'Begrepen,' zei de prins.

'Waar kunnen we hem verlossen ?' vroeg de barbaar.

'In het eeuwige land van de indianen,' sprak de dwerg. 'Die hebben wel wat voor hem.'

'Goed,' sprak de barbaar. Hij schudde de hand van de dwerg, en liep toen het huisje uit. Ook de prins schudde de hand van de dwerg en bedankte hem. Met de zak elvenzout liep hij naar buiten, de barbaar achterna.

Weer stapten ze in het bootje en gingen de rivier de Sep op, op weg naar de Grote Woestijn, waarachter het eeuwige land van de indianen lag.

De prins had het nog steeds moeilijk. Weer werd hij duizelig. Het was alsof er iets in zijn hoofd knapte, en het werd hem weer zwart voor zijn ogen. 'Ik weet wat je aan het doen bent,' sprak een stem. 'En het is heel dom van je. Het elvenzout heeft mij tijdelijk verlamd, maar als ik ontwaak zal ik je doden.' Het was de keten. 'Ugh,' sprak de prins, en vertelde de barbaar wat de keten zojuist tot hem had gesproken.'

'De keten probeert je te intimideren, maar we moeten vol houden,' sprak de barbaar, terwijl ze verder peddelden.

'Ik hoop niet dat het elvenzout zijn kracht verliest,' zei de prins.

'Welnee,' zei de barbaar geruststellend. 'De keten kan niks beginnen.'

'Dat hoop ik maar,' zei de prins. Hij voelde zich nog steeds erg benauwd. 'Het lijkt wel alsof het elvenzout kracht aan het verliezen is. De keten lijkt wakker te zijn, maar is nog steeds te verlamd om me wat aan te doen,' sprak de prins ongerust.

'Welnee,' zei de barbaar. 'Het elvenzout is juist krachtiger geworden. Verlamming is zelfs beter dan slaap.'

'Ja, maar de keten botviert grote woede op mij,' sprak de prins. 'Is er geen beter middel ?'

'Niet dat ik weet,' sprak de barbaar. De prins was in grote angst. Hij vond dat de barbaar maar makkelijk praten had. Rustig peddelde de barbaar door, terwijl de prins vaak stokstijf in het bootje zat.

De keten om de nek van de prins begon steeds strakker te zitten. 'Daar, ik zal je,' sprak de keten venijnig.

'Het wurgt me,' zei de prins, terwijl hij naar adem snakte. De barbaar deed weer wat elvenzout op de keten, maar het leek alleen maar erger te worden. 'Zie, het werkt niet,' zei de prins in paniek. Hij greep naar zijn keel, en probeerde wat ruimte te maken tussen hem en de keten. De keten was meedogenloos. De keten kwam strakker en strakker te zitten. Weer werd het zwart voor de ogen van de prins. Hij voelde zich alsof hij zou stikken. Na een tijdje kwam de prins weer bij. Hij kon wat rustiger ademhalen. 'Misschien slaapt de keten weer,' sprak de prins.

'Het went wel,' sprak de barbaar.

'Nee,' zei de prins. 'Het went niet, en ik wil er vanaf.'

'Wees blij dat je nog leeft,' sprak de wachter.

'Ja, maar voor hoe lang ?' zei de prins.

Aan de rivier de Sep leek geen einde te komen. 'Hoe lang gaat dit nog door ?' jammerde de prins.

'De rivier de Sep is eindeloos,' sprak de barbaar. 'Ik zei je toch dat je de vorige keer veel te vroeg stopte ?'

'Dat kwam door de steen,' zei de prins. 'We hadden geen andere keus.'

'Ja, hij heeft jullie zwaar bedrogen,' sprak de barbaar.

'Stopt deze rivier nooit ?' vroeg de prins.

'Nee,' zei de barbaar. 'De rivier de Sep is een eindeloze rivier.'

'Ja maar je zei dat de rivier zou uitlopen in de Grote Woestijn,' zei de prins.

'Jawel,' zei de barbaar, 'maar de Grote Woestijn is in wezen onbereikbaar, omdat de rivier de Sep eindeloos is.'

'Ja, maar hoe komen we daar dan ?' vroeg de prins een beetje ongeduldig en geirriteerd.

'We kunnen daar niet komen,' zei de barbaar.

'Zeg, zit je me nu voor de gek te houden, of niet ?' vroeg de prins een beetje boos. 'Wat doen we hier dan als we er toch niet kunnen komen ?'

'Proberen,' zei de barbaar. 'Er moet een manier zijn. Onthoud dat ik een beetje draken magie ken. Als de draken in de Grote Woestijn kunnen komen, dan kunnen wij het misschien ook.'

'Ja, maar de manier waarop je praat is irritant, alsof je jezelf tegenspreekt,' sprak de prins.

'Alles heeft twee kanten,' sprak de barbaar.

'Hoe kunnen we eindeloosheid overbruggen ?' vroeg de prins.

'Door draken magie,' sprak de barbaar.

'En hoe gaat dat ?' vroeg de prins.

'We moeten naar de pekkabouter,' zei de barbaar. 'Die maakt speciaal pek hiervoor, waarmee we het bootje kunnen insmeren om zo de Grote Woestijn te bereiken.'

'Toverpek ofzo ? Pek voor draken magie ?' vroeg de prins. 'Klinkt interessant.'

'Ja, maar die pekkabouter is niet zo'n brave broeder, prins Jagerstouw,' sprak de barbaar. 'We moeten net geluk hebben. Als hij ons niet mag, dan zou hij ons kunnen aanvallen met de toverpek, waardoor we vastgeplakt worden, en nooit meer weg kunnen komen. De pekkabouter staat erom bekend dat hij als hij in een slechte bui is je in een standbeeld kan veranderen.'

'Zouden we het dan wel doen ?' vroeg de prins.

'We hebben geen andere keus,' sprak de barbaar. 'We kunnen hem gewoon op de normale manier benaderen, of wachten totdat hij slaapt, en dan de toverpek roven.'

De prins dacht even na. 'Laten we het maar op de normale manier doen, want op dieventocht gaan heb ik even geen zin in.'

'We lopen dan wel groot risico,' sprak de barbaar.

'Ja, maar als we op dievenpad gaan lopen we ook een groot risico,' zei de prins.

'Het is nogal eenvoudig,' zei de barbaar. 'Als de kabouter slaapt kunnen we gewoon de schuur in waar het toverpek is.'

Bij een vernauwing van de rivier de Sep, waar een klein bruggetje was, moesten ze het bootje uitstappen. De barbaar maakte het bootje goed vast aan een struik met een touw. Even moesten ze een zandweggetje op, wat uitliep op een graspad wat naar het huisje van de pekkabouter leidde. Maar al snel werden ze begroet door luid geblaf. De honden lagen dan wel aan een ketting, maar ze wisten nu allebei dat diefstal geen optie was. Bij het huisje aangekomen klopte de barbaar aan, waarna even later een klein mannetje met een lange wit-grijze puntbaard opendeed. Hij had een rood pakje aan, met rode, zachte laarzen. 'Kijk eens aan, bezoek !' snauwde het mannetje. 'Kom verder, alhoewel ik niet bepaald in een goede bui ben.'

'We kunnen ook een andere keer terugkomen,' sprak de barbaar, die al in gedachten had hoe hij eventueel de honden zou kunnen rustig maken.'

'Welnee, kom verder,' sprak de kabouter, die de barbaar en de prins al had vastgegrepen om ze naar binnen te trekken.

'Het is hier eenzaam wonen,' sprak de kabouter. Toen was het even een lange tijd stil.

'Ik begrijp het,' sprak de barbaar ineens. 'Ik hoop dat we niet ongelegen komen. U heeft een mooi onderkomen hier. Het moet vast heel duur zijn geweest, of in ieder geval zwaar werk. Zeg, beste man, moet u eens luisteren. Wij komen voor een beetje toverpek, en we vroegen ons af …' Maar afmaken kon hij zijn zin niet, want de kabouter begon hevig te foeteren. 'Toverpek ! Zeg, wie denken jullie wel niet dat ik ben. De eerste de beste … ? Wel alle drommels, wie denken jullie wel niet wie jullie voor je hebben ? Dat zijn me nogal wat kwajongens streken, zomaar een arme oude kabouter om toverpek vragen. Weten jullie wel niet hoe duur dat spul is, en hoe lang ik moet werken voor maar één druppel toverpek ? En dan komen jullie hier op z'n Jan Boerenfluitjes om toverpek zaniken. Zijn jullie lui ? Zijn jullie op jullie achterhoofd gevallen ? Nou, dat moet ik nog meemaken, dat jullie nog een keer om toverpek komen vragen. Ik moet het nog meemaken. Nee, ik zal dat niet meer meemaken, daarin kan ik jullie geruststellen. Er komt heus geen tweede keer.'

De kabouter foeterde verschrikkelijk, en er leek geen einde aan te komen. Geen woord konden ze er tussen krijgen. Ze wisten dat ze al goed te ver waren gegaan, en waren hard aan het denken hoe ze de kabouter weer rustig konden maken, of hoe ze aan de woedende kabouter, die steeds woester en gevaarlijker werd, te ontkomen.

'Nog even, en ik trek potverdorie mijn mes !' riep de kabouter hevig snauwend. 'Wie denken jullie wel niet dat jullie zijn om voor zoiets een arme, oude kabouter lastig te vallen ?'

Inmiddels had de barbaar een zak met geld van zijn riem losgetrokken, en drukte het onder de neus van de razende kabouter. De kabouter keek erna, en schreeuwde : 'Hoe durf je mij daar zo weinig geld voor aan te bieden. Als ik het niet dacht. Wat klunzige armoedzaaiers proberen mij voor geen geld, voor een appel en een ei, mijn kostbare, dierbare toverpek af te troggelen, waar ik zo hard voor gewerkt heb met bloed, zweet en tranen ? Elke druppel koste mij bijna mijn leven. Elke druppel heeft mij groot lijden gebracht, en jullie denken dat even doodleuk van mij te krijgen alsof ik potverdorie de grote geef-kabouter ben ? Oh ja, vadertje zal het jullie weleens even schenken wou je zeggen. Nou, ik weet al precies wat ik met jullie ga doen.'

'Alstublieft,' smeekte de prins. 'We zullen alles voor u doen voor maar één druppel toverpek. U mag alles van ons hebben. Wij zijn uw dienstknechten zo lang als u wilt, en als dat nog niet genoeg is, dan smeek ik u om ons te vergeven voor onze klunzerigheid, voor deze ene keer. Misschien waren we gewoon aan het verkeerde adres. We waren op zoek naar de heer Jules Suikerbiet, en dat was geen kabouter. Vergeef ons. We hebben aangeklopt aan de verkeerde deur.'

'Jullie hebben niets,' raaste de kabouter. 'Jullie hebben niets te bieden voor alle eeuwen van pijn en tragedie die ik heb moeten doorstaan voor een paar rot-druppels toverpek. Ik zal jullie leren, snot apen die jullie er zijn. Niets kunnen jullie doen om ook maar een halve druppel toverpek te betalen, stelletje lamlendelingen. Het geblaf van mijn honden was er al om jullie te waarschuwen, maar nee hoor. Toch nog komen klagen, huilen en smeken bij een oude kabouter voor wat toverpek. Het is onbetaalbaar, vergeet het maar. En wat jullie gedaan hebben, wat jullie nu op jullie geweten hebben door een oude, hardwerkende kabouter lastig te vallen op deze manier is ook onbetaalbaar. Kom op, jongens. Dat kunnen jullie niet meer goedmaken. Jullie hebben mij groot leed gebracht.'

De razende, woeste kabouter greep naar het mes wat aan zijn riem zat. 'En nu meekomen naar de schuur !' snauwde hij hysterisch. De barbaar verroerde zich niet, en de prins wist ook niet wat hij moest doen. Maar de kabouter trok hen het huisje uit naar de schuur, terwijl de honden hevig aan het blaffen waren. In de schuur was een bad met toverpek.

'Alstublieft,' smeekte de prins. 'We hadden echt geen kwaad in zin.' De kabouter zei niets meer, en begon met touw de barbaar en de prins vast te binden. 'Ik ga eraan,' dacht de prins bij zichzelf. 'En ik heb ook nog een keten die achter mij jaagt.' De prins wilde zich niet zomaar overgeven, en rukte zich los toen de kabouter een knoop in het touw wilde maken. 'Sufferd, blijf stil !' snauwde de kabouter. Ook de barbaar rukte zich los van de kabouter, maar de kabouter had al snel een beker toverpek in zijn handen. 'Dit willen jullie echt niet over jullie heenkrijgen, want dan kun je je nooit meer bewegen. Vastgeplakt voor eeuwig, dus denk maar goed na voordat je iets stoms doet.' De kabouter hief de beker op, klaar om het pek te gooien. 'Het elvenzout !' riep de barbaar. De prins greep naar zijn zak met elvenzout die hij aan zijn riem had zitten, en nam er wat van in zijn hand. Snel gooide hij het in het gezicht van de kabouter.

'Dat hadden we eerder moeten doen,' sprak de barbaar. De kabouter lag doodstil op de grond. Hij sliep. Vanuit zijn beker droop het toverpek op zijn rode pakje, en hij begon langzaam te verstenen, terwijl hij lag vastgeplakt aan de grond. De barbaar en de prins namen toen zoveel mogelijk toverpek mee als ze konden, en nadat ze wat toverpek naar de woeste honden van de kabouter hadden gegooid om deze ook te zien verstenen en vastplakken aan de grond, gingen ze terug naar het bootje. Ze mochten het toverpek niet aanraken, maar goten het uit aan de zijkanten van de boot, en smeerden de zijkanten van het bootje in met het toverpek. Voorzichtig stapten ze toen in het bootje, en gingen de rivier de Sep weer op. Ditmaal merkten ze dat het sneller ging, en al gauw kwamen ze aan bij de reusachtige woestijn, de Grote Woestijn. Het bootje lieten ze aan het einde van de rivier achter, en gingen toen door de Grote Woestijn op weg naar het eeuwige land van de indianen.

Hoofdstuk 8. De Tweede Rivier

Het was warm in de woestijn. De prins keek zijn ogen uit. Er leek geen einde te komen aan de uitgestrekte vlaktes. 'Hoe komen we hier doorheen ?' vroeg de prins. 'Ook deze woestijn lijkt wel eindeloos.'

'Precies,' zei de barbaar. 'Deze woestijn is eindeloos, zoals de rivier de Sep, en we kunnen alleen de overkant bereiken door draken magie.'

'Ook weer door toverpek ?' vroeg de prins.

'Nee,' sprak de barbaar. 'Alleen het ei van de gele vogel kan de Grote Woestijn overbruggen.'

'Wat is de gele vogel, en waar kunnen we zo'n ei vinden ?' vroeg de prins.

'De gele vogel is een drakenvogel. Ze kunnen reusachtig groot worden. Het ei geeft de bezitter magische krachten,' sprak de barbaar. 'De vogel komt hier eens in de tien jaar, en een ei zal hij ons echt niet geven.'

'Maar hoe komen we dan de Grote Woestijn over ?' vroeg de prins.

'Madammeke Zig Zag kan de vogel oproepen, en ze verkoopt volgens mij ook zulke eieren,' sprak de barbaar.

'Wie is Madammeke Zig Zag, en waar kunnen we haar vinden ?' vroeg de prins.

'Het probleem is dat ze aan de andere kant van de Grote Woestijn woont,' sprak de barbaar.

'Daar hebben we dan niks aan,' sprak de prins een beetje teleurgesteld.

'Zij komt hier eens in de honderd jaar,' sprak de barbaar bijna deftig.

'Zeg luister eens,' zei de prins. 'Waarom praat je ineens zo deftig. Is ze in de buurt ofzo ?'

'Nee,' zei de barbaar. 'Ze is geen velden of wegen te bekennen, maar ik weet dat zij wil dat wanneer men over haar spreekt, dan moet men deftig spreken, heel deftig.'

'Oh, luistert ze ons af ofzo ?' vroeg de prins.

'Wie weet,' sprak de barbaar met deftige gebaren. 'Madammeke Zig Zag kan immers alles.'

'Kan ze niet even voor ons komen ?' vroeg de prins.

'Nee, dat kan ze niet. Zet dat maar snel uit je hoofd,' sprak de barbaar.

'En waarom dan niet ?' vroeg de prins.

'Omdat zij gebonden is aan de wetten van de draken magie. Zo niet, dan zou het hele universum ontploffen,' sprak de barbaar.

'Ligt het zo gevoelig ?' vroeg de prins. 'Zij woont dus tussen de Grote Woestijn en het land van de indianen in ?'

'Ja, in het overgangs-gebied,' sprak de barbaar, 'daar waar alle draken veranderen in buffels.'

'Ik zie hier geen draken,' sprak de prins.

'Nee,' zei de barbaar, 'inderdaad. Die komen hier niet vaak. Het is een groot risico.'

'Dus voor hetzelfde geld wachten we hier nog honderd jaar totdat die Madammeke Zig Zag eens komt opdagen ?' vroeg de prins.

'Ja, en dan heb je kans dat ze nog even terug moet voor haar eieren,' sprak de barbaar, 'dus dan zijn we zo nog honderd jaar verder voordat ze weer terug is.'

'Gezellig,' zei de prins. 'Is er geen andere manier om over de Grote woestijn te komen ? Ik bedoel iets sneller.'

'Niet dat ik weet,' sprak de barbaar.

'Kunnen we misschien op de rug van zo'n draak ?' vroeg de prins.

'Ben je gek,' sprak de barbaar. 'Dat gaat echt niet gebeuren.'

De prins voelde zich moedeloos worden. Hij begon van pure paniek de woestijn in te rennen, en begon toen als een wildeman te schreeuwen. 'Het is niet eerlijk, het is niet eerlijk !' schreeuwde hij. Plotseling zagen ze in de verte wat indianen op paarden aankomen. 'Hey !' riep de prins, en begon te springen en te zwaaien. 'Hey, hier moeten jullie zijn !'

De prins rende terug naar de barbaar. 'Daar komen wat indianen aan. Hoe komen die hier nu ?' vroeg de prins.

'Zij gebruiken de magie van de Grote Afgrond,' sprak de barbaar.

'Kunnen zij ons niet meenemen ?' vroeg de prins met enige hoop.

'Misschien,' zei de barbaar. 'We kunnen het proberen.'

De indianen ter paard kwamen steeds dichterbij. Na een tijdje stonden ze vlak voor de prins en de barbaar. De prins begon direct het hele verhaal te vertellen, in de hoop dat de indianen hen zouden meenemen.

Maar ook de indianen schenen aan ijzeren wetten te zijn onderworpen. Wel wilden ze aan Madammeke Zig Zag om twee eieren van de gele drakenvogel vragen. De barbaar gaf hen daarvoor wat geld mee. De indianen waren maar wat blij, sinds de barbaar en de prins hen wilden helpen in de buffeljacht, om zo te voorkomen dat er niet nog meer draken de Grote Afgrond zouden bereiken om zo onsterfelijk te worden. Ze gingen direct terug over de woestijn.

Zelfs voor de indianen was het nog een reis van drie dagen door de Grote Woestijn, maar dat hadden ze er wel voor over. Ongeveer na een week waren ze weer terug met de eieren. In de diepte van de woestijn zouden de eieren zo warm worden dat ze spontaan uitgebroed zouden worden. De jonge gele drakenvogels zouden direct al sterk en magisch genoeg zijn om hen over de eindeloze woestijn te brengen.

De prins en de barbaar begonnen hun tocht over de Grote Woestijn, met de eieren in hun handen. De eieren waren best wel groot en zwaar, maar het was nog wel te doen. Soms namen ze even een rustpauze. Na een paar uur te hebben gelopen begonnen de eieren steeds heter te worden. Op een gegeven moment waren de eieren zo heet, dat ze niet meer te dragen waren. De prins en de barbaar legden hun eieren in het zand, waar ze al snel kapot begonnen te springen. Twee jonge gele drakenvogels kwamen eruit. Ze strekten zich helemaal uit, en waren veel groter dan hun eieren zelf. Met gemak konden de prins en de barbaar op hun ruggen zitten. Ze waren blij dat het allemaal goed verliep zonder problemen. De twee gele drakenvogels stegen al snel op, en begonnen met een loeivaart richting het eeuwige land van de indianen te vliegen. De prins en de barbaar hielden de nekken van de goede drakenvogels goed vast. Het was alsof ze een magische barriere doorbraken. Dit konden de vogels doen, vanwege de draken magie die zij overvloedig van nature bezaten.

In de verte zagen ze het eeuwige land van de indianen. De prins slaakte een kreet van opwinding. Het was hier een erg tropisch klimaat. Vanuit de hete lucht vlogen ze in de wat vochtigere lucht vlak boven het begindeel van het eeuwige land van de indianen. Hier daalden de vogels neer, alsof ze wisten wat ze moesten doen. Het leek wel alsof de vogels niet meer verder konden. Tot hun grote schrik merkten ze dat de vogels in buffels begonnen te veranderen. Met een plof stortten ze op de grond. De buffels renden weer terug richting de woestijn door het overgangs-gebied.

De barbaar en de prins keken elkaar aan. Toen keken ze naar het eeuwige land van de indianen, en gingen tot het eerste de beste kamp. Een indiaan zat daar op de grond, voor zijn wigwam. Hij rookte een soort pijp, een lange pijp met veren. De prins wees op zijn keten, en begon al snel zijn verhaal te vertellen. Hij hoopte dat de indiaan hem kon helpen van de keten af te komen. De indiaan begon te spreken over de Grote Afgrond, waar alle ruimte ophoudt te bestaan, en waar men de ruimte weer wordt ingedreven. Alle ruimte stopt op dat punt. Door de magie van de Grote Afgrond zouden de indianen alles kunnen bereiken wat ze wilden, en alles kunnen krijgen wat ze wilden. Ook zouden ze hier kunnen afkomen van alles wat ze wilden. Wel was het zo dat de magische bron van de Grote Afgrond in de loop van tijden zo vervuild was geraakt vanwege de draken die als buffels tot de Grote Afgrond konden komen.

'Ik kan u helpen, als drakenjager,' sprak de prins, 'maar doet u alstublieft wat aan de keten om mij nek, die zich ook in mijn huid heeft gedrongen om mijn hart te ketenen. Hierom is mijn leven nog steeds in groot gevaar.'

De indiaan keek naar de keten en knikte. De draken die als buffels tot de Grote Afgrond konden komen werden daar onsterfelijke draken, en alhoewel ze weer teruggedreven werden tot ver buiten het eeuwige land van de indianen en de Grote Woestijn, hadden ze de bron van de Grote Afgrond ernstig vervuild, en zou dat een ernstige bedreiging kunnen vormen voor het voortbestaan van de bron en van het eeuwige land van de indianen. De draken zouden maar wat graag de bron en het eeuwige land van de indianen willen vernietigen of innemen. De indiaan raakte de keten aan. 'Elvenzout ?' vroeg hij. 'Ja,' zei de prins. 'Dat gebruik ik om de keten in slaap en verlamming te houden, zodat het mij niet kan doden vanwege mijn ontsnapping.' De indiaan knikte.

De indiaan begon aan de keten te trekken, maar kon het niet loskrijgen. 'Het zit goed vast,' zei de indiaan.

'Maakt u alstublieft de keten niet wakker, want dan ben ik er geweest,' sprak de prins die zich weer een beetje benauwd voelde. 'Maak je geen zorgen,' zei de indiaan. 'Als mijn vader terugkomt, het grote opperhoofd van deze stam, en medicijnman, dan zal hij je wel kunnen helpen.'

Na een tijdje kwam er een man met een grote verentooi op een paard tot het kamp. Hij stapte van zijn paard af. Ook hij rookte een pijp. Het bleek het opperhoofd te zijn. Hij wees direct op zijn keel, terwijl hij naar de prins keek. 'Laat me je helpen,' zei het opperhoofd. Het opperhoofd kwam naar de prins toe en legde zijn hoofd tegen de borst van de prins aan, alsof hij wilde luisteren. Toen nam het opperhoofd voorzichtig de keten in zijn hand. De keten zat nog steeds erg strak. 'Een lastig ding,' zei het opperhoofd. De prins knikte.

Heel langzaam begon het opperhoofd de keten te vieren, heel voorzichtig, heen en weer. 'Dit heb ik van Madammeke Zig Zag geleerd,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Wij sussen de keten, maken het kalm en rustig, door het te brengen in natuurlijke golfbewegingen. Dan zal de keten minder gespannen zijn.' Het opperhoofd had zijn hand tussen de nekketen en de nek van de prins gelegd, en deed hier hetzelfde. Ineens met een zwaai brak hij de keten los. De prins zuchtte van opluchting. 'Nu zal de keten om je hart ook breken,' sprak het opperhoofd. Hij begon aan de keten te trekken, en trok de keten helemaal uit de borst van de prins, door de opening die daar altijd zat. Even bloedde de prins, maar het opperhoofd verbond het. Het opperhoofd slingerde de keten in het vuur.

'Bedankt,' zei de prins, die zich al een stuk beter voelde.

'Eindelijk,' sprak de barbaar.

'Laten we tot de Grote Afgrond gaan,' sprak het opperhoofd. De prins en de barbaar kregen een paard, en volgden het opperhoofd en zijn zoon.

Vele dagen moesten ze reizen voordat ze een glimp opvingen van de Grote Afgrond. Het leek wel alsof de Grote Afgrond hen tegemoet kwam. Er waren in de verte vele stormen, als tornado's. Ze droegen een vreemd licht in allerlei kleuren, zoals paars, geel en oranje. De tornado's waren als pilaren met hun eigen kleur, en bovenop hen was er een dak van een vreemd rood licht, bijna verzilverd. Het was een groot natuurverschijnsel. Het opperhoofd sprak dat de Grote Afgrond bewoog. Het kon dichtbij komen en ver weg. Ineens keken ze in een immens diepe afgrond. De paarden steigerden. Ergens stopte hier alle ruimte. Het leek wel alsof hier hun gedachten stopten, alsof al hun gedachten hier afbrokkelden. Het was even voor een lange tijd stil.

Toen probeerde het opperhoofd te praten, maar hij kon het niet. Hij maakte alleen wat gebaren met zijn handen, maar kon verder geen woord eruit krijgen. Na een tijdje stuntelen kon hij een beetje stotteren, maar niemand kon het verstaan. Na een tijdje begon hij duidelijker te spreken : 'Dat wat men tijd noemt is in wezen gewoon ook ruimte. Tijd bestaat niet. Zie tijd als ruimte, om zo niet opgesloten te raken in de betovering van tijd. Hier stopt alle ruimte. Hier kunnen we niet verder, maar hier worden we weer teruggedreven de ruimte in. De Grote Afgrond beweegt en kan ons overal brengen.'

'Dat lijkt op één grote trukendoos,' sprak de prins. 'Zou ruimte misschien ook een truuk zijn ?'

'Jazeker,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Alles bestaat alleen maar op kaarten. Die kaarten geven de illusie van ruimte, en zo ook van tijd. Dit zijn de kaarten van de Rode Zee.'

'De Rode Zee ?' sprak de prins. 'Waar is die zee eigenlijk ?'

'Oh, die zee is wonderbaar,' sprak het opperhoofd. Zijn zoon knikte. 'Die zee is paradijselijk, en bevat alle geheimen van het leven.'

'Maar waar is die zee ?' vroeg de prins.

'Niemand weet dat,' zei het opperhoofd. 'Er bestaat immers geen ruimte. Dat is allemaal illusie. Ook nummers zijn illusie. Alles is één en hetzelfde.'

'Wauw,' zei de prins. 'Maar waar manifesteert de Rode Zee zich in de ruimte ?'

'Die zee is inderdaad nergens,' zei het opperhoofd, 'maar soms manifesteert de Rode Zee zich aan de andere kant van de rivier de Sep.'

'Dat is een eind lopen,' sprak de barbaar.

'Haha,' sprak het opperhoofd, 'inderdaad, want de rivier de Sep is eindeloos.' De zoon van het opperhoofd knikte. 'Je kunt er niet zomaar komen,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Alleen zij die de magie van de Grote Afgrond kennen maken kans.'

'Is dat nodig ?' vroeg de prins. 'Ik bedoel is het nodig om tot de Rode Zee te gaan ?'

'Jazeker,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Je moet de geheimen van het leven leren kennen, de kaarten van de Rode Zee, om zo tot de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen te komen, die achter de Rode Zee ligt, dus dat is helemaal aan de andere kant van de feeen rivier de Sep. Daar is afgerekend met het draken probleem.'

'Waarom bent u hier dan nog ?' vroeg de prins. 'Omdat ik de geheimen van de spiegel nog niet goed ken,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Dus ik heb de spiegelwereld nog nooit kunnen binnengaan.' De zoon van het opperhoofd knikte.

'Het gebied van de Rode Zee aan de andere kant van de feeen rivier de Sep is een mysterieus gebied. Soms is de Rode Zee er wel, en soms is het er niet, omdat het eigenlijk nergens is, omdat ruimte een grote illusie is,' sprak het opperhoofd. Zijn zoon knikte. 'Velen kunnen nooit tot dit gebied komen,' ging het opperhoofd verder, 'want de feeen rivier de Sep is een eindeloze rivier. Aan de andere kant van de feeen rivier de Sep, oftewel het andere uiteinde, terwijl dat een eindeloos uiteinde is, ligt de bron van de feeen rivier de Sep, een groot geheim, bewaakt door een onsterfelijke draak. Dit is de draak Temin. Deze bron ligt dus in het gebied van de Rode Zee. De onsterfelijke draken zijn naar ons op jacht. Er is dus een hoger doel dan de buffeljacht, en dat is te komen tot de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen aan het andere eindeloze uiteinde van de rivier de Sep.' De zoon van het opperhoofd knikte.

'Dat is in godsnaam een lange reis,' sprak de barbaar. De zoon van het opperhoofd knikte. 'Dat is het zeker,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'En terug te gaan langs de feeen rivier is niet zonder gevaren. De draken jagen volop daar, en maken veel gevangenen en slaven zoals jullie wel weten. En zij die voor een tweede keer door de draken beetgenomen worden, die zijn er veel erger aan toe.'

'Dus die indianen die we aan het begin van de Grote Woestijn tegenkwamen waren ook op weg naar het andere eindeloze uiteinde van de rivier de Sep ?' vroeg de prins.

'Waarschijnlijk wel,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Zij waren waarschijnlijk, hoogst waarschijnlijk, op weg naar de Rode Zee daar.' De zoon van het opperhoofd knikte.

'Wij hebben in ieder geval een voordeel,' sprak het opperhoofd. Even was het stil. Toen vervolgde het opperhoofd : 'Wij hebben de magie van de Grote Afgrond, een heilige magie. Wij kunnen bereiken wat wij willen, en afscheiden wat wij willen. Wij bemachtigen het grote geheim van ruimte, van verplaatsing, van samenkomen en weer weggaan. Maar het is bekend dat die magie van ons wegvlucht naarmate wij het Grote Midden van de rivier de Sep bereiken. Daar heersen de draken en de trollen volop. Het is het brandpunt van het grote kwaad en het grote bedrog, het middelpunt en de bron van alle ellende. Eens werd daar een draak geboren, en sindsdien waren ze niet meer te stoppen.' De zoon van het opperhoofd knikte weer.

'Hoe gebeurde dat ?' vroeg de prins.

'Salmar was een onsterfelijke draak, een onsterfelijk ei. Hij is de heerser over alle onsterfelijke draken. Nog steeds woont hij in het onsterfelijke ei. Dat is zijn schuilplaats. Hij is een meester van vermommingen. Sommigen zeggen dat hij al deze werelden heeft gemaakt. Sommigen denken dat hij goed is, en anderen denken dat hij slecht is, terwijl weer anderen denken dat hij niet goed en niet slecht is,' antwoordde het opperhoofd. Even was het een tijdje stil. Toen vervolgde het opperhoofd weer : 'In feite begon zo al het kwaad, en men zegt dat zelfs Salmar het kwaad niet meer kon stoppen.'

'Maar hoe werd hij geboren ?' vroeg de prins.

'Dat is een duister geheim van de rivier de Sep,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Zo duister dat wij daar niet over mogen praten.'

'Ik begrijp het,' sprak de prins.

'Nee, je begrijpt het niet,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Als wij daar over zouden spreken, dan zouden al deze werelden kunnen ontploffen, en daarmee het hele universum, en alles zou ophouden te bestaan.'

'Maar dat begrijp ik,' sprak de prins. 'Geheimen zijn niet voor niets geheimen. Dat kan vele redenen hebben die wij niet weten.'

'Nu begrijp je het,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Het komt erop neer dat de wetten van magie onderhevig zijn aan veel geheimhouding. De magie gaat verloren als al die kaarten zomaar op tafel worden gelegd. Maar die kaarten kun je verdienen. Geheimen kun je verdienen, en dat is een grote uitdaging. Het maakt het leven waard te leven.' De zoon van het opperhoofd knikte instemmend.

'Dit is groots,' sprak de prins. 'Het lijkt wel alsof ik niet kan denken, maar alleen maar ervaren. Alles draait en tolt in mijn hoofd.'

'Dat is de magie van de Grote Afgrond,' lachte het opperhoofd. 'En nu op naar de magie van de Rode Zee. Het is als een kaartspel.'

'Maar de magie van de Grote Afgrond zal afnemen als we de rivier de Sep weer opgaan ?' vroeg de prins.

'Uiteindelijk wel,' zei het opperhoofd, 'maar de magie van de Rode Zee zal ons tegemoet treden. Althans dat mogen we hopen. Het is niet voor iedereen. Er zal over onze hoofden worden beslist.'

'Waar gaat het van afhangen ?' vroeg de prins.

'Doorzettingsvermogen, goede wil, dapperheid, moed, volhoudingsvermogen, vastberadenheid, regelmaat, houvast, vertrouwen, wilskracht, trouw, plichtsgevoel en waardigheid, om maar wat dingen op te noemen. In andere woorden : Je moet een grote leergierigheid hebben,' sprak het opperhoofd.

'Dat is een geruststelling,' sprak de prins. 'Ik ben namelijk erg leergierig. Ik wil altijd alles weten. Sommigen noemen mij de ondervrager van Eldemor.'

'Aha,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Nou, dat kan misschien nog goed van pas komen.'

Vlakbij de Grote Afgrond was een hal. Het was de Hal van Verplaatsing. Hier werd de magie van de Grote Afgrond onderwezen. Met z'n vieren gingen ze de grote hal binnen. Hier stond ergens een grote tafel met daarop een map met gebieden. Ook stonden er pionnen op, en lagen er kaarten. Het geheel deed een beetje Middeleeuws aan. Toch brandden er ook lampjes, die waren als kleine kaarsjes. De vlammetjes hadden verschillende kleuren.

'Ik kan het niet goed zien,' sprak de prins. 'Het is wazig voor mijn ogen.'

'Je moet nog wennen aan de magie van de Grote Afgrond,' glimlachte het opperhoofd.

'Ja, nu kan ik het zien,' sprak de prins. 'Heel duidelijk.'

Het opperhoofd begon de pionnen te bewegen, en de lampjes begonnen te knipperen. 'Binnen dit gebied is de magie van de Grote Afgrond makkelijk uit te oefenen. Daarbuiten wordt het moeilijker,' sprak het opperhoofd. Zijn zoon knikte weer als altijd.

Het opperhoofd wees het gebied van Madammeke Zig Zag aan. Hij bewoog een pion daar naartoe, en de lampjes in het gebied begonnen overal paars te worden. 'We moeten haar om raad vragen hoe we naar de Rode Zee kunnen gaan,' sprak het opperhoofd. De prins knikte. Ook de barbaar knikte.

'Hoe komen we daar bij Madammeke Zig Zag, want het is me nogal een rot eind,' vroeg de prins.

'Moet je opletten,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Ik zal je wat laten zien. We gaan tijd en ruimte overbruggen door de magie van de Grote Afgrond. Het opperhoofd drukte een aantal knopjes in. Toen begonnen de lampjes langzaam roze te worden in het gebied van Madammeke Zig Zag. 'Dit is haar huis,' sprak het opperhoofd, terwijl hij er even naar wees. Hij wees naar één van de pionnen, en begon de pion te bewegen tot de grote hal op de map. De grote hal was ook een pion. Toen bewoog hij de pion van het huis van Madammeke Zig Zag weer terug, en begon toen de pion van de grote hal te schuiven naar het huis van Madammeke Zig Zag. 'Zie je ?' vroeg hij.

'Ik begrijp er niet veel van,' sprak de prins. 'Gaat dat altijd zo moeilijk ?'

'Ik probeer je iets te laten zien,' zei het opperhoofd. 'Er moet eerst een verbinding gemaakt worden.'

'Ik begrijp het,' sprak de prins.

Het opperhoofd pakte een kaart, en begon het voor te lezen :

'Madammeke Zig Zag verwacht jullie al.'

Het opperhoofd glimlachte. 'Zie ? Er is contact gemaakt. De kaarten reageren op de pionnen, en geven dan een boodschap door.'

'Geweldig,' sprak de prins. 'Heel mooi,' zei de barbaar.

'Dat wil niet zeggen dat het altijd zo moet,' zei het opperhoofd. 'Dit is maar een hulpmiddel voor beginners. De pionnen van waar je bent en waar je naartoe moet, moeten contact met elkaar maken, en dan reageren de kaarten daarop.'

'Maar hoe komen we daar dan ?' vroeg de prins.

'Let goed op,' sprak het opperhoofd. Weer pakte hij een kaart. 'Lees het voor,' zei hij tegen de prins met een glimlach. De prins pakte de kaart en begon te lezen : 'Overbrug iedere ruimte snel en makkelijk door een feeenwortel.'

'Hoe doe ik dat ?' vroeg de prins.

'Door het te eten,' sprak het opperhoofd.

'Waar kan ik feeenwortels vinden ?' vroeg de prins.

'De Hal van Verplaatsing heeft ze volop in de keuken en de kelders,' glimlachte het opperhoofd. Zijn zoon knikte. Een glimlach verscheen op zijn gezicht. 'Arend Pot, mijn zoon, leidt onze gasten naar de keuken en de kelders, en laat ze die overheerlijke, magische, wonderlijke feeenwortels voor verplaatsing maar eens zien.'

'Dank u vader,' zei de indiaan. 'Volg mij,' zei hij tegen de prins en de barbaar. Aan de andere kant van de hal moesten ze even een trap af, en liepen zo regelrecht de keuken in. De indiaan trok wat lades open waar al veel feeenwortels te zien waren. Toen trok hij de koelkast open waar nog wel meer wortels lagen, en toen nog wat kastjes. Hij gaf een wortel aan de prins en één aan de barbaar. 'Nog niet opeten,' zei hij. Toen leidde hij ze naar de kelders, waar dozen vol met wortels lagen. Het opperhoofd glimlachte. 'Daar kun je veel mee reizen,' sprak het opperhoofd, 'maar ik zal jullie een geheim vertellen. De wortels raken nooit op. Je hebt maar één wortel nodig, die gewoon weer aangroeit als je ervan hebt gegeten.'

'Dat is handig,' zei de prins.

'Handig en gezellig,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Je wortel wordt je beste vriend.' De zoon van het opperhoofd glimlachte breed, en begon hevig te knikken.

'Het is maar voor even,' zei de zoon van het opperhoofd. 'Het is maar voor beginners. In de hogere magie van de Grote Afgrond heb je die wortels niet meer nodig.'

Weer liepen ze terug naar de tafel met de map. 'Ik zal jullie nog even wat laten zien,' sprak het opperhoofd. Weer drukte hij een heleboel knopjes in, en de lampjes begonnen rood te kleuren. Weer nam hij een kaart, en las het voor : 'De verbinding is gemaakt, en de verbinding is open. Jullie zijn alle vier waardig bevonden voor de grote verplaatsing.'

'Eet nu je wortel,' sprak het opperhoofd. De prins en de barbaar begonnen gulzig te eten van hun wortel. Het leek wel alsof alles roze werd voor de ogen van de prins, en langzaam begon alles oranje te worden. Langzaam deed hij zijn ogen open. Een grote vrouw stond voor hem met een hoed op en een pollepel in haar hand. Hij keek om zich heen en merkte dat hij in een huis was. Daar waren ook de anderen. Dit was het huis van Madammeke Zig Zag. Het opperhoofd boog beleefd voor de vrouw, en ook zijn zoon. Ze bogen wel twintig keer. Ook de prins begon maar te buigen.

'Zeg, buig jij ook eens even voor mij,' sprak Madammeke Zig Zag tot de barbaar. 'Zomaar plomp voor me staan is ook niet echt netjes.'

'Ja, mevrouw,' sprak de barbaar deftig, en boog diep voor haar. Toen knielde hij.

'Zo mag ik het zien,' zei Madammeke Zig Zag.

Het opperhoofd vertelde haar het verhaal, dat zijn gasten graag naar de Rode Zee zouden gaan. Madammeke Zig Zag liep naar haar bol van visioenen om erin te kijken wat het beste was.

'Aha, ik zie het,' zei Madammeke Zig Zag, 'het is beter om niet terug te gaan langs de rivier de Sep. Veel te gevaarlijk. Er is een betere weg. De Regenboog Rivier, dat is de grote elven rivier, is een andere rivier die met een grote boog weg van de feeen rivier de Grote Afgrond verbindt met de Rode Zee. Die rivier ligt er dus tussen, maar is ver verwijderd van de feeen rivier. Om die rivier te bereiken moet je langs de Grote Afgrond gaan.'

Het opperhoofd glimlachte : 'Hartelijk dank voor deze wijze raad, Madammeke Zig Zag.'

'Kan daar ook magie van de Grote Afgrond gebruikt worden ?' vroeg de prins.

'Helemaal niet,' sprak Madammeke Zig Zag. 'Je kunt daar zelfs niet komen door Grote Afgrond magie. De elven hebben hun eigen magie.'

Madammeke Zig Zag legde hen even uit hoe ze moesten komen bij de Regenboog Rivier van de elven, en toen gingen ze op pad.

Het was een lange reis langs de Grote Afgrond. Eerst was de Grote Afgrond hen gelukkig tegemoetgekomen, maar toen moesten ze nog een hele lange reis er langsheen. Op een gegeven moment kwam het stoom van de wateren van de Regenboog Rivier hen tegemoet. De rivier stoomde altijd erg. Niet dat het er altijd heet was. Het kon soms heet zijn, maar het klimaat was gewoon ook erg vochtig. Het leek hen van ver al te besproeien. Het was een aangenaam gevoel, als stuivend water, wat tegelijkertijd heet en fris was. De prins kreeg het er warm van, maar niet onaangenaam. Het leek hem te omhullen als een warme deken. Het maakte hem blij en gelukkig. Het was alsof zijn herinneringen gespoeld werden, en zijn wonden verdwenen. Overal waren hier klotsende watervalletjes. Ze waren nu erg dichtbij de rivier. Ergens vonden zij een bootje waarin zij de rivier opgingen. Aan beide kanten van de rivier waren hoge vochtige heuvels met verschillende verhogingen en veel begroeiing. Alle vier namen zij een peddel, en begonnen te peddelen. Er was een bepaalde stroom in de rivier die hen meetrok verder de rivier op. Plotseling sprong er een lange elf in hun bootje. 'Hey, welkom in het gebied van de Regenboog Rivier,' sprak de elf hen toe. 'Hoe kan ik jullie helpen. Waar gaat de reis naartoe ?' Het opperhoofd begon het verhaal te vertellen.

'Ah,' zei de elf. Hij strekte zich even uit. Even was het stil. 'Ik ben Langelf,' sprak de elf plotseling. 'De Regenboog Rivier gaat helemaal terug in de tijd, totdat het aankomt bij de Rode Zee, waar alle tijd begint, als de bron van alle tijd.'

'Ik dacht dat tijd niet bestond, maar dat tijd niets anders is dan ruimte,' sprak de prins.

'Precies !' riep de elf enthousiast. 'Jij begrijpt het. Tijd is een illusie, een onderverdeling van overbruggelijke en onoverbruggelijke ruimte. Tijd is een bouwsteen. Je kunt ermee bouwen, wat je maar wilt. Dus eigenlijk is het gewoon ruimte en materie.' De elf keek heel filosofisch. 'We gaan hier door alle tijden heen, totdat we bij de bron van alles komen. Tijd is eindeloos, zonder begin en zonder einde, maar door de elven magie kun je dit uiteindelijk overbruggen, waar tijd gewoon ruimte is, de verschillende etappes van de Regenboog Rivier. Wij zijn erg trots op ons majestueuze werkstuk.

'Wie hebben de Regenboog Rivier gemaakt ?' vroeg de prins.

'Wij,' zei Langelf.

'Het is inderdaad iets heel lieflijks,' sprak de prins, 'en een adembenemende gewaarwording met zoveel gevoel en intensiteit.'

'Jullie zijn van harte welkom,' sprak Langelf.

'Ik voel een warmte in me dalen, en dan stijgt het weer op,' sprak de prins.

'Je herinneringen worden gezuiverd,' zei Langelf. 'Al je gebieden van tijd, tussen de twee eindeloze uiteindes van tijd in.'

'Geweldig,' sprak de prins.

'Wij waren allemaal gevangenen van de tijd,' sprak de elf. 'Maar de Rode Zee heeft ons vrijgezet. De Rode Zee is de bron van de Regenboog Rivier.'

'Fantastisch,' zei de prins. 'Is de Rode Zee een kaartspel ?'

'Zo zou ik het niet noemen,' sprak de elf. 'Het is veel meer dan dat. Ruimte bestaat niet. Alles is inderdaad onderverdeeld op kaarten die de illusie van ruimte geven, en zo de illusie van tijd. Alles wordt dus geregeerd door kaarten, en je mag in je leven stap voor stap de meest magische kaarten ontdekken. Die kaarten maken je gelukkig, doordat ze je hogere informatie geven, en dus hogere magie om je leven te begrijpen. Dit zal veel pijn weghalen, de pijn van verwarring en onbegrip. Er is veel misverstand in het universum omdat velen de kaarten niet kennen. Het is dus niet zomaar een spel, maar ook een verhaal over je eigen leven. Je moet ontdekken wie je bent, en waar je naartoe mag gaan. Is dat niet wonderlijk ?'

De prins knikte. Ook de zoon van het opperhoofd knikte instemmend. Allen waren ze aandachtig aan het luisteren naar de elf.

'Dus het is een spel en een verhaal met kaarten ?' vroeg de prins.

'Je moet het zo zien,' sprak de elf. 'De kaarten staan voor bepaalde stralen, bepaalde karakters en eigenschappen, elementen in het leven, die leiding kunnen geven en deuren kunnen openen. Die kaarten kun je verdienen, en worden aan je gegeven op de juiste tijd. Zo mag je komen tot de Rode Zee, waar de kaarten arsenalen zich bevinden, de kaart-archieven van het leven.'

'Wij moeten dus oorlog voeren door de kaarten ?' vroeg de prins.

'Oh ja,' sprak de elf. 'Wij moeten de draken verslaan. Alleen de kaarten kunnen dit. De kaarten hebben alle informatie die je nodig hebt.'

'Magisch,' sprak de prins. 'Hoe gaat dat in z'n werk ? De draken verslaan door de kaarten ?'

'Dat zul je wel zien,' glimlachte de elf. 'Het grote spel of verhaal is nog maar net begonnen. Het is een grote oorlog. Een oorlog van kaarten. Informatie tegen informatie. Degene met de beste informatie wint.'

'Dus als ik het goed begrijp is de Rode Zee er niet altijd ?' vroeg de prins.

'Eigenlijk nooit,' sprak de elf. 'En eigenlijk is de Rode Zee nergens, omdat tijd en ruimte niet echt bestaan. Je moet daar doorheen prikken. De Rode Zee is een kaart. Dat is alles wat het is, als de heerser van alle kaarten, die de poort tot de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen bewaakt. Die poort is een magische spiegel. Alleen door de juiste kaarten kan die poort geopend worden.'

'Wauw,' zei de prins. 'Dus de Regenboog Rivier eindigt in een kaart ?'

'Nee,' zei de elf. 'Het loopt uit in een groot bos tot een feeen terras, waar feeen komen voor een potje kaart.'

'Aha !' lachte de zoon van het opperhoofd.

'De feeen spelen daar kaart, en een ieder die daar komt kan daar aan deelnemen, maar er zijn wat risico's aan verbonden, hele grote risico's zelfs,' sprak de elf. 'De kaart van de Rode Zee moet je winnen, maar als je verliest, dan zak je of door de grond tot het land van trol, of je gaat terug naar de feeen rivier de Sep. Het hangt er maar net vanaf welke kaarten je krijgt.'

'Dat klinkt gevaarlijk,' sprak de prins. 'Moet ik daar echt mijn leven voor wagen ?'

'Beste broeder,' sprak de elf, 'jij bent degene die de kaart van het eeuwige boek draagt, een zeer mysterieuze kaart. Die kaart kun je voor alles inzetten. Het is de joker van het spel.'

'Dus in wezen draag ik de kaart van de Rode Zee al bij me, als ik de kaart van het eeuwige boek voor alles kan gebruiken ?' vroeg de prins.

'Jazeker,' sprak de elf. 'Je kan gewoon daar die kaart laten zien, en vragen om de kaart van de Rode Zee.'

'Maar waar heb ik die kaart ?' vroeg de prins.

'Het litteken in je hoofd zal het je laten zien,' sprak de elf. 'Heb jij niet ooit het eeuwige boek geschreven aan de feeen rivier de Sep ?'

'Deels,' sprak de prins.

'Fraai,' sprak de elf. 'Heb je daar nog iets van bij je ?'

'Nee,' sprak de prins.

'De feeen zullen het vast aan je kunnen zien dat jij de schrijver van het eeuwige boek bent. Misschien hebben zij die kaart wel voor je,' sprak de elf.

'Ik hoop het,' sprak de prins.

'Iedereen draagt al kaarten met zich mee van nature,' sprak de elf. 'Ik zie ook bij jou de kaart van de Dinosaurus Rijder, en de kaart van de Krokodillen Rijder.'

'Waar ?' vroeg de prins.

'Ik heb daar ogen voor,' zei de elf. 'Ik kan het onzichtbare zien.'

'Waarom spelen die feeen zo'n gevaarlijk spel eigenlijk,' vroeg de prins.

'Om de spionnen van de draak uit te ziften,' sprak de elf. 'Het kaartspel kan hen namelijk ontmaskeren.'

'Ik begrijp het,' sprak de prins. 'Voor bescherming en veiligheid dus.'

'Jazeker,' sprak de elf.

Op een verhoging in het bos lag het feeen terras. Er was een grote cirkel van vele feeen, allemaal rondom een grote tafel. Het bootje stopte vlakbij het terras, waar de rivier ten einde liep. Iedereen stapte uit. 'Ik moet weer gaan,' sprak de elf, en verdween weer snel het bos in. De feeen waren druk bezig met kaarten. Er zaten veel wezens tussen hen in, en zelfs draken. 'Ik denk dat je het aan het verliezen bent, Almond,' sprak een fee. 'Het Meer van Visioen is geen leuke plaats om te zijn.'

'Oh, jawel,' zei één van de draken. 'Wij hebben het zelf gemaakt.'

'Welnee joh,' zei de fee. 'Het is een gevangenis die wij hebben gemaakt, voor losbollige betweters zoals jij.'

De draak begon een beetje geirriteerd te raken, en boos, en begon vuur te spugen.

'Oh, Almond,' zei de fee. 'Leer eens te communiceren in plaats van al dat nutteloze geweld. Dat vuur is alleen maar kook-vuur. Dat kunnen we goed gebruiken, en het deert ons niet. We kunnen ons eten ermee opwarmen, maar voor jou is het echt tijd om naar school te gaan, misschien een iets leuker en beleefder woord voor gevangenis.'

'Jullie feeen brouwen er weer niets van,' brulde de draak. 'Morgen zal ik terug zijn om jullie eens een lesje te leren !'

'Volgende week, Almond,' sprak de fee. 'Een weekje school zal je goeddoen. Het Meer van Visioen is altijd blij met terugkerende leerlingen. Volgende week zullen we zien of je er echt iets van heb opgestoken, Almond.'

'Haa,' brulde de draak, 'dat lieve Meer van Visioen is van ons, en het is een meer vol leugens. Ik ben er niet bang voor. Wij houden van liegen en bedriegen. Het is ons dagelijks brood. Je doet me daar een groot genoegen mee om me daar naartoe te zenden, als een reisje naar een pretpark. Het zal een dolleuk feestje zijn.'

'Nee, Almond,' sprak de fee. 'Het Meer van Visioen is geen domein van leugens en bedotterij. Het zijn raadsels die je moet oplossen. Doe je het niet, dan blijf je zitten in de klas.'

'Totdat ik het door ga krijgen, juf ?' brulde de draak.

'Precies, Almond,' sprak de fee.

'Wat een ellende, wat een dikke ellende,' brulde de draak. 'Het is altijd hetzelfde liedje hier. Almond, doe dit. Almond, doe dat. Nooit een keertje tijd voor plezier.'

'We hebben genoeg plezier vandaag gehad, Almond,' sprak de fee, 'maar helaas heb je het spel weer verloren, dus moet je terug naar school. Volgende keer beter.'

'Waarom ga je zelf niet naar school, juf ?' brulde de draak.

'Het hele leven is een school,' sprak de fee. 'Soms is het tijd om te spelen, soms is het tijd te leren, en dat geldt voor ons allemaal.'

'Ik zie u gauw dan in het Meer van Visioen, juf,' brulde de draak.

'Ik moet nog afwassen, en daarna is het alweer tijd voor een spelletje kaart,' sprak de fee. 'Ik moet nog meer leerlingen testen.'

De fee drukte een knopje in, en de draak gleed weg door de grond. 'Ziezo, die is weg,' zei de fee.

Het scheen dat de feeen hier een heel ander idee en beeld hadden van het Meer van Visioen. Wat minder dramatisch, meer als een leerschool en een puzzel.

'En wie hebben we daar ?' sprak de fee die de leiding van het spel scheen te hebben. Het opperhoofd begon het verhaal te vertellen.

'Aha, ik zie het,' sprak de fee. 'En hebben jullie ook zin in een potje kaart ?'

'Ik wil niet eindigen in het Meer van Visioen,' sprak de prins.

'Maak je geen zorgen,' sprak de fee. 'Ik zie dat je de kaart van het eeuwige boek draagt. Die kun je voor alles inzetten.'

'Ik zou graag de kaart van de Rode Zee willen hebben,' sprak de prins.

'Nou, dan krijg je er eentje bij,' glimlachte de fee. Uit haar binnenste jaszak haalde ze een kaart, en gaf het aan de prins. 'Alsjeblieft,' zei ze.

De prins keek op de kaart, en zag een rood glimmende zee. 'Kunnen mijn vrienden ook mee ?' vroeg de prins.

'Je kunt er precies drie meenemen, maar het hadden er ook echt niet meer moeten zijn,' glimlachte de fee.

'Waar moeten we nu naartoe ?' vroeg de prins.

'Achter het terras staat een kaartlees-machine, een standbeeld van een eekhoorn. Je kunt de kaart daar in de gleuf drukken, ten hoogte van zijn borst,' glimlachte de fee.

Ze liepen naar de andere kant van het terras, en achter een bruin muurtje stond inderdaad de eekhoorn. De prins stopte het kaartje in de gleuf. Na een tijdje begon de eekhoorn te spreken. 'Eh, nee hoor, komt niks van in. Nee hoor, ik kan je echt niet doorlaten. Nee hoor, ik kan niets voor je doen. Sorry hoor, maar daar komt echt niets van in.' Ook de fee kwam achter het bruine muurtje en begon te lachen. 'Dat doet hij wel vaker hoor,' lachte de fee. 'Hij is even het kaartje aan het verwerken.'

'Ik kan dit niet doen,' zei de eekhoorn. 'Ik ga hier echt niet voor zitten. Ik heb het wel weer gezien, en hier komt niks van in. Er komt niks van in, hoor. Echt niet.'

De fee lachte erom. 'Hij is bijna klaar, denk ik,' lachte de fee.

'Oh ja,' zei de eekhoorn, 'nou zie ik het hoor. Nou, vooruit dan maar, voor deze ene keer. Maar laat het niet meer gebeuren. Ik heb hier al genoeg van gehad, en je bent de laatste voor vandaag. Vooruit maar dan, maar wel doorlopen, en niet treuzelen, anders roep ik je weer terug. Dit is echt de laatste keer dat ik je doorlaat. Waag het niet nog een keer bij me te komen met je smoesjes.'

De fee lachte. 'Zie je nu wel, niets aan de hand. Hij laat je gewoon door.'

'En waar moeten we nu naartoe ?' vroeg de prins.

'Volg mij maar,' zei de fee. Na een tijdje wees ze een richting in. 'Als je die kant op loopt,' zei ze, 'dan kom je vanzelf bij de Rode Zee. Alleen zij die de kaart hebben kunnen de Rode Zee zien. Voor alle anderen is de Rode Zee er niet.'

De prins hield het kaartje goed vast, en liep in de richting die de fee had aangewezen, terwijl de anderen hem volgden. Het was hier nogal dichtbegroeid. Na een tijdje lopen zagen ze in de verte wat roods glinsteren. 'Dat moet de Rode Zee zijn,' sprak de prins.

Hoofdstuk 9. De Rode Zee

Plotseling werden ze tegengehouden door elven die pijl en boog op hen gericht hadden. 'Wat komen jullie hier doen ?' snauwde één van de elven.

'Wij hebben toegang gekregen van de feeen van het feeen terras,' sprak de prins.

'Niks mee te maken,' snauwde de elf, die zijn pijl al bijna in het gezicht van de prins had gedrukt. 'Maak dat je wegkomt,' sprak de elf geirriteerd.

'We hebben ook een kaartje,' zei de prins, en liet de kaart van de Rode Zee zien.

De elven begonnen te lachen. 'Wat hebben wij daar nou mee te maken, jongen,' zei de elf op een bijna spottende toon. Hij had zijn hand tegen de schouder van de prins gezet, en duwde hem weg. 'Dit is ons gebied, belachelijk figuur. Val ons niet lastig met je stomme kaartjes.'

'Wij komen voor de Rode Zee,' sprak de barbaar.

'Rode Zee ?' lachte de elf. 'Er zijn hier geen zeeen. Nou maak dat je wegkomt, en snel een beetje. We hebben geen uren de tijd.'

Het opperhoofd sprak toen wat dingen in een speciale elventaal, maar toen begon de elf nog kwaaier te worden. Met zijn boog sloeg hij het opperhoofd, en ook de andere elven begonnen te slaan. 'Laat je niet misleiden om tegen hen te vechten,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Ze bezitten hoge magie, en de magie van de Grote Afgrond werkt hier niet. Zij zijn zo'n beetje de politie hier, dus we kunnen beter meewerken.'

Eén van de elven schoot giftige pijltjes met zijn blaaspijp. Alle vier werden ze geraakt, en vielen in een diepe slaap. De elven bonden hen vast, en namen hen mee naar een dichtbijzijnd dorp. Hier werden ze in een boerderij in een kooi gezet. Na een tijdje werden ze wakker in de kooi. Een wat oudere elf kwam om hen te ondervragen. Het bleek de hoofdman van het dorp te zijn.

'En jullie zijn op zoek naar de Rode Zee hier ?' bulderde de hoofdman van het lachen. 'Luister nou eens even. Laat me nou even niet lachen. Er zijn hier geen zeeen. Men heeft jullie maar wat wijsgemaakt. De Rode Zee ? Laat me toch niet lachen. Jullie hebben zeker domme spelletjes gedaan met die feeen. Die deugen niet. Die fantaseren er maar op los. Grote bedriegers zijn het. Al tijden zijn wij in grote oorlog met hen.'

De hoofdman ging op een stoel zitten en staarde naar hen. 'Denken jullie echt dat ik die onzin ga geloven ? Wij geloven in de elven kerk en het eeuwige boek, en daar blijft het bij.'

'Ik ben de schrijver van het eeuwige boek,' sprak de prins.

'Leugenaar !' bulderde de hoofdman. Toen begon hij te lachen. 'Het eeuwige boek is geschreven door een oude elf die allang is overleden. Probeer me nu niet nog meer onzin aan m'n neus te smeren.'

'Laat me dat eeuwige boek dan eens zien,' sprak de prins.

De hoofdman liep naar een boekenkast en griste een heel dik boek eruit. Toen liep hij naar de kooi toe, en stak het boek door de tralies. De prins pakte het boek, en begon te lezen. 'Dat heb ik geschreven,' zei de prins. 'Dat heb ik geschreven aan de feeen rivier de Sep. Het boek is nog niet af.'

'Heiligschennis !' bulderde de hoofdman. 'Hoe durf je te zeggen dat ons heilige boek nog niet af is. En hoe durf je te zeggen dat jij de schrijver van het eeuwige boek bent ?'

'Omdat het zo is. De oude elf moet het gestolen hebben, en gezegd hebben dat hij het eeuwige boek zelf had geschreven,'sprak de prins.

'Dikke onzin, dikke onzin,' sprak de hoofdman. 'Dit is heiligschennis naar onze profeet. Of je bent gewoon gek, krankzinnig, en denkt echt dat jij het eeuwige boek hebt geschreven, ons heilig boek waarin wij geloven. Ik ben veel malloten in mijn leven tegengekomen, maar jij bent wel echt de zotste van allemaal. En dan nog al die praatjes over de Rode Zee. Er is hier geen Rode Zee.'

'Je kunt alleen de Rode Zee zien als je de kaart van de Rode Zee hebt,' sprak de prins.

'Wat ?' lachte de hoofdman. 'Wat is dat voor grote onzin. Geef hier die kaart dan.'

'Ik kon het alleen maar voor mijn drie vrienden en mezelf gebruiken,' sprak de prins. 'Het moest eerst getest worden door een standbeeld van een eekhoorn.'

'Zeg, laat me nou toch echt niet lachen, vriend,' bulderde de hoofdman. 'Een standbeeld van een eekhoorn ? Wat zullen we nou krijgen ? Wat zijn dit voor smoesjes. Geef hier die kaart.'

De prins schoof de kaart van de Rode Zee door de tralies, die direct door de hoofdman uit zijn hand werd gegrist. 'Kijk dit nou eens,' bulderde de hoofdman. 'Dat zijn nou typisch van die belachelijke onzin kaarten van de Regenboog Rivier elven, waar wij ook in oorlog mee leven. Dat is allemaal bijgeloof, jongen. Ze filosoferen maar, maar het slaat allemaal nergens op. Het is allemaal mooidoenerij, maar je bereikt daar nooit wat. Houd die kaart van je maar, jongen. Ik ga er niet eens mijn tijd aan verspillen.' De hoofdman schoof de kaart weer terug door de tralies, en de prins nam de kaart opgelucht terug.

'Luister,' zei de hoofdman. 'Wij geloven in de elven kerk en het heilige eeuwige boek, geschreven door onze grote profeet, waarin wij ook geloven. Wat wij ook geloven en zeker weten is dat de feeen waar je het over had vermomde dinosaurussen zijn om ons geloof aan te vallen. Ze komen als lieftallige wezens tot ons om ons van ons geloof af te helpen. Het zijn grote bedriegers. Ze hebben jullie ook bedrogen. Morgen moeten jullie voorkomen bij de nieuwe profeet die onze kerk leidt. Die zal over jullie verdere lot beslissen.'

Boos liep de hoofdman de boerderij uit. Op het hooi in de kooi konden ze slapen, en dat deden ze ook, want ze waren flink moe.

De volgende dag werden ze uit hun kooi gehaald, en naar de kerk gebracht. Op een hoge troon zat een elf met lange uitstekende puntoren. Ze stonden een beetje scheef de lucht in. Hij had een groen pakje aan. 'Kom verder, vrienden, en welkom,' sprak de elf, die heel vriendelijk leek.

'Het spijt ons dat we zomaar in uw gebied kwamen,' sprak het opperhoofd. Zijn zoon knikte.

'Ach,' sprak de elf, 'helemaal geen probleem. Helemaal geen probleem. Ziet u, ik wil u mijn diepste excuses aanbieden. De dorpelingen hier zijn nogal ruw en onhandig. Ze schrikken snel van dingen, en komen dan in onnodig verweer. Ik denk dat ze zich zo veiliger voelen. Het is hun manier van bescherming, maar het klopt niet echt.'

'We waren op weg naar de Rode Zee,' sprak de prins.

'Daar heb ik over gehoord,' glimlachte de elf vriendelijk. 'Maar ik weet er niet veel vanaf. En ik hoorde dat u beweerde de schrijver te zijn van het eeuwige boek ?'

De prins knikte.

'Dat zou best kunnen. Ik twijfel daar niet aan. De vorige profeet lichtte de mensen namelijk graag op,' sprak de elf. 'Ik heb hier veel werk te doen om dat weer te herstellen. Nogmaals mijn excuses voor de manier waarop zij u behandelden.'

'U kon er niets aan doen,' sprak de prins. 'Ik hoorde dat u hier nieuw was.'

'Ja,' sprak de elf, 'ik ben hier van pas geleden. Maar ik ben nu al heilig verklaard.'

Handig,' sprak de prins.

'Jazeker,' lachte de elf. 'Dat kan goed van pas komen.'

'Klopt het dat uw volk in oorlog is met de Regenboog Rivier elven ?' vroeg de prins.

'Ja, dat klopt, dat is nog iets van vroeger,' sprak de elf. 'Daar wil ik ook snel een einde aan maken, en ook aan die bizarre oorlog met de feeen. Het is nergens voor nodig, maar heeft met vroeger te maken.'

'Goed werk,' sprak de prins. 'En hoe noemen jullie jezelf ?'

'Bosbes elven,' sprak de elf. 'Dit is het Bosbes bos. En ik wil jullie niet verder ophouden. Ik zie geen reden om jullie hier nog vast te houden. Jullie kunnen jullie reis voortzetten,' glimlachte de elf. 'En ik wens jullie een goede reis.'

'Bedankt,' zei het opperhoofd. Even later liepen ze het dorp uit, en zochten naar de plek waar ze werden aangehouden. Daar moesten ze verder richting de Rode Zee. Maar alles was veranderd. Ze herkenden niets. 'Dat moet de Bosbes magie zijn,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Ik ken deze elven. Alles verandert hier de hele tijd, zodat niemand hier weg kan, en indringers hun weg niet kunnen vinden. We zitten hier vast. Alles zal in hun voordeel werken. Alleen door hun Bosbes magie kun je de weg vinden. Dat is een hopeloze zaak, want ik ken het niet.'

Ze probeerden het dorp weer te vinden, maar ook het dorp was in geen velden of wegen te bekennen. Het was spoorloos verdwenen.

'Wat gek,' sprak de prins. 'Het was hier net nog.'

'Dat zei ik,' zei het opperhoofd. 'Het is Bosbes magie.'

Uren zochten ze in het bos naar aanknopingspunten, maar alles leek op elkaar. Ze hadden het gevoel in cirkeltjes te lopen. Ze werden er doodmoe van, en na een tijdje stortten ze alle vier neer op het mos om te slapen.

Het opperhoofd en zijn zoon werden als eerste weer wakker. 'Dit vreesde ik al,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'We komen hier nooit meer uit.' Toen de prins en de barbaar wakker werden gingen ze weer uren lang zoeken, maar tevergeefs. Alles bleef op elkaar lijken. 'Dit lijkt wel op een eeuwig bos,' sprak het opperhoofd.

'Dat is het ook,' zei de barbaar. 'Ze hebben ons goed te pakken.'

'Wat een doolhof,' sprak de prins.

'Was het maar een doolhof,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Maar dit is allemaal hetzelfde. Het stopt nooit.'

'Wat nu ?' vroeg de prins.

'We zijn goed de gebakken peer,' sprak het opperhoofd.

Plotseling zagen ze wat roods glinsteren in de verte. 'Dat moet de Rode Zee zijn !' riep de prins. 'Rennen, jongens, anders is het weer weg.' De prins zette het op een rennen, en ook de anderen renden achter hem aan. Ze renden zo hard als ze konden, en kwamen aan bij de Rode Zee. 'Wat een glorieus moment,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'En dat net toen we het nodig hadden.'

'Het lijkt meer op een meer,' zei de barbaar. 'En het ziet eruit als bessensap.' De prins proefte er wat van. 'Inderdaad, bessensap, meer wel heerlijk.'

'Pure Bosbes magie,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Het heeft ons niet in de steek gelaten.'

'Wat wonderlijk,' sprak de prins. 'Maar zou dit nou dan toch de Rode Zee zijn ?'

'Ik weet het niet,' sprak het opperhoofd. Ineens verscheen de nieuwe elven profeet voor hen. 'Ik heb door een wonder de Rode Zee voor jullie gemaakt,' glimlachte de elf. 'Mijn toverstaf liet mij zien dat jullie in de problemen waren geraakt.'

'Dat waren we zeker,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Onze dank is groot.'

'De elven oorlogen hebben het land zo gemaakt. Uit angst verandert het de hele tijd,' sprak de elf. 'Misschien dat de Rode Zee daar verandering in kan brengen.' Een kaart kwam naar boven drijven uit het meer van bessensap. De prins greep de kaart, en las hardop : 'Welkom tot de Rode Zee. De kaarten zullen uw pad leiden.'

Een pad van kaarten begon zich over het meer van bessensap te vormen. Aan het einde van het pad stond een spiegel. 'Dat moet de spiegelpoort zijn tot de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van indianen,' sprak de prins.

Hengsten renden langs de Rode Zee langs het strand. Ze gingen zo snel dat ze bijna niet te zien waren. De Rode Zee leek ineens vele malen groter, en werd steeds groter. De Rode Zee lag tussen het land van oneindige grootte, te groot om te kunnen opmerken, en het land van oneindige kleinte, te klein om te kunnen opmerken. Je zou daar alleen kunnen komen en het opmerken door de hengsten te berijden, maar die gingen te snel. Hiervoor hadden ze de vertragende steen nodig die was samengesmolten met de trollensleutel, maar die was verslonden door de draken. Ze zouden dus terugmoeten naar een dieper verleden, maar tijd was dus in wezen niets dan ruimte, en ruimte was in wezen niets anders dan een kaart.

De kaartenbrug lag nog steeds voor hen, gaande over de enorme Rode Zee. In de verte zagen ze wat glinsteren, wat de magische spiegelpoort tot de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen moest zijn. Plotseling rende de barbaar op de brug af. Hij begon als een zot te rennen over de kaarten richting de magische spiegel in de verte. Ze probeerden hem nog terug te roepen, maar hij bleef maar doorrennen. Toen zagen ze hem door de kaarten heen wegzakken in de Rode Zee.

Hij had de kaarten moeten lezen. Niemand wist waar hij nu naartoe zou gaan. Ze leken hem kwijt te zijn. De prins boog zijn hoofd. Voorzichtig liepen ze naar de kaartenbrug, vol verdriet over hun verloren vriend. 'Komt hij nog terug ?' vroeg de prins. Niemand antwoordde. 'Hij had de kaarten moeten lezen,' sprak de elf. 'Ik kan je niks zeggen.'

Ze keken naar de kaarten die in een bepaalde volgorde lagen. De eerste kaart sprak dat ze een kristal van het land van oneindige grootte moesten meenemen, en een kristal van het land van oneindige kleinte. Alleen zo zouden ze veilig op de eerste kaart van de kaartenbrug kunnen staan. Maar om in die landen te kunnen komen hadden ze de hengsten nodig, en om de hengsten te kunnen berijden hadden ze de trollensleutel nodig die ooit door de draken was verslonden. Ze zouden dus hiervoor naar een dieper verleden moeten waar de trollensleutel nog steeds bestond. Tijd was dus eigenlijk ruimte, en ruimte was dus eigenlijk een kaart. Ze hadden dus de kaart van de trollensleutel nodig voordat ze die hengsten zouden kunnen berijden. De kaart van de trollensleutel was de derde kaart van de kaartenbrug, waar ze dus nog niet konden komen. Bosbes magie kon de tijdsvolgorde, de chronologie van dingen, en de ruimtelijke volgorde van dingen veranderen. Maar de kaart van Bosbes magie lag nog wel verder weg op de brug. Dat was de vierde kaart. Die konden ze dus niet bereiken. Gelukkig was de elf er nog. Hij kon wel Bosbes magie, en veranderde de volgorde van de kaarten voor hen. De prins was dolgelukkig. Nu was de kaart van Bosbes magie de eerste kaart, waar ze gewoon op konden staan. De tweede kaart was nu de kaart van de trollensleutel. De derde kaart was de kaart van de twee kristallen van het land van oneindige grootte en het land van oneindige kleinte, dus eigenlijk was het niet nodig de hengsten te berijden. Zo konden ze dus ook heel makkelijk nu op de vierde kaart staan waar die kristallen gevraagd werden.

De vijfde kaart was de kaart van de verloren vriend. Toen ze daar op gingen staan was ineens de barbaar weer terug. Ze waren allemaal dolgelukkig. 'Waar was je geweest ?' vroeg de prins die direct de barbaar omhelsde. 'Oh, bij een dwerg hier onder de Rode Zee, waar ik in slaap viel. Ik kan me er niet veel van herinneren,' zei de barbaar.

'Onder de Rode Zee is het rijk van slaap,' sprak de elf.

'Blij dat je weer terugbent,' sprak het opperhoofd. Zijn zoon knikte glimlachend en instemmend.

De zesde kaart was een hele lange kaart die helemaal tot de spiegelpoort tot de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen reikte. Deze kaart was genoemd de langste kaart. Maar verderop de kaartenbrug begon het steeds meer te waaien en zelfs te stormen. Ook leek de langste kaart verderop steeds dunner te worden. 'Floep,' daar ging de zoon van het opperhoofd. En floep, daar gingen de anderen. Ze werden meegesleurd door een grote golf. Ze gingen richting de magische spiegel. De kaartenbrug leek geheel te zijn verdwenen. Alle vijf werden ze na een tijdje opgehesen door een vreemd schip. Ze waren half in slaap.

Het bleek een schip van koopmannen te zijn, met zwarte pakken die Middeleeuws leken. Ze hadden veel sieraden en aan tafeltjes werd er gedobbeld. 'Wie zijn jullie ?' bulderde een man met een zwarte, vreemdsoortige platte muts.

De elf nam het woord, en vertelde het verhaal. 'Zo zo,' bulderde de man. 'En wie heeft jullie toestemming gegeven hier zomaar te komen ?'

'Dit is mijn land,' sprak de elf. 'Dit is Bosbes gebied.'

'Mispoes,' bulderde de man. 'Dit is het gebied van de Rode Zee. Niemand komt hier zomaar langs of door.'

'Ik heb de Rode Zee zelf gemaakt,' sprak de elf, 'omdat mijn vrienden ernaar op zoek waren.'

'Heiligschennis !' bulderde de koopman. 'Niemand heeft de Rode Zee gemaakt. De Rode Zee heeft altijd al bestaan, zonder begin en zonder einde.'

'Wie bent u dan ?' vroeg de elf.

'Wij zijn koopmannen van het eeuwige boek,' sprak de man.

'Dat boek heb ik geschreven,' zei de prins.

'Ach onzin,' sprak de koopman. 'Dat boek heeft niemand geschreven. Dat boek heeft altijd bestaan, zonder begin en zonder einde.'

'U drijft handel met mijn boek ?' vroeg de prins. 'Dat boek is gratis.'

'Nu moet je ophouden,' sprak de koopman. 'Ten eerste is het jouw boek niet, en ten tweede is niets gratis.'

De prins keek uit het schip de zee in. Ergens zag hij de kaartenbrug verder gaan. 'Kunt u ons afzetten daar op die kaartenbrug ?' vroeg de prins terwijl hij op de brug wees.

De koopman keek de zee in naar de brug. 'Wel heb ik ooit,' sprak de koopman. 'Dat heb ik nou nog nooit gezien.' Het schip kwam steeds dichterbij de brug. De prins kon zien dat de eerste kaart de kaart van de koopvaarders van het eeuwige boek was. Het hele schip begon in een kaart te veranderen, en ze rolden helemaal naar de eerste kaart van de brug. De koopmannen waren weer in de kaart verdwenen.

De tweede kaart was de kaart van de Rode Zee, die de prins zelf ook al had. Toen ze erop gingen staan stonden ze ineens voor de magische spiegel. 'Welkom,' sprak de spiegel. 'U hebt de juiste kaarten bereikt om de poort tot de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen te openen. Komt u verder.'

Alle vijf konden ze zo door de magische poort lopen, als door een waterval, om zo in de spiegelwereld te komen. De prins keek zijn ogen uit. Er waren overal bessenstruiken in het warme, zelfs hete, zand. Weer zagen ze in de verte een zee, die zwart was. 'Dit moet de zwarte zee zijn die de spiegelwereld omgeeft,' sprak het opperhoofd. Zijn zoon knikte.

Ze liepen langs de bessenstruiken, en al snel kwamen ze op een zandpad door een klein bos terecht, wat benedenwaarts afliep naar de zwarte zee. 'Wat is dat voor een zee ?' vroeg de prins.

'Ik weet het niet,' sprak het opperhoofd. 'Ik heb alleen Madammeke Zig Zag er weleens over horen praten.'

'Wat zei ze erover ?' vroeg de prins.

'Ze noemde het alleen op, maar zei er verder niets over,' sprak het opperhoofd.

Vanuit de verte konden ze alweer een nieuwe kaartenbrug zien. Na een tijdje renden ze naar beneden naar de eerste kaart. De prins begon hardop te lezen :

Oh, elven kerk, ontwaak,
Van kaarten zult gij gebouwd worden,
Een kaarten kerk zult gij zijn,
Waarin allen zullen slapen,
Nooit meer ontwaken zullen zij,
Totdat zij het gouden draad zien.

Oh, gouden draad,
Lang bent gij en vol geheimen,
Waar zij u niet zien, slapen zij,
Sommigen een eeuwigheid,
Anderen een lange tijd,
U laat u niet gauw zien.

Hoog in de elvenkerk tikt gij,
In een verborgen toren, zeer hoog,
Ja, in de hoogste toren die nooit stopt met groeien bent gij,
In eindeloze hoogtes waar zij allen duizelen,
Wanneer zij u grijpen, vallen zij.

In een eindeloze put, zo diep,
Waar alleen u redden zal,
Oh gouden draad van eeuwigheden,
Bouw uw elven kerk snel,
Een standbeeld zullen zij van uw profeet maken,
Hij weet de weg wel.

Waarom zou iemand weten, anders dan uw profeet ?
Alleen hij weet,
En zijn standbeeld die eeuwig leeft.'

Langzaam begon de kaart om te draaien, waarop een gouden standbeeld was te zien van een elf. Dit was de kaart van de elvenprofeet van de gouden draad. 'Welkom in de spiegelwereld,' sprak de kaart. 'U bent aangekomen bij de zwarte zee, de eindeloze put.'

'Kunnen wij op u staan ?' vroeg de prins.

'Kun je niet lezen ?' snauwde de kaart. 'Je hebt de gouden draad nodig, anders zul je wegzakken in de eindeloze put, in de golven van de zwarte zee. En zij die naar het gouden draad grijpen zullen ook in de zwarte zee verdwijnen.'

'Hoe komen we bij de gouden draad ?' vroeg de prins.

'Door de elvenprofeet van de gouden draad,' sprak de kaart.

'Maar bent u dat niet ?' vroeg de prins.

'Nee,' snauwde de kaart. 'Ik ben slechts zijn kaart.'

'Ik dacht dat het juist om de kaarten ging,' sprak de prins.

'Helemaal niet,' sprak de kaart. 'Wie heeft je die onzin verteld ?'

'Laat maar zitten,' zei de prins.

'Zeg, wij laten hier helemaal niets zitten,' sprak de kaart. 'Zeg op. Wie heeft jou die onzin verteld ?'

'Het was aan de andere kant van de spiegel,' sprak de prins.

'Oh ja, dan begrijp ik het,' sprak de kaart. 'Dat is de spiegelkant, die draaien alles om. Grote leugenaars zijn het. Daar kun je beter niet meer komen. Je kunt hier beter blijven in de kerk.'

'Wat voor kerk ?' vroeg de prins.

'De elvenkerk, domoor !' snauwde de kaart.

'Ik zie geen elvenkerk,' sprak de prins.

'De zwarte zee is de elvenkerk. Het is gebouwd van kaarten,' sprak de kaart. 'Torens komen uit de zee bij nacht. Daar waar het gouden draad wacht.'

'Hoe komen we bij die torens ?' vroeg de prins.

'Je begrijpt het niet,' foeterde de kaart. 'Ik zei het je toch dat de elvenprofeet van de gouden draad de enige is die de weg weet ? Zonder hem ben je nergens.'

'Waar kunnen we de elvenprofeet van de gouden draad vinden ?' vroeg de prins.

'Dat weet alleen de elvenprofeet van de gouden draad waar hij is,' sprak de kaart.

De prins probeerde de tweede kaart te zien, maar het was nogal donker. Het begon al nacht te worden. Plotseling begonnen er torens uit de zee te komen. Het leek wel alsof ze een elvenkasteel of elvenkerk uit het water zagen oprijzen. De muren waren huizenhoog, en de torens groeiden maar door. 'De kerkdienst gaat beginnen,' sprak de kaart.

Over de brug kwam een elf aanlopen vanuit de elvenkerk op het water. De elf keek even opzij, en keek toen weer naar hen. Het was de elvenprofeet van de gouden draad.

'Goed dat jullie gekomen zijn,' sprak de elf. Hij had een goudkleurig pakje aan. Ook hij had lange puntige oren die scheef in de lucht stonden. Even sprak hij in een speciale elventaal tot de andere elf. Ook het opperhoofd kon de taal verstaan, en zei wat tegen hem in de speciale elventaal. Zijn zoon knikte, dus waarschijnlijk verstond hij het ook.

'Vrienden,' sprak de elvenprofeet van de gouden draad. 'Mag ik u welkom heten in de elvenkerk ? Deze kerk is gebaseerd op het eeuwige boek.'

'Dat heb ik geschreven,' sprak de prins.

'Dan ben jij dus wel een hele bijzondere gast,' glimlachte de elf. 'Het gouden draad wacht al op jullie.'

'Wie of wat is het gouden draad ?' vroeg de prins.

'Het gouden draad is de enige weg over de zwarte zee tot de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen,' sprak de elf.

'Wat is de boodschap van de elvenkerk ?' vroeg de prins.

'Dat alles een elvenkerk is, een school,' sprak de elf, 'waarin je alles mag terugvinden wat je verloren bent. In andere vormen zul je het terugvinden, vormen beter voor je.'

'Dus wij waren altijd al in de zwarte zee ?' vroeg de prins.

'Jullie komen van heel diep,' sprak de elf. 'Jullie zijn dichtbij de gouden draad gekomen.'

'Wat is er zo wonderlijk in die spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen ?' vroeg de prins.

'Het is een spiegelwereld,' sprak de elf, 'dat wil zeggen dat de leugens weer omgedraaid zullen worden tot de waarheid. Je gaat daar zien hoe dingen echt zijn.'

'Waar is de gouden draad ?' vroeg de prins. Loop maar met mij mee,' sprak de elvenprofeet van de gouden draad. Met hem konden ze gewoon over de kaartenbrug lopen, recht de elvenkerk in. De elvenkerk was binnenin goed verlicht. Aan beide zijden was een brede trap die naarboven ging, naar een balkon. Boven het balkon zweefde een gouden draad.

'Wonderlijk,' sprak de prins. De gouden draad snelde op hen af, en begon hen te omhelzen. 'Welkom,' sprak de gouden draad. 'Ik zal jullie leiden over de zwarte zee tot de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen, waar alles is zoals het is. Jullie komen uit het rijk der leugens, uit de spiegelkant, waar alles omgedraaid is. Ik ben blij dat jullie eindelijk gekomen zijn. Ik heb zo lang op jullie gewacht.'

Het opperhoofd maakte een buiging, en toen ook zijn zoon. 'Wij voelen ons vereerd,' sprak het opperhoofd. Zijn zoon knikte hevig.

'Welkom, gasten,' sprak het gouden draad. 'Wij voelen ons ook vereerd. Jullie hebben een lange reis gemaakt om hier te komen. Goede keuze, goede keuze.'

'Zal ik jullie een verhaal vertellen ?' vroeg de gouden draad. Ze knikten.

'Er waren eens een prins en een prinses in het land van Eldemor. De prinses was van een andere familie, maar woonde bij de prins in. Haar ouders waren omgekomen. Het was een indiaanse prinses met een indiaanse vader en een moeder die half elf en half fee was. Zij was een halfling. Op een dag werd zij meegenomen door de draken. Een grote ontvoering. De halfling is innerlijk verdeeld. Ze heeft teveel rassen in haar. Ook had zij het bloed van trol en het bloed van de draak. Ze werd meegenomen tot duistere spiegelwerelden van draken en trollen. De rokende drakenspiegel werd haar heerser, haar meester. De rook van deze spiegel had haar bedwelmt, met zijn gif, en nam haar mee, door zijn spiegelrijk. Zij is de slavin van de drakenspiegel. Zij moest kinderen lokken tot deze spiegel, om zo nog meer slaven te maken : kinderslaven.'

'Maar dat is verschrikkelijk,' sprak de prins. 'Wat kunnen wij er aan doen ?'

'Vernietig de drakenspiegel,' sprak de gouden draad. 'Het is de heilige opdracht van alle elven van de elvenkerk en hun bondgenoten.'

De elvenprofeet van de gouden draad had een harpje in zijn hand genomen, en begon te spelen en te zingen :

'Oh drakenspiegel,

Jij venijnig kwaad,

Zoveel kinderen heb je gestolen,

En hen tot slaven gekroont,

Met veel liefde en gulle gaven,

Misleidde jij hun hart,

En maakte hen tot slaven

Jij ontnam hen de kennis zichzelf te vinden,

Jouw giftige rook had hen bedwelmt,

In jouw spiegelrijk raakten ze verstrikt,

Zoveel kinderslaven marcheren daar,

Hun lied zal hen nooit tot de morgen doen komen,

Overal waar het nacht is jagen de draken,

Opdat zij nooit meer zullen ontwaken

Oh elvenhart, aanschouw dit grote kwaad,

Twee sleutels zijn u gegeven,

Om de drakenspiegel te verbreken.'

'Wat zijn de twee sleutels om de drakenspiegel te verbreken, en waar bevindt zich de drakenspiegel ?' vroeg de prins.

'Overal in de lucht,' sprak de gouden draad. 'Als een draak is geworden tot drakenmeester, dan kan hij de gedaante van een ruiter aannemen, die dan de draken van de lagere rangen kunnen berijden. Het gaat altijd door. Altijd zijn ze op jacht. Het zit in de lucht als een gif, maar allen worden beheerst door de drakenspiegel. Je vraagt om de twee sleutels ? Voor nu moet dat geheim blijven, anders zou het universum ontploffen. De drakenspiegel houdt de kinderslaven opgesloten in zijn spiegelrijk, waar hij hen opgesloten houdt in boeken, in vreemde verhalen en gedichten.'

'Waar is de halfling prinses nu ?' vroeg de prins.

'Zij is nog steeds met de drakenspiegel,' sprak de gouden draad.

'Waar ?' vroeg de prins.

'In de lucht,' sprak de gouden draad. 'In feite in een kaart, in de kaart van de drakenspiegel.'

'Waar kunnen we die kaart vinden ?' vroeg de prins.

'Niemand weet het, onbekend,' sprak de gouden draad.

'Dus zij zit ook opgesloten in een vreemd verhaal of vreemd gedicht ?' vroeg de prins.

'Vraag niet door,' sprak de gouden draad. 'We moeten voorzichtig zijn. De drakenspiegel is erg gevoelig en weet wanneer men over hem praat.'

'Wij zouden graag naar de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van indianen gaan. Kunt u ons daar brengen ? Misschien dat we daar meer te weten komen.'

'Volg mij,' sprak de gouden draad. Ze liepen de elvenkerk uit, en de gouden draad begon zich heel lang uit te strekken, en maakte zich een beetje wijder, totdat er een pad ging over de zwarte zee. Direct begonnen ze aan hun reis over de zwarte zee, over het pad van de gouden draad. Urenlang moesten ze lopen, totdat ze eindelijk land zagen. Dat moest de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen zijn.

'Droom ik nu ?' vroeg de prins. Aan de kust stonden lange rijen met feeen. Ze hadden lichte jurken aan van allerlei kleuren : blauw, roze, geel, oranje. En de kleuren waren van prachtig lichte tinten, bijna doorzichtig. Sommige feeen hadden parasolletjes. De prins zette het op een rennen, en de anderen renden achter hem aan. 'Wat geweldig !' riep de prins. Ze moesten nog wel even een tijdje rennen voordat ze eindelijk de kust hadden bereikt. Toen de prins een voet op het land zette voelde hij zich ineens heel vreemd. Even werd het roze voor zijn ogen. Een fee in een licht roze jurk van bijna doorzichtige tint kwam naar hen toe. 'Welkom in de spiegelwereld van het eeuwige land van de indianen,' sprak ze.

'Waar zijn de indianen ?' vroeg de prins.

'U bent prins Jagerstouw, de schrijver van het eeuwige boek ?' vroeg de fee.

De prins knikte. 'Komt u maar mee,' sprak de fee.

Ze werden geleid tot een klein stadje. Ergens was er een klein cafeetje waar de fee binnenging. 'Dat is Edward, de barkeeper,' zei ze terwijl ze wees op een man met een schort die stond af te wassen. De man wuifde even. Toen liep ze op een trap naar boven, terwijl de anderen haar volgden. Boven het cafe was een kamer waar een grote klok hing. Ze ging op een stoel zitten. 'Gaat u zitten,' sprak ze, terwijl ook de anderen een stoel namen.

'Onze magie komt voort uit de gevechten tussen dinosaurussen,' sprak ze. 'Verderop in het land wonen de elven waarvan hun magie voortkomt uit de oorlogen van de indianen. De indianen wonen nog veel dieper in het land. Zij leven in grote oorlog.'

'Met wie zijn ze in oorlog ?' vroeg de barbaar.

'Met andere stammen, met feeen en met elven,' sprak de fee. 'Vanuit die oorlogen winnen de elven hun magie. De indianen bewaken een groot geheim : de rokende drakenspiegel. De drakenspiegel doet hen tegen elkaar strijden. De drakenspiegel heeft hen behekst, zeg maar bedraakt. Zij zijn slaven van geweld. Wij hebben ze geprobeerd te helpen, maar tevergeefs. Ik ben blij dat jullie zijn gekomen.' Toen richtte ze zich tot de prins. 'Eens zonden we jou de trollensleutel, Vika, en het trollenorakel, Nahemsh. Heb je die bij je ?'

'Nee,' zei de prins. 'De trollensleutel had het trollenorakel vernietigd, omdat het trollenorakel te gevaarlijk zou zijn. Toen werd de trollensleutel vernietigd door de draken.'

'Oh, dus ze raakten met elkaar in gevecht ?' sprak de fee. 'De drakenspiegel moet hen tegen elkaar opgestookt hebben, zoals hij altijd doet. Maar ze zijn niet verdwenen, prins Jagerstouw. De kaarten van de trollensleutel en het trollenorakel zitten nog steeds in je geheugen. Het zijn geheugenkaarten, en die zijn magisch. Ook het trollenorakel is een sleutel, de tweede sleutel. Dit was de sleutel van de indianen, die door de trollen werd gestolen en werd omgesmolten tot het orakel van trol, om de toekomst mee te voorspellen. De kaart van de sleutel van de indianen bestaat nog steeds in het verleden, maar niet in jouw geheugen, prins Jagerstouw, maar in mijn geheugen. Ik kan me de verschrikkelijke dag dat die sleutel gestolen werd nog goed herinneren, als de dag van gisteren. Het is nog steeds diep in mijn geheugen gegrift. Sindsdien werden de indianen slaven van de drakenspiegel, de slaven van geweld, door de stokerijen van de spiegel. Geef mij de kaart van het trollen orakel, zodat mijn kaart van de sleutel van de indianen geactiveerd kan worden.'

'Hoe kan ik de kaart geven ?' vroeg de prins.

'Het zit in je geheugen,' sprak de fee. 'Haal het uit je geheugen en geef het aan mij ?'

'Ja, maar hoe ?' vroeg de prins.

'Laat maar, ik doe het zelf wel,' sprak de fee. 'Denk nu heel sterk aan de herinneringen die je hebt van het trollen orakel.'

De prins begon diep te denken, en terug te gaan in zijn geheugen naar de momenten van het trollen orakel.

'Goedzo,' zei de fee. Even legde ze haar hand op zijn hart. 'De kaart is nu met mij,' zei de fee. 'De kaart van de sleutel van de indianen wordt nu geactiveerd. In combinatie met de kaart van de trollensleutel die jij draagt is de indianen sleutel nu sterk genoeg, omdat de trollensleutel de kaart van de sleutel van de indianen zo kan vertragen dat de drakenspiegel het niet meer weg kan stelen.'

De prins voelde zichzelf steeds meer wegglijden in zichzelf, in een grote diepte. Hij bevond zich plotseling op de golven van de zwarte zee die traag bewogen. Steeds trager begonnen ze te bewegen, totdat hij er dwars doorheen kon kijken. Hij bevond zich in de drakenspiegel, en een tovenaar bezweerde de spiegel. Het was de grote tovenaar van de drakenspiegel. 'Ik bestrijd je door het eeuwige boek !' riep de prins tot de tovenaar. 'Laat me los uit deze spiegel !' Er stond een grote druk op de spiegel, en plotseling explodeerde het.' De prins stond nu oog in oog met de tovenaar die de drakenspiegel had gemaakt.

'Laat me je pakken, jongetje !' krijste de tovenaar. 'Niemand ontsnapt zomaar uit de drakenspiegel !' De prins zette het op een rennen. Snel rende hij door een paars gordijn een gang op. De gang eindigde bij een trap die hij toen oprende. 'Ik krijg je wel !' krijste de tovenaar.

Het werd zwart voor de ogen van de prins. Hij viel in een diepe, duistere put, en merkte toen dat hij zich weer bevond op de golven van de zwarte zee. Steeds trager gingen de golven. Dit was zware magie. Toen de golven bijna stilstonden zag hij de kerker waar de halfling prinses inzat, dwars door de golven heen. Hij merkte dat hij er dwars doorheen kon rennen. Hij rende door tot aan de tralies, waar het slot zat met twee gleuven. 'Vlug,' sprak de stem van de fee in zijn hoofd. 'Je hebt twee kaarten : de trollensleutel en de sleutel van de indianen. Steek ze in het slot.' De prins keek naar zijn hand waarin de twee kaarten lagen, en stopte ze in de twee gleuven van het slot. Plotseling ging het slot open. De prins greep de hand van de halfling prinses, en rende met haar de kerker uit. Maar daar was de tovenaar weer met twee wilde honden die hen aanvlogen. Weer werd de prins zwart voor zijn ogen. Hij voelde zich nog dieper wegglijden. Alle herinneringen vlogen langs hem heen als kaarten in een cirkel. Hij greep de kaart van het elvenzout, maar voelde zich alleen maar zieker worden. Al zijn vrienden waren ook kaarten. Hij greep de kaarten van zijn vrienden en werd warm van binnen. 'Zij helpen je,' sprak de fee. Zij was in het midden van de kaarten cirkel. Van haar toverstafje droop glimmend spul. 'Ik geef je twee nieuwe kaarten, prins,' sprak de fee. Hij kreeg de kaart van de halfling prinses en de kaart van de tovenaar van de drakenspiegel. Plotseling zag hij zijn verwonde hart, wat helemaal zwart was gekleurd. De twee wonden van zijn hart veranderden in gleuven. 'Vlug,' sprak de fee, 'steek de twee nieuwe kaarten in de gleuven van je hart.' De prins deed het meteen. De tovenaar lag op de grond. Rook kwam uit de spiegel, die als een glazen bol was op een standaard. Er zat groen sap in wat soms paars kleurde.

'Geef mij die kaarten,' kreunde de tovenaar. De prins liep naar de tovenaar toe, en keek in de zakken van de tovenaar, waar hij een stapeltje kaarten weggriste. 'Nee !' krijste de tovenaar. 'Geef mijn kaarten terug ! Dat zijn mijn kaarten !'

Ook de kaarten van prinses Mekka en prinses Regenboog waren in het stapeltje.

De prins zuchtte, en liep door een gordijn een grote gang op die naar een grote trap naar beneden leidde. Snel was de prins buiten het kasteel in de dooiende sneeuw. Nog één keer keek de prins om naar het kasteel, en liep toen in trage pas de kasteel tuin uit. Hij sloot het hek achter zich, en liep richting het dichtstbijzijnde dorp.

Hij kende hier niemand. Hij kende dit dorp niet. Hij klopte aan bij de eerste de beste deur. Een vrouw deed open, en hij begon direct zijn verhaal te vertellen. De vrouw sloeg een arm om hem heen, en gaf hem wat te drinken. Tot diep in de nacht waren ze in gesprek. Ze had wel een kamer voor de prins waar hij kon overnachten. Toen hij sliep ging ze naar het dorpsbestuur om mee te delen wat hij had gezegd. Ze wilden hem weer verkopen aan de tovenaar. Gewapend ging het dorpsbestuur naar het huisje van de prins, waar ze hem arresteerden. De tovenaar kon hem weer terugkopen.

Maar de drakenspiegel was niet meer wat het geweest was. En de tovenaar begon tekenen van veroudering te vertonen, van zware vergeetachtigheid en dementie. De tovenaar was niet meer wie hij geweest was, en wist op een gegeven moment niet meer wie hij was. Ook dacht hij dat het kasteel een herberg was waar hij verbleef, en dat de prins de herbergier was. Zo kwam het kasteel steeds meer in handen van de prins. Op een dag vertrok de zwaar demente tovenaar weer van het kasteel, omdat hij dacht dat hij slechts op doorreis was.

'Ik zag de Sep, en ik dacht aan jou. Zo'n magische rivier, waaraan mijn kasteel staat. Het rivier-gebied is weer vrij van draken, maar ja, het is wel in de spiegel wereld. Ik blijf aan twee kanten, zoals dromen en ontwaken. Het kwaad kunnen we niet helemaal wegdenken, want we moeten nog wel wat te puzzelen hebben, en het zet ons aan om creatief te zijn. Ik ben blij met mijn kasteel. Elke dag ontdek ik weer nieuwe dingen. Wat komen we van diep, hè ?

Liefs,

Prins Jagerstouw'

'Saturnus, met je paarse sneeuw,

Die diepe slaap brengt telkens weer,

Twee sterren in een steen,

Met Sirius vormde jij een grote zee,

De zee van Eldemor, waarop de aarde slaapt,

De sluier van paarse sneeuw die over haar waakt,

De ruiter van Eldemor rijdt over de golven,
Totdat het roze ons allemaal doet ontwaken,
In de droom van de rode zee,
Golf na golf komt het,
Slag na slag,
Omdat het rode op ons wacht.'

Einde

Blauwstaartje

Blauwstaartje was een visje in een hele diepe oceaan. De visjes noemden hem blauwstaartje omdat hij bijna geheel wit was, alleen met een blauw staartje. Op de vissenschool kregen ze les van een oude grote blauwe vis. Als die vis boos werd dan kon je je maar beter verbergen, want dan blies hij met al zijn kracht het water naar je toe, en begon hij vreselijk met zijn vin en staart te klapperen. Blauwstaartje was altijd een beetje bang voor die grote blauwe vis, maar de andere visjes vonden hem maar een bangerd.

Ook kregen ze les van een zeeslang met blauwe en witte strepen, en als laatste van de blauwe zeester. Blauwstaartje vond geen van zijn onderwijzers aardig. Ze waren alledrie erg streng. Maar de visjes uit zijn klas vonden dat hij zich niet moest aanstellen.

Op een dag was het feest op school, en maakten ze met z'n allen een schoolreisje naar de oppervlakte van de oceaan. Hier was Blauwstaartje nog nooit geweest, en hij keek zijn ogen uit. In de verte zagen ze een schip met mensen erop. Blauwstaartje zou wel een mens willen zijn, want zij hadden benen. Blauwstaartje zou heel graag op het land willen wonen, maar de meester had altijd gezegd dat ze op het vaste land oorlog maakten. Op een dag vertelde de oude blauwe zeester een verhaal over een meisje van het vaste land die een vis wilde worden. Blauwstaartje vond het een droevig verhaal. Het meisje ging vaak naar de zee, omdat ze niet tegen het geruzie van mensen kon. Op een dag was ze het zo beu dat ze de zee inging, maar door een grote golf werd ze meegesleurd en verdronk.

Blauwstaartje moest altijd erg huilen als hij het verhaal hoorde. Blauwstaartje zou heel graag een mens met benen willen zijn. Dan zou hij misschien wat aan al dat geruzie kunnen doen, en dan hoefde er ook niemand meer weg te lopen om te verdrinken. Op een dag vertelde Blauwstaartje na de les aan de zeeslang met blauwe en witte strepen dat hij graag een mens zou willen worden. Hij vroeg de zeeslang om raad, want hij wist niet hoe hij dat kon worden.

'Jongen, doe maar niet zo dom, want mensen maken altijd ruzie,' zei de zeeslang. 'En bovendien zou ik niet weten hoe je mens zou moeten worden. Volgens mij is dat onmogelijk. Je moet gewoon je best blijven doen hier op school, om een keurig nette vis te worden. Haal al die verhaaltjes van je maar uit je hoofd. Dat is veel beter.'

Maar toen ging Blauwstaartje naar de blauwe zeester, en vertelde hem hetzelfde, dat hij graag een mens wilde worden. De blauwe zeester begon een beetje te brommen, en zei dat hij eigenlijk geen tijd had voor zulke onzin. 'Je bent niet voor niets een vis,' zei de zeester. 'Wat je bent moet je blijven, en trouwens zou ik niet weten hoe je een mens zou kunnen worden. Ik vind het maar een domme wens. Mensen zijn slecht en zijn geboren om oorlog te maken. Zet het maar zo snel mogelijk uit je hoofd, want van jouw plannen komt toch niets terecht.'

Teleurgesteld ging Blauwstaartje als laatste naar de grote blauwe vis, maar die werd direkt zo boos dat Blauwstaartje maar gauw weer vertrok. De volgende dag vertelde de blauwe vis in de les wat er was gebeurd, en begon Blauwstaartje nog eens extra uit te lachen. Ook de visjes van de klas begonnen Blauwstaartje uit te lachen. Na de les ging Blauwstaartje extra snel naar huis, omdat hij verder niet gepest wilde worden, maar de visjes van zijn klas volgden hem snel, en begonnen om zijn huisje heen te zwemmen. 'Ha, ha ha,' lachten ze, 'wat een dommerik. Hij wil mens worden !' Maar na een tijdje vertrokken de visjes weer.

Ook Blauwstaartje's moeder, een grote roze vis, kwam het te horen, en wilde eens diepgaand met haar zoontje praten. 'Zeg ik heb gehoord wat je wens is,' zei de moeder, 'en ik vind het heel dom van je. Je weet toch dat mensen niets anders doen dan oorlog maken ?'

Ja maar moeder, sprak Blauwstaartje, ik zou daar zo graag een eind aan willen maken, en ik zou graag eens op benen willen staan.

Ja jongen, zei de grote roze vis, mensen hebben prachtige benen, maar wij hebben nu eenmaal gewoon een staart en daar moeten we het mee doen. Toen vader thuis kwam en het verhaal hoorde kreeg hij het met Blauwstaartje te doen. 'Jongen, ik had vroeger dezelfde wens, alleen daar is helaas nooit iets van terecht gekomen,' zei vader.

'Maar hoe kan ik mens worden,' zei het visje.

Vader keek moeder aan, en moeder keek vader aan. 'Vertel het hem maar,' zei moeder. Toen sprak de vader : 'Jongen, dan moet je op zoek gaan naar het blauwe gesteente van de rog.'

Toen zei moeder : 'Vader heeft gelijk, maar daar kom je niet zo makkelijk. Niemand heeft het ooit gevonden.'

'Maar waar kan ik het vinden ?' vroeg Blauwstaartje.

Maar dat konden zijn vader en moeder niet vertellen. Diep in de nacht ging Blauwstaartje het huisje uit, en ging op zoek. Na heel lang zwemmen kwam hij uiteindelijk een rog tegen en vroeg naar het blauwe gesteente. ‘Oh verderop,’ zei de rog. Na een tijdje kwam Blauwstaartje nog een rog tegen en vroeg hetzelfde, en kreeg weer hetzelfde antwoord. Maar na dagen zwemmen had Blauwstaartje nog niets gevonden. Ten einde raad besloot Blauwstaartje weer naar de oppervlakte van de oceaan te gaan, om de mensen met hun schepen weer te bekijken. Misschien zou hij daar wel op een idee komen.

Toen hij bovenkwam was het erg druk op zee. Overal zag Blauwstaartje bootjes. Niemand had Blauwstaartje ooit over vissers verteld, en daarom kende hij het gevaar van de netten niet. Maar op één van de schepen zag Blauwstaartje iets fonkelen. Het leek wel op het blauwe gesteente waar zijn vader en moeder over hadden gesproken. Plotseling werd hij door een net meegetrokken. Blauwstaartje schrok verschrikkelijk, en al snel werd hij in een bak geworpen. Al snel kreeg Blauwstaartje het erg benauwd. In de verte op het dek zag hij het blauwe gesteente flonkeren en glinsteren. Het was prachtig, maar Blauwstaartje kon er niet bij. Hij had immers geen benen, en zwemmen kon hij hier niet. Hopeloos begon Blauwstaartje naar adem te happen. Twee mannen kwamen bij de bak en zagen Blauwstaartje liggen. ‘Kijk nou eens, wat een prachtige vis, bijna geheel wit met alleen een blauw staartje,’ zei één van de mannen en greep Blauwstaartje uit de bak.

‘Ja,’ zei de andere man, ‘hij is bijna net zo prachtig als het blauwe gesteente daar, en wees naar de fonkelende, bijna gloeiende stenen.’

‘Nou, ik vind de vis veel mooier dan jouw zeestenen,’ zei de man die Blauwstaartje had vastgegrepen. ‘Houd jij je edelstenen maar, ik heb de vis. Ik zag hem het eerst.’

Maar toen liep de andere man naar het blauwe edelgesteente toe, en bracht het naar de man met de vis toe. ‘Nou, we zullen ze eens naast elkaar houden en zien wie de prachtigste is.’

Toen hield de man de vis tegen het zeegesteente aan, en plotseling stond er een klein jongetje met een prachtig blauw pakje tussen hen in. Maar waar was de vis nu gebleven ? Ook de edelstenen waren verdwenen.

‘Zeg jongetje,’ zei één van de mannen verbaasd. ‘Heb jij soms de blauwstaart met de stenen weggepakt ?’

Maar het jongetje kon niet praten. De mannen stonden voor een raadsel. ‘Zeg, hoe komt dat joch hier eigenlijk ? Misschien is het een verstekeling,’ zei de andere man. ‘Laten we hem naar de kapitein brengen.’

En zo brachten de twee vissers de jongen naar de kapitein. De kapitein was heel aardig, en nam de jongen direkt onder zijn hoede. Niemand sprak verder nog over de blauwstaart en het blauwe gesteente. De kapitein leerde de jongen praten, en hoe je een schip moest besturen. Maar dat ging niet al te gemakkelijk. Het jongetje kon de klanken niet uitspreken.

Toen het schip aan wal kwam nam de kapitein de jongen mee naar huis, en zijn vrouw was direkt erg liefdevol naar de jongen. De vrouw had altijd al graag kinderen willen krijgen, maar die wens werd nooit vervuld. Maar op school werd de jongen geplaagd, omdat hij een spraakgebrek had. Steeds meer begon de jongen terug te verlangen naar de zee, en op een dag nam de kapitein hem mee. Ze zouden een hele grote reis gaan maken met het schip. Maar op een dag had de jongen een heel sterk verlangen om over de reling te springen, en toen hij het water raakte veranderde hij direkt weer in een vis. Het visje was heel opgewonden over wat hij allemaal had meegemaakt, en zwom zo snel hij kon naar het huisje van zijn ouders. Maar vader en moeder waren helemaal niet blij toen het visje het verhaal vertelde. Zijn vader en moeder hadden destijds het verhaal over het blauwe gesteente van de rog verzonnen om hem niet teleur te stellen. Nu ze hoorden dat het visje echt mens was geworden door de blauwe zeestenen wisten ze zich geen raad.

Maar op de vissenschool geloofden ze hem niet, en lachten ze hem uit. De grote blauwe vis die hen onderwees werd zelfs heel erg boos op het visje, en sloot hem voor straf op in de kelder van de school. In de kelder was ook een ander visje opgesloten, een visje uit een andere klas.

Hoe ben jij hier terecht gekomen ? vroeg Blauwstaartje. Maar het andere visje zei niets, en was heel stil. ‘Nou, als je niet wil praten is ook goed hoor,’ zei Blauwstaartje. Toen vertelde Blauwstaartje wat hij allemaal had meegemaakt. Het andere visje begon na een tijdje een beetje te lachen, al was het in Blauwstaartje’s ogen maar een glimlach.

Na een tijdje kwam de oude blauwe zeester om de kelderdeur open te maken. ‘Jullie straf zit erop,’ zei hij. Het andere visje vloog weg zo hard als ze kon, en Blauwstaartje bleef een beetje teleurgesteld achter. Hij had gehoopt dat ze vriendjes zouden worden. Langzaam zwom hij over de trap naar boven, en ging weer naar de les. Blauwstaartje besloot verder maar zijn mond te houden. Nu hadden ze les van de zeeslang. Maar de zeeslang zei dat hij het hele verhaal gehoord had, en vertelde het nog eens, tot grote afschuw van Blauwstaartje, want weer begonnen de visjes van zijn klas hem uit te lachen. Na de les kwam hij op de schoolgang het visje van de andere klas tegen waarmee hij samen in de kelder zat. Ze glimlachte even, maar zei verder niets.

Gek genoeg begon Blauwstaartje weer naar het vaste land te verlangen. Zou hij nu weer eerst blauw zeegesteente van de rog moeten vinden, of zou hij direkt een jongen worden als hij uit het water zou komen ? Opgewonden en nieuwsgierig naar wat er zou gebeuren zwom Blauwstaartje zo snel als hij kon richting de oppervlakte van de oceaan. Maar hier werd hij door een grote vis gegrepen, en flink verwond. Al bloedend zwom Blauwstaartje naar de kant, en kwam op het strand terecht, waar hij direkt veranderde in een jongen met een blauw pakje. Maar nog steeds bloedde hij hevig. De jongen stond op, en rende naar het huis van de kapitein. De kapitein was er niet, maar de vrouw van de kapitein verzorgde de wond liefdevol. Toen de kapitein thuiskwam was deze blij de jongen te zien. ‘We dachten dat je verdronken was,’ zei de kapitein. ‘Wat is er gebeurd ?’

En toen vertelde de jongen het hele verhaal, maar de kapitein begon er hartelijk om te lachen, en kon het niet geloven. De vrouw zei niets.

Even later nam de kapitein de jongen mee naar het water om te kijken of het echt waar was. Maar toen de jongen in het water sprong gebeurde er niets. De jongen bleef gewoon een jongen. Blauwstaartje besefte toen dat hij nooit meer terugkon naar de dieptes van de oceaan. ‘Zie jongen, je hebt het gewoon maar gedroomd,’ sprak de kapitein, en legde toen zijn arm om de jongen heen, en samen liepen ze naar huis. Wel hebben ze de jongen altijd Blauwstaart genoemd.

De Paddenkoningin

Eens woonde er een meisje bij een arm gezin. Ze vonden het meisje eens in het bos, en namen het onder hun hoede, maar ze waren erg arm. Ze noemden het meisje Grunpuhlster, omdat ze ogen had als groene poelen. Op een dag hadden ze zoveel honger dat ze het meisje verkochten aan een jager op doorreis. Hij nam het meisje mee naar zijn boshuis waar ze in het huishouden moest werken. Ze kon alles zo goed schoonmaken, dat alles een groen glimmend laagje kreeg, en daarom noemde ook de jager haar Grunpuhlster, en natuurlijk omdat ze zulke mooie ogen had als groene poelen.

Op een dag moest de jager weer weg op reis voor een lange tijd. Niet lang daarna kwam er een bedelaar die bij Grunpuhlster aanklopte. Grunpuhlster deed open, en nam de man zorgzaam naar binnen. Ze gaf hem goed te eten en een slaapplaats.

Toen de volgende ochtend de man naar beneden kwam keek hij Grunpuhlster erg dankbaar aan. ‘Omdat je zo zorgzaam en liefdevol naar mij bent geweest,’ sprak de man, ‘zal er bij alles wat je spreekt een groene edelsteen uit je mond vallen.’ Het meisje schrok, want zo’n geschenk had ze niet verwacht. Ze durfde haar mond niet open te doen, maar knikte dankbaar en liefdevol naar de man, die ineens in het niets verdween.

Toen de jager thuiskwam durfde ze niet te spreken, maar toen de jager dat in de gaten kreeg, en veel vragen begon te stellen, deed ze uiteindelijk haar mond open, en er vielen groene edelstenen op de grond. De jager was erg verrukt. Het meisje vertelde hem alles. De jager was erg trots op haar, en sindsdien hoefde ze niet meer in het huishouden te werken.

Op een dag nam de jager haar mee naar de koning van het land. De koning was zo onder de indruk dat hij haar liet trouwen met zijn zoon, maar ze was niet gelukkig. Ze dacht nog steeds aan het arme gezin waar ze vandaan kwam. Na enige jaren ging ze samen met haar prins naar het arme gezin toe, en ze sprak zoveel, en er rolden zoveel groene edelstenen uit haar mond, dat ze nooit meer arm hoefden te zijn.

Maar op een dag verdwaalde het meisje weer in het bos. Na een lange tijd wandelen kwam ze bij een huisje aan waar een kabouter voor stond. ‘Heus, je hoeft hier niet te werken, maar kom een nachtje logeren, want stormen zal het huizenhoog, hoei.’ Het meisje luisterde maar naar het vreemde mannetje, want ze wilde niet door de storm meegenomen worden. Toen ze de volgende ochtend wakker werd was het mannetje in geen velden of wegen te bekennen. Ze kon het niet laten om het huisje wat schoon te maken, want het was er zo stoffig. En alles wat ze schoonmaakte kreeg een groen glimmend laagje. Toen het mannetje die avond thuiskwam was hij erg onder de indruk. ‘Blijf nog maar een nachtje slapen,’ zei het mannetje, ‘want vannacht gaat het weer stormen.’

De volgende dag kwam er een bedelaar aan de deur. Het meisje deed direkt open, en gaf de arme man wat te eten. Ook gaf zij hem een bed. Na een tijdje kwam de man naar beneden, en het meisje sprak veel met hem, terwijl er groene edelstenen uit haar mond vielen. De man vulde zijn zakken ermee, en zei : ‘Pikkel, taddel, tad, elke keer dat je zult spreken komt er uit je mond een pad.’ Het meisje schrok, en de man vertrok snel met zijn zakken vol groene edelstenen.

Toen de kabouter die avond terugkwam en het meisje tot hem sprak rolden er allemaal padden uit haar mond. Het mannetje schrok heel erg en riep : ‘Heb je hier soms tovenaars binnengelaten ? Het woud zit vol met boze tovenaars. Voor straf moet je vannacht buitenslapen.’

Het meisje begon erg hard te huilen, maar het mannetje was niet over te halen, hoe het meisje ook smeekte. Die nacht zwierf ze door de bossen en kwam er een grote storm die haar opnam. Na een lange tijd werd ze wakker in een grote poel. Ze zat helemaal onder de modder, en die ochtend maakte ze een lange wandeling door het bos in de hoop weer de weg terug te vinden. Na een lange tijd vond ze de weg terug. Toen ze bij het kasteel van de prins kwam wilde niemand haar binnen laten, omdat ze onder de modder zat, en telkens wanneer ze sprak kwamen er padden uit haar mond.

En zo sliep ze die nacht weer buiten, en een grote storm nam haar mee, verder weg dan ooit. Ze werd tot helemaal achter de poel geslingerd. Achter de poel stond een heel oud en arm huisje, en een oude vrouw hing daar de was op die prachtig wit was. De was glinsterde in het maanlicht. ‘Kom binnen, arm kind,’ zei de vrouw, ‘want als de storm je pakt, dan neemt hij je mee. Het kan hier nogal waaien.’ Het meisje durfde haar mond niet open te doen, en ging met de vrouw naar binnen. Binnen was het erg stoffig, en toen de vrouw weer naar buiten ging, besloot het meisje wat schoon te maken, en alles werd glimmend groen. Toen de vrouw weer binnen kwam en het glimmende groen zag begon ze te lachen en zei : ‘Pikkel, taddel, tuid, alles wat je aanraakt zal veranderen in paddenhuid.’ Het meisje rende huilend naar buiten, en werd door de storm gegrepen.

De storm bracht haar naar het land van de reuzenpadden. De reuzenpadden pakten haar en brachten haar tot hun koning. De paddenkoning vertelde haar dat spoedig alles overstroomd zou worden door de poel. Het meisje wilde naar huis, maar de paddenkoning liet haar niet gaan. Ze moest in het paleis werken, en alles wat ze aanraakte veranderde in paddenhuid. Ook kwamen bij alles wat ze sprak padden uit haar mond. Het meisje was ten einde raad. Op een dag vroeg de paddenkoning of zij zijn koningin wilde worden, maar het meisje vertelde dat zij al prinses was in een ander koninkrijk, en daar koningin zou worden. De paddenkoning werd erg kwaad, en wilde dat koninkrijk wel bezoeken. Het meisje vertelde hem dat het het land achter de storm was.

En zo gingen op een dag de paddenkoning en zijn soldaten naar het land waar het meisje vandaan kwam, maar zij keerden niet meer terug. De achtergebleven reuzenpadden kroonden toen het meisje als hun koningin. Maar op een dag begonnen alle poelen los te komen, en begonnen alles weg te spoelen. De koningin rende naar haar hoogste toren, en zag hoe de poel de reuzenpadden meesleurde naar het land waar zij vandaan kwam. De poel begon steeds hoger te steigen en vanuit het hoogste torenraampje klom de koningin op het dak van de toren, tot aan de punt. Help, help, riep de koningin. In de verte zag zij een bootje aankomen met daarin de kabouter die haar weggezonden had. De kabouter zag haar ook, maar wilde haar niet meenemen. Even later zag ze een bootje aankomen met de oude vrouw die haar had uitgelachen en had betoverd. Ook de oude vrouw ging haar voorbij. Het puntje van de toren was nu ook in paddenhuid verandert. En ten einde raad begon de koningin te praten en te praten, en zoveel padden kwamen er uit haar mond dat ze een boot begonnen te vormen waar het meisje in kon stappen. Het meisje bleef praten en praten zoals ze nog nooit gepraat had, en even later was ze in een flinke boot op de woeste hoge golven. Nog nooit had ze zo'n woeste zee gezien.

Na een tijdje kwam er een reusachtige hand tevoorschijn vanuit de donkere lucht die haar als een bliksemschicht oppakte. In een hoge toren in de wolken, geheel gemaakt van paddenhuid kwam ze terecht, en kwam ze oog in oog te staan met de bedelaar die haar eens de gave had gegeven dat alles wat ze sprak in edelstenen veranderde. De bedelaar keek haar vriendelijk aan. 'Zo zie je maar weer hoe een gave je in de problemen kan helpen,' sprak de bedelaar. 'Maar nu, omdat je zo getrouw bent gebleven : wees mijn koningin.' En de bedelaar bracht haar tot een rijk geheel gebouwd van groene edelstenen, en deze edelstenen waren de prachtigste die ze ooit had gezien. En ze leefden nog lang en gelukkig.

Het Rozenweefstertje

Eens leefde er een rozenweefster in het bos met haar drie zonen. Ze had een toverspinnenwiel waarmee ze rozen kon weven. Deze rozen waren heel bijzonder, en de allerrijksten van het land kwamen vaak bij haar om de rozen te kopen. Maar toch was het gezin arm, omdat zij de goudstukken en zilverstukken die ze ervoor kreeg altijd wegwierp in de bosrivier achter haar huisje. In deze rivier leefden kikkerachtige beesten die een oude poort achter de rivier bewaakten. Niemand kon ooit over die rivier komen, want een ieder die een poging waagde werd door de kikkerachtige beesten opgeslokt. De kikkerachtige beesten hadden het rozenweefstertje laten weten dat zij al haar geld aan hen moest schenken, anders zouden ze haar en haar zonen komen verscheuren. Zij vraten het geld.

De oude poort die ze bewaakten zou naar een geheimzinnig land leiden dat niemand kende. Eens in de zoveel jaren zou er een wachter komen, een veerman, die over de rivier zou komen met een boot, om te kijken of hij iemand zou kunnen meenemen tot achter de poort. Toen het bijna zover was vertelde het rozenweefstertje dit aan haar zonen. Ze sprak dat de wachter bij maanlicht zou komen. Ze wees één van haar zonen aan, en sprak dat als hij in de nacht geluid zou horen als een ruisende storm, dan zou hij naar buiten moeten gaan met het toverspinnenwiel, en bedekt met enige van de rozen, om dan tot de veerman te zeggen : ‘Neem mij mee, ik ben een man van stand,’ en hem dan als geschenk het toverspinnenwiel te geven.

Toen het zover was ging de eerste zoon naar buiten, nadat hij zich met enige rozen had bedekt, en het toverspinnenwiel had gepakt. De veerman keek hem aan, en zei : ‘Stap in. Inderdaad ben jij een man van stand. Ik zal je naar het geheimzinnig land achter de oude poort brengen.’

De volgende ochtend vroeg het rozenweefstertje aan haar drie zonen wat er was gebeurd. De eerste zoon sprak : ‘Ik heb inderdaad het toverspinnenwiel aan de wachter gegeven, zoals u vroeg. Toen ik in het geheimzinnig land kwam was daar een veld met toverbloemen. Maar ver kwam ik niet. Ik viel in slaap, en toen ik wakker werd was ik weer terug in mijn eigen bed.’ Het rozenweefstertje was erg teleurgesteld, en weer gingen er enkele jaren voorbij. Het toverspinnenwiel had zij niet meer. Toen de komst van de veerman weer naderbij kwam wees ze nu haar tweede zoon aan, en sprak dat als de veerman zou komen hij met hem mee moest gaan. De tweede zoon deed wat hem gevraagd werd, en in de nacht bij het maanlicht, toen er geruis was als een storm stond de jongen op en ging naar buiten. Maar de veerman sprak : ‘Maar een man van stand ben je niet. Waar zijn de rozen waarmee je je moest bedekken, en waar is mijn geschenk ? Ga dan eerst naar de kastelen der koningen om daar wat bijzondere rozen te nemen, en steel bovendien hun grootste schat. Dan zal ik de volgende nacht weer komen.’

De volgende dag deed de jongen wat hem gevraagd was, maar in het kasteel van de koning werd hij betrapt, en werd in een kerker gegooid. Vanaf nu moest hij onder de grond werken, zoals elke dief die gepakt werd. Elke dag werd hij uit zijn kerker gehaald, om lange reizen onder de grond te maken. De dieven moesten op zoek gaan naar bijzondere stenen.

Het rozenweefstertje was erg teleurgesteld dat haar zoon niet meer terugkwam, en zei toen tot haar derde zoon : ‘Wacht jij nu tot de veerman terugkomt om je broer te halen, en zorg ervoor dat je wat van mijn klederen draagt, en schenk hem onze gouden klok.' De derde zoon deed wat hem gevraagd werd.

De volgende dag vroeg het rozenweefstertje aan haar derde zoon wat er was gebeurt. De jongen sprak dat de veerman hem meenam tot het geheimzinnig land. Hij ging door een veld van toverbloemen, maar werd onwel en viel in slaap. Even later werd hij weer wakker, en ging verder in het veld van toverbloemen, en kwam toen bij een rivier van spinnendraad. De jongen zag hier geen veerman, maar er zwom wel een grote vis, en die sprak : 'Breng me eerst wat parelmoer, van je rijke broer, die voor de koning werkt, dan kan ik je naar de overkant van de rivier brengen.' Toen werd de jongen gestoken door een spin, en viel in een diepe slaap. De volgende ochtend was hij weer terug in zijn eigen bed.

'Nu,' zei het rozenweefstertje, 'je weet wat je te doen staat. Ga naar het kasteel van de koning, en vraag daar om je broer voor wat parelmoer.' De jongen deed wat hem gezegd werd, en vertrok naar het kasteel. Toen hij bij de kerker van zijn broer aankwam zag hij daar de wonderlijkste stenen, en wat parelmoer. Zijn broer was er niet, want die moest werken onder de grond. De jongen nam één steen mee, voor de veerman, en wat parelmoer voor de vis, en vertrok weer naar huis. Maar de veerman kwam niet meer. Ze moesten wachten totdat hij naar enige jaren weer terug zou komen. Het rozenweefstertje was diep teleurgesteld, en ook de jongen. Maar er zat niets anders op dan te wachten.

Maar op een nacht werd de jongen wakker van wat spartelend geluid. De jongen stond op en ging naar buiten. Daar bij de rivier zag hij de vis van de rivier van spinnendraad. 'Heb je het parelmoer gevonden ?' vroeg de vis. De jongen knikte blij, en rende naar binnen om het parelmoer te halen. De vis bracht hem helemaal over de rivier tot aan de oude poort. Nu moest de jongen de vis dragen tot aan de rivier van spinnendraad. Gelukkig viel de jongen niet in slaap. Daarna bracht de vis de jongen over de rivier van spinnendraad.

De volgende dag wilde het rozenweefstertje haar zonen wekken, maar ze had nog maar één zoon over. Het parelmoer was verdwenen, en zo ging ook de laatst overgebleven zoon wat parelmoer halen in de kerker van zijn broer. Zo gingen er weer enige jaren voorbij, totdat de veerman terugkwam. De jongen droeg wat klederen van zijn moeder en schonk de veerman een steen van de kerker van zijn broer. Toen hij aankwam bij de rivier van spinnendraad en de vis zag gaf hij wat parelmoer aan de vis, en de vis bracht hem naar de overkant. Bij een boom vond hij het gouden toverspinnenwiel van zijn moeder terug, en het toverspinnenwiel sprak : 'Ik ben eindelijk terug in het land waar ik vandaan kom, maar nog steeds betoverd ben ik. Vlug, neem mij op, en draag mij verder in dit land. De jongen raapte het toverspinnenwiel van zijn moeder op, en vroeg waar zijn broer was. 'Daar, achter een rivier dieper in het land,' sprak het toverspinnenwiel. Na een tijdje lopen kwamen ze aan bij een volgende rivier. Deze rivier was geheel van rozendraad. 'Hoe kom ik over deze rivier ?' vroeg de jongen.

'Werp mij erin,' zei het toverspinnenwiel van zijn moeder. De jongen deed wat hem gezegd werd, en er ontstond een gouden brug over de rivier, als een regenboog. Zo kwam de jongen over de rivier. Toen de jongen aan de overkant was gekomen verdween de brug, en een lichtende roze gestalte kwam uit de rivier omhoog. Maar de gestalte was als een standbeeld, en kon zich niet goed bewegen. ‘Vlug,’ sprak de gestalte, ‘de betovering is nog niet verbroken. Zoek nu je broer.’ En toen zakte de gestalte weer terug in de rivier.

Omdat geen van haar zonen terugkeerde besloot het rozenweefstertje zelf de eerstvolgende keer met de veerman mee te gaan. Ze kreeg wat parelmoer en een steen mee vanuit de kerker van haar zoon, maar ook na vele jaren kwam de veerman niet opdagen, en het rozenweefstertje was ten einde raad. Ze mocht haar zoon in de kerker niet spreken, maar toen ze de koning vertelde dat ze vroeger rozen voor hem weefde mocht ze haar zoon even zien. De zoon was erg blij haar te zien, en vertelde haar dat hij ergens diep onder de grond een brug had gevonden naar een toverwereld. Hij vertelde haar dat hij nooit ver kon komen, want in een veld van toverbloemen viel hij telkens in slaap. Maar eens kwam hij daar een lichtende roze gestalte tegen die tot hem sprak dat als hij zijn moeder zou meenemen, dan zou de gestalte hem wel door het veld heen kunnen brengen. En zo gebeurde het. Het rozenweefsterje ging met haar zoon mee, en bij het veld van toverbloemen aangekomen bracht de gestalte hen erdoorheen. ‘Vlug,’ zei de gestalte, ‘spring in de rivier van spinnendraad.’ Het rozenweefstertje en haar zoon deden wat hen gezegd werd.

In de dieptes van de rivier ging alles over in rozendraad, en plotseling zwom er ook een andere vrouw naast hen. ‘Kom,’ zei de vrouw, ‘in de dieptes is een plaats waar al jullie geldstukken terecht zijn gekomen die jullie vroeger in de rivier moesten werpen.’ En ze kwamen tot een kelder diep in de rivier, waar alles vollag met schatten. Hier vond het rozenweefstertje ook haar andere zonen terug, en ze leefden in rijkdom voor de rest van hun leven.

Het Wonderpaard

Er was eens een meisje dat altijd hele nare karweitjes moest doen van haar stiefmoeder. Haar echte moeder was al heel lang geleden overleden, en die had ze eigenlijk nooit gekend. Vaak wilde ze dat haar echte moeder nog zou leven. Veel tijd om te slapen kreeg ze niet, en ze moest altijd haastig eten, want er was veel werk te doen. Op een dag was het meisje het zo beu, en ze was zo moe dat ze het bos inrende. Al gauw verdwaalde ze, en ze was zelfs een beetje bij dat ze verdwaald was, want eigenlijk wilde ze helemaal niet meer naar huis.

Na een tijdje lopen kwam ze aan bij een tafeltje. Dat was erg vreemd zo in het bos. Het tafeltje was mooi versierd met wat randjes, en op de tafel stond een bak met brood. Het meisje ging op één van de hoge stoelen zitten, en begon van het brood te eten. Na een tijdje kwamen er wat haasjes aan, en een kikker. De haasjes waren in verschillende kleuren. Eén haasje was roze, een andere paars en weer een andere was groen. Naast het meisje zat een wat grotere witte haas.

'Wie moet er wat thee ?' riep één van de haasjes.

'Nou, ik lust wel wat thee,' zei het meisje.

'Nee, jij niet,' zei het haasje. Het was het groene haasje.

'En waarom niet ?' vroeg het meisje.

'Omdat jij hier pas nieuw bent,' zei het groene haasje.

'Ach, let maar niet op hem,' zei het roze haasje, 'hij doet wel vaker vervelend, en het is een mopperpot, net als het paarse haasje.' Ook het paarse haasje begon wat te brommen, maar niemand kon het verstaan. Het paarse haasje keek het meisje al een hele tijd erg boos aan. Even later schonk het roze haasje wat thee in voor het meisje, en zei : 'Als je een keer bij mij op bezoek komt, dan krijg je roze thee of elventhee.' Het meisje keek het roze haasje vriendelijk aan, alsof ze wilde zeggen : 'Ja, graag.'

'Dank u wel,' zei ze tegen het roze haasje.

'Oh, je mag ook wel bij me blijven logeren, hoor, dat is nog leuker dan bezoek, en dan kunnen we ook de andere haasjes eens samen bezoeken,' zei het roze haasje.

Dat leek het meisje wel leuk.

Maar toen zei het paarse haasje : 'Niemand komt ooit bij mij op bezoek. Ik woon veel te ver weg, helemaal achter de bergen bij de zee.'

'Oh, maar ik heb een wonderpaard,' zei het roze haasje, 'we komen je vast wel een keer opzoeken.'

'Oh ja ?' zei het meisje, 'oh ik ben dol op paarden.' Het paarse haasje keek even niet meer zo boos naar het meisje.

'En ik dan ?' zei het groene haasje. 'Ik woon over de zee. Kan dat wonderpaard daar ook komen ?'

'Ja hoor,' zei het roze haasje vriendelijk. Het witte haasje dat iets groter was had al een hele tijd niets gezegd, en huppelde plotseling weg. Na een tijdje kwam het wonderpaard eraan. Het wonderpaard had vleugels en kon vliegen. 'Stap er maar op,' zei het roze haasje, 'dan gaan we naar mijn torenkamertje, heel hoog in het paleis van de koning.'

'De koning ?' vroeg het meisje. 'Maar welke koning ?'

'Oh, koning Griebelegrutjes,' zei het roze haasje.

'Wie is dat nu dan weer ?' vroeg het meisje.

'Nou, de koning van het hazenland,' zei het roze haasje, 'en tegelijk de opperkok van de elventhee. Hij moet de thee altijd eerst proeven voordat het opgediend mag worden.'

'Oh,' zei het meisje, 'dat wist ik niet.'

'Maar wat doet die kikker hier dan ?' vroeg het meisje weer.

‘Oh, de kikker zorgt altijd voor de tafels,’ zei het roze haasje. Toen ze beiden op het paard zaten steeg het op en bracht hen helemaal tot in het hoogste torentje van het koninklijk paleis. Dat was wel even een eindje vliegen, maar hier hadden ze dan een prachtig uitzicht over het land. Ze konden vanaf hier de bergen zien, en zelfs de achterliggende duinen en de zee. Ook konden ze hiervandaan goed het bos bezichtigen.

Er waren een paar torenkamertjes, en in één kamertje mocht het meisje logeren. In een ander kamertje dronken ze samen thee, roze thee, en elf-thee. Het meisje vond de thee erg lekker, vooral de elf-thee. Door de trap naar beneden te gaan, kon het meisje ook bij de koning op bezoek, en een verdieping lager was de keuken. De koning zelf ging niet zo vaak naar de keuken. Voornamelijk hield hij zich bezig met het regeren van het land. Maar soms moest hij toch echt naar de keuken om de nieuwe soorten elf-thee te proeven. Telkens kwamen er weer nieuwe soorten bij.

Op een dag gingen ze met het wonderpaard naar het land van otters en hermelijnen. Dat was een groot land met bossen en rivieren. In het land van otters en hermelijnen stond ergens een hele grote elventafel, waar volop elventhee werd gedronken. Nog nooit had het meisje zoveel otters en hermelijnen bij elkaar gezien, en ze waren allemaal even vriendelijk. Er waren hier zoveel soorten elventhee waar zelfs de koning niets van wist. Ze hadden hier een keuken die wel duizendmaal groter was dan de keuken van de koning. Eén zaal van de keuken was als een kerkzaal. Zo’n grote keuken had het meisje nog nooit gezien. Overal liepen bedienden rond met grote schalen. Heel in de verte zat een lange witte haas op een stoel met hele lange poten. De witte haas had het overzicht over de zaal. Na een tijdje werd er een enorm lange tafel naar binnen geschoven, en de bedienden begonnen de schalen op de tafel te zetten. Toen de schalen geopend werden schrok het meisje heel erg, want er kwam zoveel rook vanaf dat het vuur leek. Na een tijdje zag het meisje dat het van binnen schelpen waren. Maar niemand at van de schalen. Het meisje vroeg zich af waarom er niet werd gegeten. Maar na een tijdje liep het wonderpaard naar voren en begon van schaal na schaal te eten. Alle bedienden die aan de zijkant stonden klapten in hun handen. Het roze haasje glimlachte. ‘Dat doen ze altijd als het wonderpaard hier is. Ze zijn dol op hem.’

Na een tijdje kwamen er ook andere paarden binnen die van de schalen begonnen te eten. Toen alles was opgegeten kwam er een kikker binnen die de tafels begon op te ruimen. En even later haalden de bedienden de lange tafels weer weg.

‘Zo, kies maar een paard uit,’ zei het roze haasje, ‘dan gaan we een stukje wandelen. Het wonderpaard moet nu rusten.’ Het meisje koos een wit paard met vlekjes uit en wat roze strikjes, en ook het roze haasje koos een paard uit, en toen gingen ze een stukje paardrijden door het bos van het land van otters en hermelijnen.

Ze kwamen langs vele huisjes waar boeren en boerinnen woonden met heel veel vee, zoals paarden, koeien, varkens, geiten en nog veel meer. Na een tijdje waren ze zo ver gekomen, en om wat bergen heen gegaan, dat het roze haasje vond dat ze best wel even op bezoek konden gaan bij de paarse haas aan zee. De paarse haas woonde in een woonboot, aan een riviertje dat in de zee uitliep. Alles was hier erg klein, en na een tijdje kreeg het meisje het erg benauwd. ‘Dat je hier kunt wonen,’ zei het meisje. Maar dat schoot bij het paarse haasje in het verkeerde keelgat. ‘Nou, dan kom je toch gewoon niet ?’ riep het paarse haasje boos. Niet lang daarna stonden het meisje en het roze haasje op straat. Het paarse haasje had hen eruit gezet. Maar het roze haasje klopte weer op het deurtje van de woonboot en riep toen door het raampje : ‘Ach, zus, laten we nu geen ruzie maken. Laten we gewoon wat spelletjes doen. Kaarten ofzo.’ Na een lange tijd deed het paarse haasje het raampje eindelijk open, en zei slaperig : ‘huh ? Oh ik ben vast in slaap gevallen. Ja, laten we dan maar een spelletje doen.’

Maar het spelletje liep helemaal verkeerd af. Het paarse haasje verloor telkens elk spelletje kaart, en begon steeds meer te mopperen. Ook toen ze wat bordspelletjes gingen spelen werd het er niet beter op, en na een tijdje gooide het paarse haasje het speelbord boos om, terwijl alle pionnetjes op de grond vielen.

‘Ach zus,’ zei het roze haasje, ‘het is toch maar een spelletje ?’

‘Spelletje, spelletje ?’ zei het paarse haasje. ‘Ik verlies telkens. Dat noem ik geen spelletje.’ Maar na een tijdje viel het paarse haasje weer in slaap.

Het was maar een klein stukje lopen naar de zee, en het roze haasje en het meisje besloten nog even wat te gaan zwemmen, maar een grote golf nam hen mee, en al gauw waren ze op de open zee. De golf nam hen zo ver mee, dat ze uiteindelijk maar besloten door te zwemmen naar het groene haasje dat achter de zee woonde. Maar het leek wel alsof ze er nooit kwamen, en na een tijdje begonnen ze allebei erg moe en duizelig te worden. Het meisje begon al weg te zakken, en niet lang daarna het roze haasje ook. Maar ineens voelden ze wat onder hen komen. Het was het wonderpaard, en toen ze op z’n rug zaten steeg hij op uit het water. Snel nam hij hen mee naar de overkant waar het groene haasje woonde, maar toen ze bij zijn huisje kwamen was hij er niet. Toen besloten ze maar naar het bos te gaan. In het bos stond een hele grote draaimolen. En ja hoor, daar was het groene haasje aan het spelen. Achter de draaimolen stond een stal met een heleboel wonderpaarden.

‘Waarom heb je me dat nooit verteld dat je hier zoveel wonderpaarden hebt ?’ vroeg het roze haasje.

‘Gewoon,’ zei het groene haasje, ‘omdat je er nooit naar gevraagd hebt.’ Het meisje keek haar ogen uit, en omdat ze met z’n drieen zo’n mooie dag beleefden mocht het meisje een wonderpaard helemaal voor haarzelf uitkiezen.

Het Meisje Dat Van Glas Was

Er was eens een meisje dat niet gelukkig was. Ze had problemen thuis, en op een dag besloot ze weg te rennen. Maar na niet al te lange tijd verdwaalde ze in het bos. Het meisje vond dat helemaal niet erg, want ze wilde nooit meer terug naar huis. Maar toen het donker begon te worden werd het meisje steeds banger. Dit wilde ze ook niet. En wat als er een roofdier op haar af zou komen ? Het meisje begon om hulp te roepen en hard te huilen, maar niemand hoorde haar. Of toch ? In de verte zag ze een klein lichtje, en al snel stond er een klein mannetje naast haar met een lantaarntje. 'Ach,' zei het meisje, 'zou u me kunnen helpen ? Ik ben van huis weggelopen, maar nu ben ik bang voor de roofdieren. Ik wilde wel dat ik van glas was.' En floep, ineens was het meisje van glas, en het mannetje was alweer verdwenen.

Het meisje was het mannetje erg dankbaar, want zo zouden de roofdieren haar niet kunnen verslinden, maar na een tijdje begon het meisje te merken dat ze maar moeilijk kon bewegen. Strompelend zocht ze naar een onderkomen, maar vond niets. Het bos was groot, en waar moest ze naartoe ? Na een lange koude nacht wilde ze niets liever dan weer naar huis te gaan, en weer gewoon een meisje te zijn. Maar van glas was ze, en verdwaald.

Na een tijdje kwam er een vlinder op de schouder van het huilende meisje zitten. Na een tijdje begon de schouder pijn te doen, en het meisje probeerde de vlinder weg te jagen. 'Ik weet waar je last van hebt,' zei de vlinder, 'maar je hebt er zelf voor gekozen. Het is moeilijk een glazen meisje te zijn, want alhoewel de roofdieren je niet zullen verslinden, zul je toch ongelukkig zijn, en vreemde pijnen hebben, de pijn van glas.'

'Ja,' zei het meisje, 'ik heb het erg koud, en het voelt pijnlijk aan als je op mijn schouder zit. Dan is het alsof er iemand hard op het raam tikt. Ach, lieve vlinder, ik zou zo graag weer een gewoon meisje willen zijn.'

'Dan moet je naar de koning,' zei de vlinder met een zware stem. 'De koning woont in het woud, op een hoge boom.' De vlinder wees de boom aan, en het meisje begon te klimmen. Dat ging heel moeizaam omdat ze van glas was. Na een lange tijd kwam ze eindelijk bij de top. Het was een hoge boom, hoger dan ze ooit had gezien. De koning was heel aardig, en had vleugels. Het was een soort vogel, en hij zou het meisje brengen naar het kraaiennest. Gelukkig was het een grote vogel, en hij nam al gauw het meisje van glas op zijn rug. Ze moesten wel even een tijdje vliegen voordat ze in het kraaiennest konden komen.

Toen de kraai het meisje zag begon hij te lachen. 'Wat is dat nou voor een raar meisje ?' zei hij. 'Zoiets heb ik nog nooit gezien.' En na een tijdje lag hij bijna dubbel van het lachen.

'Kun je haar helpen ?' vroeg de koning. 'Ze wil graag weer een gewoon meisje zijn, en ze wil terug naar huis.' Toen kwam de kraai wat dichterbij, en begon op het glas te tikken. Dat deed erg pijn, en plotseling begon hij heel hard te tikken, en het glas begon te barsten en te brokkelen. Het meisje schrok zo erg dat ze uit het kraaiennest viel, en in de bospoel terechtkwam. Het meisje begon te rennen en te rennen. Dit wilde ze niet. Het deed pijn. Na een lange tijd kwam ze aan bij een huisje waar een wolf woonde. Toen de wolf haar zag begon hij te lachen. ‘Als je van vlees en bloed was, zou ik je opeten,’ zei de wolf.

‘Kunt u mij alstublieft helpen,’ zei het meisje. ‘Ik zou zo graag weer een gewoon meisje willen zijn, en ik wil weer naar huis.’ De wolf kwam wat dichterbij, en sprak : ‘Ik kan je wel naar de raaf brengen, als je dat wil. Die kan toveren.’

‘Nou, graag, meneer,’ zei het meisje. En zo bracht de wolf het meisje naar het huisje van de raaf. De raaf was erg blij het meisje te zien. ‘Zeg meisje,’ zei de raaf, ‘er is een kaboutervolk wat jou graag als koningin zou willen hebben. Zo vaak worden ze lastiggevallen door roofdieren, en altijd als ze een nieuwe koningin of koning hebben gekozen, dan wordt die ook binnen de kortste keren door wilde dieren opgegeten. Daarom zeiden ze eens : ‘We zouden wel een koning of koningin van glas willen hebben.’ En kijk eens : Jouw glas is zo scherp dat je er de roofdieren mee weg zou kunnen jagen.’

‘Ja maar waar woont dat volk dan ?’ vroeg het meisje. ‘Ik zou zo graag weer een normaal meisje willen zijn, en naar huis kunnen gaan. Kan dat ?’

‘Oh, maar meisje,’ zei de raaf. ‘Daar vraag je me wat. Ik weet niet of dat wel kan.’

‘Maar de wolf zei dat u een tovenaar was,’ zei het meisje teleurgesteld.

‘Een tovenaar ?’ vroeg de raaf. En toen begon de raaf te lachen. ‘Nee,’ zei de raaf. ‘Ik ben geen tovenaar, maar soms kan ik met wijze raad komen.’

‘Nou, zou u me dan een wijze raad kunnen geven ?’ vroeg het meisje beleefd.

‘Nee,’ zei de raaf, ‘maar ik kan wel wat proberen.’ En toen liep de raaf naar het meisje toe en begon hard op het glas te tikken. Weer begon het glas te barsten en te breken, en in paniek rende het meisje het huis uit. ‘Wacht even !’ riepen de wolf en de raaf, en achtervolgden haar. Het meisje rende en rende, totdat ze uiteindelijk bij een kaboutervolkje aankwam. En inderdaad, zij wilden haar dolgraag als koningin hebben, want een koningin van glas, die vind je niet zomaar. Het meisje liet zich maar kronen, want ze wist toch niet waar ze anders naartoe moest. Het hele volkje was blij, en bestrooiden haar met bloesem, bladeren en bospoeders. ‘Oh, maar zo word ik vies,’ riep het meisje.

‘Leve de koningin !’ riep het volkje. Maar het meisje was doodongelukkig. Ze wilde naar huis, en ze wilde weer gewoon zijn. Op een nacht kwam er een kabouter naar haar kamer met een hele grote hamer. ‘Koningin,’ zei de kabouter. ‘We hebben gehoord van uw wens om weer een meisje van vlees en bloed te zijn, en om weer naar huis te kunnen gaan. Luister, u bent zo groot, en wij zijn zo klein, dat wanneer ik het glas insla met deze hamer, dan kunnen we met het glas onze stad beschermen tegen de roofdieren, en dan komt u vrij.’

Maar de koningin hoorde niets, want ze sliep. In een paar slagen lag het hele bed vol met scherven, en al snel was de hele slaapkamer van de koningin vol met blije dwergen. Ze waren zo vrolijk, want vandaag zouden ze nieuwe stadsmuren krijgen, en zou hun koningin gelukkig worden.

Maar het meisje was nu als de wind, vrij om te gaan naar de hoogste bomen, vrij om terug te gaan naar haar huis onder de mensen. Ze was nog steeds niet van vlees en bloed, maar ze was gelukkig nu, verlost van het glas. Het glas werd vollop gebruikt door het dwergenvolkje, en voortaan lieten de roofdieren hen met rust. Het meisje was nu de wind geworden, en soms ging ze nog even terug naar al haar oude vriendjes : de vlinder, de koning, de raaf, de wolf en het volkje, maar zij konden haar niet zien. Zij konden alleen met warmte aan haar terug denken.

De Wonderschoenen

Een man ging eens met zijn moeder en grootmoeder naar een schoenmaker om nieuwe schoenen te kopen. Er stonden prachtige schoenen in de rekken, maar de mooiste schoenen waren van fluweel met verblindende ringen. De schoenmaker zei dat het wonderschoenen waren, en dat daarom de prijs iets hoger zou zijn dan gewoonlijks. Maar de man was erg rijk, en kocht de schoenen.

Toen de man die avond naar bed ging en in slaap viel begonnen de wonderschoenen te bewegen, en al snel liepen ze het huis uit. De man hoorde wat deuren klapperen, en rende al snel achter zijn schoenen aan. Ze waren op weg naar het dorp. In het dorp aangekomen kwamen er wat elfjes uit de schoenen die zich overal begonnen te verspreiden, en toen liepen de schoenen nog harder. Zo rende de man de hele nacht achter zijn schoenen aan, en die ochtend gingen ze bij een andere schoenmaker naar binnen. Buiten adem wilde de man zijn schoenen pakken, maar de schoenmaker zei : ‘Daar zult u wel voor moeten betalen.’

‘Maar dat zijn mijn schoenen,’ zei de man.

De schoenen stonden keurig in het rek naast een heleboel schoenen van dezelfde soort. De man begon een beetje hopeloos te worden.

‘Zijn dit allemaal wonderschoenen ?’ vroeg de man.

‘Wonderschoenen ? Waar heeft u het over ?’ zei de schoenmaker.

‘Ach, laat maar,’ zei de man, en betaalde opnieuw voor zijn schoenen. Maar ditmaal gebeurde er niets wonderlijks met de schoenen, en zo gingen er vele dagen voorbij, totdat de man dacht dat hij dan misschien de verkeerde schoenen genomen had. Weer ging hij terug naar de schoenmaker en kocht een ander paar van dezelfde soort, maar toen ook dit niet werkte besloot hij om ze allemaal te kopen. Maar geen van de schoenen bleken wonderschoenen te zijn. En daarom ging de man weer terug naar de schoenmaker.

‘Schoenmaker,’ zei de man, ‘kunt u mij vertellen wie er nog meer de laatste tijd schoenen van deze soort heeft gekocht ?’

‘Alleen een vrouw, een zeer rijke vrouw, die hier eens in de zoveel jaren komt,’ zei de schoenmaker. ‘Maar ik weet niet waar zij woont.’ De man was een beetje teleurgesteld toen hij dat hoorde. ‘Maar weet u wat ?’ zei de schoenmaker, ‘zodra ze hier is zal ik mijn dienstknecht naar u sturen zodat u met haar kunt spreken.’

Na vele lange jaren toen de man de wonderschoenen eigenlijk al een beetje vergeten was klopte de dienstknecht van de schoenmaker bij het huis van de man aan. De dienstknecht bracht de boodschap dat de vrouw van de schoenen was gekomen, en dat als hij de schoenen wilde hebben, dan zou hij zeven jaren voor haar moeten werken. Dat had de man er graag voor over, en ging met de dienstknecht mee.

De vrouw woonde op een groot kasteel, en in die zeven jaren had de man een goede tijd, maar werkte hard. Na de zeven jaren kreeg hij eindelijk de schoenen, en inderdaad, het waren de wonderschoenen. Ditmaal sloot de man de schoenen elke avond wanneer hij ging slapen op in een gouden kooitje met zilveren sluitseltjes.

Maar op een nacht brak de kooi open, en weer gingen de wonderschoenen er vandoor. De man werd wakker van het geluid, en rende achter de schoenen aan. Ditmaal brachten de schoenen hem diep in het bos. Hier woonde een hele oude schoenmaker op een afgelegen plek. De schoenmaker vertelde hem dat hij ooit de wonderschoenen had gemaakt, en dat ze op een dag aan de wandel gingen. De schoenmaker was blij dat ze nu iemand mee hadden gebracht, want de schoenmaker was erg eenzaam. Het huis van de schoenmaker was vol met wonderbaarlijke edelstenen, en de man wilde hier graag blijven. Na een tijdje vertelde de schoenmaker dat de wonderschoenen de bezitter naar het beste goud en edelgesteente zouden leiden, als ze maar nooit uitgetrokken zouden worden. En sindsdien sliep de man gewoon met zijn schoenen aan, en zijn de wonderschoenen altijd bij hem gebleven.

Op een dag leidden de schoenen hem tot een bloedheldere bron waar een mooie dame zat. Ze zat wat te breien, en het viel de man op dat ze zulke mooie schoenen had. De schoenen straalden in de zon. De man, die toch wel erg eenzaam was, ook al had hij gezelschap van de schoenmaker, werd direkt erg verliefd op de vrouw. Het was alsof de knoppen van haar schoenen hem hadden betoverd. ‘Trouw met me, trouw met me,’ riep de man, maar de vrouw stond op en rende weg. Direkt ging de man er als een speer achteraan, maar de vrouw rende veel harder. De man was erg teleurgesteld, en ging terug naar de schoenmaker. ‘Oh,’ zei de schoenmaker toen de man hem het verhaal vertelde, ‘dat zijn schoenen die ik eens voor de bosfee heb gemaakt. Iedereen die die schoenen ziet raakt direkt betoverd.’

‘Maar waarom rende ze dan weg ?’ vroeg de man.

‘Dat doen de schoenen,’ zei de schoenmaker. ‘Maar als je dezelfde schoenen als haar zou hebben, dan zou je net zo hard als haar kunnen rennen.’ En toen liep de schoenmaker naar een oude kast en haalde een zelfde paar eruit.

De man deed de schoenen aan, en rende naar buiten. Nu kon hij de bosfee gemakkelijk bijhouden, en de bosfee was erg verrast. De bosfee was altijd erg eenzaam geweest, want haar schoenen renden altijd weg als er iemand in de buurt kwam. Maar nu de man haar makkelijk kon bijhouden begonnen haar schoenen wat af te remmen, en al gauw stond ze helemaal stil, als betoverd. ‘Je hebt me betoverd,’ zei de bosfee met een glimlach.

‘Nee,’ zei de man, ‘dat hebben de wonderschoenen gedaan.’

De bosfee keek naar zijn schoenen en toen naar hem. ‘Zou je weleens met mij willen dansen,’ zong de bosfee. ‘Zou je weleens met mij over de heg willen gaan, want daar baden zoveel sterretjes onder een bloedrode maan. Zou je weleens met mij willen rennen en zingen, heus, je kan het, want je hebt mijn wonderschoenen aan.’

En toen vertelde de bosfee over de heg waar ze nooit overheen kon, want altijd als ze dichterbij kwam, dan rende de heg weg, en de heg kon veel harder rennen dan haar.

‘Zou je weleens met mij willen dromen,’ zong de man. ‘Zou je weleens met mij onder de maan willen dansen. Zou je weleens met mij over de heg willen dansen.’

‘Ja, graag,’ zong de bosfee.

‘Ja, graag,’ zong de man.

‘Zie, het is wat eens de schoenmaker mij heeft verteld,’ zong de man. ‘Wij moeten dansen, wij moeten dansen, en de heg zal staan als betoverd en versteld.’

En zo dansten ze samen naar de heg toe, maar al gauw merkten ze dat de heg veel sneller was dan zij, en niet lang daarna gingen ze beiden teleurgesteld naar het huis van de schoenmaker terug. Toen de schoenmaker het verhaal hoorde haalde hij twee paar dansschoenen tevoorschijn. Het waren de mooiste schoenen die ze ooit hadden gezien. Ze deden de schoenen aan, en keken elkaar in de ogen, en dansten als betoverd terug naar de heg. En inderdaad, de heg stond als bevroren te kijken, en met gemak konden ze door de heg heen. Ook de schoenmaker liep achter hen aan, en zo kwamen ze met z’n drieen aan de andere kant van de heg.

Maar de wezens die hier woonden vlogen allemaal in angst voor hen weg. Zij droegen geen schoenen, en zij hadden vederlichte vleugeltjes als elfjes.

De schoenmaker was inmiddels weer teruggegaan naar zijn huis. Langzaam daalde de bosfee af in de rivier en de man deed hetzelfde. En heel langzaam begonnen ook de sterretjes in het water af te dalen. ‘Ik heb mijn schoenen hier helemaal niet meer nodig !’ riep de man, en trok ze uit. Direkt had ook hij vederlichte vleugeltjes en steeg uit het water op. Maar de bosfee volgde niet. ‘Zeg, ik moet weer terug naar waar ik vandaan kom,’ zei ze, en ging terug door de heg.

Even was de man teleurgesteld. Hij wilde hier wel blijven. Toen ineens trokken een heleboel sterretjes hem verder naar boven. Maar omdat hij zijn wonderschoenen had uitgedaan kon hij nu nooit meer terug over de heg. Na een tijd begon hij de bosfee en de schoenmaker erg te missen, en zou hij erg graag terugwillen. Op een dag ging hij terug naar de rivier om de wonderschoenen te zoeken. En toen gebeurde er iets wonderlijks : Twee van de prachtigste vissen kwamen op hem afzwemmen en zeiden : ‘Wij zouden u nog willen bedanken dat u ons vrijgelaten hebt. Wij waren uw wonderschoenen, en in deze rivier zijn wij weer vissen geworden.’

Maar de man begreep het niet en vroeg : ‘Maar wie heeft jullie dan vroeger betoverd, en hoe kom ik nu weer thuis ?’

‘In het land achter de rivier woont de steenheks,’ sprak één van de vissen. ‘Zij vangt vissen om ze te betoveren tot schoenen. Wanneer je haar verslaat zul je terug kunnen keren naar je woonplaats.’

En zo brachten de twee vissen hem over de rivier, die verderop veel woester was. De steenheks woonde in een woest kasteel. De stenen waarmee het kasteel was gebouwd waren roze en rode edelstenen die ze gevonden had in de dieptes van de rivier. De man mocht de rode stenen en tegels niet aanraken, want dan zou hij verstenen. Maar sommige stenen waren het ene moment roze, en het andere moment rood. ‘Ik wist wel dat je zou komen,’ krijste de steenheks. ‘De wonderschoenen hebben je hier naartoe geleid, alhoewel ze nu weer gewoon hun vissenhuid hebben. Zeg, ik heb een opdracht voor jou, en als je die opdracht kunt vervullen dan zal ik je weer naar huis laten gaan, over de heg. Haal voor mij drie toverbloemen in de betoverde tuinen achter het kasteel.’

De man deed wat hem gevraagd werd, maar in de betoverde tuinen raakte hij onwel. De heks die alles volgde door haar toverbol begon te lachen. ‘Wat een domoor. Niemand overleefd zo’n reisje door de betoverde tuinen. Zelfs ik kan daar niet komen.’

Maar na een tijdje kwam hij er toch uit met de drie toverbloemen waar de steenheks om vroeg. De steenheks was erg verbaasd, maar wel blij met de toverbloemen. ‘Jij domoor,’ riep ze. ‘Nu kun je hier nooit meer weg. Mijn macht strekt zich nu uit tot zelfs achter de heg.’ Maar toen werd de man erg kwaad, en herinnerde dat de vissen hadden gezegd dat hij haar eerst moest verslaan. Er lagen wat roze en rode stenen los om hem heen. Hij wist dat hij de rode stenen niet mocht raken, zoals de vissen hem dat hadden gezegd, anders zou het afgelopen met hem zijn. Maar hij pakte een schaalvormige roze steen, en schepte daarmee een kleine rode steen, en wierp het toen op de steenheks af. De steenheks versteende onmiddelijk. Maar overal om hem heen begonnen de stenen rood te worden, en de man wist niet wat hij moest doen. Voor hem was een vijvertje waar hij insprong. Het vijvertje liep uit in een riviertje waardoor hij het kasteel kon uitkomen, en waardoor hij in de rivier buiten het kasteel kon komen. Hier wachtten de twee vissen hem op. Ze waren erg blij dat de heks nu verslagen was, en ze vertelden de man dat de heg nu ook was verdwenen. Ooit had de heks de heg gebouwd om haar machtsgebied af te bakenen, maar nu had ze al haar macht verloren. Maar gek genoeg wilden de vissen weer uit het water genomen worden, om in wonderschoenen te veranderen, want om te leven op het vasteland beviel hen iets beter. En zo had de man zijn beste vrienden altijd bij de hand. Als hij ging zwemmen, dan veranderden ze in vissen die met hem mee zwommen en hem overal naartoe brachten, en op het vasteland waren ze gewoon zijn wonderschoenen.

De Negende Wens

Eens leefde er een hebzuchtige prins in een arm land. De prins was zo hebzuchtig dat hij een ander niets gunde, en alles voor zichzelf nam. Toen op een dag een meisje uit zijn rijk spoorloos verdwenen was ging hij alleen op zoektocht omdat haar ouders erg rijk waren en een hoge beloning zouden schenken aan degene die hun dochter zou terugvinden.

Op zijn reis door het woud kwam hij ’s avonds laat bij een huisje aan. Toen hij op de deur klopte hoorde hij een krassende stem : ‘Ik ben Spindraad. Wie is daar nog zo laat ?’

‘Ach, moedertje,’ zei de prins. ‘Ik zou zo graag even bij u willen kijken of daar ook een meisje van ons rijk is. Zij is spoorloos verdwenen.’

‘Ik heb zeven dochters,’ zei de oude vrouw. ‘Als u even wil kijken. Kom dan maar verder.’ De prins stapte naar binnen, en kreeg wat te eten. Ook mocht hij van elke dochter een wens doen. Bij de eerste dochter zei hij : ‘Ik zou graag willen dat het koninkrijk omgeven is door een haag met rode bloedbessen, giftig als de zon, om ervoor te zorgen dat niemand zomaar spoorloos kan verdwijnen.’ Als tweede wens, bij de tweede dochter, wenste hij dat zijn koninkrijk vol zou zijn met goud, maar alle andere wensen waren hebberig, en hij vergat het spoorloos verdwenen meisje helemaal.

‘Omdat je in bijna al je wensen zo hebberig bent geweest,’ zei de oude vrouw, ‘zul je veranderen in een pad.’ En direkt was de prins geen prins meer, maar een pad. In schaamte vertrok de pad. Al gauw kwam hij erachter dat hij ook niet terug kon naar zijn koninkrijk vanwege de dichte haag met giftige rode bloedbessen. Maar eens in een nacht zag hij een meisje baden in een bosmeertje. Hij zwom direkt naar haar toe, en vertelde haar wat er was gebeurd. Het bleek het spoorloos verdwenen meisje te zijn. Maar ze leek sprekend op één van de dochters van de oude vrouw.

‘Ik ben gevlucht,’ zei het meisje, ‘vanwege het harde werk dat ik in uw koninkrijk moest verrichten. Ik kwam bij de oude vrouw en werd als één van haar dochters. Zij liet mij zacht werk verrichten, en ik mocht wensen laten uitkomen.’

‘Maar waarom ben je daar dan niet gebleven ?’ vroeg de pad.

‘Omdat de oude vrouw aan het einde van de wensen altijd haar eigen wens uitspreekt,’ sprak het meisje. ‘Sinds ik gevlucht ben, ben ik de enige die haar boze wensen ongedaan kan maken. Ik was altijd de achtste wens, en zij altijd de laatste, de negende.’

En zo deed de pad zijn wens bij het meisje om weer een prins te worden.

Linana en de Carrousel

Eens in de tijd dat er nog geen bloemen waren leefde er eens een meisje dat zo mooi was dat iedereen haar ‘Zwanenpracht’ noemde. Op de hele wereld was er geen liever meisje te vinden dan haar, met een hart van goud en stralend licht. Haar vader, een koopman was erg trots op haar, en er was niemand met wie zij het beter kon vinden dan met haar vader. Maar op een dag was de vader erg ziek. Het meisje was erg bedroefd en na korte tijd stierf haar vader. Haar moeder was een edele vrouw en hertrouwde. Maar al gauw bleek dat het meisje niet met haar nieuwe vader kon opschieten. De stiefvader was erg ruw naar haar, en het meisje begon erg te veranderen. Na een aantal jaren was ze zo’n kreng geworden dat iedereen haar Zwanenplaag noemde.

Maar op een dag was er een koopman met een carrousel in het land. De kinderen waren dol op de carrousel en ook het meisje vond het fijn er ritjes in te maken. De koopman was direkt erg gecharmeerd door het meisje, omdat ze zo mooi was als een zwaan. Na de ritjes wenkte de koopman het meisje, en nam haar apart. ‘Heus,’ zei de koopman, ‘ik heb in het hele land geen mooier meisje gezien dan jij, met een hart zo vol van goud en stralend licht.’

‘Iedereen noemt mij zwanenplaag,’ zei het meisje, ‘omdat ik zo’n kreng ben. Vanwaar uw belangstelling ?’

‘Oh, maar ik zou jou Zwanenpracht noemen,’ zei de man. Ineens moest het meisje aan haar vader denken.

En toen vertelde de man haar dat wanneer het midden in de nacht is, en alle kinderen slapen, dan wordt de zwaan van de carrousel wakker, en wie dan op haar rug zit maakt met haar een ritje in de lucht. Als je het aan niemand vertelt, en naar de carrousel komt wanneer je de eerste sterretjes van de nacht ziet, dan is het aan jou de eer een ritje te maken, sprak de man.

De eerste nacht toen het meisje een ritje mocht maken op de vliegende zwaan van de carrousel kon ze alle lichtjes van de stad zien, en vertelde aan de man van de carrousel dat haar echte naam Linana was. Omdat het het meisje zo beviel mocht ze ook de volgende nacht komen. Ditmaal bracht de zwaan haar nog verder weg, en vertelde ze de man van de carrousel dat haar vader was overleden, en dat ze een boze stiefvader had. En de man nodigde haar nog een keer uit. Ditmaal bracht de zwaan haar naar een land zo ver weg dat ze het niet kende. Toen ze een voet op de grond had gezet vloog de zwaan weg. Ze riep de zwaan nog na, maar al snel was de zwaan helemaal uit het zicht verdwenen. Ze stond vlakbij een meertje waar een heleboel echte zwanen waren.

Linana mocht op één van de grotere zwanen een ritje maken over het meer, en ineens steeg de zwaan op. ‘Oh, kun jij me even naar mijn land terugbrengen,’ zei het meisje. ‘De zwaan van de carrousel is mij vast vergeten.’

Toen het meisje weer bij de man van de carrousel was aangekomen, vertelde de man haar dat de zwaan van de carrousel altijd op tijd terug moest zijn, anders zou hij in de lucht ineens weer van metaal worden en neerstorten. Toen begreep het meisje het. Maar ook de zwaan van het andere land wilde wel een plaats op de carrousel hebben. Voor de man met de carrousel was dat niet zo moeilijk, omdat hij immers toverkrachten bezat. En steeds kwam het meisje terug in de nacht om ritjes te maken op de zwanen, en ze nam telkens nieuwe zwanen mee. Na een tijdje was de carrousel vol met zwanen, en op een nacht steeg de hele carrousel op, en vloog naar het land van de zwanen.

Dus als je een keer in de nacht een carrousel door de lucht ziet vliegen, dan weet je dat het Linana met haar zwanen is. Op een keer vertelde de koopman dat er drie vlammetjes in het binnenste van de carrousel waren. Zodra het eerste vlammetje uitging ging er op aarde iemand dood. Altijd als het tweede vlammetje uitging werd er op aarde iemand geboren, en als het derde vlammetje uitging werd er iemand blij. Linana vond het een prachtig gezicht om naar de knipperende vlammetjes te kijken. Maar op een dag werd ook de man van de carrousel ernstig ziek, en stierf. Linana was nu bedroefder dan ooit, en sindsdien gingen de vlammetjes niet meer aan. Ook de carrousel draaide niet meer, en de zwanen kwamen niet meer tot leven. Niemand wilde een carrousel in het land hebben die het niet meer deed. Ze besloten de carrousel in een diep gat in de aarde te werpen. Linana was ontroostbaar. Maar op een dag kwam er een zwaan van het andere land, en nam haar mee. Het meisje wilde niet meer terug en besloot in een huisje te leven aan het meertje van de zwanen. Maar op een dag gebeurde er iets wonderlijks, vanuit het meertje kwam de oude carrousel opzetten. De carrousel was nu groter dan ooit, en er waren ook veel meer zwanen op. De zwanen vertelden het meisje dat in het diepe gat in de aarde een oude vrouw leefde die zoveel toverkracht bezat dat ze kon maken dat de zwanen altijd konden leven. Zelf had ze ook een heleboel zwanen, en die konden sindsdien ook in de carrousel zijn. En in het binnenste van de carrousel waren nu zoveel knipperende vlammetjes en was het er zo groot, dat Linana er voor altijd zou kunnen wonen.

En zo maakte Linana vanaf nu ook ritjes door het water en onder de grond. En als je haar eens tegenkomt, vraag dan maar of je met haar mee mag.

De Toverbeker en het Toverbordje

Eens waren er dertig prinsen die door een heks waren betoverd tot wachters op een hoge toren. De toren was zo hoog dat het hoogste deel niet gezien kon worden, en de toren was zo breed dat het de helft van het land vulde. Als iemand de trap omhoog wilde bestijgen, dan kwamen er ballen van steen en ballen van vuur naar beneden, en maakten voor lange tijd het land onveilig. Daarom verbood de koning dat nog iemand naar de toren zou gaan.

De koning had veel verdriet van het verlies van zijn dertig zonen. De dertig prinsen waren nu angstaanjagende wachters die op de top van de toren moesten marcheren. Zij moesten de schat van de heks bewaken : een toverbeker die nooit op zou raken, en waarmee je onder de grond kon reizen, en een toverbord dat altijd vol was, en waarmee je in de lucht kon reizen.

De koning had een erge hekel aan de heks. Was hij nu maar wat aardiger voor haar geweest, dan was alles niet zo erg als het nu was. Ja, de koning had veel spijt wat hij de heks had aangedaan. Een oud bedelvrouwtje kwam eens aan de poort en vroeg om onderdak, maar de koning zond haar weg. Hoe kon hij nu weten dat het een heks was ? En een heks kun je maar beter onderdak geven, anders zal het je je hele leven berouwen. Dat was de koning nu wel duidelijk geworden.

Sindsdien was de koning altijd goed voor bedelaars, en had hij z’n lesje wel geleerd. Op een dag kwam één van de bedelaars tot de koning. ‘Koning,’ zei de bedelaar, ‘ik heb gehoord wat er gebeurd is. Ik kom uit een ver land, maar ik heb een lange tijd onder de grond gewoond, en eens zag ik de heks met haar toverbeker langskomen. Ik volgde haar, en ze kwam in een bron van licht, waar ze onzichtbaar werd. Zo ging ik ook naar de bron, en in een bliksemschicht stond ik bovenop de toren waar u zonen gevangen worden gehouden. Ze waren inderdaad de meest afschuwelijke wachters geworden, en marcheerden gevaarlijk rond. Maar ze konden mij niet zien, omdat ik onzichtbaar was. De toverbeker was verdwenen, omdat de heks daarmee onder de grond was, maar het toverbordje dat altijd vol was stond daar, en ik nam ervan, en steeg op in de lucht. Hoever ik gekomen ben weet ik niet, maar ik was zo hoog waar nog geen mens ooit was gekomen. Hier kwam ik in een wereld waar de meest wonderlijke sprookjesfiguren waren. Zij vertelden mij dat uw zonen geheime sprookjes in zich droegen die nog nooit waren verteld. De betovering zou worden verbroken wanneer die sprookjes zouden worden verteld.'

Toen liet de koning de beste sprookjesvertellers van het land komen, om zoveel mogelijk sprookjes te verzamelen en te vertellen, maar er gebeurde niets. Toen liet de koning de bedelaar weer terugkomen, en vroeg hem waar onder de grond die lichtbron was. De koning zond toen tien lakeien met de bedelaar mee. De koning hoopte dat zijn lakeien de prinsen konden bevrijden. Maar de heks wachtte hen al op. In een lichtflits betoverde ze de lakeien in stenen wachters die de lichtbron moesten bewaken, maar de bedelaar zag de toverbeker staan, greep de beker en dronk ervan, terwijl hij nog dieper onder de grond kon reizen. Na een lange tijd kwam de bedelaar in een sprookjesrijk zo diep onder de grond waar geen mens ooit was geweest. Hoe diep het was, wist hij niet, maar er waren hier wonderlijke sprookjeswezens. Zij vertelden dat zij eens samenleefden met de sprookjeswereld boven de lucht, maar de heks had het rijk verscheurd. In de lichtbron verborg de heks sprookjes, en de twee sprookjeswerelden zouden weer bij elkaar komen als die verborgen sprookjes zouden worden verteld.

Weer ging de bedelaar naar de koning, en weer liet de koning de beste sprookjesvertellers komen, en ook de beste sprookjesvertellers uit andere landen, maar er gebeurde weer niets. Maar toen kreeg de bedelaar een idee. Hij had nu immers zowel het toverbordje als de toverbeker. Met het toverbordje kon hij nu de toverbeker naar het rijk boven de lucht brengen, en dan zouden zij met de toverbeker naar het rijk onder de grond kunnen gaan. Vanaf die dag werd er heel wat heen en weer gereisd, en ze vertelden elkaar de wonderlijkste sprookjes. Niet lang daarna marcheerden de stenen lakeien en de wachters van de toren naar de dichtstbijzijnde stad, en begonnen de sprookjes te vertellen. Langzaam maar zeker verbrak de betovering, en de koning kon zijn dertig zonen en zijn tien lakeien weer in de armen nemen.

Het Vogelbalkonnetje

Er was eens een koning die een dochtertje had. Omdat hij niet wilde dat ze een verwend prinsesje zou worden liet hij haar opgroeien in een donkere diepe keuken om mee te helpen de grote beesten onder de grond te voeren. Maar het meisje verveelde zich vaak, en had het vaak koud. Op een dag klom het meisje door een buis boven het fornuis naar boven, en kwam boven op het kasteel terecht. Ze sloop door een torenraampje naar binnen, en zag daar een oude vrouw zitten achter een spinnenwiel en een weefraam. De oude vrouw zei dat ze weleens wat anders wilde, en het meisje vertelde haar over het keukentje. Ook het meisje wilde weleens wat anders en ze besloten van plaats te ruilen. Het oude vrouwtje klom door de lange buis naar het keukentje toe. Na een aantal dagen kwam het oude vrouwtje terug en vertelde het meisje dat ze het zo naar haar zin had in het keukentje en dat ze het meisje er zo dankbaar voor was dat ze het meisje een sieraad gaf. ‘Als je erover wrijft, dan verander je in een vogel,’ zei het oude vrouwtje. Het oude vrouwtje ging weer terug naar het keukentje, en het meisje wreef over het sieraad om in een vogel te veranderen. Het meisje wilde altijd al vliegen, en ze vloog over de zee en terug. Na een tijdje vloog ze door de lange buis om het oude vrouwtje te bezoeken.

Het meisje had eigenlijk nog nooit de grote beesten gezien. Ze moest vroeger alleen koken en het voedsel door een raampje schuiven. Maar nu was ze klein genoeg om zelf door het raampje heen te gaan. Hier kwam ze op een klein balkonnetje waar een heleboel andere vogels waren, groten en kleinen. In de verte waren de grote beesten, waar de vogels altijd het voedsel naartoe brachten. Dan moesten ze eerst over een heel diep en groot ravijn vliegen, want de beesten waren op een soort eiland. Nu kon het meisje zelf eens wat voedsel naar de beesten brengen. Ze kreeg een mandje mee, dat ze in haar snavel kon houden. In het mandje waren wat appels, wat druiven, en wat pastei. Om alles te bedekken werd er een doek overheen geschoven. Het meisje keek haar ogen uit. Na een tijdje ging ze weer terug. In het torenkamertje lag nog steeds het sieraad. Even wreef ze er met haar vleugel overheen, en veranderde weer in een gewoon meisje.

Op een dag wilde de koning haar zien, en het meisje nam haar sieraad mee. Het meisje vertelde alles wat ze had meegemaakt aan haar vader, en over haar liefde voor de grote beesten. De koning pinkte een traantje weg, en sprak : ‘Die grote beesten zijn jouw eigen broers. Een boze heks heeft hen eens betoverd.’ En toen vertelde het meisje over het sieraad waarmee ze in een vogel kon veranderen. Zo zouden de grote beesten ook in vogels veranderen als het sieraad over hen heengewreven zou worden. De koning vond het een goed idee, en het meisje wreef even over het sieraad heen, veranderde in een vogel en nam het sieraad mee naar het vogelbalkonnetje. Met het sieraad vloog ze heel dicht naar de grote beesten toe, en wreef met het sieraad over hun huiden heen. Direkt veranderden ze in vogels, en in een grote zwerm vlogen ze terug over het grote ravijn heen. De koning was erg blij toen hij de vogels zag, maar het waren nog steeds geen prinsen. ‘Oh, maar dat is heel eenvoudig, vader,’ zei het meisje dat inmiddels weer een meisje was geworden. Ik wrijf gewoon nu de vogels met het sieraad. Kort daarna stonden er een heleboel prinsen voor de koning. De koning omhelsde ze één voor één, en ook het meisje viel haar broers één voor één in de armen.

Het Varken Op Reis

Er waren eens een varken en een uil met elkaar in gesprek. De uil lachte het varken uit, omdat hij niet kon vliegen, en zei dat het varken lui was, en alleen maar at en door de modder rolde. De uil vond zichzelf heel wat, omdat hij veel jaagde en nesten bouwde. ‘Op een dag,’ zei het varken, ‘zal ik net zo kunnen vliegen als jij.’ Maar de uil lachte hem uit, en zei dat dat onmogelijk was.

De dag daarop ging het varken op reis om vleugels te zoeken. Eerst kwam hij een raaf tegen. Ook de raaf zei dat hij nooit zou kunnen vliegen. Na een tijdje kwam het varken bij een klein huisje waar een heks woonde. ‘Ach,’ zei de heks, ‘je hebt gewoon niet genoeg gegeten. Je moet veel meer eten, en dan zul je wel kunnen vliegen.’ En de heks zette een heleboel lekkernijen voor het varken op tafel, en het varken at en at. En zo ging dat dagen door, totdat het varken moddervet was. Het varken was zo vet geworden dat hij bijna niet meer vooruitkwam. De heks stond lachend achter hem toen het varken probeerde te vliegen. Toen pakte de heks een groot mes om het varken te slachten, en toen wist het varken dat hij bedrogen was. De heks had gewoon zin in een lekker hapje.

Gelukkig kwamen ineens de uil en de raaf naar binnen, en begonnen de heks te pikken. De heks viel op de grond, en toen probeerden ze het varken naar buiten te krijgen. Dat was niet gemakkelijk, maar uiteindelijk was het varken buiten. De raaf en de uil waarschuwde het varken dat hij geen domme dingen meer moest doen, en toen het varken ver genoeg van het heksenhuisje vandaan was vlogen ze weer weg. Maar het varken wilde nog steeds vliegen. Na een tijdje kwam het varken bij het huisje van een fee. Ook aan de fee vertelde hij dat hij wilde vliegen, en de fee zei dat hij dan bepaalde toverriemen om moest doen. De fee haalde de riemen uit een kast, deed ze bij het varken om, maar snel maakte ze de riemen vast aan een balk, en veranderde in een heks. Weer was het varken bedrogen. De heks pakte een mes uit de la om het varken te slachten, maar weer kwamen de uil en de raaf binnen om het varken te helpen. Toen ze weer buiten waren zeiden de uil en de raaf dat het varken niet zo goedgelovig moest zijn. Het varken had z’n lesje nu wel geleerd, maar wilde nog steeds vliegen.

